

The Complete Poetical and Dramatic Works of Lord Byron

With a Comprehensive Outline of the Life of the Poet, Collected From the Latest and Most Reliable Sources

BARON GEORGE GORDON BYRON BYRON

The Newstead Edition.

4327
THE COMPLETE
POETICAL AND DRAMATIC WORKS

OF

L O R D B Y R O N. E

WITH A

COMPREHENSIVE OUTLINE OF THE
L I F E O F T H E P O E T,

COLLECTED FROM THE LATEST AND MOST RELIABLE SOURCES,

By JOHN NICHOLS AND J. C. JEAFFRESON.

Illustrations Displaying Byron's Most Authentic Portraits and the Likenesses of his Family and Friends.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED WITH THE NOTES BY LORD BYRON;

AND

Historical and other Notes, Fully Explanatory of the Text.

A New Edition.

THE TEXT FROM THE LATEST LONDON EDITION.

FULLY ILLUSTRATED

By W. Woodall, Harlowe, Saunders, Stone, Finden, and other Artists.

PHILADELPHIA:

AND MCKAY, PUBLISHER,

616 SOUTH WASHINGTON SQUARE.

517333

750

~~~~~
Copyright,
JOHN HIGHLANDS,
1883.
~~~~~

~~~~~
Wm. P. Fall & Co.,
REPRODUCTION AND PRINTING,
120-54 Broadway St., Phila.
~~~~~

PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE gratifying success of the "Avon" edition of Shakespeare's works, and the constant public demand ever since for a continuance of this series of the Octavo Poets, has encouraged the publishers to bring out the present volume as the "Newstead Edition" of the Complete Works of Lord Byron.

In pursuance of the endeavor to issue a volume that will be most acceptable to American readers of the great poet—whose lot it was to be misunderstood during his life and misrepresented after his death—much fresh and interesting matter, appearing in no other edition of Byron's works, has been incorporated into the "Life" and the Notes, and many facts have been taken from publications printed during the present year. The portraits of Byron, his relatives and friends, which appear in the Life, have been selected with great care from family paintings or original miniatures. They are believed to be thoroughly reliable and authentic. In nearly every case the name of the artist is given with the picture.

While the text of the latest and best English editions has been followed, and the descriptive and historical notes of Lord Byron have been retained, the ponderous opinions of contemporaneous English reviewers have been eliminated; the American reader being abundantly able to draw his own conclusions of the merits of the poems without assistance from the literary critics of more than half a century ago.

The typographic arrangement of the "Avon Shakespeare" has been followed in the present volume—the Indexing of the contents of each page in verse, canto, scene, and act at the page-head, and the use of bold-faced type through the dramas; the use of which enables the student to see at a glance the salient points of the play.

In preparing the Alphabetical Index, the effort has been made to render that portion of the work exceedingly clear, both in typographical arrangement and the comprehensiveness of the references to the text. Acknowledgments are here tendered to Messrs. Harper & Brothers, and to Messrs. James R. Osgood & Co., for courteous permission to use matter of Prof. Nichol's "Byron" and Jefferson's "The Real Lord Byron."

CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER OF BYRON'S LIFE AND WORKS.

	AGE.	MONTH.	YEAR.		AGE.	MONTH.	YEAR.
Born, in Holles Street, London	9	Jan. 22.	1788	Is an unsuccessful editor for the hand of Miss Milbanke			Nov.
Taken by his mother to Aberdeen			1790	Publishes "The Bride of Abydos."—2R. Writes	25		1810
Successes to the family title—Made a ward of chancery				"The Devil's Drive."—17. And "Two Sonnets to
—Removed from Aberdeen to Newstead Abbey	10		1790	Gen. Sir—18. Begins "The Corsair."—21. Finish-
Placed under the care of an empiric at Nottingham				"The Corsair."			Dec. 2.
for the cure of his lameness				Writes "Windor Poetics"—Resolves to			Feb.
Removes to London, and placed under care of Dr.	11	May 18.		write no more poetry, and to suppress all he had
Ballia.—Becomes pupil of Dr. Gamble at Dulwich	12		1799	ever written			Apr. 10.
Is sent to Harrow School	13		1800	Writes "Lara."—Writes "I speak not, I trace not."
Passes the vacation at Nottingham and Amersley.	15		1802	And "Address to be recited at the Calcutta Meet-	26	May.	1810
And forms an attachment to Miss Chavorn				ing."—Publishes "Lara."—Writes "Condolatory		Aug.
Leaves Harrow for Trinity College, Cambridge	17	Oct.	1804	Verses to Lady Jersey."—Makes a second proposal		Sept.
Prepares a collection of his Poems for the press				for the hand of Miss Milbanke, and is accepted.		Oct.
Prints a volume of his Poems; but, at the entreaty of	18		1804	Writes "Ricky on the Death of Sir Peter Parker."
a friend, destroys the edition	19	Jan.	1805	"Lines to Belshazzar."—And "Hebrew Melodies."			Jan. 2.
Publishes "Hours of Idleness."—Begins an epio-	19	Mar.	1807	Writes "There be none of Beauty's Daughters."
dramatic "Borlouth Piece."—Writes a part of a novel.	20	Jan.	1807	Writes "The Slave of Corinth."—Writes "There's not		Feb.
Passes his time between the dissipation of Cambridge				a Joy the World can give."—We do not cure thee,		Mar.
and London.—Takes up his residence at Newstead.	20	Aug.	1808	Waterloo."—Writes "I shall thou go, my glorious		July.
Forms design of visiting India.—Engaged in prepar-		Sept.		war of the Brave."—And "Napoleon Farewell."		Aug.
ing "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers."				Birth of his daughter, Augusta Ada.
His coming of age celebrated at Newstead.	21	Jan. 22.		Writes "The Slave of Corinth."—Writes "Paradise."			Dec. 10.
Takes his seat in the House of Lords		Mar. 15.		"Lady Byron resolves on separating from him."			Jan. 10.
Writes "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers."		Mar. 15.		Writes "Fare thee well, and I for ever."—And, 29. A			Mar. 17.
Engaged in preparing a second edition of "English				Sketch. "Born in the garret"
Bards" for the press		May.		Writes "When all around grew drear and dark."
Leaves London on his travels, with Mr. Hobhouse.		June 11.		Takes a last leave of his native country.—Proceeds			Apr. 18.
Visits, on both the Italian and Spanish Bospho-		June 10.		through Flinders and by the Rhine, to Switzerland
rus, we are going!"				Begins the third canto of "Childe Harold."—Writes
Bells from Falmouth.—7. Lands at Lisbon.—17. Leaves		July 2.		"The Prisoners of Chillon."—Writes "Romance May Lisbon for Seville and Cadiz		Aug. 6.		Lament."—Resides at Campagna Diad, near Geneva.
Arrives at Gibraltar.—18. Takes his departure for Malta				—Finishes third canto of "Childe Harold."—Writes
Lands at Malta.—14. Writes "As ever the cold sepul-				"Moodily on the Death of Sheridan."—Stanzas to chral scene."—"Oh, Lady! when I left the shore."				Augusta Ada."—Makes a tour of the Bernese Alps.
—21. Leaves Malta.—29. Lands at Fez.	21	Sept. 1.	1809	Writes "Lines on hearing that Lady Byron was ill."
Proceeds to Solara, Arta, Joannina.—4. Leaves Joannina				—Begins "Manfred."—Leaves Switzerland for Italy.
for Zitta.—Composes, during a thunder-storm,				Resides at Venice.—Translates "Romance May
"Child and milk is the nighty blast."—11. Reaches				December," etc.; and "Sonnet of Vittorini."—Writes Teplana.—12. Introduced to Ali Pacha.—23. Returns				"Lines on the Bust of Helen by Canova."—"Bright be to Joannina.—31. Begins last canto of "Childe Harold"				the Flame of thy Soul."—And "They say that Rome
Proceeds by sea to Smyrna.—16. Driven on the coast				is Happiness."—Studies the Armenian language of sail.—12. Writes, in passing the Ambracian gulf,				Finishes "Manfred."—Translates, from the Arme-
"Through clouded skies, in silvery sheen.—13. Be-				lian, a Correspondence between Saint Paul and the liefs down the gulf of Arta.—14. Reaches Smyrna.				Corinthians.—Visits Ferrara for a day.—Writes
—15. Travels Acarnania.—31. Reaches Missolonghi.				"The Lessons of Tasso."—Visits Rome for a few
—31. Arrives at Smyrna.				days.—Writes there a new third act to "Manfred."
Leaves Smyrna for Constantinople.—Visits the Troad				—Begins, at Venice, the fourth canto of "Childe
Writes "Lines after swimming from Scio to Aby-				Harold."—Writes "Begonia."
dos."—14. Arrives at Constantinople.				Writes "Ode on Venice"
Makes an excursion through the Bosphorus to the				Finishes the first canto of "Don Juan."
Black Sea and Cyanean Symplesades				Finishes "Massepia"
Departs from Constantinople.—15. Reaches Athens.				Begins the second canto of "Don Juan."
—Visits Corinth				Finishes the second canto of "Don Juan."
Makes a tour of the Morea, and visits Vely Pacha.				Becomes acquainted with the Countess Guiccioli.—
Returns to Athens				Writes "Stanzas to the Poet."—Letter to the Editor
Takes up his residence at the Franciscan Convent,				of My Grandmother's Review.—And "Sonnet to Athens.—Writes "Dear object of defeated care."				George the Fourth."—Finishes the third and fourth
Writes "Bans of the Greeks arise!"—"I enter thy				cantos of "Don Juan."—Removes to Ravenna garden of roses."—And "Remarks on the Homeli-				He conducted with the Countess Guiccioli
Modern Greek Language"				Finishes the first canto of "Mazeppa Maggiore."
Writes "Lines from Horace."—17. "The Curse				Writes "The Prophecy of Daniel."—Translates "Fran-of Misses."—And "Lines on Parting"				cisco of Rimini."—And writes "Observations upon
Leaves Athens for Malta.—28. Writes "Epithalamion				an Article in Blackwood's Magazine"
for Joseph Blackett."—And, 28. "Farewell to Malta"				Begins "Marino Faliero"
Returns to England				Finishes "Marino Faliero"
Death of his mother				Begins the fifth canto of "Don Juan."
Writes "Epistle to a Friend."—"Oh! nation care—such				Finishes the fifth canto of "Don Juan."—And writes over be."—And "Stanzas to Turkey."—"Without a stone				"The Blues: a Literary Eulogium"
to mark the spot"				Begins "Bardianapalus"
Writes "Away, away, ye soldiers' woes!"				Writes "Letter to John Murray, Esq., on Bowles's
Writes "One struggle more and I am free."—"When				Scriptures upon Pope" time or space of ease shall bring."—And thus set				Writes "Second Letter to John Murray, Esq., etc."
at rest, as young as air				Finishes "Bardianapalus"
Makes his first speech in the House of Lords.—28. Pub-				Finishes "The Two Foscari."—15. Begins "Cain: a lishes the two first cantos of "Childe Harold."				Mystery"
Commences new edition of "English Bards," etc., to the				Finishes "Cain."—And "Vision of Judgment."
lament.—Writes "Miscellaneous in the haunts of man."				Writes "Heaven and Earth: a Mystery of Fate."
"On a Corallian Heart which was broken."—"Lines				—Begins "Wermer."—"The Deformed Transformed" to a Lady weeping."—And "The Chain I gave"				Finishes "Wermer."
Writes "Lines on a black leaf of The Pleasure of				Writes the sixth, seventh, and eighth cantos of "Don
Memory"				Juan."—Finishes "The Deformed Trans-
Writes "Address on the Opening of Drury Lane The-				formed."—Writes the ninth, tenth, and eleventh
atre."—"The Wails; an Apocryphal Hymn."—"A				cantos of "Don Juan."—Removes to Genoa
Paraphrase on the Address by Dr. Placigny."—"Address				Writes "The Slave of Corinth."—Writes "The to Placigny."—"You are not false, but thou art false!"				And cantos of "Don Juan."—Turns his views to Writes "Remember him whose passion's power"				ancient Greece.—Receives a communication from
Publishes "The Wails" anonymously				the Greek Committee sitting in London
Publishes "The Corsair."				Sells for Greece.
Embarks on a journey to Abyssinia				Reaches Argostoli.—Makes an excursion to Ithaca.
Writes "When from the Heart where borrow etc."				Walls at Cephalonia the arrival of the Greek fleet
				Arrives at Missolonghi.—22. Writes "Lines on com-" pleting the my "Fifty-fourth Year."—Is appointed commander-in-chief of an expedition against Lepanto.
				Is seized with a convulsive fit
				His last illness
				Dies

CONTENTS.

For a full alphabetical reference to the Contents in detail, see Index, page 681.

	PAGE		PAGE
CHRONOLOGY OF BYRON'S LIFE AND WORKS	iv	HOURS OF IDLENESS—Continued.
LIFE OF LORD BYRON	ix	Translation from Catullus. "Ligete, Veneres, Cupidinesque," etc.	306
CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE	1	Imitation from Catellus. To Ellen	306
THE GLADIATOR	50	Translation from Horace. "Justum et tenacem," etc.	306
THE BRIDE OF ABYDOS	61	From Anacreon	307
THE CORSAIR	72	From Anacreon	307
LARA	88	From the Prometheus Vincens of Æschylus	307
THE SIEGE OF CORINTH	98	To Emma	307
MARINA	107	To M. S. G.	308
THE PRISONER OF CHILLON	112	To Caroline	308
BYRON	116	To the Same	308
MAHMETA	123	To the Same	309
THIS ISLAND	130	Stanzas to a Lady, with the Poems of Camoens	309
MANSERED	142	The First Kiss of Love	309
MARINO FALLERO, DOGE OF VENICE	154	On a Change of Masters at a great Public School	309
HEAVEN AND EARTH	185	To the Duke of Dorset	310
SARDANAPALUS	195	Fragment, written shortly after the Marriage of Miss Chaworth	311
THE TWO FOSCARI	222	Granta. A Medley	311
THE REFORMED TRANSFORMED	241	On a Distant View of the Village and School of Barrow on the Hill	312
ODS	255	To M——	312
WURSEN	272	To Woman	312
HOURS OF IDLENESS	303	To M. S. G.	313
On the Death of a Young Lady, Cousin to the Author, and very dear to him	304	To Mary, on receiving her Picture	313
To E——	304	To Lesbia	313
To D——	304	Lines addressed to a Young Lady, who was alarmed at the Sound of a Bullet hissing near her	313
Epitaph on a Friend	305	Love's last Adieu	314
A Fragment	305	Dametas	314
On leaving Newstead Abbey	305	To Marion	314
Lines written in "Letters to an Italian Nun and an English Gentleman; by J. J. Rousseau founded on Facts"	305	To a Lady who presented to the Author a Lock of Hair braided with his Own	315
Answer to the foregoing, addressed to Miss —	306	Oscar of Alva. A Tale	315
Andrian's Address to his Soul when Dying	306	The Episode of Nisus and Euryalus	316
Translation from Catullus. Ad Lesbium	306	Translation from the Medea of Euripides	321
Translation of the Epitaph on Virgil and Thallus, by Demetrius Marone	306	Thoughts suggested by a College Examination	321
Imitation of Tibullus. Sulpicius and Cerinthum	306	To a beautiful Quaker	322
		The Cornelian	322
		An occasional Prologue to "The Wheel of Fortune"	322

CONTENTS.

HOURS OF IDLENESS—Continued.

	PAGE
On the Death of Mr. Fox	323
The Tear	323
Reply to some Verses of J. M. B. Pigot, Esq., on the Cruelty of his Mistress	324
To the Sighing Strephon	324
To Eliza	324
Lachin y Gair	324
To Romance	325
Answer to some elegant Verses sent by a Friend to the Author, complaining that one of his Descriptions was rather too warmly drawn	325
Elegy on Newstead Abbey	326
Childish Recollections	327
Answer to a beautiful Poem, entitled "The Common Lot"	331
Remembrance	331
To a Lady who presented the Author with the Velvet Band which bound her Treasures Lines addressed to the Rev. J. T. Becher, on his advising the Author to mix more with Society	331
The Death of Calmar and Oria. An Imitation of Macpherson's Ossian	332
L'Amitté est l'Amour sans Allée	333
The Prayer of Nature	334
To Edward Noel Long, Esq.	335
Oh! had my fate been join'd with thine	336
I would I were a careless Child	336
When I roved a young Highlander	336
To George, Earl of Delawarr	337
To the Earl of Clare	337
Lines written beneath an Elm in the Churchyard of Harrow	338

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS

HINTS FROM HORACE	353
THE CURSE OF MINERVA	362
THE WALTZ	365
ODE TO NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE	368

HEBREW MELODIES

She walks in Beauty	370
The Harp the Monarch Minstrel swept	370
If that high World	371
The Wild Gasolite	371
Oh! weep for those	371
On Jordan's Banks	371
Jephthah's Daughter	371
Oh! snatch'd away in Beauty's Bloom	371
My soul is dark	372
I saw thee weep	372
Thy Days are done	372
Song of Saul before his last Battle	372
Saul	372
"All is Vanity, saith the Preacher"	372
When Coldness wraps this suffering Clay	373
Vision of Belshazzar	373
Sun of the Sleepless	373
Were my bosom as false as thou deem'st it to be	373
Herod's Lament for Marianna	373

HEBREW MELODIES—Continued.

By the Rivers of Babylon we sat down and wept	374
The Destruction of Sennacherib	374
A Spirit pass'd before me. From Job	374
On the Day of the Destruction of Jerusalem by Titus	374
DOMESTIC PIECES: 1816	375
Fare thee well	375
A Sketch	375
Stanzas to Augusta. "When all around grew drear and dark"	376
Stanzas to Augusta. "Though the Day of my Destiny's over"	377
Epistle to Augusta. "My sister! my sweet sister! if a name"	377
Lines on hearing that Lady Byron was ill	378
MONODY ON THE DEATH OF THE RIGHT HON. R. B. SHERIDAN	379
THE DREAM	380
THE LAMENT OF TASSO	383
ODE ON VENICE	384
THE MORGANTE MAGGIORE OF PULCI	386
THE PROPHECY OF DANTE	388
FRANCESCA OF RIMINI	390
THE BLUES	400
THE VISION OF JUDGMENT	404
THE AGE OF BRONZE	413
OCCASIONAL PIECES: 1807-1834	420
The Adieu. Written under the Impression that the Author would soon die	420
To a Vain Lady	421
To Anne	421
To the Same	421
To the Author of a Sonnet beginning "Sad is my Verse, you say, and yet no Tear"	421
On finding a Fan	422
Farewell to the Muse	422
To an Oak at Newstead	422
On revisiting Harrow	423
Epitaph on John Adams of Southwell, a Carrier, who died of Drunkenness	423
To my Son	423
Farewell! if ever faintest Prayer	423
Bright be the Place of thy Soul	423
When we Two Parted	424
To a Youthful Friend	424
Lines inscribed upon a Cup formed from a Skull	425
Well, thou art happy!	425
Inscription on the Monument of a Newfoundland Dog	425
To a Lady, on being asked my Reason for quitting England in the Spring	425
Remind me not, remind me not	426
There was a Time, I need not name	426
And wilt thou weep when I am low?	426
Fill the Goblet again. A Song	426
Stanzas to a Lady, on leaving England	427
Lines to Mr. Hodgson. Written on board the Lisbon Packet	427

CONTENTS

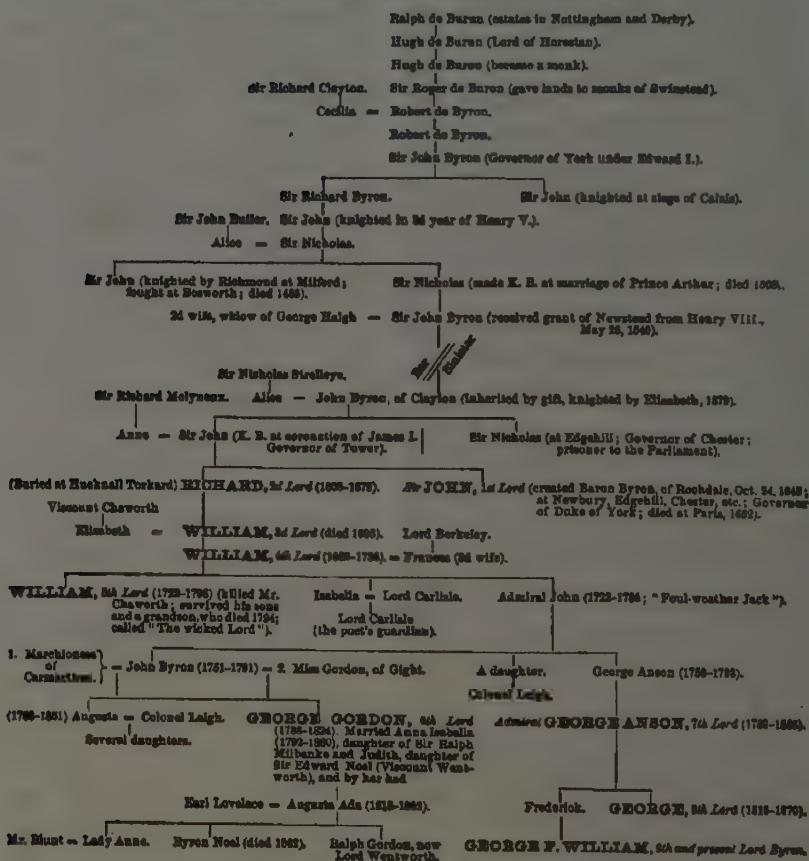

COMMEMORAL PIECES—Continued.	PAGE
First written in an Album at Malta	428
To Florence	428
Written composed during a Thunder-storm	429
Written on passing the Ambracian Gulf	429
The Spell is broken, the Charm is flown!	429
Written after swimming from Sestos to Abydos	430
Found in the Travellers' Book at Orchomenos	430
Wid of Aithon, ere we part	430
Substitute for an Epitaph	430
Consolation of the Nurse's Dole in the Madon of Euripides	430
My Epitaph	430
Lines written beneath a Picture	430
Continuation of the famous Greek War Song	430
Continuation of the Roman Song	431
On Parting	431
Written for Joseph Blackett, late Poet and Dramatist	431
Answered to Malta	431
For Byron. A Fragment	433
On Moore's last Operatic Fare, or Farical Opera	432
Written to a Friend, in answer to some Lines requesting the Author to be cheerful, and to "banish care"	432
Written: "Without a Stone," etc.	432
"Away, away, ye Notes of Woe"	433
"One Struggle more, and I am free"	433
"When Time," etc.	434
"And thou art dead, as young and free"	434
"If sometimes in the Halls of Mourning"	435
"Broken Heart which was broken"	435
"The French"	435
"The Lady weeping"	435
"The Tears," etc. From the Turkish.	435
Written on a Blank Leaf of "The History of Memory"	435
Written at the opening of Drury Lane Theatre, October 10, 1812.	436
Written in Address, by Dr. Plagiarist	436
Written in a Summer House at Hales	437
Remember Thee!	437
"The Love Song"	437
"The Love Song not False," etc.	438
"What was the 'Origin of Love'"	438
"Remember him," etc.	438
"The Poet"	438
Written the Evening	439
Dr. Leigh Hunt in	439
"The Heart where"	439
"The Heart where"	439
"The Heart where"	439
"The Heart where"	439

OCASIONAL PIECES—Continued.	PAGE
From the Portuguese. "Tu mi chamas"	439
Another Version	439
The Devil's Drive. An unfinished Rhapsody	439
Windsor Poetics	440
Stanzas for Music. "I speak not, I trace not," etc.	440
Address intended to be recited at the Caledonian Meeting	440
Fragment of an Epistle to Thomas Moore	441
Condolatory Address to Sarah, Countess of Jersey, on the Prince Regent's returning her Picture to Mrs. Mee	441
To Belshazzar	441
Elegiac Stanzas on the Death of Sir Peter Parker, Bart.	442
Stanzas for Music. "There's not a Joy the World can give," etc.	442
Stanzas for Music. "There be none of Beauty's Daughters"	442
On Napoleon's Escape from Elba	442
Ode from the French. "We do not curse thee, Waterloo"	443
From the French. "Must thou go, my glorious Chief?"	443
On the Star of "The Legion of Honor."	444
From the French	444
Napoleon's Farewell. From the French	444
Endorsement to the Deed of Separation, in the April of 1816	444
Darkness	444
Churchill's Grave	445
Prometheus	445
A Fragment. "Could I remount," etc.	446
Sonnet to Lake Lemna	446
A very mournful Ballad on the Siege and Conquest of Alhama	446
Translation from Vittorelli. On a Nun	447
Stanzas for Music. "Bright be the place of thy Soul"	447
Stanzas for Music. "They say that Hope is Happiness"	447
To Thomas Moore. "My Bark is on the Shore"	447
On the Bust of Helen by Canova	448
Song for the Luddites	448
To Thomas Moore. "What are you doing now?"	448
—So, we'll go no more a roving	448
Verses	448
To Mr. Murray. "To hook the Reader"	448
Epistle from Mr. Murray to Dr. Polidori	449
Epistle to Mr. Murray. "My dear Mr. Murray," etc.	449
To Mr. Murray. "Strahan, Tansoon," etc.	449
On the Birth of John William Risco	449
Hoppper	450
Stanzas to the Po	450
Sonnet to George the Fourth, on the Repeal of Lord Edward Fitzgerald's Forfeiture	450
Epigram from the French of Balhires	450
Stanzas. "Could Love for ever," etc.	451
On my Wedding Day	451
Epitaph for William Pitt	451

GENEALOGY OF THE BYRON FAMILY.

THE BYRON FAMILY, FROM THE CONQUEST.

The Crest of the Byron Family (a mermaid with glass and comb) surmounts this page. Their Arms and Motto appear in 24th of Byron.

Newstead Abbey.
From a sketch by E. Pöhlner.

THE LIFE OF LORD BYRON.

CHAPTER I.

ANCESTRY AND FAMILY.

BYRON'S life was passed under the fierce light that beats upon an intellectual throne. He succeeded in making himself—what he wished to be—the most celebrated personality in the world of letters of our century. Almost every one who came in contact with him has left on record various impressions of intimacy or interview. Those whom he excluded or patronized, maligned; those to whom he was genial, loved him. Mr. Southey, in all sincerity, regarded him as the principle of Evil incarnate; an American writer (of tracts in the form of stories) is of the same opinion: to the Countess Guicciotti he is an archangel. Mr. Carlyle considers him to have been a mere "milky dandy." Goethe ranks him as the first English poet after Shakespeare, and is followed by the leading critics of France, Italy, and Spain. All concur in the admission that Byron was as proud of his race as of his verse, and that in unexampled measure the good and evil of his nature were inherited and inborn. His genealogy is, therefore, a matter of no idle antiquarianism.

There are legends of old Norse Barons migrating from their home in Scandinavia, and settling, one branch in Normandy, another in Livonia. To the latter belonged a shadowy Marshal de Burau, famous for the almost absolute power he wielded in the then infant realm of Russia. Two members of the family came over with the Conqueror, and settled in England. Of Ernests de Burau, who had lands in York and Lincoln, we hear little more. Ralph, the poet's ancestor, is mentioned in Domesday Book—our first authentic record—as having estates in Nottinghamshire and Derby. His son Hugh was lord of Horestan Castle in the latter county, and with his son of the same name, under King Stephen, presented the church of Oasington to the monks of Lenton. The latter Hugh joined their order; but the race was continued by his son Sir Roger, who gave lands to the monastery of Swinestead. This brings us to the reign of Henry II. (1155-1189), when Robert de Hyron adopted the spelling of his name afterwards retained, and by his marriage with Cecilia, heir of Sir Richard Clayton, added to the family possessions an estate in Lancashire, where, till the time of Henry VIII., they fixed their seat. The poet, relying on old wood-carvings at Newstead, claims for some of his ancestors a part in the Crusades, and mentions a name not apparently belonging to that age—

"Near Ascalon's towers, John of Horestan slumbers—" a romance, like many, possibly founded on fact, but incapable of verification.

Two grandsons of Sir Robert have a more substantial fame, having served with distinction in the wars of Edward I. The elder of these was governor of the city of York. Some members of his family fought at Cressy, and one of his sons, Sir John, was knighted by Edward III. at the siege of Calais. Descending through the other, Sir Richard, we come to another Sir John, knighted by Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.) on his landing at Milford. He fought, with his kin, on the field of Bosworth, and dying without issue, left the estates to his brother, Sir Nicholas, knighted in 1503, at the marriage of Prince Arthur. The son of Sir Nicholas, known as "little Sir John of the great beard," appears to have been a favorite of Henry VIII., who made him Steward of Manchester and Lieutenant of Sherwood, and, on the dissolution of the monasteries, presented him with the Priory of Newstead, the rents of which were equivalent to about $20,000 of our money. Sir John, who stepped into the Abbey in 1540, married twice, and the premature appearance of a son by the second wife—widow of Sir George Halgh—brought the bar sinister of which so much has been made. No indication of this fact, however, appears in the family arms, and it is doubtful if the poet was aware of a reproach which in any case does not touch his descent. The "flimsy naturalia," John Byron, of Clayton, inherited by deed of gift, and was knighted by Queen Elizabeth in 1579. His descendants were prominent as staunch Royalists during the whole period of the Civil Wars. (Pages 305, 325, 337.) At Edgely Hill there were seven Byrons on the field.

ANCESTRY AND FAMILY.

Sir Nicholas, one of the seven, is extolled as "a person of great affability and dexterity, as well as martial knowledge, which gave great life to the designs of the well affected." He was taken prisoner by the Parliament while acting as governor of Chester. Under his nephew, Sir John, Newstead is said to have been besieged and taken; but the knight escaped, in the words of the poet—never a Radical at heart—a "protecting genius."

For nobler combats here reserved his life,
To lead the band where godlike Falkland fell."

Clarendon, indeed, informs us, that on the morning before the battle, Falkland, "very cheerful, as always upon action, put himself into the first rank of the Lord Byron's regiment." This slightly antedates his title. The first battle of Newbury was fought on September, 1645. For his services there, and at a previous royal victory, over Waller in July, Sir John was, on October 24th of the same year, created Baron of Rochdale, and so became the first Peer of the family.*

This first lord was succeeded by his brother Richard (1605-1678), famous in the war for his government and gallant defence of Newark. He rests in the vault that now contains the dust of the greatest of his race, in Hooknall Torkard Church, where his epitaph records the fact that the family lost all their present fortunes by their loyalty, adding, "yet it pleased God so to bless the humble endeavors of the said Richard, Lord Byron, that he repurchased part of their ancient inheritance, which he left to his posterity, with a laudable memory for his great piety and charity." His eldest son, William, the third lord (died 1695), is worth remembering on two accounts. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of Viscount Chaworth, and so wore the first link in a strange association of tragedy and romance: he was a patron of one of those poets who, approved by neither gods nor columns, are remembered by the accident of an accident, and was himself a poetaster capable of the couplet,—

* For a condensed summary of the Genealogy of the Byron family, the reader is referred to the Genealogical Table preceding this "Tale."

"My whole ambition only does extend To gain the name of Shipman's faithful friend"— an ambition which, considering its moderate scope, may be granted to have attained its desire.

His successor, the fourth lord (1699-1786), gentleman of the bedchamber to Prince George of Denmark, himself living a quiet life, became, by his third wife, Frances, daughter of Lord Berkeley, the progenitor of a strange group of eccentric, adventurous, and passionate spirits. The eldest son, the fifth lord, and immediate predecessor in the peerage of the poet, was born in 1753, entered the naval service, left his ship, the "Victory," just before she was lost on the rocks of Alderney, and subsequently became master of the stag-hounds. In 1785, the year of the passing of the American Stamp Act, an event occurred which colored the whole of his after-life, and is curiously illustrative of the manners of the time. On January 30th or 31st (accounts vary), ten members of an aristocratic social club sat down to dinner in Pall-mall. Lord Byron and Mr. Chaworth, his neighbor and kinsman, were of the party. In the course of the evening, when the wine was going round, a dispute arose between them about the management of game, so frivolous that one conjectures the quarrel to have been picked to cloak some other cause of offence. Bets were offered, and high words passed, but the company thought the matter had blown over. On going out, however, the disputants met on the stairs, and one of the two, it is uncertain which, cried out to the waiter to show them an empty room. This was done, and, a single tallow-candle being placed on the table, the door was shut. A few minutes later a bell was rung, and the hotel-master rushing in, Mr. Chaworth was found mortally wounded. There had been a struggle in the dim light, and Byron, having received the first lunge harmlessly in his waistcoat, had shortened his sword and run his adversary through the body, with the boast, not uncharacteristic of his grand-nephew, "By G—d, I have as much courage as any man in England." A coroner's inquest was held, and he was committed to the Tower on a charge of murder. The interest in the trial, which subsequently took place in Westminster Hall, was so great that tickets of admission were sold for six guineas. The poem, after two days' discussion, unanimously returned a verdict of manslaughter. Byron, pleading his privilege, and paying his fees, was set at liberty; but he appears henceforth as a spectre-haunted man, roaming about under false names, or shut up in the Abbey like a baited savage, shunned by his fellows high and low, and the centre of the wildest stories. That he shot a coachman, and flung the body into the carriage beside his wife, who very sensibly left him; that he tried to drown her; that he had devils to attend him—were among the many weird legends of "the wicked lord." The poet himself says that his ancestor's only companions were the crickets that used to crawl over him, receive stripes with straws when they misbehaved, and on his death made an exodus in procession from the house. When at home he spent his time in pistol-shooting, making sham fights with wooden ships about the rookeries of the lake and building ugly turrets on the battlements. He hated his heir presumptive, sold the estate of Rochdale—a proceeding afterwards challenged by the poet (entailing law costs of more than $70,000)—and cut down the trees of Newstead, to spite him; but he survived his three sons, his brother, and his only grandson, who was killed in Corsica in 1704.

On his own death, in 1783, the estates and title passed to George Gordon, the future poet, then a child of ten, whom he used to talk of, without a shadow of interest, as "the little boy who lives at Aberdeen." His

ANCESTRY AND FAMILY.

...and became the
...the poet's nominal guardian.
...for society of man-
...in the Boris and
...of indifferent verse.
...the fourth son, John, the
...of the sea-kings from
...to have sprung. Born in 1733,
...entered the naval service, and till
...was tossed from storm to storm.
...on sea, nor I on shore," writes his
... In 1740 a fleet of five ships
...under Commodore Anson to annoy the
...from England was at war, in the
...took service as a midshipman
...all more or less unfortunate—
...Being a bad sailor, and heavily
...down from her company, and wrecked
...The majority of the crew
...which they christened Mount
...all the horrors of mutiny
...in various ways deserted, five of ...them Captain Oshap and Mr.
...by some Patagonians to the Island
...after some months, to Valpa-
...for nearly two years as pris-
...the capital of Chili, and in December,
...a French frigate, which reached
...Early in 1746 they arrived at
...

...is the subject of a well-known spo-
...of Hope, beginning—

...they almost-impeding aid that bore
...Byron from his native shore."

...own account of his adventures, pub-
...remarkable for freshness of scenery
...first literary traveller, Sir John Maude-
...of description which recalls Defoe,
...especially from the use that has
...that marvellous mosaic of voyages,
...the hardships of his hero
...the poet—

"Comparative
...in my grand-dad's narrative.

...Byron sailed with two ships, the
...the "Tamar," on a voyage of dis-
...Lord Kemont, to seek a southern
...of which he took possession of
...the Falkland Islands, again passed
...the Straits, and sailing home by
...circumnavigated the globe. The plan-
...through his affable manners and con-
...made him always popular with his
...afraid to serve under "foul-
...1766 he married the daughter of a
...of Devon. They had two sons
...One of the latter married her
...son), who died in 1773,
...the youth who fell in the Medi-

...retiree, John Byron, was
...in 1781, educated at West-
...a commission, because a
...his character, funda-
...developed itself in such a
...his family. In 1778,
...country, he seduced
...of the Earl of Hold-
...the beauti-
...of Car-
...Mad Jack."

...Mother Eve.

as he was called, seems to have boasted of his conquest; but the marquis, to whom his wife had hitherto been devoted, refused to believe the rumors that were abroad, till an intercepted letter, containing a remittance of money, for which Byron, in reverse of the usual relations, was always clamoring, brought matters to a crisis. The pair decamped to the continent; and in 1779, after the marquis had obtained a divorce, they were regularly married. John Byron seems to have been not only prodigal but heartless, and he made life wretched to the woman he was even more than most husbands bound to cherish. She died in 1784, having given birth to two daughters. One of these daughters died in infancy; the other was Augusta, the half-sister and good genius of the poet, whose memory remains like a star on the fringe of a thunder-cloud, only brighter by the passing of the smoke of calumny.* In 1807 Augusta married Colonel Leigh, and had a numerous family, most of whom died young. Her eldest daughter, Georgiana, married Mr. Henry Trevanion.
The fourth, Melora, had an unfortunate history, the nucleus of an impertinent and happily ephemeral romance.

Arms of the Byron Family.
From Burke's Peerage.

The year after the death of his first wife, whose income of $20,000 ceased with her life, John Byron, who seems to have had the fascinations of a Harry Lyndon, succeeded in marrying a second. This was Miss Catherine Gordon of Gight, a lady with considerable estates in Aberdeenshire—which attracted the adventurer—and an overweening Highland pride in her descent from James I., the greatest of the Stuarts, through his daughter Annabella, and the second Earl of Huntly. Miss Gordon had a fortune of $118,000—in land and bank shares—a fortune which rumor had doubled. This union suggested the ballad of an old rhymist, beginning—

"O where are ye gaeen, bonny Miss Gordon,
O where are ye gaeen, see bonny and braw?
Ye're married, ye've married wi' Johnny Byron,
To squander the lands o' Gight awa'."

The prophecy of the rhymist was soon fulfilled. The property of the Scotch heiress was squandered with impetuous rapidity by the English rake.

We may here note the comparison would have been unfavorable to Mrs. Byron had Captain Byron compared her with a woman of ordinary attractiveness. For though she had royal blood in her veins, and belonged to the superior branch of the Gordons, it would not have been easy to find a gentlewoman whose person and countenance were less indicative of ancestral purity.†

† See poem and foot-note, page 225.

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE.

A dumpy young woman, with a large waist, sordid complexion, and homely features, she would have been mistaken anywhere for a small farmer's daughter or a petty tradesman's wife, had it not been for her silks and feathers, the rings on her fingers and the jewelry about her short thick neck. At this early time of her career she was not quite so graceless and awkward as Mrs. Carducci (in Lord Beaconsfield's "Venetia"), but it was already manifest that she would be enormously corpulent on coming to middle age; and even in her twenty-fifth year she walked in a way that showed how absurdly she would waddle through drawing-rooms and gardens on the development of her unwieldy person. In the last century it was not uncommon for matrons of ancient lineage to possess little learning and no accomplishments; but Miss Gordon's education was very much inferior to the education usually accorded to the young gentlewomen of her period. Unable to speak any other language, she spoke her mother tongue with a broad Scotch brogue, and wrote it in a style that in this politer age would be discreditable to a waiting-woman. Though she was a writer of long epistles, they seldom contained a capital letter, or a mark of punctuation, to assist the reader in the sometimes arduous task of discovering their precise meaning; and though she could spell the more simple words correctly, when she was writing in a state of mental placidity, she never used her pen in moments of excitement without committing comical blunders of orthography. To Captain Byron, however, the lady's temper was more grievous than her defects of person, breeding, and culture. It should, however, be remembered by readers who would do her justice that Mrs. Byron was by no means devoid of the shrewdness and ordinary intelligence of inferior womankind, and was capable of generous impulses to the persons whom, in her frequent fits of uncontrollable fury, she would assail with unfeminine violence, and even with unnatural cruelty.

In 1786 Mrs. Byron left Scotland for France, and returned to England towards the close of the following year. On the 22d of January, 1788, in Holles Street, London, Mrs. Byron gave birth to her only child, the future poet, George Gordon, sixth lord. Shortly after, being pressed by his creditors, the father abandoned both, and leaving them with a pittance of $750 a year, fled to Valenciennes, where he died, in August, 1791.

CHAPTER II.

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE.

[1786—1808.]

SOON after the birth of her son, Mrs. Byron took him to Scotland. After spending some time with a relation, she, early in 1790, settled in a small house in Aberdeen. Ere long her husband, who had in the interval dissipated away his remaining means, rejoined her; and they lived together in humble lodgings, until their tempers, alike fiery and irritable, compelled a definite separation. They occupied apartments, for some time, at the opposite ends of the same street, and interchanged visits.

Being accustomed to meet the boy and his nurse, the father expressed a wish that the former should be sent to live with him, at least for some days. "To this request," Moore informs us, "Mrs. Byron was at first not very willing to accede; but, on the representation of the nurse that if he kept him over one night he would not do so another, she consented. On inquiring next morning after the child, she was told by Captain Byron that he had been quite enough of his young visitor." After a short stay in the north, the Captain, extorting enough money from his wife to enable him to fly from his creditors, escaped to France. His absence must have been a relief; but his death is said to have so affected the unhappy lady, that her shrieks disturbed the neighborhood. The circumstance recalls an anecdote of a similar outburst—attested by Sir Walter Scott, who was present on the occasion—before her marriage. Being present at a representation, in Edinburgh, of the Fatal Marriage, when Mrs. Siddons was personating Imabella, Miss Gordon was seized with a fit, and carried out of the theatre, screaming out, "O my Byron, my Byron." All we know of her character shows it to have been not only proud, impulsive, and wayward, but hysterical. She constantly boasted of her descent, and clung to the courtesy title of "honorable," to which she had no claim. Her affection and anger were alike demonstrative, her temper never for an hour secure. She half worshipped, half hated, the speed-thrift to whom she was married, and took no effective steps to protect her property; her son she alternately petted and abused. "Your mother's a fool!" said a school companion to him years after. "I know it," was his unique and tragic reply. Never was poet born to so much ill-luck, and to so much bad blood. The records of his infancy betray the temper which Byron preserved through life—passionate, sullen, defiant of authority, but singularly amenable to kindness. On being scolded by his first nurse for having soiled a dress, without uttering a word he tore it from top to seam, as he had seen his mother tear her caps and gowns; but her sister and successor in office, May Gray, acquired and retained a hold over his affections, to which he has borne grateful testimony. To her training is attributed the early and remarkable knowledge of the Scriptures, especially of the Psalms, which he possessed; he was, according to her later testimony, peculiarly inquisitive and puzzling about religion.

To this practical orphanhood, and inheritance of feverish passion, there was added another, and to him a heavy and life-long burden. A physical defect in a healthy nature may either pass without notice or be turned to a high purpose. Accounts differ as to the extent and origin of his deformity; and the doubts on the matter are not removed by the inconsistent accounts of the indelicate post-mortem examination made by Mr. Trelawny at Missolonghi. It is certain that one of the poet's feet was, either at birth or at a very early period, so seriously clubbed or twisted as to affect his gait, and to a considerable extent his habits. It also appears that the surgical means—boots, bandages, etc.—adopted to straighten the limb only aggravated the evil. His sensitiveness on the subject was early awakened by careless or unfeeling references. "What a pretty boy Byron is!" said a friend of his nurse. "What a pity he has such a leg!" On which the child, with flashing eyes, cutting at her with a baby's whip, cried out, "Dinna speak of it." His mother herself, in her violent fits of anger, when the boy ran round the room laughing at her attempts to catch him, used to say he was a little dog, as bad as his father, and to call him "a lame brat"—an incident which suggested the opening scene of the Deformed Transformed.^{*} In the height of his popularity he fancied that the beggars and street-sweepers in London were mocking him. He satirized and discouraged dancing; he preferred riding and swimming to other exercises, because they concealed his weakness; and on his death-bed asked to be blistered in such a way that he might not be called on

* See text and foot-notes on pages 261, 244, 247.

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE

The Countess Guiccioli, Lady Blessington, wrote often, as if in society few would have observed the defect if he had not referred to it; and it was never far from the mind. But to the question why Byron did not bear his lameness as bravely and stoically as Scott bore his lameness, one answer is, that while the Scotch poet suffered from nothing but a club-foot, the author of "Childe Harold" was a lameness for more trying to health and spirit. Had Sir Walter been constrained to pick his way through life on his toes, "hopping" about like a fish (as Judge Leigh Hunt's way of sneering at a common-sense physician), he would certainly have been lame. And had Byron been able to walk about as Scott, albeit with a club-foot, he would have been a different man, with melancholy and moved to sympathy the fierce breath of anger.

At five he was sent to a rudimentary day school of seven boys, taught by a Mr. Bowers, where he learned almost nothing save to repeat monosyllabic words. He next passed through the hands of a schoolmaster, named Rose, under whose tuition, according to his own account, he made astonishing progress, being initiated into the study of Roman history and taking special delight in the battle of Ratisbona, when standing on the heights of the town and looking down on the little round battlements. He remembered his young enthusiasm and his old tutor, who he describes as "a very serious, but kind young man. He was the son of a physician, but a good scholar. With him I began to continue till I went to the grammar school, where I thrived all the classes to the fourth, and then proceeded to England by the demise of my father."

His early school days there is little further to be learned from scattered hints that he was a brilliant scholar, and low in his class, and seems to have no ambition to stand high; he eagerly took to history and romance, especially in the Arabian Nights. He was a keen sportsman, and always disliked mathematics, persecuted by masters and mates as of quick and adventurous, prone to sports, always ready to give a blow than to take one, affectionately.

Byron was killed at Corsica, in 1794, he was killed to the title. In 1797, a friend, who knew the boy, said, "We shall have a fine day of reading your speeches in the House of Lords," he, with precocious consciousness, replied, "If you read any speeches in the House of Lords." The other illustrates his precocious delight in detecting imposture. Having scribbled on a piece of paper several lines of mere gibberish, he brought them to Lavender, and gravely asked what language it was; and on receiving the answer, "It is Italian," he broke into an exultant laugh at the expense of his tormentor. Another story survives, of his vindictive spirit giving birth to his first rhymes. A meddling old lady, who used to visit his mother and was possessed of a curious belief in a future transmigration to our satellite—the blackness of whose scenery he had not realized—having given him some cause of offence, he stormed out to his nurse that he "could not bear the sight of this witch," and vented his wrath in a couplet.

The poet himself dates his "first dash into poetry" a year later (1800), from his juvenile passion for his cousin Margaret Parker, whose subsequent death from

In the course of 1790, after an attack of scarlet fever at Aberdeen, he was taken by his mother to Balclutha, and on his recovery spent much of his time in rambling about the country. "From this period," he says, "I date my love of mountainous countries. I can never forget the effect, years afterwards, in England, of the only thing I had long seen, even in miniature, of a mountain, in the Malvern Hills. After I returned to Cheltenham I used to watch them every afternoon, at sunset, with a sensation which I cannot describe."

The poet, owing to his physical defect, was not a great climber, and we are informed, on the authority of his nurse, that he never even scaled the easy attainable summit of the "steep frowning" hill of which he has made such effective use. But the impression of it from a distance was none the less genuine, and his "When I roved a young Highlander," page 436, reflects the poet's love for the latitudes.

Byron's allusions to Scotland are variable and inconsistent. His satire on her reviewers was sharpened by the show of national as well as personal antipathy; and when, about the time of its production, a young lady remarked that he had a little of the northern manner of speech, he burst out, "Good God! I hope not. I would rather the whole d-d country was sunk in the sea. I ths Scotch accent!"

In the autumn of 1798 the family, i. e., his mother—who had sold the whole of her household furniture for £375—with himself, and a maid, set south. The poet's only recorded impression of the journey is a gleam of Loch Lavan, to which he refers in one of his latest letters. He never revisited the land of his birth. Our next glimpse of him is on his passing the toll-bar of Newstead. Mrs. Byron asked the old woman who kept it, "Who is the next heir?" and on her answer, "They say it is a little boy who lives at Aberdeen," he exclaimed the nurse.

Returned to the ancestral Abbey, and finding it half ruined and desolate, they migrated for a time to the neighboring Nottingham. Here the child's first experience was another course of surgical torture. He was placed under the charge of a quack named Lavender, who rubbed his feet in oil, and screwed it about in wooden machines. This useless treatment is associated with two characteristic anecdotes. One relates to the endurance which Byron, on every occasion of mere physical trial, was capable of displaying. Mr. Rogers, a private tutor, with whom he was reading passages of Virgil and Cicero, remarked, "It makes me uncomfortable, my lord, to see you sitting there in such pain as I know you must be suffering." "Never mind, Mr. Rogers," said the child, "you shall not see any signs of it in me." The other illustrates his precocious delight in detecting imposture. Having scribbled on a piece of paper several lines of mere gibberish, he brought them to Lavender, and gravely asked what language it was; and on receiving the answer, "It is Italian," he broke into an exultant laugh at the expense of his tormentor. Another story survives, of his vindictive spirit giving birth to his first rhymes. A meddling old lady, who used to visit his mother and was possessed of a curious belief in a future transmigration to our satellite—the blackness of whose scenery he had not realized—having given him some cause of offence, he stormed out to his nurse that he "could not bear the sight of this witch," and vented his wrath in a couplet.

The poet himself dates his "first dash into poetry" a year later (1800), from his juvenile passion for his cousin Margaret Parker, whose subsequent death from an injury caused by a fall he afterwards deplored in a forgotten elegy. "I do not recollect," he writes through the transfiguring mists of memory, "anything equal to the transparent beauty of my cousin, or to the sweetness of her temper, during the short period of our intimacy. She looked as if she had been made out of a rainbow—all beauty and peace. My passion had the usual effects upon me—I could not sleep; I could not eat; I could not rest. It was the texture of my life to think of the time that must elapse before we could meet again. But I was a fool then, and not much wiser now." Sic transit scintilla.

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE.

The departure, at a somewhat earlier date, of his nurse, May Gray, for her native country, gave rise to evidence of another kind of affection. On her leaving, he presented her with his first watch, and a miniature by Kay, of Edinburgh, representing him with a profession of hair over his shoulders. He continued to correspond with her at intervals. Byron was always beloved by his servants. This nurse afterwards married well, and during her last illness, in 1827, communicated to her attendant, Dr. Ewing, of Aberdeen, recollections of the poet, from which his biographers have drawn.

Byron.

From a miniature by Kay, 1795.

In the summer of 1799 he was sent to London, entrusted to the medical care of Dr. Baillie (brother of Joanna, the dramatist), and placed in a boarding-school at Dulwich, under the charge of Dr. Glennie. The physician advised a moderation in athletic sports, which the patient in his hours of liberty was constantly apt to exceed. The teacher—who continued to cherish an affectionate remembrance of his pupil, even when he was told, on a visit to Geneva in 1817, that he ought to have "made a better boy of him"—testifies to the alacrity with which he entered on his tasks, his playful good-humor with his comrades, his reading in history beyond his age, and his intimate acquaintance with the Scriptures. "In my study," he states, "he found many books open to him; among others, a set of our poets from Chaucer to Churchill, which I am almost tempted to say he had more than once perused from beginning to end." One of the books referred to was the Narrative of the Shipwreck of the "June," which contains, almost word for word, the account of the "two fathers," in Don Juan. Meanwhile Mrs. Byron—whose reduced income had been opportunely augmented by a grant of a $1,500 annuity from the Civil List—after revisiting Newcastle, followed her son to London, and took up her residence in a house in Stoney-street. She was in the habit of having him with her there from Saturday to Monday, kept him from school for weeks, introduced him to idle company, and in other ways was continually hampering his progress.

Byron, on his accession to the peerage, having become a ward in Chancery, was handed over by the Court to the guardianship of Lord Carlisle, nephew of the admiral, and son of the grand aunt of the poet. Like his mother, this earl aspired to be a poet, and his tragedy, The Father's Revenge, received some commendation from Dr. Johnson; but his relations with his illustrious kinsman were from the first unsatisfactory. In answer to Dr. Glennie's appeal he exerted his authority against the interruptions to his ward's education; but the attempt to mend matters led to such outrageous exhibitions of temper that he said to the master, "I can have nothing more to do with Mrs. Byron; you must now manage her as you can." Finally, after two years of work, which she had done her best to mar, she herself requested his guardian to have her son removed to a public school, and accordingly he went to Harrow, where he remained till the autumn of 1805. The first vacation, in the summer of 1801, is marked by his visit to Cheltenham, where his mother, from whom he inherited a fair amount of Scotch superstition, consulted a fortune-teller, who said he would be twice married, the second time to a foreigner.

Harrow was then under the management of Dr. Joseph Drury, one of the most estimable of its distinguished head-masters. His account of the first impressions produced by his pupil, and his judicious manner of handling a sensitive nature, cannot with advantage be condensed.

"Mr. Hanson," he writes, "Lord Byron's solicitor, consigned him to my care at the aged thirteen and a half, with remarks that his education had been neglected; that he was ill prepared for a public school; but that he thought there was a cleverness about him. After his departure I took my young disciple into my study, and endeavored to bring him forward by inquiries as to his former amusements, employments, and associates, but with little or no effect, and I soon found that a wild mountain colt had been submitted to my management. But there was mind in his eye. In the first place, it was necessary to attach him to an elder boy; but the information he received gave him no pleasure when he heard of the advances of someone younger than himself. This I discovered, and assured him that he should not be placed till by diligence he might rank with those of his own age. His manner and temper soon convinced me that he might be led by a silken string to a point, rather than a cable: on that principle I acted."

After a time, Dr. Drury tells us that he waited on Lord Carlisle, who wished to give some information about his ward's property and to inquire respecting his abilities, and continues: "On the former circumstance I made no remark; as to the latter I replied, 'He has talents, my lord, which will add lustre to his rank.' 'Indeed!' said his lordship with a degree of surprise that, according to my feeling, did not express in it all the satisfaction I expected." With, perhaps, unconscious humor on the part of the writer, we are left in doubt as to whether the indifference proceeded from the jealousy that clings to pretensions, from incredulity, or a feeling that no talent could add lustre to rank.

In 1804 Byron refers to the antipathy his mother had to his guardian. Later he expresses gratitude for some unknown service, in recognition of which the second edition of the Hours of Idleness was dedicated "to his official ward and affectionate kinsman," to Lord Clarendon. The tribute being coldly received, led to fresh estrangement, and when Byron, on his coming of age, wrote to confirm the earl of the fact, in expectation of being introduced to the House of Peers, he had for answer a more formal statement of its rules. This rebuff affected him as Addison's praise of Tottel affected Pope, and the following lines were published in the March of the same year—

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE.

"Look! too are lords! such things at times befall,
And I am some praise in poems to write at all.
You did not make me read away the time,
And now you must take their tricks with their rhyme.
Bismarck! (indeed!) with your merits fled,
No pains I need to deck a noble head;
No more, and cheer, with consenting smile,
The periphrastic of Carlisle."

In prose he adds, "If, before I escaped from my teens, I lost anything in favour of [his lordship's] paper-heads, it was in the way of dutiful dedication, and more from the adulation of others than my own judgment, and I seize the first opportunity of pronouncing my sincere repentance." In a letter of 1814 he expressed to Keats his regret for his avowal, and in his reference to the death of the Hon. Frederick Howard, in Childe Harold, he endeavored to make amends in the lines—

"Yet, — I would select from that proud throng,
Fragrant as they blend me with the line,
And partly that I did his fire some wrong."

This is all of any interest we know regarding the fitful connection of the guardian and ward.

Towards Mr. Murray the poet continued through life to cherish sentiments of gratitude, and always spoke of him with veneration. "He was," he says, "the best, the kindest and yet strictest friend I ever had, and I cannot now call as a father, whose warnings I have remembered, but too faint, though too late, when I have erred, and whose counsel I have but followed when I have done well or wisely."

Great educational institutions must consult the greatest good of the greatest number of commonplace minds; his regulations against which genius is apt to kick, and Byron, who was by nature and luck of discipline peculiarly ill fitted to conform to routine, confessed that till the last year and a half he hated Harrow. He never took kindly to the studies of the place, and wasted no time as accurate scholar. In the Hours and Idleness, and elsewhere, he evinces considerable familiarity with the leading authors of antiquity, but it is doubtful whether he read any of the more difficult of them in the original.

Comparatively slight stress was then laid on modern languages. Byron came to read French with fluency, as he certainly made himself familiar with the great writers of the eighteenth century; but he spoke it with little ease or accuracy. Of German he had a smattering merely. Italian was the only language, besides his own, of which Byron was a master. But the extent and variety of his general reading was remarkable. His list of books drawn up in 1807, includes more histories and biography than most men of education read during a life, a whole lot of philosophy; the poets en masse; strong dragons, Demosthenes, Cicero, and Platonism are debated from the Revolution to the year 1743; poets en masse diversely, including Blair, Tillotson, Hooker, with the characteristic addition—"all very strong." I author books of religion, though I reverence, and have read without the blasphemous notions of sectaries." (See foot-note, pages 151, 256, 263, 497.) Lastly, under the head of "Miscellanies," we have Spectator, Kentley, Waverley, etc., etc., among novels, the works of Cervantes, Fielding, Smollett, Richardson, Mackenzie, Sterne, Rabelais, and Boccaccio. He recommends Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy as the best storehouse for second-hand quotations, as Sterne and others have found it, and tells us that the great part of the books named were perused before the age of fifteen. Making allowance for all exaggeration, we can believe that Byron was an omnivorous reader—"I read eating, read in bed, read when no one else reads"—and, having a memory only less retentive than Macaulay's, acquired so much general information as to be suspected of picking it up from Reviews. He himself declares that he never read a Review till he was eighteen years old—when he himself wrote one, on Wordsworth.

At Harrow, Byron proved himself capable of violent fits of work, but of "few continuous drudgeries." He would turn out an unusual number of hexameters,

Lord Clarendon.
From a family miniature.

and again lapse into as much idleness as the teachers would tolerate. His forte was in declamation: his attitude and delivery, and power of extemporizing, surprised even critical listeners into unguarded praise. "My qualities," he says "were much more oratorical and martial than poetical; no one had the least notion that I should subside into poetry." Unpopular at first, he began to like school when he found his way to be a champion, and from his energy in sports, more than from the impression produced by his talents, had come to be recognized as a leader among his fellows. Unfortunately, towards the close of his course, in 1805, the leadership at Harrow changed hands. Dr. Drury retired, and was succeeded by Dr. Butler. This event suggested the lines beginning—

"Where are those honors, Ida, once your own,
When Probus fill'd your magistratic throne?"

* See page 256.

† See page 24, stanza xlix.

‡ See poem, page 306.

EARLY YEARS AND SCHOOL LIFE.

The appointment was generally unpopular among the boys, whose sympathies were enlisted in favor of Henry Drury, the son of their former master, and Dr. Butler seems for a time to have had considerable difficulty in maintaining discipline. Byron, always "famous for rowing," was a ringleader of the rebellious party, compared himself to Tyrtæus. On one occasion he tore down the window-gratings in a room of the school-house; with the remark that they darkened the hall; on another he is reported to have refused a dinner invitation from the master, with the impertinent remark that he could never think of eating him in return to dine at Newstead. On the other hand, he seems to have set limits to the rudity, and prevented some of the boys from setting their desks on fire by pointing to their fathers' names carved on them. (Page 329.) Byron afterwards expressed regret for his rudeness; but Butler remains in his verse as "Pompeius of narrow brain, yet of a narrower soul."

Of the poet's free hours, during the last years of his residence, which he refers to as among the happiest of his life, many were spent in solitary musing by an elm-tree, near a tomb to which his name has been given—a spot commanding a far view of London, of Windsor, "blossomed high in tufted trees," and of the green fields that stretch between, covered in spring with white and red snow of apple blossom. (See foot-notes and poems, pages 313, 338.) The others were devoted to the society of his chosen comrades. Byron, if not one of the safest, was one of the warmest of friends, and he plucked the mors sagely at the choicest fruit of English public school and college life, from the feeling he so pathetically expresses,—

"Is there no cause beyond the common claim,
Kindred to all in childhood's very name?
Ah, were some stronger impulse vibrate here,
Which whippers Friendship will be doubly dear
To one who thus for kindred hearts must roam,
And seek abroad the love denied at home.
Those hearts, dear Ida, have I found in thee—
A home, a world, a paradise to me.

Of his Harrow intimates, the most prominent were the Duke of Dorset,* the poet's favored fag; Lord Clare† (the Lyons of the Childish Recollections) (page 337); Lord Delawar‡ (the Euryalus); John Wingfield (Alonso), who died at Coimbra, 1811; Cecil Tattersall (Davus); Edward Noel Long§ (Cleon); Wildman, afterwards proprietor of Newstead; and Sir Robert Peel.

Of the last, his form-fellow and most famous of his mates, the story is told of his being unmercifully beaten for offering resistance to his fag master, and Byron rushing up to intercede with an offer to take half the blows. Peel was an exact contemporary, having been born in the same year, 1788. It has been remarked that most of the poet's associates were his juniors, and, less fairly, that he liked to regard them as his satellites. But even at Dulwich his ostentation of rank had provoked for him the nickname of "the old English baron." To Wildman, who, as a senior, had a right of inflicting chastisement for offences, he said, "I find you have got Delawar on your list; pray don't llok him." "Why not?" was the reply. "Why, I don't know, except that he is a brother peer." Again, he interfered with the more effectual arm of physical force to rescue a junior protégé—Isme like himself, and otherwise much weaker—from the ill-treatment of some hulking tyrant. "Harness," he said, "if any one bullies you, tell me, and I'll thrash him if I can;" and he kept his word. Harness became an accomplished clergyman and minor poet, and has left some pleasing reminiscences of his former patron. The profligy of the school, George Sinclair, was in the habit of writing the poet's exercises, and getting his battles fought for him in return. His bosom friend was Lord Clare. To him his confidences were most freely given, and his most affectionate verses addressed. In the characteristic stanzas entitled "L'amitié est l'amour sans ailes," we feel as if between them the qualifying phrase might have been omitted; for their letters, carefully preserved on either side, are a record of the jealous complaints and the reconciliations of lovers. In 1831 Byron writes, "I never bear the name Clare without a beating of the heart even now; and I write it with the feelings of 1808-4-5, ad infinitum." At the same date he says of an accidental meeting: "It annihilated for a moment all the years between the present time and the days of Harrow. It was a new and inexplicable feeling, like a rising from the grave to me. Clare too was much agitated—more in appearance than I was myself—for I could feel his heart beat to his fingers' ends, unless, indeed, it was the pulse of my own which made me think so. We were but five minutes together on the public road, but I hardly recollect an hour of my existence that could be weighed against them." They were "all that brothers should be but the name;" and it is interesting to trace this relationship between the greatest genius of the new time and the son of the statesman who, in the preceding age, stands out serene and strong amid the swarm of turbulent rioters and ranting orators by whom he was surrounded and reviled.

Before leaving Harrow the poet had passed through the experience of a passion of another kind, with a result that unhappily colored his life. Accounts differ as to his first meeting with Mary Ann Chaworth, the heiress of the family whose estates adjoined his own, and daughter of the race that had held with his such varied relations. In one of his letters he dates the introduction previous to his trip to Cheltenham, but it seems not to have ripened into intimacy till a later period. Byron, who had, in the autumn of 1803, visited his mother at Bath, joined in a masquerade there, and attracted attention by the liveliness of his manners. In the following year Mrs. Byron again settled at Nottingham, and in the course of a second and longer visit to her he frequently passed the night at the Abbey, of which Lord Grey de Ruthven was then a temporary tenant. This was the occasion of his renewing his acquaintance with the Chaworths, who invited him to their seat at Annesley. He used at first to return every evening to Newstead, giving the excuse that the family pictures would come down and take revenge on him for his grand-uncle's deed, a fancy repeated in the Stanzas of Corinith. Latterly he consented to stay at Annesley, which thus became his headquarters during the remainder of the holidays of 1803. The rest of the six weeks were mainly consumed in an excursion to Mallock and Chastleton, in the same companionship. This short period, with the exception of prologue and epilogue, embraced the whole story of his first real love. Byron was on this occasion in earnest; he wished to marry Miss Chaworth, an event which, he says, would have "joined broad lands, healed an old feud, and satisfied at least one heart."

The intensity of his passion is suggestively brought before us in an account of his crossing the Styx of the Peak cavern, alone with the lady and the Chiron of the boat. In the same passage he informs us that he had never told his love; but that she had discovered—it is obvious that she never returned—it. We have another vivid picture of his irritation when she was

* See poem and foot-note, page 310. † See poem, page 337.

‡ See also poem and foot-note, pages 360, 327.

§ See also poem and foot-note, page 338.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

waiting in his presence at Madox; then an account of their riding together in the country on their return to the family residence; again, of his bending over the piano as she was playing the Welsh air of "Mary Anne," and, lastly, of his overhearing her heartless speech to her maid, which first opened his eyes to the substance of affairs—"Do you think I could care for that rascally boy?"—upon which he rushed out of the house, and ran, like a hunted creature, to Newstead. Thence he shortly returned from the rougher school of life to his books and tasks at Harrow. A year later the pair again met to take farewell, on the hill of Annesley—an incident he has commemorated in two stanzas, that have the sound of a wind-mingling obstinacy:—"I suppose," he said, "the next time I see you, you will be Mrs. Chaworth!" "I hope so," she replied (her betrothed, Mr. Mustars, had agreed to assume her family name). The announcement of her marriage, which took place in August, 1805, was made to him by his mother, with the remark, "I have some news for you. Take out your handkerchief; you will require it." On hearing what she had to say, with forced calm he turned the conversation to other subjects, but he was long haunted by a loss which he has made the theme of many of his verses. In 1807 he met for the last time herself the lines beginning—

O that my fate had been joined with thine!†

In the following year he accepted an invitation to visit Annesley, and was visibly affected by the sight of his eldest daughter of Mrs. Chaworth, to whom he addressed a touching congratulation in the poem, "Shouldst thou art happy."‡ Shortly afterwards, when about to leave England for the first time, he finally addressed her in the stanzas—

Farewell, and shivering in the gale,
The bark unfurls her snowy sail.†

Some years later, having an opportunity of revisiting the family of his successful rival, Mrs. Leigh dissuaded him. "Don't go," she said, "for if you do you will certainly fall in love again, and there will be a scene." The narrative of the story culminates in the famous Hours of Idleness, poem of unequal merit, but containing passages of great beauty and pathos, written in the year 1808 (probably, as we are told, amid a flood of tears). Miss Chaworth's attractions beyond those of personal beauty, seem to have been mainly due to the poet's own imagination. A young lady, two years his senior, of a lively and volatile temper, she enjoyed the stolen interviews at the gate between the parson's, and laughed at the ardent letters, passed through a constant of the still awkward youth whom she regarded as a boy. She had no intuition of the power, or appreciate the worship, of one of the future master-minds of England, nor any notion to ally herself with the wild race of Newstead and its perforce her lake, commonplace, fox-hunting spouse. "She was the beau ideal," says Byron, in his most accurate prose account of the affair, written 1803, a few days before his departure for France, "of all that my youthful fancy could paint of beauty. And I have taken all my titles about the essential nature of women from the perfection of imagination created in her. I say created, for I found her as the rest of the sex, anything but angelic."

Mrs. Mustars (her husband afterwards asserted his right to his own name) had in the long-run reason against her choice. The ill-assorted pair, after some thirty years, resolved on separation, and falling into bad health and worse spirits, the "bright morning star of Annesley" passed under a cloud of mental darkness. She died, in 1842, of fright caused by a Nottingham riot.‡ On the decease of Mustars, in 1850, every relic of her ancient family was sold by auction and scattered to the winds.

Miss Chaworth.

From an original taken at the age of 17 years.

CHAPTER III.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP—HOURS OF IDLENESS—BARDS AND REVIEWERS.

[1808-1809.]

IN October, 1805, on the advice of Dr. Druy, Byron was removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, and kept up a connection with the University for less than three years of very irregular attendance, during which we hear nothing of his studies, except the contempt for them expressed in some of the least effective passages of his early satires. He came into residence in bad temper and low spirits. His attachment to Harrow characteristically redoubled as the time drew near to leave it, and his rest was broken "for the last quarter, with counting the hours that remained." He was about to start by himself, with the heavy feeling that he was no longer a boy, and yet against his choice, for he wished to go to Oxford. The Hours of Idleness, the product of this period, are fairly named. He was so idle as regards "problems mathematic," and "barbarous Latin," that it is matter of surprise to learn that he was able to take his degree, as he did, in March, 1806.

Of his Harrow friends, Harness and Long in due course followed him to Cambridge, where their common pursuits were renewed. With the latter—who was drowned in 1809, on a passage to Lisbon with his

† See poem and foot-note, page 311.

‡ See poem and foot-note, page 324.

§ See poem and foot-note, page 432.

§ See poem and foot-note, page 427.

¶ See poem and foot-note, pages 280, 281.

 See poem and note, page 235.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

segment—he spent a considerable portion of his time on the Cam, swimming and diving, in which art they were so expert as to pick up eggs, plates, thimbles, and coins from a depth of fourteen feet—incidents recalled to the poet's mind by reading Milton's invocation to Sabrina. During the same period he distinguished himself at cricket, as in boxing, riding, and shooting. Of his skill as a rider there are various accounts. He was an undoubted marksman, and his habit of carrying about pistols, and use of them wherever he went, was often a source of annoyance and alarm.* He professed a theoretical objection to duelling, but was as ready to take a challenge as Scott, and more ready to send one.

Regarding the masters and professors of Cambridge, Byron has little to say. His own tutor, Tavell, appears pleasantly enough in his verse, and he commends the head of his College, Dr. Lort Mansel, for dignified demeanor in his office and a past reputation for convivial wit. His attentions to Professor Hailstone at Harrowgate were graciously offered and received; but in a letter to Murray he gives a graphically abusive account of Porson, "hiccupping Greek like a Helot" in his cups. The poet was first introduced at Cambridge to a brilliant circle of contemporaries, whose talents or attainments soon made them more or less conspicuous, and most of whom are interesting on their own account as well as from their connection with the subsequent phases of his career. By common consent Charles Skinner Matthews, son of the member for Herefordshire, 1808-9, was the most remarkable of the group. Distinguished alike for scholarship, physical and mental courage, subtlety of thought, humor of fancy, and fascinations of character, this young man seems to have made an impression on the undergraduates of his own similar to that left by Charles Anstin on those of a later generation. The loss of this friend Byron always regarded as an incalculable calamity. In a note to Onilda Harold he writes: "I should have ventured on a verse to the memory of Matthews, were he not too much above all praise of mine. His powers of mind shown in the attainment of greater honors against the ablest candidates, than those of any graduate on record at Cambridge, have sufficiently established his fame on the spot where it was acquired; while his softer qualities live in the recollection of friends who loved him too well to envy his superiority." He was drowned when bathing alone among the reeds of the Cam, in the summer of 1811.

In a letter written from Ravenna in 1830, Byron, in answer to a request for contributions to a proposed memoir, introduces into his notes much autobiographical matter. In reference to a joint visit to Newstead he writes: "Matthews and myself had travelled down from London together, talking all the way incessantly upon one single topic. When we got to Loughborough, I know not what chasm had made us diverge for a moment to some other subject, at which he was indignant. 'Come,' said he, 'don't let us break through; let us go on as we began, to our journey's end;' and so he continued, and was as entertaining as ever to the very end. He had previously occupied, during my year's absence from Cambridge, my rooms in Trinity, with the furniture; and Jones (the gyp), in his odd way, had said, in putting him in, 'Mr. Matthews, I recommend to your attention not to damage any of the movables, for Lord Byron, sir, is a young man of summatious passions.' Matthews was delighted with this, and whenever anybody came to visit him, begged them to handle the very door with caution, and used to repeat Jones's admonition in his tone and manner. . . . He had the same droll sardonic way about everything. A wild Irishman named F., one evening beginning to say something at a large supper, Matthews roared, 'Silence!' and then, pointing to F., cried out, in the words of the oracle, 'Orson is endowed with reason.'"

The whole letter, written in the poet's mature and natural style, gives a vivid picture of the social life and surroundings of his Cambridge days: how much of the set and sententious moralizing of some of his formal biographers might we not have spared, for a report of the conversation on the road from London to Newstead. Of the others gathered round the same centre, Scrope Davies collected the largest share of Byron's affections. To him he wrote after the catastrophe: "Come to me, Scrope; I am almost desolate—left alone in the world. I had lost you, and H., and M., and let me enjoy the survivors while I can." Later he says, "Matthews, Davies, Hobhouse, and myself formed a coterie of our own. Davies has always beaten us all in the war of words, and by colloquial powers at once delighted and kept us in order; even M. yielded to the dashing vivacity of S. D." The last is everywhere commended for the brilliancy of his wit and repartee: he was never afraid to speak the truth. Once, when the poet, in one of his fits of petulance, exclaimed, intending to produce a terrible impression, "I shall go mad!" Davies calmly and cuttingly observed, "It is much more like silliness than madness!" He was the only man who ever laid Byron under any serious pecuniary obligation, having lent him $24,000 in some time of straits. This was repaid on March 27, 1814, when the pair sat up over champagne and claret from six till midnight, after which "Scrope could not be got into the carriage on the way home, but remained tipsy and pious on his knees." Davies was much disconcerted at the influence which the skeptical opinions of Matthews threatened to exercise over Byron's mind. The fourth of this quadrangle of amity was John Cam Hobhouse, afterwards Lord Broughton, the steadfast friend of the poet's whole life, the companion of his travels, the witness of his marriage, the executor of his will, the zealous guardian and vindicator of his fame. His ability is abundantly attested by the impression he left on his contemporaries, his published description of the Pilgrimage, and subsequent literary and political career. Byron bears witness to the warmth of his affections and the charms of his conversation, and to the candor which, as he confessed to Lady Blessington, sometimes tried his patience. There is little doubt that they had some misunderstanding when travelling together, but it was a passing cloud. Eighteen months after his return the poet admits that Hobhouse was his best friend; and when he unexpectedly walked up the stairs of the Palazzo Lanfranchi, at Pisa, Madame Guiccioli exclaims that Byron was seized with such violent emotion, and so extreme an access of joy, that it seemed to take away his strength, and he was forced to sit down in tears.

On the edge of this inner circle, and in many respects allied with it, was the Rev. Francis Hodgson, a scholar, good translator, a sound critic, a fluent writer of graceful verse, and a large-hearted divine, whose correspondence, recently edited with a connective narrative by his son, has thrown light on disputed pages of Lord Byron's life. The views entertained by the friends on literary matters were almost identical; they both fought under the standards of the classic school; they resented the same criticism, they applauded the same successes, and were bound together by the strong tie of mutual admiration. Byron commends Hodgson's verses, and encourages him to write;

* See poem and foot-note, page 111.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Hodgson recognizes in the Bards and Revisers and the early cantos of Childe Harold the promise of Manfred and Cato. Among the associates who strove to bring the poet back to the anchorage of fixed belief, and to wean him from the errors of his thoughts, Francis Hodgson was the most charitable, and therefore the most judicious. That his cautions and exhortations were never sullied by pedantry or excessive dogmatism, is apparent from the frank and unguarded answers which they called forth. In several, which are preserved, and some for the first time reproduced in the recently-published Memoir, we are struck by the mixture of audacity and superficial dogmatism, sometimes amounting to effrontery, that is apt to characterize the positions of a youthful skeptic. In September, 1811, Byron writes from Newstead: "I will have nothing to do with your immortality; we are miserable enough in this life, without the absurdity of speculating upon another. Christianity to save men, but a good Pagan will go to heaven, and a bad Nazarene to hell. I am no Platonist, I am nothing at all; but I would sooner be a Paulician, Manichean, Spinozist, Gentile, Pythagorean, Zoroastrian, than one of the seventy-two villainous sects who are tearing each other to pieces for the love of the Lord and hatred of each other. I will bring ten Massutians, shall shame you all in good-will towards men and prayer to God." On a similar outbreak, however, the Rev. F. Hodgson comments with a sweet humanity, "The poor dear soul meant nothing of this." Elsewhere the poet writes, "I have read Walsingham's sermon. He proves nothing, so I am where I was, viz., a backward pagan; and yet it is a gloomy creed; not I want another, but there is something pagan in me that I cannot shake off. In short, I deny nothing but doubt everything." But his early attitude on matters of religion is best set forth in a letter to Gifford, of 1812, in which he says: "I am no bigot to infidelity, and did not expect that, because I doubted the immortality of man, I should be charged with denying the existence of God. It was the comparative insignificance of ourselves and our world, when placed in comparison of the mighty whole of which man is an atom, that first led me to imagine that our pretensions to eternity might be overthrown. This, and being early diagnosed, as the Calvinistic Scotch school, where I was educated, to church for the first ten years of my life, afflicted me with this malady; for, after all, it is, I believe, a disease of the mind as much as other kinds of hypochondria."

Hodgson was a type of friendly forbearance and largeness of heart, which had for their return a perfect open-heartedness in his correspondent. To no one did the poet more freely abuse himself; to no one did he indulge in more reckless sallies of humor; to no one did he more readily betray his little conceits. From him Byron constantly received advice, and he owed to him the proposition of what might have been a most fruitful and disastrous encounter. On the other hand, the merry man was the recipient of one of the poet's many single-hearted acts of munificence—a gift of £2000, to pay off debts to which he had been left heir. In a letter to his uncle, the former gratefully alludes to this generosity: "Oh, if you knew the exultation of secret joy, and of being too I feel at being free from those depressing embarrassments you would, as I do, think my dearest friend and brother, &c." The whole transaction is a pleasing record of a friendship that was neither sooner nor later resented by the receiver.

Among other associates of the same group should be mentioned Hamr, Dray—long Hodgson's intimate friend, and at last his brother-in-law, to whom many of Byron's first series of letters from abroad are addressed —and Robert Charles Dallas, a name surrounded with various associations, who played a not insignificant part in Byron's history, and, after his death, helped to swell the throng of his annotators. This gentleman, a connection by marriage, and author of some now forgotten novels, first made acquaintance with the poet in London early in 1808.

Meanwhile, during the intervals of his attendance at college, Byron had made other friends. His vacations were divided between London and Southwell, a small town on the road from Mansfield and Newark, once a refuge of Charles I., and still adorned by an old Norman minister. Here Mrs. Byron for several summer seasons took up her abode, and was frequently joined by her son. He was introduced to John Pigot, a medical student of Edinburgh, and his sister Elizabeth,* both endowed with talents above the average, and keenly interested in literary pursuits, to whom a number of his letters are addressed; also to the Rev. J. T. Becher,† author of a treatise on the state of the poor, to whom he was indebted for encouragement and counsel. The poet often rails at the place, which he found dull in comparison with Cambridge and London; writing from the latter, in 1807: "O Southwell, how I rejoice to have left thee! and how I curse the heavy hours I dragged along for so many months among the Mohawks who inhabit your kraals!" and adding that his sole satisfaction during his residence there was having pared off some pounds of flesh. Notwithstanding, in the small but select society of this inland watering-place he passed, on the whole, a pleasant time—listening to the music of the simple ballads in which he delighted, taking part in the performances of the local theatre, making excursions, and writing verses. This otherwise quiet time was disturbed by exhibitions of violence on the part of Mrs. Byron, which suggest the idea of insanity. After one more outrageous than usual, both mother and son are said to have gone to the neighboring apothecary, each to request him not to supply the other with poison. On a later occasion, when he had been meeting her bursts of rage with stubborn mockery, she fixing a poker at his head, and narrowly missed her aim. Upon this he took flight to London, and his Hydra or Alecto, as he calls her, followed: on their meeting, a truce was patched, and they withdrew in opposite directions, she back to Southwell, he to refresh himself on the Sussex coast, till in the August of the same year (1808) he again rejoined her. Shortly afterwards we have from Pigot a description of a trip to Harrowgate, when his lordship's favorite Newfoundland, Boatswain,* whose relation to his master recalls that of Bounce to Pope, or Melba to Scott, sat on this box.

John Cam Hobhouse.
From a drawing by Windt.

* See poems and foot-note, page 324.
† See poems and foot-note, page 322.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

In November Byron printed for private circulation the first issue of his juvenile poems. Mr. Becher having called his attention to one which he thought objectionable, the impression was destroyed; and the author set to work upon another, which, at once weeded and amplified, saw the light in January, 1807. He sent copies, under the title of Juvenilia, to several of his friends, and among others to Henry Mackenzie (the Man of Feeling), and to Fraser Tytler, Lord Woodhouselee. Encouraged by their favorable notices, he determined to appeal to a wider audience, and in March, 1807, the Hours of Idleness, still proceeding from the local press at Newark, were given to the world. In June we find the poet again writing from his college rooms, dwelling with boyish detail on his growth in height and reduction in girth, his late hours and heavy potations, his comrades, and the prospects of his book. From July to September he dates from London, excited by the praises of some now obscure magazine, and planning a journey to the Hebrides. In October he is again settled at Cambridge, and in a letter to Miss Pigot, makes a humorous reference to one of his fantastic freaks: "I have got a new friend, the finest in the world—a same deer. When I brought him here, they asked me what I meant to do with him, and my reply was, 'He should sit for a fellowship.' This answer delighted them not."

The greater part of the spring and summer of 1808 was spent at Durant's Hotel, Albemarle Street. Left to himself, he seems during this period, for the first time, to have freely indulged in dissipations, which are in most lives more or less carefully concealed. But Byron was perpetually taking the public into his confidence, and all his "sins of blood," with the strange additions of his imaginations, have been thrust before us in a manner which even Théophile Gautier might have thought indelicate. Nature and circumstances conspired to the result. With passions which he is fond of comparing to the fires of Vesuvius and Hecla, he was, on his entrance into a social life, which his rank helped to surround with temptations, unconscious of any sufficient motive for resisting them; he had no one to restrain him from the whim of the moment, or with sufficient authority to give him effective advice. A temperament of general dependency, relieved by reckless outbursts of animal spirits, is the least favorable to habitual self-control. The absurdity of Mr. Moore's frequent declaration, that all great poets are inly wrapt in perpetual gloom, is only to be excused by the modesty which, in the saying so, obviously excludes himself from the list. But it is true that anomalous energies are sources of incessant irritation to their possessor, until they have found their proper vent in the free exercise of his highest faculties. Byron had not yet done this, when he was rushing about between London, Brighton, Cambridge, and Newstead—shooting, gambling, swimming, alternately drinking deep and trying to starve himself into elegance, green-room hunting, travelling with disguised ~~unpleasant~~ patronizing D'Egville the dancing-master, Grimaldi the clown, and taking lessons from Mr. Jackson, the distinguished professor of pugilism, to whom he afterwards affectionately refers as his "old friend and corporeal pastor and master." There is no inducement to dwell on amours devoid of romance, further than to remember that they never trench on what the common code of the fashionable world terms dishonor. We can well believe the poet's later assertion, backed by all evidence to the contrary, that he had never been the first means of leading any one astray—a fact perhaps worthy the attention of those moral worshippers of Goethe and Burns who hie as Lord Byron's name.

Though much of this year of his life was passed unprofitably, from it dates the impulse that provoked him to put forth his powers. The Edinburgh, with the attack on the Hours of Idleness, appeared in March, 1808.† This production, by Lord Brongham, is a specimen of the tomahawk style of criticism prevalent in the early years of the century, in which the main motive of the critic was not to deal fairly with his author, but to acquire for himself an easy reputation for cleverness, by a series of smart, contemptuous sentences. Taken separately, the strictures of the Edinburgh are sufficiently just, and the passages quoted for censure are all bad. Byron's genius as a poet was not remarkably precocious. The Hours of Idleness seldom rises, either in thought or expression, very far above the average level of juvenile verse; many of the pieces in the collection are imitations; others, suggested by circumstances of local or temporary interest, had served their turn before coming into print, and it must be admitted their prevailing sentiment is an affection of misanthropy, conveyed in such lines as

"Weary of love, of life, devour'd with spleen,
I rest, a perfect Timon, not misanthrope."

But even in this volume there are indications of force and command. The Prayer of Newton‡ indeed, though previously written, was not included in the edition before the notice of the critic; but the sound of Lochna-Gair,|| and some of the stanzas on Newstead,¶ ought to have saved him from the mistake of his impatient advice. The poet, who through life waited with feverish anxiety for every verdict on his work, is reported, after reading the review, to have looked like a man about to send a challenge. In the midst of a transparent show of indifference, he confessed to have drunk three bottles of claret on the evening of its appearance. But the wound did not mortify into torpor; the Sea-Kings' blood stood him in good stead, and he was not long in collecting his strength for the panther-like spring, which, gaining strength by its delay, twelve months later made it impossible for him to be contented.

The last months of the year he spent at Newstead, vacated by the tenant, who had left the building in the tumble-down condition in which he found it,

† In reference to one of these, see an interesting letter from Mr. Mitre to the Albion in the year 1876, in which, with considerable though not conclusive ingenuity, he endeavors to identify the girl with "Thyra" (see poem, page 422), and with "Astarte," whom he regards as the same person.

‡ See Appendix, note 47, page 694, also foot-note, page 326.

§ See poem, page 324.

¶ See poem and foot-note, page 324.

¶ See poems and foot-notes, pages 323, 324.

* See poem and foot-note, page 424.

CAMBRIDGE, AND FIRST PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Byron was, by his own acknowledgment, at this time "heavily dipped," generous having combined with extravagance to the result, he had no funds to subject the place to anything like a thorough repair, but he busied himself in arranging a few of the rooms for his own present and his mother's after use. About this date he writes to her, beginning in his usual style, "Dear Madam," saying he has as yet no rooms ready for her reception, but that on his departure she shall be tenant till his return. During this interval he was studying Pope, and carefully maturing his own satire. In November the dog Boatswain died in a fit of madness. The event called forth the famous burst of misanthropic verse, ending with the couplet—

"To mark a friend's remains these stones arise;
I never knew but one, and here he lies."

and the inscription on the monument that still remains in the garden of Newstead.

On January 23, 1806, his lordship's coming of age was celebrated with festivities, outlasted of their proportions by his final illness. Early in spring he paid a visit to London, bringing the proof of his satire to the publisher, Cuthbertson. From St. James's Street he writes to Mrs. Byron, on the death of Lord Falkland who had been killed in a duel, and expresses a sympathy for his family, left in destitute circumstances, whom he proceeded to relieve with a generosity only equalled by the delicacy of the manner in which it was shown. Referring to his own embarrassment, he proceeds in the expression of a resolve, often repeated, "Come what may, Newstead and I stand or fall together. I have now lived on the spot—I have fixed my heart on it, and no pressure, present or future, shall induce me to batten the last vestige of our inheritance." He was building false hopes on the result of the suit for the Heolidsale property, which, being dragged from court to court, involved him in heavy expenses, with no satisfactory result. He took his seat in the House of Lords on the 15th of March, and Mr. Dallas, who accompanied him to the bar of the House, gave an account of his demeanour.

His countenance, paler than usual, showed that his mind was agitated, and that he was thinking of the solicitor to whom he had once looked for a hand and countenance in his introduction. There were very few persons in the House. Lord Eldon was going through some ordinary business. When Lord Byron had taken the seat, the Chancellor quitted his coat, and went towards him with a smile, putting out his hand warmly to welcome him, and, though I did not catch the words, I saw that he paid him some compliment. This was all drawn away upon Lord Byron, who made a stiff bow, and put the tips of his fingers into the Chancellor's hand. The Chancellor did not press a welcome so received, but resumed his seat, while Lord Byron carelessly rested himself for a few minutes on one of the empty benches to the left of the throne, usually occupied by the lords in opposition. When, on his joining us, I expressed what I had felt, he said, "If I had shaken hands heartily, he would have sat me down for one of his party; but I will have nothing to do with them on either side. I have taken my seat, and now I will go abroad."

A few days later the English Bards and Scotch Reviewers appeared before the public. The first anonymous edition was exhausted in a month; a second, to which the author gave his name, quickly followed. He was sent at a later date to disfigure this production, and frequently recited many of his verdicts in marginal notes. Several, indeed, seem to have been dictated by feelings so transitory, that in the course of the correction of proof blame was turned into praise, and praise into blame.

The success of Byron's satire was due to the fact of its being the only good thing of its kind since Churchill—for in the Buccad and Married only butterflies were broken upon the wheel—and to its being the first promise of a new power. The Bards and Reviewers also enlisted sympathy, from its vigorous attack upon the critics who had hitherto assumed the prerogative of attack. Jeffrey and Throgmorton were seethed in their own milk; and outsiders, whose credentials were still being examined, as Moore and Campbell, came in for their share of vigorous vituperation. The Lakers fared worst of all. It was the beginning of the author's life-long war, only once relaxed, with Southey. Wordsworth—though against this passage is written "unjust," a concession not much sooner made than withdrawn—is dubbed an idiot, who—

"Both by precept and example shows,
That prose is verse and verse is only prose;"

and Coleridge, a baby—

"To turgid ode and tumid stanza dear."

Lord Byron.

From the Original Painting by Saunders, 1807.

The lines ridiculing the encounter between Jeffrey and Moore, are a fair specimen of the accuracy with which the author had caught the ring of Pope's antithesis:—

"The surly Tolbooth scarcely kept her place,
The Tolbooth felt—for marble sometimes can,
On such occasions, feel as much as man—
The Tolbooth felt dejected of her charms,
If Jeffrey died, except within her arms."

Meanwhile Byron had again retired to Newstead, where he invited some choice spirits to hold a few weeks of farrow all revel. Matthews, one of these, gives an account of the place, and the time they spent there—entering the mansion between a bear and a wolf, and a salvo of pistol-shots; sitting up to all hours, talking politics, philosophy, poetry; hearing stories of the dead lords, and the ghost of the Black Brother; drinking their wine out of the skull-cap which the owner had made out of the cranium of some old monk dug up in the garden; breakfasting at two, then reading, fencing, riding, cricketing, sailing on the lake, and playing with the bear or taming the wolf. The party broke up without having made themselves responsible for any of the crimes of which Childe Harold speaks in its opening verses "and which Dallas in good earnest accepts as venacious, when the poet and his friend Hobhouse started for Falmouth, on their way "outward."

* See poem and foot-note, page 42.

TWO YEARS OF TRAVEL.

CHAPTER IV.

TWO YEARS OF TRAVEL.

[1809-1811.]

THERE is no romance of Munchausen or Dumas more marvellous than the adventures attributed to Lord Byron abroad. Attached to his first expedition are a series of narratives, by professing eye-witnesses, of his intrigues, encounters, acts of diablerie and of rounifiance, in particular of his roaming about the isles of Greece and taking possession of one of them, which have all the same relation to reality as the Arabian Nights to the actual reign of Haroun Al Raschid.

Byron had far more than an average share of the émigré

our young men abroad for a term, among the few allies our wars have left us."

On June 11th, having borrowed money at heavy interest, and stored his mind with information about Persia and India, the contemplated but unattained goal of his travels, he left London, accompanied by his friend Hobhouse, Fletcher his valet, Joe Murray his old butler, and Robert Husbson, the son of one of his tenants, supposed to be represented by the Page in Childe Harold. The two latter, the one on account of his age, the other from his health breaking down, he sent back to England from Gibraltar.

Desolated for some days at Falmouth, a town which he describes as "full of Quakers and salt fish," he despatched letters to his mother, Drury, and Hodgson, exhibiting the changing moods of his mind. Smarting under a slight he received at parting from a school-companion, who had excused himself from a farrow meeting on the plea that he had to go shopping, he at one moment talks of his desolation, and says that, "leaving England without regret," he has thought of entering the Turkish service; in the next, especially in the stanzas to Hodgson, he runs off into a strain of boisterous buffoonery. On the 2d of July the packet by which he was bound sailed for Lisbon, and arrived there about the middle of the month, when the English fleet was anchored in the Tagus. The poet in notes of his stanzas has described the fine view of the port and the disconsolate dirtiness of the city itself, the streets of which were at that time rendered dangerous by the frequency of religious and political assassinations. Nothing but remains of his sojourn to interest us, save the statement of Mr. Hobhouse, that his friend made a more perilous, though less celebrated, achievement by water than his crossing the Hellespont, in swimming from old Lisbon to Belem Castle. Byron praises the neighbouring Sintra as "the most beautiful village in the world," though he joins with Wordsworth in heaping anathemas on the Convention, and extols the grandness of Mafra, the Esmeral of Portugal, in the convent of which a monk, showing the traveller a large library, asked if the English had any books in their country. Despatching his baggage and servants by sea to Gibraltar, he and his friend started on horseback through the south-west of Spain. Their first resting-place, after a ride of 400 miles, performed at an average rate of seventy in the twenty-four hours, was Seville, where they lodged for three days in the house of two ladies, to whose attractions as well as the fascination he seems to have exerted over them, the poet refers. Here, too, he saw, promenading on the Prado, the famous Maid of Saragossa, whom he celebrates in his equally famous stanzas (Childe Harold, page 8, stanza liv). Of Cadix, the next stage, he writes with enthusiasm as a modern Cytherea, describing the bull-fights in his verse, and the beauties in glowing prose. The belles of this city, he says, are the Larrasbira witches of Spain (page 11), and by reason of them, rather than the sea-shore or the Sierra Morena, "sweet Cadix is the first spot in creation." Hence, by an English frigate, they sailed to Gibraltar, for which place he has nothing but curses. Byron had no sympathy with the ordinary forms of British patriotism, and in the great struggle with the tyranny of the First Empire, he may almost be said to have sympathized with Napoleon.

The ship stopped at Cagliari, in Sardinia, and again at Girgenti, on the Sicilian coast. Arriving at Malta, they halted there for three weeks—time enough to establish a sentimental, though Platonic, flirtation with Mrs. Spencer Smith, wife of the British minister at

The Maid of Saragossa.

From a sketch taken from life by F. Stone.

spirit, the counterpoise in the English race of their otherwise arrogant isolation. He held with Wilhelm Meister—

"To give space for wandering is fit,
That the earth was made so wide;"

and wrote to his mother from Athens: "I am so convinced of the advantages of looking at mankind, instead of reading about them, and the bitter effects of staying at home with all the narrow prejudices of an islander, that I think there should be a law amongst us to send

* See page 8, stanza liv.

† See foot-note, page 485.

TWO YEARS OF TRAVEL.

Constantinople, sister-in-law of the famous admiral, and the heroine of some exciting adventures. She is the "Florence" of Childe Harold, and is afterwards addressed in some of the most graceful verses of his cavalier minstrelsy.*

The only other adventure of the visit is Byron's quarrel with an officer, on some unrecorded ground, which Hobhouse tells us nearly resulted in a duel. The friends left Malta on September 30th, in the warship "Spider," and after anchoring off Patras, and spending a few hours on shore, they skirted the coast of Acarnania, in view of localities—as Ithaca, the Leucadian rock, and Actium—whose classic memories filtered through the poet's mind and found a place in his masterpieces. Landing at Previa, they started on a tour through Albania—

"O'er many a mount sublime,
Through lands scarce noticed in historic tales."

Byron was deeply impressed by the beauty of the scenery, and the half-savage independence of the people, described as "always strutting about with slow dignity, though in rags." In October we find him with his companions at Janina, hospitably entertained by order of Ali Pasha, the famous Albanian Turk, bandit, and despot, then engaged in besieging Ibrahim in Illyria. They proceeded on their way by "bleak Pindus," Acherusia's lake, and Zitsa, with its monastery door battered by robbers. Before reaching the latter place they encountered a terrific thunder-storm, in the midst of which they separated, and Byron's detachment lost its way for nine hours, during which he composed the verses to Florence, before quoted.

Some days later they together arrived at Tepelleni, and were there received by Ali Pasha in person. The scene on entering the town is described as recalling Scott's Branksome Castle and the feudal system; and the introduction to Ali, who sat for some of the traits of the poet's corsairs, is graphically reproduced in a letter to Mrs. Byron. "His first question was, why at so early an age I left my country, and without a 'lala,' or nurse? He then said the English minister had told him I was of a great family, and desired his respects to my mother, which I now present to you (date, November 18th). He said he was certain I was a man of birth, because I had small ears, curling hair, and little white hands. He told me to consider him as a father whilst I was in Turkey, and said he looked on me as his son. Indeed, he treated me like a child, sending me almonds, fruit, and sweetmeats twenty times a day." Byron shortly afterwards discovered his host to be a poisoner and an assassin. "Two days ago," he proceeds, in a passage which illustrates his character and a common experience, "I was nearly lost in a Turkish ship-of-war, owing to the ignorance of the captain and crew. Fletcher yelled after his wife; the Greeks called on all the saints, the Mussulmen on Alla; the captain burst into tears and ran below deck, telling us to call on God. The sails were split, the mainyard shivered, the wind blowing fresh, the night setting in; and all our chance was to make for Corfu—or, as F. pathetically called it, a 'watery grave.' I did what I could to console him, but finding him incorrigible, wrapped myself in my Albanian capote, and lay down on the deck to wait the worst." Unable from his lameness, says Hobhouse, to be of any assistance, he in a short time was found amid the trembling sailors fast asleep. They got back to the coast of Suli, and shortly afterwards started through Acarnania and Ætolia for the Morea, again rejoicing in the wild scenery and the apparently kindred spirits of the wild men among whom they passed. Byron was especially fascinated by the fire-light dance and song of the robber band, which he describes and reproduces in Childe Harold.† On the 21st of November he reached Missolonghi, where, fifteen years later, he died. Here he dismissed most of his escort, proceeded to Patras, and on to Vostizza, caught sight of Parnassus, and accepted a flight of eagles near Delphi as a favoring sign of Apollo. "The last bird," he writes, "I ever fired at was an eagle on the shore of the Gulf of Lepanto. It was only wounded, and I tried to save it—the eye was so bright. But it pined and died in a few days; and I never did since, and never will, attempt the life of another bird." From Livadia the travellers proceeded to Thebes, visited the cave of Trophonius, Diana's fountain, the so-called ruins of Pindar's house, and the field of Oberonea, crossed Oitharon, and on Christmas, 1809, arrived before the Ali Pasha.

From a sketch by F. Stone.

defile, near the ruins of Phyle, where he had his first glimpse of Athens, which evoked the famous lines:—

"Ancient of days, august Athena! where,
Where are thy men of might? thy grand in soul?
Gone, glimmering through the dream of things that were.
First in the race that led to glory's goal.
They won, and pass'd away: is this the whole—
A schoolboy's tale, the wonder of an hour?"‡

After which he reverts to his perpetually recurring moral, "Men come and go; but the hills, and waves, and skies, and stars endure"—

"Apollo still thy long, long summer glids:
Still in his beam Mendell's marbles glare;
Art, glory, freedom fall—but nature still is fair."

The duration of Lord Byron's first visit to Athens was about three months, and it was varied by excursions to different parts of Attica—Eleusis, Hymettus, Cape Colonna, Sunium, the scene of Falconer's shipwreck, the Colones of Œdipus, and Marathon, the plain of which is said to have been placed at his disposal for about the same sum that, thirty years later, an American volunteered to give for the bark with his name on the oak at Newstead. Byron had a poor opinion of the

* See foot-note and poems, pages 422, 429.

† See song, page 19.

‡ See page 12, stanza 11.

TWO YEARS OF TRAVEL.

modern Athenians, who seem to have at this period done their best to justify the Roman satirist. He found them superficial, cunning, and false; but, with generous historic insight, he says that no nation in like circumstances would have been much better; that they had the vices of ages of slavery, from which it would require ages of freedom to emancipate them.

In the Greek capital he lodged at the house of a respectable lady, widow of an English vice-consul, who had three daughters, the eldest of whom, Theresa, acquired an innocent and enviable fame as the Maid of Athens, without the dangerous glory of having taken any very firm hold of the heart that she was asked to return.* A more solid passion was the poet's genuine indignation on the "lifting," in border phrase, of the marbles from the Parthenon, and their being taken to England by order of Lord Elgin (see Note 2, page 604). Byron never wrote anything more sincere than the Curse of Minerva (page 362); and he has recorded few incidents more pathetic than that of the old Greek who, when the last stone was removed for exportation, shed tears. The question is still an open one of ethics. There are few Englishmen of the higher rank who do not hold London in the right hand as barely balanced by the rest of the world in the left: a judgment in which we can hardly expect Romans, Parisians, and Athenians to concur. On the other hand, the marbles were moultering at Athens, and they are preserved, like ginger, in the British Museum.

The Maid of Athens.

From a sketch taken from life by T. Allston, in 1809.

Among the adventures of this period are an expedition across the Iliissus to some caves near Kharyati, in which the travellers were by accident nearly outwaded; another to Pentelics, where they tried to carve their names on the marble rock; and a third to the environs of the Piræus in the evening light. Early in March the convenient departure of an English ship of war induced them to make an excursion to Smyrna. There, on the 28th of March, the second cruise of Childe Harold, begun in the previous autumn at Jannina, was completed. They remained in the neighbourhood, visiting Ephesus, without poetical result further than a reference to the jackals in the Siege of Corinth;† and on April 11th left by the "Salsette," a frigate on its way to Constantinople. The vessel touched at the Troad, and Byron spent some time on land, snipe-shooting, and rambling among the reputed ruins of Ilium.

Being again detained in the Dardanelles, waiting for a fair wind, Byron landed on the European side, and swam, in company with Lieutenant Ekenhead, from Sestos to Abydos—a performance of which he often speaks.‡ At length, on May 14, he reached Constantinople, exalted the Golden Horn above all the sights he had seen, and now first abandoned his design of travelling to Persia. Galt, and other more or less gossiping travellers, have accumulated a number of incidents of the poet's life at this period, of his fanciful dress, blaring in scarlet and gold, and of his contentions for the privileges of rank—as when he demanded precedence of the English ambassador in an interview with the Sultan and, on its refusal, could only be pacified by the assurance of the Austrian intendant. In converse with the indifferent persons he displayed a cynical alternation of frankness and hauteur, and indulged a habit of letting people up and down by which he frequently gave offence. More interesting are narratives of the suggestion of several his verses, as the slave-market in Don Juan, and the spectacle of the dead criminal tossed on the waves, recited in the Bride of Abydos. One example, if we except Dante's Eglogues, the most remarkable instance in literature of the expansion, without the weakening, of the horrible. Take first Mr. Hobbhouse's plain prose: "The sensations produced by the state of the weather—it was wretched and stormy when they left the 'casotto' for the city—and leaving a comfortable cabin, were in unison with the impressions which we felt when, passing under the palace of the Sultans, and gazing at the gloomy abyss which rises above the walls, we saw two dogs gnawing a dead body." After this we may measure the force of a morbid imagination broadening over the incident—

"And he saw the lean dogs beneath the wall
Hold o'er the dead their carnival."

Byron and Hobbhouse set sail from Constantinople on the 14th July, 1810—the latter to return direct to England, a determination which, from no apparent fault on either side, the former did not regret. One incident of the passage derives interest from its possible consequence. Taking up and unsheshting a yataghan, which he found on the quarter-deck, he remarked, "I should like to know how a person feels after committing a murder." This harmless piece of melodrama—the idea of which is expanded in Mr. Dobell's Baiter, and parodied in Firmilian—may have been the basis of a report afterwards circulated, and accepted among others by Goethe, that his lordship had committed a murder; hence, obviously, the character of Lara, and the mystery of Manfred? The poet parted from his friend at Zea (Cece); after spending some time in solitude on the little island, he returned to Athens, and there renewed acquaintance with his school-friend, the Marquis of Sligo, who, after a few days, accompanied him to Corinth. They then separated, and Byron went on to Patras, in the Morea, where he had business with the Consul. He dates from there at the

* See poem and foot-note, page 440.

† See page 104.

‡ See poem and foot-note, page 430.

§ See foot-note, page 70.

TWO YEARS OF TRAVEL.

close of July. It is impossible to give a consecutive account of his life during the next ten months, a period consequently filled up with the contradictory and absurd mass of legends before referred to. A few facts only of any interest are extricable. During at least half of the time, his headquarters were at Athens, where he again met his friend the Marquis, associated with the English Consul and Lady Hester Stanhope, studied Romain in a Franciscan monastery—where he saw and talked with the mixed nationalities of French, Italian, Dane, Greek, Turk, and Americans—wrote to his mother and others, saying he had swum from Scio to Abydos, was sick of Fletcher bawling for beef and beer, had done with authorship, and hoped, on his return, to lead a quiet recluse life. He nevertheless made notes to Childs Herald, composed the Hints from Horace and the Curse of Minerva, and presumably brooded over, and outlined in his mind, many of his locality we find him, during the autumn, the honored guest of the Vizier Valhi (a son of Ali Pasha), who presented him with a fine horse. During a second visit to Patras, in September, he was attacked by the same sort of marsh fever from which, fourteen years afterwards, in the near neighborhood, he died. On his recovery, in October, he complains of having been nearly killed by the heroic measures of the native doctors: "One of them trusts to his genius, never having studied; the other, to a campaign of eighteen months against the sick of Otranto, which he made in his youth with great effect. When I was seized with my disorder, I protested against both these assassins, but in vain." He was saved by the zeal of his servants, who ascertained that if his lordship died they would take good care the doctors should also; on which the learned men discontinued their visits, and the patient revived. On his final return to Athens, the restoration verse romances. We hear no more of the Maid of Athens; but there is no fair ground to doubt that the Giacquer was suggested by his rescue of a young woman whom, for the fault of an amour with some Frank, a party of Janissaries were about to throw, sewn up in a sack, into the sea.* Mr. Galt gives no authority for his statement, that the girl's deliverer was the original cause of her sentence. We may rest assured that if it had been so, Byron himself would have told us so.

Franciscan Convent, Athens.

The Residence of Lord Byron, 1812. From a drawing by C. Stanfield, A. R. A.

A note to the Slops of Corintha is suggestive of his unequalled restlessness. "I visited all three—Tripolitza, Napoli, and Argos—in 1810-11; and in the course of journeying through the country, from my first arrival in 1809, crossed the Isthmus eight times on my way from Attica to the Morea." In the latter of his health was retarded by one of his long courses of reducing diet; he lived mainly on rice, and vinegar and water. From that city he writes in the early spring, intimating his intention of proceeding to Egypt; but Mr. Hanson, his man of business, ceasing to send him remittances, the scheme was abandoned. Beset by letters about his debts, he again declares his determination to hold fast by Newstead, adding that if the place, which is his only tie to England, is sold, he won't come back at all. Life on the shores of the Archipelago is far cheaper and happier, and "Ubi bene ibi patria," for such a citizen of the world as he has become. Later he went to Malta, and was detained there by another bad attack of tertian fever. The next record of consequence is from the "Volage" frigate, at sea, June 29, 1811, when he writes in a despondent strain to Hodgson, that he is returning home "without a hope, and almost without a desire," to wrangle with creditors and lawyers about executions and coal-pits. "In short, I am sick and sorry; and when I have a little rejoined my irreplicable affairs, away I shall march, either to campaign in Spain, or back again to the East, where I can at least have chauldless skies and a cessation from superfluities. I am sick of fops and poetry, and prate, and shall leave the whole Castilian state to Bala, or anybody else. Howbeit, I have written some 4000 lines of one kind or another on my travels." With these, and an amusing collection of marbles, and skulls, and hemlock, and tortoises, and servants, he reached London about the middle of July, and remained there, making some arrangements about business and publication. On the 23d we have a short but kind letter to his mother, promising to pay her a visit on his way to Rochdale. "You know you are a vixen, but keep some chapsago for me," he had written from abroad. On receipt of the letter she remarked, "If I

* See foot-note, page 50.

LONDON LIFE, AND SECOND PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

CHAPTER V.

LIFE IN LONDON—CORRESPONDENCE WITH SCOTT AND MOORE—SECOND PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP—CHILDE HAROLD (I., II.) AND THE ROMANCES.

[1811-1815.]

Thomas Moore.

From the original picture in the possession of Mr. Murray.

should be dead before he comes down, what a strange thing it would be." Towards the close of the month she had an attack so alarming that he was summoned; but before he had time to arrive she had expired, on the 1st of August, in a fit of rage brought on by reading an upholsterer's bill. On the way Byron heard the intelligence, and wrote to Dr. Pigot: "I now feel the truth of Mrs. Gray's observation, that we can only have one mother. Peace be with her!" On arriving at Newstead, all their storms forgotten, the son was so affected that he did not trust himself to go to the funeral, but stood dreamily gazing at the cortège from the gate of the Abbey. Five days later, Charles S. Matthews was drowned.

THE deaths of Long, Wingfield, Eddlestone, Matthews, and of his mother had narrowed the circle of the poet's early companions, and though he talks of each loss in succession as if it had been that of an only friend, we can credit a degree of loneliness, and well excuse a certain amount of bitterness in the feelings with which he returned to London. He had at this time seen very little of Augusta, the only relative whom he ever deeply loved. He and his half sister met casually in 1804, and again in the following year. After her marriage (1807), Byron writes from abroad (1810), regretting having distressed her by his quarrel with Lord Carlisle. In 1811 she is mentioned as a reversionary heiress of his estate. Towards the close of 1813, there are two allusions which testify to their mutual affection. Next we come to the interesting series of letters of 1815-16, published with the Memoir of Mr. Hodgson, to whom, along with Holbeache and Scrope Laxby, his lordship, in a will and codicil, leaves the management of his property. Bitterness appears frequently at this period among his surviving intimates; to this list there was shortly added another. In speaking of his English Lords and Scotch Reviewers, the author makes occasional reference to the possibility of his being called to account for some of his attacks. His expectation was realized by a letter from the poet Moore, dated Dublin, January 1, 1816, couched in peremptory terms, demanding to know if his lordship avowed the authorship of the insults contained in the poem. This letter, being entrusted to Mr. Hodgson, was not forwarded to Byron abroad; but shortly after his return, he received another in more conciliatory terms, renewing the complaint. To this he replied, in a stiff but manly letter, that he had never meant to insult Mr. Moore; but that he was, if necessary, ready to give him satisfaction. Moore accepting the explanation, somewhat querulously complained of his advances to friendship not being received. Byron again replied, that, much as he would feel honored by Mr. Moore's acquaintance, he being practically threatened by the irate Irishman, could hardly make the first advances. This called forth a sort of apology; the correspondents met at the house of Mr. Rogers, and out of the somewhat awkward circumstances, owing to the frascos of the "noble author," as the other ever after delights to call him, arose the life-long intimacy which had such various and lasting results. Moore has been called a false friend to Byron, and a traitor to his memory. The judgment is somewhat harsh, but the association between them was unfortunate. Thomas Moore had some sterling qualities. His best satirical pieces are inspired by a real indignation, and lit up by a genuine humor. He was also an exquisite musician in words, and must have been occasionally a fascinating companion. But he was essentially a wordling, and, as such, a superficial critic. He encouraged the shallow affectations of his great friend's weaker work, and recoiled in alarm before the daring defiance of his stronger. His criticisms on all Byron wrote and felt seriously on religion are almost worthy of a conventicle. His letters to others on Manfred, and Gara, and Don Juan, are the expression of sentiments which he had never the courage to state explicitly to the author. On the other hand, Byron was attracted beyond reasonable measure by his gracefully deferential manners, paid too much regard to his opinions, and overestimated his genius. For the subsequent destruction of the memoirs, urged by Mr. Hobhouse and Mrs. Leigh, he was not wholly responsible; though a braver man, basing accepted the position of his lordship's literary legatee, with the express understanding that he would see to the fulfilment of the wishes of his dead friend, would have to the utmost resisted their total frustration.

LONDON LIFE, AND SECOND PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Meanwhile, on landing in England, the poet had passed in the hands of Mr. Dallas the Hints from Horace, which he intended to have brought out by the publisher Clowthorn. Of this performance—an inferior edition, relieved by a few strong touches of the Bards and Bards—Dallas ventured to express his disapproval. "Have you no other result of your travels?" he asked; and got for answer, "A few short pieces, and a lot of Spenserian stanzas; not worth troubling you with, but you are welcome to them." Dallas took the remark literally, saw they were a safe success, and assumed to himself the merit of the discovery, the risks, and the profits. There was no mistake about their proof of power, their novelty, and adaptation to a public taste as yet unopened by eloquent and imaginative descriptions of foreign scenery, manners, and climates.

The poem, after being submitted to Gifford, in defiance of the protestations of the author, who feared that "his reputation might seem to seek the favor of the vulgar," was accepted by Mr. Murray, and passed through the press, subject to change and abridgement, during the next five months. The Hints from Horace fortuitously postponed and then suspended, appeared posthumously in 1831. Byron remained in Scotland till the close of October, negotiating with creditors and publishers, in the course of which he expresses an identification of himself and his reputation with that of first called him Childe Byron. "Assume Mr. Murray," he intreats, "not to call the work Child of Harrow's Pilgrimage, as he has done to some of my personal friends, who wrote to inquire what my attitude as well they might." At the end of the month, we find him in London, again indulging in a vague first thought of books, in which Moore claims to have accompanied him, but at the same time exhibiting remarkable shrewdness in reference to the affairs of his household. In February, 1812, he again declines to abandon his resolve to leave England forever, and fix himself in "one of the fairest islands of the East." On the 27th he made in the House of Lords his speech on a bill to inflict new penalties against the bourgeoisie of Nottingham. This effort, on which he received many compliments, led among other results to a friendly correspondence with Lord Holland. On April 21 of the same year he again addressed the House on behalf of Roman Catholic Emancipation; and in June 1813, in favor of Major Cartwright's petition. On all these occasions, so afterwards on the continent, Byron espoused the Liberal side of politics. But his role was that of Marlin or Caesar, and he never failed to remind us that he himself was for the people, not of them. His latter speeches, owing partly to his delivery, blunted as two Asiatic, were less successful. To a reader the three came much on the same level. They are clever but evidently set performances, and leave us as ground to suppose that the poet's abandonment of a parliamentary career was a serious loss to the nation.

On the 28th of February the first and second cantos of Childe Harold appeared. The dedication of the poem was to "Lanthe (Lady Charlotte Harley), then in her eleventh year. Her portrait was painted by Westall, by Byron's order. An early copy was sent to Mrs. Leigh, with the inscription: "To Augusta, my dearest sister and my best friend, who has ever loved me much better than I deserved, this volume is presented by her father's son and most affectionate brother, B." The book ran through seven editions in four weeks. The effect of the first edition of Burns, and the sale of Scott's Lays, are the only parallels in modern poetic literature to this success. All eyes were suddenly fastened on the author, who let his satire sleep, and threw politics aside, to be the romance of his day, and for two years the darling of society. Previous to the publication, Mr. Moore confesses to have gratified his lordship with the expression of the fear that Childe Harold was too good for the age. Its success was due to the reverse being the truth. It was just on the level of its age. Its flowing verse, its prevailing sentiment, occasional boldness, its half-effected rakishness, here and there elevated by a rush as of morning air, and its frequent richness—not yet, as afterwards, splendor—of description, were all appreciated by the fashionable London of the Regency; while the comparatively mild satire, not keen enough to scarify, only gave a more piquant flavor to the whole. Byron's genius, yet in the green leaf, was not too far above the clever masses of pleasure-loving manhood by which it was surrounded. It was natural that the address on the reopening of Drury Lane Theatre (page 450) should be written by "the world's new joy"—the first great English poet-peer; as natural as that in his only published satire of the period he should inveigh against almost the only amusement in which he could not share. The address was written at the request of Lord Holland, when of some hundred competitive pieces none had been found exactly suitable—a circumstance which gave rise to the famous parodies entitled The Rejected Addresses—and it was thought that the ultimate choice would conciliate all rivalry. The care which Byron bestowed on the correction of the first draft of this piece is characteristic of his habit of writing off his poems at a guess, and afterwards carefully elaborating them.

Lady Charlotte Harley.

From the original painting by R. Westall, R.A.

LONDON LIFE, AND SECOND PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

The Wallys (page 265) was published anonymously in April, 1813. It was followed in May by the Givour (page 59), the first of the flood of verse romances which, during the three succeeding years, he poured forth with impetuous fluency, and which were received with almost unrestrained applause. The Hebrew Melodist (page 576), written in December, 1814, are interesting, in connection with the author's early familiarity with the Old Testament, and from the force and tonic that mark the best of them; but they can hardly be considered an important contribution to the devotional verse of England. The Siege of Corinth (page 98) and Parisina (page 107), composed after his marriage, in the summer and autumn of 1815, appeared in the following year. The former is founded on the siege of the city, when the Turks took it from the Ottomans. Parisina, though unequal, is on the whole a poem of a higher order than the others of the period.

Lord Byron.

From the original painting by Westall, 1815.

These romances belong to the same period of the author's poetic career as the first two cantos of Childe Harold. They followed one another like brilliant fireworks. They all exhibit a command of words, a sense of melody, and a flow of rhythm and rhyme, which mastered Moore and even Scott on their own ground. Fourteen thousand copies of the Corinth were sold in a day. But hear the author's own half-boast, half-apology: "Lara I wrote while undressing after coming home from balls and masquerades, in the year of revelry 1814. The Bride was written in four, the Corinth in ten days. This I take to be a humiliating confession, as it proves my own want of judgment in publishing, and the public's in reading, things which cannot have stamina for permanence."

The pecuniary profits accruing to Byron from his works began with Lara, for which he received $2500. He had made over to Mr. Dallas, besides other gifts to the same ungrateful recipient, the profits of Childe Harold, amounting to $2000, and of the Corinth, which brought $2625. The proceeds of the Givour and the Bride were also surrendered.

During this period, 1813-1816, he had become familiar with all the phases of London society, "tasted their pleasures," and, towards the close, "felt their decay." His associates in those years were of two classes—men of the world and authors. Famed and courted in all quarters, he patronized the theatres, became in 1815 a member of the Drury Lane Committee, "liked the dandies," including Beau Brummell, and was introduced to the Regent. Their interview, in June, 1812, in the course of which the latter paid unrestricted compliments to Childe Harold and the poetry of Scott, is naively referred to by Mr. Moore "as reflecting even still more honor on the Sovereign himself than on the two poets." Byron, in a different spirit, writes to Lord Holland: "I have now great hope, in the event of Mr. Pitt's demise, of winning truth at Court, like Mr. Mallet of indifferent memory. Consider, one hundred marks a year! besides the wine and the discourse." We can hardly conceive the future author of the Vision of Judgment writing odds to dictation. He does not seem to have been much fascinated with the first gentleman of Europe, whom at no distant date he assailed in the terrible "Avatar," and left the laurelship to Mr. Southey.

Among leaders in art and letters he was brought into more or less intimate contact with Sir Humphry Davy, the Edgeworths, Sir James Mackintosh, Colman the dramatic author, the elder Keats, Monk Lewis, Grant, Curran, and Madame de Staël. Of the meeting of the last two he remarks, "It was like the confluence of the Rhone and the Saône, and they were both so ugly that I could not help wondering how the best intellects of France and Ireland could have taken up respectively such residences."

About this time a communication from Mr. Murray, in reference to the meeting with the Regent, led to a letter from Sir Walter Scott to Lord Byron, the beginning of a life-long friendship, and one of the most pleasing pages of biography. These two great men were for a season perpetually pitted against one another as the foremost competitors for literary favor. When Rokeby came out, contemporaneously with the Givour, the undergraduates of Oxford and Cambridge ran races to catch the first copies, and laid bets as to which of the rivals would win. During the anti-Byronic fever of 1840-1850 they were perpetually contrasted as the representatives of the manly and the morbid schools. A later sentimentalism has affected to despise the work of both. The fact, therefore, that from an early period the men themselves knew each other as they were is worth illustrating.

Scott's letter, in which a generous recognition of the pleasure he had derived from the work of the English poet, was followed by a manly remonstrance on the subject of the attack in the Bards and Reviewers, drawn from Byron in the following month (July, 1812) in answer in the same strain descending on the Prince's praises of the "Lay" and "Marmion," and candidly apologizing for the "evil works of his nonage." "This satire," he remarks, "was written when I was very young and very angry, and fully bent on displaying my wrath and my wit; and now I am haunted by the ghosts of my wholesale assertions." This, in turn, called forth another letter to Byron, eager for more of his verses, with a cordial invitation to Abbotsford, on the ground of Scotland's maternal claim on him, and asking for information about Pegasus and Parnassus. After this the correspondence continues with greater freedom, and the same display on either side of mutual respect. When Scott says, "The Givour is praised among our mountains," and Byron returns, "Waverley is the best novel I have read," there is no suspicion of flattery—it is the interchange of compliments between men. They talk in just the same manner to third parties. "I have over written romances," says Scott, in the spirit of a great-hearted gentleman, "because Byron sent me. He hits the mark where I don't even pretend to fling my arrow. He has access to a store of sentiment unknown to me." The younger poet, on the other hand, depreciates the comparisons that were being invidiously drawn between them. He presents his copy of the Donner to Scott, with the phrase, "To the march of Parnassus," and compares the feeling of those who reviled at his fame to that of the Athenians towards Aristides. From these sentiments he never swerves, returning to the last the breadth of character of the most generous of his critics, and referring to him, during his later years in Italy, as the Wanderer and the Aristos of the North. A meeting was at length arranged between them. Scott looked forward to it with anxious interest.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

They met in London during the spring of 1815. The following sentences are from Sir Walter's account of it: "Scott had prepared me to meet a man of peculiar habits and quick temper, and I had some doubts whether we were likely to suit each other in society. I was most agreeably disappointed in this respect. I found Lord Byron in the highest degree courteous and agreeable kind. We met for an hour or two almost daily in Mr. Murray's drawing-room, and found a great deal to say to each other. Our sentiments agreed a great deal, except upon the subjects of religion and politics upon neither of which I was inclined to believe that Lord Byron entertained very fixed opinions. Of politics he used sometimes to express a high strain on whimsicalness called Liberalism; but it appeared to me that the pleasure afforded him as a vehicle of displaying his wit and satire against individuals in office was at the bottom of this habit of thinking. At heart, I would have termed Byron a patriot on principle. His feeling did not seem to me to have been very excited. I remember repeating to him the fine poem of Madeline, and some one asked me what I could possibly have been telling Byron by which he was so much captivated. I saw him for the last time in September 1816, after I returned from France; he dined at home, where we were great friends in Bond Street. I never saw a more full of gaiety and good humor. The day of their separation was the most interesting I ever spent. Several letters passed between us—one perhaps every half year. Like the old heroes in Homer, we exchanged gifts: I gave Byron a beautiful dagger mounted with gold, which had been the property of the celebrated Sir Bay. But I was to play the part of Thersites in the Iliad, for Byron sent me, some time after, a large enriched vase of silver full of dead men's bones, found within the land walls of Athens. He was often morose, almost gloomy. When I observed him in this humor I used either to wait till it went off of its own accord, or till some natural and easy mode of conversation leading him into conversation when the shadow of cheerfulness always left his countenance, like the sun arising from a haze. I think I also remarked in those moments of suspicion, when he seemed to pause and consider whether there had not been a second and perhaps offensive meaning in something that was said to him. In this case I also indeed it best to let him rest. Like a troubled spring, work itself clear, which it did in a minute or two. A downright steadiness of manner was the way to his good opinion. We were looking by accident at his feet, saw him scratching furiously; but on his showing no consciousness, his lordship resumed his easy manner. What I liked about him, besides his boundless genius, was his generosity of spirit as well as of purse, and his entire contempt of all the affectations of literature. He liked Macaulay and me because, with all our other differences, we were both practical fellows, not caring to maintain our dignity, enjoying the mat-pour-rire. He wrote from impulse, never from effort, and therefore I have always reckoned Burns and Byron the most genuine poetic geniuses of my time, and of half a century before me. We have many men of high poetic talents, but none of that ever-gushing and perennial fountain of natural waters." Scott, says Lockhart, considered Byron the only poet of transcendent talents we had had since Dryden.

CHAPTER VI.

LADY CAROLINE LAMB—MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION—THE TWO CLEMONTS—LADY JERSEY'S BALL—FAREWELL TO ENGLAND.

[1815-1816.]

"A B for poets," says Scott, "I have seen all the best of my time and country, and, though Burns had the most glorious eye imaginable, I never thought any of them would come up to an artist's notion of the character, except Byron. His countenance is a thing to dream of." Coleridge writes to the same effect, in language even stronger. We have from all sides similar testimony to the personal beauty which led the unhappy of his devotees to exclaim, "That pale face is my fate!"

Sir Walter Scott.

From the original painting, Abbotsford.

Southern critics, as De Chasles, Castelar, even Mazzini, have dealt leniently with the poet's relations to the other sex; and Elze extends to him in this regard the same stretch of charity. "Dear Childe Harold," exclaims the German professor, "was positively besieged by women. They have, in truth, no right to complain of him: from his childhood he had seen them on their worst side." It is the consistency of hero-worship to deny that Byron was unjust to women, not merely in isolated instances, but in his prevailing views of their character and claims. "I regard them," he says, in a passage only distinguished from others by more extravagant panegyric, "as very pretty but inferior creatures, who are as little in their place at our tables as they would be in our council chambers. The whole of the present system with regard to the female sex is a remnant of the barbarian of the chivalry of our forefathers. I look on them as grown-up children; but, like a foolish mamma, I am constantly the slave of one of them. The Turks shut up their women, and are much happier; give a woman a looking-glass and burnt almonds, and she will be content."

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

In contrast with this, we have the moods in which he drew his pictures of Angolina, and Haides, and Aurora Baby,* and wrote the invocations to the shade of Astarte, and his letters in prose and verse to Augusta; but the foregoing passage could never have been written by Chaucer, or Spenser, or Shakespeare, or Shelley. The class whom he was reviling seemed, however, during "the day of his destiny," bent on confirming his judgment by the blindness of their worship. His rank and fame, the glittering splendor of his verse, the romance of his travels, his picturesque melancholy and affectation of mysterious secrets, combined with the magic of his presence to bewitch and

"resolved to read that grand poetry no more, and broke through the threshold of that powerful spell." The confession brings before us a type of the transitions of the century, on its way from the Byronists to the anti-Byronic fever, of which later date Mrs. Jameson, Mrs. Norton, and Mrs. Martineau are among the most pronounced representatives.

Byron's freedom of speaking with regard to those delicate matters on which men of more prudence or chivalry are wont to set the seal of silence, has often the same practical effect as reticence, for he talks so much at large—every page of his Journal being, by his own admission, apt to "confute and argue its predecessor"—that we are often none the wiser. And a mass of conjecture, it is manifest that during the years between his return from Greece and final expatriation (1811-1816), including the whole period of his social glory—though not yet of his world fame—he was lured into liaisons of all sorts and shades. Some, now acknowledged as innocent, were blared abroad by tongues less skilled in pure invention than in distorting truth. On others, as commensurates of a temperament "at meridian," it was waste of time to dwell. Byron rarely put aside a pleasure in his path; but his passions were seldom unaccompanied by affectionate emotions, genuine while they lasted. The verses to the memory of a lost love veiled as "Thyza,"† of moderate artistic merit, were not, as Moore alleges, mere plays of imagination, but records of a sincere grief. Another intimacy exerted so much influence on this phase of the poet's career, that to pass it over lightly would be like omitting Vanasa's name from the record of Swift. Lady Caroline Lamb, granddaughter of the first Earl Spencer, was one of those few women of our climate who, by their romantic impetuosity, recall the "children of the sun." She read Burns in her ninth year, and in her thirteenth idealized William Lamb (afterwards Lord Melbourne) as a statue of Liberty. In her nineteenth (1805) she married him, and lived for some years, during which she was a reigning belle and toast, a domestic life only marred by occasional eccentricities. She is thus described: "Her eyes were dark, and her countenance (thereupon) was grave. Her complexion was fair, her figure slight, her hair fawn-flaxen, shot with gold." Rogers, who in a letter to Lady Morgan she numbers among her lovers, said she ought to know the new poet, who was three years her junior, and the introduction took place in March, 1812. After the meeting, she wrote in her journal, "Mad—bad—and dangerous to know," but when the fashionable Apollo called at Melbourne House she "flew to beautify herself." Flushed by his conquest, he spent a great part of the following year in her company, during which time the apathy or self-confidence of the husband laughed at the worship of the hero. "Conrad" detailed his travels and adventures, interested her by his woes, dictated her amusements, invited her guests, and seems to have set rules to the establishment. "Medora," on the other hand, made no secret of her devotion, declared that they were affinities, and offered him her jewels to relieve his financial difficulties. But after the first excitement, he began to grow weary of her talk about herself, and could not praise her indifferent version: "he grew moody, and she fretted, when their mutual egotisms jarred." Byron at length concurred in her being removed for a season to her father's house in Ireland, on which occasion he wrote one of his glowing bewilder them. This dissenting malcontenta, condemned as prudes and blues, had their revenge. Generally, we may say that women who had not written books adored Byron; women who had written or were writing books distrusted, disliked, and made him a moral to adorn their tales, often to point their fables with. He was by the one set caressed and spoilt, and "beguiled too long;" by the other, "betrayed too late." The memoirs of Frances Ann Kemble present a curious record of the process of passing from one extreme to the other. She dwells on the fascination exerted over her mind by the first reading of his poetry, and tells how she "fastened on the book with a grip like steel," and carried it off and hid it under her pillow; how it affected her "like an evil potion," and stirred her whole being with a tempest of excitement, till finally she, with equal weakness, flung it aside,

Lady Caroline Lamb.

Engraved from the Original, in the possession of Mr. Murray.

* See poem and foot-note, page 457.

† Foot-note and poems, pp. 432, 433, 434, 435.

‡ Mr. Trelawny says that Thyza was a cousin, but that on this subject Byron was always reticent. Mr. Mitton, as we have seen, associates her with the disguised girl of 1807-8.

* In Aurora Baby, of Don Juan, Byron idealized Guinevere.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

farewell letters. When she came back, matters were little better. The would-be Juliet beset the poet with renewed advances, on one occasion penetrating to his rooms in the disguise of a page, on another threatening to stab herself with a pair of scissors, and finally, developing into a Medea, offering her gratitude to any one who would kill him. "The Agnus is furious," he writes to Badgson, in February, 1818, in one of the somewhat ungenerous bursts to which he was too easily provoked. "You can have no idea of the horrible and absurd things she has said and done since (really from the best motives) I withdrew my homage."

The business of last summer I broke off, and now the advancement of the gentle fair is writing letters literally besetting my life." With one member of the family, Lady Melbourne, Mr. Lamb's mother, and sister of Sir Ralph Milbanke, he remained throughout on terms of pleasant intimacy. He appreciated the talent and sense, and was ready to profit by the experience and tact of "the cleverest of women." But her well-meant advice had unfortunate results, for it was on her suggestion that he became a suitor for the hand of her niece, Miss Milbanke. Byron first proposed to this lady in 1818; his offer was refused, but so graciously that they continued to correspond on friendly, which gradually grew into intimate terms, and his second offer, in early January of the following year, was accepted.

Months of vain protests and petulant warnings against her cousin by marriage, who she said was "without a church, and learned, and knew statistics, but was 'not for General, no, no, no!'" Lady Caroline lapsed into an attitude of fixed hostility; and almost under the Christmas tree, and her predictions were realized, except her wish in the now almost forgotten sonnet of November, in which some of Byron's real features are represented in conjunction with many fantastic additions. Madame de Staël was kind enough to bring a copy of the book before his notice when she met Byron on the Lake of Geneva, but he seems to have been less moved by it than by most attacks. Whatever, however, bore in mind his own admission in a private case, "I say I am perfectly calm; I am, almost alone, in a fury." Over the sad vista of the marriage, passed the unhappy lady's life, we need not dwell. In that a considerable part of it she appears hovering about the thin line that separates sane kinds of melancholy from madness, writing more novels, burning her mother's letters, and then clamoring for a look of his hair or a sight of his portrait; separating from, and again, reconciling to, a husband to whom magnificent discourtesy and compassion she bore testimony to the last, comparing herself to Jane Shore; attempting Byron's verse, loudly denouncing and yet never ceasing inwardly to idolize the man whom she regarded as her betrayer, really only, with just or perhaps in that he had unwittingly helped to overthrow her mental balance. After eight years of this life, it is up here and there by gleams of social brilliancy, we had her marriage, on the 12th of July, 1824, would be contracted by a funeral. On hearing that the remains of Byron were being carried to the tomb, she swooned and fainted. Her health finally sank, and she lingered all January, 1826, when she died, after writing a calm letter to her husband, and beseeching the poet's miniature to her friend, Lady Murray.

"I have paid some of my debts and contracted others," Byron writes to Moore, on September 15, 1824. "But I have a few thousand pounds which I must spend after my heart in this climate, and so I must go back to the south. I want to see Venice and the Alps, and Parmesan cheeses, and look at the coast of Greece from Italy. All this, however, depends upon an event which may or may not happen. Whether it will, I shall probably know to-morrow; and if it does, I can't well go abroad at present." "A wife," he had written, in the January of the same year, "would be my salvation."

But a marriage entered upon in such a flippant frame of mind could scarcely have been other than disastrous. In the autumn of the year we are told that a friend, observing how cheerless was the state both of his mind and prospects, advised him to marry, and after much discussion he consented, naming to his correspondent Miss Milbanke. To this his adviser objected, remarking that she had, at present, no fortune, and that his embarrassed affairs would not allow him to marry without one, etc. Accordingly, he agreed that his friend should write a proposal to another lady which was done. A refusal arrived as they were one morning sitting together. "You see," said Lord Byron, "that after all Miss Milbanke is to be the person," and wrote on the moment. His friend, still remonstrating against his choice, took up the letter; but, on reading it, observed, "Well, really, this is a very pretty letter; it is a pity it should not go." "Then it shall go," said Lord Byron, and, in so saying, sealed and sent off this flat of his fate. The incident seems cut from a French novel; but so does the whole strange story—the one apparently insoluble enigma in an otherwise only too transparent life. On the arrival of the lady's answer he was seated at dinner, when his gardener came in and presented him with his mother's wedding-ring, lost many years before, and which had just been found, buried in the mould beneath her window. Almost at the same moment the letter arrived, and Byron exclaimed, "If it contains a consent (which it did), I will be married with this very ring."

Lady Byron.

From the painting by Newton.

* Scott's Lyrics, page 488.

† See poem, page 602.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

He had the highest anticipations of his bride, appreciating "her talents, and excellent qualities" and saying, "she is so good a person that I wish I was a better." Without being beautiful, Miss Milbanke was by no means unattractive to those who were not repelled by her formality and coldness. Simple, unaffected, and more likely to think too much than too little of her dignity, she had the air of natural refinement rather than of fashion. Her presence would have gained greatly in effectiveness by two, or even three, more inches in stature, but "her figure" (to use Byron's own words) "was perfect for her height." Though her countenance was remarkable for the roundness which suggested to Byron the pet name of "Pippin" for her, it had a piquant and sometimes sly humorous expression. If they were wanting in regularity, her features were delicate, feminine, and intellectual. There was nothing in her face to indicate hardness of heart from the Cambridge undergraduates, when in the course of the same month, he went to the Senate House to give his course for a Professor of Anatomy.

The most constant and best of friends was his sister, Augusta Leigh, whom, from the death of Miss Chaworth to his own, Byron, in the highest and purest sense of the word, loved more than any other human being. Tolerant of errors which she lamented, and violence in which she had no share, she had a touch of their common family pride, most conspicuous in an almost entlike clinging to their ancestral home. Her early published letters are full of regrets about the threatened sale of Newstead, or the adjournment, which, when the first purchaser had to pay $125,000 for breaking his bargain, she rejoices, and over the consummation of which she mourns, in the manner of Milton's Eve—

"Must I then leave thee, Paradise?"

In all her references to the approaching marriage there are blended notes of hope and fear. In thanking Hodgson for his kind congratulations, she trusted, will secure her brother's happiness. Later she adds her testimony to that of all outsiders at this time, as to the graces and genuine worth of the object of his choice. After the usual preliminaries, the ill-fated pair were united, at Seaham House, on the 2d of January, 1815. Byron was married like one walking in his sleep. He trembled like a leaf, made the wrong responses, and almost from the first seems to have been conscious of his irrevocable mistake.

"I saw him stand

Before an altar with a gentle bride
Her face was fair, but woe was that which made
The strength of his betrothment. He could see
Not that which was—but that which should have been—
But the old mansion, the restoration'd hall,
And she who was his destiny came back,
And trust herself between him and the light!"

Here we have faint visions of Miss Chaworth, mingling with later memories. In handing the bride into the carriage he said, "Miss Milbanke, are you ready?"—a mistake said to be of evil omen. Byron never really loved his wife, though he has been absurdly accused of marrying for revenge. On the other hand, it is not unfair to say that she was fascinated by a name, and inspired by the philanthropic zeal of reforming a literary Corsair. Both were disappointed. Miss Milbanke's fortune was mainly settled on herself; and Byron, in spite of plentiful resolutions, gave little sign of reformation. For a considerable time their life, which, after the "treacle moon," as the bridegroom called it, spent at Hainthly, near Darlington, was divided between residence at Seaham and visits to London, seemed to move smoothly. In a letter, evidently mis-dated the 15th December, Mrs. Leigh writes to Hodgson: "I have every reason to think that my beloved B. is very happy and comfortable. I hear constantly from him and his wife. It appears to me that Lady B. sets about making him happy in the right way. I had many fears. Thank God that they do not appear likely to be realized. In short, there seems to me to be but one drawback to all our felicity, and that, alas, is the disposal of dear Newstead. I never shall feel reconciled to the loss of that sacred, revered Abbey. The thought makes me more melancholy than perhaps the loss of an inanimate object ought to do. Did you ever hear that landed property, THE MIST OF THE CROWN, could not be sold? Lady B. writes me word that she never saw her father nature, unless it was the placid severity it could wear to those who were distasteful to her. She was known to be clever and well read, so far as the reading of gentlewoman went in the days of the blue-stockings. Campbell went much too far when he said that her poetry would endure comparison with her husband's. Her best verses just missed the goodness that would have qualified them to be compared with his worst verses. Two of the minor poems, however, of Mr. Murray's complete edition of Byron's works were certainly of her writing. At the same time her slightest and most trivial essays in poetical composition were superior to the average poetry of the "Keepsakes," and other fashionable collections of "Vers de Sociétés."

Ada.

Drawn by F. Stone from the original miniature.

About this date Byron writes to various friends in the good spirits raised by his enthusiastic reception and another, namely; that she believes the latter would go to the ends of the sea herself to find fish for her husband's table." Augusta Ada was born in London on the 10th of December, 1815.

* See foot-note, page 429.

† See page 221, stanza vi.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

During the next months a few cynical mutterings were given to her attentions to an ominous silence; but these were easily explained by the increasing embitterment of the poet's affairs, and the impotency of his efforts to win in the course of the last half-year the success of slight emotions on his home and family. Their expectations were raised by exaggerated reports of his having married money; and when the possibility of pride he still declined, even to the point of selling his books to accept advances from his publisher. In January the storm which had been gathering suddenly broke. On the 15th, i. e., five weeks after her daughter's birth, Lady Byron left home with the intent to pay a visit, as had been agreed, to her own family at Kintley Mallory, in Leicestershire. She was very anxious to see her husband a tenderly loved wife, which has been often quoted. Shortly after her departure was informed—first by her father, and then by her mother—that she did not intend ever to return home. The occasion of their last interview, as in the case of the marriage bearing on the affair, not only was not clearly understood one another. On behalf of the poet it is asserted that his wife, infuriated by the discovery of his innocent hospitality on occasion of his residence in a respectable actress, Mrs. Mardyn, who had called on him about Drury Lane business, and who had been seen, exclaiming, "I leave you for ever, my dear." According to another story, Lady Byron was seen with a friend, and observing him to be in the room, she said, "Am I in your way?" to which he answered, "Damnably."

It is also asserted that Moore, and others did everything they could do to bring about the reconciliation, which Byron himself professed to be unwilling to accept, and in vain the effort was renewed. The wife was inveterately bent on a course of which the husband alleged was the cause of which the husband alleged was the cause, and with regard to which she preserved a rigid silence. The marriage of Clement was memorable for the story—Mrs. Clement, the mother of the poet's daughter, was not a member of the same family as the woman bearing the same name. Mrs. Clement appeared in the poem as the willow governess of the poet's daughter, and in faithfulness to Byron's rather overbearing and exclusive attitude, Clement's people were represented as those of whose members were the poet's friends. The theme of the poem is (see page 375), Mrs. Clement's story, every one has heard, almost as to her infancy. But the story is strangely different from the charming girl who was the daughter of the poet's friend. The story has been spelled in various ways, and the name of Clement, Jane, or Mrs. Clement. Jane, or Mrs. Clement, was the daughter of the poet's friend, and the daughter of the poet's friend, and the daughter of the poet's friend. A beautiful girl, this girl of a wayward spirit and Italian aspect called on Byron, as a person of power in the Drury Lane Theatre, when he was in the midst of his domestic troubles. Claire's purpose in the visit was to ask the poet to introduce her as an actress to the stage. The girl's name caught the ear of the poet, whose pulse always quickened at the sound of his old schoolmate's name (Claire); and the brightness of her beauty charmed his fancy.

Why Claire's application for employment on the stage was unsuccessful does not appear. Possibly Byron saw she would not make a good actress. Possibly he thought she would do better by becoming his mistress. Anyhow, the poet conceived a passion for Claire; and Claire, "holding" (as Mr. Rossetti expresses it) "independent notions on questions such as that of marriage," fell in love with the poet—love that changed slowly to detestation. The day of Claire's first interview with Byron is unknown; the precise time at which she yielded to his addresses is of course unknown. Circumstances, however, point to some one of the earlier days of February, 1816—some day closely following on Sir Ralph Noel's announcement to Byron of his wife's desire for separation—as the time at which the poet's brief association with William Godwin's step-daughter began. It is not very probable that it began earlier. It certainly did not begin before Lady Byron's departure from Piccadilly Terrace; though there is reason to believe that Lady Byron was too long induced to imagine it began whilst she was in town. Partly because he felt that greater communicativeness would weaken the case against Lady Byron and put discredit on the "Fare Thee Well," and partly because he wished to spare the feelings of Godwin and Mrs. Shelley, Moore skates very lightly over the dangerous surface of Byron's scarcely edifying friendship with Allegra's mother. After insisting that Byron's official connection with Drury Lane Theatre afforded nothing at which his wife could fairly take umbrage, he observes, "The sole case in which he afforded anything like real grounds for such an accusation did not take place till after the period of separation." The period of separation is an elastic expression. It may be taken as covering only the time between Lady Byron's journey from Piccadilly to the second day of the following month, the day on which Byron was informed of his wife's purpose to keep away from him; or it may be taken as covering the far greater time between Lady Byron's journey to the country and the 23d of April, on which day the deed of separation was signed. In his own breast Moore used the expression in the smaller sense, whilst he intended his readers to construe it in the larger sense. Feeling it would be imprudent to make no reference to a matter which was imperfectly known to a large number of people, Moore thought it best to refer to it in a manner which would cause his readers to infer that the matter was of a time subsequent to the publication of the verse on the unforgiving wife.

Born at least as early as January 22, 1817, Allegra was no offspring of a premature birth. Leaving England on April 28th, Byron saw nothing more of Claire till the 27th of the following month at Geneva, whither she travelled in the company of the Shelleys. Allegra's birth was due to nothing that took place after Byron's withdrawal from England. Byron had taken Claire for his goddess, and she had enjoyed his patronage for several weeks before he crossed the water from Dover to Ostend. The "Fare Thee Well" (published in the middle of April, 1816, see page 375), did not act the sentimental woman weeping till the poet had for a considerable period found consolation in Claire's smiles for the cruelty of his unforgiving wife.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

While the poet's liaison with Jane Clermont was a new arrangement, it came to the knowledge of Mrs. Byron, the mischief-maker, who rendered Lord Byron the considerable dis-service, and her former pupil the questionable service, of informing Lady Byron of the affair. The intelligence could not fail to incense Lady Byron. It did incense her. For though Byron could have urged in his defense that he had not knelt to Claire till he had been discarded by his wife, the quickness with which he had found material consolation for her severity was peculiarly calculated to pique Lady Byron's self-love, quicken her animosity against him, and confirm her in her purpose of having nothing more to do with him. On coming to her knowledge, the liaison may well have been regarded by Lady Byron as a demonstration that he had never really loved her. An unsuspicious woman, in Lady Byron's position, would have been a lease of twenty years." But as time passed and his overtures were rejected, his patience gave way, and in some of his later satires he even broke the bounds of courtesy. Lady Byron's letters at the time of the separation, especially those first published in the Assurance of July 19, 1819, are to Mrs. Leigh always affectionate and confidential, often pathetic, asking her advice "in this critical moment," and protesting that, "independent of insanity, she does not think of the past with any spirit of resentment, and scarcely with the sense of injury." In her communications to Mr. Hodgson, on the other hand—the first of about the same date, the second a few weeks later—she writes with intense bitterness, stating that her action was due to offences which she could only condone on the supposition of her husband's insanity, and distinctly implying that she was in danger of her life.* This supposition having been by her medical advisers pronounced erroneous, she felt, in the words only too pungently recalled in Don Juan, that her duty both to man and God prescribed her course of action. Her playful letter on leaving she seems to defend on the ground of the fear of personal violence. Till Lord Byron's death the intimacy between his wife and sister remained unbroken; through the latter he continued to send numerous messages to the former, and to his child, who became a ward in Chancery; but at a later date it began to cool. On the appearance of Lady Byron's letter in answer to Moore's first volume, Augusta speaks of it as "a despicable tirade;" "feels disgusted at such unfeeling conduct;" and thinks "nothing can justify any one in defaming the dead." Soon after 1830 they had an open rupture on a matter of business, which was never really healed, though the then Puritanic presbyterian sent a message of relenting to Mrs. Leigh on her deathbed (1851).

The charge or charges which, during her husband's life, Lady Byron from magnanimity or other motive reserved, she is ascertained, after his death to have delivered with important modifications to various persons, with little regard to their capacity for receiving evidence or to their discretion. On one occasion her choice of a confidante was singularly unfortunate. "These," wrote Lord Byron in his youth, "these are the first tidings that have ever sounded like fame in my ears—to be sold on the banks of the Ohio." Strangely enough, it is from the country of Washington, whom the poet was wont to reverence as the purest patriot of the modern world, that in 1869 these emanated the hideous story which scandalized both continents, and ultimately recoiled on the retailer of the scandal.† The grounds of the reckless charge have been weighed by those who have wished it to prove false, and by those who have wished it prove true, and found thoroughly wanting. The chaff has been beaten in every way and on all sides, without yielding a particle of grain; and it were ill-advised to rake up the noxious dust that alone remains. From nothing left on record by either of the two persons most intimately concerned can we derive any reliable information. It is plain that Lady Byron was, during the later years of her life, the victim of hallucinations, and that if B. knew the secret, which he denies, he did not choose to tell it, putting off Captain Medwin and others with absurdities, as that "He did not like to see women eat," or with commonplace, as "The causes, my dear sir, were too ample to be found out."

Thomas Moore, who had the Memoirs supposed to have thrown light on the mystery, in the full knowl-

Madame De Stael.

From the original by Gerard.

almost certain to assume that the liaison had begun before the separation, even to assume that her husband had sent her into the country, in order that he might enjoy the society of his mistress with greater security from detection. Being of a suspicious nature, Lady Byron leaped to the erroneous conclusions to which an unsuspicious woman would have come.

Having taken this view of the liaison, it was natural for Lady Byron to place it amongst her original grounds of displeasure with her husband—to think and speak of it as part of her original case against him.

For some time after the separation, Byron spoke of his wife with at least apparent generosity. Of Lady Byron, he wrote (March 8, 1816): "I do not believe that there ever was a brighter, and a kinder, or a more amiable or agreeable being than Lady Byron. I never had nor can have any reproach to make to her, when with me." Elsewhere he adds, that he would willingly, if he had the chance, "renew his marriage on edge of Dr. Lushington's judgment and all the gossip of the day, professes to believe that "the causes of disunion did not differ from those that loosen the links of most such marriages," and writes several pages on the trite theme that great genius is incompatible with domestic happiness. Negative instances abound to modify this sweeping generalization; but there is a kind of genius closely associated with intense irritability, which it is difficult to subject to the most reasonable yoke; and of this sort was Byron's. His valet, Fletcher, is reported to have said that "Any woman could manage my lord, except my lady;" and Madame De Staël, on reading the Forerunner,* that "She would have been glad to have been in Lady Byron's place." But it may be doubted if Byron would have made a good husband to any woman; his wife and he were even more than usually ill-assorted. A model of the proprieties, and a pattern of the learned philanthropy of which in her sex he was wont to make a constant butt, she was no fit consort for a temperament like the poet's. What could her placid temperance conjecture of a man whom she saw, in one of his fits of passion, throwing a favorite watch under the fire, and grinding it to pieces with a poker? Or how could her conscious virtue tolerate the recurring irregularities which he was accustomed not only to permit himself but to parade? The harassment of his affairs stimulated his violence, till she was inclined to suspect him to be mad. Some of her recently printed letters—as that to Lady Anne Barnard—and the reports of later observers of her character—as William Howitt—tend to detract from the earlier tributes to her consistent amiability, and confirm our ideas of the incompatibility of the pair. It must have been trying to a poet to be asked by his wife, impatient of his late hours, when he was going to leave off writing verses; to be told he had no real enthusiasm; or to have his desk broken open, and its compromising contents sent to the persons for whom they were least intended. The smouldering elements of discontent may have been fanned by the gossip of dependents, or the officious zeal of relatives, and kindled into a jealous flame by the ostentation of regard for others beyond the circle of his home. Lady Byron doubtless believed some story which, when communicated to her legal advisers, led them to the conclusion that the mere fact of her believing it made reconciliation impossible; and the inveterate obstinacy which lurked beneath her gracious exterior made her cling through life to the substance—not always to the form, whatever that may have been—of her first impressions. Her later letters to Mrs. Leigh, as that called forth by Moore's Life, are certainly as open to the charge of self-righteousness, as those of her husband's are to self-disparagement.

* See foot-notes, pages 459, 460, 461.

† "Lady Byron Vindicated." By Harriet Beecher Stowe. Boston, 1870.

MARRIAGE AND SEPARATION.

Byron himself somewhere says, "Strength of endurance is worth all the talent in the world." "I love the virtues that I cannot share." His own courage was all active; he had no power of sustained endurance. At a time when his proper refuge was silence, and his prevailing sentiment—for he admits he was somehow to blame—should have been remorse, he vented his anger and his grief in verses, most of them either peevish or vindictive, and some of which he certainly permitted to be published. "Woe to him," exclaims Voltaire, "who says all he could on any subject!" Woe to him, he might have added, who says anything at all on the subject of his domestic troubles! The poet's want of reticence at this crisis started a host of conjectures, accusations, and calumnies, the outcome, in some degree at least, of the rancorous jealousy of men with whose adulation he was weary. Then began that burst of British virtue on which Macaulay has expatiated, and at which the social critics of the continent have laughed. Byron was accused of every possible and impossible vice. He was compared to Sardanapalus, Nero, Tiberius, the Duke of Orleans, Heliogabalus, and Satan—all the most disreputable persons mentioned in sacred and profane history; his benevolences were malign, his most disinterested actions perverted. Mrs. Mardyn, the actress, was on his account, on one occasion, driven off the public stage. He was advised not to go to the theatres, lest he should be hissed; nor to Parliament, lest he should be insulted. On the very day of his departure a friend told him that he feared violence from mobs assembling at the door of his carriage. "Upon what grounds," the poet writes, in an incisive survey of the circumstances, in August, 1819, "the public formed their opinion, I am not aware; but it was general, and it was decisive. Of me and of mine they know little, except that I had written poetry, was a nobleman, had married, became a father, and was involved in differences with my wife and her relatives—no one knew why, because the persons complaining refused to state their grievances."

Sarah Sophia Fane, Countess of Jersey.

From the painting by E. T. Parris.

"The press was active and scurrilous; . . . my name—which had been a knightly or a noble one since my fathers helped to conquer the kingdom for William the Norman—was tainted. I felt that, if what was whispered and muttered and murmured was true, I was unfit for England; if false, England was unfit for me. I withdrew; but this was not enough. In other countries—in Switzerland, in the shadow of the Alps, and by the blue depth of the lakes—I was pursued and breathed upon by the same blight. I crossed the mountains, but it was the same; so I went a little farther, and settled myself by the waves of the Adriatic, like the stag at bay, who betakes himself to the waters."

* See poem and foot-note, page 375.

† See foot-note, page 171.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Whilst Lady Caroline Lamb was correcting the proof-sheets of "Glenarvon," and ordering the superb cover for the copy of the novel which she meant to send to Byron, Lady Jersey was sending out her cards of invitation for the party at which the poet took farewell of English society. If she resembled many women in sympathizing with the poet, and wishing him well out of his troubles and well away from his persecutors, Lady Jersey* was almost singular in having the courage to declare the friendly feeling. But though her generosity and daring were exemplary, it is questionable whether the countess chose the best way of expressing her benevolent regard for the victim of social injustice when on the eve of his departure from England she invited him to an entertainment, given expressly in his honor. For though it was in the power of so momentous a personage to fill her drawing-rooms with people, ready to humor her generous whim and amuse themselves by taking a last look at the departing poet, she could not constrain them to treat him with reassuring heartiness. After a lapse of years the guest of the evening could write with drollery of the various ways in which Lady Jersey's friends indicated their various degrees of coldness towards or compassion for him; but at the time it must have caused him more mortification than amusement to discover, in hardened features and frigid words and looks of obvious embarrassment, only too conclusive evidence that he was regarded as the black sheep and discredit of his order even by the persons who, being (as Moore expresses it) habitually "tolerant of domestic irregularities," were the persons of all England most likely to take a charitable and lenient view of his real misdeeds and alleged offences. One can imagine what fun was made in the destroyed "Memoirs" or the equally absurd and veracious incidents of a scene that would doubtless have been turned to good account in one of the concluding episodes of "Don Juan," had the poet lived to finish the great satire. Some of the matrons were severely ceremonious, whilst others were loftily forgiving. Ladies of the gushing sort plunged into amiable familiarity, and then, fearful of committing themselves too far, bridled their impetuosity and withdrew into coldness and reserve. Besides Lady Jersey, with her smiles of summer sunshine, the only woman to delight the culprit with frank and fearless cordiality was Miss Mercer (afterwards Lady Keith), of whom he wrote gratefully in one of his diaries: "She is a high-minded woman, and showed me more friendship than I deserved from her. I heard also of her having defended me in a large company, which at that time required more courage and firmness than most women possess." The men were hard, frigid, and suspicious. Some of them barely exchanged the civilities of the salon with the chief guest. Some of them slipped to another room, in order to avoid the necessity of greeting him. Speaking of the poet's disgrace and the acuteness of the pain it occasioned him, Harries says: "He would have drawn himself up, and crossed his arms, and curled his lip, and looked disdainfully on any amount of clamorous hostility; but he stole away from the ignominy of being silently cut. Even in Lady Jersey's drawing-room, where no one could venture to show him open incivility, he was troubled by 'the altered countenances of his acquaintances,' and endured the ignominy of being treated with magnanimity.

On the 16th of April, 1816, shortly before his departure, he wrote to Mr. Rogers: "My sister is now with me, and leaves town to-morrow. We shall not meet again for some time, at all events, if ever (it was their final meeting), and under these circumstances I trust to stand excused to you and Mr. Sheridan for being unable to wait upon him this evening." In all this storm and stress, Byron's one refuge was in the affection of Augusta,† which rises like a wall of purity amid the passions of his turbid life.

"In the desert a fountain is springing,
In the wild waste there still is a tree;
And a bird in the solitude singing,
That speaks to my spirit of thee."

The fashionable world was tired of its spoilt child, and he of it. Hunted out of the country, bankrupt in purse and heart, he left it, never to return; but he left it to find fresh inspiration by the "roashing of the arrowy Rhone," and under Italian skies to write the works which have immortalized his name.

CHAPTER VII.

LIFE ABROAD—SWITZERLAND TO VENICE—THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP—CHILDE HAROLD (III., IV.).—MANFRED—VILLA D'IODATI—SHELLEY—THE COUNTESS GUICCIOLI.

[1816-1820.]

ON the 25th of April, 1816, Byron embarked for Genoa. From the "burning mart" of the stirring streets he planted his foot again on the deck with a genuine exultation.

"Once more upon the water, yet once more,
And the waves bound beneath me as a steed,
That knows her rider. Welcome to the roars!"

But he brought with him a relic of English extravagance, setting out on his land travels in a huge coach, copied from that of Napoleon taken at Genoa, and being accompanied by Fletcher, Raslinton, Boscawen, a Swiss, and an Italian physician called Polidori, and Alferi's secretary,—a man of some talent but of great conceit. A question arises as to the source from which he obtained the means for these and subsequent expenses, in striking contrast with Goldsmith's wallet, stick, knapsack, and flute. Byron's financial affairs are almost inextricably confused. We can, of course, find nowhere a clear statement of the result of the suit regarding the Rochdale estates, save that it was lost it before the Court of Exchequer, and that his appeal to the House of Lords was still unsettled in 1823. The sale of Newstead to Colonel Willmer in 1813, for £450,000, went mostly to pay off mortgages and debts. In April, 1819, Mrs. Leigh writes, after a last sigh over this event: "Sixty thousand pounds was secured by his (Byron's) marriage settlement, the interest of which he receives for life, and which ought to make him very comfortable." This is unfortunately decisive of the fact that he did not in spirit adhere to the resolution expressed to Moore never to touch a farthing of his wife's money, though we may accept his statement to Medwin, that he twice repaid the dowry of £50,000, brought to him at the marriage, as in so far diminishing the obligation. None of the capital of Lady Byron's family came under his control till 1822, when, on the death of her mother, Lady Noel, Byron arranged the appointment of referees—Sir Francis Burdett on his behalf, Lord Dacre on his wife's. The result was an equal division of a property worth about £35,000 a year. While in Italy the poet received, besides, about £50,000 for his writings, £30,000 being given for Childe Harold (III., IV.) and

* See poem, page 441.

† See poem and foot-note, page 377.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Manfred. "Ne pas être dupe" was one of his determinations, and, though he began by caring little for making money, he was always fond of spending it. "I tell you it is too much," he said to Murray, in returning a thousand guineas for the Corinth and Parisina. Hodgson, Moore, Bland, Thomas Aasha, the family of Lord Falkland, the British consul at Venice, and a host of others were ready to testify to his superb munificence. On the other hand, he would stint his pleasures, or his benevolences, which were among them, for no one; and when he found that to spend money he had to make it, he saw neither rhyme nor reason in accepting less than his due. In 1817 he begins to dun Murray, declaring, with a frankness in which we can find no fault, "You offer 1800 guineas for the new canto (C. H., iv.). I won't take it. I ask 3500 guineas for it, which you will either give or ing his withdrawal from England may be seen from the data taken from Murray's published list of payments to the poet, and the same publisher's "Chronology of Lord Byron's Life and Works."⁶

We have only a few glimpses of Byron's progress. At Brussels the Napoleonic coach was set aside for a more serviceable caleche. During his stay in the Belgian capital he paid a visit to the scene of Waterloo, wrote the famous stanzas beginning, "Stop, for thy tread is on an empire's dust!" and, in unpatriotic prose, recorded his impressions of a plain which appeared to him to "want little but a better cause" to make it vie in interest with those of Plataea and Marathon.

The rest of his journey lay up the Rhine to Basle, thence to Berne, Lausanne, and Geneva, where he settled for a time at the Hôtel Secheron, on the western shore of the lake. Here began the most interest-not, as you think proper." During the remaining years of his life he grew more and more exact, driving hard bargains for his houses, horses, and boats, and fitting himself, had he lived, to be Chancellor of the Exchequer in the newly-liberated State, from which he took a bond securing a fair interest for his loan. He made out an account in £ s. d. against the ungrateful Dallas, and when Leigh Hunt threatened to sponge upon him, he got a harsh reception. But there is nothing to countenance the view that Byron was ever really possessed by the "good old gentlemanly vice" of which he wrote. The Skimpies and Obadbands of the world are always inclined to talk of filthy lucre: it is equally a fashion of really lavish people to boast that they are good men of business.

The Villa Diodati.

The Residence of Lord Byron. From a drawing by Purser.

The magnitude of the revenue that came to Byron from his pen during the five years immediately ensuing literary relationship of his life, for here he first came in contact with the impassioned Ariel of English verse, Percy Bysshe Shelley. They lived in proximity after they left the hotel, Shelley's headquarters being at Mont Alégre, and Byron's for the remainder of the summer at the Villa Diodati; and their acquaintance rapidly ripened into an intimacy which, with some interruptions, extended over the six remaining years of their joint lives. The place for an estimate of their mutual influence belongs to the time of their Italian partnership. Meanwhile, we hear of them mainly as fellow-excursionists about the lake, which, on one occasion, departing from its placid poetical character, all but swallowed them both, along with Hobhouse, off Meillerie. "The boat," says Byron, "was nearly wrecked near the very spot where St. Preux and Julia were in danger of being drowned. It would have been classical to have been lost there, but not agreeable. I ran no risk, being so near the rocks and a good swimmer; but our party were wet and uncomfortable. The only anxiety of Shelley, who could not swim, was, that no one else should risk a life for his. Two such revolutionary or such brave poets were, in all probability, never before nor since in a storm in a boat together. During this period Byron complains of being still persecuted. "I was in a wretched state of health and worse spirits when I was in Geneva; but quiet and the lake—better physicians than Pindori—soon set me up. I never led so moral a life as during my residence in that country, but I gained no credit by it. On the contrary, there is no story so absurd that they did not invent at my cost. I was watched by glasses on the opposite side of the lake, and by glasses, too, that must have had very distorted optics. I was waylaid in my evening drives. I believe they looked upon me as a man-monster." Shortly after his arrival in Switzerland, Byron met the Shelleys and Miss Clement, then living with them.* The noticeable events of the following two months are a joint excursion to Chamouni, and a visit in July to Madame de Staël at Coppet, in the course of which he met Frederick Schlegel. During a wet week, when the families were reading together some German ghost stories, an idea occurred of imitating them, the main result of which was Mrs. Shelley's Frankenstein. Byron contributed to the scheme a fragment of The Vampire (page 58), afterwards completed and published in the name of his patron by Pindori. This eccentric physician now began to develop a vein of half insanity; his jealousy of Shelley grew to such a pitch that it resulted in the doctor's sending a challenge to the poet. Shelley only laughed at this; but Byron, to stop further importunities of the kind, remarked, "Remember that, though Shelley has scruples about duelling, I have none, and shall be at all times ready to take his place." Pindori had ultimately to be dismissed, and, after some years of absurd adventure, committed suicide.

⁶ See pages 648, 649, Appendix.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Percy Bysshe Shelley.

From the original picture now in possession of his family.

The Shelleys left for England in September, and Byron made an excursion with Hobhouse through the Bernese Oberland. They went by the Col de Jemina and the Simmenthal to Thun; then up the valley to the Stenbach, which he compares to the tail of the pale horse in the Apocalypse—not a very happy, though a striking comparison. Thence they proceeded over the Wengern to Grindelwald and the Rosenlan diasser; then back by Bern, Friburg, and Yverdon to Lausanne. The following passage in reference to this tour may be selected as a specimen of his prose description, and of the ideas of mountaineering before the days of the Alpine Club:

"Before ascending the mountain, went to the torrent again, the sun upon it forming a rainbow of the lower part, of all colors, but principally purple and gold, the bow moving as you move. I never saw anything like this; it is only in the sunshine. . . . Left the horses, took off my coat, and went to the sun, it was then thousand English feet above the level of the sea, and five thousand feet above the valley we left in the morning. On one side our view comprised the Jungfrau, with all her glaciers; then the Dent d'Argent, shining like truth; then the Elchers and the Wetterhorn. Heard the avalanches falling every five minutes. From where we stood on the Wengern Alps we had all these in view on one side; on the other, the roads rose up from the opposite valley, curling up in perpendicular precipices, like the fount of the ocean of hell during a spring tide; it was white and sulphureous, and immeasurably deep in appearance. . . . Arrived at the Grindelwald, dined, mounted again, and rode to the higher glacier—like a frozen hurricane; starlight beautiful, but a devil of a push. Passed whole woods of withered pines, all withered; trunks stripped, and barkless, branches lifeless; done by a single winter. Their appearance reminded me of me and my family."

Byron was, during the whole of this period, almost preternaturally active. Detained by bad weather at Cuchy for two days (June 26, 27), he wrote the Prisoner of Chillon (page 113), which, with his noble introductory sonnet on Bonaparte, in some respects surpasses any of his early romances. The opening lines—

"Lake Lemán lies by Chillon's walls;
A thousand feet in depth below;
His sunny waters meet and flow."

From the same place, at the same date, he announces to Murray the completion of the third canto of Childe Harold. The productiveness of July is portentous. During that month he wrote the Mendocin Sheridan (page 379), The Dream (page 389), Churchill's Grace (page 445), the Sonnet to Lake Lemán (page 446), Could I Remount the River of my Years (page 446), part of Manfred, Prometheus (page 445), the Stanzas to Augusta, beginning,

"My sister: my sweet sister! If a name Dearer and purer were, it should be thine;"

and the terrible dream of Darkness (page 444), which at least in the ghastly power of the close, where the survivors meet by the lurid light of a dim altar fire,

* See page 118, stanza vi., and photograph of the castle of Chillon, page 113.

† See poem, stanza v., page 115.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

to the sale of Newstead, the mistake of Mrs. Leigh and others in attributing to him the Tales of a Landlord, the appearance of Lalla Rookh, preparations for Marine Fallerio, and the progress of Childe Harold (Canto iv.). This poem, completed in September, and published early in 1818 (with a dedication to Hobhouse, who had supplied most of the illustrative notes), first made manifest the range of the poet's power. Only another slope of ascent lay between him and the pinnacles, over which shines the red star of Cato. Had Lord Byron's public career closed when he left England, he would have been remembered for a generation as the author of some musical minor verses, a clever satire, a journal in verse exhibiting flashes of genius, and a series of fascinating romances—also giving promise of higher power—which had enjoyed a marvellous popularity. The third and fourth cantos of Childe Harold placed him on another platform, that of the Di Majores of English verse. These cantos are separated from their predecessors, not by a stage, but by a gulf. Previous to their publication he had only shown how far the force of rhapsody could go; now he struck with his right hand, and from the shoulder. Knowledge of life and study of Nature were the mainsprings of a growth which the indirect influence of Wordsworth, and the happy companionship of Shelley, played their part in fostering.

Byron has made himself so master of the glories and the wrecks of Rome, that almost everything else that has been said of them seems superfluous. Nathaniel Hawthorne, in his Mardi, comes nearest to him; but Byron's Gladiator and Apollon, if not his Lycoon, are unequalled. "The voice of Marina," says Scott, "could not sound more deep and solemn among the ruins of Carthage than the strains of the pilgrim among the broken shrines and fallen statues of her sublimity." As the third canto has a fitting close with the poet's pathetic remembrance of his daughter, so the fourth is wound up with consummate art—the memorable dirge on the Princess Charlotte being followed by the address to the sea, which, enduring uncrinkled through all its ebbs and flows, seems to mock at the mutability of human life.

Manfred—his witch drama, as the author called it—has had a special attraction for inquisitive biographers, because it has been supposed in some dark manner to reveal the secrets of his prison-house. Its lines have been tortured, like the witches of the seventeenth century, to extort from them the meaning of the "all nameless hour," and every conceivable horror has been alleged as its motif.

Manfred is a chaos of pictures, suggested by the scenery of Lauterbrunnen and Grindelwald, half animated by vague personifications and sensational narrative. Like Childe Harold and Scott's Marmion, it just misses being a great poem. The Coliseum is its masterpiece of description; the appeal, "Astarte, my beloved, speak to me," its nearest approach to pathos. The lonely death of the hero makes an effective close to the moral tumult of the preceding scenes.

The summer and early months of the autumn of 1817 were spent at La Mira, and much of the poet's time was occupied in riding along the banks of the Brenta, often in the company of the few congenial Englishmen who came in his way; others, whom he avoided, avenged themselves by retelling stories, none of which were "too improbable for the craving appetites of their slander-loving countrymen." In August he received a visit from Mr. Hobhouse, and on this occasion drew up the remarkable document afterwards given to Mr. M. G. Lewis for circulation in England, which appeared in the Academy of October 9, 1869. In this document he says: "It has been intimated to me that the persons understood to be the legal advisers of Lady Byron have declared their lips to be sealed up on the cause of the separation between her and myself. If their lips are sealed up they are not sealed up by me, and the greatest favor they can confer upon me will be to open them." He goes on to state that he repeats having consented to the separation—will be glad to cancel the deed, or to go before any tribunal to discuss the matter in the most public manner; adding, that Mr. Hobhouse (in whose presence he was writing) proposed, on his part, to go into court, and ending with a renewed avowal of his ignorance of the allegations against him, and his inability to understand for what purpose they had been kept back. "unless it was to sanction the most infamous calumnies by silence." Hobhouse and others, during the four succeeding years, ineffectually endeavored to persuade the poet to return to England. Moore and others insist that Byron's heart was at home when his presence was abroad, and that, with all her faults, he loved his country still. Leigh Hunt, on the contrary, asserts that he cared nothing for England or its affairs. Like many men of genius, Byron was never satisfied with what he had at the time; at Seaham he is bored to death, and pants for the excitement of the clubs; in London society he longs for a desert or island in the Cyclades; after their separation, he begins to regret his wife; after his exile, his country. "Where," he exclaimed to Hobhouse, "is real comfort to be found out of England?"

In September (1817) Byron entered into negotiations, afterwards completed, for renting a country house among the Engadine hills near Este, from Mr. Hoppner, the English Consul at Venice, who bears frequent testimony to his kindness and courtesy. In October we find him settled for the winter in Venice, where he first occupied his old quarters in the Spexieria, and afterwards hired one of the palaces of the Countess Mocenigo on the Grand Canal. Between this mansion, the cottage at Este, and the villa of La Mira, he divided his time for the next two years. During the earlier part of his Venetian career he had continued to frequent the salon of the Countess Albrizzi, where he met with people of both sexes of some rank and standing who appreciated his genius, though some among them fell into absurd mistakes. A gentleman of the company informing the hostess, in answer to some inquiry regarding Canova's busts, that General Washington was shot in a duel by Burke, "What in the name of folly are you thinking of?" said Byron, perceiving that the speaker was confounding Washington with Hamilton, and Burke with Burr. He afterwards transferred himself to the rival coteries of the Countess Benzoni, and gave himself up with little reserve to the intrigues which are discreditable to this portion of his life. Nothing is so conducive to dissipation as despair, and Byron had begun to regard the Sea-Cybele as a Sea-Sodom, when he wrote, "To watch a city die daily, as she does, is a sad contemplation. I sought to distract my mind from a sense of her desolation and my own solitude, by plunging into a vortex that was anything but pleasure." In any case, he forsook the "Dame," and by what his biographer calls a "decent in the scale of refinement for which nothing but the wayward state of his mind can account," sought the companionship of his leisure hours among the wearers of the "fazzioni." The carnivals of the years 1818, 1819, mark the height of his excesses. Early in the former, Mariana Segatti fell out of favor, owing to Byron's having detected her in selling the jewels he had given as presents, and so being led to suspect a large mercenary element in her devotion. To her succeeded Margarita Cogni, the wife of a baker, who proved as accommodating as his predecessor, the linen-draper. This woman was decidedly a character, and Señor Castelar has almost elevated her into a heroine. A handsome virago, with brown shoulders and black hair, endowed with the strength of an Amazon, "a face like Faustina's, and the figure of a Juno—tall and energetic as a pythoness," she quartered herself for twelve months in the palace as "Donna di governo," and drove the servants about without let or hindrance. Unable to read or write, she intercepted his lordship's letters to little purpose; but she had great natural business talents, reduced by one-half the expenses of his household, kept everything in good order, and, when her violences roused his wrath, turned it off with some ready retort or witicism. She was very devout, and would cross herself three times at the Angelus. One instance, of a different kind of devotion, from Byron's own account, is sufficiently graphic: "In the autumn, one day, going to the Lido with my gondoliers, we were overtaken by a heavy squall, and the gondola put in peril, hats blown away, boat filling, oar lost, tumbling sea, thunder, rain in torrents, and wind unceasing. On our return, after a tight struggle, I found her on the open steps of the Mocenigo Palace on the Grand Canal, with her great black eyes flashing through her tears, and the long dark hair which was streaming, drenched with rain, over her brow. She was perfectly exposed to the storm; and the wind blowing her dress about her thin figure, and the lightning flashing round her, made her look like Medea alighted from her chariot, or the Sibyl of the tempest that was rolling around her, the only living thing within hail at that moment except ourselves. On seeing me safe, she did not wait to greet me, as might have been expected; but, calling out to me, 'Ah! can' della Madonna, xe esto il tempo par andar' al Lido,' ran into the house, and solaced herself with scolding the boatmen for not foreseeing the 'temporale.' Her joy at seeing me again was moderately mixed with ferocity, and gave me the idea of a tigress over her recovered cub."

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Some months after, she became ungovernable—threw plates about, and snatched caps from the heads of other women who looked at her lord in public places. Byron told her she must go home; whereupon she proceeded to break glass, and threaten "knives, poison, fire;" and on his calling his boatman to get ready the gondola, threw herself in the dark night into the canal. She was rescued, and in a few days finally dismissed; after which he saw her only twice, at the theatre. Her whole picture is more like that of Théroigne de Méricourt than that of Raphael's Fornarina, whose name she received.

Other stories, of course, gathered round this strange life—personal encounters, aquatic feats, and all manner of romantic and impossible episodes; their basis being that Byron on one occasion thrashed, on another challenged, a man who tried to cheat him, was a frequent rider, and a constant swimmer, so that he came to be called "the English fish," "a water-spaniel," "sea-devil," etc. One of the boatmen is reported to have said, "He is a good gondolier, spollt by being a poet and a lord;" and in answer to a traveller's inquiry, "Where does he get his poetry?" "He dives for it." His habits, as regards eating, seem to have been generally abstemious; but he drank a pint of gin and water over his verses at night, and then took claret and soda in the morning.

Riotous living may have helped to curtail Byron's life, but it does not seem to have seriously impaired his powers. Among these adverse surroundings of the "court of Circe," he threw off Beppo (page 116), Manfred (page 128), and the early books of Don Juan. The first canto of Don Juan was written in November, 1818; the second in January, 1819; the third and fourth towards the close of the same year. Beppo, its brilliant prelude, sparkles like a draught of champagne. This "Venetian story," or sketch, in which the author broke ground on his true satiric field—the satire of social life—and first adopted the measure avowedly suggested by Frère's Whistlercraft, was drafted in October, 1817, and appeared in May, 1818. It aims at comparatively little, but is perfectly successful in its aim, and unsurpassed for the incisiveness of its side strokes, and the courtly ease of a manner that never degenerates into mannerism. In Manfred the poet reverts to his earlier style, and that of Scott; the description of the headlong ride hurries us along with a breathless expectancy that gives it a conspicuous place among his minor efforts. The passage about the howling of the wolves, and the fever faint of the victim, is as graphic as anything in Burns.

Margarita Cogni.

From the original, taken at the request of Lord Byron.

In the May or June of 1818, Byron's little daughter, Allegra, had been sent from England, under the care of a Swiss nurse, too young to undertake her management in such trying circumstances, and after four months of anxiety he placed her in charge of Mrs. Hoppner. In the course of this and the next year there are frequent allusions to the child, all, save one which records a mere affectation of indifference, full of affectionate solicitude. In June, 1819, he writes, "Her temper and her ways, Mr. Hoppner says, are like mine, as well as her features; she will make, in that case, a manageable young lady." Later he talks of her as "flourishing like a pomegranate blossom." In March, 1820, we have another reference. "Allegra is prettier, I think, but as obstinate as a mule, and as ravenous as a vulture; health good, to judge by the complexion; temper tolerable, but for vanity and pertinacity. She thinks herself handsome, and will do as she pleases." In May he refers to having received a letter from her mother, but gives no details. In the following year, he placed her for education in the convent of Cavalli Bagni in the Romagna. "I have," he writes to Hoppner, who had thought of having her boarded in Switzerland, "neither spared care, kindness, nor expense, since the child was sent to me. The people may say what they please. I must content myself with not deserving, in this instance, that they should speak ill. The place is a country town, in a good air, and less liable to objections of every kind. It has always appeared to me that the moral defect in Italy does not proceed from a conventual education; because, to my certain knowledge, they come out of their convents innocent, even to ignorance of moral evil; but to the state of society into which they are directly plunged on coming out of it. It is like educating an infant on a mountain top, and then taking him to the sea and throwing him into it, and desiring him to swim."

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

April 23d, he seemed at first utterly prostrated. The death of Allegra must have touched Byron the more acutely because the child was sent to the convent, where she caught the fatal fever, in contemptuous disregard of Claire's feelings and vehement protestations. On recovering from the first shock of his grief for the loss of the child, he said to Theresa Guiccioli, "she is more fortunate than we are; besides, her position in the world would scarcely have allowed her to be happy. It is God's will—let us mention it no more." His sorrow for the child does not, however, seem to have been attended with compassion or any revival of tenderness for the child's mother. To Claire he appears to have been unrelenting to the last. Though he was compelled to acquit Shelley of immorality, he seems to have remained under the impression that Jane Clairmont had given birth to a second child. This unfavor-

Churchyard at Harrow.

From a sketch.

Elsewhere he says, "I by no means intend to give a natural child an English education, because, with the disadvantages of her birth, her after settlement would be doubly difficult. Abroad with a fair foreign education, and a portion of 5000*l.* or 6000*l.* (his will leaving her 5000*l.*, on condition that she should not marry an Englishman, is here explained and justified), she might, and may, marry very respectably. In England such a dowry would be a pittance, while elsewhere it is a fortune. It is, besides, my wish that she should be a Roman Catholic, which I look upon as the best religion, as it is assuredly the oldest of the various branches of Christianity." It only remains to add that, when he heard that the child had fallen ill of fever in 1823, Byron was almost speechless with agitation, and, on the news of her death, which took place able opinion of Claire is not to be lost sight of, when Byron is judged for his neglect of the mother at the time of the child's death, and his omission to make any provision in his will for the needy woman whom he had injured grievously.

Allegra's remains rest beneath the elm-tree at Harrow* which her father used to haunt in boyhood, with the date of birth and death, and the verse—

"I shall go to her, but she shall not return to me."

The most interesting of the visits paid to Byron during the period of his life at Venice was that of Shelley, who, leaving his wife and children at Bagni di Lucca, came to see him in August, 1818. He arrived late, in the midst of a thunder-storm; and next day they sailed to the Lido, and rode together along the sands. The attitude of the two poets towards each other is curious; the comparatively shrewd man of the world often relied on the idealist for guidance and help in practical matters, admired his courage and independence, spoke of him invariably as the best of men, but never paid a sufficiently warm tribute in public to his work. Shelley, on the other hand, certainly the most modest of great poets, contemplates Byron in the fixed attitude of a literary worshipper.

* See note, page 238.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

The introduction to Juven and Madeline, directly suggested by this visit, under the slight veil of a change in the names, gives a summary of the view of his friend's character which he contrived to entertain. "He is a person of the most consummate genius, and capable, if he would direct his energies to such an end, of becoming the redeemer of his degraded country. But it is his weakness to be proud; he derives from a comparison of his own extraordinary mind with the foolishness of the nothingness of human life. His passions and his powers are incomparably greater than those of other men; and instead of the latter having been employed in curbing the former, they have mutually lent each other strength;" but "in social life no man can be more gentle, patient, and unassuming. He is cheerful, frank, and witty. His more serious conversation is a sort of intoxication; men are held as slaves by a spell."

So, curiously true, whilst Byron lent the villa at Este to his friends, and during the autumn weeks of their residence there, were written the lines among the Empedocles letters, where, in the same strain of revelation, Shelley refers to the "tempest-leaving swan of Greece," in the tempest flung over a mighty thunder-bolt, and the sea-serpent-like soul destined to immortalize his creative songs—

A divine power of Homer sings
From Empedocles's wasting springs,
As Empedocles the seer's delight
To dream and live the world with light."

It is said, he says at a later date, "has extinguished the Empedocles," and again, "I despair of rivaling Lord Byron; still I live, and there is no other with whom I compare myself."

It seems, except the main, not only an exquisite but a man of the world, and no man was more absolutely absorbed and influenced by the fact of rank or the loss of popularity. These criticisms are therefore not to be taken too far, not are they unintelligible. Perhaps these admirers of the clearer and more consistent nature, who exalt him to the rank of a greater poet, are misled by the visible love of one of the period characters in the history of our literature. There is at least no difficulty in understanding why he should have been, as it were, converted by Byron's greater consciousness and energy into a sense—easy to a man half dead, half saint—of inferiority.

The favorite of Keats and the minor muse, witty, genial, shallow, worldly, musical Tom Moore, in the course of a short tour through the north of Italy in the autumn of 1819, found his noble friend on the 8th of October at La Mira, went with him on a sight-seeing expedition to Venice, and passed five or six days in his company. Of this visit he has recorded his impressions, some of which relate to his host's personal appearance, others to his habits and leading incidents of his life. Byron had grown fatter, both in person and face, and the latter had suffered most by the change, having lost by the enlargement of the features some of that refined and spiritualized look that had in other times distinguished it; but although less romantic, he appeared more humorous. They renewed their recollections of the old days and nights in London, and compared them with later experiences of Illes and Blues, in a manner which threatened to put to flight the historical and poetical associations naturally awakened by the City of the Sea. Byron had a noted dislike to any approach to fine talk in the ordinary intercourse of life; and when his companion began to rhapsodize on the rosy hues of the Italian sunsets, he interrupted him with, "Come, don't it, Tom, don't be poetical!" He insisted on Moore, who sighed after what he imagined would be the greater comforts of a hotel, taking up his quarters in his palace; and as they were groping their way through the somewhat dingy entrance, cried out, "Keep clear of the dog!" and a few paces farther, "Take care, or the monkey will fly at you!" an incident recalling the old vagaries of the monasteries at Newstead. The biographer's reminiscences mainly dwell on his lordship's changing moods and temper, and gymnastic exercises, his terror of interviewing strangers, his imperfect appreciation of art, his preference of fish to flesh, his almost pugnacious

Theresa Guliccoli.

From the original Italian portrait.

economy in small matters, mingled with allusions to his domestic calamities, and frequent expressions of a growing dislike to Venetian society. On leaving the city, Moore passed a second afternoon at La Mira, had a glimpse of Allegre, and the first intimation of the existence of the celebrated Memoirs. "A short time after dinner Byron left the room, and returned carrying in his hand a white leather bag. 'Look here,' he said, holding it up; 'this would be worth something to Murray, though you, I dare say, would not give sixpence for it.' 'What is it?' I asked. 'My life and adventures,' he answered. 'It is not a thing that can be published during my lifetime, but you may have it if you like. There, do whatever you please with it.' In taking the bag, and thanking him most warmly, I added, 'This will make a nice legacy for my little Tom, who shall astonish the latter days of the nineteenth century with it.'"

* For poems addressed to Moore, see pages 429, 441, 447, 448.

LIFE ABROAD AND THIRD PERIOD OF AUTHORSHIP.

Shortly after, Moore for the last time bade his friend farewell, taking with him from Madame Guiccioli, who did the honors of the house, an introduction to her brother, Count Gamba, at Rome. "Theresa Guiccioli," says Castelar, "appears like a star on the stormy horizon of the poet's life." A young Roman, the daughter of a nobleman of Ravenna, of good descent but limited means, she had been educated in a convent, and married in her nineteenth year to a rich widower of sixty, in early life a friend of Alfieri, and noted as the patron of the National Theatre. This beautiful found herself inspired with a passion of which till that moment her mind could not have formed the least idea; she had thought of love but as an amusement, and now became its slave." Byron, on the other hand, gave what remained of a heart never alienated from her by any other mistress. Till the middle of the month they met every day; and when the husband took her back to Ravenna she despatched to her idol a series of impassioned letters, declaring her resolution to mould her life in accordance with his wishes. Towards the end of May she had prepared her relatives to receive Byron as a visitor. He started in answer to the summons, writing on his way the beautiful stanza to the Po, beginning—

"River that roll'st by the ancient walls
Where dwells the lady of my love."

Again passing through Ferrara, and visiting Bologna, he left the latter on the 8th, and, on his arrival at his destination, found the Countess dangerously ill; but his presence, and the attentions of the famous Venetian doctor Agiletli, who was sent for by his advice, restored her. The Count seems to have been proud of his guest. "I can't make him out at all," Byron writes; "he visits me frequently, and takes me out (like Whittington the Lord Mayor) in a coach and six horses. The fact appears to be, that he is completely governed by her—and, for that matter, so am I."

On Theresa's recovery, in dread of a possible separation, he proposed to fly with her to America, to the Alps, to "some unsuspected isle in the far seas;" and she suggested the idea of feigning death, like Juliet, and rising from the tomb. Neither expedient was called for. When the Count went to Bologna, in August, with his wife, Lord Byron was allowed to follow; and after consoling himself during an excursion which the married pair made to their estate, by hovering about her empty rooms and writing in her books, he established himself, on the Count's return to his headquarters, with her and Allegra at Bologna. Meanwhile, Byron had written The Prophecy of Dante (page 398), and in August the prose letter, To the Editor of the British Review (page 636), on the charge of bribery in Don Juan. Than this inimitable epistle no more laughter-compelling composition exists. About the same time, we hear of his leaving the theatre in a convulsion of tears, occasioned by the representation of Alfieri's Mirra.

He left Bologna with the Countess on the 15th of September, when they visited the Euganean hills and Arqua, and wrote their names together in the Pilgrim's Book. On arriving at Venice, the physicians recommending Madame Guiccioli to country air, they settled, still by her husband's consent, for the autumn at La Mira, where Moore and others found them domesticated. At the beginning of November the poet was prostrated by an attack of tertian fever. In some of his hours of delirium he dictated to his careful nurses, Fletcher and the Countess, a number of verses, which she assures us were correct and sensible. He attributes his restoration to cold water and the absence of doctors; but, ere his complete recovery, Count Guiccioli had suddenly appeared on the scene, and run away with his own wife. The lovers had for a time not only acquiesced in the separation, but to agree to cease their correspondence. In December Byron, in a fit of spleen, had packed up his belongings, with a view to return to England. "He was," we are told, "ready dressed for the journey, his boxes on board the gondola, his gloves and cap on, and even his little cane in his hand, when my lord declares that if it should strike one—which it did—before everything was in order, he would not go that day. It is evident

The Countess Guiccioli.

From a sketch by Brockedon, taken in 1833.

blonde, of pleasing manners, graceful presence, and a strong vein of sentiment, fostered by the reading of Chateaubriand, met Byron for the first time casually when she came in her bridal dress to one of the Alfieri reunions; but she was only introduced to him early in the April of the following year, at the house of the Countess Benzoni. "Suddenly the young Italian

* In December, 1829, Byron sent several more sheets of Memoranda from Ravenna; and in the following year suggested an arrangement by which Murray paid over to Moore, who was then in difficulties, $10,000 for the right of publishing the whole, under the condition, among others, that Lady Byron should see them, and have the right of reply to anything that might seem to her objectionable. She on her part declined to have anything to do with them. When the Memoranda were destroyed, Moore paid back the $10,000, but obtained $20,000 for editing the Life and Correspondence.

† See poem and foot-note, page 420.

RAVENNA AND COUNTESS GUICCIOLI.

he had not the heart to go." Next day he heard that Madame Guiccioli was again seriously ill, received and accepted the renewed invitation which bound him to her and to the south. He left Venice for the last time almost by stealth, rushed along the familiar roads, and was welcomed at Ravenna.

CHAPTER VIII.

RAVENNA—COUNTESS GUICCIOLI—THE DRAMAS —GAIN—VISION OF JUDGMENT.

[1830-1831.]

BYRON'S life at Ravenna was during the first months comparatively calm; nevertheless, he mingled in society, took part in the Carnival, and was received at the parties of the Legate. "I may stay," he writes in January, 1830, "a day—a week—a year—all my life." Meanwhile, he imported his movables from Venice, hired a suite of rooms in the Guiccioli palace, executed his marvellously close translation of Pulci's Morgante Maggior (page 888), wrote his version of the story of Francesca di Rimini (page 899), and received visits from his old friend Banks and from Sir Humphry Davy.* At this time he was accustomed to ride about armed to the teeth, apprehending a possible attack from assassins on the part of Count Guiccioli. In April his letters refer to the insurrectionary movements then beginning against the Holy Alliance. "We are on the verge of a row here. Last night they have over-written all the city walls with 'Up with the Republic!' and 'Death to the Pope!'" The police have been searching for the subscribers, but have caught none as yet. The other day they confiscated the whole translation of the fourth canto of Childe Harold, and have prosecuted the translator." In July a Papal decree of separation between the Countess and her husband was obtained, on condition of the latter paying from his large income a pittance to the lady of $1000 a year, and her undertaking to live in her father's house—an engagement which was, first in the spirit, and subsequently in the letter, violated. For a time, however, she retired to a villa about fifteen miles from Ravenna, where she was visited by Byron at comparatively rare intervals. By the end of July he had finished Marino Faliero (page 154), and ere the close of the year the fifth canto of Don Juan. In September he says to Murray, "I am in a fierce humor at not having Scott's Monastery. No more Keats, I entreat. There is no bearing the drivelling idiotism of the manikin. I don't feel inclined to care further about Don Juan. What do you think a very pretty Italian lady said to me the other day, when I remarked that it would live longer than Childe Harold? 'Ah! but I would rather have the fame of Childe Harold for three years than an immortality of D. J.'" This is to-day the common female judgment; it is known to have been La Guiccioli's, as well as Mrs. Leigh's, and by their joint persuasion Byron was for a season induced to lay aside that "horrid, wearisome Don."† About this time he wrote the memorable reply to the remarks on that poem in Blackwood's Magazine (page 639), where he enters on a defence of his life, attacks the Lakers, and champions Pope against the new school of poetry, lamenting that his own practice did not square with his precept; and adding, "We are all wrong, except Rogers, Crabbe, and Campbell."

In November he refers to reports of his letters being opened by the Austrian officials, and the unpleasant things the Huns, as he calls them, are likely to find therein. Early in the next month he tells Moore that the commandant of their troops, a brave officer, but obnoxious to the people, had been found lying at his door, with five slugs in him, and, bleeding inwardly, had died in the palace, where he had been brought to be nursed.

This incident is verified in Don Juan (page 508) with anatomical minuteness of detail. After trying in vain to wrench an answer out of death, the poet ends in his accustomed strain—

"But it was all a mystery. Here we are,
And there we go;—but where? Five bits of lead—
Or three, or two, or one—said very far!"

Assassination has sometimes been the prelude to revolution, but it may be questioned if it has ever promoted the cause of liberty. Most frequently it has served as a pretext for reaction, or a red signal. In this instance—as afterwards in 1848—overt acts of violence made the powers of despotism more alert, and conducted, with the half-hearted action of their adversaries, to the suppression of the rising of 1830-31. Byron's sympathy with the movement seems to have been stimulated by his new associations. Theresa's brother, Count Pietro, an enthusiastic young soldier, having returned from Rome and Naples, surmounting a prejudice not wholly unnatural, became attached to him, and they entered into a partnership in behalf of what—adopting a phrase often flaunted in opposite camps—they called constitutional principles. Finally, the poet so committed himself to the party of insurrection that, though his nationality secured him from direct attack, his movements were necessarily affected by the fiasco. In July the Gambas were banished from the Romagna, Pietro being actually carried by force over the frontier; and, according to the articles of her separation, the Countess had to follow them to Florence. Byron lingered for some months, partly from a spirit of defiance, and partly from his affection towards a place where he had enlisted the regards of numerous beneficiaries. The Gambas were for some time bent on migrating to Switzerland; but the poet, after first acquiescing, subsequently conceived a violent repugnance to the idea, and early in August wrote to Shelley, earnestly requesting his presence, aid, and counsel. Shelley at once complied, and, entering into a correspondence with Madame Guiccioli, succeeded in inducing her relatives to abandon their transmontane plans, and agree to take up their headquarters at Pisa. This incident gave rise to a series of interesting letters, in which the younger poet gives a vivid and generous account of the surroundings and condition of his friend. On the 2d of August he writes from Ravenna: "I arrived last night at ten o'clock, and sat up talking with Lord B. till five this morning. He was delighted to see me. He has, in fact, completely recovered his health, and lives a life totally the reverse of that which he led at Venice. . . . Poor fellow! he is now quite well, and immersed in politics and literature. We talked a great deal of poetry and such matters last night, and, as usual, differed, I think, more than ever. He affects to patronize a system of criticism fit only for the production of mediocrity; and, although all his finer poems and passages have been produced in defiance of this system, yet I recognize the pernicious effects of it in the Dogs of Venice." Again, on the

* See foot-note, page 468.

† In a note on a similar passage, bearing the date November 12, 1821, he, however, confesses: "My indignation at Mr. Keats' depreciation of Pope has hardly permitted me to do justice to his own genius, which maligns all the fantastic fopperies of his style was undoubtedly of great promise. His fragment of Hyperion seems actually inspired by the Titans, and is as sublime as Eschylus. He is a loss to our literature."

‡ See foot-note, page 508.

RAVENNA AND COUNTESS GUICCIOLI

18th: "Lord B. is greatly improved in every respect—in genius, in temper, in moral views, in health and happiness. His connection with La Guiccioli has been an inestimable benefit to him. He lives in considerable splendor, but within his income, which is now about 4000*l.* a year, 1000*l.* of which he devotes to purposes of charity. Switzerland is little fitted for him; the gossip and the cabals of those Angloised coteries would torment him as they did before. Ravenna is a miserable place. He would in every respect be better among the Tuscani. He has read to me one of the unpublished cantos of Don Juan. It sets him not only above, but far above, all the poets of the day. Every word has the stamp of immortality. . . . I have spoken to him of Hunt, but not with a direct view of demanding a contribution. I am sure, if I asked, it would not be refused; yet there is something in me that makes it impossible. Lord B. and I are excellent friends; and were I reduced to poverty, or were I a writer who had no claim to a higher position than I possess, I would freely ask him any favor. Such is not now the case."

Shelley took his leave, after a visit of ten days' duration, about the 17th or 18th of April. In a letter, dated August 28, he mentions having secured for his lordship the Palazzo Lanfranchi, an old spacious building on the Lung' Arno, once the family residence of the destroyers of Ugolino, and still said to be haunted by their ghosts. Towards the close of October, he says they have been expecting him any day these six weeks. Byron, however, did not leave till the morning of the 29th. On his road, there occurred at Imola the accidental meeting with Lord Clare.^{*} Clare—who on this occasion merely crossed his friend's path on his way to Rome—at a later date came on purpose from Geneva before returning to England to visit the poet, who, then at Leghorn, recorded in a letter to Moore his sense of this proof of old affection undiminished. At Bologna—his next stage—he met Rogers by appointment, and the latter has preserved his memory of the event in well-known lines. Together they revisited Florence and its galleries, where they were distracted by the crowds of sight-seeing visitors. Byron must have reached Pisa not later than the 3d of November (1821) for his first letter from there bears the date of the 3d.

The later months of the poet's life at Ravenna were marked by intense literary activity. Over a great part of the year was spread the controversy with Bowles about Pope, &c., between the extremes of Art against Nature, and Nature against Art. It was a controversy for the most part free from personal animus, and on Byron's part the genuine expression of a reaction against a reaction. To this year belong the greater number of the poet's Historical Dramas.

The author, having shown himself capable of being pathetic, sarcastic, sentimental, comical, and sublime, we would be tempted to think that he had written these plays to show, what no one before suspected, that he could also be at times dull, were it not for his own exaggerated estimation of them. Lord Byron had few of the powers of a great dramatist; he had little architectural imagination, or capacity to conceive and build up a whole. His dramas are mainly masses of fine, splendid, or humorous writing, heaped together; the parts are seldom forged into one, or connected by any indissoluble link.

Byron's other Venetian drama, The Two Foscari (page 223), composed at Ravenna, between the 11th of June and the 10th of July, 1821, was published in the following December.

In the same volume appeared Sardanapalus (page 195), written in the previous May, and dedicated to Goethe. In this play, which marks the author's last reversion to the East, we are more arrested by the majesty of the theme—

"Thirteen hundred years
Of empire ending like a shepherd's tale"—

by the grandeur of some of the passages, and by the development of the chief character, made more vivid by its being distinctly autobiographical. Sardanapalus himself is Harold, raised "high on a throne," and rousing himself at the close from a life of effeminate lethargy. Myrrha has been often identified with La Guiccioli, and the hero's relation to his Queen Zarina compared with that of the poet to his wife. The domestic play of Werner (page 379), was completed at Pisa, in January, 1822, and published in November. Werner was Byron's sole success on the modern British stage.

The Deformed Transformed (page 241), suggested by a forgotten novel called The Three Brothers, with reminiscences of Fansh, and possibly of Scott's Black Dwarf, was begun at Pisa in 1821, but not published till January, 1824. This fragment owes its interest to the bitter infusion of personal feeling in the first scenes, and its occasional charm to the march of some of the lines, especially those describing the Bourbon's advance on Rome. The Deformed Transformed bears somewhat the same relation to Manfred, as Heaven and Earth (page 185)—an occasionally graphic dream of the world before the Deluge, written October, 1821, and issued about the same time as Moore's Loans of the Angels, on a similar theme—does to Cain. The last named, begun in July, and finished at Ravenna in September, is the author's highest contribution to the metaphysical poetry of the century. In Cain (page 255), Byron grapples with the perplexities of a belief which he never either accepted or rejected, and with the yet deeper problems of life and death, of good and ill. In dealing with these, his position is not that of one justifying the ways of God to man—though he somewhat disingenuously appeals to Milton in his defence—nor that of the definite antagonism of Queen Mab. The distinction in this respect between Byron and Shelley cannot be over-emphasized. The latter had a firm faith other than that commonly called Christian. The former was, in the proper sense of the word, a skeptic beset with doubts, and seeking for a solution which he never found, shifting in his expression of them with every change of a fickle and inconsistent temperament. The atmosphere of Cain is almost wholly negative; for under the guise of a drama, which is mainly a dialogue between two halves of his mind, the author appears to sweep aside with something approaching to disdain the answers of a blindly accepted tradition, or of a superficial optimism.

Cain, between which and the Comet lies the award of the greatest single performance in dramatic shape of our century, raised a storm. It was published, with Sardanapalus and The Two Foscari, in December, 1821, and the critics soon gave evidence of the truth of Elze's remark—"In England freedom of action is cramped by the want of freedom of thought. The converse is the case with us Germans; freedom of thought is restricted by the want of freedom in action. To us this skepticism presents nothing in the least fearful. But with us it appeared as if a literary Guy Fawkes had been detected in the act of blowing up half the cathedrals and all the chapels of the country. The rage of insular orthodoxy was in proportion to the

^{*} See foot-note, page 227, and portrait, under "Life of Byron." xlv

† See foot-note, page 427.

‡ See foot-note, page 225.

RAVENNA AND COUNTESS GUICCIOLI.

impotence. Every scribbler with a censor denounced the book and its author, though few attempted to answer him. The hubbub was such that Byron wrote to Murray, authorizing him to disclaim all responsibility, and offering to refund the payment he had received. "Say that both you and Mr. Gifford remonstrated. I will come to England to stand trial," and much to the same effect. It may be here stated that Byron had always the highest opinion of Gifford (see page 649) and in English Bards had handled him gently (see page 349). The book was pirated, and on the publisher's application to have an injunction, Lord Eldon refused to grant it. The majority of the minor reviews became hysterical, and Dr. Watkins, and much almost inarticulate raving, said that Sir Walter Scott, who had gratefully accepted the dedication, would go down to posterity with the brand of Don Juan upon his brow. Several omen of the higher critics took flight. Jeffrey, while protesting his appreciation of the literary merits of the work, lamented its tendency to unchristian faith. Mr. Campbell talked of its "frightful audacity." Bishop Heber wrote at great length to prove that its spirit was more dangerous than that of Paradise Lost—and succeeded. The Quarterly began to howl towards the author. Moore wrote him, that Don Juan was "wonderful, terrible, never to be forgotten," but "dreaded and deprecated" the influence of Shelley. Byron showed the letter to Shelley, who wrote ten common sense lines to assure Mr. Moore that he had not the slightest influence over his lordship in matters of religion, and only wished he had, as he would "employ it to eradicate from his great mind the delusions of infidelity, which seem perpetually to recur, and which almost rush for the hours of sickness and distress." Shelley elsewhere writes: "What think you of Lord B? just rejoice! In my opinion it contains finer poetry than has appeared in England since Paradise Lost. Don Juan is apocalyptic; it is a revelation not before communicated to man." In the same strain, Scott saw of the author of the "grand and tremendous drama." "He has certainly matched Milton on his own ground."

Byron, having, with or without design, arraigned some of the thirty-nine Articles of his countrymen, passed out in the following month (October, 1821) to confront an outrage, yet more keenly resented, on the assumption of their sainted king, the pattern of private virtue and public Vice, George III. The perpetration of this occurred in the course of the last of his numerous literary duels, of which it was the close. That Mr. Southey was a well-meaning and independent toady of license there can be no doubt. It does not require the emphatic testimony of the esteem of Savage Landor to corrupt our respect for the author of the Life of Nelson, and the open-handed friend of Coleridge; nor is it any disparagement that, with the last-named and with Wordsworth, he in middle life changed his politics and other opinions. But in his dealings with Lord Byron, Southey had "eaten of the insane root." He attacked a man of incomparably superior powers, he whom no other wanted of humor—save in its comparatively childish forms—made him ludicrously unequal match, and paid the penalty in being gibbeted to a satire that will endure with the language. The satire, which seems to have begun on Byron's leaving England, rose to its height when his lordship, in the numerous observations and serious defence of his character against "the Remains" in Blackwood, 1819 (August), accused the laureate of apostasy, treason, and crime (page 299).

In 1821, when the latter published his Vision of Judgment—the most quaintly preposterous panegyric ever penned—he prefixed to it a long explanatory note, in the course of which he characterizes Don Juan as a "monstrous combination of horror and mockery, lewdness and impiety," regrets that it has not been brought under the lash of the law, salutes the writer as chief of the Satanic school, inspired by the spirits of Moloch and Belial, and refers to the remorse that will overtake him on his death-bed. To which Byron, inter alia: "Mr. Southey, with a cowardly ferocity, vents over the anticipated death-bed repentance of the objects of his dislike, and indulges himself in a pleasant Vision of Judgment," in prose as well as verse, full of impious impudence. What Mr. Southey's sensations or cure may be in the awful moment of leaving this state of existence, neither he nor we can pretend to decide. In common, I presume, with most men of any reflection, I have not waited for a death-bed repent of many of my actions, notwithstanding the 'diabolical pride' which this pitiful renegade in his rancor would impute to those who scorn him." This dignified, though trenchant, rejoinder would have been unanswerable; but the writer goes on to charge the laureate with spreading calumnies. To this charge Southey, in January, 1822, replies with "a direct and positive denial," and then proceeds to talk at large of the "whip and branding-iron," "slaves of sensuality," "stones from slings," "Goliaths," "public panders," and what not, in the manner of the brave days of old.

Gifford.

From the original painting by W. H. Watts.

In February, Byron, having seen this assault in the Courier, writes off in needless heat, "I have got Southey's pretended reply; what remains to be done is to call him out"—and despatches a cartel of mortal defiance. Mr. Douglas Kinnaird, through whom this was sent, judiciously suppressed it, and the author's thirst for literary blood was destined to remain unquenched. Meanwhile he had written his own Vision of Judgment (page 404). This extraordinary work, having been refused by both Murray and Longman, appeared in 1823 in the pages of the Liberal. It passed the bounds of British endurance; and the publisher, Mr. John Hunt, was prosecuted and fined for the publication.

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

Readers of our day will generally admit that the "gouty hexameters" of the original poem, which celebrate the apothecists of King George in heaven, are much more blasphemous than the ottava rima of the travesty, which professes to narrate the difficulties of his getting there. Byron's Vision of Judgment is as unmistakably the first of parodies as the Blind is the first of epics, or the Pilgrim's Progress the first of allegories. In execution it is almost perfect. Don Juan is in scope and magnitude a far wider work; but no considerable series of stanzas in Don Juan are so free from serious artistic flaw. From first to last, every epithet hits the white; every line that does not convulse with laughter stings or lacerates. It rises to greatness by the fact that, underneath all its lambent buffoonery, it is aflame with righteous wrath. Nowhere in such space, save in some of the prose of Swift, is there in English so much scathing satire.

CHAPTER IX.

PISA—GENOA—THE LIBERAL—DON JUAN.

[1821-1823.]

BYRON, having arrived at Pisa with his troop of carriages, horses, dogs, fowls, monkeys, and servants, settled himself quietly in the Palazzo Lanfranchi for two months, interrupted only by a sojourn of six weeks in the neighborhood of Leghorn. His life in the old feudal building followed in the main the tenor of his life at Ravenna. He rose late, received visitors in the afternoon, played billiards, rode or practised with his pistols in concert with Shelley, whom he refers to at this time as "the most companionable man under thirty" he had ever met. Both poets were good shots, but Byron the safest; for, though his hand often shook, he made allowance for the vibration, and never missed his mark. On one occasion he set up a slender cane, and at twenty paces divided it with his bullet. The early part of the evening he gave to a frugal meal and the society of La Guiccioli—now apparently, in defiance of the statute of limitations, established under the same roof—and then sat late over his verse. He was disposed to be more sociable than at Venice or Ravenna, and occasionally entertained strangers; but his intimate acquaintanceship was confined to Captain Williams and his wife, and Shelley's cousin, Captain Medwin.* The latter used frequently to dine and sit with his host till the morning, collecting materials for the Conversations which he afterwards gave to the world. The value of these reminiscences is impaired by the fact of their recording, as serious revelations, the absurd confidences in which the poet's humor for mystification was wont to indulge. Another of the group, an Irishman, called Taaffe, is made, in his lordship's correspondence of the period, to cut a somewhat comical figure. The master-passion of this worthy and genial fellow was to get a publisher for a fair commentary on Dante, to which he had firmly linked a very bad translation, and for about six months Byron pestered Murray with constant appeals to satisfy him; e.g., November 16, "He must be gratified, though the reviewers will make him suffer more tortures than there are in his original." March 6, "He will die if he is not published; he will be damned if he is; but that he don't mind." March 8, "I make it a point that he shall be in print; it will make the man so exuberantly happy. He is such a good-natured Christian that we must give him a shove through the press. Besides, he has had another fall from his horse into a ditch." Taaffe, whose horsemanship was on a par with his poetry, can hardly have been consulted as to the form assumed by these apparently fruitless recommendations, so characteristic of the writer's frequent kindness and constant love of mischief. About this time Byron received a letter from Mr. Shepherd, a gentleman in Somersetshire, referring to the death of his wife, among whose papers he had found the record of a touching, because evidently heartfelt, prayer for the poet's reformation, conversion, and restored peace of mind. To this letter he at once returned an answer, marked by much of the fine feeling of his best mood. Pisa, December 8: "Sir: I have received your letter. I need not say that the extract which it contains has affected me, because it would imply a want of all feeling to have read it with indifference. . . . Your brief and simple picture of the excellent person, whom I trust you will again meet, cannot be contemplated without the admiration due to her virtues and her pure and unpretending piety. I do not know that I ever met with anything so unostentatiously beautiful. Indubitably, the firm believers in the Gospel have a great advantage over all others—for this simple reason, that if true they will have their reward hereafter; and if there be no hereafter, they can but be with the infidel in his eternal sleep. . . . But a man's creed does not depend upon himself: who can say, I will believe this, that, or the other? and least of all that which he least can comprehend. . . . I can assure you that not all the fame which ever cheated humanity into higher notions of its own importance would ever weigh in my mind against the pure and pious interest which a virtuous being may be pleased to take in my behalf. In this point of view I would not exchange the prayer of the deceased in my behalf for the united glory of Homer, Cæsar, and Napoleon."

The letter to Lady Byron, which he afterwards showed to Lady Blessington, must have been borne about the same date; and we have a further indication of his thoughts reverting homeward in an urgent request to Murray—written on December 10th, Ada's sixth birthday—to send his daughter's miniature. After its arrival nothing gave him greater pleasure than to be told of its strong likeness to himself. In the course of the same month an event occurred which strangely illustrates the manners of the place and the character of the two poets. An unfortunate fiasco having taken it into his head to steal the wafer-board out of a church at Lucca, and being detected, was, in accordance with the ecclesiastical law till lately maintained against sacrilege, condemned to be burnt alive. Shelley, who believed that the sentence would really be carried into effect, proposed to Byron that they should gallop off together, and by aid of their servants rescue by force the intended victim. Byron, however, preferred, in the first place, to rely on diplomacy; some vigorous letters passed; ultimately a representation conveyed by Taaffe to the English ambassador, led to a commutation of the sentence, and the man was sent to the galleys.

The January of 1823 was marked by the addition of the small circle of Captain E. J. Trelawny, the famous rover and bold free-lance (now sole survivor of the remarkable group), who accompanied Lord Byron to Greece, and has recorded a variety of incidents of the last months of his life. Trelawny, who appreciated Shelley with an intensity that is often apt to be envious, saw, or has reported, for the most part, the weakside of Byron. We are constrained to accept as correct the conjecture that his judgment was biased by their rivalry in physical prowess, and the political differences which afterwards developed between them. Letters to his old correspondents—to Scott about the Waverley, to Murray about the Dramas, and the Vision of Judgment, and Cain—make up almost the sole record of the poet's pursuits during the five following months. On February 6 he sent, through Mr. Kinnaid, the challenge to Southey, of the suppression of which he was not aware till May 17. The same letter contains a shaft of the random cynicism, as—"Oash is virtue," "Money is power; and when Socrates said he knew nothing, he meant he had not a drachma"—by which he sharpened the shafts of his assailants. A little later, on the occasion of the death of Lady Noel, he expresses himself with natural bitterness on hearing that she had in her will recorded a wish against his daughter Ada seeing his portrait. In March he sat, along with La Guiccioli, to the sculptor Bartolini. On the 24th, when the company were on one of their riding excursions outside the town, a half-drunken dragoon on horseback broke through them, and by accident or design knocked Shelley from his seat. Byron, pursuing him along the Lung' Arno, called for his name, and, taking him for an officer, flung his glove. The sound of the fray brought the servants of the Lanfranchi to the door; and one of them, it was presumed—though in the scuffle everything remained uncertain—seriously wounded the dragoon in the side. An investigation ensued, as the result of which the Gambas were ultimately exiled from Tuscany, and the party of friends was practically broken up. Shelley and his wife, with the Williamses and Trelawny, soon after settled at the Villa Magni at Lerici, in the Gulf of Spezia. Byron, with the Countess and her brother, established themselves in the Villa Rosa, at Monte Nero, a suburb of Leghorn, from which port at this date the remains of Allegra were conveyed to England.

* See Appendix, Note 62, page 648.

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

Among the incidents of this residence were the homage paid to the poet by a party of Americans; the painting of his portrait and that of La Guiccioli by their compatriot, West, who has left a pleasing account of his visits; Byron's letter making inquiry about the country of Bolivar (where it was his fancy to settle); and another of those disturbances by which he seemed destined to be harassed. One of his servants—among whom were unruly spirits, apparently selected with a kind of Corseir bravado—had made an assault on Count Pietro, wounding him in the face. This outbreak, though followed by tears and penitence, confirmed the impression of the Tuscan police that the whole company were dangerous, and made the government press for their departure. In the midst of the uproar, there suddenly appeared at the villa Mr. Leigh Hunt, with his wife and six children. They had taken passage to Genoa, where they were received by Trelawny, in command of the "Bollivar"—a yacht constructed in that port for Lord Byron, simultaneously with the "Don Juan" for Shelley. The latter, on hearing of the arrival of his friends, came to meet them at Leghorn, and went with them to Pisa. Early in July they were all established on the Lung' Arno, having assigned to them the ground-floor of the palazzo.

We have now to deal briefly—amid conflicting asseverations it is hard to deal fairly—with the last of the vexatiously controverted episodes which need perplex our narrative. Byron, in wishing Moore from Ravenna a merry Christmas for 1820, proposes that they shall embark together in a newspaper, "with some improvement on the plan of the present scoundrels," "to give the age some new lights on policy, poesy, biography, criticism, morality, theology," etc. Moore absolutely refusing to entertain the idea, Hunt's name was brought forward in connection with it, during the visit of Shelley. Shortly after the return of the latter to Pisa, he writes (August 26) to Hunt, stating that Byron was anxious to start a periodical work, to be conducted in Italy, and had proposed that they should both go shares in the concern, on which follow some suggestions of difficulties about money. Nevertheless, in August, 1821, he presses Hunt to come. Moore, on the other hand, strongly remonstrates against the project. "I heard some days ago that Leigh Hunt was on his way to you with all his family; and the idea seems to be that you and he and Shelley are to conspire together in the Examiner. I deprecate such a plan with all my might. Partnerships in fame, like those in trade, make the strongest party answer for the rest. I tremble even for you with such a bankrupt Co.1 You must stand alone." Shelley—who had in the meantime given his bond to Byron for an advance of one thousand dollars towards the expenses of his friends, besides assisting them himself to the utmost of his power—began, shortly before their arrival, to express grave doubts as to the success of the alliance. His last published letter, written July 5, 1822, after they had settled at Pisa, is full of forebodings. On the 8th he set sail in the "Don Juan"—

Mr. Murray.

From a portrait by H. W. Pickersill, R. A.

"That fatal and perfidious bark, Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark," and was overtaken by the storm in which he perished. Three days after, Trelawny rode to Pisa, and told Byron of his fears, when the poet's lip quivered, and his voice faltered. On the 22d of July the bodies of Shelley, Williams, and Vivian were cast ashore. On the 16th August, Hunt, Byron, and Trelawny were present at the terribly weird cremation, which they have all described, and after which they were seized with a fit of the hilarious delirium which is one of the phases of the tension of grief. Byron's references to the event are expressions less of the loss which he indubitably felt, than of his indignation at the "world's wrong." "Thus," he writes, "there is another man gone, about whom the world was ill-naturedly and ignorantly and brutally mistaken. It will, perhaps, do him justice now, when he can be no better for it." Towards the end of the same letter the spirit of his dead friend seems to inspire the sentence—"With these things and these fellows it is necessary, in the present clash of philosophy and tyranny, to throw away the scabbard. I know it is against fearful odds, but the battle must be fought."

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

Meanwhile, shortly after the new settlement at the Lanfranchi, the preparations for issuing the Liberal—edited by Leigh Hunt in Italy, and published by John Hunt in London—progressed. The first number, which appeared in September, was introduced, after a few words of preface, by the Vision of Judgment, with the signature, Querebo Rediviva, and adorned by Shelley's translation of the "May-Day Night" in Faust. It contained, besides, the Letter to the Editor of my Grandmother's Review, an indifferent Florentine story, a German apologetic, and a gossiping account of Pisa, presumably by Hunt. Three others followed, containing Byron's Heaven and Earth (page 185), his translation of the Morganio Maggiore (page 386), and The Broom (page 400)—a satire on literary ladies; some of Shelley's posthumous minor poems, among them "I arise from dreams of thee," and a few of Hazlitt's essays, including, however, none of his best. Leigh Hunt himself wrote most of the rest, one of his contributions being a palpable imitation of Don Juan, entitled the Book of Beginnings; but he confesses that, owing to his weak health and low spirits at the time, none of these did justice to his ability; and the general manner of the magazine being insufficiently vigorous to carry off the frequent eccentricity of its matter, the prejudices against it prevailed, and the enterprise came to an end. Partners in falling concerns are apt to dispute; in this instance the unpleasantness which arose at the time rankled in the mind of the survivor, and gave rise to his singularly tasteless and injudicious book—a performance which can be only in part condoned by the fact of Hunt's afterwards expressing regret, and practically withdrawing it. He represents himself throughout as a much-injured man, lured to Italy by misrepresentations that he might give the aid of his journalistic experience and undeniable talents to the advancement of a mercenary enterprise, and that when it failed he was despised, insulted, and rejected. Byron, on the other hand, declares, "The Hunts pressed me to engage in this work, and in an evil hour I consented;" and his subsequent action in the matter—if not always gentle, never unjust—goes to verify his statements in the letters of the period. "I am afraid," he writes from Genoa, October 9, 1839, "the journal is a bad business. I have done all I can for Leigh Hunt since he came here; but it is almost useless. His wife is ill, his six children not very tractable, and in the affairs of this world he himself is a child." Later he says to Murray, "You and your friends, by your injudicious rudeness, cement a connection which you strove to prevent, and which, had the Hunts prospered, would not in all probability have continued. As it is . . . I can't leave them among the breakers." On February 20 we have his last word on the subject, to the same effect.

In the following sentences Moore seems to give a fair statement of the motives which led to the establishment of the unfortunate journal: "The chief influences on the part of Lord Byron to this unworthy alliance were, in the first place, a wish to second the kind views of his friend Shelley in inviting Mr. Hunt to Italy; and in the next, a desire to avail himself of the aid of one so experienced as an editor in the favorite object he has so long contemplated of a periodical work in which all the offspring of his genius might be received as they sprung to light." For the accomplishment of this purpose, Mr. Leigh Hunt was a singularly ill-chosen associate. A man of radical opinions on all matters, not only of religion but of society—opinions which he acquired and held easily but firmly—could never recognize the propriety of the claim to deference which "the noble poet" was always too eager to assert, and was inclined to take liberties which his patron perhaps superciliously repelled. Mrs. Hunt does not seem to have been a very judicious person. "Trelawny here," said Byron, jocularly, "has been speaking against my morals." "It is the first time I ever heard of them," she replied. Mr. Hunt, by his own admission, had "peculiar notions on the subject of money." Byron, on his part, was determined not to be "put upon," and doled out through his steward stated allowances to Hunt, who says that only "stern necessity and a large family" induced him to accept them. Hunt's expression that the $1000 was, in the first instance, a debt to Shelley, points to the conclusion that it was remitted on that poet's death. Besides this, Byron maintained the family till they left Genoa for Florence, in 1833, and defrayed up to that date all their expenses. He gave his contributions to the Liberal gratis; and, again by Hunt's own confession, lent to him and his brother the profits of the proprietorship. According to Mr. Galt, "The whole extent of the pecuniary obligation appears not to have exceeded £500; but, little or great, the manner in which it was recollected reflects no credit either on the head or heart of the debtor."

Of the weaknesses on which the writer—bent on verifying Pope's lines on Aloosa—from his vantage in the ground-floor, was enabled to dilate, many are but slightly magnified. We are told, for instance, in very many words, that Byron clung to the privileges of his rank while wishing to seem above them; that he had a small library, and was a one-sided critic; that Byron and Gibbon supplied him with the learning he had learnt at school; that, being a good rider with a graceful seat, he liked to be told of it; that he showed letters he ought not to have shown; that he pretended to think worse of Wordsworth than he did; that he knew Beethoven of art or music, adored Rossini, and called Rubens a dauber; that, though he wrote Don Juan under gins and water, he had not a strong head, etc. It may be true, but not new. But when Hunt proceeds to say that Byron had no sentiment; that La Guiccioli did not really care much about him; that he admired Clifford because he was a sycophant, and Scott because he loved a lord; that he had no heart for anything except a feverish notoriety; that he was a miser from his birth, and had "as little regard for liberty as Alfred!" it is new enough, but it is manifestly not true. Hunt's book, which begins with a caricature on the frontispiece, and is inspired in the main by unbecoming tableness, yet contains here and there gleams of deeper insight than we find in all the volumes of Moore—an insight which, in spite of his irritating egotism, is the mark of a man with the instincts of a poet, with some cosmopolitan sympathies, and a courage on occasion to avow them at any risk. "I, Byron," he says truly, "has been too much admired by the English because he was sulky and wilful, and reflected in his own person their love of dictation and excitement. They owe his memory a greater respect."

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

and would do it much greater honor if they admired him for letting them know they were not so perfect a nation as they supposed themselves, and that they might take as well as give lessons of humanity, by a candid comparison of notes with civilization at large."

In July, when at Leghorn, the Gambas received orders to leave Tuscany, and on his return to Pisa, Byron, being persecuted by the police, began to prepare for another change. After entertaining projects about Greece, America, and Switzerland—Irelandy undertaking to have the "Bolivar" conveyed over the Alps to the Lake of Geneva—he decided on following his friends to Genoa. He left in September with La Graciosa, passed by Lerici and Sestri, and then for the ten remaining months of his Italian life took up his quarters at Albano, about a mile to the east of the city, in the Villa Calizzano, which Mrs. Shelley had procured for him and his party. She herself settled with the Hunts—who travelled about the same time, at Byron's expense, but in their own company—in the neighborhood of the Negrotto. Not far off, Mr. Savage Landor was in possession of the Casa Pallavicini, but there was little intercourse between the three. Landor and Byron, in many respects more akin than any other two Englishmen of their age, were always separated by an odious bar or intervening mist. The only family with whom the poet maintained any degree of intimacy was that of the Earl of Blessington, consisting of the Earl himself—a worthy old gentleman, with some about him of the past—the Countess, and her son, Viscount Power, and the "cupidon déchainé," the Anglo-French Count Alfred d'Orsay—who were to take part in the future. In the spring of 1819, Byron persuaded them to occupy the Villa Paradiso, and was accustomed to accompany them frequently on horseback excursions along the coast to Portofino and Nervi. It has been said that Lady Blessington's conversations with Lord Byron are, as regards the poet's mind, on a par with Landor's imaginary conversations. But this being, they are still of interest as a fact which it must have been easier to understand than to imagine. However adorned, or the more so, by the fancies of a habituated novelist, they remain the impressions of a good-humored, lively, and friendly woman, derived from a more or less intimate association with the most brilliant man of the age. Of his personal appearance—a matter of which we have a good judge—we have the following: "One of Byron's eyes was larger than the other; his nose was rather thick, so he was best seen in profile; his countenance was splendid, and his scornful expression was not affected; but a sweet smile often broke through his melancholy. He was at this time very pale and thin (which indicates the success of his regimen of reduction since leaving Venice). His hair was cut almost here and there turning gray. His voice was harmonious, clear, and low. There is some gaucherie in his walk from his attempts to conceal his breeches. Ada's portrait is like him, and he is pleased at the likeness, but hoped she would not turn out to be clever—at any event not poetical. He is fond of gossip, and apt to speak slightly of some of his books, but is loyal to others. His great defect is egotism, and a total want of self-possession." The traveler also dwells on his horror of interviewers, by whom at this time he was even more than usually harassed. One visitor of the period ingeniously observes: "Certain persons will be charged to hear that Byron's mode of life does not furnish the smallest food for poetry." Another says, "I never saw a countenance more composed and still—I might even add, more serene and prepossessing. But his temper was easily ruffled, and for a whole day, he could not endure the ringing of bells, bribed his neighbors to repress their noises, and finally, exasperated by surpassing them; he never forgave Colonel Carr for breaking one of his dog's ribs, though he generally forgave injuries without forgetting them. He had a bad opinion of the inertness of the Genoese, for whatever he himself did he did with a will—"toto se corpore misceat," and was wont to assume a sort of diastolic tone—as if 'I have said it, and it must be so,' were enough."

From these waifs and strays of gossip we return to a subject of deeper interest. The Countess of Blessington, with natural curiosity, was anxious to elicit from Byron some light on the mystery of his domestic affairs, and renewed the attempt previously made by Madame de Staël, to induce him to some movement towards a reconciliation with his wife. His reply to this overture was to show her a letter which he had written to Lady Byron from Pisa, but never forwarded, of the tone of which the following extracts must be a sufficient indication: "I have to acknowledge the receipt of Ada's hair. . . I also thank you for the inscription of the date and name; and I will tell you why. I believe they are the only two or three words of your handwriting in my possession, for your letters

Lord Byron.

From the original portrait by Harlowe, 1817.

I returned, and except the two words—or rather the one word 'household' written twice—in an old account-book, I have no other. Every day which keeps us asunder should, after so long a period, rather soften our mutual feelings, which must always have one rallying-point as long as our child exists. We both made a bitter mistake, but now it is over. I considered our reunion as not impossible for more than a year after the separation, but then I gave up the hope. I am violent, but not malignant; for only fresh provocations can awaken my resentment. Remember that if you have injured me in aught, this forgiveness is something, and that if I have injured you, it is something more still. If it be true, as moralists assert, that the most offending are the least forgiving." "It is a strange business," says the Countess, about Lady Byron. "When he was praising her mental and personal qualifications, I asked him how all that he now said agreed with certain sarcasms supposed to be a reference to her in his works. He smiled, shook his head, and said they were meant to spite and vex her, when he was wounded and irritated at her refusing to receive or answer his letters; that he was sorry he had written them, but might on similar provocations recur to the same vengeance." On another occasion he said, "Lady B.'s first idea is what is due to herself. I wish she thought a little more of what is due to others. My besetting sin is a want of that self-respect which she has in excess. When I have broken out, on slight provocation, into one of my ungovernable fits of rage, her calmness piqued and seemed to reproach me; it gave her an air of superiority that vexed and increased my ressources humeurs." To Lady Blessington, as to every one, he always spoke of his sister Mrs. Leigh with the same unwavering admiration, love, and respect.

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

"My first impressions were melancholy—my poor mother gave them; but to my sister, who, incapable of wrong herself, suspected no wrong in others, I owe the little good of which I can boast; and had I earlier known her it might have influenced my destiny. Augusta was to me in the hour of need a tower of strength. Her affection was my last rallying-point, and is now the only bright spot that the horizon of England offers to my view. She has given me such good advice—and yet, finding me incapable of following it, loved and pitied me but the more because I was erring." Similarly, in the height of his spleen, writes Leigh Hunt—"I believe there did exist one person to whom he would have been generous, if she pleased: perhaps was so. At all events, he left her the bulk of his property, and always spoke of her with the greatest esteem. This was his sister, Mrs. Leigh. He told me she used to call him 'Baby Byron.' It was easy to see that of the two persons she had by far the greater judgment."

Byron, having laid aside Don Juan for more than a year, in deference to La Guiccioli, was permitted to resume it again in July, 1823, on a promise to observe the proprieties. Cantos vi.-xi. were written at Pisa. Cantos xii.-xvi. at Genoa, in 1823. These latter portions of the poem were published by John Hunt. His other works of the period are of minor consequence. The Age of Bronze (page 412) is a declamation, rather than a satire, directed against the Convention of Cintra and the Congress of Verona, especially Lord Londonderry's part in the latter, only remarkable, from its advice to the Greeks, to dread

"The false friend worse than the infuriate foe;"

i. e., to prefer the claw of the Tartar savage to the paternal hug of the great Bear—

"Better still toll for masters, than await
The slave of slaves, before a Russian gate."

In the Island (page 180)—a tale of the mutiny of the "Bounty"—he reverts to the manner and theme of his old romances, finding a new scene in the Pacific for the exercise of his fancy. In this piece his love of nautical adventure reappears, and his idealization of primitive life, caught from Rousseau and Chateaubriand. There is more repose about this poem than in any of the author's other compositions. In its pages the sea seems to plash about rocks and caves that bask under a southern sun. "Byron, the surfer, he can do with me what he will," said old Dr. Parr, on reading it. As the swan-song of the poet's sentimental verse, it has a pleasing if not pathetic calm. During the last years in Italy he planned an epic on the Conquest and a play on the subject of Hannibal, neither of which was executed.

In the criticism of a famous work there is often little left to do but to criticize the critics—to bring to a focus the most salient things that have been said about it, to eliminate the absurd from the sensible, the discriminating from the commonplace. Don Juan, more than any of its precursors, is Byron, and it has been similarly handled. The early cantos were ushered into the world amid a chorus of mingled applause and execration. The minor Reviews, representing middle-class respectability, were generally vituperative, and the higher authorities divided in their judgments. The British Magazine said that "his lordship had degraded his personal character by the composition;" the London, that the poem was "a satire on decency;" the Edinburgh Monthly, that it was "a melancholy spectacle;" the Edinboro, that it was "an outrage worthy of detestation." Blackwood declared that the author was "brutally outraging all the best feelings of humanity." Moore characterizes it as "the most painful display of the versatility of genius that has ever been left for succeeding ages to wonder at or deplore." Jeffrey found in the whole composition "a tendency to destroy all belief in the reality of virtue;" and Dr. John Watkins classically named it "the Odyssey of Immorality." "Don Juan will be read," wrote one critic, "as long as satire, wit, mirth, and supreme excellence shall be esteemed among men." "Stick to Don Juan," exhorted another; "it is the only sincere thing you have written, and it will live after all your Harolds have ceased to be 'a school-girl's tale, the wonder of an hour.' It is the best of all your works—the most spirited, the most straightforward, the most interesting, the most poetical." "It is a work," said Goethe, "full of soul, bitterly savage in its misanthropy, exquisitely delicate in its tenderness." Shelley confessed, "it fulfils in a certain degree what I have long preached, the task of producing something wholly new and relative to the age, and yet surpassingly beautiful." And Sir Walter Scott, in the midst of a hearty panegyric, "It has the variety of Shakespeare himself. Neither Childe Harold, nor the most beautiful of Byron's earlier tales, contain more exquisite poetry than is to be found scattered through the cantos of Don Juan, amid verses which the author seems to have thrown from him with an effort as spontaneous as that of a tree resigning its leaves."

One noticeable feature about these comments is their sincerity: reviewing, however occasionally considered, had not then sunk to be the mere regalia of adverse or friendly cliques; and, with all his society for its verdict, Byron never solicited the favor of any portion of the press. Another is the fact that the adverse critics missed their mark. They had not learned to say of a book of which they disapproved, that it was weak or dull: in pronouncing it to be vicious, they helped to promote its sale; and the most devoted have been the most widely read of the author's works. Many of the readers of Don Juan have, it must be confessed, been found among those least likely to admire in it what is most admirable—who have been attracted by the very excess of buffoonery, violations of good taste, and occasionally almost vulgar slang, which disfigure its pages. Their patronage is, at the best, of no more value than that of a mob gathered by a showy Shakespearean revival. But the welcome of the work in other quarters is as indubitably due to higher qualities. In writing Don Juan, Byron attempted something that had never been done before, and his genius so chimed with his enterprise that it need never be done again. "Down," cries M. Chateaubriand, "with the imitators who did their best to make his name ridiculous." In commenting on their failure, an excellent critic has explained the preëstablished fitness of the ottava rima—the first six lines of which are a dance, and the concluding couplet a "breakdown"—for the mock-heroic. Byron's choice of this measure may have been suggested by Whistlercraft; but he had studied its cadence in Pulci, and the Novelle Gialle of Casti, to whom he is indebted for other features of his satire; and he added to what has been well termed so characteristic Japanese, by his almost constant use of the double rhyme. That the ottava rima is out of place in consistently pathetic poetry, may be seen from the obvious misuse in Kantô's Pot of Dural. Many writers, from Frère to Modigliani, have employed it successfully in burlesque or mere society verse; but Byron alone has employed it triumphantly, for he has made it the vehicle of thoughts grave as well as gay, of "black spirits and white, red spirits and gray," of sparkling fancy, bitter sarcasm, and tender memories. He has swept into the pages of his poem the experience of thirty years of a life so crowded with vitality that our sense of the plethora of power which it exhibits makes us ready to condone its lapses. Byron, by having said, balances himself on a ladder like other poets; but alone, like the Japanese master of the art, he set the white bars on his shoulders the weight of a man. Much of Don Juan is as obnoxious to criticism in detail as his earlier work; it has every mark of being written in hot haste. In the midst of the most careless passages (for instance, the "Ave Maria") we are checked by our course by bathos or common-place; and though when the writer did not mean to "cheat" us; but the mocking spirit is so prevaillingly present, that we are often left in doubt as to his design, and even in Don Juan an outrage is in this case only a jest. He oscillates over the verge itself is almost inevitable: he slides from extreme to extreme, from the sublime to the vulgar, from melancholy to mad merriment, from laughing by the way at his readers or at himself to the stanzas. Into them he can fling any subject he chooses, from a doctor's prescription to a

PISA; GENOA; THE LIBERAL; DON JUAN.

When Bishop Berkeley said there was no matter, I said, "I was no matter what he said,"

A critique of idealism as the ambiguous social mechanism.

which makes it rank as the clearest of the great oppositions, to its shoals of witticisms, puns, telling phrases, and incomparable turns, is the fact that it continues to address itself to those who are not in the ordinary sense of the word, poets. Don Juan is emphatically the poem of middle age, who have grown out of their sentiment, and yet retain enough of

...to desire at times to recall it.
...the Plato's Glances with the
...to appeals to the spirit that
...the dry dust and which they move;

...intervals can they accompany the pure
...he would never be old," and they
...impatience even from Romeo
...and Macbeth. To them, on the ...hard Wid of Hudders is equally dre-

Byron was not, in the highest sense, a poet; but he does not blend together

They are blended in single sentences
 Burns, in the April sunshine of morning: but he comes near to by his unequalled power of is seldom hard, never dry.

the constant juxtaposition of the most genuine
—away—an equally
—he could not trust
—secondary sentimental ;

—exhibitions of un-
—confession—

"If I laugh at any mortal thing,
'T is that I may not weep"—

as a perfectly sincere comment on the most sincere, and therefore in many respects the most effective, of his works. He has, after his way, endeavored in grave prose and light verse to defend it against its assailants, saying, "In Don Juan I take a vicious and unprincipled character, and lead him through those ranks of society whose accomplishments cover and cloak their vices, and paint the natural effects;" and elsewhere, that he means to make his scamp "and as a member of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, or by the guillotine, or in an unhappy marriage." It were easy to dilate on the fact that in interpreting the phrases of the artist into the language of the moralist we often require to read them backwards: Byron's own statement, "I hate a motive," is, however, more to the point. Don Juan can only be credited with a text in the sense in which every large experience, of its own accord, conveys its lesson. It was to the author a picture of the world as he saw it; and it is to us a mirror in which every attribute of his genius, every peculiarity of his nature, is reflected without distortion. After the audacious though brilliant opening, and the unfortunately pungent reference to the poet's domestic affairs (pages 460, 481, 493) we find in the famous storm (page 478) a bewildering epitome of his prevailing manner. Home-sickness, sea-sickness, the terror of the tempest, "wailing, blasphemy, devotion," the crash of the wreck, the wild farewell, "the bubbling cry of some strong swimmer in his agony," the horrors of famine, the tale of the two fathers, the beautiful apparitions of the rainbow and the bird, the feast on Juan's spamb, his reluctance to dine on "his pastor and his meter," the consequences of eating Pedrillo—all follow each other like visions in the phantasmagoria of a nightmare, till at last the remnant of the crew are drowned by a ridiculous rhyme—

"Finding no place for their landing better,
They ran the boat ashore, and overset her."

Then comes the episode of Haidee, "a long low island song of ancient days," the character of the girl herself being like a thread of pure gold running through the fabric of its surroundings, motley in every page; after the impassioned close of the "Isles of Greece" (page 495), we have the stanza:

"Thou sang, or would, or could, or should, have sung,
The modern Greek, in tolerable verse;
If not like Orpheus quite, when Greece was young.
Yet in those days he might have done much worse—" with which the author dashes away the romance of the song, and then launches into a tirade against Bob Boublye's epic and Wordsworth's pedlar poems. The vein exhausted, we come to the "Ave Maria," one of the most musical, and seemingly heartfelt, hymns in the language. The close of the ocean pastoral (in Canto IV.) is the last of pathetic narrative in the book; but the same feeling that "mourns o'er the beauty of the Cyrcleas" often re-emerges in shorter passages. The fifth and sixth cantos, in spite of the glittering sketch of Gulbeyaz, and the fawn-like image of Dudd, are open to the charge of diffuseness, and the character of Johnson is a failure. From the seventh to the tenth, the poem decidedly dips, partly because the writer had never been in Russia; then it again rises, and shows no sign of falling off to the end.

No part of the work has more suggestive interest or varied power than some of the later cantos, in which Juan is whirled through the vortex of the fashionable life which Byron knew so well, loved so much, and at last esteemed so little. There is no richer piece of descriptive writing in his works than that of Newstead,* nor is there any analysis of female character so subtle as that of the Lady Adeline. Conjectures as to the originals of imaginary portraits are generally futile, but Miss Milford—not Donna Inez—is obviously Lady Byron; in Adeline we may suspect that at Genoa he was drawing from the life in the Villa Paradiso; while Aurora Baby seems to be an idealization of La Guiccioli. Constantly, towards the close of the work, there is an echo of home and country, a half-involuntary cry after

POLITICS; EXPEDITION TO GREECE; DEATH.

"The love of higher things and better days;
Th' unbounded hope, and heavenly ignorance
Of what is call'd the world and the world's ways."

In the concluding stanzas of the last completed canto, beginning—

"Between two worlds life hovers like a star, Twixt night and morn, on the horizon's verge"—

we have a condensation of the refrain of the poet's philosophy; but the main drift of the later books is a satire on London society. There are elements in a great city which may be wrought into something nobler than satire, for all the energies of the age are concentrated where passion is fiercest and thought intensest, amid the myriad sights and sounds of its glare and gloom. But those scenes, and the actors in them, are apt also to induce the frame of mind in which a prose satirist describes himself as reclining under an arcade of the Pantheon: "Not the Pantheon by the Piazza Navona, where the immortal gods were worshipped—the immortal gods now dead; but the Pantheon in Oxford Street. Have not Selwyn, and Walpole, and March, and Carlisle figured there? Has not Prince Florizel flounced through the hall in his rustling domino, and danced there in powdered splendor? O my companions, I have drunk many a bout with you, and always found 'Vanitas Vanitatum' written on the bottom of the pot." This is the mood in which Don Juan interprets the universe, and paints the still living court of Florizel and his buffoons. A "nondescript and ever varying rhyme"—"a versified aurora borealis," half cynical, half Epicurean, it takes a partial, though a subtle view of that microcosm on stilts called the great world. It complains that in the days of old, "men made the manners—manners now make men." It was the natural conclusion of the foregone stage of Byron's career. Years had given him power, but they were years in which his energies were largely wasted. Self-indulgence had not petrified his feeling, but it had thrown wormwood into its springs. He had learnt to look on existence as a walking shadow, and was strong only with the strength of a sincere despair.

"Through life's road, so dim and dirty,
I have dragg'd to three and thirty.
What have those years left to me?
Nothing, except thirty-three."

These lines are the summary of one who had drained the draught of pleasure to the dregs of bitterness.

CHAPTER X.

POLITICS—THE CARBONARI—EXPEDITION TO GREECE—DEATH. [1821—1824.]

IN leaving Venice for Ravenna, Byron passed from the society of gondollers and successive suitesses to a comparatively domestic life, with a mistress who at least endeavored to stimulate some of his higher aspirations, and smiled upon his wearing the sword along with the lyre. In the last episode of his constantly checkered and too voluptuous career, we have the waking of Bardanaphus realized in the transmutation of the fantastical Childe Harold into a practical strategist, financier, and soldier. No one ever lived who in the same space more thoroughly ran the gamut of existence. Having exhausted all other sources of vitality and intoxication—travel, gallantry, and verse—it remained for the despairing poet to become a hero. But he was also moved by a public passion, the generalness of which there is no reasonable ground to doubt. Like Alfieri and Rousseau, he had taken for his motto, "I am of the opposition;" and, as Dante under a republic called for a monarchy, Byron, under monarchies at home and abroad, called for a commonwealth. Amid the inconsistencies of his political sentiment, he had been consistent in so much love of liberty as led him to denounce oppression, even when he had no great faith in the oppressed—whether English, or Italians, or Greeks.

Byron regarded the established dynasties of the continent with a sincere hatred. He talks of the "more than infernal tyranny" of the House of Austria. To his fancy, as to Shelley's, New England is the star of the future. Attracted by a strength or rather force of character akin to his own, he worshipped Napoleon, even when driven to confess that "the hero had sunk into a king." He lamented his overthrow; but, above all, that he was beaten by "three stupid, legitimate old dynasty boobies of regular sovereigns." "I write in ipocuanha that the Bourbons are restored." "What right have we to prescribe laws to France? Here we are retrograding to the dull, stupid old system, balance of Europe—poising straw on kings' noses, instead of wringing them off." "The king-times are fast finishing. There will be blood shed like water, and tears like mist; but the peoples will conquer in the end. I shall not live to see it, but I foresee it." "Give me a republic. Look in the history of the earth—Rome, Greece, Venice, Holland, France, America, our last short Commonwealth—and compare it with what they did under masters."

His serious political verses are all in the strain of the lines on Wellington—

"Never had mortal man such opportunity—
Except Napoleon—or abused it; rage;
You might have freed fallen Europe from the yaffy
Of tyrants, and been blessed from shore to shore."

An enthusiasm for Italy, which survived many disappointments, dictated some of the most impressive passages of his Harold, and inspired the Lament of Tasso, and the Ode on Venice (page 334). The Prophecy of Dante (page 393) contains much that has since proved prophetic—

"What is there wanting, then, to set thee free,
And show thy beauty in its fullest light?
To make the Alps impassable; and we
Her sons, may do this with one deed—Unite!"

His letters reiterate the same idea, in language even more emphatic. "It is no great matter, supposing that Italy could be liberated, who or what is sacrificed? It is a grand object—the very poetry of politics: only think—a free Italy!" Byron acted on his conviction that a man ought to do more for society than write verses. Mistrusting its leaders, and detesting the wretched lazzaroni, who "would have betrayed themselves and all the world," he yet threw himself heartily eleven long years of bitterness I have passed through since I was here were taken from my shoulders, and I was scudding through the Greek Archipelago with old Baskerville in his frigate." Byron remained at or about Cephalonia till the close of the year. Not long after his arrival he made an excursion to Ithaca, and, visiting the monastery at Vathi, was received by the abbot with great ceremony, which, in a fit of irritation, brought on by a tiresome ride on a mule, he returned with unusual discourtesy; but next morning, on his giving a donation to their alms-box, he was dismissed with the blessing of the monks. "If this Isle were mine," he declared on his way back, "I would break my staff and bury my book." A little later, Brown and Trelawny being sent off with letters to the provisional government, the former returned with some Greek emissaries to London to negotiate a loan; the latter attached himself to Odysseus, the chief of the republican party at Athens, and never again saw Byron alive. The poet, after spending a month on board the "Heracles," disembarked the vessel, and hired a house for Gamba and himself at Metaxata, a healthy village about four miles from the capital of the island. Meanwhile, Blaquiere, neglecting his appointment at Zante, had gone to Corfu, and thence to England. Colonel Napier being absent from Cephalonia, Byron had some pleasant social intercourse with his deputy, but, unable to get from him any authoritative information, was left without advice, to be besieged by letters and messages from the factions. Among these there were brought to him hints that the Greeks wanted a king, and he is reported to have said, "If they make me the offer, I will perhaps not reject it."

POLITICS; EXPEDITION TO GREECE; DEATH

The position would doubtless have been acceptable to a man who never—amid his many self-deceptions—affected to deny that he was ambitious; and who can say what might not have resulted for Greece had the poet lived to add lustre to her crown? In the meantime, while faring more frugally than a day-laborer, he yet surrounded himself with a show of royal state, had his servants armed with gilt helmets, and gathered around him a body-guard of Suliotas. These wild mercenaries becoming turbulent, he was obliged to despatch them to Missolonghi, then threatened with siege by the Turks, and anxiously waiting relief. During his residence at Cephalonia, Byron was gratified by the interest evinced in him by the English residents. Among these, the physician, Dr. Kennedy, a worthy Scotchman, who imagined himself to be a theologian, with a genius for conversion, was conducting a series of religious meetings at Argostoli, when the poet expressed a wish to be present at one of them. After listening, it is said, to a set of discourses that occupied the greater part of twelve hours, he seems, for one reason or another, to have felt called on to enter the lists, and found himself involved in the series of controversial dialogues afterwards published in a substantial book. This volume, interesting in several respects, is one of the most charming examples of unconscious irony in the language, and it is matter of regret that our space does not admit of the abridgment of several of its pages. They bear testimony, on the one hand, to Byron's capability of patience, and frequent sweetness of temper under trial; on the other, to Kennedy's utter want of humor, and to his outrageous honesty. The curiously confronted interlocutors, in the course of the missionary and subsequent private meetings, ran over most of the ground debated between opponents and apologists of the Calvinistic faith, which Kennedy upheld without stint. The *Conversations add little to what we already know of Byron's religious opinions; nor is it easy to say where he ceases to be serious and begins to banter, or vice versa. He evidently wished to show that in argument he was good at fence, and could handle a theologian as skillfully as a foil. At the same time he wished, if possible, though, as appears, in vain, to get some light on a subject with regard to which in his graver moods he was often exercised. On some points he is explicit. He makes an unequivocal protest against the doctrines of eternal punishment and infant damnation, saying that if the rest of mankind were to be damned, he "would rather keep them company than creep into heaven alone." On questions of inspiration, and the deeper problems of human life, he is less distinct, being naturally inclined to a speculative necessitarianism, and disposed to admit original depravity; but he did not see his way out of the maze through the Atonement, and held that prayer had only significance as a devotional affection of the heart. Byron showed a remarkable familiarity with the Scriptures, and with parts of Barrow, Obillingworth, and Stillingsfleet; but on Kennedy's leading, for his edification, Boston's Fourfold State, he returned it with the remark that it was too deep for him. On another occasion he said, "Do you know I am nearly reconciled to St. Paul, for he says there is no difference between the Jews and the Greeks! and I am exactly of the same opinion, for the character of both is equally vile." The good Scotchman's religious self-confidence is throughout free from intellectual pride; and his own confession, "This time I suspect his lordship had the best of it," might perhaps be applied to the whole discussion.

Critics who have little history and less war have been accustomed to attribute Byron's lingering at Cephalonia to indolence and indecision; they write as if he ought, on landing on Greek soil, to have put himself at the head of an army and stormed Constantinople. Those who know more, confess that the delay was deliberate, and that it was judicious. The Hellenic uprising was animated by the spirit of a "lion after slumber," but it had the heads of a Hydra hissing and tearing at one another. The chiefs who defended the country by their arms compromised her by their arguments, and some of her best fighters were little better than pirates and bandits. Greece was a prey to factions—republican, monarchic, aristocratic—representing naval, military, and territorial interests, and each beset by the adventurers who flock round every movement, only representing their own. During the first two years of success they were held in embryo; during the later years of disaster, terminated by the allies at Navarino, they were buried; during the interlude of Byron's residence, when the foes were like hounds in the leash, waiting for a renewal of the struggle, they were rampant. Had he joined any one of them, he would have degraded himself to the level of a mere condottiere, and helped to betray the common cause. Beset by solicitations to go to Athens, to the Morea, to Acarnania, he resolutely held apart, biding his time, collecting information, making himself known as a man of affairs, endeavoring to conciliate rival claimants for pension or place, and carefully watching the tide of war. Numerous anecdotes of the period relate to acts of public or private benevolence, which endeared him to the population of the island; but he was on the alert against being flattered or robbed. "The bulk of the English," writes Colonel Napier, "came expecting to find the Peloponnese filled with Plutarch's men, and returned thinking the inhabitants of Newgate more moral. Lord Byron judged the Greeks fairly, and knew that allowed must be made for emancipated slaves." Among other birthday, he came from his room to Stanhope's, and said, smiling, "You were complaining that I never write any poetry now," and read the familiar stanzas (page 455) beginning—

* See foot-note, pages 121, 262.

POLITICS; EXPEDITION TO GREECE; DEATH.

"Tis time this heart should be unmoved."

High thoughts, high resolves; but the brain that was overtaken, and the frame that was outworn, would be tasked and worn little longer. The lamp of a life that had burnt too fiercely was flickering to its close. "If we are not taken off with the sword," he writes on February 5, "we are like to march off with an ague in this mud basket; and, to conclude with a very bad pun, better moritally than marsh-ally. The dykes of Holland when broken down are the deserts of Arabia, in comparison with Missolonghi." February 25, Byron wrote from Missolonghi his last letter to Mr. Murray, a fac-simile of a part of which we give. In April, when it was too late, Stanhope wrote from Salona, in Phocis, imploring him not to sacrifice health, and perhaps life, "in that bog."

Byron's house stood in the midst of the exhalations of a muddy creek, and his natural irritability was increased by a more than usually long ascetic regimen. From the day of his arrival in Greece he discarded animal food, and lived mainly on toast, vegetables, and cheese, olives and light wine, at the rate of forty paras a day. In spite of his strength of purpose, his temper was not always proof against the rapacity and turbulence by which he was surrounded. About the middle of February, when the artillery had been got into readiness for the attack on Lepanto—the northern, as Patras was the southern, gate of the gulf, still in the hands of the Turks—the expedition was thrown back by an unexpected rising of the Suliotcs. These peculiarly forward Greeks, chronically seditious by nature, were on this occasion, as afterwards appeared, stirred up by emissaries of Colocotroni, who, though assuming the position of the rival of Mavrocordatos, was simply a brigand on a large scale in the Morea. Exasperation at this mutiny, and the vexation of having to abandon a cherished scheme, seem to have been the immediately provoking causes of a violent convulsive fit which, on the evening of the 15th, attacked the poet, and endangered his life. Next day he was better, but complained of weight in the head; and the doctors applying leeches too close to the temporal artery, he was bled till he fainted. And now occurred the last of those striking incidents so frequent in his life, in reference to which we may quote the joint testimony of two witnesses. Colonel Stanhope writes, "Soon after his dreadful paroxysm, when he was lying on his sick-bed, with his whole nervous system completely shaken, the mischievous Suliotcs, covered with dirt and splendid attire, broke into his apartment, brandishing their costly arms and loudly demanding their rights. Lord Byron, electrified by this unexpected act, seemed to recover from his sickness; and the more the Suliotcs raged the more his calm courage triumphed. The scene was truly sublime." "It is impossible," says Count Gamba, "to do justice to the coolness and magnanimity which he displayed upon every trying occasion. Upon trifling occasions he was certainly irritable; but the aspect of danger calmed him in an instant, and restored him the free exercise of all the powers of his noble nature. A more undaunted man in the hour of peril never breathed." A few days later, the riot being renewed, the disorderly crew were, on payment of their arrears, finally dismissed; but several of the English artificers under Parry left at the same time, in fear of their lives.

On the 4th, the last of the long list of Byron's letters to Moore resents, with some bitterness, the hasty acceptance of a rumor that he had been quietly writing Den

Juan in some Ionian island. At the same date he writes to Kennedy, "I am not unaware of the precarious state of my health. But it is proper I should remain in Greece, and it were better to die doing something than nothing." Visions of enlisting Europe and America on behalf of the establishment of a new state, that might in course of time develop itself over the realm of Alexander, floated and gleamed in his fancy; but in his practical daily procedure the poet took as his text the motto "festina lente," insisted on solid ground under his feet, and had no notion of sailing balloons over the sea. With this view he discouraged Stanhope's philanthropic and propagandist paper, the Telegrapho, and disparaged Dr. Mayer, its Swiss editor, saying, "Of all petty tyrants he is one of the pettiest, as are most demagogues." Byron had none of Belsham's leanings, and almost personal hatred of Ottoman rule, of some Englishmen; but he saw on what side lay the forces and the hopes of the future. "I cannot calculate," he said to Gamba, during one of their latest rides together, "to what a height Greece may rise. Hitherto it has been a subject for the hymns and elegies of fanatics and enthusiasts; but now it will draw the attention of the politician. . . . At present there is little difference, in many respects, between Greeks and Turks, nor could there be; but the latter must, in the common course of events, decline in power; and the former must as inevitably become better. . . . The English Government deceived itself at first in thinking it possible to maintain the Turkish Empire in its integrity; but it cannot be done—that unwieldy mass is already putrefied, and must dissolve. If anything like an equilibrium is to be upheld, Greece must be supported." These words have been well characterized as prophetic. During this time Byron rallied in health, and displayed much of his old spirit, vivacity, and humor, took part in such of his favorite amusements as circumstances admitted, fencing, shooting, riding, and playing with his pet dog Lion. The last of his recorded practical jokes is his rolling about cannon-balls, and slaking the rafters, to frighten Parry in the room below with the dread of an earthquake.

Towards the close of the month, after being solicited to accompany Mavrocordatos to share the governorship of the Morea, he made an appointment to meet Colonel Stanhope and Odysses at Salona, but was prevented from keeping it by violent floods which blocked up the communication. On the 20th he was presented with the freedom of the city of Missolonghi. On the 2d of April he intervened to prevent an Italian private, guilty of theft, from being flogged by order of some German officers. On the 5th, exhilarated by a letter from Mrs. Leigh with good accounts of her own and Ada's health, he took a long ride with Gamba and a few of the remaining Suliotcs, and after being violently heated, and then drenched in a heavy shower, persisted in returning home in a boat, remarking with a laugh, in answer to a remonstrance, "I should make a pretty soldier if I were to care for such a trifle." It soon became apparent that he had caught his death. Almost immediately on his return he was seized with shiverings and violent pain. The next day he rose as usual, and had his last ride in the olive woods. On the 11th a rheumatic fever set in. On the 14th, Bruno's skull being exhausted, it was proposed to call Dr. Thomas from Zante, but a hurricane prevented any ship being sent. On the 15th, another physician, Mr. MBrown, suggested bleeding to allay the fever, but Byron held out against it, quoting Dr. Reid to the effect that "less slaughter is effected by the lance than the lancet—than minute instrument of mighty mischief;" and saying to Bruno, "If my hour is come I shall die, whether I lose my blood or keep it." Next morning Milligan is saved him to fight, by a suggestion of the possible loss of his senses. Throwing out his arm, he cried, "There!

NOTES ON BYRON'S CHARACTER

 you are, I say, a d—d set of brothers. Take away as much blood as you like, and have done with it." The sword, repeated on the following day with blistering and other too long or ill-advised. On the 18th he saw were darker, but was manifestly sinking, amid the tears and exclamations of students who could not understand each other's language. In his last hours he delirium bore him to the field of arms. He fancied he was leading the attack on Lepanto, and was heard exclaiming, "Forward! forward! follow me!" Who not reminded of another death-bed, not remains in him from his, and the Tiê d'ouro of the great Emperor who with the great Post divided the wonder of Europe? The stormy vision passed, and his thoughts reverted home. "Go to my sister," he faltered out to Fletcher; "tell her—go to Lady Byron—you will see her and my sister—nothing more could be heard but broken ejaculations—"Angusta—Ada—my sister, my dear—Se tanto quiseho como di caro nel mondo. Forget me, I am content to die." At six on the evening of the 19th he uttered his last words, "Ael me vivit nobiscum," and on the 19th he passed away.*

Down, perhaps, was there such a national lamentation. By order of Metrocristo, thirty-seven guns—on the sixth year of the poet's life—were fired from the battery, and answered by the Turks from Patras and the distant valley. All offices, tribunals, and schools were shut, and a general mourning for twenty days proclaimed. Stanhope wrote, on hearing the news, "England has lost her brightest genius—Greece her true friend;" and Trelawny, on coming to Athens, heard nothing in the streets but "Byron is dead." From a hall looking through the silence and the mourning contributors to the cause of Greece came when they heard the tidings, that seemed to them as was headless. Her cities once more, as of old for the birth of a poet, seemed him to rest in the Temple of Theseus.

The funeral service was performed at Athens, but on the 24 of May the embalmed remains, and on the 29th arrived in Downs. Requests applied for permission to have them interred in Westminster Abbey, but it was refused; and only they were conveyed to the village of Farnham, and there buried—his devoted friends, faithful in death as always in life, then took to his memory, a representation of his works on the following page.

CHAPTER XI

THE LIFE OF BYRON'S CHARACTER—MIS- CELLANEOUS REMARKS REGARDING HIM—HYPOC- RISY—THE SOCIETY OF BYRON'S DAY.

It is truly told of Byron has been a man, together with much of the character of his genius, who has the fine sensibilities and generous feelings and courage, has palliated and corrected none of the errors, and of the infirmities of the organ, which England more deeply in the earlier years of the seventeenth century human kind out-of the world profoundly than any other who, in whatever else of the world, is found in the slowly moving ages to have achieved his ambition to be "remembered in his line with his land's language." His passions and pettinesses, his follies and foibles, his sins against himself and others, have been recorded. The evil of him has been told in every particular, told with emphasis; no ugly fact has been glossed; each dark matter has been brought out in the light of heaven. And this has been done, so that on closing this volume the reader may be confident that he has seen all the worst, though by no means all the good, of the poet's cruelly misrepresented life, and in that confidence may dwell on at once and forever, as poisonous falsehood, all the odious untrue things that have been uttered to his infamy.

By many readers it will be said that, after being relieved of all the stains put upon him by slander, the real Byron was a man of numerous blemishes and infirmities. Be it so. Where is the man without some of the defects of human nature! Why should a higher standard of moral excellence be demanded in a poet whose genius is in a great degree the result of physical endowments and qualities that render him more liable than other kinds of men to irregularities of thought and action? Instead of fancying that the highest poetical faculty exempts its possessor from the temptations of desire, and defends him against the forces making for certain forms of immorality, people should rather regard that faculty—not more divine in its fruits than human in its source—as a perfunctory gift that entitles its holder to the largest measure of charitable allowance for his deviations from the sober ways of men less sensitive and excitable. It will be no harmful consequence, should this life of the poet make readers see more clearly than heretofore that poetical genius does not necessarily dispose its possessor to moral orderliness. Good will come of it, should this survey of a marvellous being's scarcely edifying story teach readers that they should enjoy and criticise a great poet's writings without feeling it their duty at the same time to sit in judgment on his domestic errors. People should accept an artist's gifts without being over-curious and severely censorious respecting the giver's private habits and freddie eccentricities. The faultiness of the latter is no reason for declining the former. Had all the evil things said of Byron fallen short of the truth his writings would be no less delightful. Had he been as pious as Heber, his poetry would be none the better.

Moreover, in respect to his private morality, Byron should be judged (if judged at all), not by the notions of propriety and the sentiment of those later times of the nineteenth century, but with due reference to the views and manners of English society in the century's earlier decades. If he was a libertine, it must be remembered that he lived in times when libertinism was general. Of all the differences between the England of to-day and the England of seventy years since, none is more noteworthy than the present repobation of certain kinds of domestic immorality that were regarded in Byron's day with a leniency which is remembered in this year of grace with astonishment. The abolition of duelling is largely accountable for this remarkable change of social sentiment and manners. So long as every father, husband, brother, was free to avenge with the pistol the wrongs done him by libertinism, society troubled itself little about the offences of libertines. Instead of going out of their way to punish violators of the seventh commandment, English gentlemen left such offenders to be dealt with at ten paces by the immediate sufferers from their offences. In truth, they were not without a certain sympathy and admiration for the offender, who, following his favorite pleasure with the pistol in his hand, in times when physical daring was valued at something more than its proper worth, could at least claim credit for personal courage. Under these circumstances the world tolerated and even smiled at irregularities, which now, that individuals may no longer defend themselves against them by process of bloodshed, are checked by the wholesome social sentiment that declares them odious offenses. In the England of Byron's childhood, bishops and deans were delighted to dine with Lord Thurlow in Great Ormond Street, at the same table with the Chancellor's mistress and illegitimate children. The England of the poet's boyhood adored Nelson, although he quarrelled with his wife and found a Theresa Guiccioli in Lady Hamilton. The England of Byron's manhood was the England that some seven years after the poet's death, looked on with approval and sympathy whilst William the Fourth made his eldest natural son an earl, and in other ways ennobled his other natural children, simply because they were his illegitimate issue. Is it not a fact that the England of seventy years since was an England in which propensities were notoriously passing, in every quarter of the country, out of the right line of descent, through the confusion of progeny consequent on the prevalence of a particular kind of domestic immorality? Whilst libertinism was thus prevalent, why should Byron be pilloried and stoned for having been something of a rake?

NOTES ON BYRON'S CHARACTER.

And whilst Byron's England was so much more tolerant of libertinism, she was proportionately more intolerant of free thought in politics and religion than the England of to-day. In this period of virtuous homes, and Darwinism in the drawing-room of every one of them, it is amusing and instructive to observe in Moore's "Life," how dimly and usually misquoted and regretful the biographer becomes when he refers to Byron's half-hearted skepticism, whilst a few pages later he speaks of the paucity of dissoluteness of the poet's early manhood and the bitter prophesies of his continental life, as though they were upon the whole very much to his credit. The fact is that, whilst making much hypocritical noise about the wickedness of their ways with women, society did not war against Byron and Shelley on account of their libertinism, but on account of their political and religious opinions. Had Byron voted with the Tories, treated the Prince Regent respectfully, and held his pen and tongue about matters touching the Thirty-nine Articles, England's higher society would never for a single instant have sided with Lady Byron in her domestic troubles. These facts must not be overlooked or forgotten by readers who would know the Lord Byron as he really was. To judge the great poet fairly, one must remember the manners of his contemporaries.

Lord Byron's Tomb.

The scale of the above is one inch to a foot; the ground is dove color, the other parts statuary marble.

RECEIVED A LETTER OF LOUD HYON TO MR. MURRAY, DATED WASHINGTON, FEBRUARY 20, 1924.

I have heard from Mrs. Douglas & Mr. that you stated a report of a satire on your life and being annexed from Italy and it be-written by me! - but that you do not let = have it. - I dare say you do not as any body else I should think. - - return expects that I am the author or abettor of anything of the kind or Gifford - but on his threat. - I always regarded him as my literary father - and myself as his faithful son; if any such composition exists it is mine of course - & you know as well as any body upon whom I have or have not written - and you also know whether they do or did not deserve that name.

My dear Murray
yours very sincerely
Byron

Fac-simile of Byron's signature.

THE POETICAL WORKS
OF
LORD BYRON.

CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

A Romance.

L'univers est une espèce de livre, dont on n'a lu que la première page quand on n'a vu que son pays. J'en ai feuilleté un assez grand nombre; que j'ai trouvés également mauvaises. Cet examen ne m'a point été infructueux. Je hais ma patrie. Toutes les répétitions des deux premiers vers, parmi lesquels j'ai vu, n'ont reconcilié avec elle. Quand je n'aurai tiré d'autre bénéfice de mes voyages que celui là, je n'en regretterai ni les frais ni les fatigues. LA CORCORANTE.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST AND SECOND CANTOS.

THE following poem was written, for the most part, whilst the scenes which it attempts to describe. It was begun in Albania; and the parts relative to Spain and Portugal were composed from the author's observations on those countries. Thus much it may be necessary to state for the correctness of the descriptions. The scenes attempted to be sketched are in Spain, Portugal, Epirus, Acarnania, and Greece. There, for the present, the poem stops. Its reception will determine whether the author may venture to conduct his readers to the capital of the East, through Ionia and Phrygia: these two cantos are merely experimental.

A historical character is introduced for the sake of giving some connection to the piece; which, however, makes no pretensions to regularity. It has been suggested to me by friends, on whose opinions I set a high value, that this fictitious character, "Childe Harold," I may treat the supposition of having intended some real personage; and I then leave, once for all, to disclaim; Harold is the child of imagination, for the purpose I have stated. I am never trivial, particular, and those merely local, those might be grounds for such a notion; but in the same points, I should hope, none whatever.

I almost expensively mention that the appellation "Childe" was "Childe Western," "Childe Chalkers," etc., is much more consonant with the old structure of verbification which I have adopted. The "Good-Night," in the beginning of the first canto, was suggested by "Lord Maxwell's Good-Night," in the Border Minstrelsy, edited by Mr. Scott.

With the different poems which have been published on Spanish subjects, there may be found some slight coincidence in the first part, which treats of the Peninsula, but it can only be casual; as, with the exception of a few concluding stanzas, the whole of this poem was written in the Levant.

The stanza of Spenser, according to one of our most successful poets, admits of every variety. Dr. Beattie makes the following observation:—"Not long ago I began a poem in the style and stanza of Spenser, in which I propose to give full scope to my inclination, and be either dull or pathetic, descriptive or sentimental, tender or satirical, as the humor strikes me; for, if I mistake not, the measure which I have adopted admits equally of all these kinds of composition." Strengthened in my opinion by such authority, and by the example of some in the highest order of Italian poets, I shall make no apology for attempts at similar variations in the following composition; satisfied that, if they are unsuccessful, their failure must be in the execution rather than in the design, sanctioned by the practice of Ariosto, Thomson, and Beattie.

LONDON, February, 1812.

ADDITION TO THE PREFACE.

I HAVE now waited till almost all our periodical journals have distributed their usual portion of criticism. To the justice of the generality of their criticism I have nothing to object: it would ill become me to quarrel with their very slight degree of censure, when, perhaps, if they had been less kind they had been more candid. Returning, therefore, to all and each my best thanks for their liberality, on one point alone shall I venture an observation. Amongst the many objections justly urged to the very indifferent character of the "vagrant Childs" (whom, notwithstanding many hints to the contrary, I still maintain to be a fictitious personage), it has been stated that, besides the anachronism, he is very un knightly, as the times of the Knights were times of Love, Honor, and so forth. Now, it so happens that the good old times, when "l'amour du bon vieux tems, l'amour antique" flourished, were the most profligate of all possible centuries. Those who have any doubts on this subject may consult Sainte-Palais, poëme, and more particularly vol. II., p. 69. The vows of chivalry were no better kept than any other vows whatsoever; and the songs of the Troubadours were not more decent, and certainly much less refined than those of Ovid. The "Coure d'amour, parlemens d'amour, ou de courtoisie et de gentillesse" had much more of love than of courtesy or gentleness. See Roland on the same subject with Sainte-Palais. Whatever other objection may be urged to that most unamiable personage Childs Harold, he was so far perfectly knightly in his attributes—"No waiter, but a knight templar." By the by, I fear that Sir Tristram and Sir Lancelot were no better than they should be, although very poetical personages and true knights "sans peur," though not "sans reproche." If the story of the institution of the "Garter" be not a fable, the knights of that order have for several centuries borne the badge of a Countess of Salisbury, of indifferent memory. So much for chivalry. Burke need not have regretted that its days are over, though Marie-Antoinette was quite as chaste as most of those in whose honor lambs were shivered and knights unhorsed.

Before the days of Bayard, and down to those of Sir Joseph Banks (the most chaste and celebrated of ancient and modern times), few exceptions will be found to this statement; and I fear a little investigation will teach us not to regret these monstrous mimeries of the middle ages.

I now leave "Childs Harold" to live his day, such as he is. It had been more agreeable, and certainly more easy, to have drawn an amiable character; it had been easy to varnish over his faults, to make him do more and express less; but he never was intended as an example, further than to show that early perversion of mind and morals leads to satiety of past pleasures and disappointment in new ones, and that even the beauties of nature and the stimulus of travel (except ambition, the most powerful of all excitements) are lost on a soul so constituted, or rather misdirected. Had I proceeded with the poem, this character would have deepened as he drew to the close; for the outline which I once meant to fill up for him was, with some exceptions, the sketch of a modern Timon,* perhaps a poetical Zeluco.

LONDON, 1813.

TO IANTHE†

NOT in those climes where I have late been straying,
Though Beauty long hath there been matchless deem'd;

Not in those visions to the heart displaying
Forms which it sighs but to have only dream'd,
Hath aught like thee in truth or fancy seem'd:
Nor, having seen thee, shall I vainly seek
To paint those charms which varied as they beam'd—

To such as see thee not my words were weak;
To those who gaze on thee what language could they speak?

Ah! mayest thou ever be what now thou art,
Nor unbesmear the promises of thy spring,
As fair in form, as warm yet pure in heart,
Love's image upon earth without his wing,
And guileless beyond Hope's imagining!
And surely she who now so fondly rears
Thy youth, in thee, thus hourly brightening,
Beholds the rainbow of her future years,
Before whose heavenly hues all sorrow disappears.

Young Peri! of the West!—'t is well for me
My years already doubly number thine;
My loveless eye unmoved may gaze on thee,
And safely view thy ripening beauties shine;
Happy, I ne'er shall see thee in decline;

* In one of his early poems—"Childs's Recollections"—Lord Byron compares himself to the Athenian misanthrope, of whom bitter apophthegms many are upon record, though no authentic particulars of his life have come down to us:—

"Weary of love, of life, devoted with spleen,
I rest a perfect Timon, not nineteen," &c.

† The Lady Charlotte Harley, second daughter of Edward Esq. Earl of Oxford (afterwards Lady Charlotte Bacon), in the autumn

Happier, that while all younger hearts shall bleed,
Mine shall escape the doom thine eyes assign
To those whose admiration shall succeed,
But mix'd with pang to Love's even loveliest hours Decreed.

Oh! let that eye, which, wild as the gazelle's,
Now brightly bold or beautifully shy,
Winks as it wanders, dazzles where it dwells,
Glances o'er this page, nor to my verse deny
That smile for which my breast might vainly sigh,
Could I to thee be ever more than friend;
This much, dear maid, accord; nor question why
To one so young my strain I would commend,
But bid me with my wreath one matchless lily blend.

Such is thy name with this my verse entwined;
And long as kinder eyes a look shall cast
On Harold's page, Ianthe's here enshrined
Shall thus be first beheld, forgotten last:
My days once number'd, should this homage paid
Attract thy fairy fingers near the lyre
Of him who hail'd thee, loveliest as thou wast,
Such is the most my memory may desire;
Though more than Hope can claim, could Friendship less require?

of 1813, when these lines were addressed to her, had not completed her eleventh year. Mr. Wessell's portrait of the juvenile beauty was painted at Lord Byron's request. And "Life of Byron."

† Peri, the Persian term for a beautiful intermediate order of being, is generally supposed to be another form of our word Fairy.

† "You have the eyes of a gazelle" is considered all over the East as the greatest compliment that can be paid to a woman.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

Oh, thou! in Helios deem'd of heavenly birth,
 Mine! turn'd or fabled at the minstrel's will!
 Mine shamed full oft by later lyres on earth,
 Mine dare not call thee from thy sacred hill:
 Yet these I've wander'd by thy vaunted rill;
 Yea! sigh'd o'er Delphi's long-deserted shrine,
 Where, save that feeble fountain, all is still;
 Nor mole my shell awake the weary Nine
 To guess or plain a tale—this lowly lay of mine.

II.

Whence in Aëdon's tale there dwelt a youth,
 Who in virtue's ways did take delight;
 Yet spent his days in riot most uncouth,
 And turn'd with mirth the drowsy ear of Night.
 Ah! in youth he was a shameless wight,
 Not given to revel and ungodly glee;
 Few earthly things found favor in his sight
 Save yesterday and to-morrow's company,
 And smugling wanderers of high and low degree.

III.

Childe Harold was he might:—but whence his name
 And whence long, it suits me not to say;
 Suffice it, that perchance they were of Rome,
 And had been glorious in another day:
 But one and lost! still a name for aye,
 However mighty in the ciden time;
 Nor all that heralds take from codin'd clay
 Nor feudal power, nor honey'd lies of rhyme,
 Can shame or ill deeds, or consecrate a crime.

IV.

Childe Harold hath'd him in the noontide sun,
 Discomfiting those who may other day;
 Nor deem'd he his little day was done
 One hour might chill him into misery,
 But he was strong a third of his pass'd by,
 When first he saw the Childe befall;
 No less he knew of misery:
 Thus, when he to his native land to dwell,
 What more than he than Eremita's and Reckless of the labyrinth had run,

 Nor knew where he did amiss,
 Nor knew where he loved but one,
 Nor could he be his.

Ah, happy she! to 'scape from him whose kiss
 Had been pollution unto aught so chaste;
 Who soon had left her charms for vulgar bliss,
 And spoil'd her goodly lands to gild his waste,
 Nor calm domestic peace had ever deign'd to taste.

VI.

And now Childe Harold was sore sick at heart,
 And from his fellow bacchanals would flee;
 'Tis said, at times the sullen tear would start,
 But Pride congeal'd the drop within his eye;
 Apart he stalk'd in joyless reverie,
 And from his native land resolved to go,
 And visit scorching climes beyond the sea;
 With pleasure dragg'd, he almost long'd for woe,
 And e'en for change of scene would seek the shades below.

VII.

The Childe departed from his father's hall:
 It was a vast and venerable pile;
 So old, it seemed only not to fall,
 Yet strength was pillar'd in each masonry aisle.
 Monastic dome! condemn'd to use vile!
 Where Superstition once had made her den
 Now Paphian girls were known to sing and smile;
 And monks might deem their time was come again,
 If ancient tales say true, nor wrong these holy men.

VIII.

Yet oft-times in his maddest mirthful mood
 Strange pangs would flash along Childe Harold's
 brow,
 As if the memory of some deadly feud
 Or disappointed passion lurk'd below:
 But this none knew, nor haply cared to know;
 For his was not that open, artless soul
 That feels relief by bidding sorrow flow,
 Nor sought he friend to counsel or condole,
 What'er this grief mote be, which he could not control.

IX.

And none did love him—though to hall and bower
 He gather'd revellers from far and near,
 He knew them flatterers of the festal hour;
 The heartless parasites of present cheer.
 Yea! none did love him—not his lemans dear—
 But pomp and power alone are woman's care,
 And where these are light Eros finds a feere;
 Maidens, like moths, are ever caught by glare,
 And Mammon wins his way where Seraphs might despair.

X.

Childe Harold had a mother—not forgot,
 Though parting from that mother he did ahun:
 A sister whom he loved, but saw her not
 Before his weary pilgrimage begun:
 If friends he had, he bade adieu to none.
 Yet deem not thence his breast a breast of steel:
 Ye, who have known what 'tis to dote upon
 A few dear objects, will in sadness feel Such partings break the heart they fondly hope to heal.

elef in the rock, with a range of caverns difficult of ascent,
 and apparently leading to the interior of the mountain—probably to the Corycian Cavern mentioned by Pausanias.
 From this part descend the fountain and the "Dew of Cesttale."

* In these stanzas, and indeed throughout his work, we must not accept too literally Lord Byron's testimony against himself. He took a morbid pleasure in darkening every shadow of his self-portraiture.

II.

His house, his home, his heritage, his lands,
The laughing dames in whom he did delight,
Whose large blue eyes, fair locks, and snowy hands,
Might shake the saintship of an anchorite,
And long had fed his youthful appetite;
His goblets brimm'd with every costly wine,
And all that mote to luxury invite,
Without a sigh he left to cross the brine,
And traverse Paynim shores, and pass Earth's central line.*

XII.

The sails were fill'd, and fair the light winds blew,
As glad to waft him from his native home;
And fast the white rocks faded from his view,
And soon were lost in circumambient foam:
And then, it may be, of his wish to roam
Repented he, but in his bosom slept
The silent thought, nor from his lips did come
One word of wall, whilst others sate and wept,
And to the reckless gales unmanly moaning kept.

XIII.

But when the sun was sinking in the sea
He seized his harp, which he at times could string,
And strike, albeit with untainted melody,
When deem'd he no strange ear was listening:
And now his fingers o'er it he did fling,
And tuned his farewell in the dim twilight.
While flew the vessel on her snowy wing,
And fleeting shores receded from his sight,
Thus to the elements he pour'd his last "Good Night."

"ADIEU, adieu! my native shore
Fades o'er the waters blue;
The Night-winds sigh, the breakers roar,
And shrieks the wild sea-mew.
Yon Sun that sets upon the sea
We follow in his flight;
Farewell awhile to him and thee,
My native Land—Good Night!

"A few short hours and he will rise
To give the morrow birth;
And I shall hail the main and skies,
But not my mother earth.
Deserted is my own good hall,
Its hearth is desolate;
Wild weeds are gathering on the wall;
My dog howls at the gate.

"Come hither, hither, my little page!†
Why dost thou weep and wail?
Or dost thou dread the billow's rage,
Or tremble at the gale?
But dash the tear-drop from thine eye;
Our ship is swift and strong:
Our fleetest falcon scarce can fly
More merrily along.

"Let winds be shrill, let waves roll high,
I fear not wave nor wind;
Yet marvel not, Sir Childe, that I
Am sorrowful in mind;
For I have from my father gone,
A mother whom I love,
And have no friend save thee alone,
But thee—and one above.

"My father bless'd me fervently,
Yet did not much complain;
But sorely will my mother sigh
Till I come back again.‡—
Enough, enough, my little lad!
Such tears become thine eye;
If I thy guileless bosom had,
Mine own would not be dry.

"Come hither, hither, my staunch yeoman!§
Why dost thou look so pale?
Or dost thou dread a French foeman?
Or shiver at the gale?—
'Deem'st thou I tremble for my life?
Sir Childe, I'm not so weak;
But thinking on an absent wife
Will blanch a faithful cheek.

"My spouse and boys dwell near thy hall,
Along the bordering lake,
And when they on their father call,
What answer shall she make?||—
Enough, enough, my yeoman good,
Thy grief let none gainsay;
But I, who am of lighter mood,
Will laugh to flee away.

"For who would trust the seeming sighs
Of wife or paramour?
Fresh fevers will dry the bright blue eyes
We late saw streaming o'er.
For pleasures past I do not grieve,
Nor perils gathering near;
My greatest grief is that I leave
No thing that claims a tear.¶

"And now I'm in the world alone,
Upon the wide, wide sea:
But why should I for others groan,
When none will sigh for me?
Perchance my dog will whine in vain,
Till fed by stranger hands;
But long ere I come back again
He'd tear me where he stands.

"With thee, my bark, I'll swiftly go
Athwart the foaming brine;
Nor care what land thou bear'st me to,
So not again to mine.
Welcome, welcome, ye dark blue waves
And when you fail my sight,
Welcome, ye deserts, and ye caves!
My native Land—Good-Night!"

XIV.

On, on the vessel flies; the land is gone,
And winds are rude in Biscay's sleepless bay.
Four days are sped, but with the fifth, anon,
New shores descried make every bosom gay;
And Cintra's mountain greets them on their way,
And Tagus dashing onward to the deep,
His fabled golden tribute bent to pay;
And soon on board the Lusian pilots leap,
And steer 'twixt fertile shores where yet few rustics reap.

XV.

Oh, Christ! it is a goodly sight to see
What Heaven hath done for this delicious land:

* Lord Byron originally intended to visit India.

† This "little page" was Robert Rushton, the son of one of Lord Byron's tenants.

‡ William Fletcher, the faithful valet; who, after a service of twenty years ("during which," he says, "his Lord was more to him than a father"), received the Pilgrim's last words at Miscoloughi, and did not quit his remains until he had seen them deposited in the family vault at Hucknall.

§ "I leave England without regret—I shall return to it without pleasure. I am like Adam, the first convict sentenced to transportation; but I have no Eve, and have eaten no apple but what was sour as a crab."—Lord B. to Mr. Hodgson.

What fruits of fragrant bloom on every tree!
What goodly meadows o'er the hills expand!
But man would pierce them with an impious hand:
And when the Almighty lifts his fiercest scourge Against those who most transgress his high command.

With terrible vengeance will his hot shafts urge Gaul's bloodied host, and earth from faintest foamman purge.

XVI.

What beauties death Libbae first unfold!
Her image floating on that noble tide,
Which poets vainly gave with sands of gold,
But now whence a thousand keels did ride
Of mighty strength, once Albion was allied,
And to the Lusitan did her aid afford:
A nation such with ignorance and pride,
Who look yet justify the hand that waves the sword
To save them from the wrath of Gaul's unsparing lord.

XVII.

But where's our worth within this town,
That, dreaming far, celestial seems to be,
Disconsolate will wander up and down,
Mid many things unsightly to strange eyes;
For hat and pellice show like filthily:
The clergy's gowns are reared in dirt;
No parlours of high or mean degree
Add care for cleanliness of outworn or shirt;
Though sleek with Egypt's plague, unkempt, unwashed, unshorn.

XVIII.

Fear, palling slaves! yet born 'midst noblest
men—
Why, Libbae, waste thy wonders on such men?
Lo! Omph's glorious Eden intervenes
In wilderness of moor and glen.
Ah! what hand can pencil guide, or pen,
To follow half on which the eye dilates
Through vales more dazzling unto mortal ken
Than these whereof such things the bard relates
Who to the awe-struck world unlock'd Elysium's gate?

XIX.

By toppling convent crown'd,
By forest floor that clothe the shaggy steep,
By meads where sun-brown'd skies in brown'd,
By glens, whose sunless shrubs must weep,
By crags that gild the greenest bough,
By cliffs that from cliff to valley leap,
By willow bank, the willow branch below,
By one and many means, with varied beauty glow.

XX.

Which the many-winding way,
Which the longer as you go,
Which the more verdant survey,
Which the house of woe:—
Which the little relics show,

And sundry legends to the stranger tell:
Here impious men have punish'd been, and lo!
Deep in yon cave Honorius long did dwell,
In hope to merit Heaven by making earth a Hell.

XXI.

And here and there, as up the crags you spring,
Mark many rude-carved crosses near the path:
Yet deem not these devotion's offering—
These are memorials frail of murderous wrath:
For whoso'er the shrieking victim hath
Pour'd forth his blood beneath the assassin's knife,
Some hand erects a cross of mouldering lath;
And grove and glen with thousand such are rife
Throughout this purple land, where law secures not life.

XXII.

On sloping mounds, or in the vale beneath,
Are domes where whilome kings did make repair;
But now the wild flowers round them only breathe;
Yet ruin'd splendor still is lingering there:
And yonder towers the Prince's palace fair:
There thou too, Vatheki England's wealthiest son,
Once form'd thy Paradise, as not aware
When wanton Wealth her mightiest deeds hath done,
Meek Peace voluptuous lures was ever wont to shun.

XXIII.

Here didst thou dwell, here schemes of pleasure
plan,
Beneath yon mountain's ever-beauteous brow:
But now, as if a thing unblest by Man,
Thy fairy dwelling is as lone as thou!
Here giant woods a passage scarce allow
To hells deserted, portals gaping wide:
Fresh lessons to the thinking bosom, how
Vain are the pleasures on earth supplied;
Swept into wrecks anon by Time's ungentle tide!

XXIV.

Behold the hall where chiefs were late convened!
Oh! dome displeasing unto British eye!
With diadem bright foolcap, lo! a fend,
A little fend that scoffs incessantly.
There sit in parchment robe array'd, and by
His side is hung a seal and sable scroll,
Where blazon'd glare names known to chivalry,
And sundry signatures adorn the roll,
Whereat the Urohin points, and laughs with all his soul.

XXV.

Convention is the dwarfish demon styled
That foil'd the knights in Marialva's dome:
Of brains (if brains they had) he them beguiled,
And turn'd a nation's shallow joy to gloom.
Here Folly dash'd to earth the victor's plume,
And Policy regain'd what arms had lost:
For chiefs like ours in vain may laurels bloom!
Woe to the conqu'ring, not the conquer'd host,
Since baffled Triumph droops on Lusitania's coast!

fin'd by the Portuguese to their countrymen, but that Englishmen were daily butchered; and so far from redress being obtained, we were requested not to interfere if we perceived any compatriot deserting himself against his allies. I was once stopped in the way to the theatre at eight o'clock in the evening, when the streets were not more empty than they generally are at that hour, opposite in an open shop, and in a carriage with a friend: had we not fortunately been armed,
I have not the least doubt that we should have "adorned a bale" instead of telling one. The crime of assassination is not confined to Portugal; in Sicily and Malta we are knocked on the head at a handsome average nightly, and not a Sicilian or Maltese is ever punished!

‡ The Convention of Cintra was signed in the palace of the Marquess Marialva.

XXVI.

And ever since that martial synod met,
Britannia sickens, Cintra! at thy name;
And folks in office at the mention fret,
And faint would blush, if blush they could, for shame.

How will posterity the deed proclaim!
Will not our own and fellow nations sneer,
To view these champions cheated of their fame,
By foes in fight o'erthrown, yet victors here,
Where Scorn her finger points through many a coming year?

XXVII.

So deem'd the Childe, as o'er the mountains he Did take his way in military guise:
Sweet was the scene, yet soon he thought to flee,
More restless than the swallow in the skies:
Though here awhile he learn'd to moralize,
For Meditation fix'd at times on him;
And conscious Reason whisper'd to despise
His early youth, amidst in maddest whim;
But as he gazed on truth his aching eyes grew dim.

XXVIII.

To horse! to horse! he quits, for ever quits
A scene of peace, though soothing to his soul:
Again he ruses from his moping fits,
But seeks not now the harlot and the bowl.
Onward he flies, nor fix'd as yet the goal
Where he shall rest him on his pilgrimage;
And o'er him many changing scenes must roll
Ere toll his thirst for travel can assuage,
Or he shall calm his breast, or learn experience sage.

XXIX.

Yet Mafrá shall one moment claim delay,
Where dwelt of yore the Lusians' luckless queen;*
And church and court did mingle their array,
And mass and revel were alternate seen;
Lordlings and freres—ill-sorted fry I ween!
But here the Babylonian whore hath built
A dome, where flaunts she in such glorious sheen,
That men forget the blood which she hath spilt,
And bow the knee to Pomp that loves to varnish guilt.

XXX.

O'er vales that teem with fruits, romantic hills
(Oh, that such hills upheld a freeborn race),
Whereon to gaze the eye with joyance fills,
Childe Harold wends through many a pleasant place.
Though sluggards deem it but a foolish chase,
And marvel men should quit their easy chair,
The tollsome way, and long, long leagues to trace,
Oh! there is sweetness in the mountain air,
And life, that bloated Ease can never hope to share.

XXXI.

More bleak to view the hills at length recede,
And, less luxuriant, smoother vales extend;

Immense horizon-bounded plains succeed!
Far as the eye discerns, withouten end,
Spain's realms appear whereon her shepherds tend Flocks, whose rich fleece right well the trader knows—

Now must the pastor's arm his lambs defend:
For Spain is compass'd by unyielding foes,
And all must shield their all, or share Subjection's

XXXII.

Where Lusitania and her Sister meet,
Deem ye what bounds the rival realms divide?
Or are the jealous queens of nations greet,
Doth Tayo interpose his mighty tide?
Or dark Sierras rise in craggy pride?
Or fence of art, like China's waxy wall?—
No barrier wall, no river deep and wide,
No horrid crags, nor mountains dark and tall,
Rise like the rocks that part Hispania's land from Gaul:

XXXIII.

But these between a silver streamlet glides,
And scarce a name distinguisheth the brook,
Though rival kingdoms press its verdant sides.
Here leans the idle shepherd on his crook,
And vacant on the rippling waves doth look,
That peaceful still 'twixt bitter foemen flow;
For proud each peasant as the noblest duke:
Well doth the Spanish hind the difference know
'Twixt him and Lusian slave, the lowest of the low.†

XXXIV.

But ere the mingling bounds have far been pass'd,
Dark Guadiana rolls his power along
In sullen billows, murmuring and vast,
So noted ancient roundelays among.
Whilome upon his banks did legions throng
Of Moor and Knight, in mailed splendor drest:
Here ceased the swift their race, here sunk the strong;
The Paynim turban and the Christian crest
Mix'd on the bleeding stream, by floating hosts oppress'd.

XXXV.

Oh, lovely Spain! renown'd, romantic land!
Where is that standard which Pelagio bore,
When Cava's traitor sire first call'd the band
That dyed thy mountain streams with Gothic gore?
Where are those bloody banners which of yore
Waved o'er thy sons, victorious to the gale,
And drove at last the spoilers to their shore?
Red gleam'd the cross, and waned the crescent pale,
While Afric's echoes thrill'd with Moorish matrons' wail.

XXXVI.

Teems not each ditty with the glorious tale?
Ah! such, alas! the hero's amplest fate!
When granite moulders and when records fail,
A peasant's plaint prolongs his dubious date.

* Direct references to the historical notes of the Appendix will be made hereafter throughout the volume by small, bold-faced figures, thus (i).

† As I found the Portuguese, so I have characterised them. That they are since improved, at least in courage, is evident. The late exploits of Lord Wellington have effaced the follies of Cintra. He has, indeed, done wonders: he has, perhaps, changed the character of a nation, reconciled rival superstitious, and baffled an enemy who never retreated before his predecessors.—1813.

‡ Count Julian's daughter, the Helen of Spain. Pelagius preserved his independence in the fastnesses of the Asturias, and the descendants of his followers, after some centuries, completed their struggle by the conquest of Granada. "Almost all the Spanish historians, as well as the voice of tradition, ascribe the invasion of the Moors to the forcible violation by Roderick upon Florida, called by the Moors Caba or Cava. She was the daughter of Count Julian, one of the Gothic monarch's principal lieutenants, who, when the crime was perpetrated, was engaged in the defence of Ceuta against the Moors. In his indignation at the ingratitude of his sovereign and the dishonor of his daughter, Count Julian forgot the duties of a Christian and a patriot, and, forming an alliance with Musa, then the Caliph's lieutenant in Africa, he countenanced the invasion of Spain by a body of Saracens and Africans, commanded by the celebrated Tarik; the issue of which was the defeat and death of Roderick, and the occupation of almost the whole peninsula by the Moors."

Pride! bend thine eye from heaven to thine estate,
See how the lofty shrink into a song!
Can Voltaire, Piller, Pile, preserve thee great?
Or must thou trust Tradition's simple tongue,
When Flattery flatters with thee, and History does thee wrong?

XXXVII.

Awake, ye sons of Spain! awake! advance!
Lo! Chivalry, your ancient goddess, cries,
But yields not, as of old, her thirsty lance,
Nor shakes her crimson plumage in the skies:
Now on the smoke of hissing bolts she flies,
And speaks in thunder through yon engine's roar:
In every peal she calls—"Awake! arise!"
Say, is her voice more feeble than of yore,
When her war-song was heard on Andalusia's shore?

XXXVIII.

Hark! heard you not these hoofs of dreadful note?
Hearst not the clang of conflict on the heath?
Saw ye not whom the reeking sabre smote,
Nor moved your brethren as they sank beneath
Tyrants' and tyrants' blades?—the fire of death,
The hot fire, dash on high—from rock to rock
The valley tells that thousands cease to breathe?
Death rides upon the sulphury Siroc,
Not death stamps his foot, and nations feel the shock.

XXXIX.

Lo! where the Giant on the mountain stands,
His blood-red tresses deep'ning in the sun,
With death-shot glowing in his fiery hands,
And eye that scorseth all it glares upon;
Bastion to rob, now fixed, and now anon
Flashing afar,—and at his iron feet
Destruction cowers, to mark what deeds are done;
But on this morn three potent nations meet,
To slay before him slays the blood he deems most great.

XI.

Believe; it is a splendid sight to see
Of men who hath no friend, no brother there)
That civil coarbs of trait'd embroidery,
And virtuous arms that glitter in the air!
The valiant war-hounds rouse them from their sleep:
Their fangs, loud yelling for the prey!
The slain, but few the triumph share;
The brave who bear the chiefest prize away,
The rest scarce for joy can number their array.

XII.

They devoted to offer sacrifice;
The banner strange orisons on high;
The standards float the pale blue skies;
The France, Spain, Albion, Victory!
The ally, and the fond ally
The ever fights in vain,
Of home they could not die—
The Takara's plain,
That each pretends to gain.

XIII.

Ambition's honor'd fools!
That wrings their clay!
Behold the tools,
Which cast away
To pave their way

With human hearts—to what?—a dream alone.
Can despots compass aught that hails their sway?
Or call with truth one span of earth their own,
Save that wherein at last they crumble bone by bone?

XLIII.

Oh, Albuera! glorious field of grief!
As o'er thy plain the Pilgrim prick'd his steed,
Who could foresee thee, in a space so brief,
A scene where mingling foes should boast and bleed!
Peace to the periah'd! may the warrior's need
And tears of triumph their reward prolong!
Till others fall where other chieftains lead
Thy name shall circle round the gaping throng,
And shine in worthless lays the theme of transient song.*

XLIV.

Enough of Battle's minions! let them play
Their game of lives, and barter breath for fame:
Fame that will scarce re-animate their clay,
Though thousands fall to deck some single name.
In sooth 'twere sad to thwart their noble aim
Who strike, blest hirelings! for their country's good,
And die, that living might have proved her shame;
Periah'd, perchance, in some domestic feud,
Or in a narrower sphere wild Rapine's path pursued.

XLV.

Full swiftly Harold wends his lonely way
Where proud Sevilla triumphs unsubdued:
Yet is she free—the spoiler's wish'd-for prey!
Soon, soon shall Conquest's fiery foot intrude,
Blackening her lovely domes with traces rude.
Inevitable hour! 'Gainst fate to strive
Where Desolation plants her famish'd brood
Is vain, or Ilion, Tyre, might yet survive,
And Virtue vanquish all, and Murder cease to thrive.

XLVI.

But all unconscious of the coming doom,
The feast, the song, the revel, here abounds;
Strange modes of merriment the hours consume,
Nor bleed these patriots with their country's wounds:
Nor here War's clarion, but Love's rebeck,† sounds;
Here Polly still his votaries intralls,
And young-eyed Lewdness walks her midnight rounds;
Girt with the silent crimes of Capitals,
Still to the last kind Vice clings to the tottering walls.

XLVII.

Not so the rustic—with his trembling mate
He lurks, nor casts his heavy eye afar,
Lest he should view his vineyard desolate,
Blasted below the dun hot breath of war.
No more beneath soft Eve's consenting star
Fandango twirls his jocund castanet:
Ah, monarcho! could ye taste the mirth ye mar,
Not in the toils of Glory would ye fret;
The hoarse dull drum would sleep, and Man be happy yet!

XLVIII.

How carols now the lusty muleteer?
Of love, romance, devotion, is his lay,
As whilome he was wont the leagues to cheer,
His quick bells wildly jingling on the way?
No! as he speeds, he chants "Viva el Rey!"‡

Albuera*. It was written at the battle of Albuera.
†Polly, named on by a Spanish song.

‡"Viva el Rey Fernando!"—Long live King Ferdinand!— is the chorus of most of the Spanish patriotic songs. They are chiefly in disparage of the old King Charles, the queen, and the Prince of Peace. I have heard many of them; some

And checks his song to execrate Godoy,
The royal witto! Charles, and curse the day
When first Spain's queen beheld the black-eyed boy,
And gore-faced Treason sprung from her adulterate joy.

XLIX.

On yon long, level plain, at distance crown'd
With crags, whereon those Moorish turrets rest, Wide scatter'd hoof-marks dint the wounded
ground;
And, scathed by fire, the greensward's darken'd vest
Tells that the foe was Andalusia's guest:
Here was the camp, the watch-flame, and the host,
Here the bold peasant storm'd the dragon's nest;
Still does he mark it with triumphant boast,
And points to yonder cliffs, which oft were won and lost.

L.

And whomsoever along the path you meet
Bears in his cap the badge of crimson hue,
Which tells you whom to shun and whom to greet:
Wee to the man that walks in public view
Without of loyalty this token true!
Sharp is the knife, and sudden is the stroke;
And sorely would the Gallic foeman rue,
If subtle poniards, wrapt beneath the cloak,
Could blunt the sabre's edge, or clear the cannon's smoke.

LI.

At every turn Morena's dusky height
Sustains aloft the battery's iron load;
And, far as mortal eye can compass sight,
The mountain howitzer, the broken road,
The bristling palisade, the fosse o'erflow'd,
The station'd bands, the never-vacant watch,
The magazine in rocky durango stow'd,
The holster'd steed beneath the shed of thatch,
The ball-piled pyramid, the ever-blazing match,

LII.

Portend the deeds to come:—but he whose nod
Has tumbled feebler despots from their sway,
A moment pauseth ere he lifts the rod,
A little moment deigneth to delay:
Soon will his legions sweep through these their way;
The West must own the scourger of the world.
Ah, Spain! how sad will be thy reckoning-day,
When soars Gaul's Vulture, with his wings un-fur'd!
And thou shalt view thy sons in crowds to Hades hur'd!

LIII.

And must they fall, the young, the proud, the brave,
To swell one bloated Chief's unwholesome reign?
No step between submission and a grave,
The rise of rapine and the fall of Spain?
And doth the Power that man adores ordain

Their doom, nor heed the suppliant's appeal?
Is all that desperate Valor acts in vain?
And Counsel sage, and patriotic Zeal,
The Veteran's skill, Youth's fire, and Manhood's heart of steel?

LIV.

Is it for this the Spanish maid, aroused,
Hangs on the willow her unstrung guitar,
And, all unsex'd, the anlace hath espoused,
Sung the loud song, and dared the deed of war?
And she, whom once the semblance of a scar
Appall'd, an owl's larum chill'd with dread,
Now views the column-scattering bayonet jar,
The falchion flash, and o'er the yet warm dead
Stalks with Minerva's step where Mars might quake to tread.

LV.

Ye who shall marvel when you hear her tale,
Oh! had you known her in her softer hour,
Mark'd her black eye that mocks her coal-black veil,
Heard her light, lively tones in Lady's bower,
Seen her long locks that foll the painter's power,
Her fairy form, with more than female grace,
Scarce would you deem that Saragosa's tower
Beheld her smile in Danger's Gorgon face, Thin the closed ranks, and lead in Glory's fearful chase.

LVI.

Her lover sinks—she sheds no ill-timed tear;
Her chief is slain—she fills his fatal post;
Her fellows flee—she checks their base career;
The foe retires—she heads the rallying host:
Who can appease like her a lover's ghost?
Who can avenge so well a leader's fall?
What maid retrieve when man's dash'd hope is lost?
Who hang so dervely on the flying Gaul,
Foll'd by a woman's hand before a batter'd wall? §

LVII.

Yet are Spain's maids no race of Amazons,
But form'd for all the witching arts of love:
Though thus in arms they emulate her sons,
And in the horrid phalanx dare to move,
'Tis but the tender fierceness of the dove,
Pecking the hand that hovers o'er her mate:
In softness as in firmness far above
Remoter females, famed for sickening prate:
Her mind is nobler sure, her charms perchance as great.

LVIII.

The seal Love's dimpling finger hath impress'd
Denotes how soft that chin which bears his touch:
Her lips, whose kisses pout to leave their nest,
Bid man be valiant ere he merit such:
Her glance how wildly beautiful! how much
Hath Phoebus woo'd in vain to spoil her cheek,
Which glows yet smoother from his amorous clutch!
Who rowd the North for paler dames would seek?
How poor their forms appear! how languid, wan, and weak!

of the air are beautiful. Don Manuel Godoy, the Princeps de Paz, of an ancient but decayed family, was born at Badajoz, on the frontier of Portugal, and was originally in the ranks of the Spanish guards, till his person attracted the queen's eyes, and raised him to the dukedom of Alcudia, &c., &c. It is to this man that the Spaniards uniformly impute the ruin of their country.

* The red cockade, with "Fernando VII." in the centre.

† All who have seen a battery will recollect the pyramidal form in which shot and shells are piled. The Sierra Nevada was fortified in every dell through which I passed in my way to Seville.

§ Such were the exploits of the Maid of Saragosa, who by her valor elevated herself to the highest rank of heroines. When the author was at Seville she walked daily on the Prado, decorated with medals and orders by command of the Junta. The exploits of Augustina, the famous heroine of both the sieges of Saragosa, are recorded at length in Southey's History of the Peninsular War. At the time when she first attracted notice by mounting a battery where her lover had fallen, and working a gun in his room, she was in her twenty-second year, exceedingly pretty, and in a soft feminine style of beauty.

LXXI.

All have their fooleries—not alike are thine,
 Fair Cadiz, rising o'er the dark blue sea!
 Soon as the matin bell proclaimeth nine,
 Thy saint-adorn'd count the rosary:
 Much is the VIRGIN teased to shrieve them free
 (Well do I ween the only virgin there)
 From crimes as numerous as her beadsmen be;
 Then to the crowded circus forth they fare:
 Young, old, high, low, at once the same diversion share.

LXXII.

The lists are oped, the spacious arena clear'd,
 Thousands on thousands piled are seated round;
 Long ere the first loud trumpet's note is heard,
 No vacant space for lated wight is found:
 Here dons, grandees, but chiefly dames abound,
 Skill'd in the ogle of a roguish eye,
 Yet ever well inclined to heal the wound;
 None through their cold disdain are doom'd to die.
 As moon-struck bards complain, by Love's sad archery.

LXXIII.

Hush'd is the din of tongues—on gallant steeds,
 With milk-white crest, gold spur, and light-poised lances,
 Four cavaliers prepare for venturous deeds,
 And lowly bending to the lists advance;
 High are their scarfs, their chargers fealily prance:
 If in the dangerous game they shine to-day,
 The crowd's loud shout and ladies' lovely glance,
 Best prize of better acts, they bear away,
 And all that kings or chiefs e'er gain their tolls repay.

LXXIV.

In costly sheen and gaudy cloak array'd,
 But all aloof, the light-limb'd Matadore
 Stands in the centre, eager to invade
 The lord of lowing herds; but not before
 The ground, with cautious tread, is traversed o'er,
 Lest aght unseen should lurk to thwart his speed:
 His arms a dart, he fights aloof, no more
 Can man achieve without the friendly steed—
 Alas! too oft condemn'd for him to bear and bleed.

LXXV.

Thrice sounds the clarion: lo! the signal falls,
 The den expands, and Expectation mute
 Gapes round the silent circle's peopled walls.
 Bounds with one lashing spring the mighty brute,
 And, wildly staring, spurns, with sounding foot,
 The sand, nor blindly rushes on his foe:
 Here, there, he points his threatening front, to smite
 His first attack, wide waving to and fro
 His angry tail; red rolls his eye's dilated glow.

LXXVI.

Sudden he stops; his eye is fix'd: away,
 Away, thou heedless boy! prepare the spear:
 Now is thy time to perish, or display
 The skill that yet may check his mad career.
 With well-timed croupe the nimble coursers veer;
 On foams the bull, but not uncathod he goes;
 Streams from his flank the crimson torrent clear;
 He flies, he wheels, distracted with his throes;
 Dart follows dart; lance, lance; loud bellowings speak his woes.

LXXVII.

Again he comes; nor dart nor lance avail,
 Nor the wild plunging of the tortured horse;
 Though man and man's avenging arms assail,
 Vain are his weapons, vain is his force.
 One gallant steed is stretch'd a mangled corse;

Another, hideous sight! unseam'd appears,
 His gory chest unweils life's panting source;
 Though death-struck, still his feeble frame he rears;
 Staggering, but stemming all, his lord unharmed he bears.

LXXVIII.

Foiled, bleeding, breathless, furious to the last,
 Full in the centre stands the bull at bay,
 'Mid wounds, and clinging darts, and lances brast,
 And foes disabled in the brutal fray:
 And now the Matadores around him play,
 Shake the red cloak and poise the ready brand:
 Once more through all he bursts his thundering
 way—
 Vain rage! the mantle quits the conyng hand,
 Wraps his fierce eye—'tis past—he sinks upon the sand!

LXXIX.

Where his vast neck just mingles with the spine,
 Sheathed in his form the deadly weapon lies.
 He stops—he starts—disdaining to decline:
 Slowly he falls, amidst triumphant cries,
 Without a groan, without a struggle dim.
 The decorated car appears—on high
 The corse is piled—sweet sight for vulgar eyes—
 Four steeds that spurn the rein, as swift as ah,
 Hurl the dark bulk along, scarce seen in dashing by.

LXXX.

Such the ungentle sport that oft invites
 The Spanish maid, and cheers the Spanish swain.
 Nurtured in blood betimes, his heart delights
 In vengeance, gloating on another's pain.
 What private feuds the troubled village stain!
 Though now one phalanx'd host should meet the foe,
 Enough, alas! in humble homes remain,
 To meditate 'gainst friends the secret blow,
 For some slight cause of wrath, whence life's warm stream must flow.

LXXXI.

But Jealousy has fled: his bars, his bolts,
 His wither'd sentinel, Duenna sage!
 And all whereat the generous soul revolts,
 Which the stern dotard deem'd he could encage,
 Have pass'd to darkness with the vanish'd age.
 Who late so free as Spanish girls were seen
 (Ere War uprose in his volcanic rage),
 With braided tresses bounding o'er the green,
 While on the gay dance shone Night's lover-loving Queen?

LXXXII.

Oh! many a time and oft had Harold loved,
 Or dream'd he loved, since rapture is a dream;
 But now his wayward bosom was unmoved,
 For not yet had he drunk of Lethe's stream;
 And lately had he learn'd with truth to deem
 Love has no gift so grateful as his wings:
 How fair, how young, how soft soe'er he seem,
 Full from the fount of Joy's delicious springs
 Some bitter o'er the flowers its bubbling venom flings.

LXXXIII.

Yet to the beauteous form he was not blind,
 Though now it moved him as it moves the wise:
 Not that Philosophy on such a mind
 E'er deign'd to bend her chastely-awful eyes:
 But Passion raves itself to rest, or flies;
 And Vice, that digs her own voluptuous tomb,
 Had buried long his hopes, no more to rise:
 Pleasure's pall'd victim! life-aborring gloom
 Wrote on his faded brow curst Cain's unresting doom.

Some native blood was seen thy streets to dye,
A traitor only fell beneath the feud : *
Here all were noble, save Nobility !
None hug'd a conqueror's chain, save fallen Chiv-arly !

LXXXVI.

Such be the sons of Spain, and strange her fate !
They fight for freedom who were never free,
A kingless people for a nerveless state ;
Her vassals combat when their chieftains flee,
True to the veriest slaves of Treachery :
Fond of a land which gave them nought but
life,
Pride points the path that leads to Liberty ;
Back to the struggle, baffled in the strife,
War, war is still the cry, " War even to the knife ! " †

LXXXVII.

Ye who would more of Spain and Spaniards
know,
Go, read what'er is writ of bloodiest strife :
What'er keen Vengeance urged on foreign foe
Can act, is acting there against man's life :
From flashing scimitar to secret knife,
War mouldeth there each weapon to his need—
So may he guard the sister and the wife,
So may he make each curs'd oppressor bleed,
So may such foes deserve the most remorseless deed !

LXXXVIII.

Flows there a tear of pity for the dead ?
Look o'er the ravage of the reeking plain ;
Look on the hands with female slaughter red ;
Then to the dogs resign the unburied slain,
Then to the vulture let each corpse remain,
Albeit unworthy of the prey-bird's maw ;
Let their bleach'd bones, and blood's unbleaching
Spain,
Long mark the battle-field with hideous awe :
Thus only may our sons conceive the scenes we saw !

LXXXIX.

Nor yet, alas ! the dreadful work is done :
Fresh legions pour adown the Pyrenees ;
It deepens still, the work is scarce begun,
Nor mortal eye the distant and foreseen.
Fall'n nations gaze on Spain ; if freed, she frees
More than her fell Pizarro once enchain'd :
Strange retribution ! now Columbia's ease
Repairs the wrongs that Quito's sons sustain'd, While o'er the parent clime prowls Murder un-strain'd.

XC.

Not all the blood at Talavera shed,
Not all the marvels of Barossa's fight,
Not Albuera lavish of the dead,
Have won for Spain her well-asserted right.
When shall her Olive-Branch be free from blight ?

* Alluding to the conduct and death of Solano, the government of Cadix, in May, 1808.

† " War to the knife "—Palafox's answer to the French general at the siege of Saragosa.

‡ The Honorable John Winkfield, of the Guardia, who died of a fever at Coimbra (May 14, 1811). I had known him ten years, the better half of his life, and the happiest part of mine. In the short space of one month I have lost her who gave me being, and most of those who had made that being tolerable. To me the lines of Young are no fiction :—

" Inextinguish'd arber ! could not one suffice ?

Thy shaft few throes, and thrice my peace was slain,
And thrice are thrice you moon had fill'd her horn."

I should have ventured a verse to the memory of the late
Charles Skinner Matthews, Fellow of Downing College, Cam-19

When shall she breathe her from the blushing toil ?
How many a doubtful day shall sink in night
Ere the Frank robber turn him from his spoil,
And Freedom's stranger-trees grow native of the soil !

XCI.

And thou, my friend ! †—since unavailing woe Bursts from my heart, and mingles with the strain—
Had the sword laid thee with the mighty low,
Pride might forbid e'en Friendship to complain :
But thus uniaur'd to descend in vain,
By all forgotten save the lonely breast,
And mix unbleeding with the boasted slain,
While Glory crowns so many a meaner crest !
What hadst thou done to sink so peacefully to rest !

XCII.

Oh, known the earliest, and esteem'd the most !
Dear to a heart where nought was left so dear !
Though to his hopeless days for ever lost,
In dreams I may not see thee here !
And Morn in secret shall renew the tear
Of Consciousness awaking to her woe,
And Fancy bower o'er thy bloodless bier,
Till my frail frame return to whence it rose,
And mourn'd and mourner lie united in repose.

XCIII.

Here is one fyfte of Harold's pilgrimage :
Ye who of him may further seek to know
Shall find some tidings in a future page,
If he that rhymeth now may scribble moe.
Is this too much ? stern Critic ! say not so :
Patience ! and ye shall hear what he beheld
In other lands, where he was doom'd to go :
Lands that contain the monuments of Eld,
Ere Greece and Grecian arts by barbarous hands were quell'd.

CANTO THE SECOND.

I.

COME, blue-eyed maid of heaven !—but thou, alas !
Didst never yet one mortal song inspire—
Goddess of Wisdom ! here thy temple was,
And is, despite of war and wasting fire, ‡
And years, that bade thy worship to expire :
But worse than steel, and flame, and ages slow,
Is the dread sceptre and dominion dire
Of men who never felt the sacred glow
That thoughts of thee and thine on polish'd breasts bestow.

bridge, were he not too much above all praise of mine. His powers of mind shown in the attainment of greater honors, against the ablest candidates, than those of any graduate on record at Cambridge, have sufficiently established his fame on the spot where it was acquired ; while his softer qualities live in the recollection of friends who loved him too well to envy his superiority. Matthews, the Mol of Lord Byron at college, was drowned, while bathing in the Cam, on the 21 of August.

‡ Part of the Acropolis was destroyed by the explosion of a magazine during the Venetian siege.—On the highest part of Lycabettus, as Chandler was informed by an eye-witness, the Venetians, in 1687, placed four mortars and six pieces of cannon, when they battered the Acropolis. One of the bombs was fatal to some of the sculpture on the west front of the Parthenon.

Yet these proud pillars claim no passing sigh;
Unmoved the Moslem sits, the light Greek carols by.

XI.

But who, of all the plunderers of yon fane
On high, where Pallas linger'd, loth to see
The latest relic of her ancient reign;
The last, the worst, dull spoiler, who was he?
Blush, Caledonia! such thy son could be!
England! I joy no child he was of thine:
Thy freeborn men should spare what once was free;
Yet they could violate each saddening shrine,
And bear these altars o'er the long-reluctant brine.

XII.

But most the modern Pict's ignoble boast,
To rive what Goth, and Turk, and Time hath spared;¹

Cold as the crags upon his native coast,
His mind as barren and his heart as hard,
Is he whose head conceived, whose hand prepared,
Aught to displace Athens's poor remains:
Her sons, too weak the sacred shrine to guard,
Yet felt some portion of their mother's pains,²
And never knew, till then, the weight of Despot's chains.

XIII.

What! shall it e'er be said by British tongue,
Albion was happy in Athena's tears?
Though in thy name the slaves her bosom wrung,
Tell not the deed to blushing Europe's ears;
The ocean queen, the free Britannia, bears
The last poor plunder from a bleeding land:
Yes, she, whose gen'rous aid her name endears,
Tore down those remnants with a harpy's hand,
Which envious Eld forbore, and tyrants left to stand.

XIV.

Where was thine Ægis, Pallas! that appall'd
Stern Alaric and Havoc on their way?
Where Pelæus' son? whom Hell in vain intrall'd,
His shade from Hades upon that dread day
Bursting to light in terrible array!
What! could not Pluto spare the chief once more,
To scare a second robber from his prey?
Idly he wander'd on the Stygian shore,
Nor now preserved the walls he loved to shield before.

XV.

Cold is the heart, fair Greece! that looks on thee,
Nor feels as lovers o'er the dust they loved;
Dull is the eye that will not weep to see
Thy walls defaced, thy mouldering shrines removed
By British hands, which it had best behoved
To guard those relics ne'er to be restored.
Curst be the hour when from their isle they roved,
And once again thy hapless bosom gored,
And snatch'd thy shrinking Gods to northern climes abhor'd!

XVI.

But where is Harold? shall I then forget
To urge the gloomy wanderer o'er the wave?

Little reck'd he of all that men regret;
No loved one now in feign'd lament could rave;
No friend the parting hand extended gave,
Ere the cold stranger pass'd to other climes:
Hard is his heart whom charms may not enslave;
But Harold felt not as in other times,
And left without a sigh the land of war and crimes.

XVII.

He that has sail'd upon the dark blue sea
Has view'd at times, I wean, a full fair sight;
When the fresh breeze is fair as breeze may be,
The white sail set, the gallant frigate tight;
Masts, spires, and strand retiring to the right,
The glorious main expanding o'er the bow,
The convoy spread like wild swans in their flight,
The dullest sailer wearing bravely now,
So gayly curl the waves before each dashing prow.

XVIII.

And oh, the little warlike world within!
The well-reed guns, the netted canopy,³
The hoarse command, the busy humming din,
When, at a word, the tops are mann'd on high:
Hark, to the Boatwain's call, the cheering cry!
While through the seaman's hand the tackle glides;

Or schoolboy Midshipman that, standing by,
Strains his shrill pipe as good or ill betides,
And well the docile crew that skillful urchin guides.

XIX.

White is the glassy deck, without a stain,
Where on the watch the staid Lieutenant walks:
Look on that part which sacred doth remain
For the lone chieftain, who majestic stalks,
Silent and fear'd by all—not off he talks
With aught beneath him, if he would preserve
That strict restraint, which broken, ever balks
Conquest and Fame: but Britons rarely swerve From law, however stern, which tends their strength to nerve.

XX.

Blow! swiftly blow, thou keel-compelling gale!
Till the broad sun withdraws his lessening ray;
Then must the pennant-bearer slacken sail,
That lagging barks may make their lazy way.
Ah! grievance sore, and listless dull delay,
To waste on sluggish hulks the sweetest breeze!
What leagues are lost, before the dawn of day,
Thus loitering pendive on the willing sea,
The flapping sail haul'd down to halt for logs like these!

XXI.

The moon is up; by Heaven, a lovely eve!
Long streams of light o'er dancing waves expand;
Now lads on shore may sigh, and maids believe:
Such be our fate when we return to land!
Meantime some rude Arion's restless love
Wakes the brisk harmony that sailors love;
A circle there of merry listeners stand,
Or to some well-known measure feastily move,
Thoughtless, as if on shore they still were free to tune.

* I cannot resist availing myself of the permission of my friend Dr. Clarke, whose name requires no comment with the public, but whose sanction will add tenfold weight to my testimony, to insert the following extract from a very obliging letter of his to me, as a note to the above lines:—"When the last of the metopes was taken from the Parthenon, and in moving of it a great part of the superstructure, with one of the triglyphs, was thrown down by the workmen whom Lord Elgin employed, the Didar, who beheld the mischief done to the building, took his pipe from his mouth, dropped a tear, and in a supplicating tone of voice said to Lusteri, Take! I was present." The Didar alluded to was the father of the present Didar.

† According to Zosimus, Minerva and Achilles frightened Alaric from the Acropolis; but others relate that the Gothic king was nearly as mischievous as the Scottish peer. See Chandler.

‡ To prevent blocks or splinters from falling on deck during action.

XXII.

Through Calpe's straits survey the steepy shore;
Europe and Africa on each other gaze!
Lands of the dark-eyed Maid and dusky Moor
Alike beheld beneath pale Heate's blaze:
How softly on the Spanish shore she plays,
Disclosing rock, and slope, and forest brown,
Distinct, though darkening with her waning
phase;

But Mauritania's giant shadows frown,
From mountain cliffs to coast descending sombre down.

XXIII.

'Tis night, when Meditation bids us feel
We once have loved, though love is at an end:
The heart, lone mourner of its baffled zeal,
Though friendless now, will dream it had a friend.
Who with the weight of years would wish to bend,
When Youth itself survives young Love and Joy?
Alas! when mingling souls forget to bland,
Death hath but little left him to destroy!
Ah, happy years! once more who would not be a boy?

XXIV.

Thus landing o'er the vessel's leaving side,
To gaze on Dian's wave-reduted sphere,
The soul forgets her schemes of hope and pride,
And flies unconsciously o'er each backward year.
None are so desolate but something dear,
Dearer than self, possesses or possess'd
A thought, and claims the homage of a tear;
A feeling pang! of which the weary breast
Would still, albeit in vain, the heavy heart divest.

XXV.

To sit on rocks, to muse o'er food and fall,
To dole, when the forest's shady scene,
Where Nature that own not man's dominion dwell,
And where the foot hath ne'er or rarely been;
To tread the trackless mountain all unseen,
To see the wild flock that never needs a fold;
To roam o'er steeps and frowning falls to lean;
To sit not solitude: 'tis but to boid converse with Nature's charms, and view her stores unroll'd.

XXVI.

But to sit on the ground, the hum, the shock of men,
To kneel, to weep, to feel, and to possess;
To gaze on the world's tired denizen,
To gaze on the man, none whom we can bless;
To gaze on the shivering shrinking from distress!
To gaze on the kindred consciousness subdued,
To gaze on the world seem to smile the less,
To gaze on the fellow'd, sought, and used;
To gaze on the world; this, this is solitude!

XXVII.

He of godly eremite,
Whose shrine may be seen,
Who on the giant height,
Who on the blue, skies so serene,
Who at such an hour hath been
On that hallow'd spot;
Who from the 'witching scene,
That such had been his lot,
Would he had almost forgot.

XXVIII.

Following course, the track
Of a trace behind;

Pass we the calm, the gale, the change, the tack,
And each well-known caprice of wave and wind;
Pass we the joys and sorrows sailors find,
Coop'd in their winged sea-girt citadel;
The foul, the fair, the contrary, the kind,
As breezes rise and fall and billows swell,
Till on some jocund morn—lo, land! and all is well.

XXIX.

But not in silence pass Calypso's isles,
The sister tenants of the middle deep;
There for the weary still a haven smiles,
Though the fair goddess long hath ceased to weep,
And o'er her cliffs a fruitless watch to keep
For him who dared prefer a mortal bride:
Here, too, his boy essay'd the dreadful leap
Stern Mentor urged from high to yonder tide;
While thus of both bereft, the nymph-queen doubly aigh'd.

XXX.

Her reign is past, her gentle glories gone:
But trust not this: too easy youth, beware!
A mortal sovereign holds her dangerous throne,
And thou mayst find a new Calypso there.
Sweet Florence! could another ever share
This wayward, loveless heart, it would be thine:
But check'd by every tie, I may not dare
To cast a worthless offering at thy shrine,
Nor ask so dear a breast to feel one pang for mine.

XXXI.

Thus Harold deem'd, as on that lady's eye
He look'd, and met its beam without a thought
Save Admiration glancing harmless by:
Love kept aloof, albeit not far remote,
Who knew his votary often lost and caught,
But knew him as his worshipper no more,
And ne'er again the boy his bosom sought:
Since now he vainly urged him to adore,
Well deem'd the little God his ancient sway was o'er.

XXXII.

Fair Florence † found, in sooth with some amaze,
One who, 't was said, still sigh'd to all he saw,
Withstand, unmoved, the lustre of her gaze,
Which others hall'd with real or mimic awe,
Their hope, their doom, their punishment, their law;

All that gay Beauty from her bondsmen claims:
And much she marvel'd that a youth so raw
Nor felt, nor feign'd at least, the oft-told flames,
Which, though sometimes they frown, yet rarely anger flames.

XXXIII.

Little knew she that seeming marble heart,
Now mask'd in silence or withheld by pride,
Was not unskilful in the spoiler's art,
And spread its snares licentious far and wide;
Nor from the base pursuit had turn'd aside,
As long as aught was worthy to pursue:
But Harold on such arts no more relied;
And had he doted on those eyes so blue,
Yet never would he join the lover's whining crew.

XXXIV.

Not much he knew, I ween, of woman's breast,
Who thinks that wanton thing is won by sighs;
What careth she for hearts when once possess'd!
Do proper homage to thine idol's eyes;
But not too humbly, or she will despise

† Goss is said to have been the island of Calypso.

‡ For an account of this accomplished but eccentric lady, whose acquaintance the poet formed at Malta, see Miscellaneous Poems, September, 1808. "To Florence," page 222.

These and thy suit, though told in moving tropes :
Disguise ev'n tenderness, if thou art wise ;
Brisk Confidence still best with woman cooes :
Pique her and soothe in turn, soon Passion crowns thy hopes.

XXXV.

'Tis an old lesson ; Time approves it true,
And those who know it best, deplore it most ;
When all is won that all desire to woo,
The paltry prize is hardly worth the cost :
Youth wasted, minds degraded, honor lost,
Those are thy fruits, successful Passion ! these !
If, kindly cruel, early hope is crost,
Still to the last it rankles, a disease,
Not to be cured when love itself forgets to please.

XXXVI.

Away ! nor let me loiter in my song,
For we have many a mountain path to tread,
And many a varied shore to sail along ;
By pensive Sadness, not by Fiction, led—
Climes, fair withal as ever mortal head
Imagined in its little schemes of thought ;
Or e'er in new Utopias were read,
To teach man what he might be, or he ought ;
If that corrupted thing could ever such be taught.

XXXVII.

Dear Nature is the kindest mother still,
Though always changing in her aspect mild ;
From her bare bosom let me take my fill,
Her never-wean'd, though not her favor'd child.
Oh ! she is fairest in her features wild,
Where nothing polish'd dares pollute her path :
To me by day or night she ever smiled,
Though I have mark'd her when none other hath,
And sought her more and more, and loved her best in wrath.

XXXVIII.

Land of Albania ! where Iskander rose,
Thence of the young, and beacon of the wise,
And he his namesake, whose oft-baffled foes
Shrunk from his deeds of chivalrous emprise :
Land of Albania ! let me bend mine eyes
On thee, thou rugged nurse of savage men !
The cross descends, thy minarets arise,
And the pale crescent sparkles in the glen,
Through many a cypress grove within each city's ken.

XXXIX.

Childe Harold sail'd, and pass'd the barren spot
Where sad Penelope o'erlook'd the wave ; *
And onward view'd the mount, not yet forgot,
The lover's refuge, and the Lesbian's grave.
Dark Sappho ! could not verse immortal save
That breast imbued with such immortal fire ?
Could she not live who life eternal gave ?
If life eternal may await the lyre,
That only Heaven to which Earth's children may aspire.

XL.

'T was on a Grecian autumn's gentle eve
Childe Harold hall'd Leucadia's cape afar ; †
A spot he long'd to see, nor cared to leave :
Off did he mark the scenes of vanish'd war,
Actium, Lepanto, fatal Trafalgar ; ‡

Mark them unmoved, for he would not delight
(Born beneath some remote inglorious star)
In themes of bloody fray, or gallant fight,
But leathed the bravo's trade, and laugh'd at martial wight.

XLI.

But when he saw the evening star above
Leucadia's far-projecting rock of woe,
And hail'd the last resort of fruitless love,
He felt, or deem'd he felt, no common glow—
And as the stately vessel glided slow
Beneath the shadow of that ancient mount,
He watch'd the billows' melancholy flow,
And, sunk albeit in thought as he was wont,
More placid seem'd his eye, and smother'd his pallid front.

XLII.

Morn dawns : and with it stern Albania's hills,
Dark Suli's rocks, and Pindus' inland peak,
Robed half in mist, bedew'd with snowy rills,
Array'd in many a dun and purple streak,
Arise ; and, as the clouds along them break,
Disclose the dwelling of the mountaineer ;
Here roams the wolf, the eagle whets his beak,
Birds, beasts of prey, and wilder men appear,
And gathering storms around convulse the closing year.

XLIII.

Now Harold felt himself at length alone,
And bade to Christian tongues a long adieu ;
Now he adventured on a shore unknown,
Which all admire, but many dread to view :
His breast was arm'd 'gainst fate, his wants were few ;
Peril he sought not, but ne'er shrank to meet :
The scene was savage, but the scene was new ;
This made the ceaseless toll of travel sweet,
Beat back keen winter's blast, and welcomed summer's heat.

XLIV.

Here the red cross, for still the cross is here,
Though sadly soot'd 'd at by the circumcised,
Forgets that pride to pamper'd priesthood dear ;
Churchman and votary alike despoiled,
Foul Superstition ! howe'er disguised,
Idol, saint, virgin, prophet, crescent, cross,
For whatsoever symbol thou art prized,
Thou sacerdotal gain, but general loss !
Who from true worship's gold can separate thy dross ?

XLV.

Ambracia's gulf behold, where once was lost
A world for woman, lovely, harmless thing !
In yonder rippling bay, their naval host
Did many a Roman chief and Asian king §
To doubtful conflict, certain slaughter bring :
Look where the second Cæsar's trophies rose !
Now, like the hands that rear'd them, withering ;
Imperial anarchy, doubling human woe !
Gon ! was thy globe ordain'd for such to win and lose ?

XLVI.

From the dark barriers of that rugged clime,
E'en to the centre of Illyria's vales,

* Iliaca.

† Leucadia, now Santa Maura. From the promontory (the Lover's Leap) Sappho is said to have thrown herself.

‡ Actium and Trafalgar need no further mention. The battle of Lepanto, equally bloody and considerable, but less known, was fought in the Gulf of Patras. Here the author of Don Quixote lost his left hand.

§ It is said, that, on the day previous to the battle of Actium, Antony had thirteen kings at his levee.—"To-day"

(Nov. 13, "I saw the remains of the town of Actium, near which Antony lost the world, in a small bay, where two frigates could hardly manoeuvre : a broken wall is the sole remnant."—Byron to his Mother.

¶ Nicopolis, whose ruins are most extensive, is at some distance from Actium, where the wall of the Hippodrome survives in a few fragments. These ruins are large masses of brickwork, the bricks of which are joined by interstices of mortar as large as the bricks themselves, and equally durable.

Childe Harold pass'd o'er many a mount sublime,
Through lands scarce noticed in historic tales;
Yet in famed Attica such lovely dales
Are rarely seen; nor can fair Tempe boast
A charm they know not; loved Parnassus falls,
Though classic ground and consecrated most,
To match some spots that lurk within this lowering coast.

XLVII.

He pass'd bleak Pindus, Acherusia's lake,*
And left the primal city of the land,
And onwards did his further journey take
To greet Albania's chief,† whose dread command
Is lawless law; for with a bloody hand
He sways a nation, turbulent and bold;
Yet here and there some daring mountain band
Disdain his power, and from their rocky hold
Hurl their defiance far, nor yield, unless to gold.‡

XLVIII.

Monastic Zitsa!§ from thy shady brow,
Thou small but favor'd spot of holy ground!
Where'er we gaze, around, above, below,
What rainbow tints, what magic charms are found!
Rock, river, forest, mountain, all abound,
And bluest skies that harmonize the whole:
Beneath, the distant torrent's rushing sound
Tells where the volumed cataract doth roll
Between those hanging rocks, that shock yet please the soul.

XLIX.

Amidst the grove that crowns yon tufted hill,
Which, were it not for many a mountain high
Rising in lofty ranks, and loftier still,
Might well itself be deem'd of dignity,
The convent's white walls glisten fair on high:
The convent dwells the caloyer,|| nor rude is he,
Nor niggard of his cheer; the passer by
Is welcome still; nor heedless will he flee From hence, if he delight kind Nature's seen to see.

L.

Here in the sultriest season let him rest,
Fresh is the green beneath those aged trees;
Here winds of gentlest wing will fan his breast,
From heaven itself he may inhale the breeze;
The plain is far beneath—oh! let him seize
Pure pleasure while he can; the scorching ray
Here pierceth not, impregnate with disease:
Then let his length the loitering pilgrim lay,
And gaze, untired, the morn, the noon, the eve away.

LI.

Dusky and huge, enlarging on the sight,
Nature's volcanic amphitheatre,||

Chimæra's alps extend from left to right:
Beneath a living valley seems to stir;
Flocks play, trees wave, streams flow, the mountain fir

Nodding above; behold black Acheron! **
Once consecrated to the sepulchre.
Pluto! if this be hell I look upon,
Close shamed Elysium's gates, my shade shall seek for none.

LII.

Ne city's towers pollute the lovely view;
Unseen is Yanina, though not remote,
Vell'd by the screen of hills: here men are few,
Scanty the hamlet, rare the lonely cot:
But, peering down each precipice, the goat
Browseth; and, pensive o'er his scatter'd flock,
The little shepherd in his white capote††
Doth lean his boyish form along the rock,
Or in his cave awaits the tempest's short-lived shock.

LIII.

Oh! where, Dodona! in thine aged grove,
Prophetic fount and oracle divine?
What valley echo'd the response of Jove?
What trace remaineth of the Thunderer's shrine?
All, all forgotten—and shall man repine
That his frail bonds to fleeting life are broke?
Cease, fool! the fate of gods may well be thine:
Wouldst thou survive the marble or the oak?
When nations, tongues, and worlds must sink beneath the stroke!

LIV.

Epirus' bounds recede, and mountains fall;
Tired of up-gazing still, the wearied eye
Reposes gladly on so smooth a vale
As ever Spring yold in grassy dye:
E'en on a plain no humble beauties lie,
Where some bold river breaks the long expanse,
And woods along the banks are waving high,
Whose shadows in the glassy waters dance,
Or with the moonbeam sleep in midnight's solemn trance.

LV.

The sun had sunk behind vast Tomerit,‡‡
And Laos wide and fierce came roaring by;§§
The shades of wonted night were gathering yet,
When, down the steep banks winding warily,
Childe Harold saw, like meteors in the sky,
The glittering minarets of Tepalen,
Whose walls o'erlook the stream; and drawing nigh,
He heard the busy hum of warrior-men
Swelling the breeze that sigh'd along the lengthening glan.||||

* According to Pouqueville, the lake of Yanina: but Pouqueville is always out.

† The celebrated Ali Pacha. "The name of the Pacha is Ali, and he is considered a man of the finest abilities: he governs the whole of Albania (the ancient Illyricum), Epirus, and part of Macedonia."—Byron to his Mother.

‡ Five thousand Balloets, among the rocks and in the castle of Ball, withstood thirty thousand Albanians for eighteen years; the castle at last was taken by bribery. In this contest there were several acts performed not unworthy of the better days of Greece.

§ The convent and village of Zitsa are four hours' journey from Ioannina, or Yanina, the capital of the Pachaiah. In the valley the river Kalamas (once the Acheron) flows, and, not far from Zitsa, forms a fine cataract. The situation is perhaps the finest in Greece, though the approach to Delvinachi and parts of Acarnania and Ætolia may contest the prize. Delphi, Parnassus, and, in Attica, even Cape Colonna and Port Rapti, are very inferior; as also every scene in Ionis, or the Troad: I am almost inclined to add the approach to Constantinople: but, from the different features of the last, a comparison can hardly be made.

‡ The Greek monks are so called.

§ The Chimæra mountains appear to have been volcanic.

|| Now called Kalamas.

†† Albanian cloak.

‡‡ Anciently Mount Tomarus.

§§ The river Laos was full at the time the author passed it; and, immediately above Tepalen, was to the eye as wide as the Thames at Westminster; at least in the opinion of the author and his fellow-traveller. In the summer it must be much narrower. It certainly is the finest river in the Levant; neither Acheron, Alphons, Acheron, Scamander, nor Cayster, approached it in breadth or beauty.

|||| Ali Pacha, hearing that an Englishman of rank was in his dominions, left orders in Yanina, with the commandant, to provide a house, and supply me with every kind of necessary gratis. I rode out on the rider's horse, and saw the "daughters of himself and grandsons."—Byron's Letters.

LVI.

He pass'd the sacred Haram's silent tower,
And underneath the wide o'erarching gate
Survey'd the dwelling of this chief of power,
Where all around proclaim'd his high estate.
Amidst no common pomp the despot sat,
While busy preparation shook the court,
Slaves, eunuchs, soldiers, guests, and santons wait;
Within, a palace, and without, a fort:
Here men of every clime appear to make court.

LVII.

Richly caparison'd, a ready row
Of armed horse, and many a warlike store,
Circled the wide-extending court below;
Above, strange groups adorn'd the corridor;
And oft-times through the area's echoing door,
Some high-capp'd Tartar spur'd his steed away:
The Turk, the Greek, the Albanian, and the Moor,
Here mingled in their many-hued array.
While the deep war-drum's sound announced the close of day.

LVIII.

The wild Albanian kirtled to his knee,
With shawl-girt head and ornamented gun,
And gold-embroider'd garments, fair to see;
The crimson-scarfed men of Macedon;
The Delhi with his cap of terror on,
And crooked glaive; the lively, supple Greek;
And swarthy Nubia's mutilated son;
The bearded Turk, that rarely deigns to speak,
Master of all around, too potent to be meek,

LIX.

Are mix'd conspicuous: some recline in groups,
Scanning the motley scene that varies round;
There some grave Moslem to devotion stoops,
And some that smoke, and some that play, are found:
Here the Albanian proudly treads the ground;
Half-whispering there the Greek is heard to prate;
Hark! from the mosque the nightly solemn sound,
The Muezzin's call doth shake the minaret.
"There is no god but God!—to prayer—lo! God is great!"

LX.

Just at this season Ramazani's fast
Through the long day its penance did maintain;
But when the lingering twilight hour was past,
Revel and feast assumed the rule again:
Now all was bustle, and the menial train
Prepared and spread the plenteous board within;
The vacant gallery now seem'd made in vain,
But from the chambers came the mingling din,
As page and slave anon were passing out and in.

LXI.

Here woman's voice is never heard: apart,
And scarce permitted, guarded, veil'd, to move,
She yields to one her person and her heart,
Tamed to her cage, nor feels a wish to rove:
For, not unhappy in her master's love,
And joyful in a mother's gentlest cares,
Blest cares! all other feelings far above!
Herself more sweetly rears the babe she bears,
Who never quits the breast, no meaner passion shares.

LXII.

In marble-paved pavilion, where a spring
Of living water from the centre rose,

Whose bubbling did a genial freshness fling,
And soft voluptuous couches breathed repose,
Ali reclined, a man of war and woes:
Yet in his lineaments ye cannot trace,
While Gentleness her milder radiance throws
Along that aged venerable face,
The deeds that lurk beneath, and stain him with di disgrace.

LXIII.

It is not that yon hoary lengthening beard
Ill suits the passions which belong to youth;
Love conquers age—so Hadiz hath averr'd,
So sings the Telan, and he sings in sooth—
But crimes that scorn the tender voice of ruth,
Becoming all men ill, but most the man
In years, have mark'd him with a tiger's tooth;
Blood follows blood, and, through their mortal
span,
In bloodier acts conclude those who with blood began.*

LXIV.

'Mid many things most new to ear and eye
The Pilgrim rested here his weary feet,
And gazed around on Moslem luxury,
Till quickly wearied with that spacious seat
Of Wealth and Wantonness, the choice retreat
Of sated Grandeur from the city's noise:
And were it humbler, it in sooth were sweet;
But Peace abhorreth artificial joys,
And Pleasure, leagu'd with Pomp, the seat of both destroys.

LXV.

Pierce are Albania's children, yet they lack
Not virtues, were those virtues more mature.
Where is the foe that ever saw their back?
Who can so well the toll of war endure?
Their native fastnesses not more secure
Than they in doubtful time of troublous need:
Their wrath how deadly! but their friendship sure,
When Gratitude or Valor bids them bleed,
Unshaken rushing on where'er their chief may lead.

LXVI.

Childe Harold saw them in their chieftain's tower
Thronging to war in splendor and success;
And after view'd them, when, within their power,
Himself awhile the victim of distress;
That saddening hour when bad men hotlier press:
But these did abate him beneath their roof,
When less barbarians would have cheer'd him
less,
And fellow-countrymen have stood aloof—†
In aught that tries the heart how few withstand the proof!

LXVII.

It chanced that adverse winds once drove his bark
Full on the coast of Suli's shaggy shore,
When all around was desolate and dark;
To land was perilous, to sojourn more;
Yet for awhile the mariners forbore,
Dubious to trust where treachery might lurk:
At length they ventured forth, though doubting sore
That those who loathe alike the Frank and Turk
Might once again renew their ancient butcher-work.

LXVIII.

Vain fear! the Sullotes stretch'd the welcome
hand,
Led them o'er rocks and past the dangerous
==amp,

* The fate of Ali was precisely such as the poet anticipated. For a circumstantial account of his assassination, in February, 1822, see Walsh's Journey. His head was sent to Constantinople, and exhibited at the gates of the seraglio.

† Alluding to the wreckers of Cornwall.

Kinder than polish'd slaves, though not so bland,
And piled the hearth, and wrung their garments damp;
And fill'd the bowl, and trimm'd the cheerful lamp,
And spread their fare; though homely, all they had:
Such conduct bears Philanthropy's rare stamp:
To rest the weary and to soothe the sad,
Doth lesson happier men, and shames at least the bad.

LXIX.

It came to pass, that when he did address
Himself to quit at length this mountain land,
Combined marauders half-way barr'd egress,
And wasted far and near with glaive and brand;
And therefore did he take a trusty band
To traverse Acarnania's forest wide,
In war well season'd, and with labors tann'd,
Till he did greet white Achaëus' tide,
And from his further bank Ætolia's wolds espied.

LXX.

Where lone Utrakey forms its circling cove,
And weary waves retire to gleam at rest,
How brown the foliage of the green hill's grove,
Nodding at midnight o'er the calm bay's breast,
As winds come whispering lightly from the west,
Kissing, not ruffling, the blue deep's serene:
Here Harold was received a welcome guest;
Nor did he pass unmoved the gentle scene,
For many a joy could he from Night's soft presence glean.

LXXI.

On the smooth shore the night-fire brightly blazed,
The feast was done, the red wine circling fast,*
And be that unawares had there ygazed
With gaping wonderment had stared aghast;
For ere night's midmost, stillest hour was past,
The native revels of the troop began;
Each Palikar† his sabre from him cast,
And bounding hand in hand, man link'd to man,
Yelling their uncouth dirge, long danced the kirtled clan.

LXXII.

Childe Harold at a little distance stood,
And view'd, but not displeased, the revelry,
Nor hated harmless mirth, however rude:
In sooth, it was no vulgar sight to see
Their barbarous, yet their not indecent, glee;
And, as the flames along their faces gleam'd,
Their gestures nimble, dark eyes flashing free,
The long wild locks that to their girdles stream'd,
While thus in concert they this lay half sang, half scream'd:—

1.

TAMBOUR! Tambour! thy Tarum afar
Gives hope to the valiant, and promise of war;
All the sons of the mountains arise at the note,
Chimariot, Illyrian, and dark Suliote!‡

2.

Oh! who is more brave than a dark Suliote,
In his snowy caress and his shaggy capote?

To the wolf and the vulture he leaves his wild flock,
And descends to the plain like the stream from the rock.

3.

Shall the sons of Chimari, who never forgive
The fault of a friend, bid an enemy live?
I at those guns so unerring such vengeance forego?
What mark is so fair as the breast of a foe?

4.

Macedonia sends forth her invincible race;
For a time they abandon the cave and the chase;
But those scarfs of blood-red shall be redder, before
The sabre is sheathed and the battle is o'er.

5.

Then the pirates of Parga that dwell by the waves,
And teach the pale Franks what it is to be slaves,
Shall leave on the beach the long galley and oar,
And track to his covert the captive on shore.

6.

I ask not the pleasures that riches supply,
My sabre shall win what the feeble must buy;
Shall win the young bride with her long flowing hair,
And many a maid from her mother shall tear.

7.

I love the fair face of the maid in her youth,
Her carresses shall lull me, her music shall soothe;
Let her bring from her chamber the many-toned lyre,
And sing us a song on the fall of her sire.

8.

Remember the moment when Previsa fell,‡
The shrieks of the conquer'd, the conquerors' yell;
The roofs that we fired, and the plunder we shared,
The wealthy we slaughter'd, the lovely we spared.

9.

I talk not of mercy, I talk not of fear;
He neither must know who would serve the Vizier:
Since the days of our prophet the crescent ne'er saw
A chief ever glorious like Ali Pashaw.

10.

Dark Muchtar his son to the Danube is sped,
Let the yellow-hair'd‡‡ Gisors view his horse-
tail†† with dread;
When his Delhis‡‡ come dashing in blood o'er the banks,
How few shall escape from the Muscovite ranks!

11.

Solicitar!‡‡ unsheathe then our chief's scimitar:
Tambour! thy Tarum gives promise of war.
Ye mountains, that see us descend to the shore,
Shall view us as victors, or view us no more!

LXXIII.

Fair Greece! sad relics of departed worth! s, s
Immortal, though no more; though fallen, great!
Who now shall lead thy scatter'd children forth,
And long-accustom'd bondage uncreate?
Not such thy sons who whilome did await,

*The Albanian Muselmans do not abstain from wine, and, indeed, very few of the others.

†Palikar, shortened when addressed to a single person, from Palikasta, a general name for a soldier amongst the Greeks and Albanians who speak Romsio; it means, properly, "a lad."

‡‡ Drummer.

§ These stanzas are partly taken from different Albanians songs, as far as I was able to make them out by the exposition of the Albanians in Romsio and Italian.

‡ It was taken by storm from the French.

† Yellow is the epithet given to the Russians.

 Indel.

‡‡ The insignia of a Pacha.

‡‡ Horsemen, answering to our forlorn hope.

‡‡ Sword-bearer.

The hopeless warriors of a willing doom,
In bleak Thermopylæ's sepulchral strait—
Oh! who that gallant spirit shall resume, Leap from Eurotas' banks, and call thee from the tomb?

LXXIV.

Spirit of Freedom! when on Phyle's brow*
Thou sat'st with Thrasylulus and his train,
Couldst thou forebode the dismal hour which now
Dims the green beauties of thine Attic plain?
Not thirty tyrants now enforce the chain,
But every carle can lord it o'er thy land;
Nor rise thy sons, but idly rail in vain,
Trembling beneath the scourge of Turkish hand;
From birth till death enslaved; in word, in deed, unmann'd.

LXXV.

In all save form alone, how changed! and who
That marks the fire still sparkling in each eye,
Who but would deem their bosoms burn'd anew
With thy unquenched beam, lost Liberty!
And many dream withal the hour is nigh
That gives them back their fathers' heritage:
For foreign arms aid they fondly sigh,
Nor solely dare encounter hostile rage,
Or tear their name defiled from Slavery's mournful
page.

LXXVI.

Hereditary bondsmen! know ye not
Who would be free themselves must strike the blow?
By their right arms the conquest must be wrought?
Will Gaul or Muscovite redress ye? no!
True, they may lay your proud despoilers low,
But not for you will Freedom's altars flame.
Shades of the Helots! triumph o'er your foe!
Greece! change thy lords, thy state is still the same;
Thy glorious day is o'er, but not thy years of shame.

LXXVII.

The city won for Allah from the Glaur,
The Glaur from Othman's race again may wrest;
And the Seral's impenetrable tower
Receive the fiery Frank, her former guest;†
Or Wahab's rebel brood, who dared divest
The prophet's tomb of all its pious spoil.
May wind their path of blood along the West;
But ne'er will freedom seek this fated soil,
But slave succeed to slave through years of endless toil.

LXXVIII.

Yet mark their mirth—are lenten days begin,
That penance which their holy rites prepare
To shrieve from man his weight of mortal sin,
By daily abstinence and nightly prayer:
But ere his sackcloth garb Repentance wear,
Some days of joyance are decreed to all,
To take of pleasure each his secret share,
In motley robe to dance at masking ball,
And join the mimic train of merry Carnival.

LXXIX.

And whose more rife with merriment than thine,
Oh, Stamboul!‡ once the empress of their reign?
Though turbans now pollute Sophia's shrine,
And Greece her very altars eyes in vain:
(Alas! her woes will still pervade my strain!)

* Phyle, which commands a beautiful view of Athens, has still considerable remains. It was seized by Thrasylulus, previous to the expulsion of the Thiry.

† When taken by the Latins, and retained for several years. ‡ Mecca and Medina were taken some time ago by the 'ashabees, a sect yearly increasing.

Of Constantinople, Lord Byron says:—"I have seen the w of Athens, of Ephesus, and Delphi; I have traversed

Gay were her minstrels once, for free her throng,
All felt the common joy they now must feign,
Nor oft I've seen such sight, nor heard such song,
As woo'd the eye, and thrill'd the Bosphorus along.

LXXX.

Loud was the lightsome tumult on the shore,
Oft Music changed, but never ceased her tone,
And timely echo'd back the measured oar,
And rippling waters made a pleasant moan:
The Queen of tides on high consenting shone,
And when a transient breeze swept o'er the wave,
'T was, as if darting from her heavenly throne,
A brighter glance her form reflected gave,
Till sparkling billows seem'd to light the banks they lave.

LXXXI.

Glanced many a light caïque along the foam,
Danced on the shore the daughters of the land,
Ne thought had man or maid of rest or home,
While many a languid eye and thrilling hand
Exchanged the look few bosoms may withstand,
Or, gently prest, return'd the pressure still:
Oh, Love! young Love! bound in thy rosy band,
Let sage or cynic prattle as he will,
These hours, and only these, redeem Life's years of ill!

LXXXII.

But, midst the throng in merry masquerade,
Lurk there no hearts that throb with secret pain,
Even through the closest searment half betray'd?
To such the gentle murmurs of the main
Seem to re-echo all they mourn in vain;
To such the gladness of the gamesome crowd
Is source of wayward thought and stern disdain:
How do they loathe the laughter idly loud,
And long to change the robe of revel for the shroud!

LXXXIII.

This must he feel, the true-born son of Greece,
If Greece one true-born patriot still can boast:
Not such as prate of war, but skulk in peace,
The bondsman's peace, who sighs for all he lost,
Yet with smooth smile his tyrant can accost,
And wield the alarish sickle, not the sword:
Ah, Greece! they love thee least who owe thee most—
Their birth, their blood, and that sublime record
Of hero sires, who shame thy now degenerate horde!

LXXXIV.

When riseth Lacedæmon's hardihood,
When Thebes Epaminondas rears again,
When Athens' children are with hearts endued,
When Grecian mothers shall give birth to men,
Then mayst thou be restored; but not till then.
A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust: and when
Can man its shatter'd splendor renovate,
Recall its virtues back, and vanquish Time and Fate?

LXXXV.

And yet how lovely in thine age of woe,
Land of lost gods and godlike men, art thou!
Thy vales of evergreen, thy hills of snow,‡
Proclaim thee Nature's varied favorite now:
Thy fane, thy temples to thy surface bow, great part of Turkey, and many other parts of Europe, and some of Asia; but I never beheld a work of nature or art which yielded an impression like the prospect on each side from the Seven Towers to the end of the Golden Horn."

‡ On many of the mountains, particularly Liskura, the snow never is entirely melted, notwithstanding the intense heat of the summer: but I never saw it lie on the plains, even in winter.

CANTO II. CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE. LXXXVI.-XCIV.

Commencing slowly with heroic earth,
Broke by the share of every rustic plough;
So perish monuments of mortal birth,
So perish all in turn, save well-recorded Worth;

LXXXVI.

Save where some solitary column mourns
Above its prostrate brethren of the cave;*
Save where Tritonia's airy shrine adorns
Colonna's cliff,† and gleams along the wave;
Save o'er some warrior's half-forgotten grave,
Where the gray stones and unmolested grass
Ages, but not oblivion, feebly brave,
While strangers only not regardless pass,
Lingering like me, perchance, to gaze, and sigh
"Alas!"

LXXXVII.

Yet are thy skies as blue, thy crags as wild;
Sweet are thy groves, and verdant are thy fields,
Thine olive ripe as when Minerva smiled,
And still his honey'd wealth Hymettus yields;
There the bilblee bee his fragrant fortress builds,
The freeborn wanderer of thy mountain air;
Apollo still thy long, long summer glides,
Still in his beam Mendel's marbles glare;
Art, Glory, Freedom fall, but Nature still is fair.

LXXXVIII.

Where'er we tread 't is haunted, holy ground:
No earth of thine is lost in vulgar mould,
But one vast realm of wonder spreads around,
And all the Muse's tales seem truly told,
Till the sense aches with gazing to behold
The scenes our earliest dreams have dwelt upon:
Each hill and dale, each deepening glen and wold
Defies the power which crush'd thy temples gone:
Age shakes Athena's tower, but spares gray Marathon.

LXXXIX.

The sun, the soil, but not the slave, the same;
Unchanged in all except its foreign lord;
Preserves alike its bounds and boundless fame
The Battle-field, where Persia's victim horde
First bow'd beneath the brunt of Hellas' sword,
As on the morn to distant Glory dear,
When Marathon became a magic word; ‡
Which utter'd, to the hearer's eye appear
The camp, the host, the fight, the conqueror's career.

XC.

The flying Mede, his shaftless broken bow;
The fiery Greek, his red pursuing spear;

* Of Mount Pentelicon, from whence the marble was dug that constructed the public edifices of Athens. The modern name is Mount Mendel. An immense cave formed by the quarries, still remains, and will till the end of time.

† In all Attica, if we except Athens itself and Marathon, there is no scene more interesting than Cape Colonna. To the antiquary and artist, sixteen columns are an inexhaustible source of observation and design; to the philosopher, the supposed scene of some of Plato's conversations will not be unwelcome; and the traveller will be struck with the beauty of the prospect over "Isles that crown the Ægean deep;" but for an Englishman Colonna has yet an additional interest as the actual spot of Falconer's Shipwreck. Pallas and Plato are forgotten in the recollection of Falconer and Campbell.

‡ Here in the dead of night, by Lonna's steep.

The seaman's cry was heard along the deep.

The temple of Minerva may be seen at sea from a great distance. In two journeys which I made, and one voyage, to Cape Colonna, the view from either side, by land, was less striking than the approach from the isles. In our second land excursion we had a narrow escape from a party of Mahometans, concealed in the caverns beneath. We were told afterwards by one of their prisoners, subsequently ransomed,

Mountains above, Earth's, Ocean's plain below;
Death in the front, Destruction in the rear!
Such was the scene—what now remaineth here?
What sacred trophy marks the hallow'd ground,
Recording Freedom's smile and Asia's tear?
The rifed urn, the violated mound,
The dust thy courier's hoof, rude stranger! spurns around.

XCI.

Yet to the remnants of thy splendor past
Shall pilgrims, pensive, but unwearied, throng;
Long shall the voyager, with th' Ionian blast,
Hail the bright clime of battle and of song;
Long shall thine annals and immortal tongue
Fill with thy fame the youth of many a shore;
Boast of the aged! lesson of the young!
Which sages venerate and bards adore,
As Pallas and the Muse unveil their awful lore.

XCII.

The parted bosom clings to wonted home,
If aught that's kindred cheer the welcome hearth;
He that is lonely, hither let him roam,
And gaze complacent on congenial earth.
Greece is no lightsome land of social mirth:
But he whom Sadness sootheth may abide,
And scarce regret the region of his birth,
When wandering slow by Delphi's sacred side,
Or gazing o'er the plains where Greek and Persian died.

XCIII.

Let such approach this consecrated land,
And pass in peace along the magic waste;
But spare its relics—let no busy hand
Deface the scenes, already how defaced!
Not for such purpose were these altars placed:
Revere the remnants nations once revered:
So may our country's name be undisgraced,
So mayst thou prosper where thy youth was rear'd,
By every honest joy of love and life endear'd!

XCIV.

For thee, who thus in too protracted song
Hast soothed thine idleness with inglorious lays,
Soon shall thy voice be lost amid the throng
Of louder minstrels in these later days:
To such resign the strife for fading bays—
Ill may such contest now the spirit move
Which heeds nor keen reproach nor partial praise,
Since cold each kinder heart that might approve,
And none are left to please when none are left to love.

that they were deterred from attacking us by the appearance of my two Albanians: conjecturing very sagaciously, but falsely, that we had a complete guard of these Arnauts at hand, they remained stationary, and thus saved our party, which was too small to have opposed any effectual resistance. Colonna is no less a resort of pirates than of pirates; there "The hireling artist plants his paltry deck,
And makes degraded nature picturesque."

(See Hodgson's Lady Jane Grey, &c.)

But there Nature, with the aid of Art, has done that for herself. I was fortunate enough to engage a very superior German artist; and hope to renew my acquaintance with this and many other Levantine scenes by the arrival of his pictures.

"See Victor—heros, calous!" was the epitaph on the famous Count Mercl—what then must be our feelings when standing on the tumulus of the two hundred (Greeks) who fell on Marathon? The principal barrow has recently been opened by Fauvel: few or no relics, as vases, &c., were found by the excavator. The plain of Marathon was offered to me for sale at the sum of sixteen thousand piastres, about nine hundred pounds! "Alas!—" Expends—quod Moras in duce summo—Invenies!—"was the dust of Miltiades worth no more? It could scarcely have fetched less if sold by weight.

XCV.

Thou too art gone, thou loved and lovely one!
Whom youth and youth's affections bound to me;
Who did for me what none beside have done,
Nor shrank from one albeit unworthy thee.
What is my being? thou hast ceased to be!
Nor staid to welcome here thy wanderer home,
Who mourns o'er hours which we no more shall see—

Would they had never been, or were to come!
Would he had ne'er return'd to find fresh cause to roam!

XCVI.

Oh! ever loving, lovely, and beloved!
How selfish Sorrow ponders on the past,
And clings to thoughts now better far removed!
But Time shall tear thy shadow from me last.
All thou couldst have of mine, stern Death! thou hast;

The parent, friend, and now the more than friend;
Ne'er yet for one thine arrows flew so fast,
And grief with grief continuing still to blend,
Hath snatch'd the little joy that life had yet to lend.

XCVII.

Then must I plunge again into the crowd,
And follow all that Peace disdains to seek?
Where Revel calls, and Laughter, vainly loud,
False to the heart, distorts the hollow cheek,
To leave the flagging spirit doubly weak;
Still o'er the features, which perforce they cheer,
To feign the pleasure or conceal the pique?
Smiles form the channel of a future tear,
Or raise the writhing lip with ill-dissembled sneer.

XCVIII.

What is the worst of woes that wait on age?
What stamps the wrinkle deeper on the brow?
To view each loved one blotted from life's page,
And be alone on earth, as I am now.
Before the Chastener humbly let me bow,
O'er hearts divided and o'er hopes destroy'd:
Roll on, vain days! full reckless may ye flow,
Since Time hath reft whate'er my soul enjoy'd,
And with the ills of Eld mine earlier years alloy'd.

CANTO THE THIRD.

"Afin que cette application vous forçât de penser à autre chose;
Il n'y a en vérité de remède que celui-là et le temps."—Lettre du Roi de Prusse à D'Alambert, Sept. 7, 1776.

I.

Is thy face like thy mother's, my fair child!
ADA! sole daughter of my house and heart?
When last I saw thy young blue eyes they smiled,
And then we parted,—not as now we part,
But with a hope.—

A waking with a start,
The waters heave around me; and on high
The winds lift up their voices: I depart,
Whither I know not;* but the hour's gone by,
When Albion's lessening shores could grieve or glad mine eye.

II.

Once more upon the waters! yet once more!
And the waves bound beneath me as a steed

That knows his rider. Welcome to their roar!
Swift be their guidance, wheresoe'er it lead!
Though the strain'd mist should quiver as a reed,
And the rent canvas guttering strew the gale,
Still must I on; for I am as a weed,
Flung from the rock, on Ocean's foam, to call Where'er the surge may sweep, the tempest's breath prevail.

III.

In my youth's summer I did sing of One,
The wandering outlaw of his own dark mind;
Again I seize the theme, then but begun,
And bear it with me, as the rushing wind
Bears the cloud onwards: in that Tale I find
The furrows of long thought, and dried-up tears,
Which, ebbing, leave a sterile track behind,
O'er which all heavily the journeying years
Plod the last sands of life,—where not a flower appears.

IV.

Since my young days of passion—joy, or pain,
Perchance my heart and harp have lost a string,
Again I seize the theme, then but begun,
And bear it with me, as the rushing wind
Bears the cloud onwards: in that Tale I find
The furrows of long thought, and dried-up tears,
Which, ebbing, leave a sterile track behind,
O'er which all heavily the journeying years
Plod the last sands of life,—where not a flower appears.

V.

He who, grown aged in this world of woe,
In deeds, not years, plending the depths of life,
So that no wonder waits him; nor below
Can love or sorrow, fame, ambition, strife,
Cut to his heart again with the keen knife
Of silent, sharp endurance: he can tell
Why thought seeks refuge in lone caves, yet rife
With airy images, and shapes which dwell
Still unimpair'd, though old, in the soul's haunted cell.

VI.

'Tis to create, and in creating live
A being more intense, that we endow
With form our fancy, gaining as we give
The life we image, even as I do now.
What am I? Nothing: but not so art thou,
Soul of my thought! with whom I traverse earth,
Invisible but gazing, as I glow
Mix'd with thy spirit, blended with thy birth,
And feeling still with thee in my crush'd feelings' dearth.

VII.

Yet must I think less wildly:—I have thought
Too long and darkly, till my brain became,
In its own eddy boiling and o'erwrought,
A whirling gulf of phantasy and fame:
And thus, untaught in youth my heart to tame,
My springs of life were poison'd. 'Tis too late!
Yet am I changed; though still enough the same
In strength to bear what time can not abate,
And feed on bitter fruits without accusing Fate.

VIII.

Something too much of this:—but now 'tis past,
And the spell closes with its silent seal.
Long-absent HAROLD reappears at last:
He of the breast which felt no more would feel,
Wrung with the wounds which kill not, but ne'er
heal;
Yet Time, who changes all, had alter'd him
In soul and aspect as in age: years steal

* Lord Byron quitted England, for the second and last time, on the 25th of April, 1816, attended by William Fletcher and Robert Euston, the "yeoman" and "page" of canto I.; his physician, Dr. Fouldor; and a Swiss valet.

Fire from the mind as vigor from the limb;
And life's enchanted cup but sparkles near the brim.

IX.

His had been quaff'd too quickly, and he found
The dregs were wormwood; but he fill'd again,
And from a purer fount, on hollier ground,
And deem'd its spring perpetual; but in vain!
Still round him clung invisibly a chain
Which gall'd for ever, fettering though unseen,
And heavy though it clank'd not; worn with pain,
Which pined although it spoke not, and grew keen,
Entering with every step he took through many a scene.

X.

Secure in guarded coldness, he had mix'd
Again in fancied safety with his kind,
And deem'd his spirit now so firmly fix'd
And sheathed with an invulnerable mind,
That, if no joy, no sorrow lurk'd behind;
And he, as one, might 'midst the many stand
Unheeded, searching through the crowd to find
Fit speculation; such as in strange land
He found in wonder-works of God and Nature's hand.

XI.

But who can view the ripen'd rose, nor seek
To wear it? who can curiously behold
The smoothness and the sheen of beauty's cheek,
Nor feel the heart can never all grow old?
Who can contemplate Fame through clouds unfold
The star which rises o'er her steep, nor climb?
Harold, once more within the vortex, roll'd
On with the giddy circle, chasing Time,
Yet with a nobler aim than in his youth's fond prime.

XII.

But soon he knew himself the most unfit
Of men to herd with Man; with whom he held
Little in common; untaught to submit
His thoughts to others, though his soul was quell'd
In youth by his own thoughts; still uncompassion'd,
He would not yield dominion of his mind
To spirits against whom his own rebell'd;
Proud though in desolation; which could find
A life within itself, to breathe without mankind.

XIII.

Where rose the mountains, there to him were friends;
Where roll'd the ocean, thereon was his home;
Where a blue sky, and glowing clime, extends,
He had the passion and the power to roam;
The desert, forest, cavern, breaker's foam,
Were unto him companionship; they spake
A mutual language, clearer than the tone
Of his land's tongue, which he would oft forsake
For Nature's pages glass'd by sunbeams on the lake.

XIV.

Like the Chaldean, he could watch the stars,
Till he had peopled them with beings bright
As their own beams; and earth, and earth-born jars,
And human frailties, were forgotten quite:
Could he have kept his spirit to that flight,
He had been happy; but this clay will sink
Its spark immortal, envying it the light,
To which it mounts, as if to break the link
That keeps us from yon heaven which woos us to its brink.

XV.

But in Man's dwellings he became a thing
Restless and worn, and stern and wearisome,
Droop'd as a wild-born falcon with clipped wing,
To whom the boundless air alone were home;
Then came his fit again, which to o'ercome,
As eagerly the barr'd-up bird will beat
His breast and beak against his wiry dome
Till the blood tinge his plumage, so the heat
Of his impeded soul would through his bosom eat.

XVI.

Self-exiled Harold wanders forth again,
With naught of hope left, but with less of gloom;
The very knowledge that he lived in vain,
That all was over on this side the tomb,
Had made Despair a smilingness assume,
Which, though 't were wild,—as on the plunder'd wreck
When mariners would madly meet their doom
With draughts intemperate on the sinking deck,—
Did yet inspire a cheer, which he forbore to check.

XVII.

Stop!—for thy tread is on an Empire's dust!
An Earthquake's spoil is sepulchred below!
Is the spot mark'd with no colossal bust?
Nor column trophied for triumphal show?
None; but the moral's truth tells simpler so,
As the ground was before, thus let it be;—
How that red rain bath made the harvest grow!
And is this all the world has gain'd by thee,
Thou first and last of deeds! king-making Victory?

XVIII.

And Harold stands upon this place of skulls,
The grave of France, the deadly Waterloo!
How in an hour the power which gave annals
Its gifts, transferring fame as fleeting too!
In "pride of place" here last the eagle flew,
Then tore with bloody talon the rent plain,
Pierced by the shaft of banded nations through;
Ambition's life and labors all were vain;
He wears the shatter'd links of the world's broken chain.

XIX.

Fit retribution! Gaul may chomp the bit
And foam in fetters;—but is Earth more free?
Did nations combat to make One submit;
Or league to teach all kings true sovereignty?
What! shall reviving Thralldom again be
The patch'd-up idol of enlighten'd days?
Shall we, who struck the Lion down, shall we Pay the Wolf homage? proffering lowly gaze
And servile knees to thrones? No; proves before ye praise!

XX.

If not, o'er one fallen despot boast no more!
In vain fair cheeks were furrow'd with hot tears
For Europe's flowers long rooted up before
The trampler of her vineyards; in vain years
Of death, depopulation, bondage, fears,
Have all been borne, and broken by the accord
Of roused-up millions; all that most endears
Glory, is when the myrtle wreathes a sword
Such as Harmodius* drew on Athens' tyrant lord.

XXI.

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gather'd then

* See the famous song on Harmodius and Aristogiton.
The best English translation is in Bland's Anthology, by Mr.
(afterwards Lord Chief Justice) Denman.—

"With myrtle my sword will I wreath," &c.

Her Beauty and her Chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake again,
And all went merry as a marriage-bell;
But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

XXII.

Did ye not hear it?—No; 't was but the wind,
Or the car rattling o'er the stony street;
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined;
No sleep till morn, when Youth and Pleasure
meet
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet—
But hark! that heavy sound breaks in once more,
As if the clouds its echo would repeat;
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before!
Arm! arm! it is—it is—the cannon's opening roar!

XXIII.

Within a window'd niche of that high hall
Sate Brunswick's fated chieftain; he did hear
That sound the first amidst the festival,
And caught its tone with Death's prophetic ear;
And when they smiled because he deem'd it near,
His heart more truly knew that peal too well
Which stretch'd his father on a bloody bier,
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell;
He rush'd into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell.

XXIV.

Ah! then and there was hurrying to and fro,
And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago
Blush'd at the praise of their own loveliness;
And there were sudden partings, such as press
The life from out young hearts, and choking sighs
Which ne'er might be repeated; who could guess
If ever more should meet those mutual eyes,
Since upon night so sweet such awful morn could rise!

XXV.

And there was mounting in hot haste: the steed,
The mustering squadron, and the clattering car,
Went pouring forward with impetuous speed,
And swiftly forming in the ranks of war;
And the deep thunder peal on peal afar;
And near, the beat of the alarming drum
Roused up the soldier ere the morning star;
While throng'd the citizens with terror dumb,
Or whispering, with white lips—"The foe! they come! they come!"

XXVI.

And wild and high the "Cameron's gathering"
rose!
The war-note of Lochiel, which Albyn's hills

Have heard, and heard, too, have her Saxon foes:—

How in the noon of night that pibroch thrills,
Savage and shrill! But with the breath which fills
Their mountain pipe, so fill the mountaineers
With the fierce native daring which instills
The stirring memory of a thousand years,
And Evan's, Donald's; fame rings in each clansman's ears!

XXVII.

And Ardennes! waves above them her green leaves,
Dewy with nature's tear-drops, as they pass,
Grieving, if aught inanimate o'er grieves,
Over the unreturning brave,—alas!
Ere evening to be trodden like the grass
Which now beneath them, but above shall grow
In its next verdure, when this fiery mass
Of living valor, rolling on the foe
And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold and low.

XXVIII.

Last noon beheld them full of lusty life,
Last eve in Beauty's circle proudly gay,
The midnight brought the signal-sound of strife,
The morn the marshalling in arms,—the day
Battle's magnificently-sterm array!
The thunder-clouds close o'er it, which when rent
The earth is cover'd thick with other clay,
Which her own clay shall cover, heap'd and pent,
Rider and horse,—friend, foe,—in one red burial bleat!

XXIX.

Their praise is hymn'd by loftier harps than mine:
Yet one I would select from that proud throng,
Partly because they blend me with his line,
And partly that I did his sire some wrong,
And partly that bright names will hallow song;
And his was of the bravest, and when shower'd
The death-bolts deadliest the thinn'd files along,
Even where the thickest of war's tempest lower'd,
They reach'd no nobler breast than thine, young gallant Howard!

XXX.

There have been tears and breaking hearts for thee,
And mine were nothing had I such to give;
But when I stood beneath the fresh green tree,
Which living waves where thou didst cease to live,
And saw around me the wide field revive
With fruits and fertile promise, and the Spring
Came forth her work of gladness to contrive,
With all her reckless birds upon the wing,
I turn'd from all she brought to those she could not bring.]]

* On the night previous to the action, it is said that a ball was given at Brussels.

† The father of the Duke of Brunswick, who fell at Quatre Bras, received his death-wound at Jena.

‡ Sir Evan Cameron, and his descendant Donald, the "gentle Lochiel" of the "ferry-dre."

§ The wood of Solennes is supposed to be a remnant of the forest of Ardennes, famous in Boiardo's Orlando, and immortal in Shakespeare's "As You Like It." It is also celebrated in Tacitus, as being the spot of successful defence by the Germans against the Roman encroachments. I have ventured to adopt the name connected with nobler associations than those of mere slaughter.

|| My guide from Mont St. Jean over the field seemed intelligent and accurate. The place where Major Howard fell was not far from two tall and solitary trees (there was a third, cut down, or shivered in the battle), which stand a few yards from each other at a pathway's side. Beneath these he died and was buried. The body has since been removed to England. A small hollow for the present marks where it lay, but will probably soon be effaced: the plough has been upon it, and the grain is. After pointing out the different spots where Picton and other gallant men had perished, the guide said, "Here Major Howard lay: I was near him when wounded." I told him my relationship, and he seemed then still more anxious to point out the particular spot and circumstances. The place is one of the most marked in the field, from the peculiarity of the two trees above mentioned. I went on horseback twice over the field, comparing it with my recollection of similar scenes. As a plain, Waterloo seems marked out for the scene of some great action, though this may be mere imagination: I have viewed with attention those of Platen, Troy, Mantinea, Leuctra, Chæronea, and Marathon; and the field around Mont St. Jean and Hougomont appears to want little but a better cause, and that undefinable but impressive halo which the lapse of ages throws around a celebrated spot, to vie in interest with any or all of these, except, perhaps, the last mentioned.

XXXI.

I turn'd to thee, to thousands, of whom each
And one as all a ghastly gap did make
In his own kind and kindred, whom to teach
Forgetfulness were mercy for their sake;
The Archangel's trump, not Glory's, must awake
Those whom they thirst for; though the sound
Of Fame
May for a moment soothe, it cannot slake
The fever of vain longing, and the name
So honor'd but assumes a stronger, bitterer claim.

XXXII.

They mourn, but smile at length; and, smiling,
Mourn:
The tree will wither long before it fall;
The hull drives on, though mast and sail be torn;
The roof-tree sinks, but moulders on the hall
In mazy hoariness; the ruin'd wall
Stands when its wind-worn battlements are gone;
The bars survive the captive they enthrall;
The day drags through, though storms keep out
The sun;
And thus the heart will break, yet brokenly live on:

XXXIII.

Even as a broken mirror, which the glass
In every fragment multiplies; and makes
A thousand images of one that was,
The same, and still the more, the more it breaks;
And thus the heart, will do which not forsakes,
Living in shatter'd guise; and still, and cold,
And bloodless, with its sleepless sorrow aches,
Yet withers on till all without is old,
Showing no visible sign, for such things are untold.

XXXIV.

There is a very life in our despair,
Vitality of poison,—a quick root
Which feeds these deadly branches; for it were
As nothing did we die; but Life will suit
Itself to Sorrow's most detested fruit,
Like to the apples* on the Dead Sea's shore,
All ashes to the taste: Did man compute
Existence by enjoyment, and count o'er
Such hours 'gainst years of life,—say, would he name threescore?

XXXV.

The Psalmist number'd out the years of man:
They are enough; and if thy tale be true,
Thou, who didst grudge him even that fleeting
span,
More than enough, thou fatal Waterloo!
Millions of tongues record thee, and anew
Their children's lips shall echo them, and say—“Here, where the sword united nations drew,
Our countrymen were warring on that day!”
And this is much, and all which will not pass away.

XXXVI.

There sunk the greatest, nor the worst of men,
Whose spirit, antithetically mixt,
One moment of the mightiest, and again
On little objects with like firmness fixt:
Extreme in all things! hadst thou been betwixt,
Thy throne had still been thine, or never been;
For daring made thy rise as fall: thou seek'st

Even now to reassume the imperial mien,
And shake again the world, the Thunderer of the scene!

XXXVII.

Conqueror and captive of the earth art thou!
She trembles at thee still, and thy wild name
Was ne'er more bruited in men's minds than now
That thou art nothing, save the jest of Fame,
Who woo'd thee once, thy vassal, and became
The flatterer of thy fierceness, till thou wert
A god unto thyself; nor less the same
To the astounded kingdoms all inert,
Who deem'd thee for a time what'er thou dost assert.

XXXVIII.

Oh, more or less than man—in high or low,
Battling with nations, flying from the field;
Now making monarchs' necks thy footstool, now
More than thy meanest soldier taught to yield;
An empire thou couldst crush, command, rebuild,
But govern not thy pettiest passion, nor,
However deeply in men's spirits skill'd,
Look through thine own, nor curb the lust of war,
Nor learn that tempted Fate will leave the loftiest star.

XXXIX.

Yet well thy soul hath brook'd the turning tide
With that untaught innate philosophy,
Which, be it wisdom, coldness, or deep pride,
Is gall and wormwood to an enemy.
When the whole host of hatred stood hard by,
To watch and mock thee shrinking, thou hast smiled
With a sedate and all-enduring eye;—
When Fortune fled her spoil'd and favorite child,
He stood unbow'd beneath the ill upon him piled.

XL.

Sager than in thy fortunes; for in them
Ambition steel'd thee on too far to show
That just habitual scorn, which could condemn
Men and their thoughts; 't was wise to feel, not so
To wear it ever on thy lip and brow,
And spurn the instruments thou wert to use
Till they were turn'd unto thine overthrow:
'T is but a worthless world to win or lose;
So hath it proved to thee, and all such lot who choose.

XLI.

If, like a tower upon a headlong rock,
Thou hadst been made to stand or fall alone,
Such scorn of man had help'd to brave the shock;
But men's thoughts were the steps which paved thy throne,
Their admiration thy best weapons shone;
The part of Philip's son was thine, not then (Unless aside thy purple had been thrown)
Like stern Diogenes to mock at men;
For sceptred cynics earth were far too wide a den.†

XLII.

But quiet to quick bosoms is a hell,
And there hath been thy bane; there is a fire
And motion of the soul which will not dwell
In its own narrow being, but aspire
Beyond the fitting medium of desire;
And, but once kindled, quenchless evermore,
Preys upon high adventure, nor can tire

* The (fabled) apples on the brink of the lake Asphaltus were said to be fair without, and within, ashes. Vide Tacitus, Histor., lib. v. 7.

† The great error of Napoleon. “If we have writ our annals true,” was a continued obtrusion on mankind of his want of all community of feeling for or with them; perhaps more offensive to human vanity than the active cruelty of more trembling and suspicious tyranny. Such were his speeches to public assemblies as well as individuals; and the single expression which he is said to have used on returning to Paris after the Russian winter had destroyed his army, rubbing his hands over a fire, “This is pleasant than Moscow,” would probably alienate more favor from his cause than the destruction and reverses which led to the remark.

Of aught but rest; a fever at the core,
Fatal to him who bears, to all who ever bore.

XLIII.

This makes the madmen who have made men mad
By their contagion; Conquerors and Kings,
Founders of sects and systems, to whom add
Sophists, Bards, Statesmen, all unquiet things
Which stir too strongly the soul's secret springs,
And are themselves the fools to those they fool
Envied, yet how unenviable! what stings
Are theirs! One breast laid open were a school
Which would unteach mankind the lust to shine or rule:

XLIV.

Their breath is agitation, and their life
A storm whereon they ride, to sink at last,
And yet so nursed and bigoted to strife,
That should their days, surviving perils past,
Melt to calm twilight, they feel overcast
With sorrow and supineness, and so die;
Even as a flame unfed, which runs to waste
With its own flickering, or a sword laid by,
Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.

XLV.

He who ascends to mountain-tops, shall find
The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and snow;
He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
Must look down on the hate of those below.
Though high above the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath the earth and ocean spread,
Round him are icy rocks, and loudly blow
Contending tempests on his naked head,
And thus reward the toils which to those summits led.

XLVI.

Away with these! true Wisdom's world will be Within its own creation, or in thine,
Maternal Nature! for who seems like thee,
Thus on the banks of thy majestic Rhine?
There Harold gazes on a work divine,
A blending of all beauties; streams and dells,
Fruit, foliage, crag, wood, cornfield, mountain,
vine,
And chiefless castles breathing stern farewells
From gray but leafy walls, where Ruin greenly dwells.

XLVII.

And there they stand, as stands a lofty mind,
Worn, but unstooping to the baser crowd,
All tenantless, save to the crannying wind,
Or holding dark communion with the cloud.
There was a day when they were young and proud,
Banners on high, and battles pass'd below;
But they who fought are in a bloody shroud,
And those which waved are shredless dust ere
now.

And the bleak battlements shall bear no future
blow.

XLVIII.

Beneath these battlements, within those walls,
Power dwelt amidst her passions; in proud state
Each robber chief upheld his armed halls,
Doing his evil will, nor less elate
Than mightier heroes of a longer date.
What want these outlaws* conquerors should have

But History's purchased page to call them great?
A wider space, an ornamented grave?
Their hopes were not less warm, their souls were full as brave.

XLIX.

In their baronial feuds and single fields,
What deeds of prowess unrecorded died!
And Love, which lent a blazon to their shields,
With emblems well devised by amorous pride,
Through all the mail of iron hearts would glide;
But still their flame was fierceness, and drew on Keen contest and destruction near allied,
And many a tower for some fair mischief won,
Saw the discolor'd Rhine beneath its ruin run.

L.

But Thou, exulting and abounding river!
Making thy waves a blessing as they flow
Through banks whose beauty would endure for ever
Could man but leave thy bright creation so,
Nor its fair promise from the surface mow
With the sharp scythe of conflict,—then to see
Thy valley of sweet waters, were to know
Earth paved like Heaven; and to seem such to me,
Even now what wants thy stream?—that it should Lethe be.

LI.

A thousand battles have assail'd thy banks,
But these and half their fame have pass'd away,
And Slaughter heap'd on high his weltering ranks;
Their very graves are gone, and what are they?
Thy tide wash'd down the blood of yesterday,
And all was stainless, and on thy clear stream
Glass'd with its dancing light the sunny ray;
But o'er the blacken'd memory's blighting dream Thy waves would vainly roll, all sweeping as they seem.

LII.

Thus Harold inly said, and pass'd along,
Yet not insensibly to all which here
Awoke the jocund birds to early song
In glens which might have made even exile dear:
Though on his brow were graven lines austere,
And tranquil sternness which had ta'en the place
Of feelings fiercer far but less severe,
Joy was not always absent from his face,
But o'er it in such scenes would steal with transient trace.

LIII.

Nor was all love shut from him, though his days
Of passion had consumed themselves to dust.
It is in vain that we would coldly gaze
On such a smile upon us; the heart must
Leap kindly back to kindness, though disgust
Hath wean'd it from all worldlings: thus he felt,
For there was soft remembrance, and sweet trust,
In one fond breast, to which his own would melt,
And in its tenderer hour on that his bosom dwell.

LIV.

And he had learn'd to love,—I know not why,
For this in such as him seems strange of mood,—
The helpless looks of blooming infancy,
Even in its earliest nurture; what subdued,
To change like this, a mind so far imbued
With scorn of man, its little boots to know;
But thus it was; and though in solitude
Small power the nipp'd affections have to grow,
In him this glow'd when all beside had ceased to glow.

LV.

And there was one soft breast, as hath been said,
Which unto his was bound by stronger ties
Than the church links withal; and, though unwed,
That love was pure, and, far above disguise,
Had stood the test of mortal enmities
Still undivided, and cemented more
By peril, dreaded most in female eyes;

* "What wants that knave that a king should have?" was King James's question on meeting Johnny Armstrong and his followers in full accoutrements. See the ballad.

But this was firm, and from a foreign shore
Well to that heart might his these absent greetings pour!

1.

The castled crag of Drachenfels*
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine,
And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine,
And scatter'd cities crowning these,
Whose far white walls along them shine,
Have strew'd a scene, which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me.

2.

And peasant girls, with deep blue eyes,
And hands which offer early flowers,
Walk smiling o'er this paradise;
Above, the frequent feudal towers
Through green leaves lift their walls of gray,
And many a rock which steeply lowers,
And noble arch in proud decay,
Look o'er this vale of vintage-bowers;
But one thing want these banks of Rhine,—
Thy gentle hand to clasp in mine!

3.

I send the lilies given to me;
Though long before thy hand they touch,
I know that they must wither'd be,
But yet reject them not as such;
For I have cherish'd them as dear,
Because they yet may meet thine eye,
And guide thy soul to mine even here,
When thou beholdest them drooping nigh,
And know'st them gather'd by the Rhine,
And offer'd from my heart to thine!

4.

The river nobly foams and flows,
The charm of this enchanted ground,
And all its thousand turns disclose
Some fresher beauty varying round:
The haughtiest breast its wish might bound
Through life to dwell delighted here;
Nor could on earth a spot be found
To nature and to me so dear,
Could thy dear eyes in following mine
Still sweeten more these banks of Rhine!

* The castle of Drachenfels stands on the highest summit of "the Seven Mountains," over the Rhine banks; it is in ruins, and connected with some singular traditions. It is the first in view on the road from Bonn, but on the opposite side of the river. On this bank, nearly facing it, are the remains of another, called the Jew's Castle, and a large cross commemorative of the murder of a chief by his brother. The number of castles and cities along the course of the Rhine on both sides is very great, and their situations remarkably beautiful.—These verses were written on the banks of the Rhine, in May. The original pencilling is before us. It is needless to observe that they were addressed to his sister.

† The monument of the young and lamented General Marceau (killed by a rifle-ball at Altkirchen, on the last day of the fourth year of the French republic) still remains as described. The inscriptions on his monument are rather too long, and not required; his name was enough: France adored, and her enemies admired; both wept over him. His funeral was attended by the generals and detachments from both armies. In the same grave General Hoche is interred, a gallant man also in every sense of the word; but though he distinguished himself greatly in battle, he had not the good fortune to die there; his death was attended by suspicious of poison. A separate monument (not over his body,

LVI.

By Coblenz, on a rise of gentle ground,
There is a small and simple pyramid,
Crowning the summit of the verdant mound;
Beneath its base are heroes' ashes hid,
Our enemy's—but let not that forbid
Honor to Marceau! o'er whose early tomb
Tears, big tears, gush'd from the rough soldier's lid,
Lamenting and yet envying such a doom,
Falling for France, whose rights he battled to resume.

LVII.

Brief, brave, and glorious was his young career,—
His mourners were two hosts, his friends and foes;
And fitly may the stranger linger here
Pray for his gallant spirit's bright repose;
For he was Freedom's champion, one of those,
The few in number, who had not o'erstept
The charter to chastise which she bestows
On such as wield her weapons; he had kept
The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept.†

LVIII.

Here Ehrenbreitstein,‡ with her shatter'd wall
Black with the miner's blast, upon her height
Yet shows of what she was, when shell and ball
Rebounding idly on her strength did light:
A tower of victory! from whence the flight
Of baffled foes was watch'd along the plain:
But Peace destroy'd what War could never blight,
And laid those proud roofs bare to Summer's rain—
On which the iron shower for years had pour'd in vain.

LIX.

Adieu to thee, fair Rhine! How long delighted
The stranger fain would linger on his way!
Thine is a scene alike where souls united
Or lonely Contemplation thus might stray;
And could the ceaseless vultures cease to prey
On self-condemning bosoms, it were here,
Where Nature, nor too sombre nor too gay,
Wild but not rude, awful yet not austere,
Is to the mellow Earth as Autumn to the year.

LX.

Adieu to thee again! a vain adieu!
There can be no farewell to scene like thine;
The mind is color'd by thy every hue;
And if reluctantly the eyes resign
Their cherish'd gaze upon thee, lovely Rhine!‡

which is buried by Marceau's) is raised for him near Andernach, opposite to which one of his most memorable exploits was performed in throwing a bridge to an island on the Rhine. The shape and style are different from those of Marceau's, and the inscription more simple and pleasing:—"The Army of the Sambre and Meuse to its Commander-in-Chief Hoche." This is all, and as it should be. Hoche was esteemed among the first of France's earlier generals, before Buonaparte monopolised her triumphs. He was the destined commander of the invading army of Ireland.

‡ Ehrenbreitstein, &c. "the broad stone of honor," one of the strongest fortresses in Europe, was dismantled and blown up by the French at the truce of Leoben. It had been, and could only be, reduced by famine or treachery. It yielded to the former, aided by surprise. After having seen the fortifications of Gibraltar and Malta, it did not much strike by comparison; but the situation is commanding. General Marceau besieged it in vain for some time; and I slept in a room where I was shown a wound, &c. which he is said to have been standing observing the progress of the siege by moonlight, when a ball struck immediately below it.

§ On taking Hookheim, the Austrians, in one part of the engagement, got to the brow of the hill, whence they had their first view of the Rhine. They instantly halted—not a gun was fired—not a voice heard; but they stood gazing on

'Tis with the thankful glance of parting praise,
More mighty spots may rise—more glaring shine;
But none unite in one attaching mass
The brilliant, fair, and soft,—the glories of old days,

LXI.

The negligently grand, the fruitful bloom
Of coming ripeness, the white city's sheen,
The rolling stream, the precipice's gloom,
The forest's growth, and Gothic walls between,
The wild rocks shaped as they had turrets been
In mockery of man's art; and these withal
A race of faces happy as the scene,
Whose fertile bounties here extend to all,
Still springing o'er thy banks, though Empires near them fall.

LXII.

But these recede. Above me are the Alps,
The palaces of Nature, whose vast walls
Have pinnaled in clouds their snowy scalps,
And throned Eternity in icy halls
Of cold sublimity, whose forms and falls
The avalanche—the thunderbolt of snow!
All that expands the spirit, yet appalls,
Gather around these summits, as to show
How Earth may pierce to Heaven, yet leave vain man below.

LXIII.

But ere these matchless heights I dare to scan,
There is a spot should not be pass'd in vain,—
Morat! the proud, the patriot field! where man
May gaze on ghastly trophies of the slain,
Nor blush for those who conquer'd on that plain;
Here Burgundy bequeathed his tombless host,
A bony heap, through ages to remain,
Themselves their monument;—the Stygian coast
Unsepulchred they roam'd, and shriek'd each wandering ghost.*

LXIV.

While Waterloo with Cannae's carnage vies,
Morat and Marathon twin names shall stand;
They were true Glory's stainless victories,
Won by the unambitious heart and hand
Of a proud, brotherly, and civic band,
All unbought champions in no princely cause
Of vice-entail'd Corruption; they no land
Doom'd to bewail the blasphemy of laws
Making kings' rights divine, by some Draconic clausum.

LXV.

By a lone wall a lonelier column rears
A gray and grief-worn aspect of old days;
'Tis the last remnant of the wreck of years,
And looks as with the wild-bewilder'd gaze
Of one to stone converted by amaze,

Yet still with consciousness; and there it stands
Making a marvel that it not decays,
When the coeval pride of human hands,
Level'd Avenicum,† hath strew'd her subject lands.

LXVI.

And there—oh! sweet and sacred be the name!—
Julia—the daughter, the devoted—gave
Her youth to Heaven; her heart, beneath a claim
Nearest to Heaven's, broke o'er a father's grave.
Justice is sworn 'gainst tears, and here would crave
The life she lived in; but the judge was just,
And then she died on him she could not save.
Their tomb was simple, and without a bust,
And held within their urn one mind, one heart, one dust.‡

LXVII.

But these are deeds which should not pass away,
And names that must not wither, though the earth
Forget her empires with a just decay,
The enslavers and the enslaved, their death and birth;
The high, the mountain-majesty of worth
Should be, and shall, survivor of its woe,
And from its immortality look forth
In the sun's face, like yonder Alpine snow,‡ Imperishably pure beyond all things below.

LXVIII.

Lake Lemnan wooed me with its crystal face,
The mirror where the stars and mountains view
The stillness of their aspect in each trace
Its clear depth yields of their far height and hue:
There is too much of man here, to look through
With a fit mind the night which I behold;
But soon in me shall Loneliness renew
Thoughts hid, but not less cherish'd than of old, Ere mingling with the herd had penn'd me in their fold.

LXIX.

To fly from, need not be to hate, mankind:
All are not fit with them to stir and toll,
Nor is it discontent to keep the mind
Deep in its fountain, lest it overboil
In the hot throng, where we become the spoil
Of our infection, till too late and long
We may deplore and struggle with the coil,
In wretched interchange of wrong for wrong Midst a contentious world, striving where none are strong.

LXX.

There, in a moment, we may plunge our years
In fatal penitence, and in the blight

the river with those feelings which the events of the last fifteen years at once called up. Prince Schwarzenberg rode up to know the cause of the sudden stop; then they gave three cheers, rushed after the enemy, and drove them into the water.

* The chapel is destroyed, and the pyramid of bones diminished to a small number by the Burgundian legion in the service of France; who anxiously effaced this record of their ancestors' less successful invasions. A few still remain, notwithstanding the pains taken by the Burgundians for ages (all who passed that way removing a bone to their own country), and the less justifiable larcenies of the Swiss partisans, who carried them off to sell for knife-handles; a purpose for which the whiteness imbibed by the bleaching of years had rendered them in great request. Of these relics I ventured to bring away as much as may have made a quarter of a hero, for which the sole excuse is, that if I had not, the next passer by might have perverted them to worse uses than the careful preservation which I intend for them.

† Avenicum, near Morat, was the Roman capital of Helvetia, where Avenches now stands.

‡ Julia Alpina, a young Avenian priestess, died soon after a vain endeavor to save her father, condemned to death as a traitor by Julius Cæsar. Her epitaph was discovered many years ago—it is thus:—"Julia Alpina: Hic Jacet. Infelix patris infelix proles. Deo Avenia Sacrodo. Rerare patris necem non potui; Male mori in fatis ille erat. Vixi annos xxxix."—I know of no human composition so affecting as this, nor a history of deeper interest. These are the names and actions which ought not to perish, and to which we turn with a true and healthy tenderness, from the wretched and glittering detail of a confused mass of conquests and battles, with which the mind is roused for a time to a false and feverish sympathy, from whence it recurs at length with all the nausea consequent on such intoxication.

§ This is written in the eye of Mont Blanc (June 8, 1836, which even at this distance dazzles mine.—(July 18.) I this day observed for some time the distant reflection of Mont Blanc and Mont Argenterie in the calm of the lake, which I was crossing in my boat; the distance of these mountains from their mirror is sixty miles.

Of our own soul, turn all our blood to tears,
And color things to come with hues of Night;
The race of life becomes a hopeless flight
To those that walk in darkness: on the sea
The boldest steer but where their ports invite;
But there are wanderers o'er Eternity
Whose bark drives on and on, and anchor'd ne'er shall be.

LXXI.

Is it not better, then, to be alone,
And love Earth only for its earthly sake?
By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone,*
Or the pure bosom of its nursing lake,
Which feeds it as a mother who doth make
A fair but froward infant her own care,
Kissing its cries away as these awake;—
Is it not better thus our lives to wear,
Than join the crushing crowd, doom'd to inflict or bear?

LXXII.

I live not in myself, but I become Portion of that around me; and to me
High mountains are a feeling, but the hum
Of human cities torture: I can see Nothing to loathe in nature, save to be
A link reluctant in a fleshly chain,
Class'd among creatures, when the soul can see,
And with the sky, the peak, the heaving plain
Of ocean, or the stars, mingle, and not in vain.

LXXIII.

And thus I am absorb'd, and this is life:
I look upon the peopled desert past,
As on a place of agony and strife,
Where, for some sin, to sorrow I was cast,
To act and suffer, but remount at last
With a fresh pinion; which I feel to spring,
Though young, yet waxing vigorous, as the blast
Which it would cope with, on delighted wing, Spurning the clay-cold bonds which round our being cling.

LXXIV.

And when, at length, the mind shall be all free
From what it hates in this degraded form,
Left of its carnal life, save what shall be Existent happier in the fly and worm,—
When elements to elements conform,
And dust is as it should be, shall I not Feel all I see, less dazzling, but more warm?
The bodiless thought? the Spirit of each spot?
Of which, even now, I share at times the immortal lot?

LXXV.

Are not the mountains, waves, and skies, a part
Of me and of my soul, as I of them?
Is not the love of these deep in my heart
With a pure passion? should I not condemn
All objects, if compared with these? and stem
A tide of suffering, rather than forego
Such feelings for the hard and worldly phlegm
Of those whose eyes are only turn'd below,
Gazing upon the ground, with thoughts which dare not glow?

LXXVI.

But this is not my theme; and I return
To that which is immediate, and require

Those who find contemplation in the urn,
To look on One, whose dust was once all fire,
A native of the land where I respire
The clear air for awhile—a passing guest,
Where he became a being,—whose desire
Was to be glorious; 't was a foolish quest,
The which to gain and keep, he sacrificed all rest.

LXXVII.

Here the self-torturing sophist, wild Rousseau,
The apostle of affliction, he who threw
Enchantment over passion, and from woe
Wrung overwhelming eloquence, first drew
The breath which made him wretched; yet he knew
How to make madness beautiful, and cast
O'er erring deeds and thoughts a heavenly hue
Of words, like sunbeams, dazzling as they pass'd
The eyes, which o'er them shed tears feelingly and fast.

LXXVIII.

His love was passion's essence—as a tree
On fire by lightning; with ethereal flame
Kindled he was, and blasted; for to be
Thus, and enamor'd, were in him the same.
But his was not the love of living daim,
Nor of the dead who rise upon our dreams,
But of ideal beauty, which became
In him existence, and o'erflowing teems
Along his burning page, distemper'd though it be.

LXXIX.

This breathed itself to life in Julie, this Invested her with all that's wild and sweet;
This hallow'd, too, the memorable kiss†
Which every morn his fever'd lip would greet,
From hers, who but with friendship his would meet;
But to that gentle touch, through brain and breast
Flash'd the thrill'd spirit's love-devouring heat;
In that absorbing sigh perchance more blest
Than vulgar minds may be with all they seek possess.

LXXX.

His life was one long war with self-sought foes,
Or friends by him self-banished; for his mind
Hed grown Suspicion's sanctuary, and chose
For its own cruel sacrifice the kind,
'Gainst whom he rag'd with fury strange and blind.
But he was frenzied,—wherefore, who may know?
Since cause might be which skill could never find;
But he was frenzied by disease or woe
To that worst hitch of all, which wears a reasoning shaw.

LXXXI.

For then he was inspired, and from him came,
As from the Pythian's mystic cave of yore,
Those oracles which set the world in flame,
Nor ceased to burn till kingdoms were no more:
Did he not this for France? which lay before
Bow'd to the inborn tyranny of years?
Broken and trembling to the yoke she bore,
Till by the voice of him and his compeers
Roused up to too much wrath, which follows o'er-grown fears?

*The color of the Rhone at Geneva is blue, to a depth of tint which I have never seen equalled in water, salt or fresh, except in the Mediterranean and Adriatic.

†This refers to Rousseau's account in his "Confessions" of his passion for the Comtesse d'Houdetot (the mistress of St. Lambert), and his long walk every morning, for the sake of the single kiss which was the common salutation of French acquaintance. Rousseau's description of his feelings on this occasion may be considered as the most passionate, yet not impure, description and expression of love that ever kindled into words; which, after all, must be felt, from their very force, to be inadequate to the delineation: a painting can give no sufficient idea of the ocean.

LXXXII.

They made themselves a fearful monument!
The wreck of old opinions—things which grew,
Breathed from the birth of time: the veil they rent.
And what behind it lay, all earth shall view.
But good with ill they also overthrew,
Leaving but ruins, wherewith to rebuild
Upon the same foundation, and renew Dungeons and thrones, which the same hour refill'd,
As heretofore, because ambition was self-will'd.

LXXXIII.

But this will not endure, nor be endured!
Mankind have felt their strength, and made it felt.
They might have used it better, but, allured
By their new vigor, sternly have they dealt
On one another; Pity ceased to melt
With her once natural charities. But they,
Who in oppression's darkness caved had dwelt,
They were not eagles, nourish'd with the day;
What marvel then, at times, if they mistook their prey?

LXXXIV.

What deep wounds ever closed without a scar?
The heart's bleed longest, and but heal to wear
That which disfigures it; and they who war
With their own hopes, and have been vanquish'd,
bear
Silence, but not submission: in his lair
Fix'd Passion holds his breath, until the hour
Which shall atone for years; none need despair:
It came, it cometh, and will come,—the power
To punish or forgive—in one we shall be slower.

LXXXV.

Clear, placid Leman! thy contrasted lake,
With the wild world I dwell in, is a thing
Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake
Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring.
This quiet sail is as a noiseless wing
To waft me from distraction; once I loved
Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring
Sounds sweet as if a Sister's voice reproved,
That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved.

LXXXVI.

It is the hush of night, and all between
Thy margin and the mountains, dusk, yet clear,
Mellow'd and mingling, yet distinctly seen,
Save darken'd Jura, whose cap heights appear Precipitously steep; and drawing near,
There breathes a living fragrance from the shore,
Of flowers yet fresh with childhood; on the ear
Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,
Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol more;

LXXXVII.

He is an evening reveller, who makes
His life an infancy, and sings his fill;
At intervals, some bird from out the brakes
Starts into voice a moment, then is still.
There seems a floating whisper on the hill,
But that is fancy, for the starlight dews
All silently their tears of love instill,
Weeping themselves away, till they infuse
Deep into Nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

LXXXVIII.

Ye stars! which are the poetry of heaven!
If in your bright leaves we would read the fate
Of men and empires,—'tis to be forgiven,
That in our aspirations to be great,
Our destinies o'erleap their mortal state,

And claim a kindred with you; for ye are
A beauty and a mystery, and create
In us such love and reverence from afar,
That fortune, fame, power, life, have named themselves a star.

LXXXIX.

All heaven and earth are still—though not in sleep,
But breathless, as we grow when feeling most;
And silent, as we stand in thoughts too deep:—
All heaven and earth are still: From the high host
Of stars, to the lull'd lake and mountain coast,
All is concentrated in a life intense,
Where not a beam, nor air, nor leaf is lost,
But hath a part of being, and a sense
Of that which is of all Creator and defence.

XC.

Then stirs the feeling infinite, so felt
In solitude, where we are least alone;
A truth, which through our being then doth melt,
And purifies from self: it is a tone,
The soul and source of music, which makes known
Eternal harmony, and sheds a charm,
Like to the fabled Cytherea's zone,
Binding all things with beauty:—'t would disarm
The spectre Death, had he substantial power to harm.

XCI.

Not vainly did the early Persian make
His altar the high places and the peak
Of earth-o'ergrazing mountains,⁷ and thus take
A fit and unwill'd temple, there to seek
The Spirit, in whose honor shrines are weak,
Upward'd of human hands. Come, and compare
Columns and idol-dwellings, Goth or Greek,
With Nature's realms of worship, earth and air,
Nor fix on fond abodes to circumscribe thy pray'r!

XCII.

The sky is changed!—and such a change! Oh
night,
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud,
But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud!

XCIII.

And this is in the night:—Most glorious night
Thou wert not sent for slumber! let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight,—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black,—and now, the glee
Of the loud hils shakes with its mountain mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

XCIV.

How, where the swift Rhone cleaves his way between
Heights which appear as lovers who have parted
In hate, whose mingling depths so intervene,
That they can meet no more, though broken-hearted;
Though in their souls, which thus each other thwarted,
Love was the very root of the fond rage
Which blighted their life's bloom, and then departed:—

Itself expired, but leaving them an age
Of years all winters,—war within themselves to wage.

XCV.

Now, where the quick Rhone thus hath cleft his way,
The mightiest of the storms hath ta'en his stand:
For here, not one, but many, make their play,
And fling their thunder-bolts from hand to hand,
Flashing and cast around: of all the band,
The brightest through these parted hills hath fork'd

His lightnings,—as if he did understand,
That in such gape as desolation work'd.
There the hot shaft should blast whatever therein lurk'd,

XCVI.

Sky, mountains, river, winds, lake, lightnings! ye!
With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a soul
To make these felt and feeling, well may be Things that have made me watchful: the far roll
Of your departing voices, is the knoll
Of what in me is sleepless,—if I rest.
But where of ye, O tempests! is the goal?
Are ye like those within the human breast?
Or do ye find, at length, like eagles, some high nest?

XCVII.

Could I embody and unbosom now
That which is most within me,—could I wreak
My thoughts upon expression, and thus throw
Soul, heart, mind, passions, feelings, strong or weak,
All that I would have sought, and all I seek,
Fear, know, feel, and yet breathe—into one word,
And that one word were Lightning, I would speak;
But as it is, I live and die unheard,
With a most voiceless thought, sheathing it as a sword.

XCVIII.

The morn is up again, the dewy morn,
With breath all incense, and with cheek all bloom,
Laughing the clouds away with playful scorn,
And living as if earth contain'd no tomb,—
And glowing into day: we may resume
The march of our existence; and thus I,
Still on thy shores, fair Leman! may find room
And food for meditation, nor pass by Much, that may give us pause, if ponder'd fittingly.

XCIX.

Clarens! sweet Clarens, birthplace of deep Love!
Thine air is the young breath of passionate thought;
Thy trees take root in Love; the snows above
The very Glaciers have his colors caught,
And sunset into rose-hues sees them wrought
By rays which sleep there lovingly: the rocks,
The permanent crags, tell here of Love, who sought
In them a refuge from the worldly shocks.
Which stir and sting the soul with hope that woos,
then mocks.

C.

Clarens! by heavenly feet thy paths are trod,—
Undying Love's, who here ascends a throne
To which the steps are mountains; where the god
Is a pervading life and light,—so shown
Not on these summits solely nor alone
In the still cave and forest; o'er the flower
His eye is sparkling, and his breath hath blown.
His soft and summer breath, whose tender power
Paces the strength of storms in their most desolate hour.*

CI.

All things are here of him: from the black pines,
Which are his shade on high, and the loud roar
Of torrents, where he listeneth, to the vines
Which slope his green path downward to the shore,
Where the bow'd waters meet him, and adore,
Kissing his feet with murmurs; and the wood,
The covert of old trees, with trunks all hoar,
But light leaves, young as joy, stands where it stood,
Offering to him, and his, a populous solitude.

CII.

A populous solitude of bees and birds,
And fairy-form'd and many-color'd things,
Who worship him with notes more sweet than words,
And innocently open their glad wings,
Fearless and full of life: the gush of springs,
And fall of lofty fountains, and the bend
Of stirring branches, and the bud which brings
The swiftest thought of beauty, here extend,
Mingling, and made by Love, unto one mighty end.

CIII.

He who hath loved not, here would learn that lore,
And make his heart a spirit; he who knows
That tender mystery, will love the more;
For this is Love's recess, where vain men's woes,
And the world's waste, have driven him far from those,
For 'tis his nature to advance or die;
He stands not still, but he decays, or grows
Into a boundless blessing, which may vie
With the immortal lights, in its eternity!

CIV.

'Twas not for fiction chose Rousseau this spot,
Peopling it with affections; but he found
It was the scene which passion must allot
To the mind's purified beings; 'twas the ground
Where early Love his Psyche's zone unbound,
And hallow'd it with loveliness: 'tis lone,
And wonderful, and deep, and hath a sound,
And sense, and slight of sweetness; here the Rhone Hath spread himself a couch, the Alps have rear'd a throne.

CV.

Lausanne! and Ferney! ye have been the abodes
Of names which unto you bequeath'd a name;*
Mortals, who sought and found, by dangerous roads,
A path to perpetuity of fame:
They were gigantic minds, and their steep aim
Was, Titan-like, on daring doubts to pile Thoughts which should call down thunder, and the flame
Of Heaven, again assail'd, if Heaven the while
On man and man's research could deign do more than smile.

CVI.

The one was fire and fickleness, a child
Most mutable in wishes, but in mind
A wit as various,—gay, grave, sage, or wild,—
Historian, bard, philosopher combined;
He multiplied himself among mankind,
The Proteus of their talents: But his own
Breathed most in ridicule,—which, as the wind,
Blew where it listed, laying all things prone,—
Now to o'erthrow a fool, and now to shake a throne.

CVII.

The other, deep and slow, exhausting thought,
And hiving wisdom with each studious year,

In meditation dwelt, with learning wrought,
And shaped his weapon with an edge severe,
Sapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer;
The lord of irony,—that master-spell,
Which stung his foes to wrath, which grew from fear,
And doom'd him to the zealot's ready Hell,
Which answers to all doubts so eloquently well.

OVIII.

Yet, peace be with their ashes,—for by them,
If merited, the penalty is paid;
It is not ours to judge,—far less condemn;
The hour must come when such things shall be made
Known unto all,—or hope and dread allay'd
By slumber, on one pillow,—in the dust,
Which, thus much we are sure, must life decay'd;
And when it shall revive, as is our trust,
T will be to be forgiven, or suffer what is just.

CIX.

But let me quit man's works, again to read
His Maker's, spread around me, and suspend
This page, which from my reveries I feed,
Until it seems prolonging without end.
The clouds above me to the white Alps tend,
And I must pierce them, and survey what'er
May be permitted, as my steps I bend
To their most great and growing region, where
The earth to her embrace compels the powers of air.

CX.

Italia! too, Italia! looking on thee,
Full flashes on the soul the light of ages,
Since the fierce Carthaginian almost won thee,
To the last halo of the chiefs and sages
Who glorify thy consecrated pages;
Thou wert the throne and grave of empires;
still
The fount at which the panting mind assuages
Her thirst of knowledge, quaffing there her fill, Flows from the eternal source of Rome's imperial hill.

CXI.

Thus far have I proceeded in a theme
Renew'd with no kind auspices :—to feel
We are not what we have been, and to deem
We are not what we should be,—and to steal
The heart against itself; and to conceal,
With a proud caution, love, or hate, or aught,—
Passion or feeling, purpose, grief, or zeal,—
Which is the tyrant spirit of our thought,
Is a stern task of soul :—No matter,—it is taught.

CXII.

And for these words, thus woven into song,
It may be that they are a harmless wile,—
The coloring of the scenes which fleet along,
Which I would seize, in passing, to beguile
My breast, or that of others, for a while.
Fame is the thirst of youth,—but I am not
So young as to regard men's frown or smile,
As loss or guerdon of a glorious lot;
I stood and stand alone,—remember'd or forgot.

CXIII.

I have not loved the world, nor the world me;
I have not flatter'd its rank breath, nor bow'd

To its idolatries a patient knee,—
Nor coin'd my cheek to smile,—nor cried aloud
In worship of an echo; in the crowd
They could not deem me one of such; I stood
Among them, but not of them; in a shroud
Of thoughts which were not their thoughts, and still could,
Had I not filed* my mind, which thus itself misused.

CXIV.

I have not loved the world, nor the world me,—
But let us part fair foes; I do believe,
Though I have found them not, that there may be
Words which are things,—hopes which will not deceive,
And virtues which are merciful, nor weave Snarers for the falling; I would also deem O'er others' griefs that some sincerely grieve; †
That two, or one, are almost what they seem,—
That goodness is no name, and happiness no dream.

CXV.

My daughter! with thy name this song begun;
My daughter! with thy name thus much shall end;
I see thee not,—I hear thee not,—but none
Can be so wrapt in thee; thou art the friend
To whom the shadows of far years extend:
Albeit my brow thou never shouldst behold,
My voice shall with thy future visions blend,
And reach into thy heart,—when mine is cold,—
A token and a tone, even from thy father's mould.

CXVI.

To aid thy mind's development,—to watch
Thy dawn of little joys,—to sit and see
Almost thy very growth,—to view thee catch
Knowledge of objects,—wonders yet to thee!
To hold thee lightly on a gentle knee,
And print on thy soft cheek a parent's kiss,—
This, it should seem, was not reserved for me;
Yet this was in my nature :—as it is,
I know not what is there, yet something like to this.

CXVII.

Yet, though dull Hate as duty should be taught,
I know that thou wilt love me; though my name
Should be shut from thee, as a spell still fraught
With desolation,—and a broken claim:
Though the grave closed between us,—'t were the same,
I know that thou wilt love me; though to drain
My blood from out thy being were an aim,
And an attainment,—all would be in vain,—
Still thou wouldst love me, still that more than life retain.

CXVIII.

The child of love, though born in bitterness,
And nurtured in convulsion. Of thy sire
These were the elements,—and thine no less.
As yet such are around thee,—but thy fire
Shall be more temper'd, and thy hope far higher.
Sweet be thy cradled slumbers! O'er the sea
And from the mountains where I now respire,
Pain would I waft such blessing upon thee,
As, with a sigh, I deem thou might'st have been to me!

* "If it be thus,
For Banquo's issue have I fled my mind."—Macbeth.

† It is said by Rochefoucauld, that "there is always something in the misfortunes of men's best friends not displeasing to them."

CANTO THE FOURTH.

Visto ho Toscana, Lombardia, Romagna,
 Quel Monte che divide, e quel che serpa
 Italia, e un mare e l'altro, che la bagna.
 ALFIERI, Batista III.

TO JOHN HOBHOUSE, ESQ., A.M., F.R.S., &c.

VENICE, January 2, 1818.

MY DEAR HOBHOUSE.

AFTER an interval of eight years between the composition of the first and last cantos of Childe Harold, the conclusion of the poem is about to be submitted to the public. In parting with so old a friend, it is not extraordinary that I should recur to one still older and better,—to one who has beheld the birth and death of the other, and to whom I am far more indebted for the social advantages of an enlightened friendship, than—though not ungrateful—I can, or could be, to Childe Harold, for any public favour reflected through the poem on the poet,—to one, whom I have known long and accompanied far, whom I have found wakeful over my sickness and kind in my sorrow, glad in my prosperity and firm in my adversity, true in counsel and trusty in peril,—to a friend often tried and never found wanting,—to yourself.

In so doing, I recur from fiction to truth; and in dedicating to you, in its complete or at least concluded state, a poetical work which is the longest, the most thoughtful and comprehensive of my compositions, I wish to do honor to myself by the record of many years' intimacy with a man of learning, of talent, of steadiness, and of honor. It is not for minds like ours to give or to receive flattery; yet the praises of sincerity have ever been perceived to the voice of friendship; and it is not for you, even for others, but to relieve a heart which has not elsewhere, or lately, been so much accustomed to the encounter of good-will as to withstand the shock firmly, that I thus attempt to commemorate your good qualities, or rather the advantages which I have derived from their exertion. Even the recurrence of the date of this letter, the anniversary of the most unfortunate day of my past existence,* but which cannot poison my future while I retain the resource of your friendship, and of my own faculties, will henceforth have a more agreeable recollection for both, inasmuch as it will remind us of this my attempt to thank you for an indefatigable regard, such as few men have experienced, and no one could experience without thinking better of his species and of himself.

It has been our fortune to traverse together, at various periods, the countries of chivalry, history, and fable—Spain, Greece, Asia Minor, and Italy; and what Athens and Constantinople were to us a few years ago, Venice and Rome have been more recently. The poem also, or the pilgrim, or both, have accompanied me from first to last; and perhaps it may be a pardonable vanity which induces me to reflect with complacency on a composition which in some degree connects me with the spot where it was produced, and the objects it would fain describe; and however unworthy it may be deemed of those magical and memorable abodes, however short it may fall of our distant conceptions and immediate impressions, yet as a mark of respect for what is venerable, and of feeling for what is glorious, it has been to me a source of pleasure in the production, and I part with it with a kind of regret, which I hardly suspected that events could have left me for imaginary objects.

With regard to the conduct of the last canto, there will be found less of the pilgrim than in any of the preceding, and that little slightly, if at all, separated from the author speaking in his own person. The fact is, that I had become weary of drawing a line which every one seemed determined not to perceive: like the Chinese in Goldsmith's "Citizen of the World," whom nobody would believe to be a Chinese, it was in vain that I asserted, and imagined that I had drawn, a distinction between the author and the pilgrim; and the very anxiety to preserve this difference, and disappointment at finding it unavailing, so far crushed my efforts in the composition, that I determined to abandon it altogether—and have done so. The opinions which have been, or may be, formed on that subject are now a matter of indifference; the work is to depend on itself, and not on the writer; and the author who has no resources in his own mind beyond the reputation, transient or permanent, which is to arise from his literary efforts, deserves the fate of authors.

In the course of the following canto it was my intention, either in the text or in the notes, to have touched upon the present state of Italian literature, and perhaps of manners. But the text, within the limits I proposed, I soon found hardly sufficient for the labyrinth of external objects, and the consequent reflections; and for the whole of the notes, excepting a few of the shortest, I am indebted to yourself, and these were necessarily limited to the elucidation of the text.

It is also a delicate, and no very grateful task, to dissent upon the literature and manners of a nation so dissimilar; and requires an attention and impartiality which would induce us—though perhaps no inattentive observers, nor ignorant of the language or customs of the people amongst whom we have recently abode—to distrust, or at least defer our judgment, and more narrowly examine our information. The state of literary, as well as political party, appears to run, or to have run, so high, that for a stranger to steer impartially between them is next to impossible. It may be enough then, at least for my purpose, to quote from their own beautiful language—"Mi pare che in un paese tutto poetico, che vanta la lingua la più nobile ed insieme la più dolce, tutte tutte le vie diverse si possono tentare, e che sinché la patria di Alfieri e di Monti non ha perduto l'antico valore, in tutte esse dovrebbe essere la prima." Italy has great names still—Canova, Monti, Ugo Foscolo, Pindemonte, Visconti, Morrelli, Cicognara, Albizzi, Menzophanti, Mal, Mustoxidi, Aglietti, and Vacca, will secure to the present generation an honorable place in most of the departments of Art, Science, and Belles Lettres; and in some the very highest—Europe—the World—has but one Canova.

It has been somewhere said by Alfieri, that "La pianta uomo nasce più robusta in Italia che in qualunque altra terra—e che gli stessi atroci delitti che vi si commettono ne sono una prova." Without subscribing to the latter part of his proposition, a dangerous doctrine, the truth of which may be disputed on better grounds, namely, that the Italians are in no respect more ferocious than their neighbors, that man must be willfully blind, or ignorantly headless, who is not struck with the extraordinary capacity of this people, or, if such a word be admissible, their capabilities, the facility of their acquisitions, the rapidity of their conceptions, the fire of their genius, their sense of beauty, and, amidst all the disadvantages of repeated revolutions, the desolation of battles, and the despair of ages, their still unquenched "longing after immortality,"—the immortality of independence. And when we ourselves, in riding round the walls of Rome, heard the simple lament of the laborers' chorus, "Roma! Roma! Roma! Roma non è più come era prima," it was difficult not to contrast this melancholy dirge with the bacchanal roar of the songs of exultation still yelled from the London taverns, over the carnage of Mont St. Jean, and the betrayal of Genoa, of Italy, of France, and of the world, by men whose conduct you yourself have exposed in a work worthy of the better days of our history. For me,—

* His marriage.

"Non moverò mai corda
Ove la turba di sue ciance amorda."

What Italy has gained by the late transfer of nations, it were useless for Englishmen to inquire, till it becomes ascertained that England has acquired something more than a permanent army and a suspended Habeas Corpus; it is enough for them to look at home. For what they have done abroad, and especially in the South, "Verily they will have their reward," at no very distant period.

Wishing you, my dear Hobhouse, a safe and agreeable return to that country whose real welfare can be dearer to none than to yourself, I dedicate to you this poem in its completed state; and repeat once more how truly I am ever,
Your obliged

And affectionate friend,

Byron

I.

I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs; *
A palace and a prison on each hand:
I saw from out the wave her structures rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
Around me, and a dying Glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject land
Look'd to the wing'd Lion's marble piles,
Where Venice sat in state, throned on her hundred isles!

II.

She looks a sea Cybele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiara of proud towers
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers;
And such she was; her daughters had their dowers
From spoils of nations, and the exhaustless East
Pour'd in her lap all gems in sparkling showers.
In purple was she robed, and of her feast Monarchs partook, and deem'd their dignity increased.

III.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,²⁰
And silent rows the songless gondolier;
Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
And music meets not always now the ear.
Those days are gone—but Beauty still is here.
States fall, arts fade—but Nature doth not die,
Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
The pleasant place of all festivity,
The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy!

M

IV.

But unto us she hath a spell beyond
Her name in story, and her long array
Of mighty shadows, whose dim forms despond
Above the dogeless city's vanish'd sway;
Ours is a trophy which will not decay
With the Rialto; Shylock and the Moor,
And Pierre, can not be swept or worn away—
The keystones of the arch! though all were o'er,
For us repeopled were the solitary shore.

V.

The beings of the mind are not of clay;
Essentially immortal, they create
And multiply in us a brighter ray
And more beloved existence: that which Fate
Prohibits to dull life, in this our state
Of mortal bondage, by these spirits supplied,
First exiles, then replaces what we hate;
Watering the heart whose early flowers have died,
And with a fresher growth replenishing the void.

VI.

Such is the refuge of our youth and age,
The first from Hope, the last from Vacancy;
And this worn feeling peoples many a page,
And, may be, that which grows beneath mine eyes:
Yet there are things whose strong reality
Outshines our fairy-land; in shape and hues
More beautiful than our fantastic sky,
And the strange constellations which the Muse
O'er her wild universe is skillful to diffuse:

VII.

I saw or dream'd of such,—but let them go,—
They came like truth, and disappear'd like dreams;
And whate'er they were—are now but so:
I could replace them if I would: still seems
My mind with many a form which aptly seems
Such as I sought for, and at moments found;
Let these too go—for waking Reason deems
Such overweening phantasies unsound,
And other voices speak, and other sights surround.

VIII.

I've taught me other tongues—and in strange eyes
Have made me not a stranger; to the mind
Which is itself, no changes bring surprise:
Nor is it harsh to make, nor hard to find
A country with—ay, or without mankind;
Yet was I born where men are proud to be,—
Not without cause; and should I leave behind
The inviolate island of the sage and free,
And seek me out a home by a remoter sea,

IX.

Perhaps I loved it well: and should I lay
My ashes in a soil which is not mine,
My spirit shall resume it if we may Unbodied choose a sanctuary. I twine
My hopes of being remember'd in my line
With my land's language: if too fond and far
These aspirations in their scope incline,—
If my fame should be as my fortunes are,
Of hasty growth and blight, and dull Oblivion bar

X.

My name from out the temple where the dead
Are honor'd by the nations—let it be—
And light the laurels on a loftier head!
And be the Spartan's epitaph on me—
"Sparta hath many a worthier son than he."²⁰

* The answer of the mother of Brasidas, the Lacedæmonian general, to the strangers who praised the memory of her son.

Meantime I seek no sympathies, nor need;
The thorns which I have reap'd are of the tree
I planted,—they have torn me,—and I bleed:
I should have known what fruit would spring from such a seed.

XL

The spouseless Adriatic mourns her lord;
And, annual marriage now no more renew'd,
The Bucentaur lies rotting unrestored,
Neglected garment of her widowhood!
St. Mark yet sees his lion where he stood*
Stand, but in mockery of his wither'd power,
Over the proud Place where an Emperor sued,
And monarchs gazed and envied in the hour
When Venice was a queen with an unequal'd dower.

XLI

The Sabaian sued, and now the Austrian reigns—†
An Emperor tramples where an Emperor knelt;
Kingdoms are shrunk to provinces, and chains
Clank over sceptred cities: nations melt
From power's high pinnacles, when they have felt
The sunshine for a while, and downward go
Like lawine loosen'd from the mountain's belt;
Oh for one hour of blind old Dandolo!
Th' octogenarian chief, Byzantium's conquering foe.

XLII

Before St. Mark still glow his steeds of brass,
Their gilded collars glittering in the sun;
But is not Doria's menace come to pass?
Are they not bridled?—Venice, lost and won,
Her thirteen hundred years of freedom done,
Sinks, like a sea-weed, into whence she rose!
Better be whelm'd beneath the waves, and shun
Even in destruction's depth, her foreign foes,
From whom submission wrings an infamous repose.

XLIII

In youth she was all glory,—a new Tyre;
Her very by-word sprung from victory,
The "Planter of the Lion,"† which through fire
And blood she bore o'er subject earth and sea;
Though making many slaves, herself still free,
And Europe's bulwark 'gainst the Ottoman;
Witness Troy's rival, Candia! Vouch it, ye
Immortal waves that saw Lepanto's fight!
For ye are names no time nor tyranny can blight.

XLIV

Statues of glass—all shiver'd—the long file
Of her dead Doges are declined to dust;
But where they dwelt, the vast and sumptuous pile
Bespeaks the pageant of their splendid trust;
Their sceptre broken, and their sword in rust,
Have yielded to the stranger: empty halls,
Thin streets, and foreign aspects, such as must Too oft remind her who and what intralls,¹
Have hung a desolate cloud o'er Venice's lovely walls.

XLV

When Athens' armies fell at Syracuse,
And fetter'd thousands bore the yoke of war,
Redemption rose up in the Attic Muse,†
Her voice their only ransom from afar:
See! as they chant the tragic hymn, the car
Of the o'ermaster'd victor stops, the reins
Fall from his hands—his idle scimitar

Starts from its belt—he rends his captive's chains,
And bids him thank the bard for freedom and his strains.

XLVI

Thus, Venice! if no stronger claim were thine,
Were all thy proud historic deeds forgot,
Thy choral memory of the Bard divine,
Thy love of Tasso, should have out the knot
Which ties thee to thy tyrants; and thy lot
Is shameful to the nations,—most of all,
Albion! to thee: the Ocean queen should not Abandon Ocean's children; in the fall
Of Venice think of thine, despite thy watery wall.

XLVII

I loved her from my boyhood; she to me
Was as a fairy city of the heart,
Rising like water-columns from the sea,
Of joy the sojourn, and of wealth the mart;
And Otway, Radcliffe, Schiller, Shakespeare's art,²
Had stamp'd her image in me, and even so,
Although I found her thus, we did not part,
Perchance even dearer in her day of woe,
Than when she was a boast, a marvel, and a show.

XLVIII

I can repeople with the past—and of
The present there is still for eye and thought,
And meditation chasten'd down, enough;
And more, it may be, than I hoped or sought;
And of the happiest moments which were wrought
Within the web of my existence, some
From thee, fair Venice! have their colors caught:
There are some feelings Time cannot benumb,
Nor Torture shake, or mine would now be cold and dumb.

XLIX

But from their nature will the tannen grow††
Loftiest on loftiest and least shelter'd rocks,
Rooted in barrenness, where nought below
Of soil supports them 'gainst the Alpine shocks
Of eddying storms; yet springs the trunk, and mocks
The howling tempest, till its height and frame
Are worthy of the mountains from whose blocks
Of bleak, gray granite into life it came,
And grew a giant tree;—the mind may grow the same.

CL

Existence may be borne, and the deep root
Of life and sufferance make its firm abode
In bare and desolated bosoms: mute
The camel labors with the heaviest load,
And the wolf dies in silence,—not bestow'd
In vain should such example be; if they,
Things of ignoble or of savage mood,
Endure and shrink not, we of nobler clay
May temper it to bear,—it is but for a day.

CLI

All suffering doth destroy, or is destroy'd,
Even by the sufferer: and, in each event,
Ends:—Some, with hope replenish'd and rebuoy'd,
Return to whence they came—with like intent,
And weave their web again; some, bow'd and bent,

* 1, 2, 3 See Appendix, Notes, Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14.

† That is, the Lion of St. Mark, the standard of the republic, which is the origin of the word Pantaloön—Pantaleone, Pantaleon, Pantolon.

† The story is told in Plutarch's Life of Nicias.

² Venice Preserved; Mysteries of Udolpho; the Ghost-Beer, or Armenian; the Merchant of Venice, Othello.

†† Tannen is the plural of tanne, a species of fir peculiar to the Alps, which only thrives in very rocky parts, where scarcely soil sufficient for its nourishment can be found. On these spots it grows to a greater height than any other mountain tree.

Wax gray and ghastly, withering ere their time,
And perish with the reed on which they leant;
Some seek devotion, toil, war, good, or crime,
According as their souls were form'd to sink or climb.

XXXIII.

But ever and anon of griefs subdued
There comes a token like a scorpion's sting,
Scarce seen, but with fresh bitterness imbued;
And slight withal may be the things which bring Back on the heart the weight which it would fling
Aside for ever; it may be a sound—
A tone of music—summer's eve—or spring—
A flower—the wind—the ocean—which shall wound,

Striking the electric chain wherewith we are darkly bound;

XXXIV.

And how and why we know not, nor can trace
Home to its cloud this lightning of the mind,
But feel the shock renew'd, nor can efface
The blight and blackening which it leaves behind,
Which out of things familiar, undesign'd,
When least we deem of such, calls up to view
The spectres whom no exorcism can bind,
The cold—the changed—perchance the dead—
—new.

The mourn'd, the loved, the lost—too many!—yet how few!

XXV.

But my soul wanders; I demand it back
To meditate amongst decay, and stand
A ruin amidst ruins; there to track
Fall'n states and buried greatness, o'er a land
Which was the mightiest in its old command,
And is the loveliest, and must ever be
The master-mould of Nature's heavenly hand,
Wherein were cast the heroic and the free,
The beautiful, the brave—the lords of earth and sea,

XXVI.

The commonwealth of kings, the men of Rome
And even since, and now, fair Italy!
Thou art the garden of the world, the home
Of all Art yields, and Nature can decree;
Even in thy desert, what is like to thee?
Thy very weeds are beautiful, thy waste
More rich than other climes' fertility;
Thy wreck a glory, and thy ruin graced
With an immaculate charm which can not be defaced.

XXVII.

The moon is up, and yet it is not night—
Sunset divides the sky with her—a sea
Of glory streams along the Alpine height
Of blue Friuli's mountains; Heaven is free
From clouds, but of all colors seems to be,— Melted to one vast Iris of the West,—
Where the Day joins the past Eternity;
While on the other hand, meek Dian's crest
Floats through the azure air—an island of the blue!¹

XXVIII.

A single star is at her side, and reigns
With her o'er half the lovely heaven; but still Yon sunny sea heaves brightly, and remains
Roll'd o'er the peak of the far Rhetian hill,
As Day and Night contending were, until Nature reclaimed her order:—gently flows
The deep-dyed Brenta, where their hues instill

* The above description may seem fantastical or exaggerated to those who have never seen an Oriental or an Italian sky, yet it is but a literal and hardly sufficient delineation of an August evening (the 18th), as contemplated in one of many rides along the banks of the Brenta, near La Mira.

The odorous purple of a new-born rose,
Which streams upon her stream, and glass'd within it glows,

XXIX.

Fill'd with the face of heaven, which, from afar,
Comes down upon the waters; all its hues,
From the rich sunset to the rising star,
Their magical variety diffuse:
And now they change; a paler shadow strews
Its mantle o'er the mountains; parting day
Dies like the dolphin, whom each pang imboes
With a new color as it gasps away,
The last still loveliest, till—'t is gone—and all is gray.

XXX.

There is a tomb in Arqua;—rear'd in air,
Pillar'd in their sarcophagus, repose
The bones of Laura's lover: here repair
Many familiar with his well-sung woes,
The pilgrims of his genius. He arose
To raise a language, and his land reclaim
From the dull yoke of her barbaric fœs:
Watering the tree which bears his lady's name^{16, 17}
With his melodious tears, he gave himself to fame.

XXXI.

They keep his dust in Arqua, where he died; ^{16, 17}
The mountain village where his latter days Went down the vale of years; and 't is their pride—
An honest pride—and let it be their praise,
To offer to the passing stranger's gaze
His mansion and his sepulchre; both plain
And venerably simple, such as raise
A feeling more accordant with his strain
Than if a pyramid form'd his monumental fane.

XXXII.

And the soft quiet hamlet where he dwelt
Is one of that complexion which seems made
For those who their mortality have felt,
And sought a refuge from their hopes decay'd
In the deep umbrage of a green hill's shade,
Which shows a distant prospect far away
Of busy cities, now in vain display'd,
For they can lure no further; and the ray
Of a bright sun can make sufficient holiday,

XXXIII.

Developing the mountains, leaves, and flowers,
And shining in the brawling brook, where-by,
Clear as its current, glide the sauntering hours
With a calm languor, which, though to the eye
Idle as it seem, hath its morality.
If from society we learn to live,
'T is solitude should teach us how to die;
It hath no flatterers; vanity can give
No hollow aid; alone—man with his God must strive:

XXXIV.

Or, it may be, with demons, who impair†
The strength of better thoughts, and seek their prey
In melancholy bosoms, such as were
Of moody texture from their earliest day,
And loved to dwell in darkness and dismay,
Deeming themselves predestined to a doom
Which is not of the pangs that pass away;
Making the sun like blood, the earth a tomb,
The tomb a hell, and hell itself a murkier gloom.

† The struggle is to the full as likely to be with demons as with our better thoughts. Satan chose the wilderness for the temptation of our Saviour: and our unsullied John Locke preferred the presence of a child to complete solitude.

XXXV.

Ferrara! in thy wide and grass-grown streets,
Whose symmetry was not for solitude,
There seems as 't were a curse upon the seats
Of former sovereigns, and the antique brood
Of Este, which for many an age made good
Its strength within thy walls, and was of yore
Patron or tyrant, as the changing mood
Of petty power impell'd, of those who wore
The wreath which Dante's brow alone had worn before.

XXXVI.

And Tasso is their glory and their shame.
Hark to his strain! and then survey his cell!
And see how dearly earn'd Torquato's fame,
And where Alfonso bade his poet dwell:
The miserable despot could not quell
The insulted mind he sought to quench, and blend
With the surrounding maniacs, in the hell
Where he had plunged it. Glory without end
Scatter'd the clouds away—and on that name attend

XXXVII.

The tears and praises of all time; while thine
Would rot in its oblivion—in the sink
Of worthless dust, which from thy boasted line
Is shaken into nothing; but the link
Thou formest in his fortunes bids us think
Of thy poor malice, naming thee with scorn—
Alfonso! how thy ducal pageants shrink
From thee! if in another station born,
Scarcely fit to be the slave of him thou mad'st to mourn:

XXXVIII.

Thou! form'd to eat, and be despised, and die,
Even as the beasts that perish, save that thou
Hast a more splendid trough, and wider sty:
He! with a glory round his furrow'd brow,
Which emanated then, and dazzles now,
In face of all his foes, the Cruscan quire,
And Boileau, whose rash envy could allow is No strain which shamed his country's creaking
lyre,
That whetstone of the teeth—monotony in wire!

XXXIX.

Peace to Torquato's injured shade! 't was his
In life and death to be the mark where Wrong
Aim'd with her poison'd arrows; but to miss.
Oh, victor unsurpass'd in modern song!
Each year brings forth its millions; but how long
The tide of generations shall roll on,
And not the whole combined and countless throng
Compose a mind like thine? though all in one Condensed their scatter'd rays, they would not form a sun.

XL.

Great as thou art, yet parallel'd by those,
Thy countrymen, before thee born to shine,
The Bards of Hell and Chivalry: first rose
The Tuscan father's comedy divine;
Then, not unequal to the Florentine,
The southern Scott, the minstrel who call'd forth
A new creation with his magic line,

And, like the Ariosto of the North,
Sang lady-love and war, romance and knightly worth.

XLI.

The lightning rent from Ariosto's bust*
The iron crown of laurel's mimic'd leaves;
Nor was the ominous element unjust,
For the true laurel-wreath which Glory weaves
Is of the tree no bolt of thunder cleaves;
And the false semblance but disgraced his brow;
Yet still, if fondly Superstition grieves,
Know, that the lightning sanctifies below;
Whate'er it strikes; yon head is doubly sacred now.

XLII.

Italia! oh, Italia! thou who hast
The fatal gift of beauty, which became
A funeral dower of present woes and past,
On thy sweet brow is sorrow plough'd by shame,
And annals grav'd in characters of flame,
Oh, God! that thou wert in thy nakedness
Less lovely or more powerful, and couldst claim
Thy right, and awe the robbers back, who press
To shed thy blood, and drink the tears of thy distress;

XLIII.

Then might'st thou more appal; or, less desired,
Be homely and be peaceful, undeplored
For thy destructive charms; then, still untired,
Would not be seen the armed torrents pour'd
Down the deep Alps; nor would the hostile horde
Of many-nation'd spoilers from the Po
Quaff blood and water; nor the stranger's sword
Be thy and weapon of defence, and so,
Victor or vanquish'd, thou the slave of friend or foe.

XLIV.

Wandering in youth, I traced the path of him |
The Roman friend of Rome's least-mortal mind,
The friend of Tully: as my bark did skim
The bright blue waters with a fanning wind,
Came Megara before me, and behind
Ægina lay, Piræus on the right,
And Corinth on the left; I lay reclined
Along the prow, and saw all these unite
In ruin, even as he had seen the desolate sight;

XLV.

For Time hath not rebuilt them, but uprear'd
Barbaric dwellings on their shatter'd site,
Which only make more mourn'd and more en-dear'd
The few last rays of their far-scatter'd light,
And the crush'd relics of their vanish'd might.
The Roman saw these tombs in his own age,
These sepulchres of cities, which excite
Sad wonder, and his yet surviving page
The moral lesson bears, drawn from such pilgrimage.

XLVI.

That page is now before me, and on mine
His country's ruin added to the mass
Of perish'd states he mourn'd in their decline,
And I in desolation: all that was
Of then destruction is; and now, alas!

* i. e. See Appendix, Notes, Nos. 19, 20, 21.

† The two stanzas xlii. and xliii. are, with the exception of a line or two, a translation of the famous sonnet of Pittoraja: "Italia, Italia, O tu cui fee la sorte!"

‡ The celebrated letter of Servius Sulpicius to Cicero, on the death of his daughter, describes as it then was, and now is, a path which I often traced in Greece, both by sea and land, in different journeys and voyages. "On my return from Asia, as I was sailing from Ægina towards Megara, I began to contemplate the prospect of the countries around me: Ægina was behind, Megara before me; Piræus on the right, Corinth on the left: all which towns, once famous and flourishing, now lie overturned and buried in their ruins. Upon this sight, I could not but think presently within myself, Alas! how do we poor mortals fret and vex ourselves if any of our friends happen to die or be killed, whose life is yet so short, when the carcases of so many noble cities lie here exposed before me in one view."—See Middleton's Cicero, vol. ii., p. 87.

Rome—Rome imperial, bows her to the storm,
In the same dust and blackness, and we pass
The skeleton of her Titanic form,*
Wrecks of another world, whose ashes still are warm.

XLVII.

Yet, Italy! through every other land
Thy wrongs should ring, and shall, from side to side;
Mother of Arts! as once of arms; thy hand
Was then our guardian, and is still our guide;
Parent of our Religion! whom the wide
Nations have knelt to for the keys of heaven!
Europe, repentant of her parricide,
Shall yet redeem thee, and, all backward driven,
Roll the barbarian tide, and sue to be forgiven.

XLVIII.

But Arno wins us to the fair white walls,
Where the Etrurian Athens claims and keeps
A softer feeling for her fairy halls.
Girt by her theatre of hills, she reaps
Her corn, and wine, and oil, and Plenty leaps
To laughing life, with her redundant horn.
Along the banks where smiling Arno sweeps
Was modern Luxury of Commerce born,
And buried Learning rose, redeem'd to a new morn.

XLIX.

There, too, the Goddess loves in stone, and fills
The air around with beauty; we inhale
The ambrosial aspect, which, beheld, instills
Part of its immortality; the veil
Of heaven is half withdrawn; within the pale
We stand, and in that form and face behold
What Mind can make, when Nature's self would fail;
And to the fond idolaters of old
Envy the innate flash which such a soul could mould:

L.

We gaze and turn away, and know not where,
Dazzled and drunk with beauty, till the heart
Reels with its fullness; there—for ever there—
Chain'd to the chariot of triumphal Art,
We stand as captive, and would not depart.
Away!—there need no words, nor terms precise,
The palsy jargon of the marble mart,
Where Pedantry gulls Folly—we have eyes:
Blood—pulse—and breast, confirm the Dardan
Shepherd's prize.

LI.

Appear'st thou not to Paris in this guise?
Or to more deeply blest Anchises? or,
In all thy perfect goddessship, when lies
Before thee thy own vanquish'd Lord of War?
And gazing in thy face as toward a star,
Laid on thy lap, his eyes to the upturn,
Feeding on thy sweet cheek! while thy lips are
With lava kisses melting while they burn, Shower'd on his eyelids, brow, and mouth, as from an urn?

LII.

Glowing, and circumfused in speechless love,
Their full divinity inadequate
That feeling to express, or to improve,
The gods become as mortals, and man's fate
Has moments like their brightest; but the weight

Of earth recalls upon us;—let it go!
We can recall such visions, and create,
From what has been, or might be, things which grow
Into thy statue's form, and look like gods below.

LIII.

I leave to learned fingers and wise hands,
The artist and his ape, to teach and tell
How well his connoisseurship understands
The graceful bend and the voluptuous swell:
Let these describe the undescribable:
I would not their vile breath should crisp the stream
Wherein that image shall for ever dwell;
The unrufted mirror of the loveliest dream
That ever left the sky on the deep soul to beam.

LIV.

In Santa Croce's holy precincts lie;
Ashes which make it holier, dust which is Even in itself an immortality,
Though there were nothing save the past, and this,
The particle of those sublimities
Which have relapsed to chaos:—here repose
Angelo's, Alfieri's bones, and his;
The starry Galileo, with his woes;
Here Machiavelli's earth return'd to whence it rose.]

LV.

These are four minds, which, like the elements,
Might furnish forth creation:—Italy!
Time, which hath wrong'd thee with ten thousand rents
Of thine imperial garment, shall deny,
And hath denied, to every other sky,
Spirits which soar from ruin:—thy decay
Is still impregnate with divinity,
Which glides it with revivifying ray;
Such as the great of yore, Canova is to-day.

LVI.

But where repose the all Etruscan three—
Dante, and Petrarch, and, scarce less than they,
The Bard of Prose, creative spirit! he
Of the Hundred Tales of love—where did they lay
Their bones, distinguish'd from our common clay
In death as life? Are they resolved to dust,
And have their country's marbles nought to say?
Could not her quarries furnish forth one bust?
Did they not to her breast their filial earth entrust?

LVII.

Ungrateful Florence! Dante sleeps afar,
Like Scipio, buried by the upbraiding shore:
Thy factions, in their worse than civil war,
Froscscribed the bard whose name for evermore
Their children's children would in vain adore
With the remembrance of ages; and the crown
Which Petrarch's laureate brow supremely wore,
Upon a far and foreign soil had grown,
His life, his fame, his grave, though rid'd—not thine own.

LVIII.

Boccaccio to his parent earth bequeath'd
His dust,—and lies it not her Great among,
With many a sweet and solemn requiem breath'd
O'er him who form'd the Tuscan's siren tongue?
That music in itself, whose sounds are song,

* It is Poggio who, looking from the Capitoline Hill upon ruined Rome, breaks forth in the exclamation, "Ut nunc omni decore nudata, prostrata jacet, instar gigantis corrupti edisse undique exeat."

† In 1817, Lord Byron visited Florence, on his way to Rome. "I remained," he says, "but a day: however, I went to the two galleries, from which one returns drawn with beauty."

‡ & † See Appendix, Notes, Nos. 22, 23, 24, 25.—"The church of Santa Croce contains much interesting nothing. The tombs of Machiavelli, Michael Angelo, Galileo, and Alfieri make it the Westminster Abbey of Italy."

¶, , †† See Appendix, Notes, Nos. 22, 23, 24, and 25.

The poetry of speech? No;—even his tomb
Upborn, must bear the hyena bigot's wrong,
No more amidst the meaner dead find room,
Nor claim a passing sigh, because it told for whom!

LXX

And Santa Croce wants their mighty dust;
Yet for this want more noted, as of yore
The Caesar's pregnant, scorn of Brutus' bust,
Did but of Rome's best Son remind her more.
Happier Ravenna! on the hoary shore,
Fortress of falling empire! honor'd sleeps
The immortal exile:—Argue, too, her store
Of useful relics proudly claims and keeps,
While Florence vainly begs her banish'd dead, and wails.

LX.

What is her pyramid of precious stones ?³⁰
Of porphyry, Jasper, agate, and all hues
Of gem and marble, to encrest the boue
Of merchant-dukes ? the monetary dews
Which, sparkling to the twilight stars, infuse
Freshness in the green turf that wraps the dead.
Whose names are manulems of the Muse,
Are gently prest with far more reverent tread
Than ever paced the slab which paves the princely bed.

LKI.

There be more things to greet the heart and eyes
In Amos's dome of Art's most princely shrine,
Where Sculpture with her rainbow sister vies;
There be more marvels yet—but not for mine;
For I have been accustomed to entwine
My thoughts with Nature rather in the fields,
Than Art in galleries: though a work divine
Calls for my spirit's homage, yet it yields
Less than it feels, because the weapon which it wields.

LKIJ

Is of another temper, and I roam
By Thrinacoe's lake, in the desiles
Fetel to Roman ruthness, more at home;
For there the Orthogastrian's warlike wiles
Came back before me, as his skill beguiles
The host between the mountains and the shore,
Where Courage falls in her despairing flies,
And terror, swollen to rivers with their gore,
Runs through the sultry plain, with lions scatter'd

LXIII.

1000 A forest fall'd by mountain winds;
 And saw the storm of battle on this day,
 And saw the frenzy, whose convulsion blinds
 To all save vengeance, that, beneath the fray,
 As death-marks round unheeded away!¹
 And saw the stern Nature rocking at his feet,
 And bearing forth a grave for those who lay
 And saw the packers for a winding sheet;²
 And saw the scorching hate when warring nations

LXIV.

The old man was as a rolling bark
 That drifts from glory to glory; they saw
 His face, but had no time to mark
 The features on their vessel;
 The old man, reek'd not of the awe
 Of their mountain tumbled, and the
 The old man for refuge and withdraw
 The old man, reek'd not of the awe
 Of their mountain tumbled, and the

WILSON, J.

...all Italy recovered during the
...the circumstances.

LXV.

Far other scene is Thracian now;
Her lake a sheet of silver, and her plain
Rent by no ravage save the gentle plough;
Her aged trees rise thick as once the alain
Lay where their roots are; but a brook hath ta'en—
A little rill of scanty stream and bed—
A name of blood from that day's sanguine rain;
And Sanguinetto tells ye where the dead
Made the earth wet, and turned the unwilling waters red.

LXVI.

But thou, Citharus! in thy sweetest wave
Of the most living crystal that was e'er
The haunt of river nymph, to gaze and lave
Her limbs where nothing hid them, thou dost roar
Thy grassy banks whereon the milk-white steer
Grazes; the purest god of gentle waters!
And most serene of aspect, and most clear;
Surely that stream was unprofaned by slaughter—
A mirror and a bath for Beauty's youngest daughters!

LXVII.

And on thy happy shore a Temple still,
Of small and delicate proportion, keeps,
Upon a mild declivity of hill,
Its memory of thee; beneath it sweeps
Thy current's calmness; oft from out it leaps
The finny darter with the glittering scales,
Who dwells and revels in thy glassy deeps;
While, chance, some scatter'd water-lily sails
Down where the shallower wave still tells its bubbling tale.

LXVIII.

Pass not unblest the Genius of the place!
If through the air a zephyr more serene
Wiu to the brow, 'tis his; and if ye trace
Along his margin a more eloquent green,
If on the heart the freshness of the scene
Sprinkle its coolness, and from the dry dust
Of weary life a moment lave it clean
With Nature's baptism,—'tis to him ye must Pav orisons for this suspension of disgust.

LXIX.

The roar of waters!—from the headlong height
Vellno cleaves the wave-worn precipice;
The fall of waters! rapid as the light
The flashing mass foams shaking the abyss;
The bell of waters! where they howl and hiss,
And bawl in endless torture; while the sweat
Of their great agony, wrung out from this
Their Phlegethon, curls round the rocks of jet
That gird the gulf around, in pitiless horror set.

LXX.

And mounts in spray the skies, and thence again
Returns in an unceasing shower, which round,
With its unemptied cloud of gentle rain,
Is an eternal April to the ground,
Making it all one emerald:—how profound
The gulf! and how the giant element
From rock to rock leaps with delirious bound,
Crushing the cliffs, which, downward worn and
With his fierce footsteps, yield in chains a fearful

LXXI.

To the broad column which rolls on, and shows
More like the fountain of an infant sea
Torn from the womb of mountains by the throes
Of a new world, than only thus to be
Parent of rivers, which flow guahingly,

With many windings, through the vale:—Look back!
Lo! where it comes like an eternity,
As if to sweep down all things in its track,
Charming the eye with dread,—a matchless cataract.*

LXXII.

Horribly beautiful! but on the verge,
From side to side, beneath the glittering moon,
An Iris sits, amidst the infernal surge,†
Like Hope upon a death-bed, and, unworn
Its steady dyes, while all around is torn
By the distracted waters, bears serene
Its brilliant hues with all their beams unshorn:
Resembling, mild the torture of the scene,
Love watching Madness with unalterable mien.

LXXIII.

Once more upon the woody Apennine,
The infant Alps, which—had I not before
Gazed on their mightier parents, where the pine
Sits on more shaggy summits, and where roar I
The thundering lawine—might be worshipping‡
But I have seen the soaring Jungfrau rear
Her never-trodden snow, and seen the hoar
Glaciers of bleak Mont Blanc both far and near,
And in Chimari heard the thunder-hills of fear,

LXXIV.

Th' Acroceraunian mountains of old name;
And on Parnassus seen the eagles fly
Like spirits of the spot, as 't were for fame,
For still they soar'd unutterably high:
I've look'd on Ida with a Trojan's eye;
Athos, Olympus, Ætna, Atlas, made
These hills seem things of lesser dignity.
All, save the lone Soraete's height, display'd
Not now in snow, which asks the lyric Roman's aid

LXXV.

For our remembrance, and from out the plain
Heaves like a long-swept wave about to break,
And on the curl hangs pausing: not in vain
May he, who will, his recollections rake,
And quote in classic raptures, and awake
The hills with Latian echoes; I abhor'd
Too much, to conquer for the poet's sake,

The drill'd dull lesson, forced down word by word!

In my repugnant youth, with pleasure to record

LXXVI.

Aught that recalls the daily drug which turn'd
My sickening memory; and, though Time hath taught
My mind to meditate what then it learn'd,
Yet such the fix'd inveteracy wrought
By the impatience of my early thought,
That, with the freshness wearing out before
My mind could relish what it might have sought,
If free to choose, I cannot now restore
Its health; but what it then detested, still abhor.

LXXVII.

Then farewell, Horace! whom I hated so,
Not for thy faults, but mine; it is a curse
To understand, not feel thy lyric flow,
To comprehend, but never love thy verse:
Although no deeper Moralist rehearse
Our little life, nor Bard prescribe his art,
Nor livelier Satirist the conscience pierce,
Awakening without wounding the touch'd heart,
Yet fare thee well—upon Soraete's ridge we part.

LXXVIII.

Oh, Rome! my country! city of the soul!
The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
Lone mother of dead empires! and control
In their shut breasts their petty misery.
What are our woes and sufferance? Come and see
The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your way
O'er steps of broken thrones and temples, Ye!
Whose agonies are evils of a day—
A world is at our feet as fragile as our clay.

LXXIX.

The Niobe of nations! there she stands,
Childless and crownless, in her voiceless woe;
An empty urn within her wither'd hands,
Whose holy dust was scatter'd long ago;
The Scipios' tomb contains no ashes now;
The very sepulchres lie nameless
Of their heroic dwellers: dost thou flow,
Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness?
Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle her distress.

* I saw the Cascata del Marmore of Terni twice, at different periods; once from the summit of the precipice, and again from the valley below. The lower view is far to be preferred, if the traveller has time for one only; but in any point of view, either from above or below, it is worth all the cascades and torrents of Switzerland put together: the Staubbach, Reichenbach, Pisse Vache, fall of Arpenaz, &c. are rills in comparative appearance. Of the fall of Schaffhausen I cannot speak, not yet having seen it.

† Of the time, place, and qualities of this kind of Iris, the reader will see a short account in a note to Manfred. The fall looks so much like "the bell of waters," that Addison thought the descent alluded to by the gulf in which Æleto plunged into the infernal regions. It is singular enough, that two of the finest cascades in Europe should be artificial—this of the Velino, and the one at Tirolli. The traveller is strongly recommended to take the Velino, at least as high as the little lake, called Pis di Lep. The besting territory was the Italian Tempe (Cler. Epist. ad Attic. xv. lib. iv.), and the ancient naturalists (Plin. Hist. Nat. lib. ii. cap. lxi.), amongst other beautiful varieties, remarked the daily rain-bows of the lake Velinus. A scholar of great name has devoted a treatise to this district alone. See Ald. Manut. de Bestina Urbe Agroque, ap. Bellenger. Thesaur. tom. i. p. 773. ‡ In the greater part of Switzerland, the avalanches are known by the name of lawine.

§ These stanzas may probably remind the reader of Ruskin Northerton's remarks:—"D—n Homo," &c.; but the reasons for our dislike are not exactly the same. I wish to express, that we become tired of the task before we can comprehend the beauty; that we learn by rote before we can get by heart; that the freshness is worn away, and the future pleasure and advantage desecrated and destroyed, by the disquieting anticipation, at an age when we can neither feel nor understand the power of compositions which it requires an acquaintance with life, as well as Latin and Greek, to relish, or to reason upon. For the same reason, we never can be aware of the fullness of some of the finest passages of Shakespeare ("To be or not to be," for instance), from the habit of having them hammered into us at eight years old, as an exercise, not of mind, but of memory; so that when we are old enough to enjoy them, the taste is gone, and the appetite perished. In some parts of the continent, young persons are taught from more common authors, and do not read the best classics till their maturity. I certainly do not speak on this point from any pique or aversion towards the place of my education. I was not a slow, though an idle boy; and I believe no one could, or can be, more attached to Harrow than I have always been, and with reason;—a part of the time passed there was the happiest of my life; and my preceptor, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Drury, was the best and worthiest friend I ever possessed, whose warnings I have remembered but too well, though too late when I have erred,—and whose counsels I have but followed when I have done well or wisely. If ever this imperfect record of my feelings toward him should reach his eyes, let it remind him of one who never thinks of him, but with gratitude and remembrance—of one who would more gladly boast of having been his pupil, if by more closely following his injunctions, he could reflect any honor upon his instructor.

LXXX.

The Goth, the Christian, Time, War, Flood, and Fire,
Have dealt upon the seven-hill'd city's pride;
She saw her glories star by star expire,
And up the steep barbarian monarchs ride,
Where the car climb'd the Capitol: far and wide
Temple and tower went down, nor left a site:
Chaos of ruins! who shall trace the void,
O'er the dim fragments cast a lunar light,
And say, "here was, or is," where all is doubly night?

LXXXI.

The double night of ages, and of her,
Night's daughter, Ignorance, hath wrapt and wrap
All round us; we but feel our way to err:
The ocean hath its chart, the stars their map,
And Knowledge spreads them on her ample lap;
But Rome is as the desert, where we steer
Stumbling o'er recollections; now we clap
Our hands, and cry "Eureka!" it is clear—
When but some false mirage of ruin rises near.

LXXXII.

Alas! the lofty city! and alas!
The trebly hundred triumphs! * and the day
When Brutus made the dagger's edge surpass
The conqueror's sword in bearing fame away!
Alas, for Tully's voice, and Virgil's lay,
And Livy's pictured page!—but these shall be
Her resurrection; all beside—decay.
Alas, for Earth, for never shall we see
That brightness in her eye she bore when Rome was free!

LXXXIII.

Oh thou, whose chariot roll'd on Fortune's wheel,
Triumphant Sylla! Thou, who didst subdue
Thy country's foes ere thou wouldst pause to feel
The wrath of thy own wrongs, or reap the due
Of boarded vengeance till thine eagles flew
O'er prostrate Asia;—thou, who with thy frown
Annihilated senates—Roman, too,
With all thy vices, for thou didst lay down
With an atoning smile a more than earthly crown—

LXXXIV.

The dictatorial wreath,—couldst thou divine
To what would one day dwindle that which made
Thee more than mortal? and that so supine
By aught than Romans Rome should thus be laid?
She who was named Eternal, and array'd
Her warriors but to conquer—she who veil'd
Earth with her haughty shadow, and display'd,
Until the o'er-canopied horizon fall'd,
Her rushing wings—Oh! she who was Almighty hail'd!

LXXXV.

Sylla was first of victors; but our own
The sagest of usurpers, Cromwell; he Too swept off senates while he hew'd the throne
Down to a block—immortal rebel! See
What crimes it costs to be a moment free
And famous through all ages! but beneath
His fate the moral lurks of destiny:
His day of double victory and death
Beheld him win two realms, and, happier, yield his breath.

LXXXVI.

The third of the same moon whose former course
Had all but crown'd him, on the selfsame day

Deposed him gently from his throne of force,
And laid him with the earth's preceding clay.†
And show'd not Fortune thus how fame and away,
And all we deem delightful, and consume
Our souls to compass through each arduous way,
Are in her eyes less happy than the tomb?
Were they but so in man's, how different were his doom!

LXXXVII.

And thou, dread statue! yet existent in
The austere form of naked majesty,
Thou who beheldest, 'mid the assassins' din,
At thy bathed base the bloody Caesar lie,
Folding his robe in dying dignity,
An offering to thine altar from the queen
Of gods and men, great Nemesis! did he die,
And thou, too, perish, Pompey? have ye been Victors of countless kings, or puppets of a scene?

LXXXVIII.

And thou, the thunder-stricken nurse of Rome^{22, 23}
She-wolf! whose brassen-imaged dugs impart
The milk of conquest yet within the dome
Where, as a monument of antique art,
Thou standest:—Mother of the mighty heart,
Which the great founder suck'd from thy wild
teat,
Scorch'd by the Roman Jove's ethereal dart,
And thy limbs black with lightning—dost thou yet
Guard thine immortal cubs, nor thy fond charge forget?

LXXXIX.

Thou dost;—but all thy foster-babes are dead—
The men of iron: and the world hath rear'd
Cities from out their sepulchres: men bled
In imitation of the things they fear'd,
And fought and conquer'd, and the same course
steer'd,
At apish distance; but as yet none have,
Nor could, the same supremacy have near'd,
Save one vain man, who is not in the grave,
But, vanquish'd by himself, to his own slaves a slave—

XC.

The fool of false dominion—and a kind
Of bastard Caesar, following him of old
With steps unequal; for the Roman's mind
Was modell'd in a less terrestrial mould.²⁴
With passions fiercer, yet a judgment cold,
And an immortal instinct which redeem'd
The frailties of a heart so soft, yet bold,
Alcides with the distaff now he seem'd,
At Cleopatra's feet—and now himself he beam'd,

XCI.

And came—and saw—and conquer'd! But the fame
Who would have tamed his eagles down to flee,
Like a train'd falcon, in the Gallic van,
Which he, in sooth, long led to victory,
With a deaf heart which never seem'd to be
A listener to itself, was strangely framed;
With but one weakest weakness—vanity,
Coquetish in ambition—still he aim'd—
At what? can he avouch—or answer what he claim'd?

XCII.

And would be all or nothing—nor could wait
For the sure grave to level him; few years

* Orosius gives 200 for the number of triumphs.

† On the 24 of September Cromwell gained the victory of Dunbar: a year afterwards he obtained "his crowning mercy" of Worcester; and a few years after, on the same day, which he had ever esteemed the most fortunate for him.

Had fix'd him with the Cæsars in his fate,
On whom we tread : For this the conqueror rears
The arch of triumph ! and for this the tears
And blood of earth flow on as they have flow'd,
An universal deluge, which appears
Without an ark for wretched man's abode,
And ebbs but to reflo w !—Renew thy rainbow, God !

XCIII.

What from this barren being do we reap ?
Our senses narrow, and our reason frail,
Life short, and truth a gem which loves the deep,
And all things weigh'd in custom's falsest scale ;
Opinion an omnipotence,—whose veil
Mantles the earth with darkness, until right
And wrong are accidents, and men grow pale Lest their own judgments should become too bright,
And their free thoughts be crimes, and earth have too much light.

XCIV.

And thus they plod in sluggish misery,
Rotting from sire to son, and age to age,
Proud of their trampled nature, and so die,
Bequeathing their hereditary rage
To the new race of inborn slaves, who wage
War for their chains, and rather than be free,
Bleed gladiator-like, and still engage
Within the same arena where they see
Their fellows fall before, like leaves of the same tree.

XCV.

I speak not of men's creeds—they rest between
Man and his Maker—but of things allow'd,
Aver'd, and known,—and daily, hourly seen—
The yoke that is upon us doubly bow'd,
And the intent of tyranny avow'd,
The edict of Earth's rulers, who are grown
The apex of him who humbled once the proud,
And shock them from their slumbers on the throne :

Too glorious, were this all his mighty arm had done.

XCVI.

Can tyrants but by tyrants conquer'd be,
And Freedom find no champion and no child
Such as Columbia saw arise when she Sprung forth a Pallas, arm'd and undefil'd ?
Or must such minds be nourish'd in the wild,
Deep in the unpruned forest, 'midst the roar
Of cataracts, where nursing Nature smiled
On infant Washington ? Has Earth no more Such seeds within her breast, or Europe no such shore ?

XCVII.

But France got drunk with blood to vomit crime,
And fatal have her Saturnalia been
To Freedom's cause in every age and clime ;
Because the deadly days which we have seen,
And vile Ambition, that built up between
Man and his hopes an adamant wall,
And the base pageant last upon the scene,
Are grown the pretext for the eternal thrall
Which nips life's tree, and doom's man's worst—his second fall.

XCVIII.

Yet, Freedom ! yet thy banner, torn, but flying,
Streams like the thunder-storm against the wind ;
Thy trumpet voice, though broken now and dying,
The loudest still the tempest leaves behind ;
Thy tree hath lost its blossoms, and the rind,
Chopp'd by the axe, looks rough and little worth,
But the sap lasts,—and still the seed we find
Sown deep, even in the bosom of the North ;
So shall a better spring less bitter fruit bring forth.

XCIX.

There is a stern round tower of other days,*
Firm as a fortress, with its fence of stone,
Such as an army's baffled strength delays,
Standing with half its battlements alone,
And with two thousand years of ivy grown,
The garland of eternity, where wave
The green leaves over all by time o'erthrown :—
What was this tower of strength ? within its cave
What treasure lay so lock'd, so hid ?—A woman's grave.

C.

But who was she, the lady of the dead,
Tomb'd in a palace ? Was she chaste and fair ?
Worthy a king's, or more—a Roman's bed ?
What race of chiefs and heroes did she bear ?
What daughter of her beauties was the heir ?
How lived—how loved—how died she ? Was she not
So honor'd—and conspicuously there,
Where meaner relics must not dare to rot,
Placed to commemorate a more than mortal lot ?

CI.

Was she as those who love their lords, or they
Who love the lords of others ? such have been Even in the olden time, Rome's annals say.
Was she a matron of Cornelia's mien,
Or the light air of Egypt's graceful queen,
Profuse of joy—or 'gainst it did she war
Invererate in virtue ? Did she lean
To the soft side of the heart, or wisely bar
Love from amongst her griefs ?—for such the affections are.

CII.

Perchance she died in youth : it may be, bow'd
With woes far heavier than the ponderous tomb
That weigh'd upon her gentle dust, a cloud
Might gather o'er her beauty, and a gloom
In her dark eye, prophetic of the doom
Heaven gives its favorites—early death : yet shed
A sunset charm around her, and illumine,
With hectic light, the Hesperus of the dead,
Of her consuming cheek the autumnal leaf-like red.

CIII.

Perchance she died in age—surviving all,
Charms, kindred, children—with the silver gray
On her long tresses, which might yet recall,
It may be, still a something of the day
When they were braided, and her proud array
And lovely form were envied, praised, and eyed
By Rome—But whither would Conjecture stray ?
Thus much alone we know—Metella died.
The wealthiest Roman's wife : Behold his love or pride !

CIV.

I know not why—but standing thus by thee
It seems as if I had thine inmate known,
Thou Tomb ! and other days come back on me
With recollected music, though the tone
Is changed and solemn, like the cloudy groan
Of dying thunder on the distant wind :
Yet could I seat me by this ivied stone
Till I had bodied forth the heated mind
Forms from the floating wreck which Ruin leaves behind ;

CV.

And from the planks, far shatter'd o'er the rocks,
BUILT me a little bark of hope, once more
To battle with the ocean and the shocks
Of the loud breakers, and the ceaseless roar
Which rushes on the solitary shore

* Alluding to the tomb of Cecilia Metella, called Capo di Bova.

Where all this splendour that was ever dear:
But could I gather from the wave-worn stones
Enough for my rude tomb, where should I meet?
There woe no home, nor hope, nor life, save what
Is here.

CVI.

Then let the winds howl on! their harmony
Shall henceforth be my music, and the night
The sound shall temper with the owlets' cry,
As I now hear them, in the fading light
Dim o'er the bird of darkness' native site,
Answering each other on the Palatine,
With their large eyes, all glistening gray and bright.
And sailing pinnons.—Upon such a shrine
What are our petty griefs?—let me not number mine.

CVII.

Cypress and ivy, weed and wallflower grown
Matted and mass'd together, hillocks heap'd
On what were chambers, arch crush'd, column strown
In fragments, checked up vaults, and frescoed sleep'd
In subterranean dumps, where the owl peep'd,
Dawning it midnight:—Temples, baths, or halls?
Promonies who can; for all that Learning reap'd
From her research hath been, that these are walls—
Behold the Imperial Mount! 'tis thus the mighty falls.

CVIII.

There is the moral of all human tales;
'T is but the same rehearsal of the past.
First Freedom, and then Glory—when that falls,
Wretch, vice, corruption,—barbarism at last.
And History, with all her volumes vast,
Nath but one page,—'t is better written here
Where gorgeous Tyranny hath thus amass'd
All treasures, all delights, that eye or ear,
Nath, soul could seek, tongue ask—Away with words! draw near,

CIX.

A smile, a snarl—despair—laugh, weep,—for here
There is such matter for all feeling:—Man!
That pendulum betwixt a smile and tear,
Age and realms are crowded in this span,
The mountain, whose obliterated plan
The tyrant of empires pinnacled,
Of glory's gurgles shining in the van
Still the sun's rays with added flame were fill'd!
What are its golden roofs? where those who dared behold?

CX.

Truly was not so eloquent as thou,
Thou marble column with the buried base!
What are the laurels of the Cæsar's brow?
Cypress and ivy from his dwelling-place.
What art or pillar meets me in the face,
Of Time or Fortune? No—'t is that of Time:
Faintly, with, still, all he doth displace
Faintly, and stately statues climb
To mark the Imperial urn, whose ashes slept here.

CXI.

Behold the deep blue sky of Rome,
Behold the stars: they had contain'd

A spirit which with those would find a home,
The last of those who o'er the whole earth reign'd,
The Roman globe, for after none remain'd,
But yielded back his conquests: he was more
Than a mere Alexander, and, unstain'd
With household blood and wine, serenely wore
His sovereign virtues—still we Trajan's name adore.

CXII.

Where is the rock of Triumph, the high place
Where Rome embraced her heroes? where the Tarpeian? steepest goal of Treason's race,
The promontory whence the Traitor's Leap
Cured all ambition. Did the conquerors heap
Their spoils here? Yes; and in yon field below,
A thousand years of silenced factions sleep—
The Forum, where the immortal accents glow,
And still the eloquent air breathes—burns with Cicero!

CXIII.

The field of freedom, faction, fame, and blood:
Here a proud people's passions were exhaled,
From the first hour of empire in the bud
To that when further worlds to conquer fail'd;
But long before had Freedom's face been veil'd,
And Anarchy assumed her attributes;
Till every lawless soldier who assail'd
Trod on the trembling senate's slavish knees,
Or raised the venal voice of baser prostitutes.

CXIV.

Then turn we to her latest tribune's name,
From her ten thousand tyrants turn to thee,
Redeemer of dark centuries of shame—
The friend of Petrararch—hope of Italy—
Rienzi! last of Romans!† While the tree
Of freedom's wither'd trunk puts forth a leaf,
Even for thy tomb a garland let it be—
The forum's champion, and the people's chief—
Her new-born Numa thou—with reign, alas! too brief.

CXV.

Egeria! sweet creation of some heart as
Which found no mortal resting-place so fair
As thine ideal breast; whatever thou art
Or wert,—a young Aurora of the air,
The nympholepsy of some fond despair;
Or, it might be, a beauty of the earth,
Who found a more than common votary there
Too much adoring; whatever thy birth,
Thou wert a beautiful thought, and softly bodied forth.

CXVI.

The mosses of thy fountain still are sprinkled
With thine Elysian water-drops; the face
Of thy cave-guarded spring, with years un-
wrinkled,
Reflects the meek-eyed genius of the place,
Whose green, wild margin now no more erases
Art's works: nor must the delicate waters sleep,
Frisen'd in marble, bubbling from the base
Of the cleft statue, with a gentle leap
The rill runs o'er, and round fern, flowers, and ivy weep.

CXVII.

Fantastically tangled: the green hills
Are clothed with early blossoms, through the grass man than honored as a sovereign; he was affable to his people, respectful to the senate, and universally beloved by both; he inspired none with dread but the enemies of his country."—Hist. Nov. L. Ital. c. 6, 7.

† The name and exploits of Rienzi must be familiar to the reader of Gibbon.

The quick-eyed lizard rustles, and the bills
Of summer birds sing welcome as ye pass;
Flowers fresh in hue, and many in their class,
Implore the pausing step, and with their dyes
Dance in the soft breeze in a fairy mass;
The sweetness of the violet's deep blue eyes,
Kiss'd by the breath of heaven, seems color'd by its skies.

CXXVIII.

Here didst thou dwell, in this enchanted cover,
Egeria! thy all heavenly bosom beating
For the far footsteps of thy mortal lover;
The purple Midnight veil'd that mystic meeting
With her most starry canopy, and seating
Thyself by thine adorer, what befell?
This cave was surely shaped out for the greeting
Of an enamor'd Goddess, and the cell
Haunted by holy Love—the earliest oracle!

CXXIX.

And didst thou not, thy breast to his replying,
Blend a celestial with a human heart;
And Love, which dies as it was born, in sighing,
Share with immortal transports? could thine art
Make them indeed immortal, and impart
The purity of heaven to earthly joys,
Expel the venom and not blunt the dart—
The dull satiety which all destroys—
And root from out the soul the deadly weed which cloys?

CXX.

Alas! our young affections run to waste,
Or water but the desert; whence arise
But weeds of dark luxuriance, tares of haste,
Rank at the core, though tempting to the eyes,
Flowers whose wild odors breathe but agonies,
And trees whose gums are poisons; such the plants
Which spring beneath her steps as Passion flies
O'er the world's wilderness, and vainly pants
For some celestial fruit forbidden to our wants.

CXXI.

Oh Love! no habitant of earth thou art—
An unseen seraph, we believe in thee,—
A faith whose martyrs are the broken heart,—
But never yet hath seen, nor e'er shall see
The naked eye, thy form, as it should be;
The mind hath made thee, as it peopled heaven,
Even with its own desiring phantasy,
And to a thought such shape and image given,
As haunts the unquench'd soul—parch'd—wearer'd —wrung—and riven.

CXXII.

Of its own beauty is the mind diseased,
And fevers into false creation:—where,
Where are the forms the sculptor's soul hath seized?
In him alone. Can Nature show so fair?
Where are the charms and virtues which we dare
Conceive in boyhood and pursue as men,
The unreach'd Paradise of our despair,
Which o'er-informs the pencil and the pen,
And overpowers the page where it would bloom again?

CXXIII.

Who loves, raves—'t is youth's frenzy—but the cure
Is bitterer still, as charm by charm unwinds
Which robbed our idols, and we see too sure
Nor worth nor beauty dwells from out the mind's
Ideal shape of such; yet still it binds
The fatal spell, and still it draws us on,
Reaping the whirlwind from the oft-sown winds;

The stubborn heart, its alchemy begun,
Seems ever near the prize,—wealthiest when most untrue.

CXXIV.

We wither from our youth, we gasp away—
Sick—sick; unfound the boon—unslaked the thirst,
Though to the last, in verge of our decay,
Some phantom lures, such as we sought at first—
But all too late,—so we are doubly curst.
Love, fame, ambition, avarice—'t is the same,
Each idle—and all ill—and none the worst—
For all are meteors with a different name,
And Death the sable smoke where vanishes the flame.

CXXV.

Few—none—find what they love or could have loved,
Though accident, blind contact, and the strong
Necessity of loving, have removed Antipathies—but to recur, ere long,
Envenom'd with irrevocable wrong;
And Circumstance, that unspiritual god
And miscreator, makes and helps along
Our coming evils with a crutch-like rod,
Whose touch turns Hope to dust,—the dust we all have trod.

CXXVI.

Our life is a false nature—'t is not in
The harmony of things,—this hard decree,
This unradicable taint of sin,
This boundless upas, this all-blasting tree,
Whose root is earth, whose leaves and branches be
The skies which rain their plagues on men like dew—
Disease, death, bondage—all the woes we see,
And worse, the woes we see not—which throb
through
The immedicable soul, with heart-aches ever new.

CXXVII.

Yet let us ponder boldly—'t is a base
Abandonment of reason to resign
Our right of thought—our last and only place
Of refuge; this, at least, shall still be mine:
Though from our birth the faculty divine
Is chain'd and tortured—cabin'd, cribb'd, con-
fin'd,
And bred in darkness, lest the truth should shine
Too brightly on the unprepared mind,
The beam pours in, for time and skill will couch the blind.

CXXVIII.

Arches on arches! as it were that Rome,
Collecting the chief trophies of her line,
Would build up all her triumphs in one dome,
Her Coliseum stands; the moonbeams shine
As 't were its natural torches, for divine
Should be the light which streams here, to illumine
This long-explored but still exhaustless mine
Of contemplation; and the azure gloom
Of an Italian night, where the deep skies assume

CXXIX.

Hues which have words, and speak to ye of heaven,
Floats o'er this vast and wondrous monument,
And shadows forth its glory. There is given
Unto the things of earth, which Time hath bent,
A spirit's feeling, and where he hath leant
His hand, but broke his scythe, there is a power
And magic in the ruin'd battlement,
For which the palace of the present hour
Must yield its pomp, and wait till ages are its dower.

CXXX.

Oh Time! the beautifier of the dead,
Adorner of the ruin, comforter
And only healer when the heart hath bled—
Time! the corrector where our judgments err,
The test of truth, love,—sole philosopher,
For all beside are sophists, from thy thrift,
Which never loses though it doth defer—
Time, the avenger! unto thee I lift
My hands; and eyes, and heart, and crave of thee a gift:

CXXXI.

Amidst this wreck, where thou hast made a shrine
And temple more divinely desolate,
Among thy mightier offerings here are mine,
Ruins of years—though few, yet full of fate:—
If thou hast ever seen me too elate,
Hear me not; but if calmly I have borne
Good, and reserved my pride against the hate
Which shall not whelm me, let me not have worn
This iron in my soul in vain—shall they not mourn?

CXXXII.

And thou, who never yet of human wrong
Left the unbalanced scale, great Nemesis!⁸⁸
Here, where the ancient paid thee homage long—
Thou who didst call the Furies from the abyss,
And round Orestes bade them howl and hiss
For that unnatural retribution—just,
Had it but been from hands less near—in this
Thy former realm, I call thee from the dust!
Dost thou not hear my heart?—Awake! thou shalt,
and must.

CXXXIII.

It is not that I may not have incur'd
For my ancestral faults or mine the wound
I bleed withal, and, had it been conferr'd
With a just weapon, it had flow'd unbound;
But now my blood shall not sink in the ground;
To thee I do devote it—thou shalt take
The vengeance which shall yet be sought and found.
Which if I have not taken for the sake——
But let that pass—I sleep, but thou shalt yet awake.

CXXXIV.

And if my voice break forth, 't is not that now
I shrink from what is suffer'd: let him speak
Who hath beheld decline upon my brow,
Or seen my mind's convulsion leave it weak;
But in this page a record will I seek.
Not in the air shall these my words disperse,
Though I be ashes; a far hour shall wreak
The deep prophetic fullness of this verse,
And pile on human heads the mountain of my curse!

CXXXV.

That curse shall be Forgiveness.—Have I not—Hear me, my mother Earth! behold it, Heaven!—
Have I not had to wrestle with my lot?
Have I not suffer'd things to be forgiven?
Have I not had my brain rear'd, my heart riven,
Hopes sapp'd, name blighted, Life's life lied
away?

And only not to desperation driven,
Because not altogether of such clay
As rots into the souls of those whom I survey.

CXXXVI.

From mighty wrongs to petty perfidy
Have I not seen what human things could do?
From the loud roar of foaming calumny
To the small whisper of the as paltry fow,
And subtler venom of the reptile crew,

The Janus glance of whose significant eye,
Learning to lie with silence, would seem true,
And without utterance, save the shrug or sigh,
Deal round to happy fools its speechless obloquy.

CXXXVII.

But I have lived, and have not lived in vain:
My mind may lose its force, my blood its fire,
And my frame perish even in conquering pain;
But there is that within me which shall tire
Torture and Time, and breathe when I expire;
Something unearthly, which they deem not of,
Like the remember'd tune of a mute lyre,
Shall on their soften'd spirits sink, and move
In hearts all rocky now the late remorse of love.

CXXXVIII.

The seal is set.—Now welcome, thou dread power:
Nameless, yet thus omnipotent, which here
Walk'st in the shadow of the midnight hour
With a deep awe, yet all distinct from fear:
Thy haunts are ever where the dead walls rear
Their ivy mantles, and the solemn scene
Derives from thee a sense so deep and clear
That we become a part of what has been,
And grow unto the spot, all-seeing but unseen.

CXXXIX.

And here the buzz of eager nations ran,
In murmur'd pity, or loud-roar'd applause,
As man was slaughter'd by his fellow man.
And wheresoe'er slaughter'd? wherefore, but because
Such were the bloody Cirus' genial laws,
And the imperial pleasure.—Wherefore not?
What matters where we fall to fill the maws
Of worms—on battle-plain or listed spot?
Both are but theatres where the chief actors rot.

CKL.

I see before me the Gladiator lie:
He leans upon his hand—his manly brow
Consents to death, but conquers agony,
And his droop'd head sinks gradually low—
And through his side the last drops ebbing slow
From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
Like the first of a thunder-shower: and now
The arena swarms around him—he is gone,
Ere ceased the inhuman shout which hail'd the wretch who won.

CKLI.

He heard it, but he heeded not—his eyes
Were with his heart, and that was far away;
He reck'd not of the life he lost nor prize,
But where his rude but by the Danube lay,
There were his young barbarians all at play,
There was their Dacian mother—he, their sire,
Butcher'd to make a Roman holiday—⁸⁷
All this rush'd with his blood—Shall he expire
And unavenged?—Arise! ye Goths, and glut your ire!

CKLII.

But here, where Murder breathed her bloody steam;
And here, where buzzing nations choked the ways,
And roar'd or murmur'd like a mountain stream
Dashing or winding as its torrent strays;
Here, where the Roman million's blame or praise
Was death or life, the playthings of a crowd,⁸⁸
My voice sounds much—and fall the stars' faint rays
On the arena void—seats crush'd—walls bow'd—
And galleries where my steps seem echoes strangely loud.

CXLIII.

A ruin—yet what ruin! from its mass
Walls, palaces, half-cities, have been rear'd;
Yet oft the enormous skeleton ye pass,
And marvel where the spoil could have appear'd.
Hath it indeed been plunder'd, or but clear'd?
Alas! developed, opens the decay,
When the colossal fabric's form is near'd:
It will not bear the brightness of the day,
Which streams too much on all years, man, have reft away.

CXLIV.

But when the rising moon begins to climb
Its topmost arch, and gently pauses there;
When the stars twinkle through the loops of time,
And the low night-breeze waves along the air
The garland-forest, which the gray walls wear,
Like laurels on the bald first Cæsar's head;*
When the light shines serene but doth not glare,
Then in this magic circle raise the dead:
Heroes have trod this spot—'tis on their dust ye tread.

CXLV.

"While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand,
When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall;
And when Rome falls—the World." From our own land
Thus spake the pilgrims o'er this mighty wall
In Saxon times, which we are wont to call Ancient; and these three mortal things are still
On their foundations, and unalter'd all:
Rome and her Ruin past Redemption's skill,
The World, the same wide den—of thieves, or what ye will.

CXLVI.

Simple, erect, severe, austere, sublime—
Shrine of all saints and temple of all gods,
From Jove to Jesus—spared and blest by time;
Looking tranquillity, while falls or nods
Arch, empire, each thing round thee, and man pious
His way through thorns to ashes—glorious dome!
Shalt thou not last? Time's scythe and tyrants' roads
Shiver upon thee—sanctuary and home
Of art and piety—Pantheon!—pride of Rome!

CXLVII.

Relic of nobler days, and nobler arts!
Despoil'd yet perfect, with thy circle spreads
A holiness appealing to all hearts—
To art a model; and to him who trends
Rome for the sake of ages, Glory abeds
Her light through thy sole aperture: to those Who worship, here are altars for their beads;
And they who feel for genius may repose
Their eyes on honor'd forms, whose busts around them close.†

CXLVIII.

There is a dungeon, in whose dim drear light ‡
What do I gaze on? Nothing: Look again!
Two forms are slowly shadow'd on my sight—
Two insulated phantoms of the brain:
It is not so; I see them full and plain—

* Suetonius informs us that Julius Cæsar was particularly gratified by that decree of the senate which enabled him to wear a wreath of laurel on all occasions. He was anxious, not to show that he was the conqueror of the world, but to hide that he was bald. A stranger in Rome would hardly have guessed at the motive, nor should we without the help of the historian.

† This is quoted in the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," as a proof that the Coliseum was entire when seen by the Anglo-Baron pilgrims at the end of the seventh, or the beginning of the eighth, century.

An old man, and a female young and fair,
Fresh as a nursing-mother, in whose vein
The blood is nectar:—but what doth she there,
With her unmantled neck, and bosom white and bare?

CXLIX.

Full swells the deep pure fountain of young life,
Where on the heart and from the heart we look
Our first and sweetest nurture, when the wife,
Blest into mother, in the innocent look,
Or even the piping cry of lips that brook
No pain and small suspense, a joy perceives
Man knows not, when from out its cradled nook
She ~~sees~~ her little bud put forth its leaves—
What may the fruit be yet? I know not—Cain was Eve's.

CL.

But here youth offers to old age the food,
The milk of his own gift: it is her sire
To whom she renders back the debt of blood
Born with her birth. No; he shall not expire
While in those warm and lovely veins the fire
Of health and holy feeling can provide Great Nature's Nile, whose deep stream rises higher
Than Egypt's river:—from that gentle tide
Drink, drink and live, old man! Heaven's realm holds no such tide.

CLI.

The starry fable of the milky way
Has not thy story's purity: it is her sire
A constellation of a sweeter ray,
And sacred Nature triumphs more in this Reverse of her decree, than in the abyss
Where sparkle distant worlds:—Oh, holiest nurse!
No drop of that clear stream its way shall miss
To thy sire's heart, replenishing its source
With life, as our freed souls rejoice the universe.

CLII.

Turn to the mole which Hadrian rear'd on high,‡ Imperial mimic of old Egypt's piles,
Colossal copyist of deformity,
Whose travell'd phantasy from the far Nile's
Enormous model, deem'd the artist's toils
To build for giants, and for his vain earth,
His shrunken ashes, raise this dome: How smiles
The gazer's eye with philosophic mirth,
To view the huge design which sprung from such a birth!

CLIII.

But lo! the dome—the vast and wondrous dome,
To which Diana's marvel was a cell—
Christ's mighty shrine above his martyr's tomb!
I have beheld the Ephesian's miracle
Its columns strew the wilderness, and dwell
The hyena and the jackal in their shade;
I have beheld Sophia's bright roofs swell
Their glittering mass! the sun, and have survey'd
Its sanctuary the while the usurping Moslem pray'd;

CLIV.

But thou, of temples old, or altars new,
Standest alone—with nothing like to thee—

‡ The Pantheon has been made a receptacle for the busts of modern great, or, at least, distinguished men. The flood of light which once fell through the large orb above on the whole circle of divinites, now shines on a numerous assemblage of mortals, some one or two of whom have been almost deified by the veneration of their countrymen.

§ This and the next three stanzas allude to the story of the Roman daughter, which is recalled to the traveller by the site, or pretended site, of that adventure, now shown at the church of St. Nicholas in Corcora.

¶ The castle of St. Angelo.

Worthiest of God, the holy and the true.
 Since Zion's desolation, when that he Forsook his former city, what could be,
 Of earthly structures, in his honor piled,
 Of a sublimer aspect? Majesty,
 Power, Glory, Strength, and Beauty, all are aialed
 In this eternal ark of worship undefiled.

CLV.

Enter: its grandeur overwhelms thee not;
 And why? It is not lessen'd; but thy mind,
 Expanded by the genius of the spot,
 Has grown colossal, and can only find
 A fit abode wherein appear enshrined
 Thy hopes of immortality; and thou
 Shalt one day, if found worthy, so defined,
 See thy God face to face, as thou dost now
 His Holy of Holies, nor be blasted by his brow.

CLVI.

Thou movest—but increasing with the advance,
 Like climbing some great Alp, which still doth
 rise,
 Deceived by its gigantic elegance;
 Vainness which grows—but grows to harmonise—
 All music in its immensities;
 Rich marbles—richer painting—shrines where flame
 The lamps of gold—and haughty dome which vies
 In air with Earth's chief structures, though their frame
 Sits on the firm-set ground—and this the clouds must claim.

CLVII.

Thou seest not all; but piecemeal thou must break,
 To separate contemplation, the great whole;
 And as the ocean many bays will make
 That ask the eye—so here condense thy soul
 To more immediate objects, and control
 Thy thoughts until thy mind hath got by heart
 Its eloquent proportions, and unroll
 In mighty graduations, part by part,
 The glory which at once upon thee did not dart,

CLVIII.

Not by its fault—but thine: Our outward sense
 Is but of gradual grasp—and as it is
 That what we have of feeling most intense Outstrips our faint expression; even so this Outshining and o'erwhelming edifice
 Fools our fond gaze, and, greatest of the great,
 Defies at first our nature's littleness,
 Till, growing with its growth, we thus dilate
 Our spirits to the size of that they contemplate.

CLIX.

Then pause, and be enlighten'd; there is more
 In such a survey than the satiate gaze
 Of wonder pleased, or awe which would adore
 The worship of the place, or the mere praise
 Of art and its great masters, who could raise
 What former time, nor skill, nor thought could plan;
 The fountain of sublimity displays
 Its depth, and thence may draw the mind of man
 Its golden sands, and learn what great conceptions can.

CLX.

Or, turning to the Vatican, go see
 Laccio's torture dignifying pain—
 A father's love and mortal's agony
 With an immortal's patience blending:—Vain
 The struggle; vain, against the coiling strain,
 And gripe, and deepening of the dragon's grasp,
 The old man's clench; the long venom'd chain
 Rivets the living links,—the enormous asp
 Enforces pang on pang, and stifles gasp on gasp.

CLXI.

Or view the Lord of the unerring bow,
 The God of life, and poesy, and light—
 The Sun in human limbs array'd, and brow
 All radiant from his triumph in the fight;
 The shaft hath just been shot—the arrow bright
 With an immortal's vengeance; in his eye
 And nostril beautiful disdain, and might
 And majesty, flash their full lightnings by,
 Developing in that one glance the Deity.

CLXII.

But in his delicate form—a dream of Love,
 Shaped by some solitary nymph, whose breast
 Long'd for a deathless lover from above,
 And madden'd in that vision—are express'd
 All that ideal beauty ever blees'd
 The mind with in its most unearthly mood,
 When each conception was a heavenly guest—
 A ray of immortality—and stood
 Starlike, around, until they gather'd to a god!

CLXIII.

And if it be Prometheus stole from Heaven
 The fire which we endure, it was repaid
 By him to whom the energy was given
 Which this poetic marble hath array'd
 With an eternal glory—which, if made
 By human hands, is not of human thought;
 And Time himself hath hallow'd it, nor laid
 One ringlet in the dust—nor hath it caught
 A tinge of years, but breathes the flame with which
 't was wrought.

CLXIV.

But where is he, the Pilgrim of my song,
 The being who upheld it through the past?
 Methinks he cometh late and tarries long.
 He is no more—these breathings are his last;
 His wanderings done, his visions ebbing fast,
 And he himself as nothing:—if he was
 Aught but a phantasy, and could be class'd
 With forms which live and suffer—let that pass—
 His shadow fades away into Destruction's mass,

CLXV.

Which gathers shadow, substance, life, and all
 That we inherit, in its mortal shroud,
 And spreads the dim and universal pall Through which all things grow phantoms; and the cloud
 Between us sinks and all which ever glow'd
 Till Glory's self is twilight, and displays
 A melancholy halo scarce allow'd
 To hover on the verge of darkness; rays
 Sadder than saddest night, for they distract the gaze,

CLXVI.

And send us prying into the abyss,
 To gather what we shall be when the frame
 Shall be resolved to something less than this
 Its wretched essence; and to dream of fame,
 And wipe the dust from off the idle name
 We never more shall hear,—but never more,
 Oh, happier thought! can we be made the same:
 It is enough in sooth that once we bore
 These fardels of the heart—the heart whose sweat was gore.

CLXVII.

Hark! forth from the abyss a voice proceeds,
 A long low distant murmur of dread sound,
 Such as arises when a nation bleeds
 With some deep and immedicable wound;
 Through storm and darkness yawns the rending
 ground,

The gulf is thick with phantoms, but the chief
Seems royal still, though with her head dis-
crown'd,
And pale, but lovely, with maternal grief
She clasp'd a babe, to whom her breast yields no relief.

CLXXVIII.

Scion of chiefs and monarchs, where art thou?
Fond hope of many nations, art thou dead?
Could not the grave forget thee, and lay low
Some less majestic, less beloved head?
In the sad midnight, while thy heart still bled,
The mother of a moment, o'er thy boy,
Death hush'd that pang forever: with thee fled
The present happiness and promised joy
Which fill'd the imperial isles so full it seem'd to cloy.

CLXXIX.

Peasants bring forth in safety.—Can it be,
Oh thou that wert so happy, so adored!
Those who weep not for kings shall weep for thee,
And Freedom's heart, grown heavy, cease to heard
Her many griefs for ONE? for she had pour'd
Her orisons for thee, and o'er thy head
Beheld her Iris.—Thou, too, lonely lord,
And desolate consort—vainly wert thou wed!
The husband of a year! the father of the dead!

CLXXX.

Of sackcloth was thy wedding garment made;
Thy bridal's fruit is ashes: in the dust
The fair-hair'd Daughter of the Isles is laid,
The love of millions! How we did entrust
Futurity to her! and, though it must Darken above our bones, yet fondly deem'd
Our children should obey her child, and bless'd
Her and her hoped-for seed, whose promise seem'd
Like stars to shepherds' eyes:—'t was but a meteor beam'd.

CLXXXI.

Woe unto us, not her;* for she sleeps well:
The fickle reek of popular breath, the tongue
Of hollow counsel, the false oracle,
Which from the birth of monarchy hath rung
Its knell in princely ears, till the o'erstrung
Nations have arm'd in madness, the strange fate
Which tumbles mightiest sovereigns, and hath fung
Against their blind omnipotence a weight
Within the opposing scale, which crushes soon or late,—

CLXXXII.

These might have been her destiny; but no,
Our hearts deny it: and so young, so fair,
Good without effort, great without a foe;
But now a bride and mother—and now there!
How many ties did that stern moment tear!
From thy Sire's to his humblest subject's breast
Is link'd the electric chain of that despair,
Whose shock was as an earthquake's, and oppress'd
The land which loved thee so that none could love thee best.

* "The death of the Princess Charlotte has been a shock even here (Venice), and must have been an earthquake at home. The fate of this poor girl is melancholy in every respect; dying at twenty or so, in childhood—of a boy too, a present princess and future queen, and just as she began to be happy, and to enjoy herself, and the hopes which she inspired. I feel sorry in every respect."—Byron Letters.

† Mary died on the scaffold: Elizabeth of a broken heart;
Charles V. a hermit; Louis XIV. a bankrupt in means and glory; Cromwell of anxiety; and, "the greatest is behind."
Napoleon lives a prisoner. To these sovereigns a long but superfluous list might be added of names equally illustrious and unhappy.

CLXXXIII.

Lo, Nemi!; navi'd in the woody hills
So far, that the uprooting wind which tears
The oak from his foundation, and which spills
The ocean o'er its boundary, and bears
Its foam against the skies, reluctant spares
The oval mirror of thy glassy lake:
And, calm as cherish'd hate, its surface wears
A deep cold settled aspect nought can shake,
All coil'd into itself and round, as sleeps the snake.

CLXXXIV.

And near Albano's scarce divided waves
Shine from a sister valley;—and afar
The Tiber winds, and the broad ocean laves
The Latian coast where sprung the Epic war,
"Arms and the Man," whose reascending star
Rose o'er an empire:—but beneath thy right
Tully reposed from Rome;—and where yon bar
Of thrilling mountains intercepts the sight,
The Sabine farm was till'd, the weary bard's delight.†

CLXXXV.

But I forget.—My Pilgrim's shrine is won,
And he and I must part,—so let it be,—
His task and mine alike are nearly done;
Yet once more let us look upon the sea:
The midland ocean breaks on him and me,
And from the Alban Mount we now behold
Our friend of youth, that Ocean, which when we Beheld it last by Calpe's rock unfold
Those waves, we follow'd on till the dark Euxine roll'd

CLXXXVI.

Upon the blue Symplegades: long years,—
Long, though not very many,—since have done
Their work on both; some suffering and some tears
Have left us nearly where we had begun:
Yet not in vain our mortal race hath run;
We have had our reward—and it is here,—
That we can yet feel gladden'd by the sun,
And reap from earth, sea, joy almost as dear
As if there were no man to trouble what is clear.

CLXXXVII.

Oh! that the Desert were my dwelling-place,
With one fair Spirit for my minister,
That I might all forget the human race,
And, hating no one, love but only her!
Ye elements!—in whose ennobling stir
I feel myself exalted—Can ye err
Accord me such a being? Do I err
In deeming such inhabit many a spot?
Though with them to converse can rarely be our lot.

CLXXXVIII.

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
There is a society, where none intrudes,
By the deep Sea, and music in its roar:
I love not Man the less, but Nature more,

† The village of Nemi was near the Arician retreat of Egeria, and, from the shades which embosomed the temple of Diana, has preserved to this day its distinctive appellation of The Grove. Nemi is but an evening's ride from the comfortable inn of Albano.

‡ The whole declivity of the Alban hill is of unrivalled beauty, and from the convent on the highest point, which has succeeded to the temple of the Latian Jupiter, the prospect embraces all the objects alluded to in this stanza; the Mediterranean; the whole scene of the latter half of the Æneid, and the coast from beyond the mouth of the Tiber to the headland of Circeum and the Cape of Terracina.—See Appendix, Note 32.

Oh! that the dead were my darling ones,
 With one last sight for my dear ones,
 That I might kiss them and be sure
 And, hating no more, 've bid 'em part!

CARL GUSTAV CARLSSON - Page 48.

CANTO IV. CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE. CLXXXIX.—CLXXXVI.

From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the Universe, and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.

CLXXXIX.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean—roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain;
Man marks the earth with ruin—his control
Shies with the shore; upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unkenn'd, uncoffin'd, and unknown.

CLXXX.

His steps are not upon thy paths,—thy fields
Are not a spoil for him,—thou dost arise
And shake him from thee; the vile strength he wields
For earth's destruction thou dost all despise,
Spurning him from thy bosom to the skies,
And send'st him, shivering in thy playful spray
And howling, to his gods, where haply lies
Respectful hope in some near port or bay,
And dashest him again to earth,—there let him lay.

CLXXXI.

The armaments which thunderstrike the walls
Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake,
And monarchs tremble in their capitals,
The oak-leaves' rustle, whose huge ribs make
Their clay creators the vain title take
Of lord of these, and arbiters of war;
These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,
They melt into thy yeast of waves, which mar
Alike the Armada's pride or spoils of Trafalgar.

CLXXXII.

The shores are empires, changed in all save thee—
Assiria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they?
Thy waters wash'd them power while they were free—
And many a tyrant since; their shores obey
The stranger, slave, or savage; their decay
Hastings' up realms to deserts,—not so thou;—
Unchangeable save to thy wild waves' play—

* When Lord Byron wrote this stanza, he had, no doubt, the following passage in Bowdler's Johnson flowing on his mind: "During one day with General Paoli, and talking of his projected journey to Italy," A man, and Johnson, "who has not seen in Italy is always conscious of an interiority, from his not having seen what it is expected a man should see." (See Appendix, Note 46.) The grand object of all

Time writes no wrinkle on thine azure brow—
Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.

CLXXXIII.

Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form
Glasses itself in tempests: in all time,
Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or storm,
Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
Dark-heaving;—boundless, endless, and sublime—
The image of Eternity—the throne
Of the Invisible: even from out thy slime
The monsters of the deep are made; each zone
Obeys thee; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.

CLXXXIV.

And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward: from a boy
I wanton'd with thy breakers—they to me
Were a delight; and if the freshening sea
Made them a terror—'t was a pleasing fear,
For I was as it were a child of thee,
And trusted to thy billows far and near,
And laid my hand upon thy mane—as I do here.

CLXXXV.

My task is done—my song hath ceased—my theme
Has died into an echo: it is fit
The spell should break of this protracted dream,
The torch shall be extinguish'd which hath lit
My midnight lamp—and what is writ, is writ,
Would it were worthier! but I am not now
That which I have been—and my visions fit
Less palpably before me—and the glow
Which in my spirit dwelt is fluttering, faint, and low.

CLXXXVI.

Farewell! a word that must be, and hath been—
A sound which makes us linger;—yet—farewell!
Ye! who have traced the Pilgrim to the scene
Which is his last, if in your memories dwell
A thought which once was his, if on ye swell
A single recollection, not in vain
He wore his sandal-shoon and scallop-shell;
Farewell! with him alone may rest the pain.
If such there were—with you, the moral of his strain!

travelling is to see the shores of the Mediterranean. On these shores were the four great empires of the world: the Assyrian, the Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman. All our religion, almost all our law, almost all our arts, almost all that sets us above savages, has come to us from the shores of the Mediterranean. The general observed that 'The Mediterranean' would be a noble subject for a poem."

TRAJAN.

Photograph of an ancient City of Trajan, showing the Emperor's chariot and the Temple and Columns; Rome.
His sovereign virtues—still we Trajan's name adore.—Page 42, stanza cxi.

THE GIAOUR: A Fragment of a Turkish Tale.

"One fatal remembrance—one sorrow that throws
Its black shade alike o'er our joys and our woes—
To which Life nothing darker nor brighter can bring,
For which joy hath no balm—and affliction no sting."
MOON.

TO SAMUEL ROGERS, ESQ.,

AS A SILENT BUT NOT UNWORTHY TOKEN OF ADMIRATION FOR HIS GENIUS, RESPECT FOR HIS CHARACTER, AND GRATITUDE FOR HIS FRIENDSHIP,

This Production is Inscribed,

BY HIS OBEDIENT AND AFFECTIONATE SERVANT,

LONDON, May 1824.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Byron

THE tale which these disjointed fragments present, is founded upon circumstances now less common in the East than formerly; either because the ladies are more circumspect than in the "olden time," or because the Christians have better fortune, or less enterprise.

The story, when entire, contained the adventures of a female slave, who was thrown, in the Mussulman manner, into the sea for infidelity, and avenged by a young Venetian, her lover, at the time the Seven Islands were possessed by the Republic of Venice, and soon after the Arnauts were beaten back from the Morea, which they had ravaged for some time subsequent to the Russian invasion.

The desertion of the Mainotes, on being refused the plunder of Misitra, led to the abandonment of that enterprise, and to the desolation of the Morea, during which the cruelty exercised on all sides was unparalleled even in the annals of the faithful.*

The Giaour.

No breath of air to break the wave
That rolls below the Athenian's grave,
That tomb† which, gleaming o'er the cliff,
First greets the homeward-veering skiff,
High o'er the land he saved in vain;
When shall such hero live again?‡

Fair clime! where every season smiles
Benignant o'er those blessed lares,
Which, seen from far Colonna's height,
Make glad the heart that hails the sight,
And lend to loneliness delight.
There, mildly dimpling, Ocean's cheek
Reflects the tints of many a peak
Caught by the laughing tides that lave
These Edens of the eastern wave:

And if at times a transient breeze
Break the blue crystal of the seas,
Or sweep one blossom from the trees,
How welcome is each gentle air
That wakes and wafts the odors there!
For there—the Rose o'er crag or vale,
Sultana of the Nightingale,§

The maid for whom his melody,
His thousand songs are heard on high,
Blooms blushing to her lover's tale:
His queen, the garden quene, his Rose,
Unbent by winds, unchill'd by snows,
Far from the winters of the west,
By every breeze and season blest,
Returns the sweets by Nature given
In softest incense back to heaven;
And grateful yields that smiling sky
Her fairest hue and fragrant sigh.
And many a summer flower is there,
And many a shade that love might share,

* An event in which Lord Byron was personally concerned undoubtedly supplied the groundwork of this tale: but for the story, so circumstantially put forth, of his having himself been the lover of this female slave, there is no foundation.

† A tomb above the rocks on the promontory, by some supposed the sepulchre of Themistocles.

‡ The attachment of the nightingale to the rose is a well-known Persian fable. If I mistake not, the "Bulbul of a thousand tales" is one of his appellations.

THE GIAOUR.

And many a grotto, meant for rest,
That holds the pirate for a guest;
Whose bark in sheltering cove below
Lurks for the passing peaceful prow,
Till the gay mariner's guitar^{*}
Is heard, and seen the evening star;
Then stealing with the muffled oar,
Far shaded by the rocky shore,
Rush the night-prowlers on the prey,
And turn to groans his roundelay.
Strange—that where Nature loved to trace,
As if for gods, a dwelling-place,
And every charm and grace hath mix'd
Within the paradise she fix'd,
There man, enamor'd of distress,
Should mar it into wilderness,
And trample, brute-like, o'er each flower
That tasks not one laborious hour:
Nor claims the culturs of his hand
To bloom along the fairy land,
But springs as to preclude his care,
And sweetly woos him—but to spare!
Strange—that where all is peace beside,
There passion riots in her pride,
And lust and rapine wildly reign
To darken o'er the fair domain.
It is as though the fiends prevail'd
Against the seraphs they assail'd,
And, fix'd on heavenly thrones, should dwell
The freed inheritors of hell:
So soft the scene, so form'd for joy,
So curst the tyrants that destroy!

He who hath bent him o'er the dead
Ere the first day of death is fled,
The first dark day of nothingness,
The last of danger and distress
(Before Decay's afflicting fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers),
And mark'd the mild angelic air,
The rapture of repose that's there,
The fix'd yet tender traits that streak
The languor of the placid cheek,
And—but for that sad shrouded eye,
That fires not, wins not, weeps not, now,
And but for that chill, changeless brow,
Where cold Obstruction's apathy[†]
Appalls the gazing mourner's heart,
As if to him it could impart
The doom he dreads, yet dwells upon;
Yes, but for these, and these alone,
Some moments, ay, one treacherous hour,
He still might doubt the tyrant's power;
So fair, so calm, so softly seal'd,
The first, last look by death reveal'd!
Such is the aspect of this shore;
'Tis Greece, but living Greece is more!
So coldly sweet, so deadly fair.
We start, for soul is wanting there.
Here is the loveliness in death,
That parts not quite with parting breath:
But beauty with that fearful bloom,
That hue which haunts it to the tomb,
Expression's last receding ray,
A gilded halo hovering round decay,
The farewell beam of Feeling pass'd away!

Spark of that flame, perchance of heavenly birth,
Which gleams, but warms no more its cheriah's
earth!

Climb of the unforgotten brave!
Whose land from plain to mountain cave
Was Freedom's home or Glory's grave!
Shrine of the mighty! ~~can it be,~~
That this is all remains of thee?
Approach, thou craven crouching slave:
Say, is not this Thermopylae?
These waters blue that round you lave,
Oh servile offspring of the free—
Pronounce what sea, what shore is this?
The gulf, the rock of Salamis!
These scenes, their story not unknown,
Arise, and make again your own;
Snatch from the ashes of your sires
The embers of their former fires;
And he who in the strife expires
Will add to theirs a name of fear
That Tyranny shall quake to hear,
And leave his sons a hope, a fame,
They too will rather die than shame:
For Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeath'd by bleeding Sire to Son,
Though baffled off is ever won.
Bear witness, Greece, thy living page!
Attest it many a deathless age!
While kings, in dusty darkness hid,
Have left a nameless pyramid,
Thy heroes, though the funeral doom
Hath swept the column from their tomb,
A mightier monument command,
The mountains of their native land!
There points thy Muse to stranger's eye
The graves of those that cannot die!
'T were long to tell, and sad to trace,
Each step from splendor to disgrace;
Enough—no foreign foe could quail
Thy soul, till from itself it fell;
Yes! Self-abasement paved the way
To villain-bonds and despot sway.

What can he tell who treads thy shore?
No legend of thine olden time,
No theme on which the Muse might soar
High as thine own in days of yore,
When man was worthy of thy clime.
The hearts within thy valleys bred,
The fiery souls that might have led
Thy sons to deeds sublime,
Now crawl from cradle to the grave,
Slaves—nay, the bondmen of a slave,
And callous, save to crime;
Stain'd with each evil that pollutes
Mankind, where least above the brutes;
Without even savage virtue blest,
Without one free or valiant breast,
Still to the neighboring ports they waft
Proverbial wiles, and ancient craft;
In this the subtle Greek is found,
For this, and this alone, renown'd.
In vain might Liberty invoke
The spirit to its bondage broke,
Or raise the neck that courts the yoke:

^{*} The guitar is the constant amusement of the Greek sailor by night; with a steady fair wind, and during a calm, it is accompanied always by the voice, and often by dancing.

[†] Ay, but to die and go we know not where,
To lie in cold obstruction."

Measure for Measure, act iii., sc. 1.

[‡] I trust that few of my readers have ever had an opportunity of witnessing what is here attempted in description; but those who have will probably retain a painful remembrance of that singular beauty which pervades, with few exceptions, the features of the dead, a few hours, and but for a few hours, after "the spirit is not there." It is to be remarked in cases of violent death by gun-shot wounds, the expression is always that of languor, whatever the natural energy of the sufferer's character: but in death from a stab the countenance preserves its traits of feeling or ferocity, and the mind its bias, to the last.

[§] Athens is the property of the Kistlar Aga (the slave of the slave and guardian of the women), who appoints the Waywode. A pander and eunuch—these are not polite, yet true appellations—now governs the governor of Athens!

THE GIAOUR.

No more her sorrows I bewail,
Yet this will be a mournful tale,
And they who listen may believe,
Who heard it first had cause to grieve.

Far, dark, along the blue sea glancing,
The shadows of the rocks advancing
Start on the fisher's eye like boat
Of island pirate or Mainote;
And fearful for his light caique,
He shuns the near but doubtful creek:
Though worn and weary with his toil,
And cumber'd with his scaly spoil,
Slowly, yet strongly, plies the oar,
Till Port Leone's safer shore
Receives him by the lovely light
That best becomes an Eastern night.

Who thundering comes on blackest steed,*
With slacken'd bit and hoof of speed?
Beneath the clattering iron's sound
The cavern'd echoes wake around
In lash for lash, and bound for bound;
The foam that streaks the courier's side
Seems gather'd from the ocean tide:
Though weary waves are sunk to rest,
There's none within his rider's breast;
And though to-morrow's tempest lower,
'Tis calmer than thy heart, young Giaour!
I know thee not, I loathe thy race,
But in thy lineaments I trace
What time shall strengthen, not efface;
Though young and pale, that sallow front
Is scathed by fiery passion's brunt;
Though bent on earth thine evil eye,
As meteor-like thou glidest by,
Right well I view and deem thee one
Whom Othman's sons should slay or shun.

On—on he hasten'd, and he drew
My gaze of wonder as he flew:
Though like a demon of the night
He pass'd, and vanish'd from my sight,
His aspect and his air impress'd
A troubled memory on my breast,
And long upon my startled ear
Rung his dark courier's hoofs of fear.
He spurs his steed; he nears the steep,
That, jutting, shadows o'er the deep;
He winds around; he hurries by;
The rock relieves him from mine eye;
For well I ween unwelcome he
Whose glance is fix'd on those that flee;
And not a star but shines too bright
On him who takes such timeless flight.
He wound along; but ere he pass'd
One glance he snatch'd, as if his last.
A moment check'd his wheeling steed,
A moment breath'd him from his speed,
A moment on his stirrup stood—
Why looks he o'er the olive wood?
The crescent glimmers on the hill,
The Mosque's high lamps are quivering still:

* The reciter of the tale is a Turkish fisherman, who has been employed during the day in the gulf of Ægina, and in the evening, apprehensive of the Mainote pirates who infest the coast of Attica, lands with his boat on the harbor of Port Leone, the ancient Piræus. He becomes the eye-witness of nearly all the incidents in the story, and in one of them is a principal agent.

† "Tophalke," musket.—The Baira is announced by the cannon at sunset; the illumination of the mosques, and the firing of all kinds of small arms, loaded with ball, proclaim it during the night.

Though too remote for sound to wake
In echoes of the far tophalke;†
The flashes of each joyous peal
Are seen to prove the Moslem's zeal.
To-night, set Rhamazani's sun;
To-night, the Baira feast's begun;
To-night—but who and what art thou,
Of foreign garb and fearful brow?
And what are these to thine or thee,
That thou shouldst either pause or flee?

He stood—some dread was on his face,
Soon Hatred settled in its place:
It rose not with the reddening flush
Of transient Anger's hasty blush,
But pale as marble o'er the tomb,
Whose ghastly whiteness aids its gloom.
His brow was bent, his eye was glazed;
He raised his arm, and fiercely raised,
And sternly shook his hand on high,
As doubting to return or fly.
Impatient of his flight delay'd,
Here loud his raven charger neigh'd—
Down glanced that hand, and grasp'd his blade;
That sound had burst his waking dream,
As Slumber starts at owl's scream.
The spur hath lanced his courier's sides;
Away, away, for life he rides:
Swift as the hurl'd on high jerk'd;
Springs to the touch his startled steed;
The rock is doubled, and the shore
Shakes with the clattering tramp no more;
The crag is won, no more is seen
His Christian crest and haughty mien.
'Twas but an instant he restrain'd
That fiery barb so sternly rein'd;
'Twas but a moment that he stood,
Then sped as if by death pursued:
But in that instant o'er his soul
Winters of Memory seem'd to roll,
And gather in that drop of time
A life of pain, an age of crime.
O'er him who loves, or hates, or fears,
Such moment pours the grief of years:
What felt he then, at once oppress'd
By all that most distracts the breast?
That pause, which ponder'd o'er his fate,
Oh, who its dreary length shall date!
Though in Time's record nearly nought,
It was Eternity to Thought!
For infinite as boundless space
The thought that Conscience must embrace,
Which in itself can comprehend
Woe without name, or hope, or end.

The hour is past, the Giaour is gone;
And did he fly or fall alone?
Woe to that hour he came or went!
The curse for Hassan's sin was sent
To turn a palace to a tomb:
He came, he went, like the almoom,‡
That harbinger of fate and gloom,
Beneath whose widely-wasting breath
The very cypress droops to death—
Dark tree, still sad when others' grief is fled,
The only constant mourner o'er the dead!

§ Jerred, or Djerrid, a blunted Turkish javelin, which is darted from horseback with great force and precision. It is a favorite exercise of the Mussulmans; but I know not if it can be called a manly one, since the most expert in the art are the Black Eunuchs of Constantinople. I think, next to these, a Mamlouk at Smyrna was the most skilful that came within my observation.

¶ The blast of the desert, fatal to everything living, and often alluded to in eastern poetry.

THE GIAOUR.

The steed is vanish'd from the stall;
No earl is seen in Hassan's hall;
The lonely spider's thin gray pall
Waves slowly widening o'er the wall;
The bat builds in his Haram bower,
And in the fortress of his power
The owl usurps the beacon-tower:
The wild-dog howls o'er the fountain's brim,
With baffled thirst, and famine, grim;
For the stream has shrunk from its marble bed,
Where the weeds and the desolate dust are spread.

'T was sweet of yore to see it play
And chase the sultriness of day,
As springing high the silver dew
In whirls fantastically flew,
And sang luxuriant coolness round
The air, and verdure o'er the ground.
'T was sweet when cloudless stars were bright,
To view the wave of watery light,
And hear its melody by night.
And oft had Hassan's Childhood play'd
Around the verge of that cascade;
And oft upon his mother's breast
That sound had harmonized his rest;
And oft had Hassan's Youth along
Its bank been soothed by Beauty's song;
And softer seem'd each melting tone
Of Music mingled with its own.
But ne'er shall Hassan's Age repose
Along the brink at twilight's close:
The stream that All'd that font is fled—
The blood that warm'd his heart is shed!
And here no more shall human voice
Be heard to rage, regret, rejoice.
The last sad note that swell'd the gale
Was woman's wildest funeral wail:
That quench'd in silence, all is still,
But the lattice that flaps when the wind is shrill:
Though raves the gust, and floods the rain,
No hand shall close its clasp again.
On desert sands 't were joy to scan
The reddest steps of fellow man,
So here the very voice of Grief
Might wake an Echo like relief—
At least 't would say, "All are not gone;
These fingers Life, though but in one"—
For many a gilded chamber's there,
Which solitude might wail for;
Within that dome as yet Decay
Hath slowly work'd her cankering way—
But gloom is gather'd o'er the gate,
See there the Fakir's self will wait;
See there will wandering Dervise stay,
For lonely chase not his delay:
For there will weary stranger halt
To bless the sacred "bread and salt."
Alas! what Wealth and Poverty
Fare heedless and unheeded by,
For Charity and Pity died
With Hassan on the mountain side;
We wot that refuge unto man,
The beggar's hungry den.
The good life the hall, and the vessel from labor,
The golden chain was clasp'd by the infidel's sabre!

I hear the sound of cooing nest,
But not a voice mine ear to greet;
More near—each turban I can scan,
And silver-abeathed stagian;
The foremost of the band is seen
An Emir by his garb of green;
"Ho! who art thou?"—"This low salam!
Replies of Moslem faith I am."
"The burthen ye so gently bear
Seems one that claims your utmost care,
And, doubtless, holds some precious freight,
My humble bark would gladly wait."

"Thou speakest sooth; thy skiff unmoor,
And wait us from the silent shore;
Nay, leave the sail still furled, and ply
The nearest ear that's scatter'd by.
And midway to those rocks where sleep
The channel'd waters dark and deep,
Heet from your task—so bravely done,
Our course has been right swiftly run;
Yet 't is the longest voyage, I trow,
That one of—"

Sullen it plunged, and slowly sank,
The calm wave rippled to the bank;
I watch'd it as it sank, methought
Some motion from the current caught
Bestirr'd it more,—'t was but the beam
That checker'd o'er the living stream
I gazed, till vanishing from view,
Like leavening pebble it withdrew:
Still less and less, a speck of white
That gemm'd the tide, then mock'd the sight;
And all its hidden secrets sleep,
Known but to Genii of the deep,
Which, trembling in their coral caves,
They dare not whisper to the waves.

As rising on its purple wing
The insect-queen of eastern spring,
O'er emerald meadows of Kashmir
Invites the young pursuer near,
And leads him on from flower to flower
A weary chase and wasted hour,
Then leaves him, as it soars on high,
With panting heart and tearful eye:
So Beauty lures the full-grown child,
With hue as bright, and wing as wild;
A chase of idle hopes and fears,
Begun in folly, closed in tears.
If won, to equal ills betray'd,
Woe waits the insect and the maid;
A life of pain, the loss of peace,
From infant's play, and man's caprice:
The lovely toy so fiercely sought
Hath lost its charm by being caught,
For every touch that woo'd its stay
Hath brush'd its brightest hues away,
Till charm, and hue, and beauty gone,
'T is left to fly or fall alone.
With wounded wing, or bleeding breast,
Ah! where shall either victim rest?

So teach breed and salt with pour
The good life the hall, and the vessel from labor,
The golden chain was clasp'd by the infidel's sabre!

First Charity and Hospitality are
The good life the hall, and the vessel from labor,
The golden chain was clasp'd by the infidel's sabre!

The good life the hall, and the vessel from labor,
The golden chain was clasp'd by the infidel's sabre!

Green is the privileged color of the prophet's numerous pretended descendants; with them, as here, faith (the family inheritance) is supposed to supersede the necessity of good works: they are the worst of a very indifferent brood.

"Salam aleikoum! aleikoum salam!" peace be with you;
be with you peace—the salutation reserved for the faithful—
to a Christian. "Ularula!" a good journey; or "Salam biramen, salam erula;" good morn, good even; and sometimes,
"May you and be happy;" are the usual salutes.

The blue-winged butterfly of Kashmir, the most rare and beautiful of the species.

THE GIAOUR.

Can this with faded pinion soar
From rose to tulip as before?
Or Beauty, blighted in an hour,
Find joy within her broken bower?
No: gayer insects fluttering by
Ne'er droop the wing o'er those that die,
And lovelier things have mercy shown
To every falling but their own,
And every woe a tear can claim
Except an erring sister's shame.

The Mind, that broods o'er guilty woes,
Is like the Scorpion girt by fire,
In circle narrowing as it glows,
The flames around their captive close,
Till only search'd by thousand throes,
And maddening in her ire,
One sad and sole relief she knows,
The sting she nourish'd for her foes,
Whose venom never yet was vain,
Gives but one pang, and cures all pain,
And darts into her desperate brain:
So do the dark in soul expire,
Or live like Scorpion girt by fire.*
So writhes the mind Memorse hath riven,
Unfit for earth, un doom'd for heaven,
Darkness above, despair beneath,
Around it flame, within it death!

Black Hasean from the Haram files,
Nor bends on woman's form his eyes;
The unwonted chase each hour employs,
Yet shares he not the hunter's joys.
Not thus was Hassan wont to fly,
When Lella dwelt in his Serai.
Doth Lella there no longer dwell?
That tale can only Hassan tell:
Strange rumors in our city say
Upon that eve she fled away
When Rhamazan's† last sun was set,
And flashing from each minaret
Millions of lamps proclaim'd the feast
Of Balram through the boundless East.
'Twas then she went as to the bath,
Which Hassan vainly search'd in wrath;
For she was frown her master's rage
In likeness of a Georgian page,
And far beyond the Moslem's power
Had wrong'd him with the faithless Giaour.
Somewhat of this had Hassan deem'd;
But still so fond, so fair she seem'd,
Too well he trusted to the slave
Whose treachery deserved a grave:
And on that eve had gone to mosque,
And thence to feast in his kiosk.

Such is the tale his Nubians tell,
Who did not watch their charge too well;
But others say, that on that night,
By pale Phingari's‡ trembling light,
The Giaour upon his jet-black steed
Was seen, but seen alone, to speed
With bloody spur along the shore,
Nor maid nor page behind him bore.

Her eye's dark charm 't were vain to tell,
But gaze on that of the Gazelle,
It will assist thy fancy well;
As large, as languishingly dark,
But Soul beam'd forth in every spark
That darted from beneath the lid,
Bright as the jewel of Glamschid.†
Yea, Soul, and should our prophet say
That form was nought but breathing clay,
By Alla! I would answer nay;
Though on Al-Sirat's‡ arch I stood,
Which totters o'er the fiery flood,
With Paradise within my view,
And all his Houris‡ beckoning through.
Oh! who young Lella's glance could read
And keep that portion of his creed,
Which saith that woman is but dust,
A soulless toy for tyrant's lust?
On her might Muftis gaze, and own
That through her eye the immortal abode;
On her fair cheek's unfading hue
The young pomegranate's†† blossoms strew
Their bloom in blushes ever new;
Her hair in hyacinthine‡‡ flow,
When left to roll its folds below,
As 'midst her handmaids in the hall
She stood superior to them all,
Hath swept the marble where her feet
Gleam'd whiter than the mountain snow
Ere from the cloud that gave it birth
It fell, and caught one stain of earth.
The cygnet nobly walks the water;
So moved on earth Circeasia's daughter,
The loveliest bird of Franguestan.†††
As rears her crest the ruffled Swan,
And spurts the wave with wings of pride,
When pass the steps of stranger man
Along the banks that bound her tide;
Thus rose fair Lella's whiter neck:—
Thus arm'd with beauty would she check
Intrusion's glance, till Polly's gaze
Shrunk from the charms it meant to praise.
Thus high and graceful was her gait;
Her heart as tender to her mate;
Her mate—stern Hassan, who was he?
Alas! that name was not for thee!

* Alluding to the dubious suicide of the scorpion, so placed for experiment by gentle philosophers. Some maintain that the position of the sting, when turned towards the head, is merely a convulsive movement, but others have actually brought in the verdict "Felo de se." The scorpions are surely interested in a speedy decision of the question: as if once fairly established as insect Caros, they will probably be allowed to live as long as they think proper, without being martyred for the sake of an hypothesis.

† The cannon at sunset close the Rhamazan.

‡ Phingari, the moon.

§ The celebrated fabulous ruby of Sultan Glamschid, the embellisher of Isakhar; from its splendor, named Sobeh-gong, "the torch of night;" also "the cup of the sun," &c. In the first edition, "Glamschid" was written as a word of three syllables; so D'Herbelot has it; but I am told Richardson reduces it to a dissyllable, and writes "Jamshid." I have left in the text the orthography of the one with the pronunciation of the other.

|| Al-Sirat, the bridge of breadth, narrower than the thread of a furnished spider, and sharper than the edge of a sword, over which the Mussulmans must shate into Paradise, to which it is the only entrance; but this is not the worst, the river beneath being hell itself, into which, as may be expected, the unskillful and tender of foot contrive to tumble with a "facile decensus Avern," not very pleasing in prospect to the next passenger. There is a shorter cut downwards for the Jews and Christians.

† The virgin of Paradise, called from their large black eyes, Hur al oym.

 A vulgar error: the Koran allots at least a third of Paradise to well-behaved women; but by far the greater number of Mussulmans interpret the text their own way, and exclude their moieties from heaven. Being enemies to Platonics, they cannot discern "any stiness of things" in the souls of the other sex, conceiving them to be superseded by the Houris.

†† An Oriental simile, which may, perhaps, though fairly stolen, be deemed "plus Arabe qu'en Arabe."

‡‡ Hyacinthine, in Arabic "Sunbul;" as common a thought in the eastern poets as it was among the Greeks.

††† "Franguestan," Circassia.

THE GIAOUR.

Stern Hassan hath a journey ta'en
With twenty vassals in his train,
Each arm'd, as best becomes a man,
With arquebuss and ataghan;
The chief before, as deck'd for war,
Bears in his belt the scimitar
Stain'd with the best of Arnaut blood,
When in the pass the rebels stood,
And few return'd to tell the tale
Of what befell in Parne's vale.
The pistols which his girdle bore
Were those that once a pasha wore,
Which still, though gamm'd and boss'd with gold,
Even robbers tremble to behold.
'Tis said he goes to woo a bride
More true than her who left his side;
The faithless slave that broke her bower,
And, worse than faithless, for a Giaour!

The sun's last rays are on the hill,
And sparkle in the fountain rill,
Whose welcome waters, cool and clear,
Draw blessings from the mountaineer:
Here may the loitering merchant Greek
Find that repose 'twere vain to seek
In cities lodged too near his lord,
And trembling for his secret hoard—
Here may he rest where none can see,
In crowds a slave, in deserts free;
And with forbidden wine may stain
The bowl a Moslem must not drain.

The foremost Tartar's in the gap,
Conspicuous by his yellow cap;
The rest in lengthening line the while
Wind slowly through the long defile:
Above, the mountain rears a peak,
Where vultures whet the thirsty beak,
And there may be a feast to-night;
Shall tempt them down ere morrow's light;
Beneath, a river's wintry stream
Has shrunk before the summer beam,
And left a channel bleak and bare.
Save shrubs that spring to perish there:
Each side the midway path there lay
Small broken crags of granite clay,
By time, or mountain lightning, riven
From summits clad in mists of heaven;
For where is he that hath beheld
The peak of Liakura unvell'd?

They reach the grove of pine at last:
"Bismillah!" now the peril's past;
For yonder view the opening plain,
And there we'll prick our steeds again:"
The Chiaus spake, and as he said,
A bullet whistled o'er his head;
The foremost Tartar bites the ground!
Scarce had they time to check the rein,
Swift from their steeds the riders bound;
But three shall never mount again:
Unseen the foe that gave the wound,
The dying ask revenge in vain.
With steel unsheath'd, and carbine bent,
Some o'er their courier's harness leant,
Half shelter'd by the steed;
Some fly behind the nearest rock,
And there await the coming shock,
Nor tamely stand to bleed

Beneath the shaft of foes unseen,
Who dare not quit their craggy screen.
Stern Hassan only from his horse
Diadems to light, and keeps his course
Till fiery flashes in the van
Proclaim too sure the robber-clan
Have well secured the only way
Could now avail the promised prey;
Then curl'd his very beard with ire,
And glared his eye with fiercer fire:
"Though far and near the bullets hiss,
I've escap'd a bloodier hour than this!"
And now the foe their covert quit,
And call his vassals to submit;
But Hassan's frown and furious word
Are dreaded more than hostile sword,
Nor of his little band a man
Resign'd carbine or ataghan,
Nor raised the craven cry, Amaun!†
In fuller sight, more near and near,
The lately ambush'd foes appear,
And, issuing from the grove, advance
Some who on battle-charger prance.
Who leads them on with foreign brand,
Far flashing in his red right hand?
"Tis he! 'tis he! I know him now;
I know him by his pallid brow;
I know him by the evil eye‡
That aids his envious treachery;
I know him by his jet-black barb:
Though now array'd in Arnaut garb,
Apostate from his own vile faith,
It shall not save him from the death:
'Tis he! well met in any hour,
Lost Lella's love, accursed Giaour!"

As rolls the river into ocean,
In sable torrent wildly streaming;
As the sea-tide's opposing motion,
In azure column proudly gleaming,
Beats back the current many a rood,
In curling foam and mingling flood,
While eddying whirl, and breaking wave,
Roused by the blast of winter, rave;
Through sparkling spray, in thundering clash,
The lightnings of the waters flash
In awful whiteness o'er the shore.
That shines and shakes beneath the roar;
Thus—as the stream and ocean greet,
With waves that madden as they meet—
Thus join the bands, whom mutual wrong,
And fate, and fury, drive along.
The bickering sabres' shivering jar;
And pealing wide or ringing near
Its echoes on the throbbing ear,
The death-shot hissing from afar;
The shock, the shout, the groan of war,
Reverberate along that vale.
More suited to the shepherd's tale:
Though few the numbers—theirs the strife
That neither spares nor speaks for life!
Ah! fondly youthful hearts can press,
To seize and share the fond cares;
But Love itself could never pant
For all that Beauty sighs to grant
With half the fervor Hate bestows
Upon the last embrace of foes,
When grappling in the fight they fold
Those arms that ne'er shall loose their hold:
Friends meet to part; Love laughs at faith;
True foes, once met, are join'd till death!

* Bismillah—"In the name of God;" the commencement of all the chapters of the Koran but one, and of prayer and thanksgiving.

† "Amaun," quarter, garden.

‡ The "evil eye," a common superstition in the Levant, and of which the imaginary effects are yet very singular on those who conceive themselves affected.

THE GIAOUR.

With sabre shiver'd to the hilt,
Yet dripping with the blood he split;
Yet strain'd within the sever'd hand
Which quivers round that faithless brand;
His turban far behind him roll'd,
And cleft in twain its firmest fold;
His flowing robe by falchion torn,
And crimson as those clouds of morn
That, streak'd with dusky red, portend
The day shall have a stormy end;
A stain on every bush that bore
A fragment of his palampore.*
His breast with wounds unnumber'd riven,
His back to earth, his face to heaven,
Fall'n Hassan lies—his unclosed eye
Yet lowering on his enemy,
As if the hour that seal'd his fate
Surviving left his quenchless hate;
And o'er him bends that foe with brow
As dark as his that bled below.—

"Yes, Leila sleeps beneath the wave,
But his shall be a redder grave;
Her spirit pointed well the steel
Which taught that felon heart to feel.
He call'd the Prophet, but his power
Was vain against the vengeful Giaour:
He call'd on Alla—but the word
Arose unheeded or unheard.
Thou Paynim fool! could Leila's prayer
Be pass'd, and thine accorded there?
I watch'd my time, I leagu'd with these,
The traitor in his turn to seize:
My wrath is wreak'd, the deed is done,
And now I go—but go alone."

The browsing camels' bells are tinkling;
His Mother look'd from her lattice high—
She saw the dew of eve besprinkling
The pasture green beneath her eye,
She saw the planets faintly twinkling;
"Tis twilight—sure his train is nigh."
She could not rest in the garden-bower,
But gazed through the grate of his steepest tower:
"Why comes he not? his steeds are fleet,
Nor shrink they from the summer heat;
Why sends not the Bridegroom his promised gift?
Is his heart more cold, or his barb less swift?
Oh, false reproach! yon Tartar now
Has gain'd our nearest mountain's brow,
And warily the steep descends,
And now within the valley bends,
And he bears the gift at his saddle-bow—
How could I deem his courser slow?
Right well my largess shall repay
His welcome speed and weary way."

The Tartar lighted at the gate,
But scarce upheld his fainting weight:
His swarthy visage spake distress,
But this might be from weariness;
His garb with sanguine spots was dyed,
But these might be from his courser's side;
He drew the token from his vest—
Angel of Death! 'tis Hassan's cloven crest!
His calpac† rent—his caftan red—
"Lady, a fearful bride thy son hath wed:
Me, not from mercy, did they spare,
But this empurpled pledge to bear.
Peace to the brave! whose blood is spilt:
Woe to the Giaour! for his the guilt."

A turban‡ carved in coarsest stone,
A pillar with rank weeds o'ergrown,
Whereon can now be scarcely read
The Koran verse that mourns the dead,
Point out the spot where Hassan fell
A victim in that lonely dell.
There sleeps as true an Omaniile
As e'er at Mecca bent the knee;
As ever scorn'd forbidden wine,
Or pray'd with face towards the shrine,
In orisons resumed anew
At solemn sound of "Alla Hu!"
Yet died he by a stranger's hand,
And stranger in his native land;
Yet died he as in arms he stood,
And unavenged, at least in blood.
But him the maids of Paradise
Impatient to their halls invite,
And the dark heaven of Houris' eyes
On him shall glance for ever bright;
They come—their kerchiefs green they wave,
And welcome with a kiss the brave!
Who falls in battle 'gainst a Giaour
Is worthiest an immortal bower.

But thou, false Infidel! shall writhe
Beneath avenging Monkir's scythe;
And from its torment 'scape alone
To wander round lost Eblis'§§ throne;
And fire unquench'd, unquenchable,
Around, within, thy heart shall dwell;
Nor ear can hear nor tongue can tell
The tortures of that inward hell!
But first, on earth as Vampire†† sent,
Thy corse shall from its tomb be rent:
Then ghastly haunt thy native place,
And suck the blood of all thy race;
There from thy daughter, sister, wife,
At midnight drain the stream of life;
Yet loathe the banquet which perforce
Must feed thy livid living corse:
Thy victims ere they yet expire
Shall know the demon for their sire,

* The flowered shawls generally worn by persons of rank.

† The mother of Sisera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot?—Judges, c. v. v. 22.

‡ The calpac is the solid cap or centre part of the head-dress; the shawl is wound round it, and forms the turban.

§ The turban, pillar, and inscriptive verse, decorate the tombs of the Omaniiles, whether in the cemetery or the wilderness. In the mountains you frequently pass similar monuments: and on inquiry you are informed that they record some victim of rebellion, plunder, or revenge.

|| "Alla Hu!" the concluding words of the muessin's call to prayer from the highest gallery on the exterior of the minaret. On a still evening, when the muessin has a fine voice, which is frequently the case, the effect is solemn and beautiful beyond all the bells in Christendom. Valid, the son of Abdalmalek, was the first who erected a minaret or turret; and this he placed on the grand mosque at Damascus.

for the muessin, or orier, to announce from it the hour of prayer. The practice is kept to this day. See D'Herbelot.

¶ The following is part of a battle-song of the Turks:—"I see—I see a dark-eyed girl of Paradise, and she waves a handkerchief, a kerchief of green; and cries aloud, 'Come, kiss me, for I love thee.'" &c.

§§ Eblis, the Oriental Prince of Darkness.

†† The Vampire superstition is still general in the Levant. Honest Tournefort tells a long story, which Mr. Southey, in the notes on Thalaba, quotes, about these "Vroucoulochas," as he calls them. The Romani term is "Vardoulachas." I recollect a whole family being terrified by the scream of a child, which they imagined must proceed from such a visitation. The Greeks never mention the word without horror. I find that "Vroucoulochas" is an old legitimate Hellenic appellation—at least is so applied to Areschus, who, according to the Greeks, was after his death animated by the Devil.—The moderns, however, use the word I mention.

THE GIAOUR.

As cursing thee, thou cursing them,
Thy sorrows are wither'd on the stem.
But one that for thy crime must fall,
The youngest, most beloved of all,
Shall bless thee with a father's name—
That word shall wrap thy heart in flame!
Yet meet thou end thy task, and mark
Her cheek's last tinge, her eye's last spark,
And the last glassy glance must view
Which freezes o'er the lifeless blue;
Then with unshadow'd hand shall tear
The tresses of her yellow hair,
Of which in life a lock when scorn
Affection's fondest pledge was worn,
But now is borne away by thee,
Memorial of thine agony!
Wet with thine own best blood shall drip
Thy gnashing tooth and haggard lip;
Then stalking to thy sullen grave,
Go—and with Ghouls and Affrits rave;
Till these in horror shrink away
From spectre more accursed than they!

"How name ye you lone Caloyer?
His features I have scan'd before
In mine own land: 'tis many a year,
Since, dashing by the lonely shore,
I saw him urge as fleet a steed
As ever served a horseman's need.
But once I saw that face, yet then
It was so mark'd with inward pain,
I could not pass it by again;
It breathes the same dark spirit now,
As death was stamp'd upon his brow."

"'Tis twice three years at summer tide
Since first among our freres he came;
And here it soothes him to abide
For some dark deed he will not name.
But never at our vesper prayer,
Nor e'er before confession chair
Kneels he, nor recks he when arise
Incense or anthem to the skies,
But broods within his cell alone,
His faith and race alike unknown.
The sea from Paynim land he crost,
And here ascended from the coast;
Yet scarce he met of Ottoman race,
But only Christian in his face:
I'd judge him some stray renegade,
Repentant of the change he made,
Saw that he shuns our holy shrine,
Nor tastes the sacred bread and wine.
Guest largess to these walls be brought,
And thus our abbot's favor bought;
But were I prior, not a day
Should brook such stranger's further stay,
Or pent within our penance cell
Harold down him there for aye to dwell.
Much to his vicious matters he
Of maiden whom'd beneath the sea;
Of sailors' clanking, frozen lying,
Of rotting, starved, and Muslim dying.
So still he hath been known to stand,
And now, as to some bloody hand
Pointing to him, the parent limb,
He looks on all but him,
And only onward to his grave,
Where he lies under the wave."

He looks on all but him,
And only onward to his grave,
Where he lies under the wave."

The flash of that dilating eye
Reveals too much of times gone by;
Though varying, indistinct its hue,
Or will his glance the gazer rue,
For in it lurks that nameless spell,
Which speaks, itself unspeakable,
A spirit yet unquell'd and high,
That claims and keeps ascendancy;
And like the bird whose pinions quake,
But cannot fly the gazing snake,
Will others quail beneath his look,
Nor 'scape the glance they scarce can brook.
From him the half-affrighted Friar
When met alone would fain retire,
As if that eye and bitter smile
Transferr'd to others fear and guile:
Not oft to smile descendeth he,
And when he doth, 'tis sad to see
That he but mocks at Misery.
How that pale lip will curl and quiver!
Then fix once more as if for ever;
As if his sorrow or disdain
Forbade him e'er to smile again.
Well were it so—such ghastly mirth
From joyance ne'er derived its birth.
But sadder still it were to trace
What once were feelings in that face:
Time hath not yet the features fix'd;
But brighter traits with evil mix'd;
And there are hues not always faded,
Which speak a mind not all degraded
Even by the crimes through which it waded:
The common crowd but sees the gloom
Of wayward deeds, and feting doom;
The close observer can spy
A noble soul, and lineage high:
Alas! through both bestow'd in vain,
Which Grief could change, and Guilt could stain,
It was no vulgar tenement
To which such lofty gifts were lent,
And still with little less than dross
On such the sight is riveted.
The roofless cot, decay'd and rent,
Will scarce delay the passer by;
The tower by war or tempest bent,
While yet may frown one battlement,
Demands and daunts the stranger's eye;
Each ivied arch, and pillar lone,
Pleads haughtily for glories gone!

"His floating robe around him folding,
Slow sweeps he through the column'd aisle;
With dread beheld, with gloom beholding
The rites that sanctify the pile.
But when the anthem shakes the choir,
And kneel the monks, his steps retire;
By yonder lone and wavering torch
His aspect glares within the porch;
There will he pause till all is done—
And hear the prayer, but utter none.
See—by the half-illumin'd wall
His hood fly back, his dark hair fall,
That pale brow wildly wreathing round,
As if the Gorgon there had bound
The snail of the serpent-braid
That o'er her fearful forehead stray'd:
For he declines the convent oath,
And leaves those looks unhallow'd growth,
But wears our garb in all beside;
And, not from pesty but pride,
Gives wealth to walls that never heard
Of his one holy vow nor word.
Lo!—mark ye, as the harmony
Peals louder praises to the sky,

He looks on all but him,
And only onward to his grave,
Where he lies under the wave."

told in Hungary and Greece of these foul feeders are abundant, and some of them most fearfully atrocious.

THE GIAOUR.

That livid cheek, that stony air
Of mix'd defiance and despair!
Saint Francis, keep him from the shrine!
Else may we dread the wrath divine
Made manifest by awful sign.
If ever evil angel bore
The form of mortal, such he wore:
By all my hope of sins forgiven,
Such looks are not of earth nor heaven!"

To love the softest hearts are prone,
But such can ne'er be all his own;
Too timid in his woes to share,
Too meek to meet, or brave despair;
And sterner hearts alone may feel
The wound that time can never heal.
The rugged metal of the mine
Must burn before its surface shine,
But plunged within the furnace-flame,
It bends and melts—though still the same;
Then temper'd to thy want or will,
'T will serve thee to defend or kill;
A breastplate for thine hour of need,
Or blade to bid thy foeman bleed;
But if a dagger's form it bear,
Let those who shape its edge, beware!
Thus passion's fire, and woman's art,
Can turn and tame the sterner heart;
From these its form and tone are taken,
And what they make it, must remain,
But break—before it bend again. *

If solitude succeed to grief,
Release from pain is slight relief;
The vacant bosom's wilderness
Might thank the pang that made it less.
We loathe what none are left to share:
Even bliss—'t were woe alone to bear;
The heart once thus left desolate
Must fly at last for ease—to hate.
It is as if the dead could feel
The icy worm around them steal,
And shudder, as the reptiles creep
To revel o'er their rotting sleep,
Without the power to scare away
The cold consumers of their clay!
It is as if the desert bird,*

Whose beak unlocks her bosom's stream
To still her famish'd nestlings' scream,
Nor mourns a life to them transferr'd,
Should rend her rash devoted breast,
And find them down her empty nest.
The keenest pangs the wretched find
Are rapture to the dreary void,
The leafless desert of the mind,
The waste of feelings unemploy'd.
Who would be doom'd to gaze upon
A sky without a cloud or sun?
Less hideous far the tempest's roar
Than ne'er to brave the billows more—
Thrown, when the war of winds is o'er,
A lonely wreck on fortune's shore,
'Mid sullen calm, and silent bay,
Unseen to drop by dull decay:—
Better to sink beneath the shock
Than moulder piecemeal on the rock.

"Father! thy days have pass'd in peace,
'Mid counted beads, and countless prayer;
To bid the sins of others cease,
Thyself without a crime or care,
Save transient ills that all must bear,

Has been thy lot from youth to age;
And thou wilt bless thee from the rage
Of passions fierce and uncontroll'd,
Such as thy penitents unfold,
Whose secret sins and sorrows rest
Within thy pure and pitying breast.
My days, though few, have pass'd below
In much of joy, but more of woe;
Yet still, in hours of love or strife,
I've 'scaped the weariness of life:
Now leagu'd with friends, now girt by foes,
I loathed the languor of repose.
Now nothing left to love or hate,
No more with hope or pride elate,
I'd rather be the thing that crawls
Most obnoxious o'er a dungeon's walls,
Than pass my dull unvarying days,
Condemn'd to meditate and gaze.
Yet, lurks a wish within my breast
For rest—but not to feel 't is rest.
Soon shall my fate that wish fulfill;
And I shall sleep without the dream
Of what I was, and would be still,

Dark as to these my deeds may seem:
My memory now is but the tomb
Of joys long dead; my hope, their doom:
Though better to have died with those
Than bear a life of lingering woe.
My spirit shrunk not to sustain
The searching throes of ceaseless pain;
Nor sought the self-accorded grave
Of ancient fool and modern knave:
Yet death I have not fear'd to meet;
And in the field it had been sweet,
Had danger woo'd me on to move
The slave of glory, not of love.
I've braved it—not for honor's boast;
I smile at laurels won or lost;
To such let others carve their way,
For high renown, or hireling pay:
But place again before my eyes
Aught that I deem a worthy prize—
The maid I love, the man I hate—
And I will hunt the steps of fate,
To save or slay, as these require,
Through rending steel, and rolling fire:
Nor needst thou doubt this speech from one
Who would but do—what he hath done.
Death is but what the haughty brave,
The weak must bear, the wretch must crave;
Then let Life go to him who gave:
I have not quell'd to danger's brow
When high and happy—need I now? *

"I loved her, Friar! nay, adored—
But these are words that all can use—
I proved it more in deed than word;
There's blood upon that dinted sword,
That stain its steel can never lose:
'T was shed for her, who died for me.
It warm'd the heart of one abhorr'd:
Nay, start not—no—nor bend thy knee,
Nor 'midst my sins such act record;
Thou wilt absolve me from the deed,
For he was hostile to thy creed!
The very name of Nazarene
Was wormwood to his Paynim spleen.
Ungrateful fool! since but for brands
Well wielded in some hardy hands,
And wounds by Galileans given,
The surest pass to Turkish heaven,
For him his Houris still might wait
Impatient at the Prophet's gate.
I loved her—love will find its way
Through paths where wolves would fear to prey,

* The pelican is, I believe, the bird so libelled, by the imputation of feeding her chickens with her blood.

THE GIAOUR.

And if it dares enough, 't were hard
 If passion met not some reward—
 No matter how, or where, or why,
 I did not vainly seek, nor sigh:
 Yet sometimes, with remorse, in vain
 I wish she had not loved again.
 She died—I dare not tell thee how;
 But look—'tis written on my brow!
 There read of Cain the curse and crime,
 In characters unworn by time:
 Still, ere thou dost condemn me, pause;
 Not mine the act, though I the cause.
 Yet did he but what I had done
 Had she been false to more than one.
 Faithless to him, he gave the blow;
 But true to me, I laid him low:
 Howe'er deserved her doom might be,
 Her treachery was truth to me;
 To me she gave her heart, that all
 Which tyranny can ne'er enthral;
 And I, alas! too late to save!
 Yet all I then could give, I gave,
 'T was some relief, our foe a grave.
 His death sits lightly; but her fate
 Has made me—what thou well mayst hate.
 His doom was seal'd—he knew it well,
 Warn'd by the voice of stern Taher,
 Deep in whose darkly boding ear
 The death-shot peal'd of murder near,
 As fled the troop to where they fell!
 He died too in the battle broil,
 A time that heeds no pain nor toll;
 One cry to Mahomet for aid,
 One prayer to Alla all he made:
 He knew and cross'd me in the fray—
 I gazed upon him where he lay,
 And watch'd his spirit ebb away:
 Though pierc'd like pard by hunters' steel,
 He felt not half that now I feel.
 I search'd, but vainly search'd, to find
 The workings of a wounded mind;
 Each feature of that sullen course
 Betray'd his rage, but no remorse.
 Oh, what had Vengeance given to trace
 Despair upon his dying face!
 The late repentance of that hour,
 When Penitence hath lost her power
 To tear one terror from the grave,
 And will not soothe, and cannot save.

"The cold in clime are cold in blood,
 Their love can scarce deserve the name;
 But mine was like a lava flood
 That boils in Aetna's breast of flame.
 I cannot prate in pining strain
 Of lady-love and beauty's chain:
 If changing cheek, and scorching vein,
 Lips taught to writhe, but not complain,
 If bursting heart, and madd'ning brain,
 And daring deed, and vengeful steel,
 And all that I have felt, and feel,
 Betoken love—that love was mine,
 And shown by many a bitter sign.
 'Tis true, I could not whine nor sigh,
 I knew but to obtain or die.
 I die—but first I have possess'd,
 And come what may, I have been bless'd.
 Shall I the doom I sought upbraid?
 No—rest of all, yet undismay'd,
 But for the thought of Lelia slain,
 Give me the pleasure with the pain,
 So would I live and love again.
 I grieve, but not, my holy guide!
 For him who dies, but her who died:
 She sleeps beneath the wandering wave—
 Ah! had she but an earthly grave,

This breaking heart and throbbing head
 Should seek and share her narrow bed.
 She was a form of life and light,
 That, seen, became a part of sight;
 And rose, where'er I turned mine eye,
 The Morning-star of Memory!

"Yes, Love indeed is light from heaven;
 A spark of that immortal fire
 With angels shared, by Alla given,
 To lift from earth our low desire.
 Devotion waits the mind above,
 But Heaven itself descends in love;
 A feeling from the Godhead caught,
 To wean from self each sordid thought;
 A Ray of him who form'd the whole;
 A Glory circling round the soul!
 I grant my love imperfect, all
 That mortals by the name miscall;
 Then deem it evil, what thou wilt;
 But say, oh say, hers was not guilt!
 She was my life's unerring light:
 That quench'd, what beam shall break my night!
 Oh! would it shone to lead me still,
 Although to death or deadliest ill!
 Why marvel ye, if they who lose
 This present joy, this future hope,
 No more with sorrow meekly cope;
 In phrensy then their fate accuse;
 In madness do those fearful deeds
 That seem to add but guilt to woe?
 Alas! the breast that only bleeds
 Hath nought to dread from outward blow;
 Who falls from all he knows of bliss,
 Cares little into what abyss.
 Pierce as the gloomy vulture's now
 To thee, old man, my deeds appear:
 I read abhorrence on thy brow,
 And this too was I born to bear!
 'T is true, that, like that bird of prey,
 With havoc have I mark'd my way:
 But this was taught me by the dove,
 To die—and know no second love.
 This lesson yet hath man to learn,
 Taught by the thing he dares to spurn:
 The bird that sings within the brake,
 The swan that swims upon the lake,
 One mate, and one alone, will take.
 And let the fool still prone to range,
 And sneer on all who cannot change,
 Partake his jest with boasting boys;
 I envy not his varied joys,
 But deem such feeble, heartless man
 Less than you solitary swan;
 Far, far beneath the shallow maid
 He left believing and betray'd.
 Such shame at least was never mine—
 Lelia! each thought was only thine!
 My good, my guilt, my woe, my woe,
 My hope on high—my all below.
 Earth holds no other like to thee,
 Or, if it doth, in vain for me:
 For worlds I dare not view the dame
 Resembling thee, yet not the same.
 The very crimes that mar my youth,
 This bed of death—attest my truth!
 'T is all too late—thou wert, thou art
 The cherish'd madness of my heart!

"And she was lost—and yet I breathed,
 But not the breath of human life:
 A serpent round my heart was wreathed,
 And stung my every thought to strife.
 Alike all time, abhor'd all place,
 Shuddering I shrank from Nature's face,
 Where every hue that charm'd before
 The blackness of my bosom wore.

THE GIAOUR.

The rest thou dost already know,
And all my sins and half my woe.
But talk no more of penitence;
Thou seest I soon shall part from hence:
And if thy holy tale were true,
The deed that's done canst thou undo?
Think me not thankless—but this grief
Looks not to priesthood for relief.
My soul's estate in secret guess:
But wouldst thou pity more, say less.
When thou canst bid my Leila live,
Then will I sue thee to forgive;
Then plead my cause in that high place
Where purchased masses proffer grace.
Go, when the hunter's hand hath wrung
From forest cave her shrieking young,
And calm the lonely lioness:
But soothe not—mock not my distress!

"In earlier days, and calmer hours,
When heart with heart delights to blend,
Where bloom my native valley's bowers,
I had—Ah! have I now?—a friend!
To him this pledge I charge thee send,
Memorial of a youthful vow;
I would remind him of my end;
Though souls absorb'd like mine allow Brief thought to distant friendship's claim,
Yet dear to him my blighted name.
'Tis strange—he prophesied my doom,
And I have smiled—I then could smile—
When Prudence would his voice assume,
And warn—I reek'd not what—the while:
But now remembrance whispers o'er
Those accents scarcely mark'd before.
Say—that his bodings came to pass,
And he will start to hear their truth,
And wish his words had not been sooth:
Tell him, unheeding as I was,
Through many a busy bitter scene
Of all our golden youth had been,
In pain, my faltering tongue had tried
To bless his memory ere I died;
But Heaven in wrath would turn away,
If Guilt should for the guiltless pray.
I do not ask him not to blame,
Too gentle he to wound my name;
And what have I to do with fame?
I do not ask him not to mourn,
Such cold request might sound like scorn;
And what than friendship's manly tear
May better grace a brother's bier?
But bear this ring, his own of old,
And tell him—what thou dost behold!
The wither'd frame, the ruin'd mind,
The wrack by passion left behind,
A shrivel'd scroll, a scatter'd leaf,
Sear'd by the autumn blast of grief!

"Tell me no more of fancy's gleam,
No, father, no, 't was not a dream;
Alas! the dreamer first must sleep,
I only watch'd, and wish'd to weep;
But could not, for my burning brow
Throb'd to the very brain as now:
I wish'd but for a single tear,
As something welcome, new, and dear;
I wish'd it then, I wish it still:
Despair is stronger than my will.

Waste not thine orison, despair
Is mightier than thy pious prayer:
I would not, if I might, be blest;
I want no paradise, but rest.
'T was then, I tell thee, father! then
I saw her; yes, she lived again;
And shining in her white symar,*
As through yon pale gray cloud the star
Which now I gaze on, as on her,
Who look'd and looks far lovelier;
Dimly I view its trembling spark:
To-morrow's night shall be more dark;
And I, before its rays appear,
That lifeless thing the living fear.
I wander, father! for my soul
Is fleeing towards the final goal.
I saw her, friar! and I rose
Forgetful of our former woes;
And rushing from my couch, I dart,
And clasp her to my desperate heart;
I clasp—what is it that I clasp?
No breathing form within my grasp,
No heart that beats reply to mine,
Yet, Leila! yet the form is thine!
And art thou, dearest, changed so much,
As meet my eye, yet mock my touch?
Ah! were thy beauties e'er so cold,
I care not; so my arms enfold
The all they ever wish'd to hold.
Alas! around a shadow prest,
They shrink upon my lonely breast;
Yet still 't is there! In silence stands,
And beckons with beseeching hands!
With braided hair, and bright black eye—
I knew 't was false—she could not die!
But he is dead! within the dell
I saw him buried where he fell;
He comes not, for he cannot break
From earth; why then art thou awake?
They told me wild waves roll'd above
The face I view, the form I love;
They told me—'t was a hideous tale!
I'd tell it, but my tongue would fail:
If true, and from thine ocean cave
Thou com'st to claim a calmer grave,
Oh! pass thy dewy fingers o'er
This brow, that then will burn no more;
Or place them on my hopeless heart:
But, shape or shade! whate'er thou art,
In mercy ne'er again depart!
Or farther with thee bear my soul
Than winds can waft or waters roll!

"Such is my name, and such my tale.
Confessor! to thy secret ear
I breathe the sorrows I bewail,
And thank thee for the generous tear
This glazing eye could never shed.
Then lay me with the humblest dead,
And, save the cross above my head,
Be neither name nor emblem spread,
By prying stranger to be read,
Or stay the passing pilgrim's tread."

He pass'd—nor of his name and race
Hath left a token or a trace,
Save what the father must not say
Who shriv'd him on his dying day:
This broken tale was all we knew
Of her he loved, or him he slew.

* "Symar," a shroud.

† The circumstance to which the above story relates was not very uncommon in Turkey. A few years ago the wife of Muchtar Paeha complained to his father of his son's supposed infidelity; he asked with whom, and she had the barbarity to give in a list of the twelve handsomest women in Yanina. They were seized, fastened up in sacks, and drowned in the lake the same night! One of the guards who was present informed me that not one of the victims uttered a cry, or showed a symptom of terror at so sudden a "wrench from all we know, from all we love." The fate of Phaedra, the fairest of this sacrifice, is the subject of many a Romaine and Arnaout ditty.

THE BRIDE OF ABYDOS:

A Turkish Tale.

"Had we never loved so kindly,
Had we never loved so blindly,
Never met or never parted,
We had no'w been broken-hearted."
BYRON.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE LORD HOLLAND,

This Tale is Inscribed.

WITH EVERY SENTIMENT OF RESPECT AND GRATITUDE, BY HIS GRATEFULLY OBLIGED AND SINCERE FRIEND

Byron

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

Know ye the land where the cypress and myrtle
Are emblems of deeds that are done in their clime?
Where the rage of the vulture, the love of the turtle,

Now melt into sorrow, now madden to crime!
Know ye the land of the cedar and vine,
Where the flowers ever blossom, the beams ever shine:

Where the light wings of Zephyr, oppress'd with perfumes,
Wax faint o'er the gardens of Gál* in her bloom;

Where the citron and olive are fairest of fruit,
And the voice of the nightingale never is mute;
Where the tints of the earth and the hues of the sky,

In color though varied, in beauty may vie,
And the purples of ocean are deepest in dye;
Whence the virgins are sent as the roses they twine,
And all, save the spirit of man, is divine?
'Tis the clime of the East; 'tis the land of the Sun—

Can he smile on such deeds as his children have done?

Oh! wild as the accents of lovers' farewell
Are the boasts which they hear, and the tales which they tell.

II.

Behold a gallant slave,
Whom the brave,
The lord's behest
To guard his rest,

Old Giafir sate in his Divan:
Deep thought was in his aged eye;
And though the face of Mussulman
Not oft betrays to standers by
The mind within well skill'd to hide
All but unconquerable pride,
His pensive cheek and pondering brow
Did more than he was wont avow.

III.

"Let the chamber be clear'd."—The train disappear'd—

"Now call me the chief of the Haram guard."
With Giafir is none but his only son,
And the Nubian awaiting the sire's award.

"Haroun—when all the crowd that wait
Are pass'd beyond the outer gate
(Woe to the head whose eye beheld
My child Zuleika's face unveil'd!),
Hence, lead my daughter from her tower;
Her fate is fix'd this very hour:
Yet not to her repeat my thought
By me alone be duty taught!"

"Pacha! to hear is to obey."

No more must slave to despot say—
Then to the tower had ta'en his way,
But here young Selim silence brake,
First lowly rendering reverence meet;
And downcast look'd, and gently spake,
Still standing at the Pacha's feet:
For son of Moelem must expire,
Ere dare to sit before his sire!

"Father! for fear that thou shouldst chide
My sister, or her sable guide,
Know—for the fault, if fault there be,
Was mine, then fall thy frowns on me—

* "Souls made of fire, and children of the Sun,
With whom revenge is virtue."—Young's Revenge.

So lovelily the morning shone,
That—let the old and weary sleep—
I could not; and to view alone
The fairest scenes of land and deep,
With none to listen and reply
To thoughts with which my heart beat high
Were irksome—for whate'er my mood,
In sooth I love not solitude;
I on Zuleika's slumber broke,
And, as thou knowest that for me
Soon turns the Haram's grating key,
Before the guardian slaves awoke
We to the cypress groves had flown,
And made earth, main, and heaven our own!
There linger'd we, beguiled too long
With Mejnoun's tale, or Sadi's song;*
Till I, who heard the deep tambour†
Beat thy Divan's approaching hour,
To thee, and to my duty true,
Warn'd by the sound, to greet thee flew:
But there Zuleika wanders yet—
Nay, Father, rage not—nor forget
That none can pierce that secret bower
But those who watch the women's towers.”

IV.

“Son of a slave”—the Pacha said—
“From unbelieving mother bred,
Vain were a father's hope to see
Aught that befits a man in thee.
Thou, when thine arm should bend the bow,
And hurl the dart, and curb the steed,
Thou, Greek in soul if not in creed,
Must pore where babbling waters flow,
And watch unfolding roses blow.
Would that yon orb, whose matin glow
Thy listless eyes so much admire,
Would lend thee something of his fire!
Thou, who wouldst see this battlement
By Christian cannon piecemeal rent;
Nay, tamely view old Stamboul's wall
Before the dogs of Moscow fall,
Nor strike one stroke for life and death
Against the curse of Nazareth!
Go—let thy less than woman's hand
Assume the distaff—not the brand.
But, Haroun!—to my daughter speed:
And hark—of thine own head take heed—
If thus Zuleika oft takes wing—
Thou seest yon bow—it hath a string!”

V.

No sound from Selim's lip was heard,
At least that met old Giafir's ear,
But every frown and every word
Pierced keener than a Christian's sword.
“Son of a slave!—reproach'd with fear!
Those gibes had cost another dear.
Son of a slave!—and who my sire?‡
Thus held his thoughts their dark career;
And glances ev'n of more than ire
Flash forth, then faintly disappear.
Old Giafir gazed upon his son
And started; for within his eyes

He read how much his wrath had done;
He saw rebellion there begun:
“Come hither, boy—what, no reply?
I mark thee—and I know thee too;
But there be deeds thou dar'st not do.
But if thy beard had manlier length,
And if thy hand had skill and strength,
I'd joy to see thee break a lance,
Albeit against my own, perchance.”

As anxiously these accents fell,
On Selim's eye he fiercely gazed:
That eye return'd him glances for glances,
And proudly to his sire's was raised,
Till Giafir's quail'd and shrunk apace—
And why—he felt, but durst not tell.
“Much I misdoct this wayward boy
Will one day work me more annoy:
I never loved him from his birth,
And—but his arm is little worth,
And scarcely in the chase could cope
With timid fawn or antelope,
Far less would venture into strife
Where man contends for fame and life—
I would not trust that look or tone:
No—nor the blood so near my own.
That blood—he hath not heard—no more—
I'll watch him closer than before.
He is an Arab! to my sight,
Or Christian crouching in the fight—
But hark!—I hear Zuleika's voice;
Like Houris' hymn it meets mine ear:
She is the offspring of my choice;
Oh! more than ev'n her mother dear,
With all to hope, and nought to fear—
My Peri! ever welcome here!
Sweet, as the desert fountain's wave
To lips just cool'd in time to save—
Such to my longing sight art thou;
Nor can they wait to Mecca's shrine
More thanks for life, than I for thine,
Who blest thy birth, and bless thee now.”

VI.

Fair as the first that fell of womankind,
When on that dread yet lovely serpent smiling,
Whose image then was stamped upon her mind—
But once beguiled—and ever more beguiling:
Dazzling, as that, oh! too transcendent vision
To Sorrow's phantom-peopled slumber given,
When heart meets heart again in dreams Elysian,
And paints the lost on Earth revived in Heaven;
Soft as the memory of buried love;
Pure, as the prayer which Childhood wafts above,
Was she—the daughter of the rude old Chief,
Who met the maid with tears—but not of grief.

Who hath not proved how feebly words essay?
To fix one spark of Beauty's heavenly ray?
Who doth not feel, until his failing sight
Faints into dimness with its own delight,
His changing cheek, his sinking heart confess
The might—the majesty of Loveliness?
Such was Zuleika—such around her shone
The nameless charms unmark'd by her alone—
The light of love, the purity of grace,
The mind, the Music | breathing from her face,

* Mejnoun and Lella, the Romeo and Juliet of the East. Sadi, the moral poet of Persia.

† Turkish drum, which sounds at sunrise, noon, and twilight.

‡ The Turks abhor the Arabs (who return the compliment a hundred-fold) even more than they hate the Christians.

§ These twelve fine lines were added in the course of printing.

¶ This expression has met with objections. I will not refer to “Him who hath not Music in his soul,” but merely request the reader to recollect, for ten seconds, the features of the woman whom he believes to be the most beautiful; and, if he then does not comprehend fully what is feebly expressed in the above line, I shall be sorry for us both. For an elegant passage in the latest work of the first female writer of this, perhaps of any age, on the analogy (and the immediate comparison excited by that analogy) between “painting and music,” see vol. iii., cap. 10, DE L'ALLEGEMANT. And is not this connection still stronger with the original than the copy? with the coloring of Nature than of Art? After all, this is

The heart whose softness harmonized the whole,
And oh! that eye was in itself a Soul!

Her graceful arms in meekness bending
Across her gently budding breast:
At one kind word those arms extending
To clasp the neck of him who blest
His child caressing and caress,
Zuleika came—and Giaffr felt
His purpose half within him melt:
Not that against her fancied weal
His heart though stern could ever feel;
Affection chain'd her to that heart;
Ambition tore the links apart.

VII.

"Zuleika! child of gentleness!
How dear this very day must tell,
When I forget my own distress,
In losing what I love so well,
To bid thee with another dwell:
Another! and a braver man
Was never seen in battle's van.
We Moslem reek not much of blood:
But yet the line of Carasman*
Unchanged, unchangeable hath stood
First of the bold Timarist bands
That won and well can keep their lands.
Enough that he who comes to woo
Is kinsman of the Bey Oglo†:
His years need scarce a thought employ:
I would not have thee wed a boy.
And thou shalt have a noble dower:
And his and my united power
Will laugh to scorn the death-firman,
Which others tremble but to scan,
And teach the messenger† what fate
The bearer of such boon may wait.
And now thou know'st thy father's will,
All that thy sex hath need to know:
'Twas mine to teach obedience still—
The way to love, thy lord may show."

VIII.

In silence bow'd the virgin's head;
And if her eye was fill'd with tears
That stifled feeling dare not shed,
And changed her cheek from pale to red,
And red to pale, as through her ears
Those winged words like arrows sped,
What could such be but maiden fears?
So bright the tear in Beauty's eye,
Love half regrets to kiss it dry;

rather to be felt than described; still I think there are some who will understand it, at least they would have done had they beheld the countenance whose speaking harmony suggested the idea; for this passage is not drawn from imagination but memory, that mirror which Affliction dashes to the earth, and looking down upon the fragments, only beholds the reduction multiplied.—Byron's Diary, Dec. 7, 1818.

* Carasman Oglo, or Kara Osman Oglo, is the principal headman in Turkey; he governs Magnesia; those who, by a kind of feudal tenure, possess land on condition of service, are called Timariots; they serve as Spahis, according to the extent of territory, and bring a certain number into the field, generally cavalry.

† When a Pacha is sufficiently strong to resist the single messenger, who is always the first bearer of his order for his death, is strangled instead, and sometimes five or six, one after the other, on the same errand, by command of the refractory patient: if, on the contrary, he is weak or loyal, he bows, kisses the Sultan's respectable signature, and is bowstring with great complacency. In 1810, several of these presents were exhibited in the niche of the Seraglio gate; among others, the head of the Pacha of Bagdad, a brave young man, cut off by treachery, after a desperate resistance.

‡ Clapping of the hands calls the servants. The Turks hate a superfluous expenditure of voice, and they have no bells.

So sweet the blush of Bashfulness,
Even Pity scarce can wish it less!

Whate'er it was the sire forgot;
Or if remember'd, mark'd it not:
Thrice clapp'd his hands, and call'd his steed,‡
Reign'd his gem-adorn'd chibouque,§
And mounting fealty for the mead,
With Maugrabee|| and Mamaluke,
His way amid his Delis took,¶
To witness many an active deed
With sabre keen, or blunt jerreed.
The Kialar only and his Moors
Watch well the Haram's massy doors.

IX.

His head was leant upon his hand,
His eye look'd o'er the dark blue water
That swiftly glides and gently swells
Between the winding Dardanelles;
But yet he saw nor sea nor strand,
Nor even his Pacha's turban'd band
Mix in the game of mimic slaughter,
Careering cleave the folded felt,
With sabre strokes right sharply dealt;
Nor mark'd the javelin-darting crowd,
Nor heard their Ollahs†† wild and loud—
He thought but of old Giaffr's daughter!

X.

No word from Selim's bosom broke;
One sigh Zuleika's thought bespoke:
Still gazed he through the lattice grate,
Pale, mute, and mournfully sedate,
To him Zuleika's eye was turn'd,
But little from his aspect learn'd:
Equal her grief, yet not the same;
Her heart confess'd a gentler flame:
But yet that heart, alarm'd or weak,
She knew not why, forbade to speak.
Yet speak she must—but when essay?
"How strange he thus should turn away!
Not thus we e'er before have met;
Nor thus shall be our parting yet."
Thrice paced she slowly through the room,
And watch'd his eye—it still was fix'd:
She snatch'd the urn wherein was mix'd
The Persian Atar-gul's‡‡ perfume,
And sprinkled all its odors o'er
The pictured roof§§ and marble floor:
The drops, that through his glittering vest
The playful girl's appeal address'd,
Unheeded o'er his bosom flew,

§ "Chibouque," the Turkish pipe, of which the amber mouth-piece, and sometimes the bowl which contains the leaf, is adorned with precious stones, if in possession of the wealthier order.

|| "Maugrabee," Moorish mercenaries.

¶ "Delis," braves who form the forlorn hope of the cavalry, and always begin the action.

 A twisted fold of felt is used for scimitar practice by the Turks, and few but Mussulman arms can cut through it as a single stroke: sometimes a tough turban is used for the same purpose. The jerreed is a game of blunt javelins, animated and graceful.

†† "Ollah," Alla ti Allah, the "Lillah," as the Spanish poets call them, the sound is Ollah; a cry of which the Turks, for a silent people, are somewhat profuse, particularly during the jerreed, or in the chase, but mostly in battle. Their animation in the field, and gravity in the chamber, with their pipes and comboloes, form an amusing contrast.

‡‡ "Atar-gul," ottoor of roses. The Persian is the finest.

§§ The ceilings and wainscots, or rather walls, of the Mussulman apartments are generally painted, in great houses, with one sternal and highly colored view of Constantinople, wherein the principal feature is a noble contempt of perspective; below, arms, similitars, &c., are in general fancifully and not inelegantly disposed.

As if that breast were marble too.
 "What, sullen yet? It must not be—Oh! gentle Selim, this from thee!"
 She saw in curious order set
 The fairest flowers of eastern land—
 "He loved them once; may touch them yet,
 If offer'd by Zuleika's hand."
 The childish thought was hardly breathed
 Before the rose was pluck'd and wreathed;
 The next fond moment saw her seat
 Her fairy form at Selim's feet:
 "This rose to calm my brother's cares
 A message from the Bulbul* bears:
 It says to-night he will prolong
 For Selim's ear his sweetest song;
 And though his note is somewhat sad,
 He'll try for once a strain more glad,
 With some faint hope his alter'd lay
 May sing these gloomy thoughts away.

XI.

"What! not receive my foolish flower?
 Nay, then I am indeed unblest;
 On me can thus thy forehead lower?
 And know'st thou not who loves thee best?
 Oh, Selim dear! oh, more than dearest!
 Say, is it me thou hat'st or fearest?
 Come, lay thy head upon my breast,
 And I will kiss thee into rest,
 Since words of mine, and songs must fall,
 Ev'n from my fabled nightingale.
 I knew our sire at times was stern,
 But this from thee had yet to learn:
 Too well I know he loves thee not;
 But is Zuleika's love forgot?
 Ah! deem I right? the Pacha's plan—
 This Kiosman Bey of Carasman
 Perhaps may prove some foe of thine.
 If so, I swear by Mecca's shrine,—
 If shrines that ne'er approach allow
 To woman's step admit her vow,—
 Without thy free consent, command,
 The Sultan should not have my hand!
 Think'st thou that I could bear to part
 With thee, and learn to halve my heart?
 Ah! were I sever'd from thy side,
 Where were thy friend—and who my guide?
 Years have not seen, Time shall not see
 The hour that tears my soul from thee:
 Even Azrael,† from his deadly quiver
 When flies that shaft, and fly it must,
 That parts all else, shall doom for ever
 Our hearts to undivided dust!"

XII.

He lived—he breathed—he moved—he felt;
 He raised the maid from where she knelt;
 His trance was gone—his keen eye shone
 With thoughts that long in darkness dwelt;
 With thoughts that burn—in rays that melt.
 As the stream late conceal'd
 By the fringe of its willows,
 When it rushes reveal'd
 In the light of its billows;
 As the bolt bursts on high
 From the black cloud that bound it,
 Flash'd the soul of that eye
 Through the long lashes round it.

A war-horse at the trumpet's sound,
 A lion roused by heedless hound,
 A tyrant waked to sudden strife
 By gaze of ill-directed knife,
 Starts not to more convulsive life
 Than he, who heard that vow, display'd,
 And all, before repress'd, betray'd:
 "Now thou art mine, for ever mine,
 With life to keep, and scarce with life resign.
 Now thou art mine,—that sacred oath,
 Though sworn by one, hath bound us both.
 Yes, fondly, wisely hast thou done;
 That vow hath saved more heads than one;
 But blench not thou—thy simplest tress
 Claims more from me than tenderness;
 I would not wrong the slenderest hair,
 That clusters round thy forehead fair,
 For all the treasures buried far
 Within the caves of Istakar.‡
 This morning clouds upon me lower'd,
 Reproaches on my head were shower'd,
 And Giafir almost call'd me coward!
 Now I have motive to be brave;
 The son of his neglected slave,
 Nay, start not, 'twas the term he gave,
 May show, though little apt to vaunt,
 A heart his words nor deeds can daunt.
 His son, indeed!—yet, thanks to thee,
 Perchance I am, at least shall be;
 But let our plighted secret vow
 Be only known to us as now.
 I know the wretch who dares demand
 From Giafir thy reluctant hand;
 More ill-got wealth, a meaner soul
 Holds not a Muselim's§ control:
 Was he not bred in Egripo?||
 A viler race let Israel show;
 But let that pass—to none be told
 Our oath; the rest shall time unfold.
 To me and mine leave Osman Bey;
 I've partisans for perill's day;
 Think not I am what I appear;
 I've arms, and friends, and vengeance near."

XIII.

"Think not thou art what thou appearest!
 My Selim, thou art sadly changed:
 This morn I saw thee gentlest, dearest;
 But now thou'rt from thyself estranged.
 My love thou surely knew'st before,
 It ne'er was less, nor can be more.
 To see thee, hear thee, near thee stay,
 And hate the night I know not why,
 Save that we meet not but by day;
 With thee to live, with thee to die,
 I dare not to my hope deny:
 Thy cheek, thine eyes, thy lips to kiss,
 Like this—and this—no more than this;
 For, Allah! sure thy lips are flame:
 What fever in thy veins is flushing?
 My own have nearly caught the same,
 At least I feel my cheek too blushing.
 To soothe thy sickness, watch thy health,
 Partake, but never waste thy wealth,
 Or stand with smiles unmurmuring by,
 And lighten half thy poverty:
 Do all but close thy dying eye,
 For that I could not live to try;

* It has been much doubted whether the notes of this "Lover of the rose" are sad or merry; and Mr. Fox' remarks on the subject have provoked some learned controversy as to the opinions of the ancients on the subject. I dare not venture a conjecture on the point, though a little inclined to the "errare mallet," &c., of Mr. Fox was mistaken.
 † "Azrael," the angel of death.

‡ The treasures of the Pre-Adamite Sultans. See D'Herbigny, article Istakar.

§ "Muselim," a governor, the next in rank after a Pacha; a Wayrode is the third; and then comes the Aga.

|| "Egripo," the Negropont. According to the proverb, the Turks of Egripo, the Jews of Salonica, and the Greeks of Athens, are the worst of their respective races.

To these alone my thoughts aspire:
 More can I do? or thou require?
 But, Selim, thou must answer why
 We need so much of mystery?
 The cause I cannot dream nor tell,
 But be it, since thou say'st 't is well;
 Yet what thou mean'st by 'arms' and 'friends,'
 Beyond my weaker sense extends.
 I meant that Glafir should have heard
 The very vow I plighted thee;
 His wrath would not revoke my word:
 Not surely he would leave me free.
 Can this fond wish seem strange in me,
 To be what I have ever been?
 What other hath Zuleika seen
 From simple childhood's earliest hour?
 What other can she seek to see
 Than thee, companion of her bower,
 The partner of her infancy?
 These cherish'd thoughts, with life begun,
 Say, why must I no more avow?
 What change is wrought to make me shun
 The truth; my pride, and thine till now?
 To meet the gaze of stranger's eyes
 Our law, our creed, our God denies;
 Nor shall one wandering thought of mine
 At such, our Prophet's will, repine:
 No! happier made by that decree,
 He left me all in leaving thee.
 Deep were my anguish, thus compell'd
 To wed with one I ne'er beheld:
 This wherefore should I not reveal?
 Why wilt thou urge me to conceal?
 I know the Pacha's haughty mood
 To these hath never boded good;
 And he so often storms at nought,
 Allah! forbid that e'er he ought!
 And why I know not, but within
 My heart concealment weighs like sin.
 If then such secrecy be crime,
 And such it feels while lurking here;
 Oh, Selim! tell me yet in time,
 Nor leave me thus to thoughts of fear.
 Ah! yonder see the Tobocadar,*
 My father leaves the mimic war;
 I tremble now to meet his eye—
 Say, Selim, canst thou tell me why?"

XIV.

"Zuleika—to thy tower's retreat
 Betake thee—Glafir I can greet:
 And now with him I fain must prate
 Of firmans, impostes, levies, state.
 There's fearful news from Danube's banks,
 Our Vizier nobly thins his ranks,
 For which the Glaour may give him thanks!
 Our Sultan hath a shorter way
 Such costly triumph to repay.
 But, mark me, when the twilight drum
 Hath warn'd the troops to food and sleep,
 Unto thy cell will Selim come:
 Then softly from the Haram creep
 Where we may wander by the deep:
 Our garden-battlements are steep;
 Nor these will rash intruder climb
 To list our words, or stint our time;
 And if he doth, I want not steel
 Which some have felt, and more may feel.

Then shalt thou learn of Selim more
 Than thou hast heard or thought before:
 Trust me, Zuleika—fear not me!
 Thou know'st I hold a Haram key."

"Fear thee, my Selim! ne'er till now Did word like this—"

"Delay not thou;
 I keep the key—and Haroun's guard
 Have some, and hope of more reward.
 To-night, Zuleika, thou shalt hear
 My tale, my purpose, and my fear:
 I am not, love! what I appear."

CANTO THE SECOND.

I.

THE winds are high on Helle's wave,
 As on that night of stormy water
 When Love, who sent, forgot to save
 The young, the beautiful, the brave,
 The lonely hope of Sestos' daughter.
 Oh! when alone along the sky
 Her turret-torch was blazing high,
 Though rising gale, and breaking foam,
 And shrieking sea-birds warn'd him home;
 And clouds aloft and tides below,
 With signs and sounds, forbade to go,
 He could not see, he would not hear,
 Or sound or sign foreboding fear;
 His eye but saw that light of love,
 The only star it hall'd above;
 His ear but rang with Hero's song,
 "Ye waves, divide not lovers long!"
 That tale is old, but love anew
 May nerve young hearts to prove as true.

II.

The winds are high, and Helle's tide
 Rolls darkly heaving to the main;
 And Night's descending shadows hide
 That field with blood bedew'd in vain,
 The desert of old Priam's pride;
 The tombs, sole relics of his reign,
 All—save immortal dreams that could beguile
 The blind old man of Scio's rocky isle!

III.

Oh! yet—for there my steps have been;
 These feet have press'd the sacred shore,
 These limbs that buoyant wave hath borne—
 Minstrel! with thee to muse, to mourn,
 To trace again those fields of yore,
 Believing every hillock green
 Contains no fabled hero's ashes,
 And that around the undoubted scene
 Thine own "broad Hellespont"† still dashes,
 Be long my lot! and cold were he
 Who there could gaze denying thee!

* "Tobocadar," one of the attendants who precedes a man of authority.

† The wrangling about this epithet, "the broad Hellespont" or the "boundless Hellespont," whether it means one or the other, or what it means at all, has been beyond all possibility of detail. I have even heard it disputed on the spot; and not foregoing a speedy conclusion to the controversy, amused myself with swimming across it in the mean time; and probably may again, before the point is settled. Indeed, the question as to the truth of "the tale of Troy divine" still continues much of it resting upon the talismanic word seepos; probably Homer had the same notion of distance that a coquette has of time; and when he talks of boundless, means half a mile; as the latter, by a like figure, when she says eternal attachment, simply specifies three weeks.

IV.

The night hath closed on Helle's stream,
Nor yet hath risen on Ida's hill
That moon, which shone on his high theme:
No warrior chides her peaceful beam,
But conscious shepherds bless it still.
Their flocks are grazing on the mound
Of him who felt the Dardian's arrow:
That mighty heap of gather'd ground
Which Ammon's son ran proudly round,*
By nations raised, by monarchs crown'd,
Is now a lone and nameless barrow!
Within—thy dwelling-place how narrow!
Without—can only strangers breathe
The name of him that was beneath:
Dust long outlasts the storied stone;
But Thou—thy very dust is gone!

V.

Late, late to-night will Dian cheer
The swain, and chase the boatman's fear;
Till then—no beacon on the cliff
May shape the course of struggling skiff;
The scatter'd lights that skirt the bay,
All, one by one, have died away;
The only lamp of this lone hour
Is glimmering in Zuleika's tower.

Yes! there is light in that lone chamber,
And o'er her silken ottoman
Are thrown the fragrant beads of amber,
O'er which her fairy fingers ran;†
Near these, with emerald rays beset
(How could she thus that gem forget?),
Her mother's sainted amulet,‡
Whereon engraved the Koorsee text,
Could smooth this life and win the next;
And by her combololo§ lies
A Koran of illumined dyes;
And many a bright emblazon'd rhyme
By Persian scribes redeem'd from time;
And o'er those scrolls, not oft so mute,
Reclines her now neglected lute;
And round her lamp of fretted gold
Bloom flowers in urns of China's mould;
The richest work of Iran's loom,
And Sheeraz' tribute of perfume;
All that can eye or sense delight
Are gather'd in that gorgeous room:
But yet it hath an air of gloom.
She, of this Peri cell the sprite,
What doth she hence, and on so rude a night?

VI.

Wrapt in the darkest sable vest,
Which none save nobler Moalem wear,
To guard from winds of heaven the breast
As heaven itself to Selim dear,
With cautious steps the thickest threading,
As starting oft, as through the glade
The gust its hollow meanings made,
Till on the smoother pathway treading,

More free her timid bosom beat,
The maid pursued her silent guide;
And though her terror urged retreat,
How could she quit her Selim's side?
How teach her tender lips to chide?

VII.

They reach'd at length a grotto, hewn
By nature, but enlarged by art,
Where oft her lute she won't to tune,
And oft her Koran can't apart;
And oft in youthful reverie
She dream'd what Paradise might be:
Where woman's parted soul shall go
Her Prophet had disdain'd to show;
But Selim's mansion was secure,
Nor deem'd she, could be long endure
His bower in other worlds of bliss
Without her, most beloved in this!
Oh! who so dear with him could dwell?
What Houri soothe him half so well?

VIII.

Since last she visited the spot
Some change seem'd wrought within the grot:
It might be only that the night
Disguis'd things seen by better light:
That brazen lamp but dimly threw
A ray of no celestial hue;
But in a nook within the cell
Her eye on stranger objects fell.
There arms were piled, not such as wield
The turban'd Delis in the field;
But brands of foreign blade and hilt,
And one was red—perchance with guilt!
Ah! how without can blood be spilt?
A cup too on the board was set
That did not seem to hold sherbet.
What may this mean? she turn'd to see
Her Selim—"Oh! can this be he?"

IX.

His robe of pride was thrown aside,
His brow no high-crown'd turban bore,
But in its stead a shawl of red,
Wreathed lightly round, his temples wore:
That dagger, on whose hilt the gem
Were worthy of a diadem,
No longer glitter'd at his waist,
Where pistols unadorn'd were braced;
And from his belt a sabre swung,
And from his shoulder loosely hung
The cloak of white, the thin capote
That decks the wandering Cadiote;
Beneath—his golden-plated vest
Clung like a cuirass to his breast;
The greaves below his knee that wound
With silvery scales were sheathed and bound.
But were it not that high command
Spoke in his eye, and tone, and hand,
All that a careless eye could see
In him was some young Gallionée.‖

* Before his Persian invasion, and crowned the altar with laurel, &c. He was afterwards imitated by Caracalla in his race. It is believed that the last also poisoned a friend, named Festus, for the sake of new Patroclan games. I have seen the sheep feeding on the tombs of Ætistes and Antiochus: the first is in the centre of the plain.

† When rubbed, the amber is susceptible of a perfume, which is slight, but not disagreeable.

‡ The belief in amulets engraved on gems, or enclosed in gold boxes, containing scraps from the Koran, worn round the neck, wrist, or arm, is still universal in the East. The Koorsee (throne) verse in the second cap. of the Koran describes the attributes of the Most High, and is engraved in this manner, and worn by the pious, as the most esteemed and sacred of all sentences.

§ "Combololo," a Turkish rosary. The MSS., particularly those of the Persians, are richly adorned and illuminated. The Greek females are kept in utter ignorance; but many of the Turkish girls are highly accomplished, though not actually qualified for a Christian coterie. Perhaps some of our own "blues" might not be worse for beseeching.

‖ "Gallionée," or Galliongi, a sailor, that is, a Turkish sailor; the Greeks navarres, the Turks work the guns. Their dress is picturesque; and I have seen the Captain Facha more than once wearing it as a kind of lucy. Their legs, however, are generally naked. The buskins described in the text as sheathed behind with silver are those of an Armanat robber, who was my host (he had quitted the profession) at his Pyrgo, near Gastouni in the Morea; they were plated in scales one over the other, like the back of an armadillo.

X.

"I said I was not what I seem'd;
And now thou seest my words were true:
I have a tale thou hast not dream'd,
If sooth—its truth must others rue.
My story now 't were vain to hide,
I must not see thee Osman's bride:
But had not thine own lips declared
How much of that young heart I shared,
I could not, must not, yet have shown
The darker secret of my own.
In this I speak not now of love;
That, let time, truth, and peril prove;
But first—Oh! never wed another—
Zuleika! I am not thy brother!"

XI.

"Oh! not my brother!—yet uneasy—
God! am I left alone on earth
To mourn—I dare not curse—the day
That saw my solitary birth?
Oh! thou wilt love me now no more!
My sinking heart foreboded ill:
But know me all I was before,
Thy sister—friend—Zuleika still.
Thou lo'd'st me here perchance to kill;
If thou hast cause for vengeance, see!
My breast is offer'd—take thy fill!
Far better with the dead to be
Than live thus nothing now to thee!
Perhaps far worse, for now I know
Why Glafir always seem'd thy foe;
And I, alas! am Glafir's child,
For whom thou wert condemn'd, reviled.
If not thy sister—wouldst thou save
My life, oh! bid me be thy slave!"

XII.

"My slave, Zuleika!—nay, I'm thine:
But, gentle love, this transport calm,
Thy lot shall yet be link'd with mine;
I swear it by our Prophet's shrine,
And be that thought thy sorrow's balm.
So may the Koran* verse display'd
Upon its steel direct my blade,
In danger's hour to guard us both,
As I preserve that awful oath!
The name in which thy heart hath prided
Must change; but, my Zuleika, know,
That tis is widen'd, not divided.
Although thy Sire's my deadliest foe,
My father was to Glafir all;
That Selim late was deem'd to thee;
That brother wrought a brother's fall,
But spared, at least, my infancy;
And hild me with a vain deceit
That yet a like return may meet.
He rear'd me, not with tender help,
But like the nephew of a Cain;†

He watch'd me like a lion's whelp,
That gnaws and yet may break his chain.
My father's blood in every vein
Is boiling; but for thy dear sake
No present vengeance will I take;
Though here I must no more remain.
But first, beloved Zuleika! hear
How Glafir wrought this deed of fear.

XIII.

"How first their strife to rancor grew,
If love or envy made them foes,
It matters little if I knew;
In fiery spirits, alights, though few
And thoughtless, will disturb repose.
In war Abdallah's arm was strong,
Remember'd yet in Bosniac song,
And Paswan's† rebel hordes attest
How little love they bore such guest:
His death is all I need relate,
The stern effect of Glafir's hate;
And how my birth disclosed to me,
What e'er beside it makes, hath made me free.

XIV.

"When Paswan, after years of strife,
At last for power, but first for life,
In Widdin's walls too proudly sate,
Our Pachas rallied round the state;
Nor last nor least in high command,
Each brother led a separate band;
They gave their horse-tails‡ to the wind,
And mustering in Sophia's plain
Their tents were pitch'd, their post assign'd;
To one, alas! assign'd in vain!
What need of words? the deadly bowl,
By Glafir's order drugg'd and given,
With venom subtle as his soul,
Dismiss'd Abdallah's hence to heaven.
Reclined and feverish in the bath,
He, when the hunter's sport was up,
But little deem'd a brother's wrath
To quench his thirst had such a cup:
He drank one bribed attendant bore;
If thou my tale, Zuleika, doubt,
Call Haroun—he can tell it out.

XV.

"The deed once done, and Paswan's feud
In part suppress'd, though ne'er subdued,
Abdallah's Pachalic was gain'd;—
Thou know'st not what in our Divan
Can wealth procure for worse than man—
Abdallah's honors were obtain'd;
By him a brother's murder stain'd;
'Tis true, the purchase nearly drain'd
His ill-got treasure, soon replaced.
Wouldst question whence? Survey the waste, own sacred writ; and not content with Adam, they have a biography of Pre-Adamites. Solomon is the monarch of all ceremony, and Moses a prophet inferior only to Christ and Mahomet. Zuleika is the Persian name of Potiphar's wife; and her amour with Joseph constitutes one of the finest poems in their language. It is, therefore, no violation of custom to put the names of Cain, or Noah, into the mouth of a Moslem.

† Paswan Oglou, the rebel of Widdin; who, for the last years of his life, set the whole power of the Porte at defiance.

‡ "Horse-tail," the standard of a Pacha.
§ Glafir, Pacha of Argyro Castro, or Boutari, I am not sure which, was actually taken off by the Albanian Ali, in the manner described in the text. Ali Pacha, while I was in the country, married the daughter of his victim, some years after the event had taken place at a bath in Sophia, or Adrianople. The poison was mixed in the cup of coffee, which is presented before the sherbet by the bath-keeper, after dressing

* The characters on all Turkish scimitars contain sometimes the name of the place of their manufacture, but more generally a text from the Koran, in letters of gold. Amongst those in my possession is one with a blade of singular construction: it is very broad, and the edge notched into serpentine curves like the ripple of water, or the wavering of flame. I asked the Armenian who sold it, what possible use such a figure could add: he said, in Italian, that he did not know; but the Mussulmans had an idea that those of this form gave a severer wound; and I kept it because it was "piu feroca." I did not much admire the reason, but bought it for its peculiarity.

† It is to be observed, that every allusion to any thing or personage in the Old Testament, such as the Ark, or Cain, is equally the privilege of Mussulman and Jew: indeed, the former profess to be much better acquainted with the lives, true and fabulous, of the patriarchs, than is warranted by our

And ask the squalid peasant how
His gains repay his broiling brow!—
Why me the stern usurper spared,
Why thus with me his palace shared,
I know not. Shame, regret, remorse,
And little fear from infant's force;
Besides, adoption as a son
By him whom Heaven accorded none,
Or some unknown cabal, caprice,
Preserved me thus;—but not in peace:
He cannot curb his haughty mood,
Nor I forgive a father's blood.

XVI.

"Within thy father's house are foes;
Not all who break his bread are true:
To these should I my birth disclose,
His days, his very hours were few:
They only want a heart to lead,
A hand to point them to the deed.
But Haroun only knows, or knew
This tale, whose close is almost nigh:
He in Abdallah's palace grew,
And held that post in his Serai
Which holds he here—he saw him die:
But what could single slavery do?
Avenge his lord? alas! too late;
Or save his son from such a fate!
He chose the last, and when elate
With foes subdued, or friends betray'd,
Proud Glafir in high triumph sate,
He led me helpless to his gate,
And not in vain it seems essay'd
To save the life for which he pray'd.
The knowledge of my birth secured
From all and each, but most from me;
Thus Glafir's safety was insured.
Removed he too from Roumelie
To this our Asiatic side,
Far from our seats by Danube's tide,
With none but Haroun, who retains Such knowledge—and that Nubian feels
A tyrant's secrets are but chains,
From which the captive gladly steals,
And this and more to me reveals:
Such still to guilt just Allah sends—
Slaves, tools, accomplices—no friends!

XVII.

"All this, Zuleika, harshly sounds;
But harsher still my tale must be:
Howe'er my tongue thy softness wounds,
Yet I must prove all truth to thee.
I saw thee start this garb to see,
Yet is it one I oft have worn,
And long must wear: this Gallongée,
To whom thy plighted vow is sworn,
Is leader of those pirate borders,
Whose laws and lives are on their swords:
To hear whose desolating tale
Would make thy waning cheek more pale:
Those arms thou seest my band have brought,
The hands that wield are not remote;
This cup too for the rugged knaves
Is fill'd—once quaff'd, they ne'er repine:
Our Prophet might forgive the slaves;
They're only infidels in wine.

XVIII.

"What could I be? Proscribed at home,
And taunted to a wish to roam;

And listless left—for Glafir's fear
Denied the courser and the spear—
Though oft—Oh, Mahomet! how oft!—
In full Divan the despot scoff'd,
As if my weak unwilling hand
Refused the bridle or the brand:
He ever went to war alone,
And pent me here untried—unknown;
To Haroun's care with women left,
By hope unblest, of fame bereft,
While thou—whose softness long endear'd,
Though it unman'd me, still had cheer'd—
To Ebus's walls for safety sent,
Awaitedst there the field's event.
Haroun, who saw my spirit pining
Beneath inaction's sluggish yoke,
His captive, though with dread resigning,
My thralldom for a season broke,
On promise to return before
The day when Glafir's charge was o'er.
'Tis vain—my tongue cannot impart
My almost drunkenness of heart,
When first this liberated eye
Survey'd Earth, Ocean, Sun, and Sky,
As if my spirit pierced them through,
And all their inmost wonders knew!
One word alone can paint to thee
That more than feeling—I was Free!
E'en for thy presence ceased to pine;
The World—nay, Heaven itself was mine!

XIX.

"The shallop of a trusty Moor
Convey'd me from this idle shore;
I long'd to see the isles that gem
Old Ocean's purple diadem:
I sought by turns, and saw them all;*
But when and where I join'd the crew,
With whom I'm pledged to rise or fall,
When all that we design to do
Is done, 't will then be time more meet
To tell thee, when the tale's complete.

XX.

"'Tis true, they are a lawless brood,
But rough in form, nor mild in mood;
And every creed, and every race,
With them hath found—may find a place;
But open speech, and ready hand,
Obedience to their chief's command;
A soul for every enterprise,
That never sees with terror's eyes;
Friendship for each, and faith to all
And vengeance vow'd for those who fall,
Have made them fitting instruments
For more than ev'n my own intents.
And some—and I have studied all
Distinguish'd from the vulgar rank,
But chiefly to my council call
The wisdom of the cautious Frank—
And some to higher thoughts aspire,
The last of Lambro's† patriots there
Anticipated freedom share;
And oft around the cavern fire
On visionary schemes debate,
To smatch the Rayahs‡ from their fate.
So let them ease their hearts with prate
Of equal rights, which man ne'er knew;
I have a love for freedom too.

* The Turkish notions of almost all islands are confined to the Archipelago, the sea alluded to.

† Lambro Cansani, a Greek, famous for his efforts in 1789-90, for the independence of his country. Abandoned by the English, he became a pirate, and the Archipelago was the scene of his enterprises.

‡ "Rayahs," all who pay the capitation tax, called the "Haratch."

Ay! let me like the ocean Patriarch* roam,
Or only know on land the Tartar's home!†
My tent on shore, my galley on the sea,
Are more than cities and Serais to me;
Borne by my steed, or wafted by my sail,
Across the desert, or before the gale,
Bound where thou wilt, my barb! or gilde, my prow!

But be the star that guides the wanderer, Thou!
Thou, my Zuleika, share and bless my bark;
The Dove of peace and promise to mine ark!
Or, since that hope denied in worlds of strife,
Be thou the rainbow to the storms of life!
The evening beam that smiles the clouds away,
And tints to-morrow with prophetic ray!
Blest—as the Muezzin's strain from Mecca's wall
To pilgrims pure and prostrate at his call;
Soft—as the melody of youthful days,
That steals the trembling tear of speechless
praise;

Dear—as his native song to Exile's ears,
Shall sound each tone thy long-loved voice endears.

For thee in those bright isles is built a bower
Blooming as Eden! in its earliest hour.
A thousand swords, with Selim's heart and hand,
Wait—wave—defend—destroy—at thy command!
Girt by my hand, Zuleika at my side,
The spoil of nations shall bedeck my bride.
The Haram's languid years of listless ease
Are well resign'd for cares—for joys like those:
Not blind to fate, I see, where'er I rove,
Unnumber'd perils,—but one only love!
Yet well my toils shall that fond breast repay,
Though fortune frown, or falser friends betray.
How dear the dream in darkest hours of ill,
Should all be changed, to find thee faithful still!
Be but thy soul, like Selim's, firmly shown;
To thee be Selim's tender as thine own;
To soothe each sorrow, share in each delight,
Blend every thought, do all—but disunite!
Once free, 'tis mine our horde again to guide;
Friends to each other, foes to aught beside:

Yet there we follow but the bent assign'd
By fatal Nature to man's warring kind:
Mark! where his carnage and his conquests cease!
He makes a solitude, and calls it—peace!
I, like the rest, must use my skill or strength,
But ask no land beyond my sabre's length:
Power sways but by division—her resource
The blest alternative of fraud or force!
Ours be the last: in time deceit may come,
When cities cage us in a social home:
There ev'n thy soul might err—how oft the heart
Corruption shakes which peril could not part!
And woman, more than man, when death or woe,
Or even Disgrace, would lay her lover low,
Sunk in the lap of Luxury will shame—
Away suspicion!—not Zuleika's name!
But life is hazard at the best; and here
No more remains to win, and much to fear:
Yes, fear!—the doubt, the dread of losing thee,
By Osman's power, and Glafir's stern decree.
That dread shall vanish with the favoring gale,
Which Love to-night hath promised to my sail:
No danger daunts the pair his smile hath blest,
Their steps still roving, but their hearts at rest.
With thee all toils are sweet, each clime hath charms;

Earth—see alike—our world within our arms!

Ay—let the loud winds whistle o'er the deck,
So that those arms cling closer round my neck:
The deepest murmur of this lip shall be,
No sigh for safety, but a prayer for thee!
The war of elements no fears impart
To Love, whose deadliest bane is human Art:
There lie the only rocks our course can check:
Here moments mance—there are years of wreck!
But hence, ye thoughts that rise in Horror's shape!
This hour bestows, or ever bars escape.
Few words remain of mine my tale to close;
Of thine but one to waft us from our foes;
Yea—foes—to me will Glafir's hate decline?
And is not Osman, who would part us, thine?

XXI.

"His head and faith from doubt and death
Returned in time my guard to save;
Few heard, none told, that o'er the wave
From isle to isle I roved the while:
And since, though parted from my hand,
Too seldom now I leave the land,
No deed they've done, nor deed shall do,
Ere I have heard and doom'd it too:
I form the plan, decree the spoil,
'Tis fit I oftener share the toil.
But now too long I've held thine ear;
Time presses, floats my bark, and here
We leave behind but hate and fear.
To-morrow Osman with his train
Arrives—to-night must break thy chain:
And wouldst thou save that haughty Bey,— Perchance, his life who gave thee thine,—
With me this hour away—away!
But yet, though thou art plighted mine,
Wouldst thou recall thy willing vow,
Appall'd by truths imparted now,
Here rest I—not to see thee wed:
But be that peril on my head!"

XXII.

Zuleika, mute and motionless,
Stood like that statue of distress,
When, her last hope for ever gone,
The mother harden'd into stone;
All in the maid that eye could see
Was but a younger Niobé.
But ere her lip, or even her eye,
Essay'd to speak, or look reply,
Beneath the garden's wicket porch
Far flash'd on high a blazing torch!
Another—and another—and another—
"Oh! fly—no more—yet now my more than brother!"

Far, wide, through every thicket spread
The fearful lights are gleaming red;
Nor these alone—for each right hand
Is ready with a sheathless brand.
They part, pursue, return, and wheel,
With searching flambeau, shining steel;
And last of all, his sabre waving,
Stern Glafir in his fury raving:
And now almost they touch the cave—
Oh! must that grot be Selim's grave?

XXIII.

Dauntless he stood—"T is come—soon past—
One kiss, Zuleika—'t is my last:

* This first of voyages is one of the few with which the Mussulmans profess much acquaintance.

† The wandering life of the Arabs, Tartars, and Turkomans, will be found well detailed in any book of Eastern travels. That it possesses a charm peculiar to itself, cannot be denied.

A young French renegade confessed to Chateaubriand, that he never found himself alone, galloping in the desert, without a sensation approaching to rapture, which was indescribable.

‡ "Jannet al Aden," the perpetual abode, the Mussulman paradise.

But yet my hand not far from shore
 May hear this signal, see the flash:
 Yet now too few—the attempt were rash:
 No matter—yet one effort more!
 Forth to the cavern mouth he stept;
 His pistol's echo rang on high.
 Zuleika started not, nor wept,
 Despair benumb'd her breast and eye!—
 "They hear me not, or if they ply
 Their oars, 't is but to see me die;
 That sound hath drawn my foes more nigh.
 Then forth, my father's scimitar,
 Thou ne'er hast seen less equal war!
 Farewell, Zuleika!—sweet! retire;
 Yet stay within—here linger safe,
 At thee his rage will only chafe.
 Stir not—lest even to thee perchance
 Some erring blade or ball should glance.
 Fear'st thou for him?—may I expire
 If in this strife I seek thy sire!
 No—though by him that poison pour'd;
 No—though again he call me coward!
 But tamely shall I meet their steel?
 No—as each crest save his may feel!"

XXIV.

One bound he made, and gain'd the sand:
 Already at his feet hath sunk
 The foremost of the prying band,
 A gasping head, a quivering trunk:
 Another falls—but round him close
 A swarming circle of his foes;
 From right to left his path he cleft,
 And almost met the meeting wave:
 His boat appears—not five oars' length—
 His comrades strain with desperate strength—
 Oh! are they yet in time to save?
 His feet the foremost breakers lave;
 His hand are plunging in the bay,
 Their sabres glitter through the spray;
 Wet—wild—unwearied to the strand
 They struggle—now they touch the land!
 They come—'t is but to add to slaughter—
 His heart's best blood is on the water.

XXV.

Escaped from shot, unharm'd by steel,
 Or scarcely grazed its force to feel,
 Had Selim won, betray'd, beset,
 To where the strand and billows met;
 There as his last step left the land,
 And the last death-blow dealt his hand—
 Ah! wherefore did he turn to look
 For her his eye but sought in vain?
 That pause, that fatal gaze he took,
 Hath doom'd his death, or fix'd his chain.
 Sad proof, in peril and in pain,
 How late will Lover's hope remain!
 His back was to the dashing spray;
 Behind, but close, his comrades lay,
 When, at the instant, hiss'd the ball—
 "So may the foes of Glafir fall!"
 Whose voice is heard? whose carline rang?
 Whose bullet through the night-air sang,
 Too nearly, deadly aim'd to err?
 'T is thine—Alalallah! Murderer!
 The father slowly rised thy hate,
 The son hath found a quicker fate:
 Fast from his breast the blood is bubbling,
 The whiteness of the sea-foam troubling—

If aught his lips essay'd to groan,
 The rushing billows choked the tone!

XXVI.

Morn slowly rolls the clouds away;
 Few trophies of the fight are there:
 The shouts that shook the midnight bay
 Are silent; but some signs of fray
 That strand of strife may bear,
 And fragments of each shiver'd brand;
 Steps stamp'd; and dash'd into the sand
 The print of many a struggling hand
 May there be mark'd; nor far remote
 A broken torch, an earless boat;
 And tangled on the weeds that heap
 The beach where shelling to the deep
 There lies a white capote!
 'T is rent in twain—one dark-red stain
 The wave yet ripples o'er in vain;
 But where is he who wore?
 Ye! who would o'er his relics weep,
 Go, seek them where the surges sweep
 Their burthen round Sigeum's steep
 And cast on Lemnos' shore:
 The sea-birds shriek above the prey,
 O'er which their hungry beaks delay,
 As shaken on his restless pillow,
 His head heaves with the heaving billow;
 That hand, whose motion is not life,
 Yet feebly seems to menace strife,
 Flung by the tossing tide on high,
 Then levell'd with the wave?—
 What reck's it, though that corpse shall lie
 Within a living grave?
 The bird that tears that prostrate form
 Hath only robb'd the meaner worm;
 The only heart, the only eye
 Had bled or wept to see him die,
 Had seen those scatter'd limbs composed,
 And mourn'd above his turban-stone,
 That heart hath burst—that eye was clos'd—
 Yea—closed before his own!

XXVII.

By Helle's stream there is a voice of wail!
 And woman's eye is wet—man's cheek is pale:
 Zuleika! last of Glafir's race,
 Thy destined lord is come too late:
 He sees not—ne'er shall see thy face!
 Can he not hear
 The loud Wul-wulleh! warn his distant ear?
 Thy handmaids weeping at the gate,
 The Koran-chanters of the hymn of fate,
 The silent slaves with folded arms that wait,
 Sighs in the hall, and shrieks upon the gale,
 Tell him thy tale!
 Thou didst not view thy Selim fall!
 That fearful moment when he left the cave
 Thy heart grew chill:
 He was thy hope—thy joy—thy love—thine all—
 And that last thought on him thou couldst not save
 Sufficed to kill:
 Burst forth in one wild cry—and all was still.
 Peace to thy broken heart, and virgin grave!
 Ah, happy! but of life to lose the worst!
 That grief—though deep—though fatal—was thy first!
 Thrice happy! ne'er to feel nor fear the force
 Of absence, shame, pride, hate, revenge, remorse!

* While the Salutes lay off the Turbanned, Lord Byron saw the body of a man who had been recovered by being cast into the sea, floating on the stream to and fro with the trembling of the water, which gave to it from the effect of scaring away several sea-fret that were hovering to devour. This incident has been strikingly depicted.

* A turban is carried in stone above the graves of men only.

* The death-song of the Turkish women. The "silent slaves" are the men whose motions of distress forbid complaint in public.

And, oh! that pang where more than madness lies!

The worm that will not sleep—and never dies;
Thought of the gloomy day and ghastly night,
That dreads the darkness and yet loathes the
light,

That winds around and tears the quivering heart!
Ah! wherefore not consume it—and depart!
Woe to thee, rash and unrelenting chief!

Vainly thou heap'st the dust upon thy head,
Vainly the sackcloth o'er thy limbs dost spread:
By that same hand Abballah—Selim bled.

Now let it tear thy beard in idle grief:
Thy pride of heart, thy bride for Osman's bed,
She, whom thy Sultan had but seen to wed,

Thy Daughter's dead!
Hope of thine age, thy twilight's lonely beam,
The Star hath set that shone on Helle's stream,
What quenched its ray?—the blood that thou hast shed!

Hark! to the hurried question of Despair:
"Where is my child?"—an Echo answers—
"Where?"

XXVIII.

Within the place of thousand tombs
That shine beneath, while dark above
The sad but living cypress glooms
And withers not, though branch and leaf
Are stamped with an eternal grief,
Like early unrequited Love,

One spot exists, which ever blooms,
Ere in that dusky grave—
A single rose is shading there
Its lonely lustre, meek and pale:

It looks as planted by Despair—
So white—so faint—the slightest gale
Might whirl the leaves on high;

And yet, though storms and blight assail,
And hands more rude than wintry sky
May wring it from the stem—in vain—
To-morrow sees it bloom again:

The stalk some spirit gently rears,
And waters with celestial founts;
For well may maids of Helle deem
That this can be no earthly flower,

Which mocks the tempest's withering hour.

And buds unshelter'd by a bower;
Nor droops, though Spring refuse her shower,
Nor woos the summer beam:
To let the livelong night there sings
A bird unseen—but not remote:

Invisible his airy wings,
But soft as harp that Henri strings
His long entrancing note!

It were the Bulbul: but his throat,
Though mournful, pours not such a strain:
For they who listen cannot leave
The spot, but linger there and grieve,

As if they loved in vain!
And yet so sweet the tears they shed,
'Tis sorrow so unmix'd with dread,

They scarce can bear the morn to break
That melancholy spell,
And longer yet would weep and wake,

He sings so wild and well!
But when the day-blush bursts from high,
Expires that magic melody.

And some have been who could believe
(So fondly youthful dreams deceive,
Yet harsh be they that blame),

That note so piercing and profound
Will shape and syllable its sound
Into Zuleika's name.

'T is from her cypress summit heard,
That melts in air the liquid word:
'T is from her lowly virgin earth
That white rose takes its tender birth.

There late was laid a marble stone;
Ere saw it placed—the Morrow gone!
It was no mortal arm that bore
That deep fix'd pillow to the shore;

For there, as Helle's legends tell,
Next morn 't was found where Selim fell;
Lash'd by the tumbling tide, whose wave
Denied his bones a holier grave:

And there by night, reclined, 't is said,
Is seen a ghastly turban'd head:
And hence extended by the billow,
'T is named the "Pirate-phantom's pillow!"

Where first it lay that morning flower
Hath flourish'd; flourisheth this hour,
Alone and dewy, coldly pure and pale;

As weeping Beauty's cheek at Sorrow's tale!

"I came to the place of my birth, and cried 'The friends of my youth, where are they?' and an Echo answered,
'Where are they?'—From an Arabic MS. The above question from which the lines in the text is taken must be simply familiar to every reader: it is given in the first annotation, p. 56, of "The Pleasures of Memory;" a poem so well known as to render a reference almost superfluous; but to those pages all will be delighted to recur.

"And airy tongues that exhale men's names."—MILTON.
For a belief that the souls of the dead inhabit the form of birds, we need not travel to the East. Lord Lyttelton's ghost story, the belief of the Duchess of Kindal, that George I. flew into her window in the shape of a raven (see Oxford's Memoirs discrepancies, and many other instances bring this superstition nearer home. The most singular was the whim of a Worcester lady, who, believing her daughter to exist in the shape of a singing bird, literally furnished her pew in the cathedral with cages full of the kind; and as she was rich, and a benefactor in beautifying the church, no objection was made to her harmless folly.

THE CORSAIR:

A Tale.

"— I sent pensées in lui dormir non pousse."

YOUNG, (Monsieur de la Roche, act. I.)

TO THOMAS MOORE, ESQ.

MY DEAR MOORE,

I DEDICATE to you the last production with which I shall trespass on public patience, and your indulgence, for some years; and I own that I feel anxious to avail myself of this latest and only opportunity of adorning my pages with a name, consecrated by unshaken public principle, and the most undoubted and various talents. While Ireland ranks you among the firmest of her patriots; while you stand alone the first of her bards in her estimation, and Britain repeats and ratifies the decree, permit me, whose only regret, since our first acquaintance, has been the years he had lost before it commenced, to add the humble but sincere suffrage of friendship to the voice of more than one nation. It will at least prove to you, that I have neither forgotten the gratification derived from your society, nor abandoned the prospect of its reward, whenever your leisure or inclination allows you to atone to your friends for too long an absence. It is said among those friends, I trust truly, that you are engaged in the composition of a poem whose scene will be laid in the East: none can do those scenes so much justice. The wrongs of your own country, the magnificent and fiery spirit of her sons, the beauty and feeling of her daughters, may there be found; and Collins, when he denominated his Oriental his Irish Eclogues, was not aware how true, at least, was a part of his parallel. Your imagination will create a warmer sun, and less clouded sky; but wildness, tenderness, and originality are part of your national claim of Oriental descent, to which you have already thus far proved your title more clearly than the most zealous of your country's antiquarians.

May I add a few words on a subject on which all men are supposed to be fluent, and none agreeable?—Self. I have written much, and published more than enough to demand a longer silence than I now meditate; but, for some years to come, it is my intention to tempt no further the award of "Gods, men, nor columns." In the present composition I have attempted not the most difficult, but, perhaps, the best adapted measure to our language, the good old and now neglected heroic couplet. The stanza of Spenser is perhaps too slow and dignified for narrative; though, I confess, it is the measure most after my own heart: Scott alone, of the present generation, has hitherto completely triumphed over the fatal facility of the octosyllabic verse; and this is not the least victory of his fertile and mighty genius: in blank verse, Milton, Thomson, and our dramatists, are the beacons that shine along the deep, but warn us from the rough and barren rock on which they are kindled. The heroic couplet is not the most popular measure certainly; but as I did not deviate into the other from a wish to flatter what is called public opinion, I shall quit it without further apology, and take my chance once more with that versification, in which I have hitherto published nothing but compositions whose former circulation is part of my present, and will be of my future, regret.

With regard to my story, and stories in general, I should have been glad to have rendered my personages more perfect and amiable, if possible, inasmuch as I have been sometimes criticised, and considered no less responsible for their deeds and qualities than if all had been personal. Be it so—if I have deviated into the gloomy vanity of "drawing from self," the pictures are probably like, since they are unfavorable; and if not, those who know me are undeceived, and those who do not, I have little interest in undeceiving. I have no particular desire that any but my acquaintance should think the author better than the beings of his imagining; but I cannot help a little surprise, and perhaps amusement, at some odd critical exceptions in the present instance, when I see several bards (far more deserving I allow) in very reputable plight, and quite exempted from all participation in the faults of those heroes, who, nevertheless, might be found with little more morality than "The Giaour," and perhaps—but no—I must admit Childo Harold to be a very repulsive personage; and as to his identity, those who like it must give him whatever "alias" they please.

If, however, it were worth while to remove the impression, it might be of some service to me, that the man who is alike the delight of his readers and his friends, the poet of all circles, and the idol of his own, permits me here and elsewhere to subscribe myself,

Most truly,

And affectionately,

His obedient servant,

Byron

January 2, 1816.

The Corsair.*

CANTO THE FIRST

"----- nessun maggior dolore,
Che ricordarsi del tempo felice
Nella miseria.-----" - DANTÈ

I.

"O'er the glad waters of the dark blue sea,
 Our thoughts as boundless, and our souls as free,
 Far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam,
 Survey our empire, and behold our home!
 These are our realms, no limits to their sway—
 Our flag the sceptre all who meet obey.
 Ours the wild life in tumult still to range
 From toil to rest, and joy in every change.
 Oh, who can tell? not thou, luxurious slave!
 Whose soul would sicken o'er the heaving wave;
 Not thou, vain lord of wantonness and ease!
 Whom slumber soothes not—pleasure cannot please—

Oh, who can tell, save he whose heart hath tried,
 And danced in triumph o'er the waters wide,
 The exulting sense—the pulse's maddening play,
 That thrills the wanderer of that trackless way?
 That for itself can woo the approaching night,
 And turn what some deem danger to delight;
 That seeks what cravens shun with more than seal,
 And where the feeblar faint can only feel—
 Feel—to the rising beam's luridst core,
 Its hope awaken and its pride exalt;
 No dread of death if with us die our foes—
 Save that it seems even duller than repose:
 Come when it will—we snatch the life of life—
 When lost—what rocks it!—by disease or strife?
 Let him who crawls enamored of decay,
 Cling to his couch, and sicken years away;
 Heave his thick breath, and shake his paled head;
 Ours—the fresh turf, and not the feverish bed.
 While gasp by gasp he falters forth his soul,
 Ours with one pang—one bound—escapes control.
 His corse may boast its urn and narrow cave,
 And they who loath'd its life may gild his grave:
 Ours are the tears, though few, sincerely shed,
 When Ocean shrouds and sepulchres our dead.
 For us, even banquets fond regret supply
 In the red cup that crowns our memory;
 And the brief epitaph in danger's day,
 When those who win at length divide the prey,
 And cry, Remembrance saddening o'er each brow,
 How had the brave who fell exulted so!"

II.

Such were the notes that from the Pirate's tale,
Around the kindling watch-fire rang the while:
Each rose the sounds that thrill'd the rocks along,
And unto each as rugged as himself a song!
In scattered groups upon the golden sand,
They gazed, or conversed, or whet the brand:
Select the arms to each his blade assign,
And careless eyes the blood that dims its shine;
Repair the boat, replace the helm or oar,
While others straggling muse along the shore;
For the wild bird the sunny upland set,
Or spread beneath the sun the dripping net;
Gaze where some distant sail a speck supplies,
With all the thirsting eye of Enterprise;
Tell o'er the tales of many a night of toil,
And marvel where they next shall seize a spoil:

No matter where—their chief's allotment this;
 Theirs, to believe no prey nor plan amiss.
 But who that CHIEF? His name on every shore
 Is famed and feared—they ask and know no more.
 With these he mingles not but to command;
 Few are his words, but keen his eye and hand.
 Ne'er seasons he with mirth their jovial morn,
 But they forgive his silence for his prowess shown.
 Ne'er for him lip the purpling cup is still,
 That goblet passes him untasted still—
 And for his fare—the rudest of his crew
 Would that, in turn, have pass'd untasted too;
 Earth's coarsest bread, the garden's homeliest roots,
 And scarce the summer luxury of fruits,
 His short repast in humbleness supply
 With all a hermit's board would scarce deny.
 But while he shuns the grosser joys of sense,
 His mind seems nourish'd by that abstinence.
 "Steer to that shore!"—they sail. "Do this!"—
 It is done:

"Now form and follow me!"—the spoil is won.
Thus prompt his accents and his actions still,
And all obey and few inquire his will;
To such, brief answer and contemptuous eye
Convey reproof, nor further deign reply.

III.

"A sail!—a sail!"—a promised prize to Hope!
Her nation—flag—how speaks the telescope?
No prize, alas!—but yet a welcome sail—
The blood-red signal glisters in the gloam.
She ours—she ours—she ours—turning bark—
Blow fair, thou breeze—the anchors are the dark.
Already doubled is the cape—our bay
Receives that prow which proudly spurns the spray.
Her gloriously her gallant course she goes!—
Her white wings flying—never from her face—
She walks the waters like a thing of life,
And seems to dare the elements to strife.
Who would not brave the battle-fire—the wreck—
To move the monarch of her peopled deck?

IV.

Hoarse o'er her side the rustling cable rings;
The sails are furld; and anchoring round she swings;
And gathering loiterers on the land discern
Her boat descending from the latticed stern.
'T is manned—the oars keep concert to the strand,
Till grates her keel upon the shallow sand.
Hail to the welcome shout!—the friendly speech!
When hand grasps hand uniting on the beach;
The smile, the question, and the quick reply,
And the heart's promise of festivity.

V.

The tidings spread, and gathering grows the crowd;
The hum of voices, and the laughter loud,
And woman's gentler anxious tone is heard—
Friends'—husbands'—lovers' names in each dear
word:

"Oh! are they safe? we ask not of success—
But shall we see them? will their accents bless?
From where the battle roars—the billows chafe—
They doubtless boldly did—but who are safe?
Here let them haste to gladden and surprise,
And kiss the doubt from these delighted eyes!"

VI

"Where is our chief? for him we bear report—
And doubt that joy—which hails our coming—short;
Yet thus sincere—'t is cheering, though so brief;
But, Juan! instant guide us to our chief:

hours' sail of the continent, and the reader must be kind enough to take the wind as I have often found it.

* The time in this poem may seem too short for the occurrences, but the whole of the Aegean isles are within a few

Our greeting paid, we 'll feast on our return,
And all shall learn what each may wish to learn."
Ascending slowly by the rock-hewn way,
To where his watch-tower beetles o'er the bay,
By bushy brake, and wild flowers blossoming,
And freshness breathing from each silver spring,
Whose scatter'd streams from granite basins burst,
Leap into life, and sparkling woo your thirst;
From crag to cliff they mount—Near yonder cave,
What lonely straggler looks along the wave?
In pensive posture leaning on the brand,
Not off a resting-staff to that red hand;
"Tis he—'tis Conrad—here—as wont—alone;
On—Juan!—on—and make our purpose known.
The bark he views—and tell him we would greet
His ear with tidings be must quickly meet:
We dare not yet approach—thou know'st his mood,
When strange or uninvited steps intrude."

VII.

Him Juan sought, and told of their intent;—
He spake not—but a sign express'd assent.
These Juan calls—they come—to their salute
He bends him slightly, but his lips are mute.
"These letters, Chief, are from the Greek—the spy,
Who still proclaims our spoil or peril nigh:
Whate'er his tidings, we can well report Much that"—"Peace, peace!"—he cuts their prating short.

Wondering they turn, abash'd, while each to each
Conjecture whispers in his muttering speech:
They watch his glance with many a stealing look,
To gather how that eye the tidings took;
But, this as if he guess'd, with head aside,
Perchance from some emotion, doubt, or pride,
He read the scroll—"My tablets, Juan, hark—
Where is Gonzalvo?"

"There let him stay—to him this order bear—
Back to your duty—for my course prepare;
Myself this enterprise to-night will share."
"To-night, Lord Conrad?"

"Ay! at set of sun:
The breeze will freshen when the day is done.
My corselet, cloak—one hour and we are gone.
Sling on thy bugle—see that free from rust
My carbine-lock springs worthy of my trust;
Be the edge sharpen'd of my boarding-brand,
And give its guard more room to fit my hand.
This let the armorer with speed dispose;
Last time, it more fatigued my arm than foe:
Mark that the signal-gun be duly fired,
To tell us when the hour of stay 's expired."

VIII.

They make obeisance, and retire in haste,
Too soon to seek again the watery waste:
Yet they repine not—so that Conrad guides;
And who dare question aught that he decides?
That man of loneliness and mystery,
Scarce seen to smile, and seldom heard to sigh;
Whose name appalls the fiercest of his crew,
And tints each swarthy cheek with sallower hue;
Still sways their souls with that commanding art
That dazzles, leads, yet chills the vulgar heart.
What is that spell, that thus his lawless train
Confess and envy, yet oppose in vain?
What should it be, that thus their faith can bind?
The power of Thought—the magic of the Mind!
Link'd with success, assumed and kept with skill,
That moulds another's weakness to its will:
Wields with their hands, but, still to these unknown,
Makes even their mightiest deeds appear his own.
Such hath it been—shall be—beneath the sun
The many still must labor for the one!
'Tis Nature's doom—but let the wretch who toils
Accuse not, hate not him who wears the spoils.

Oh! if he knew the weight of splendid chains,
How light the balance of his humbler pains!

IX.

Unlike the heroes of each ancient race,
Demons in act, but Gods at least in face,
In Conrad's form seems little to admire,
Though his dark eyebrow shades a glance of fire:
Robust but not Herculean—to the sight
No giant frame sets forth his common height;
Yet, in the whole, who paused to look again,
Saw more than marks the crowd of vulgar men;
They gaze and marvel how—and still confess
That thus it is, but why they cannot guess.
Sunburnt his cheek, his forehead high and pale
The sable curls in wild profusion fell;
And oft perforce his rising lip reveals
The haughtier thought it curbs, but scarce conceals.
Though smooth his voice, and calm his general
mien,

Still seems there something he would not have seen:
His features' deepening lines and varying hue
At times attracted, yet perplex'd the view,
As if within that murkiness of mind
Work'd feelings fearful, and yet undefined:
Such might it be—that none could truly tell—
Too close inquiry his stern glance would quell.
There breathe but few whose aspect might defy
The full encounter of his searching eye:
He had the skill, when Cunning's gaze would seek
To probe his heart and watch his changing cheek,
At once the observer's purpose to espy,
And on himself roll back his scrutiny,
Lest he to Conrad rather should betray
Some secret thought, than drag that chief 's to-day.
There was a laughing Devil in his smile,
That raised emotions both of rage and fear;
And where his frown of hatred darkly fell,
Hope withering died—and Mercy sigh'd farewell!

X.

Slight are the outward signs of evil thought,
Within—within—'t was there the spirit wrought!
Love shows all changes—Hate, Ambition, Guile,
Betray no further than the bitter smile;
The lip's least curl, the lightest paleness thrown
Along the govern'd aspect, speak alone
Of deeper passions; and to judge their mien,
He, who would see, must be himself unseen.
Then—with the hurried tread, the upward eye,
The clenched hand, the pause of agony,
That listens, starting, lest the step too near Approach intrusive on that mood of fear:
Then—with each feature working from the heart,
With feelings loosed to strengthen—not depart:
That rise—convulse—contend—that freeze or glow,
Flush in the cheek, or damp upon the brow;
Then—Stranger! if thou canst, and tremblest not,
Behold his soul—the rest that soothes his lot!
Mark how that lone and blighted bosom hears
The soothing thought of exorcised years!
Behold—but who hath seen, or e'er shall see,
Man as himself—the secret spirit free?

XI.

Yet was not Conrad thus by Nature sent
To lead the guilty—guilt's worst instrument—
His soul was changed, before his deeds had driven
Him forth to war with man and forfeit heaven.
Warp'd by the world in Disappointment's school,
In words too wise, in conduct there a fool;
Too firm to yield, and far too proud to stoop,
He cursed those virtues as the cause of ill,
And not the traitors who betray'd him still;
Nor deem'd that gifts bestowed on better men
Had left him joy, and means to give again.

"My own Medora," says thy song is said—"

"In Conto's advance wouldst thou have 'I glad'?"

THE CORSAIR.—Page 75

Fear'd—dread'd—baff'd—are youth had lost her fires,
He hated men too much to feel remorse,
And thought the voice of wrath a sacred call,
To pay the injuries of some on all.
He knew himself a villain—but he deem'd
The rest no better than the thing he seem'd;
And scorn'd the best as hypocrites who hid
Those deeds the bolder spirit plainly did.
He knew himself detested, but he knew
The hearts that loath'd him, crouch'd and dreaded too.

Love, wild, and strange, he stood alike exempt
From all affection and from all contempt:
His name could sadden, and his acts surprise;
But they that fear'd him dared not to despise:
Mac spurns the worm, but pauses ere he wake
The slumbering venom of the folded snake:
The first may turn—but not avenge the blow;
The last expires—but leaves no living foe;
Fast to the doom'd offender's form it clings,
And he may crush—not conquer—still it stings!

XII.

Mens are all evil—quivering round his heart,
The softer feeling would not yet depart;
Oft could he sneer at others as beguiled
By passions worthy of a fool or child;
Yet grieve that passion vainly still he strove,
And even in him it asks the name of Love!
Yes, it was love—unchangeable—unchanged,
Oft but for one from whom he never ranged;
Though fairest captives daily met his eye,
He shun'd, nor sought, but coldly pass'd them by;
Though many a heavy droop'd in prison'd bower,
None ever sooth'd his most unguarded hour.
—It was Love—if thoughts of tenderness,
Met in temptation, strengthen'd by distress,
Remov'd by absence, firm in every clime,
And yet—oh, more than all!—unfird by time;
Which nor defeated hope, nor baffled will,
Could render sullen were she near to smile,
Nor rage could fire, nor sickness fret to vent
Her one murmur of his discontent;
Which still would meet with joy, with calmness part.

But that his look of grief should reach her heart;
Which nought removed, nor menaced to remove—
That he love in mortals—this was love!
He was a villain—ay, reproaches shower
On him—but not the passion, nor its power,
Which only proved, all other virtues gone,
That guilt itself could quench this loveliest one!

XIII.

He pass'd a moment—till his hastening men
Sho'd the first winding downward to the glen.
Strange tidings!—many a peril have I pass'd,
I know I why this next appears the last!
I saw my heart's treacher, but must not fear,
I saw my followers and me falter here.
I rush to meet, but sorer doom'd to wait
Till here they hunt as to undotted fate;
I see my men but hold, and Fortune smile,
I see my faithful men for our funeral pile.
I see them slumber—possible be their dreams!
I see them slumber with each brilliant beam
Of the sun's light (that blow, thou breeze!)
I see them slumber, the warriors of the sea.
I see my shaking heart,
I see them more than thou art!
I see them where all are brave!
I see them seek to save,
I see them with brutes we share,
I see them to despair,
I see my nobler hope
I see them to escape;

Long have I had them—not to vainly bleed:
No medium now—we perish or succeed;
So let it be—it irks not me to die;
But thus to urge them whence they cannot fly.
My lot hath long had little of my care,
But chafes my pride thus baffled in the snare:
Is this my skill? my craft? to set at last
Hope, power, and life upon a single cast?
Oh, Fate!—accuse thy folly, not thy fate!
She may redeem thee still, nor yet too late."

XIV.

Thus with himself communion held he, till
He reach'd the summit of his tower-crown'd hill:
There at the portal paused—for wild and soft
He heard those accents never heard too oft;
Through the high lattice far yet sweet they rung,
And these the notes his bird of beauty sang:

1.

"Deep in my soul that tender secret dwells,
Lonely and lost to light for evermore,
Save when to thine my heart responsive swells,
Then trembles into silence as before.

2.

"There, in its centre, a sepulchral lamp
Burns the slow flame, eternal—but unseen;
Which not the darkness of despair can damp,
Though vain its ray as it had never been.

3.

"Remember me—Oh! pass not thou my grave
Without one thought whose relics there recline;
The only pang my bosom dare not brave
Must be to find forgetfulness in thine.

4.

"My fondest—faintest—latest accents bear—
Grief for the dead not virtue can reprove;
Then give me all I ever ask'd—a tear,
The first—last—sole reward of so much love!"

He pass'd the portal—cross'd the corridor,
And reach'd the chamber as the strain gave o'er:
"My own Medora! sure thy song is sad—"

"In Conrad's absence wouldst thou have it glad?
Without thine ear to listen to my lay,
Still must my song my thoughts, my soul betray:
Still must each accent to my bosom suit,
My heart unhus'd—although my lips were mute!
Oh! many a night on this lone couch reclined,
My dreaming fear with storms hath wing'd the wind,
And deem'd the breath that faintly fann'd thy sail
The murmuring prelude of the ruder gale;
Though soft, it seem'd the low prophetic dirge,
That mourn'd thee floating on the savage surge;
Still would I rise to rouse the beacon fire,
Lost spiles less true should let the blaze expire;
And many a restless hour outwatch'd each star,
And morning came—and still thou wert afar.
Oh! how the chill blast on my bosom blew,
And day broke dreary on my troubled view,
And still I gazed and gazed—and not a prow
Was granted to my tears—my truth—my vow!
At length—'t was noon—I hail'd and blest the mast
That met my sight—it near'd—Alas! it pass'd!
Another came—Oh God! 't was thine at last!
Would that those days were over! wilt thou ne'er,
My Conrad! learn the joys of peace to share?
Sure thou hast more than wealth, and many a home
As bright as this invites us not to roam:
Thou know'st it is not peril that I fear,
I only tremble when thou art not here;
Then not for mine, but that far dearer life,
Which flies from love and languishes for strife—"

How strange that heart, to me so tender still,
Should war with nature and its better will!"

"Yea, strange indeed—that heart hath long been changed;

Worm-like 't was trampled—adder-like avenged,
Without one hope on earth beyond thy love,
And scarce a glimpse of mercy from above.
Yet the same feeling which thou dost condemn,
My very love to thee is hate to them,
So closely mingling here, that disentrined,
I cease to love thee when I love mankind:
Yet dread not this—the proof of all the past
Assures the future that my love will last;
But—oh, Medora! nerve thy gentler heart:
This hour again—but not for long—we part."

"This hour we part!—my heart foreboded this:
Thus ever fade my fairy dreams of bliss.
This hour—it cannot be—this hour away!
Yon bark hath hardly anchor'd in the bay:
Her consort still is absent, and her crew
Have need of rest before they toil anew:
My love! thou mock'st my weakness; and wouldst steel

My breast before the time when it must feel;
But trifle now no more with my distress,
Such mirth hath less of play than bitterness.
Be silent, Conrad!—dearest! come and share
The feast these hands delighted to prepare;
Light toll! to cull and dress thy frugal fare!
See, I have pluck'd the fruit that promised best,
And where not sure, perplex'd, but pleased, I guess'd
At such as seem'd the fairest; thence the hill
My steps have wound to try the coolest rill;
Yes! thy sherbet-to-night will sweetly flow,
See how it sparkles in its vase of snow!
The grape's gay juice thy bosom never cheers:
Thou more than Moslem when the cup appears:
Think not I mean to chide—for I rejoice
What others deem a penance is thy choice.
But come, the board is spread; our silver lamp
Is trimm'd, and heeds not the sirocco's damp:
Then shall my handmaids while the time along,
And join with me the dance, or wake the song;
Or my guitar, which still thou lov'st to hear,
Shall soothe or lull—or, should it vex thine ear,
We'll turn the tale, by Ariosto told,
Of fair Olympia loved and left of old."

Why, thou wert worse than he who broke his vow

To that lost damsel, shouldst thou leave me now;
Or even that traitor chief—I've seen thee smile,
When the clear sky show'd Ariadne's Isle,
Which I have pointed from these cliffs the while:
And thus, half sportive, half in fear, I said,
Lest time should raise that doubt to more than dread,

Thus Conrad, too, will quit me for the main;
And he deceived me—for he came again!"

"Again—again—and oft again—my love!
If there be life below, and hope above,
He will return—but now, the moments bring
The time of parting with redoubled wing:
The why—the where—what boots it now to tell?
Since all must end in that wild word—farewell!
Yet would I fain—did time allow—disclose—
Fear not—these are no formidable foes;
And here shall watch a more than wonted guard,
For sudden siege and long defence prepared:
Nor be thou lonely—though thy lord's away,
Our matrons and thy handmaids with thee stay;
And this thy comfort—that, when next we meet,
Security shall make repose more sweet."

List!—'t is the bugle—"Juan shrilly blew—
"One kiss—one more—another—Oh! Adieu!"

She rose—she sprung—she clung to his embrace,
Till his heart heaved beneath her hidden face:
He dared not raise to his that deep-blue eye,
Which downcast droop'd in tearless agony.
Her long fair hair lay floating o'er his arms,
In all the wildness of dishevell'd charms;
Scarce beat that bosom where his image dwelt
So full—that feeling seem'd almost unfeelt!
Hark—peals the thunder of the signal-gun!
It told 't was sunset—and he cursed that sun.
Again—again—that form he madly press'd,
Which mutely clasp'd, imploringly caress'd!
And tottering to the couch his bride he bore,
One moment gaz'd—as if to gaze no more:
Felt that for him earth held but her alone,
Kiss'd her cold forehead—turned—!s Conrad gone?

XV.

"And is he gone?"—on sudden solitude
How oft that fearful question will intrude!
"T was but an instant past—and here he stood!
And now"—without the portal's porch she rush'd,
And then at length her tears in freedom gush'd;
Big—bright—and fast, unknown to her they fell;
But still her lips refused to send—"Farewell!"
For in that word—that fatal word—how'er
We promise—hope—believe—there breathes despair.

O'er every feature of that still, pale face,
Had sorrow fixed what time can ne'er erase:
The tender blue of that large loving eye
Grew frozen with its gaze on vacancy,
Till—Oh, how far!—it caught a glimpse of him,
And then it flow'd—and phrenzied seem'd to swim,
Through those long, dark, and glistening lashes

With drops of sadness oft to be renew'd.
"He's gone!"—against her heart that hand is driven,
Convulsed and quick—then gently raised to heaven:
She look'd and saw the heaving of the main;
The white sail set—she dared not look again;
But turn'd with sickening soul within the gate—
"It is no dream—and I am desolate!"

XVI.

From crag to crag descending, swiftly sped
Stern Conrad down, nor once he turn'd his head;
But shrunk when'er the windings of his way
Forced on his eye what he would not survey,
His lone but lovely dwelling on the steep,
That hail'd him first when homeward from the deep:
And she—the dim and melancholy star,
Whose ray of beauty reach'd him from afar,
On her he must not gaze, he must not think,
There he might rest—but on Destruction's brink:
Yet once almost he stopp'd—and nearly gave
His fate to chance, his projects to the wave:
But no—it must not be—a worthy chief
May melt, but not betray to woman's grief.
He sees his bark, he notes how fair the wind,
And sternly gathers all his might of mind:
Again he hurries on—and as he hears
The clang of tumult vibrate on his ears,
The busy sounds, the bustle of the shore,
The shout, the signal, and the dashing oar;
As marks his eye the seabor on the mast,
The anchor rise, the sails unfurling fast,
The waving kerchiefs of the crowd that urge
That mute adieu to those who stem the surge;
And more than all, his blood-red flag aloft,
He marvel'd how his heart could seem so soft.
Fire in his glance, and wildness in his breast,
He feels of all his former self posset;

He bounds—he flies—until his footsteps reach
The verge where ends the cliff, begins the beach,
There checks his speed; but pauses less to breathe
The breezy freshness of the deep beneath,
Than there his wonted staller step renew:
Nor rush, disturb'd by haste, to vulgar view:
For well had Conrad learn'd to curb the crowd,
By arts that veil, and oft preserve the proud;
His was the lofty port, the distant mien,
That seems to shun the sight—and awes if seen:
The solemn aspect, and the high-born eye,
That checks low mirth, but lacks not courtesy;
All these he wielded to command ~~men~~;
But where he wish'd to win, so well unbent,
That kindness cancell'd fear in those who heard,
And others' gifts show'd mean beside his word,
When echo'd to the heart as from his own
His deep yet tender melody of tone:
But such was foreign to his wonted mood,
He cared not what he soften'd, but subdued:
The evil passions of his youth had made
Him value less who loved—than what obey'd.

XVII.

Around him mustering ranged his ready guard.
Before him Juan stands—"Are all prepared?"

"They are—nay more—embark'd: the latest boat Waits but my chief—"

"My sword, and my capote."
Soon firmly girded on, and lightly slung,
His belt and cloak were o'er his shoulders hung:
"Call Pedro here!" He comes—and Conrad bends,
With all the courtesy he deign'd his friends;
"Receive these tablets, and peruse with care,
Words of high trust and truth are graven there;
Double the guard, and when Anselmo's bark
Arrives, let him alike these orders mark:
In three days (serve the breeze) the sun shall shine
On our return—till then all peace be thine!"
This said, his brother Pirate's hand he wrung,
Then to his boat with haughty gesture sprung.
Flash'd the dipt oars, and sparkling with the stroke,
Around the waves' phosphoric^{*} brightness broke;
They gain the vessel—on the deck he stands,—
Shrieks the shrill whistle—ply the busy hands—
He marks how well the ship her helm obeys,
How gallant all her crew—and deigns to praise.
His eyes of pride to young Gonsalvo turn—
Why doth he start, and inly seem to mourn?
Alas! those eyes beheld his rocky tower,
And live a moment o'er the parting hour;
She—his Medora—did she mark the prow?
Ah! never loved he half so much as now!
But much must yet be done ere dawn of day—
Again he mans himself and turns away;
Down to the cabin with Gonsalvo bends,
And there unfolds his plan—his means—and ends:
Before them burns the lamp, and spreads the chart,
And all that speaks and aids the naval art;
They to the midnight watch protract debate;
To anxious eyes what hour is ever late?
Meantime, the steady breeze serenely blew,
And fast and falcon-like the vessel flew:
Pass'd the high headlands of each clustering isle,
To gain their port—long—long ere morning smile:
And soon the night-glass through the narrow bay
Discovers where the Pacha's galleys lay.
Count they each sail—and mark how there surprise
The lights in vain o'er heedless Moslem abode.
Secure, unnoted, Conrad's prow pass'd by,
And anchor'd where his ambush meant to lie;

Screen'd from espy by the jutting cape,
That rears on high its rude fantastic shape.
Then rose his hand to duty—not from sleep—
Equipp'd for deeds alike on land or deep;
While lean'd their leader o'er the fretting flood,
And calmly talk'd—and yet he talk'd of blood!

CANTO THE SECOND.

"Conosco i dubiosi desiri?"—DANTE.

I.

IN Coron's bay floats many a galley light,
Through Coron's lattices the lamps are bright,
For Seyd, the Pacha, makes a feast to-night:
A feast for promised triumph yet to come,
When he shall drag the fetter'd Rovers home;
This bath he sworn by Allah and his word,
And faithful to his firman and his word,
His summon'd prowls collect along the coast,
And great the gathering crews, and loud the boast;
Already shared the captives and the prize,
Though far the distant foe they thus despise;
'Tis but to sail—no doubt to-morrow's Sun
Will see the Pirates bound—their haven won!
Meantime the watch may slumber, if they will,
Nor only wake to war, but dreaming kill.
Though all, who can, disperse on shore and seek
To flesh their glowing valor on the Greek;
How well such deed becomes the turban'd brave—
To bare the sabre's edge before a slave!
Infest his dwelling—but forbear to slay,
Their arms are strong, yet merciful to-day,
And do not deign to smite because they may!
Unless some gay caprice suggests the blow,
To keep in practice for the coming foe.
Revel and rout the evening hours beguile,
And they who wish to wear a head must smile;
For Moslem mouths produce their choicest cheer,
And hoard their curses, till the coast is clear.

II.

High in his hall reclines the turban'd Seyd;
Around—the bearded chiefs he came to lead.
Removed the banquet, and the last pillow—
Forbidden draughts, 'tis said, he dared to quaff,
Though to the rest the sober berry's juice†
The slaves bear round for rigid Moslems' use;
The long chibouques‡ dissolving cloud supply,
While dance the Almas § to wild minstrelsy.
The rising morn will view the chiefs embark;
But waves are somewhat treacherous in the dark:
And revellers may more securely sleep
On silken couch than o'er the rugged deep:
Feast there who can—nor combat till they must,
And less to conquest than to Korans trust:
And yet the numbers crowded in his host
Might warrant more than even the Pacha's boast.

III.

With cautious reverence from the outer gate
Slow stalks the slave, whose office there to wait,
Bows his bent head—his hand salutes the door,
Ere yet his tongue the trusted tidings bore:
"A captive Dervise, from the pirate's nest
Escaped, is here—himself would tell the rest."||

* By night, particularly in a warm latitude, every stroke of the oar, every motion of the boat or ship, is followed by a slight flash like sheet lightning from the water.

† Coffee. ‡ "Chibouques" pipes. § Dancing girls.
|| It has been observed, that Conrad's entering disguised as a spy is out of nature. Perhaps so. I find something not

He took the sign from Seyd's assenting eye,
And led the holy man in silence nigh.
His arms were folded on his dark-green vest,
His step was feeble, and his look deprest;
Yet worn he seem'd of hardship more than years,
And pale his cheek with penance, not from fears.
Vow'd to his God—his sable locks he wore,
And these his lofty cap rose proudly o'er:
Around his form his loose long robe was thrown,
And wrapt a breast bestow'd on heaven alone;
Submissive, yet with self-possession mann'd;
He calmly met the curious eyes that scann'd;
And question of his coming fain would seek,
Before the Pacha's will allow'd to speak.

IV.

"Whence com'st thou, Dervise?"
"From the outlaw's den,
A fugitive—"

"Thy capture where and when?"
"From Scalanovo's port to Solo's isle,
The Salak was bound; but Allah did not smile
Upon our course—the Moslem merchant's gains
The Rovers won; our limbs have worn their chains.
I had no death to fear, nor wealth to boast,
Beyond the wandering freedom which I lost;
At length a fisher's humble boat by night
Afforded hope, and offer'd chance of flight;
I seized the hour, and find my safety here—
With thee—most mighty Pacha! who can fear?"

"How speed the outlaws? stand they well prepared,
Their plunder'd wealth, and robber's rock, to guard?
Dream they of this our preparation, doom'd
To view with fire their scorpion nest consumed?"

"Pacha! the fetter'd captive's mourning eye,
That weeps for flight, but ill can play the spy;
I only heard the reckless waters roar,
Those waves that would not bear me from the shore;
I only mark'd the glorious sun and sky,
Too bright—too blue—for my captivity;
And felt—that all which Freedom's bosom cheers,
Must break my chain before it dried my tears.
This mayst thou judge, at least, from my escape,
They little deem of aught in peril's shape;
Else vainly had I pray'd or sought the chance
That leads me here—if eyed with vigilance:
The careless guard that did not see me fly
May watch as idly when thy power is nigh.
Pacha!—my limbs are faint—and nature craves
Food for my hunger, rest from tossing waves:
Permit my absence—peace be with thee! Peace
With all around! now grant repose—release."

"Stay, Dervise! I have more to question—stay,
I do command thee—sit—dost hear?—obey!
More I must ask, and food the slaves shall bring;
Thou shalt not pine where all are banqueting:
The supper done—prepare thee to reply,
Clearly and full—I love not mystery."

"T was vain to guess what shook the pious man,
Who look'd not lovingly on that Divan;
Nor show'd high relish for the banquet prest,
And less respect for every fellow guest.
'T was but a moment's peevish hectic pass'd
Along his cheek, and tranquillized as fast:

He sat him down in silence, and his look
Resumed the calmness which before forsook:
The feast was usher'd in—but sumptuous fare
He shunn'd as if some poison mingled there.
For one so long condemn'd to toil and fast,
Methinks he strangely spares the rich repast.

"What ails thee, Dervise? eat—dost thou suppose
This feast a Christian's? or my friends thy foes?
Why dost thou shun the salt? that sacred pledge,
Which, once partaken, blunts the sabre's edge,
Makes ev'n contending tribes in peace unite,
And hated hosts seem brethren to the sight!"

"Salt seasons dainties—and my food is still
The humblest root, my drink the simplest rill;
And my stern vow and order's laws oppose
To break or mingle bread with friends or foes;
It may seem strange—if there be aught to dread,
That peril rests upon my single head;
But for thy sway—nay more—thy Sultan's throne,
I taste not bread nor banquet—save alone;
Infringed our order's rule, the Prophet's rage
To Mecca's dome might bar my pilgrimage."

"Well—as thou wilt—ascetic as thou art—
One question answer; then in peace depart.
How many?—Ha! it cannot sure be day?
What star—what sun is burning on the bay?
It shines a lake of fire!—away—away!
Ho! treachery! my guards! my scimitar!
The galleys feed the flames—and I afar!
Accursed Dervise!—these thy tidings—thou
Some villain spy—seize—cleave him—slay him
now!"

Up rose the Dervise with that burst of light,
Nor less his change of form appall'd the sight;
Up rose that Dervise—not in saintly garb,
But like a warrior bounding on his barb,
Dash'd his high cap, and tore his robe away—
Shone his mail'd breast, and flash'd his sabre's ray!
His close but glittering caque, and sable plume,
More glittering eye, and black brow's sabler gloom,
Glared on the Moslems' eyes some Afric sprite,
Whose demon death-blow left no hope for flight.
The wild confusion, and the swarthy glow
Of flames on high, and torches from below;
The shriek of terror, and the mingling yell—
For swords begin to clash, and shouts to swell—
Flung o'er that spot of earth the air of hell!
Distracted, to and fro, the flying slaves
Behold but bloody shore and fiery waves;
Nought heeded they the Pacha's angry cry,
They seize that Dervise—seize on Zatanai!
He saw their terror—check'd the first despair
That urg'd him but to stand and perish there,
Since far too early and too well obey'd,
The flame was kindled ere the signal made;
He saw their terror—from his baldric drew
His bugle—brief the blast—but shrilly blew:
'T is answer'd—"Well ye speed, my gallant crew!
Why did I doubt their quickness of career?
And deem design had left me single here?"
Sweeps his long arm—that sabre's whirling sway
Sheds fast atonement for its first delay;
Completes his fury whilst their fear begun,
And makes the many basely quail to one.
The cloven turbans o'er the chamber spread,
And scarce an arm dare rise to guard its head:

unlike it in history—"Anxious to explore with his own eyes the state of the Vandala, Majorian ventured, after disguising the color of his hair, to visit Carthage in the character of his own ambassador; and Genseric was afterwards mortified by the discovery, that he had entertained and dismissed the emperor of the Romans. Such an anecdote may be rejected as an improbable fiction; but it is a fiction which would not have been imagined unless in the life of a hero."—See Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

* The Dervises are in collars, and of different orders, as the monks.

† "Zatanai," Satan.

But who is she? whom Conrad's arms convey
From reeking pile and combat's wreck away—
Who but the one of himine dooms to plead:
The Haram queen—but still the slave of 'Sejd'!

THE CORSAIR.—Page 79.

Even Seyd, convulsed, o'erwhelm'd, with rage, surprise,
Retreats before him, though he still defies.
No craven he—and yet he dreads the blow,
So much confusion magnifies his foe!
His blazing galley still distract his sight,
He tore his beard, and frantically fled the fight;
For now the pirates pass'd the Haram gate,
And burst within—and it were death to wait:
Where wild Agamemnon shrieking—kneeling—throws

The sword aside—in vain—the blood o'erflows!
The Corsairs pouring, haste to where within Invited Conrad's flag, and the din
Of groaning victims, and wild cries for life,
Proclaim'd how well he did the work of strife.
They shout to find him grim and lonely there,
A plumed Hagar musing in his lair!
But short their greeting—shorter his reply—
"It is well—but Seyd escapes—and he must die—
Much hath been done—but more remains to do—
Their galleys blaze—why not their city too?"

V.

Quick at the word they set him each a torch,
And fire the dome from minaret to porch.
A stem delight was fir'd in Conrad's eye,
Bel sudden sunk—for on his ear the cry
Of women struck, and like a deadly knell
Knock'd at that heart unmoved by battle's yell.
"Oh! burst the Haram—wrong not on your lives
One female form—remember—see have wives,
On them such outrage Vengeance will repay;
Man is our foe, and such 'tis ours to slay!
But still we spare—must spare the weaker prey.
Oh! I forgot—but Heaven will not forgive
It as my word the helpless cease to live;
Fellow who will—I go—we yet have time
Our souls to lighten of at least a crime."
He elms the crackling stair—he bursts the door,
For feels his feet glow scorching with the floor;
His breath choked gasping with the volumed smoke,
But still from room to room his way he broke,
They scarce—they find—they save: with hasty arms
Each bears a prize of unregarded charms;
On their loud fears; sustain their sinking frames
With all the care defenceless beauty claims:
No wall could Conrad tame their fervent mood,
And check the very hands with gore imbrued.
But who is she? whom Conrad's arms convey
Toss reeking pile and combat's wreck away—
Who but the love of him he deems to bleed;
The Haram queen—but still the slave of Seyd!

VI.

Brief time had Conrad now to greet Guinare,
Fro words to reassure the trembling fair;
For in that pause compassion snatch'd from war,
The foe before retiring, fast and far,
With wonder saw their footstep's unperceiv'd,
And wonder said—then called—then withstood.
His eyes perceived, then first perceives how few,
Conquer'd with him, the Corsair's roving crew,
And blushed o'er his error, as he eyes
The man, amaz'd by panic and surprise.
"Alas! Alas! Vengeance swells the cry—
Shame accounts to me that must atone or die!
And smother'd flame and blood for blood must tell,
The sword's bloodstain show that flow'd too well—
When we were wrongs to renovated strife,
We sought for conquest strike for life.

Conrad beheld the danger—he beheld
His followers faint by freshening foes repell'd:
"One effort—one to break the circling host!"
They form—unite—charge—waver—all is lost!
Within a narrower ring compress'd, beat,
Hopeless, not heartless, strive and struggle yet—
Ah! now they fight in earnest file no more,
Hemm'd in—cut off—cleft down—and trampled
o'er;

But each strikes singly, silently, and home,
And sinks outworn rather than o'ercome,
His last faint quittance rendering with his breath,
Till the blade glimmers in the grasp of death!

VII.

But first, o'er came the rallying host to blows,
And rank to rank, and hand to hand oppose,
Guinare and all her Haram handmaids freed,
Safe in the dome of one who held their creed,
By Conrad's mandate safely were bestow'd,
And dried those tears for life and fame that flow'd:
And when that dark-eyed lady, young Guinare,
Recall'd those thoughts late wandering in despair,
Much did she marvel o'er the courtesy
That smooth'd his accents; soften'd in his eye:
"T was strange—that robber thus with gore bedew'd
Seem'd gentler than than Seyd in fondest mood.
The Pacha wou'd as if he deem'd the slave
Must seem delighted with the heart he gave;
The Corsair vow'd protection, sooth'd afright,
As if his homage were a woman's right.
"The wish is wrong—nay, worse for female—vain;
Yet much I long to view that chief again;
If but to thank for, what my fear forgot,
The life—my loving lord remember'd not!"

VIII.

And him she saw, where thickest carnage spread,
But gather'd breathing from the happier dead;
Far from his band, and battling with a host
That deem right dearly won the field he lost,
Fell'd—bleeding—baffled of the death he sought,
And snatch'd to expiate all the ill he wrought;
Preserved to linger and to live in vain,
While Vengeance ponder'd o'er new plans of pain,
And stanch'd the blood she saves to shed again—
But drop for drop, for Seyd's unglutted eye
Would doom him ever dying—ne'er to die!
Can this be he? triumphant late she saw,
When his red hand's wild gesture waved, a law!
"T is he indeed—disarm'd but undeprest,
His sole regret the life he still possess;
His wounds too slight, though taken with that will,
Which would have kiss'd the hand that then could kill.

Oh were there none, of all the many given,
To send his soul—he scarcely ask'd to heaven?
Must he alone of all retain his trash,
Who more than all had striven and struck for death?
He deeply felt—what mortal hearts must feel,
When thus reversed on faithless fortune's wheel,
For crimes committed, and the victor's threat
Of lingering tortures to repay the debt—
He deeply, darkly felt; but evil pride
That led to perpetrate—now serves to hide.
Still in his stern and self-collected mien
A conqueror's more than captive's air is seen,
Though faint with wasting toil and stiffening
wound,
But few that saw—so calmly gazed around:
Though the far shouting of the distant crowd,
Their tremors o'er, rose insolently loud, his heard by the roots, because he was obliged to quit the field."

+ Guinare, a female name; it means, literally, the flower of the pomgranate.

The better warriors who beheld him near,
Insulted not the foe who taught them fear;
And the grim guards that to his durance led,
In silence eyed him with a secret dread.

IX.

The Leech was sent—but not in mercy—there,
To note how much the life yet left could bear;
He found enough to load with heaviest chain,
And promise feeling for the wrench of pain;
To-morrow—yes—to-morrow's evening sun
Will sinking see impalement's pangs begun,
And rising with the wonted blush of morn
Behold how well or ill those pangs are borne.
Of torments this the longest and the worst,
Which adds all other agony to thirst,
That day by day death still forbears to slake,
While famish'd vultures sit around the stake.
"Oh! water—water!" smiling Hate denies
The victim's prayer—for if he drinks he dies.
This was his doom:—the Leech, the guard were gone,
And left proud Conrad fetter'd and alone.

X.

'T were vain to paint to what his feelings grew—
It even were doubtful if their victim knew.
There is a war, a chaos of the mind,
When all its elements convulsed—combined—
Lie dark and jarring with perturbed force,
And gnashing with impatient Remorse—
That juggling fiend—who never speaks before—
But cries "I warn'd thee!" when the deed is o'er.
Vain voice! the spirit burning but unbenet,
May writh—rebel—the weak alone repent!
Even in that lonely hour when most it feels,
And to itself, all—all that self reveals,
No single passion, and no ruling thought
That leaves the rest as once unseen, unsought;
But the wild prospect when the soul reviews,
All rushing through their thousand avenues.
Ambition's dreams expiring, love's regret,
Endanger'd glory, life itself beset;
The joy untasted, the contempt or hate
'Gainst those who fain would triumph in our fate;
The hopeless past, the hasting future driven
Too quickly on to guess of hell or heaven:
Deeds, thoughts, and words, perhaps remember'd
not

So keenly till that hour, but ne'er forgot;
Things light or lovely in their acted time,
But now to stern reflection each a crime;
The withering sense of evil unreveal'd,
Not cankering less because the more conceal'd—
All, in a word, from which all eyes must start,
That opening sepulchre—the naked heart
Bares with its buried woes, till Pride awake,
To snatch the mirror from the soul—and break.
Ay—Pride can veil, and Courage brave it all,—
All—all—before—beyond—the deadliest fall.
Each hath some fear, and he who least betrays,
The only hypocrite deserving praise:
Not the loud recreant wretch who boasts and flies;

But he who looks on death—and silent dies.
So steal'd by pondering o'er his far career,
He half-way meets him should he menace near!

XI.

In the high chamber of his highest tower
Sate Conrad, fetter'd in the Pacha's power.
His palace perish'd in the flame—this fort
Contain'd at once his captive and his court.
Not much could Conrad of his sentence blame,
His foe, if vanquish'd, had but shared the same:—
Alone he sate—in solitude had scorn'd
His guilty bosom, but that breast he mann'd;

80

One thought alone he could not—dared not meet—
"Oh, how these tidings will Medora greet?"
Then—only then—his clanking hands he raised,
And strain'd with rage the chain on which he gazed;

But soon he found—or feign'd—or dream'd relief,
And smiled in self-derision of his grief.
"And now come torture when it will—or may,
More need of rest to nerve me for the day!"
This said, with languor to his mat he crept,
And, whatsoever his visions, quickly slept.
'T was hardly midnight when that fray begun,
For Conrad's plans matured, at once were done:
And Havoc loathes so much the waste of time,
She scarce had left an uncommitted crime.
One hour beheld him since the tide he stemm'd—
Disguis'd—discover'd—conquering—'a'en—con-
demn'd—
A chief on land—an outlaw on the deep—
Destroying—saving—prison'd—and asleep!

XII.

He slept in calmest seeming—for his breath
Was hush'd so deep—Ah! happy if in death!
He slept—Who o'er his placid slumber bends?
His foes are gone—and here he hath no friends;
Is it some seraph sent to grant him grace?
No, 't is an earthly form with heavenly face!
His white arm raised a lamp—yet gently hid,
Lest the ray flash abruptly on the lid
Of that closed eye, which opens but to pain,
And once unclosed—but once may close again.
That form, with eye so dark, and cheek so fair,
And Auburn waves of gemm'd and braided hair;
With shape of fairy lightness—naked foot,
That shines like snow, and falls on earth as mute—
Through guards and dunest night how came it
there?

Ah! rather ask what will not woman dare?
Whom youth and pity lead like thee, Gulnare!
She could not sleep—and while the Pacha's rest
In muttering dreams yet saw his pirate-guest,
She left his side—his signet-ring she bore,
Which oft in sport adorn'd her hand before—
And with it, scarcely question'd, won her way
Through drowsy guards that must that sign obey.
Worn out with toil, and tired with changing
blows,

Their eyes had envied Conrad his repose;
And chill and nodding at the turret door,
They stretch their listless limbs, and watch no
more;

Just raised their heads to hail the signet-ring,
Nor ask or what or who the sign may bring.

XIII.

She gazed in wonder, "Can he calmly sleep,
While other eyes his fall or ravage weep?
And mine in restlessness are wandering here—
What sudden spell hath made this man so dear?
True—'t is to him my life, and more, I owe,
And me and mine he spared from worse than woe:
'T is late to think—but soft—his slumber breaks—
How heavily he sighs!—he starts—awakes!"

He raised his head—and dazzled with the light,
His eye seem'd dubious if he saw aright:
He moved his hand—the grating of his chain
Too harshly told him that he lived again.
"What is that form? if not a shape of air,
Methinks my jailer's face shows wondrous fair!"

"Pirate! thou know'st me not—but I am one,
Grateful for deeds thou hast too rarely done;
Look on me—and remember her, thy hand
Snatch'd from the flames, and thy more fearful band.

I come through darkness—and I scarce know why—
Yet not to hurt—I would not see thee die."

"If so, kind lady! thine the only eye
That would not here in that gay hope delight;
Thine is the chance—and let them use their right.
But still I thank their courtesy or thine,
That would confess me at so fair a shrine!"

Strange though it seem—yet with extremest grief
Is link'd a mirth—it doth not bring relief—
That playfulness of Sorrow ne'er beguiles,
And smiles in bitterness—but still it smiles;
And sometimes with the wisest and the best,
Till even the scaffold * echoes with their jest!
Yet not the joy to which it seems akin—
It may deceive all hearts, save that within.
Whether it was that flash'd on Conrad, now
A laughing wildness half unbent his brow;
And these his accents had a sound of mirth,
As if the last he could enjoy on earth;
Yet 'gainst his nature—for through that short life,
Few thoughts had he to spare from gloom and strife.

XIV.

"Corsair! thy doom is named—but I have power
To soothe the Fates in his weaker hour.
Thou would'st I spare—nay more—would save thee
now,
But this—time—hope—nor even thy strength allow;

But all I can, I will: at least, delay
The sentence that remits thee scarce a day.
More now were ruin—given thyself were loth
The vain attempt should bring but doom to both."

"Yes!—loth indeed:—my soul is nerved to all,
Or fall'n too low to fear a further fall:
Tempt not thyself with peril—me with hope
Of flight from foes with whom I could not cope:
Unfit to vanquish—shall I meanly fly,
The one of all my band that would not die?
Yet there is one to whom my memory clings,
Till to these eyes her own wild softness springs.
My sole resources in the path I trod
Were these—my bark—my sword—my love—my God!

The last I left in youth—he leaves me now—
And Man but works his will to lay me low.
I have no thought to mock his throne with prayer
Wrung from the coward crouching of despair;
It is enough—I breathe—and I can bear.
My sword is shaken from the worthless hand
That might have better kept so true a brand;
My bark is sunk or captive—but my love—
For her in sooth my voice would mount above:
Oh! she is all that still to earth can bind—
And this will break a heart so more than kind,
And blight a form—till time appear'd, Guinevere!
Mine eye ne'er ask'd if others were as fair."

"Thou lov'st another then?—but what to me
Is this—'t is nothing—nothing e'er can be:
But yet—thou lov'st—and—Oh! I envy those Whose hearts on hearts as faithful can repose,
Who never feel the void—the wandering thought
That sighs o'er visions—such as mine hath wrought."

"Lady—methought thy love was his, for whom
This arm redeem'd thee from a fiery tomb."

* In Sir Thomas More, for instance, on the scaffold, and Anne Boleyn, in the Tower, when, grasping her neck, she remarked, that it "was too slender to trouble the headman much." During one part of the French Revolution, it be-

"My love stern Seyd's! Oh—No—No—not my love—
Yet much this heart, that strives no more, once shrove:

To meet his passion—but it would not be.
I felt—I feel—love dwells with—with the free.
I am a slave, a favor'd slave at best,
To share his splendor, and seem very blest!
Oft must my soul the question undergo,
Of—"Dost thou love?" and burn to answer, "No!"
Oh! hard it is that fondness to sustain,
And struggle not to feel averse in vain;
But harder still the heart's recoil to bear,
And hide from one—perhaps another there.
He takes the hand I give not—nor withhold—
Its pulse nor check'd—nor quicken'd—calmly cold:
And when resign'd, it drops a lifeless weight
From one I never loved enough to hate.
No warmth these lips return by his impress,
And chill'd remembrance shudders o'er the rest.
Yes—had I ever proved that passion's zeal,
The change to hatred were at least to feel:
But still—he goes unmourn'd—returns unsought—
And oft when present—absent from my thought.
Or when reflection comes—and come it must—
I fear that henceforth 't will but bring disgust;
I am his slave—but, in despite of pride,
'T were worse than bondage to become his bride.
Oh! that this dotage of his breast would cease:
Or seek another and give mine release,
But yesterday—I could have said, to peace!
Yes—if unwonted fondness now I feign,
Remember—captive! 't is to break thy chain;
Repay the life that to thy hand I owe;
To give thee back to all and ear'd below,
To share such love as I can never know.
Farewell—morn breaks—and I must now away:
'T will cost me dear—but dread no death to-day!"

XV.

She pressed his fetter'd fingers to her heart,
And bow'd her head, and turn'd her to depart,
And noiseless as a lovely dream is gone.
And was she here? and is he now alone?
What gem hath dropp'd—and sparkles o'er his chain?
The tear most sacred, shed for others' pain,
That starts at once—bright—pure—from Pity's
mine,
Already polish'd by the hand divine!
Oh! too convincing—dangerously dear—
In woman's eye the unanswerable tear!
That weapon of her weakness she can wield,
To save, subdue—at once her spear and shield:
Avoid it—Virtue ebbes and Wisdom errs,
Too fondly gazing on that grief of hers!
What lost a world, and bade a hero fly?
The timid tear in Cleopatra's eye.
Yet be the soft triumvir's fault forgiven;
By this—how many lose not earth—but heaven!
Consign their souls to man's eternal foe,
And seal their own to spare some wanton's woe!

XVI.

'T is morn—and o'er his alter'd features play
The beams—without the hope of yesterday.
What shall he be ere night? perchance a thing,
O'er which the raven flaps her funeral wing,
By his closed eyes unheeded and unfeared;
While sets that sun, and dews of evening melt,
Chill—wet—and misty round each stiffen'd limb,
Refreshing earth—reviving all but him!

came a fashion to leave some "mot" as a legacy; and the quantity of incoherent last words spoken during that period would form a melancholy test-book of a considerable size.

CANTO THE THIRD.

"Come vedi—ancor non m'abbandona."—DANTE.

I.

Slow sinks, more lovely ere his race be run,
Along Morea's hills the setting sun;
Not, as in Northern climes, obscurely bright,
But one unclouded blaze of living light!
O'er the hush'd deep the yellow beam he throws,
Gilds the green wave, that trembles as it glows,
On old Ægina's rock, and Idra's isle.
The god of gladness sheds his parting smile:
O'er his own regions lingering, loves to shine,
Though there his altars are no more divine.
Descending fast, the mountain shadows kiss
Thy glorious gulf, unconquer'd Salamis!
Their azure arches through the long expanse
More deeply purpled meet his mellowing glance,
And tenderest tints, along their summits driven,
Mark his gay course, and own the hues of heaven;
Till, darkly shaded from the land and deep,
Behind his Delphian cliff he sinks to sleep.

On such an eve, his palest beam he cast,
When—Athens! here thy Wisest look'd his last.
How watch'd thy better none his farewell ray,
That closed their murder'd sage's^{*} latest day!
Not yet—not yet—Sol pauses on the hill—
The precious hour of parting lingers still;
But sad his light to agonizing eyes,
And dark the mountain's once delightful dyes:
Gloom o'er the lovely land he seem'd to pour,
The land, where Phœbus never frown'd before;
But ere he sank below Cithæron's head,
The cup of woe was quaff'd—the spirit fled;
The soul of him who scorn'd to fear or fly—
Who lived and died, as none can live or die!

But lo! from high Hymettus to the plain,
The queen of night asserts her silent reign.†
No murky vapor, herald of the storm,
Hides her fair face, nor girds her glowing form;
With cornices glimmering as the moonbeams play,
There the white column greets her grateful ray,
And, bright around with quivering beams beset,
Her emblem sparkles o'er the minaret:
The groves of olive scatter'd dark and wide,
Where meek Cephissus pours his scanty tide,
The cypress saddening by the sacred mosque,
The gleaming turret of the gay kiosk,‡
And, dun and sombre 'mid the holy calm,
Near Theseus' fane yon solitary palm,
All tinged with varied hues arrest the eye—
And dull were his that pass'd them heedless by.

Again the Ægean, heard no more afar,
Lulls his chafed breast from elemental war;
Again his waves in milder tints unfold
Their long array of sapphire and of gold,
Mix'd with the shades of many a distant isle,
That frown—where gentler ocean seems to smile.

^{*} Sometimes drank the hemlock a short time before sunset (the hour of execution), notwithstanding the entreaties of his disciples to wait till the sun went down.

† The twilight in Greece is much longer than in our own country; the days in winter are longer, but in summer of shorter duration.

II.

Not now my theme—why turn my thoughts to thee?
Oh! who can look along thy native sea,
Nor dwell upon thy name, whatever the tale,
So much its magic must o'er all prevail?
Who that beheld that Sun upon thee set,
Fair Athens! could thus evening face forget?
Not he—whose heart nor time nor distance frees,
Spell-bound within the clustering Cyclades!
Nor seems this homage foreign to his strain,
His Corsair's tale was once thine own domain—
Would that with freedom it were thine again!

III.

The Sun hath sunk—and, darker than the night,
Sinks with its beam upon the beacon height
Medora's heart—the third day's come and gone—
With it he comes not—sends not—faithless one!
The wind was fair though light; and storms were none.
Last eve Anselmo's bark return'd, and yet
His only tidings that they had not met!
Though wild, as now, far different were the tale
Had Conrad waited for that single sail.

The night-breeze freshens—she that day had pass'd
In watching all that Hope proclaim'd a mast;
Sadly she sat—on high—Impatience bore
At last her footsteps to the midnight shore,
And there she wander'd, heedless of the spray
That dash'd her garments oft, and warn'd a way:
She saw not—felt not this—nor dared depart,
Nor deem'd it cold—her chill was at her heart;
Till grew such certainty from that suspense—
His very sight had shock'd from life or sense!

It came at last—a sad and shatter'd boat,
Whose inmates first beheld whom first they sought;
Some bleeding—all most wretched—these the few—
Scarce knew they how escap'd—this all they knew.
In silence, darkling, each appear'd to wait
His fellow's mournful guess at Conrad's fate:
Something they would have said; but seem'd to fear
To trust their accents to Medora's ear.
She saw at once, yet sunk not—trembled not—
Beneath that grief, that loneliness of lot,
Within that meek fair form, were feelings high,
That deem'd not till they found their energy.
While yet was Hope—they soften'd—suffer'd—
wept—
All lost—that softness died not—but it slept;
And o'er its slumber rose that Strength which said,
"With nothing left to love—there's nought to dread."

'Tis more than nature's; like the burning might Delirium gathers from the fever's height.

"Silent you stand—nor would I hear you tell
What—speak not—breathe not—for I know it well—
Yet would I ask—almost my lip denies
The—quick your answer—tell me where he lies."

"Lady! we know not—scarce with life we fled;
But here is one denies that he is dead:
He saw him bound; and bleeding—but alive."

She heard no further—'t was in vain to strive—
So throbb'd each vein—each thought—till then withstood;
Her own dark soul—these words at once subdued:

‡ The kiosk is a Turkish summer-house: the palm is without the present walls of Athens, not far from the temple of Theseus, between which and the tree the wall intervenes. Cephissus' stream is indeed scanty, and Ægeus has no stream at all.

The Sun hath sunk—and, darker than the night,
Shines with its beam upon the besom'g height
Medusa's heart: the third day's come and gone—
With it he comes not—sends not—is there one!

THE CORSAIR —Page 83.

She totters—falls—and senseless had the wave
 Perchance but snatch'd her from another grave;
 But that with hands though rude, yet weeping eyes,
 They yield such aid as Pity's haste supplies:
 Dash o'er her deathlike cheek the ocean dew,
 Raise—far—sustain—till life returns anew;
 Awake her handmaids, with the matrons leave
 That fainting form o'er which they gaze and grieve;
 Then seek Anselmo's cavern, to report
 The tale too tedious—when the triumph short.

IV.

In that wild council words wax'd warm and strange,
 With thoughts of ransom, rescue, and revenge;
 All, save repose or flight: still lingering there
 Breathed Conrad's spirit, and forbade despair;
 Whate'er his fate—the breasts he form'd and led
 Will save him living, or appease him dead.
 Woe to his foes! there yet survive a few,
 Whose deeds are daring, as their hearts are true.

V.

Within the Haram's secret chamber sat
 Stern Seyd, still pondering o'er his Captive's fate;
 His thoughts on love and hate alternate dwell,
 Now with Gulnare, and now in Conrad's cell;
 Here at his feet the lovely slave reclined
 Surveys his brow—would soothe his gloom of mind;
 While many an anxious glance her large dark eye
 Seeks in its idle search for sympathy,
 His only bends in seeming o'er his beads,†
 But only views his victim as he bleeds.

"Pacha! the day is thine; and on thy crest
 Sit Triumph—Conrad taken—fall'n the rest!
 His doom is fix'd—he dies; and well his fate
 Was earn'd—yet much too worthless for thy hate:
 Methinks, a short release, for ransom told
 With all his treasure, not unwisely sold;
 Report speaks largely of his pirate board—
 Would that of this my Pacha were the lord!
 While baffled, weaken'd by this fatal fray—
 Watch'd—follow'd—he were then an easier prey;
 But once cut off—the remnant of his band
 Embark their wealth, and seek a safer strand."

"Gulnare!—if for each drop of blood a gem
 Were offer'd rich as Stamboul's diadem;
 If for each hair of his a massy mine
 Of virgin ore should supplecating shine;
 If all our Arab tales divulge or dream
 Of wealth were here—that gold should not redeem!
 It had not now redeem'd a single hour,
 But that I know him fetter'd, in my power;
 And waiting for revenge, I ponder still
 On pangs that longest rack, and latest kill."

"Nay, Seyd!—I seek not to restrain thy rage,
 Too justly moved for mercy to assuage;
 My thoughts were only to secure for thee
 His riches—thus released, he were not free:
 Disabled, shorn of half his might and band,
 His capture could but wait thy first command."

"His capture could!—and shall I then resign
 One day to him—the wretch already mine?
 Release my foe!—at whose remonstrance?—thine!
 Fair sailor!—to thy virtuous gratitude.
 That thus repays thy Giasour's relenting mood,
 Which thee and thine alone of all could spare,
 No doubt—regardless if the prize were fair,
 My thanks and praise alike are due—now hear!
 I have a counsel for thy postwar war:
 I do mistrust thee, woman! and each word
 Of thine stamps truth on all Suspicion beard.

Borne in his arms through fire from von Serat—
 Say, wert thou lingering there with him to fly?
 Thou needst not answer—thy confession speaks,
 Already reddening on thy guilty cheeks;
 Then, lovely dame, bethink thee! and beware:
 'Tis not his life alone may claim such care!
 Another word and—nay—I need no more.
 Accursed was the moment when he bore
 Thee from the flames, which better far—but no—
 I then had mourn'd thee with a lover's woe—
 Now 'tis thy lord that warns—deceitful thing!
 Know'st thou that I can clip thy wanton wing?
 In words alone I am not wont to chafe:
 Look to thyself—nor deem thy falsehood safe!"

He rose—and slowly, sternly thence withdrew,
 Rage in his eye and threats in his adieu:
 Ah! little reck'd that chief of womanhood—
 Which frowns ne'er quell'd, nor menaces subdued:
 And little deem'd he what thy heart, Gulnare!
 When soft could feel, and when incensed could dare.

His doubts appear'd to wrong—nor yet she knew
 How deep the root from whence compassion grew—
 She was a slave—from such may captives claim
 A fellow-feeling, differing but in name;
 Still half unconscious—heedless of his wrath,
 Again she ventured on the dangerous path,
 Again his rage repell'd—until arose
 That strife of thought, the source of woman's woes!

VI.

Meanwhile—long anxious—weary—still—the same
 Roll'd day and night—his soul could terror tame—
 This fearful interval of doubt and dread,
 When every hour might doom him worse than dead,
 When every step that echo'd by the gate
 Might entering lead where ears and stake await;
 When every voice that grated on his ear
 Might be the last that he could ever hear;
 Could terror tame—that spirit stern and high
 Had proved unwilling as unfit to die;
 'T was worn—perhaps decay'd—yet silent bore
 That conflict, deadlier far than all before:
 The heat of fight, the hurry of the gale,
 Leave scarce one thought inert enough to quail;
 But bound and fix'd in fetter'd solitude,
 To pine, the prey of every changing mood;
 To gaze on thine own heart; and meditate
 Irrevocable faults, and coming fate—
 Too late the last to shun—the first to mend—
 To count the hours that struggle to thine end,
 With not a friend to animate, and tell
 To other ears that death became thee well:
 Around thee foes to forge the ready lie,
 And blot life's latest scene with calumny;
 Before thee tortures, which the soul can dare,
 Yet doubts how well the shrinking flesh may bear;
 But deeply feels a single cry would shame,
 To valor's praise thy last and dearest name;
 The life thou leav'st below, denied above
 By kind monopolists of heavenly love;
 And more than doubtful paradise—thy heaven
 Of earthly hope—thy loved one from thee riven,
 Such were the thoughts that outlaw must sustain,
 And govern pangs surpassing mortal pain:
 And those sustain'd he—boots it well or ill?
 Since not to sink beneath, is something still!

VII.

The first day pass'd—he saw not her—Gulnare—
 The second—third—and still she came not there;
 But what her words avouch'd, her charms had done,
 Or else he had not seen another sun.

* The whole of this section was added in the course of printing.

† The combolo, or Mahometan rosary; the beads are in number ninety-nine.

The fourth day roll'd along, and with the night,
 Came storm and darkness in their mingling might.
 Oh! how he listen'd to the rushing deep,
 That ne'er till now so broke upon his sleep;
 And his wild spirit wilder wishes sent,
 Roused by the roar of his own element!
 Oft had he ridden on that winged wave,
 And loved its roughness for the speed it gave;
 And now its dashing echo'd on his ear,
 A long-known voice—alas! too vainly near!
 Loud sung the wind above; and, doubly loud,
 Shook o'er his turret cell the thunder-cloud;
 And flash'd the lightning by the latticed bar,
 To him more genial than the midnight star:
 Close to the glimmering grate he dragg'd his chain;
 And hoped that peril might not prove in vain.
 He raised his iron hand to Heaven, and pray'd
 One pitying flash to mar the form it made;
 His steel and impious prayer attract alike—
 The storm roll'd onward, and disdain'd to strike;
 Its peal wax'd fainter—ceased—he felt alone,
 As if some faithless friend had spurn'd his groan!

VIII.

The midnight pass'd—and to the massy door
 A light step came—it paused—it moved once more;
 Slow turns the grating bolt and sullen key:
 'T is as his heart forebode—that fair shiel
 Whate'er her sins, to him a guardian saint,
 And beauteous still as hermit's hope can paint;
 Yet changed since last within that cell she came,
 More pale her cheek, more tremulous her frame:
 On him she cast her dark and hurried eye,
 Which spoke before her accents—"Thou must die!
 Yes, thou must die—there is but one resource,
 The last—the worst—if torture were not worse."

"Lady! I look to none—my lips proclaim
 What last proclaim'd they—Conrad still the same:
 Why shouldst thou seek an outlaw's life to spare,
 And change the sentence I deserve to bear?
 Well have I earn'd—nor here alone—the meed
 Of Seyd's revenge, by many a lawless deed."

"Why should I seek? because—Oh! didst thou not Redeem my life from worse than slavery's lot?
 Why should I seek? hath misery made thee blind
 To the fond workings of a woman's mind?
 And must I say? albeft my heart rebel
 With all that woman feels, but should not tell—
 Because—despite thy crimes—that heart is moved:
 It fear'd thee—thank'd thee—pitied—madden'd—
 —loved."

Reply not, tell not now thy tale again,
 Thou lov'st another—and I love in vain:
 Though fond as mine her bosom, form more fair,
 I rush through peril which she would not dare.
 If that thy heart to hers were truly dear,
 Were I thine own—thou wert not lonely here:
 An outlaw's spouse—and leave her lord to roam!
 What hath such gentle dame to do with home?
 But speak not now—o'er thine and o'er my head
 Hangs the keen sabre by a single thread;
 If thou hast courage still, and wouldest be free,
 Receive this poniard—rise—and follow me!"

"Ay—in my chains! my steps will gently tread,
 With these adornments, o'er each slumbering head!
 Thou hast forgot—is this a garb for fight?
 Or is that instrument more fit for fight?"

"Misdoubting Corsair! I have gain'd the guard,
 Ripe for revolt, and greedy for reward.
 A single word of mine removes that chain;
 Without some aid how here could I remain?
 Well, since we met, hath sped my busy time,
 If in aught evil, for thy sake the crime:

The crime—'t is none to punish those of Seyd.
 That hated tyrant, Conrad—he must bleed!
 I see thee shudder—but my soul is changed—
 Wrong'd, spurn'd, reviled—and it shall be avenged—
 Accused of what till now my heart disdain'd—
 Too faithful, though to bitter bondage chain'd.
 Yes, smile!—but he had little cause to sneer,
 I was not treacherous then—nor thou too dear:
 But he has said it—and the jealous well,
 Those tyrants, teasing, tempting to rebel,
 Deserve the fate their fretting lips foretell.
 I never loved—he bought me—somewhat high—
 Since with me came a heart he could not buy.
 I was a slave unmurmuring; he hath said,
 But for his rescue I with thee had fled.
 'T was false thou know'st—but let such augurs rue,
 Their words are omens insult renders true.
 Nor was thy respite granted to my prayer;
 This fleeting grace was only to prepare
 New torments for thy life, and my despair.
 Mine too he threatens; but his dotage still
 Would fain reserve me for his lordly will:
 When wearier of these fleeting charms and me,
 There yawns the sack—and yonder rolls the sea!
 What, am I then a toy for dotard's play,
 To wear but till the gliding frets away?
 I saw thee—loved thee—ow'd thee all—would save,
 If but to show how grateful I am a slave.
 But had he not thus menaced fame and life
 (And well he keeps his oaths pronounced in strife),
 I still had saved thee—but the Pacha spared.
 Now I am all thine own—for all prepared:
 Thou lov'st me not—nor know'st—or but the worst.
 Alas! this love—that hatred are the first—
 Oh! couldst thou prove my truth, thou wouldest not start,
 Nor fear the fire that lights an Eastern heart:
 'T is now the beacon of thy safety—now
 It points within the port a Mainote prow:
 But in one chamber, where our path must lead,
 There sleeps—he must not wake—the oppressor
 Seyd!"

"Gulnare—Gulnare—I never felt till now
 My abject fortune, wither'd fame so low:
 Seyd is mine enemy: had swept my band
 From earth with ruthless but with open hand,
 And therefore came I, in my bark of war,
 To smite the smiter with the scimitar;
 Such is my weapon—not the secret knife—
 Who spares a woman's seeks not slumber's life.
 Thine saved I gladly, lady—not for this:
 Let me not deem that mercy shown amiss.
 Now fare thee well—more peace be with thy breast!
 Night wears apace—my last of earthly rest!"

"Rest! rest! by sunrise must thy sinews shake,
 And thy limbs writhe around the ready stake.
 I heard the order—saw—I will not see—
 If thou wilt perish, I will fall with thee.
 My life—my love—my hatred—all below
 Are on this cast—Corsair! 't is but a blow!
 Without it fight were idle—how evade
 His sure pursuit? my wrongs too unrepaid,
 My youth disgraced—the long, long wasted years,
 One blow shall cancel with our future fears:
 But since the dagger suits thee less than brand,
 I'll try the firmness of a female hand.
 The guards are gain'd—one moment all were o'er—
 Corsair! we meet in safety or no more;
 If errs my feeble hand, the morning cloud
 Will hover o'er thy scaffold, and my shroud."

IX.

She turn'd, and vanish'd ere he could reply,
 But his glance follow'd far with eager eye;

The night-breeze freshens—the frail boy had observ'd
In watching all that Moore proclaim'd a maid;
Sally she sat upon high—impatience bore
At last her footstep to the midnight shore,
And there she wander'd—heedless of the play
That danc'd her garments off, and wain'd away!

THE CORSAIR.—Page 81.

And gathering, as he could, the links that bound
His form, to curl their length, and curb their sound,
Since bar and bolt no more his steps preclude,
He, fast as fetter'd limbs allow, pursued.
T was dark and winding, and he knew not where
That passage led; nor lamp nor guard was there:
He sees a dusky glimmering—shall he seek
Or shun that ray so indistinct and weak?
Chance guides his steps—a freshness seems to bear
Full on his brow, as if from morning air—
He reach'd an open gallery—on his eye
Gleam'd the last star of night, the clearing sky:
Yet scarcely heeded these—another light
From a lone chamber struck upon his sight.
Towards it he moved; a scarcely closing door
Reveal'd the ray within, but nothing more.
With hasty step a figure onward pass'd,
Then paused—and turn'd—and paused—'t is she at last!

No point in that hand—no sign of ill—
"Thanks to that softening heart—she could not kill!"

Again he look'd, the wildness of her eye
Starts from the day abrupt and fearfully.

She stopp'd—threw back her dark far-floating hair,
That nearly veil'd her face and bosom fair,
As if she late had bent her leaning head
Above some object of her doubt or dread.
They meet—upon her brow—unknown—forgot—
Her hurrying hand had left—'t was but a spot—
Its hue was all he saw, and scarce withstood—
Oh! alight but certain pledge of crime—'t is blood!

X.

He had seen battle—he had brooded lone
O'er promised pangs to sentenced guilt forebown:
He had been tempted—chasten'd—and the chain
Yet on his arms might ever there remain:
But ne'er from strife—captivity—remorse—
From all his feelings in their inmost force—
So thrill'd—so shudder'd every creeping vein,
As now they force before that purple stain.
That spot of blood, that light but guilty streak,
Had banish'd all the beauty from her cheek!
Blood he had view'd—could view unmoved—but then

It flow'd in combat, or was shed by men!

XI.

"T is done—he is nearly wak'd—but it is done.
Corsair! he perish'd—thou art dearly won.
All words would now be vain—away—away!
Our bark is toying—'t is already day.
The few gain'd over, now are wholly mine,
And these thy yet surviving band shall join:
Anon my voice shall vindicate my hand,
When once our sail forsakes this hated strand."

XII.

She clapp'd her hands—and through the gallery pour,
Equip'd for flight, her vassals—Greek and Moor;
Silent but quick they stoop, his chains unbind;
Once more his limbs are free as mountain wind!
But on his heavy heart such sadness sate,
As if they there transferr'd that iron weight.
No words are utter'd—at her sign, a door
Reveals the secret passage to the shore:
The city lies behind—they speed, they reach
The glad waves dancing on the yellow beach;
And Conrad following, at her beck, obey'd;
Nor cared he now if rescued or betray'd;
Resistance were as useless as his Seyd
Yet lived to view the doom his ire decreed.

XIII.

Embark'd, the sail unfurl'd, the light breeze blew—
How much had Conrad's memory to review!

Sunk he in contemplation, till the cape
Where last he anchor'd rear'd its giant shape.
Ah!—since that fatal night, though brief the time,
Had swept an age of terror, grief, and crime.
As its far shadow frown'd above the mast,
He veil'd his face, and sorrow'd as he pass'd;
He thought of all—Gonsalvo and his band,
His fleeting triumph and his falling hand;
He thought on her afar, his lonely bride:
He turn'd and saw—Gulnare, the homicide!

XIV.

She watch'd his features till she could not bear
Their freezing aspect and averted air,
And that strange fierceness foreign to her eye,
Fell quench'd in tears, too late to shed or dry.
She knelt beside him and his hand she press'd;
"Thou mayst forgive though Allah's self detest;
But for that deed of darkness what wert thou?
Reproach me—but not yet—Oh! spare me now!
I am not what I seem—this fearful night
My brain bewilder'd—do not madden quite!
If I had never loved—though less my guilt,
Thou hadst not lived to—hate me—if thou wilt."

XV.

She wrongs his thoughts, they more himself upbraid
Than her, though undesign'd, the wretch he made;
But speechless all, deep, dark, and unexpress'd,
They bleed within that silent cell—his breast.
Still onward, fair the breeze, nor rough the surge,
The blue waves sport around the stern they urge;
Far on the horizon's verge appears a speck,
A spot—a mast—a sail—an armed deck!
Their little bark her men of watch descrie
And ampler canvas woe the wind from high;
She bears her down majestically near.
Speed on her prow, and terror in her tier;
A flash is seen—the ball beyond their boom
Booms harmless, hissing to the deep below.
Up rose keen Conrad from his silent trance,
A long, long absent gladness in his glance;
"T is mine—my blood-red flag! again—again—
I am not all deserted on the main!"
They own the signal, answer to the hall,
Hoist out the boat at once, and slacken sail.
"T is Conrad! Conrad!" shouting from the deck,
Command nor duty could their transport check!
With light alacrity and gaze of pride,
They view him mount once more his vessel's side;
A smile relaxing in each rugged face,
Their arms can scarce forbear a rough embrace.
He, half forgetting danger and defeat,
Returns their greeting as a chief may greet,
Wrings with a cordial grasp Anselmo's hand,
And feels he yet can conquer and command!

XVI.

These greetings o'er, the feelings that o'erflow,
Yet grieve to win him back without a blow;
They sail'd prepared for vengeance—had they known
A woman's hand secured that deed her own,
She were their queen—less scrupulous are they
Then haughty Conrad how they win their way.
With many an asking smile, and wondering stare,
They whisper round, and gaze upon Gulnare;
And her, at once above—beneath her sex,
Whom blood appall'd not, their regards perplex.
To Conrad turns her faint imploring eye,
She drops her veil, and stands in silence by;
Her arms are meekly folded on that breast,
Which—Conrad safe—to fate resign'd the rest,
Though worse than frenzy could that bosom fill,
Extreme in love or hate, in good or ill,
The worst of crimes had left her woman still!

XVII.

This Conrad mark'd, and felt—ah! could he less?—
 Hate of that deed—brought grief for her distress;
 What she has done no tears can wash away,
 And Heaven must punish on its angry day:
 But—it was done: he knew, whate'er her guilt,
 For him that poniard smote, that blood was split;
 And he was free!—and she for him had given
 Her all on earth, and more than all in heaven!
 And now he turn'd him to that dark-eyed slave,
 Whose brow was bow'd beneath the glance he gave,
 Who now seem'd changed and humbled, faint and meek,
 But varying off the color of her cheek
 To deeper shades of paleness—all its red
 That fearful spot which stain'd it from the dead!
 He took that hand—it trembled—now too late—
 So soft in love—so wildly nerve'd in hate;
 He clasp'd that hand—it trembled—and his own
 Had lost its firmness, and his voice its tone.
 “Guinare!”—but she replied not—“dear Guinare!”
 She raised her eye—her only answer there—
 At once she sought and sunk in his embrace:
 If he had driven her from that resting-place,
 His had been more or less than mortal heart,—
 But—good or ill—it bade her not depart.
 Perchance, but for the bodings of his breast,
 His latest virtue then had join'd the rest.
 Yet even Medora might forgive the kiss
 That ask'd from form so fair no more than this,
 The first, the last that Fraltry stole from Faith—
 To lips where Love had lavish'd all his breath,
 To lips—whose broken sighs such fragrance fling,
 As he had fann'd them freshly with his wing!

XVIII.

They gain by twilight's hour their lonely tale.
 To them the very rocks appear to smile;
 The haven hums with many a cheering sound,
 The beacons blaze their wonted stations round,
 The boats are darting o'er the curly bay,
 And sportive dolphins bend them through the spray;
 Even the hoarse sea-bird's shrill, discordant shriek
 Greets like the welcome of his tuneless beak!
 Beneath each lamp that through its lattice gleams,
 Their fancy paints the friends that trim the beams.
 Oh! what can sanctify the joys of home,
 Like Hope's gay glance from Ocean's troubled foam?

XIX.

The lights are high on beacon and from bower,
 And 'midst them Conrad seeks Medora's tower:
 He looks in vain—"t is strange—and all remark,
 Amid so many, hers alone is dark.
 'T is strange—of yore its welcome never fail'd,
 Nor now, perchance, extinguish'd, only veil'd.
 With the first boat descends he for the shore,
 And looks impatient on the lingering car.
 Oh! for a wing beyond the falcon's flight,
 To bear him like an arrow to that height!
 With the first pause the roosting raven gave,
 He waits not—looks not—leaps into the wave,
 Strives through the surge, bestrides the beach, and high
 Ascends the path familiar to his eye.

He reach'd his turret door—he paused—no sound
 Broke from within; and all was night around.
 He knock'd, and loudly—footstep nor reply
 Announced that any heard or deem'd him nigh;
 He knock'd—but faintly—for his trembling hand
 Refused to aid his heavy heart's demand.
 The portal opens—"t is a well-known face—
 But not the form he panted to embrace.
 Its lips are silent—twice his own essay'd,
 And fall'd to frame the question they delay'd;

He snatch'd the lamp—its light will answer all—
 Its quita his grasp, expiring in the fall.
 He would not wait for that reviving ray—
 As soon could he have linger'd there for day:
 But, glimmering through the dusky corridor,
 Another chequers o'er the shadow'd floor;
 His steps the chamber gain—his eyes behold
 All that his heart believed not—yet foretold!

XX.

He turn'd not—spoke not—sunk not—fix'd his look,
 And set the anxious frame that lately shook:
 He gazed—how long we gaze despite of pain,
 And know, but dare not own, we gaze in vain!
 In life itself she was so still and fair,
 That death with gentler aspect wither'd there;
 And the cold flowers* her colder hand contain'd,
 In that last grasp as tenderly were strain'd
 As if she scarcely felt, but feign'd a sleep,
 And made it almost mockery yet to weep:
 The long dark lashes fringed her lids of snow,
 And veil'd—thought shrinks from all that lurk'd
 below—
 Oh! o'er the eye Death most exerts his might,
 And hurls the spirit from her throne of light;
 Sinks those blue orbs in that long last eclipse,
 But spares, as yet, the charm around her lips—
 Yet, yet they seem as they forbore to smile,
 And wish'd repose—but only for a while;
 But the white shroud, and each extended tress,
 Long—fair—but spread in utter lifelessness,
 Which, late the sport of every summer wind,
 Escaped the baffled wreath that strove to bind;
 These—and the pale pure cheek, became the ber—
 But she is nothing—wherefore is he here?

XXI.

He ask'd no question—all were answer'd now
 By the first glance on that still—marble brow.
 It was enough—she died—what rack'd it how?
 The love of youth, the hope of better years,
 The source of softest wishes, tenderest fears,
 The only living thing he could not hate,
 Was reft at once—and he deserved his fate,
 But did not feel it less;—the good explore,
 For peace, those realms where guilt can never soar:
 The proud—the wayward—who have fix'd below
 Their joy, and find this earth enough for woe,
 Lose in that one their all—perchance a mite—
 But who in patience parts with all delight?
 Full many a stoic eye and aspect stern
 Mask hearts where grief hath little left to learn;
 And many a withering thought lies hid, not lost,
 In smiles that least beth who wear them most.

XXII.

By those, that deepest feel, is ill express'd
 The indistinctness of the suffering breast;
 Where thousand thoughts begin to end in one,
 Which seeks from all the refuge found in none;
 No words suffice the secret soul to show,
 For Truth denies all eloquence to Woe.
 On Conrad's stricken soul exhaustion prest,
 And stupor almost lull'd it into rest;
 So feeble now—his mother's softness crept
 To those wild eyes, which like an infant's wept:
 It was the very weakness of his brain,
 Which thus confess'd without relieving pain.
 None saw his trickling tears—perchance, if seen,
 That useless flood of grief had never been:
 Nor long they flow'd—he dried them to depart,
 In helplessness—hopeless—brokenness of heart:

* In the Levant it is the custom to strew flowers on the bodies of the dead, and in the hands of young persons to place a nosegay.

M. J. JONES, THE CORSAIR, 1911. — J. M. JONES, 1911.
All this is a very limited collection.

THE CORSAIR — Page 80.

The sun goes forth—but Conrad's day is dim;
And the night cometh—no'er to pass from him,
There is no darkness like the cloud of mind,
On grief's vain eye—the blindest of the blind!
Which may not—dare not see—but turns aside
To blackest shade—nor will endure a guide!

XXIII.

His heart was form'd for softness—warp'd to wrong:

Betray'd too early, and beguiled too long;
Each feeling pure—as falls the dropping dew
Within the grove, like that had harden'd too;
Less clear, perchance, its earthly tints pass'd,
But sunk, and chill'd, and petrified at last.
Yet tempests wear, and lightning cleaves the rock,
If such his heart, so shatter'd at the shock,
There grew one flower beneath its rugged brow,
Though dark the shade—it shelter'd—saved the dew.

The thunder came—that bolt hath blasted both,
The Granite's firmness, and the Lily's growth;
The gentle plant hath left no leaf to tell
Its tale, but shrunk and wither'd where it fell;

And of its cold protector, blacken round
But shiver'd fragments on the barren ground!

XXIV.

'Tis morn—to venture on his lonely hour
Few dare; though now Anselme sought his tower.
He was not there—nor seen along the shore;
Ere night, alarm'd, their isle is traversed o'er;
Another morn—another bids them seek,
And shout his name till echo waxeth weak;
Mount—grove—cavern—valley search'd in vain,
They find on shore a sea-boat's broken chain;
Their hope revives—they follow o'er the main.
'Tis idle all—moons roll on moons away,
And Conrad comes not—came not since that day;
Nor trace, nor tidings of his doom declare
Where lives his grief, or perish'd his despair!
Long mourn'd his band whom none could mourn
beside;

And fair the monument they gave his bride:
For him they raise not the recording stone—
His death yet dubious, deeds too widely known;
He left a Corsair's name to other times,
Link'd with one virtue and a thousand crimes.

 Yet tempests wear and lightning cleaves the rock."—Page 57, stanza xxiii.

LARA:

3 Tale.

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

THE Serfs* are glad through Lara's wide domain,
And Slavery half forgets her feudal chain;
He, their unhoped, but unforgotten lord,
The long self-exiled chieftain, is restored:
There be bright faces in the busy hall,
Bowls on the board, and banners on the wall;
Far checker'd o'er the pictured window, plays
The unwonted fagots' hospitable blaze;
And gay retainers gather round the hearth,
With tongues all loudness, and with eyes all mirth.

II.

The chief of Lara is return'd again:
And why had Lara cross'd the bounding main?
Left by his sire, too young such loss to know,
Lord of himself,—that heritage of woe,
That fearful empire which the human breast
But holds to rob the heart within of rest!—
With none to check, and few to point in time
The thousand paths that slope the way to crime;
Then, when he most required commandment, then
Had Lara's daring boyhood govern'd men.
It skills not, boots not step by step to trace
His youth through all the mazes of its race;
Short was the course his restlessness had run,
But long enough to leave him half undone.

III.

And Lara left in youth his father-land;
But from the hour he waved his parting hand,
Each trace wax'd fainter of his course, till all
Had nearly ceased his memory to recall.
His sire was dust, his vassals could declare,
"T was all they knew, that Lara was not there;
Nor sent, nor came he, till conjecture grew
Cold in the many, anxious in the few.
His hall scarce echoes with his wonted name,
His portrait darkens in its fading frame,
Another chief consoled his destined bride,
The young forgot him, and the old had died;
"Yet doth he live!" exclaims the impatient heir,
And sighs for sabres which he must not wear.
A hundred scutcheons deck with gloomy grace
The Laras' last and longest dwelling-place;
But one is absent from the mouldering file,
That now were welcome in that Gothic pile.

IV.

He comes at last in sudden loneliness,
And whence they know not, why they need not guess;

They more might marvel, when the greeting's o'er,
Not that he came, but came not long before:
No train is his beyond a single page,
Of foreign aspect, and of tender age.
Years had roll'd on, and fast they speed away
To those that wander as to those that stay;
But lack of tidings from another clime
Had lent a flagging wing to weary Time.
They see, they recognize, yet almost deem
The present dubious, or the past a dream.
He lives, nor yet is past his manhood's prime,
Though scar'd by toil, and something touch'd by
time;

His faults, whate'er they were, if scarce forgot,
Might be untaught him by his varied lot;
Nor good nor ill of late were known, his name
Might yet uphold his patrimonial fame:
His soul in youth was haughty, but his sins
No more than pleasure from the stripling wins;
And such, if not yet harden'd in their course,
Might be redeem'd, nor ask a long remorse.

V.

And they indeed were changed—'t is quickly seen,
Whate'er he be, 't was not what he had been;
That brow in furrow'd lines had fix'd at last,
And spake of passions, but of passion past:
The pride, but not the fire, of early days,
Coldness of mien, and carelessness of praise;
A high demeanor, and a glance that took
Their thoughts from others by a single look;
And that sarcastic levity of tongue,
The stinging of a heart the world hath stung,
That darts in seeming playfulness around,
And makes those feel that will not own the wound:

All these seem'd his, and something more beneath
Than glance could well reveal, or accents breathe.
Ambition, glory, love, the common aim,
That some can conquer, and that all would claim,
Within his breast appear'd no more to strive,
Yet seem'd as lately they had been alive;
And some deep feeling it were vain to trace
At moments lighten'd o'er his livid face.

VI.

Not much he loved long question of the past,
Nor told of wondrous wilds, and deserts vast,
In those far lands where he had wander'd lone,
And—as himself would have it seem—unknown;
Yet these in vain his eye could scarcely scan,
Nor glean experience from his fellow man;
But what he had beheld he shunn'd to show,
As hardly worth a stranger's care to know;

* The reader is apprised that the name of Lara being Spanish, and no circumstance of local and natural description fitting the scene or hero of the poem to any country or age, the word "Serf," which could not be correctly applied to the lower classes in Spain, who were never vassals of the soil, has nevertheless been employed to designate the followers of our fictitious chieftain.—Lord Byron elsewhere intimates that he meant Lara for a chief of the Moors.

If still more prying such inquiry grew,
His brow felt darker, and his words more few.

VII.

Not unrejoiced to see him once again,
Warm was his welcome to the haunts of men;
Born of high lineage, link'd in high command,
He mingled with the magnates of his land;
Join'd the carousals of the great and gay,
And saw them smile or sigh their hours away;*
But still he only saw, and did not share,
The common pleasure or the general care;
He did not follow what they all pursued,
With hope still baffled, still to be renew'd;
Nor shadowy honor, nor substantial gain,
Nor beauty's preference, and the rival's pain:
Around him some mysterious circle thrown
Repell'd approach, and show'd him still alone;
Upon his eye sat something of reproof,
That kept at least something of aloof:
And things more timid that beheld him near,
In silence gazed, or whisper'd mutual fear;
And they the wiser, friendlier few confess'd
They deem'd him better than his air express'd.

VIII.

'T was strange—in youth all action and all life,
Burning for pleasure, not averse from strife;
Woman—the field—the ocean—all that gave Promise of gladness, peril of a grave,
In turn he tried—he ransack'd all below,
And found his recompense in joy or woe,
No tame, trite medium; for his feelings sought
In that intenseness an escape from thought:
The tempest of his heart in scorn had gazed
On that the feeble elements had raised;
The rapture of his heart had look'd on high,
And ask'd if greater dwell beyond the sky:
Chain'd to excess, the slave of each extreme,
How woke he from the wildness of that dream?
Alas! he told not—but he did awake
To curse the wither'd heart that would not break.

IX.

Books, for his volume heretofore was Man,
With eye more curious he appear'd to scan,
And oft, in sudden mood, for many a day,
From all communion he would start away:
And then, his rarely call'd attendants said,
Through night's long hours would sound his hurried tread.
O'er the dark gallery, where his fathers frown'd
In rude but antique portraiture around:
They heard, but whisper'd—"that must not be known—"
The sound of words less earthly than his own.
Yes, they who chose might smile, but some had seen
They scarce knew what, but more than should have been.
Why gazed he so upon the ghastly head
Which hands profane had gather'd from the dead,
That still beside his open'd volume lay,
As if to startle all save him away?
Why slept he not when others were at rest?
Why heard no music, and received no guest?
All was not well, they deem'd—but where the wrong?
Some knew perchance—but 't were a tale too long;
And such besides were too discreetly wise,
To more than hint their knowledge in surmise;

But if they would—they could"—around the board
Thus Lara's vassals prattled of their lord.

X.

It was the night—and Lara's glassy stream
The stars are studding, each with imaged beam;
So calm, the waters scarcely seem to stray,
And yet they glide like happiness away;
Reflecting far and fairy-like from high
The immortal lights that live along the sky:
Its banks are fringed with many a goody tree,
And flowers the fairest that may feast the bee;
Such in her chaplet infant Dian wove,
And Innocence would offer to her love.
These deck the shore; the waves their channel make
In windings bright and mazy like the snake.
All was so still, so soft in earth and air,
You scarce would start to meet a spirit there;
Secure that nought of evil could delight
To walk in such a scene, on such a night!
It was a moment only for the good:
So Lara deem'd, nor longer there he stood,
But turn'd in silence to his castle gate;
Such scene his soul no more could contemplate:
Such scene reminded him of other days,
Of skies more cloudless, moons of purer blaze,
Of nights more soft and frequent, hearts that now—
No—no—the storm may beat upon his brow,
Unfelt—unsparing—but a night like this,
A night of beauty, mock'd such breast as his.

XI.

He turn'd within his solitary hall,
And his high shadow shot along the wall:
There were the painted forms of other times,
'T was all they left of virtues or of crimes,
Save vague tradition; and the gloomy vaults
That hid their dust, their foibles, and their faults;
And half a column of the pompous page,
That speeds the specious tale from age to age;
Where history's pen its praise or blame supplies,
And lies like truth, and still most truly lies.
He wandering mused, and as the moonbeam shone
Through the dim lattice o'er the floor of stone,
And the high fretted roof, and saints, that there
O'er Gothic windows knelt in pictured prayer,
Reflected in fantastic figures grew,
Like life, but not like mortal life, to view:
His bristling locks of sable, brow of gloom,
And the wide waving of his shaken plume,
Glanced like a spectre's attributes, and gave
His aspect all that terror gives the grave.

XII.

'T was midnight—all was slumber; the lone light
Dimm'd in the lamp, as loth to break the night.
Hark! there be murmurs heard in Lara's hall—
A sound—a voice—a shriek—a fearful call!
A long, loud shriek—and silence—did they hear
That frantic echo burst the sleeping ear?
They heard and rose, and, tremulously brave,
Rush where the sound invoked their aid to save;
They come with half-lit tapers in their hands,
And snatch'd in startled haste unbelted brands.

XIII.

Cold as the marble where his length was laid,
Pale as the beam that o'er his features play'd,
Was Lara stretch'd; his half-drawn sabre near,
Dropp'd it should seem in more than nature's fear;
Yet he was firm, or had been firm till now,
And still defiance knelt his gather'd brow;

* "This description of Lara, suddenly and unexpectedly returned from distant travels, and resuming his station in the society of his own country, has strong points of resemblance to the part which the author himself seemed occasionally to bear amid the scenes where the great mingle with the fair."

Though mix'd with terror, senseless as he lay,
There lived upon his lip the wish to slay;
Some half-form'd threat in utterance there had died,
Some imprecation of despairing pride;
His eye was almost seal'd, but not forsook,
Even in its trance, the gladiator's look,
That oft awake his aspect could disclose,
And now was fix'd in horrible repose.
They raise him—bear him!—hush! he breathes, he speaks.

The swarthy blush recolors in his cheeks,
His lip resumes its red, his eye, though dim,
Rolls wide and wild, each slowly quivering limb
Recalls its function, but his words are strung
In terms that seem not of his native tongue;
Distinct but strange, enough they understand
To deem them accents of another land;
And such they were, and meant to meet an ear
That hears him not—alas! that cannot hear!

XIV.

His page approach'd, and he alone appear'd
To know the import of the words they heard;
And, by the changes of his cheek and brow,
They were not such as Lara should avow,
Nor he interpret,—yet with less surprise
Than those around their chieftain's state he eyes,
But Lara's prostrate form he bent beside,
And in that tongue which seem'd his own replied;
And Lara heeds those tones that gently seem
To soothe away the horrors of his dream—
If dream it were that thus could overthrow
A breast that needed not ideal woe.

XV.

Whate'er his frenzy dream'd or eye beheld,
If yet remember'd ne'er to be reveal'd,
Rests at his heart: the custom'd morning came,
And breathed new vigor in his shaken frame;
And solace sought he none from priest nor leech,
And soon the same in movement and in speech,
As heretofore he fill'd the passing hours,
Nor less he smiles, nor more his forehead lowers,
Than these were wont; and if the coming night
Appear'd less welcome now to Lara's sight,
He to his marvelling vassals show'd it not,
Whose shuddering proved their fear was less forgot.
In trembling pairs (alone they dared not) crawl
The astonish'd slaves, and shun the fated hall:
The waving banner, and the clapping door,
The rustling tapestry, and the echoing floor;
The long dim shadows of surrounding trees,
The flapping bat, the night song of the breeze;
Aught they behold or hear their thought appalls,
As evening saddens o'er the dark gray walls.

XVI.

Vain thought! that hour of ne'er unravell'd gloom
Came not again, or Lara could assume
A seeming of forgetfulness, that made
His vassals more amazed nor less afraid.
Had memory vanish'd then with sense restored?
Since word, nor look, nor gesture of their lord
Betray'd a feeling that recall'd to these
That fever'd moment of his mind's disease.
Was it a dream? was his the voice that spoke
Those strange wild accents; his the cry that broke
Their slumber? his the oppress'd, o'erlabor'd heart
That ceased to beat, the look that made them start?
Could he who thus had suffer'd so forget,
When such as saw that suffering shudder yet?
Or did that silence prove his memory fix'd
Too deep for words, indelible, unmix'd?
In that corroding secrecy which gnaws
The heart to show the effect, but not the cause?
Not so in him; his breast had buried both,
Nor common gazers could discern the growth

Of thoughts that mortal lips must leave half told;
They choke the feeble words that would unfold.

XVII.

In him inexplicably mix'd appear'd
Much to be loved and hated, sought and fear'd;
Opinion varying o'er his hidden lot,
In praise or railing ne'er his name forgot:
His silence form'd a theme for others' prate—
They guess'd—they gazed—they fain would know his fate.

What had he been? what was he, thus unknown,
Who walk'd their world, his lineage only known?
A hater of his kind? yet some would say,
With them he could seem gay amidst the gay;
But own'd that smile, if oft observed and near,
Waned in its mirth, and wither'd to a sneer;
That smile might reach his lip, but pass'd not by,
None e'er could trace its laughter to his eye:
Yet there was softness too in his regard,
At times, a heart as not by nature hard,
But once perceived, his spirit seem'd to chide
Such weakness, as unworthy of its pride,
And steel'd itself, as scornful to redeem
One doubt from others' half withheld esteem;
In self-inflicted penance of a breast
Which tenderness might once have wrung from rest;
In vigilance of grief that would compel
The soul to hate for having loved too well.

XVIII.

There was in him a vital scorn of all:
As if the worst had fall'n which could befall,
He stood a stranger in this breathing world,
An erring spirit from another hur'd;
A thing of dark imaginings, that shaped
By choice the perils he by chance escaped;
But leaved in vain, for in their memory yet
His mind would half exult and half regret:
With more capacity for love than earth
Bestows on most of mortal mould and birth,
His early dreams of good outstripp'd the truth,
And troubled manhood follow'd baffled youth;
With thought of years in phantom chase mispent,
And wasted powers for better purpose lent;
And fiery passions that had pour'd their wrath
In hurried desolation o'er his path,
And left the better feelings all at strife
In wild reflection o'er his stormy life;
But haughty still, and loth himself to blame,
He call'd on Nature's self to share the shame,
And charged all faults upon the fleshy form
She gave to clog the soul, and feast the worm;
Till he at last confounded good and ill,
And half mistook for fate the acts of will:
Too high for common selfishness, he could
At times resign his own for others' good,
But not in pity, not because he ought,
But in some strange perversity of thought,
That sway'd him onward with a secret pride
To do what few or none would do beside;
And this same impulse would, in tempting time,
Mislead his spirit equally to crime;
So much he soar'd beyond, or sunk beneath,
The men with whom he felt condemn'd to breathe,
And long'd by good or ill to separate
Himself from all who shared his mortal state;
His mind abhorring this, had fix'd her throne
Far from the world, in regions of her own:
Thus coldly passing all that pass'd below,
His blood in temperate seeming now would flow:
Ah! happier if it ne'er with guilt had glow'd,
But ever in that icy smoothness flow'd!
'Tis true, with other men their path he walk'd,
And like the rest in seeming did and talk'd,
Nor outraged Reason's rules by flaw nor start,
His madness was not of the head, but heart;

And musing whether 't in his speech, or drew
His thoughts as forth as to offend the view.

XIII.

With all that chilling mystery of mien,
And seeming gladness to remain unseen,
His had (if 't were not nature's boon) an art
Of fixing memory on another's heart:
It was not love purchase—nor heart—nor aught
That would own lineage to express the thought;
But they who saw him did not see in vain,
And once beheld, would ask of him again:
And those to whom he spake remember'd well,
And on the words, however light, would dwell:
None knew nor how, nor why, but he enticed
Himself perforce around the hearer's mind;
There he was stamp'd, in liking, or in hate,
If greatest once; however brief the date
That friendship, pity, or aversion knew,
Still there within the furthest thought he grew.
You could not penetrate his soul, but found,
Despite your wonder, to your own he wound;
His presence haunted still; and from the breast
He forced an all unwilling interest:
Vain was the struggle in that mental net,
His spirit seem'd to dare you to forget.

XX.

There is a festival, where knights and dames,
And aught that wealth or lofty lineage claims,
Appear—a high-born and a welcome guest
To Otto's hall came Lara with the rest.
The long carnival shakes the illumined hall,
Well speeds afloat the banquet and the ball;
And the gay dance of bounding Beauty's train
Links grace and harmony in happiest chain:
Meet are the merry hearts and gentle hands
That mingle there in well-accorded bands;
It is a sight the careless brow might smooth,
And make Age smile, and dream itself to youth,
And Youth forget each hour was past on earth,
Sojourns the exulting beam to that mirth!

XXI.

And Lara gazed on them, sedately glad,
He knew belied him if his soul was sad;
And his glance follow'd that each fluttering fair,
While rings of brightness woke no echo there:
He lean'd against the lofty pillar high,
With folded arms and long attentive eye,
Nor mark'd a glance so sternly fix'd on him—
He mark'd high Lara scrutiny like this:
At length he caught it—'t is a face unknown,
But none as searching his, and his alone;
Perchance not dark, a stranger's by his mien,
Who still the how had gazed on him unseen:
At length encounter meets the mutual gaze
Of keen scrutiny, and of mute amaze;
Alas! the strange emotion gathering grew,
As if the feeling that the stranger threw;
Alas! the stranger's aspect, fix'd and stern,
Felt more than thence the vulgar eye could

XXII.

And those that heard
The whisper'd word.
"Who?" they question far and
On Lara's ear;
"Whence will could brook
That single look:
"Noted not, the surprise
To his arrested eyes
"The sunk not raised
"The still the stranger

And drawing nigh, exclaim'd, with haughty sneer,
"T is he!—how came he thence? what doth he here?"

XXIII.

It were too much for Lara to pass by Such questions, so repeated fierce and high;
With look collected, but with accent cold,
More mildly firm than petulantly bold,
He turn'd, and met the inquisitorial tone—
"My name is Lara!—when thine own is known,
Doubt not my fitting answer to requite
The unlook'd for courtesy of such a knight.
"T is Lara!—further wouldst thou mark or ask?
I shun no question, and I wear no mask."

"Thou shunn'st no question! Ponder—Is there
none
Thy heart must answer, though thine ear would shun!"

And deem'st thou me unknown too? Gaze again!
At least thy memory was not given in vain.
Oh! never canst thou cancel half her debt,
Eternity forbids thee to forget."
With slow and searching glance upon his face
Grew Lara's eyes, but nothing there could trace
They knew, or chose to know—with dubious look
He deign'd no answer, but his head he shook,
And half contemptuous turn'd to pass away;
But the stern stranger motion'd him to stay.
"A word!—I charge thee stay, and answer here
To one, who, wert thou noble, were thy peer,
But as thou wast and art—may, frown not, lord,
If false, 't is easy to disprove the word—
But as thou wast and art, on thee looks down,
Distrust thy smiles, but shakes not at thy frown.
Art thou not he? whose deeds—"

"Whate'er I be,
Words wild as these, accusers like to thee,
I list no further; with those with whom they weigh
May hear the rest, nor venture to gainsay
The wondrous tale no doubt thy tongue can tell,
Which thus begins so courteously and well.
Let Otto cherish here his polish'd guest,
To him my thanks and thoughts shall be express'd."
And here their wondering host hath interposed—
"Whate'er there be between you undisclosed,
This is no time nor fitting place to mar
The mirthful meeting with a wordy war.
If thou, Sir Ezzein, hast aught to show
Which it befits Count Lara's ear to know,
To-morrow, here, or elsewhere, as may best
Beseeem your mutual judgment, speak the rest;
I pledge myself for thee, as not unknown,
Though, like Count Lara, now return'd alone
From other lands, almost a stranger grown;
And if from Lara's blood and gentle birth
I augur right of courage and of worth,
He will not that untainted line belie,
Nor aught that knighthood may accord, deny."

"To-morrow be it," Ezzein replied,
"And here our several worth and truth be tried:
I gage my life, my falchion to attest
My words, so may I mingle with the blest!"
What answers Lara? to its centre shrunk
His soul, in deep abstraction sudden sunk;
The words of many, and the eyes of all
That there were gather'd, seem'd on him to fall;
But his were silent, his appear'd to stray
In far forgetfulness away—away—
Alas! that heedlessness of all around
Bespoke remembrance only too profound.

XXIV.

"To-morrow! ay, to-morrow!" further word
Than those repeated none from Lara heard:

Upon his brow no outward passion spoke;
From his large eye no flashing anger broke;
Yet there was something fix'd in that low tone,
Which show'd resolve, determined, though unknown.

He seized his cloak—his head he alightly bow'd,
And passing Ezzelin, he left the crowd;
And, as he pass'd him, smiling met the frown
With which that chieftain's brow would bear him down:

It was nor smile of mirth, nor struggling pride
That curbs to scorn the wrath it cannot hide;
But that of one in his own heart secure
Of all that he would do, or could endure.
Could this mean peace? the calmness of the good?
Or guilt grown old in desperate hardihood?
Alas! too like in confidence are each,
For man to trust to mortal look or speech;
From deeds, and deeds alone, may he discern
Truths which it wrings the unpractised heart to learn.

XXV.

And Lara call'd his page, and went his way—
Well could that stripling word or sign obey:
His only follower from those climes afar,
Where the soul glows beneath a brighter star;
For Lara left the shore from whence he sprung,
In duty patient, and sedate though young;
Silent as him he served, his faith appears
Above his station, and beyond his years.
Though not unknown the tongue of Lara's land,
In such from him he rarely heard command;
But fleet his step, and clear his tones would come,
When Lara's lip breathed forth the words of home:
Those accents, as his native mountains dear,
Awake their absent echoes in his ear,
'Friends', kindred's, parents', wonted voice recall,
Now lost, unbred, for one—his friend, his all:
For him earth now disclosed no other guide;
What marvel then he rarely left his side?

XXVI.

Light was his form, and darkly delicate
That brow whereon his native sun had set,
But had not marr'd, though in his beams he grew,
The cheek where oft the unbidden blush shone through;

Yet not such blush as mounts when health would show

All the heart's hue in that delighted glow;
But 't was a hectic tint of secret care
That for a burning moment fever'd there;
And the wild sparkle of his eye seem'd caught
From high, and lighten'd with electric thought,
Though its black orb those long low lashes' fringe
Had temper'd with a melancholy tinge;
Yet less of sorrow than of pride was there,
Or, if 't were grief, a grief that none should share:
And pleased not him the sports that please his age,
The tricks of youth, the frolics of the page;
For hours on Lara he would fix his glance,
As all-forgotten in that watchful trance;
And from his chief withdrawn, he wander'd lone,
Brief were his answers, and his questions none;
His walk the wood, his sport some foreign book;
His resting-place the bank that curbs the brook;
He seem'd, like him he served, to live apart
From all that lures the eye, and fills the heart;
To know no brotherhood, and take from earth
No gift beyond that bitter boon—our birth.

XXVII.

If aught he loved, 't was Lara; but was shown
His faith in reverence and in deeds alone;
In mute attention; and his care, which guess'd
Each wish, fulfill'd it ere the tongue express'd.

Still there was haughtiness in all he did,
A spirit deep that brook'd not to be chid;
His zeal, though more than that of servile hands,
In act alone obeys, his air commands;
As if 't was Lara's less than his desire
That thus he served, but surely not for hire.
Slight were the tasks enjoin'd him by his lord,
To hold the stirrup, or to bear the sword;
To tune his lute, or, if he will'd it more,
On tomes of other times and tongues to pore;
But ne'er to mingle with the menial train,
To whom he show'd nor deference nor disdain,
But that well-worn reserve which proved he knew
No sympathy with that familiar crew:
His soul, whate'er his station or his stem,
Could bow to Lara, nor descend to them.
Of higher birth he seem'd, and better days,
Nor mark of vulgar toil that hand betrays,
So femininely white it might bespeak
Another sex, when match'd with that smooth cheek,
But for his garb, and something in his gaze,
More wild and high than woman's eye betrays;
A latent fierceness that far more became
His fiery climate than his tender frame:
True, in his words it broke not from his breast,
But from his aspect might be more than guess'd.
Kaled his name, though rumor said he bore
Another ere he left his mountain-shore;
For sometimes he would hear, however nigh,
That name repeated loud without reply,
As unfamiliar, or, if roused again,
Start to the sound, as but remember'd then;
Unless 't was Lara's wonted voice that spake,
For then, ear, eyes, and heart would all awake.

XXVIII.

He had look'd down upon the festive hall,
And mark'd that sudden strife so mark'd of all;
And when the crowd around and near him told
Their wonder at the calmness of the bold,
Their marvel how the high-born Lara bore
Such insult from a stranger, doubly sore,
The color of young Kaled went and came,
The lip of ashes, and the cheek of flame;
And 't was his brow the dampening heart-drops threw
The sickening iciness of that cold dew,
That rises as the busy bosom sinks
With heavy thoughts from which reflection shrinks.
Yes—there be things which we must dream and dare.

And execute ere thought be half aware:
Whate'er might Kaled's be, it was enow
To seal his lip, but agonize his brow.
He gazed on Ezzelin till Lara cast
That sidelong smile upon the knight he pass'd;
When Kaled saw that smile his visage fell,
As if on something recognized right well;
His memory read in such a meaning more
Than Lara's aspect unto others wore:
Forward he sprung—a moment, both were gone,
And all within that hall seem'd left alone;
Each had so fix'd his eye on Lara's mien,
All had so mix'd their feelings with that scene,
That when his long dark shadow through the porch
No more relieves the glare of yon high torch,
Each pulse beats quicker, and all bosoms seem
To bound as doubting from too black a dream,
Such as we know is false, yet dread in sooth,
Because the worst is ever nearest truth.
And they are gone—but Ezzelin is there,
With thoughtful visage and imperious air;
But long remain'd not; ere an hour expired,
He waved his hand to Otho, and retired.

XXIX.

The crowd are gone, the revellers at rest;
The courteous host, and all-approving guest,

Again to that accustom'd couch must creep
Where joy subsides, and sorrow sighs to sleep,
And man, o'erlabor'd with his being's strife,
Shrinks to that sweet forgetfulness of life:
There lie love's feverish hope, and cunning's guile,
Hate's working brain, and lull'd ambition's wile:
O'er each vain eye oblivion's pinions wave,
And quench'd existence crouches in a grave.
What better name may slumber's bed become?
Night's sepulchre, the universal home,
Where weakness, strength, vice, virtue, sunk supine,
Alike in naked helplessness recline;
Glad for awhile to heave unconscious breath,
Yet wake to struggle with the dread of death,
And shun, though day but dawn on ills increased,
That sleep, the loveliest, since it dreams the least.

CANTO THE SECOND.

I.

NIGHT wanes—the vapors round the mountains
curl'd
Melt into morn, and Light awakes the world.
Man has another day to swell the past,
And lead him near to little, but his last;
But mighty Nature bounds as from her birth,
The sun is in the heavens, and life on earth;
Flowers in the valley, splendor in the beam,
Health on the gale, and freshness in the stream.
Immortal man! behold her glories shine,
And cry, exulting inly, “They are thine!”
Gaze on, while yet thy gladden'd eye may see;
A morrow comes when they are not for thee:
And grieve what may above thy senseless bier,
Nor earth nor sky will yield a single tear:
Nor cloud shall gather more, nor leaf shall fall,
Nor gale breathe forth one sigh for thee, for all;
But creeping things shall revel in their spoil,
And fit thy clay to fertilize the soil.

II.

Tis morn—’tis noon—assembled in the hall,
The gather’d chieftains come to Otho’s call;
Tis now the promised hour that must proclaim
The life or death of Lara’s future fame;
When Ezzelin his charge may here unfold,
And whatsoever the tale, it must be told.
His faith was pledged, and Lara’s promise given,
To meet it in the eye of man and heaven.
Why comes he not? Such truths to be divulged,
Methinks the accuser’s rest is long indulged.

III.

The hour is past, and Lara too is there,
With self-confiding, coldly patient air;
Why comes not Ezzelin? The hour is past,
And murmurs rise, and Otho’s brow’s o’ercast.
“I know my friend! his faith I cannot fear,
If yet he be on earth, expect him here;
The roof that held him in the valley stands
Between my own and noble Lara’s lands;
My halls from such a guest had honor gain’d,
Nor had Sir Ezzelin his host disdain’d,
But that some previous proof forbade his stay,
And urged him to prepare against to-day;
The word I pledged for his I pledge again,
Or will myself redeem his knighthood’s stain.”

He ceased—and Lara answer’d, “I am here
To lend at thy demand a listening ear

To tales of evil from a stranger’s tongue,
Whose words already might my heart have wrung,
But that I deem’d him scarcely less than mad,
Or, at the worst, a foe ignobly bad.
I know him not—but me it seems he knew
In lands where—but I must not trifle too:
Produce this babbler—or redeem the pledge;
Here in thy hold, and with thy falchion’s edge.”

Proud Otho on the instant, reddening, threw
His glove on earth, and forth his sabre flew.
“The last alternative befits me best,
And thus I answer for mine absent guest.”

With cheek unchanging from its sallow gloom,
However near his own or other’s tomb;
With hand, whose almost careless coolness spoke
Its grasp well used to deal the sabre-stroke;
With eye, though calm, determined not to spare,
Did Lara too his willing weapon bare.
In vain the circling chieftains round them closed,
For Otho’s frenzy would not be opposed;
And from his lips those words of insult fell—
His sword is good who can maintain them well.

IV.

Short was the conflict; furious, blindly rash,
Vain Otho gave his bosom to the gash:
He bled, and fell; but not with deadly wound,
Stretch’d by a dexterous sleight along the ground.
“Demand thy life!” He answer’d not: and then
From that red floor he ne’er had risen again,
For Lara’s brow upon the moment grew
Almost to blackness in its demon hue;
And fiercer shook his angry falchion now
Than when his foe’s was level’d at his brow;
Then all was stern collectedness and art,
Now rose the unfeigned hatred of his heart;
So little sparing to the foe he fell’d,
That when the approaching crowd his arm withheld,
He almost turn’d the thirty point on those
Who thus for mercy dared to interpose;
But to a moment’s thought that purpose bent;
Yet look’d he on him still with eye intent,
As if he loathed the ineffectual strife
That left a foe, howe’er overcome, with life;
As if to search how far the wound he gave
Had sent its victim onward to his grave.

V.

They raised the bleeding Otho, and the Leech
Forbade all present question, sign, and speech;
The others met within a neighboring hall,
And he, incensed, and heedless of them all,
The cause and conqueror in this sudden fray,
In haughty silence slowly strode away;
He back’d his steed, his homeward path he took,
Nor cast on Otho’s towers a single look.

VI.

But where was he? that meteor of a night,
Who menaced but to disappear with light.
Where was this Ezzelin? who came and went,
To leave no other trace of his intent.
He left the dome of Otho long ere morn,
In darkness, yet so well the path was worn
He could not miss it: near his dwelling lay;
But there he was not, and with coming day
Came fast inquiry, which unfolded nought
Except the absence of the chief it sought.
A chamber tenantless, a steed at rest,
His host alarm’d, his murmuring squire’s distress’d:
Their search extends along, around the path,
In dread to meet the marks of prowlers’ wrath:
But none are there, and not a brake hath borne
Nor gout of blood, nor shred of mantle torn;

Nor fall nor struggle bath defaced the grass,
Which still retains a mark where murder was:
Nor dabb'ling fingers left to tell the tale,
The bitter print of each convulsive nail,
When agonized hands that cease to guard,
Wound in that pang the smoothness of the sword.
Some such had been, if here a life was left,
But these were not; and doubting hope is left;
And strange suspicion, whispering Lara's name,
Now daily mutters o'er his blacken'd fame;
Then sudden silent when his form appear'd,
Awaits the absence of the thing it fear'd,
Again its wonted wondering to renew,
And dye conjecture with a darker hue.

VII.

Days roll along, and Otho's wounds are heal'd,
But not his pride; and hate no more conceal'd:
He was a man of power, and Lara's foe,
The friend of all who sought to work him woe,
And from his country's justice now demands
Account of Ezzelin at Lara's hands.
Who else than Lara could have cause to fear
His presence? who had made him disappear,
If not the man on whom his menaced change
Had sate too deeply were he left at large?
The general rumor ignorantly loud,
The mystery dearest to the curious crowd;
The seeming friendliness of him who strove
To win no confidence, and wake no love;
The sweeping fierceness which his soul betray'd,
The skill with which he wielded his keen blade;
Where had his arm unwarily caught that art?
Where had that fierceness grown upon his heart?
For it was not the blind capricious rage
A word can kindle and a word assuage;
But the deep working of a soul unmix'd
With aught of pity where its wrath had fix'd;
Such as long power and overgrown success
Concentrates into all that 's merciless:
These, link'd with that desire which ever sways
Mankind, the rather to condemn than praise,
'Gainst Lara gathering raised at length a storm,
Such as himself might fear, and foes would form,
And he must answer for the absent head
Of one that haunts him still, alive or dead.

VIII.

Within that land was many a malcontent,
Who cursed the tyranny to which he bent;
That soil full many a wringing despot saw,
Who work'd his wantonness in form of law;
Long war without and frequent broil within
Had made a path for blood and giant sin,
That waited but a signal to begin
New havoc, such as civil discord blends,
Which knows no neuter, owns but foes or friends;
Fix'd in his feudal fortress each was lord,
In word and deed obey'd, in soul abhorrd.
Thus Lara had inherited his lands,
And with them pining hearts and sluggish hands;
But that long absence from his native clime
Had left him staleness of oppression's crime,
And now, diverted by his milder sway,
All dread by slow degrees had worn away.
The menials felt their usual awe alone,
But more for him than them that fear was grown;
They deem'd him now unhappy, though at first
Their evil judgment augur'd of the worst,
And each long restless night, and silent mood,
Was traced to sickness, fed by solitude:
And though his lonely habits threw of late
Gloom o'er his chamber, cheerful was his gate;
From thence the wretched ne'er unsoothed withdrew,
For them, at least, his soul compassion knew.

Cold to the great, contemptuous to the high,
The humble pass'd not his unheeding eye;
Much he would speak not, but beneath his roof
They found asylum oft, and ne'er reproof.
And they who watch'd might mark that, day by day,

Some new retainers gather'd to his sway;
But most of late, since Ezzelin was lost,
He play'd the courteous lord and bounteous host:
Perchance his strife with Otho made him dread
Some snare prepared for his obnoxious head;
Whate'er his view, his favor more obtains
With these, the people, than his fellow thanes.
If this were policy, so far 't was sound,
The million judg'd but of him as they found;
From him, by sinner chiefs to exile driven,
They but required a shelter, and 't was given,
By him no peasant mourned his rifed cot,
And scarce the Serf could murmur o'er his lot;
With him old avarice found its hoard secure,
With him contempt forbore to mock the poor;
Youth present cheer and promised recompense
Detain'd, till all too late to part from thence:
To hate he offer'd, with the coming change,
The deep reversion of delay'd revenge;
To love, long baffled by the unequal match,
The well-won charms success was sure to snatch
All now was ripe, he waits but to proclaim
That slavery nothing which ~~was~~ still a name.
The moment came, the hour when Otho thought,
Secure at last the vengeance which he sought:
His summons found the destined criminal
Begirt by thousands in his swarming hall,
Fresh from their feudal fetters newly risen,
Defying earth, and confident of heaven.
That morning he had freed the soil-bound slaves
Who dig no land for tyrants but their graves!
Such is their cry—some watchword for the fight
Must vindicate the wrong, and warp the right:
Religion—freedom—vengeance—what you will,
A word 's enough to raise mankind to kill;
Some factious phrase by cunning caught and spread,
That guilt may reign, and wolves and worms be fed.

IX.

Throughout that clime the feudal chiefs had gain'd
Such sway, their infant monarch hardly reign'd;
Now was the hour for faction's rebel growth,
The Serfs contemn'd the one, and hated both:
They waited but a leader, and they found
One to their cause inseparably bound;
By circumstance compell'd to plunge again,
In self-defence, amidst the strife of men,
Cut off by some mysterious fate from those Whom birth and nature meant not for his foes,
Had Lara from that night, to him accurst,
Prepared to meet, but not alone, the worst:
Some reason urg'd, whate'er it was, to shun
Inquiry into deeds at distance done;
By mingling with his own the cause of all,
E'en if he fail'd, he still delay'd his fall.
The sullen calm that long his bosom kept,
The storm that once had spent itself and slept,
Roused by events that seem'd 'd foredoom'd to urge
His gloomy fortunes to their utmost verge,
Burst forth, and made him all he once had been,
And is again; he only changed the scene.
Light care had he for life, and less for fame,
But not less fitted for the desperate game;
He deem'd himself mark'd out for others' hate,
And mock'd at ruin so they shared his fate.
What cared he for the freedom of the crowd?
He raised the humble but to bend the proud.
He had hoped quiet in his sullen lair,
But man and destiny beset him there;
Inured to hunters, he was found at bay;
And they must kill, they cannot snare the prey.

Stern, unshakable, silent, he had been
 Hunched a man a spectator of life's scene;
 But dragg'd again upon the arena, stood
 A leader not unequal to the feud;
 In voice—sister—sister—savage nature spoke,
 And from his eye the gladiator broke.

X.

What boots the oft-repeated tale of strife,
 The feast of vultures, and the waste of life?
 The varying fortunes of each separate field,
 The force that vanquish, and the faint that yield?
 The smoking ruin, and the crumbled wall?
 In this the struggle was the same with all:
 Save that distemper'd passions lent their force
 In bitterness that banish'd all remorse.
 None sued, for Mercy knew her cry was vain,
 The captive died upon the battle-plain:
 In either camp, one rage alone possess'd
 The spirit of the alternate victor's breast;
 And they that strove for freedom or for away,
 Dead or alive were slain, while more remain'd to slay.

It was too late to check the wasting hand,
 And desolation reas'd the desolate land;
 The torch was lighted, and the flame was spread,
 And Carnage smil'd upon her daily dead.

XI.

Fresh with the nerve the new-born impulse strong,
 The first moment to Lara's numbers clung:
 But that vain victory hath ruin'd all;
 They turn no longer to their leader's call:
 In blind confusion on the foe they press,
 And think to snatch in to secure success.
 The lust of booty, and the thirst of hate,
 Live on the broken brigades to their fate:
 In vain he deth whate'er a chief may do,
 To check the headlong fury of that crew:
 In vain their stubborn order he would tame,
 The hand that kindles cannot quench the flame;
 The wary foe alone hath turn'd their mood,
 And shows their rashness to that erring brood:
 The helm'd helmet, the nightly ambuscade,
 The dally harass, and the fight delay'd,
 The long privation of the hoped supply,
 The tedious rest beneath the humid sky,
 The stubborn wall that mocks the leaguer's art,
 And tells the violence of his baffled heart,
 Of these they had not deem'd: the battle-day
 They could encounter as a veteran may;
 But more profound the fury of the strife,
 And greater death, to hourly suffering life:
 And famine wrings, and fever sweeps away
 His numbers melting fast from their array;
 Intense and desperate fates to discontent,
 And Lara's soul alone seems still content:
 But few remain to aid his voice and hand,
 And thousands dwell'd to a scanty band:
 Desperate, though few, the last and best remain'd
 To mount the standards they late disdain'd.
 One long-survive, the frontier is not far,
 And thence they may escape from native war;
 And hear within them to the neighboring state
 An exile's welcome, or an outlaw's hate:
 And bid their father-land to quit,
 And bid their father-land to quit, or submit.

XII.

It was the march—consenting Night
 Gave them their dim and torchless flight:
 Alas! the march—its tranquil beam
 Gave them the barrier stream;
 Alas! the march—its tranquil beam
 Gave them the hostile rank.
 Alas! the march—its tranquil beam
 Gave them the hostile rank.
 Alas! the march—its tranquil beam
 Gave them the hostile rank.

Are those the shepherds' fires upon the height?
 Alas! they blaze too widely for the sight:
 Cut off from hope, and compass'd in the toil,
 Less blood perchance hath bought a richer spoil!

XIII.

A moment's pause—'t is but to breathe their band,
 Or shall they onward press, or here withstand?
 It matters little—if they charge the foe
 Who by their border-stream their march oppose,
 Some few, perchance, may break and pass the line,
 However link'd to baffle such design.
 "The charge be ours! to wait for their assault
 Were fate well worthy of a coward's halt."
 Forth flies each sabre, rein'd is every steed,
 And the next word shall scarce onistrip the deed:
 In the next tone of Lara's gathering breath
 How many shall but hear the voice of death!

XIV.

His blade is bared,—in him there is an air
 As deep, but far too tranquil for despair;
 A something of indifference more than then
 Becomes the bravest, if they feel for men.
 He turn'd his eye on Kaled, ever near,
 And still too faithful to betray one fear:
 Perchance 't was but the moon's dim twilight threw
 Along his aspect an unwonted hue
 Of mournful paleness, whose deep tint express'd
 The truth, and not the terror of his breast.
 This Lara mark'd, and laid his hand on his:
 It trembled not in such an hour as this;
 His lip was silent, scarcely beat his heart,
 His eye alone proclaim'd, "We will not part!
 Thy band may perish, or thy friends may see,
 Farewell to life, but not adieu to thee!"

The word hath pass'd his lips, and onward driven,
 Pours the link'd band through ranks asunder riven;
 Well has each steed obey'd the armed heli,
 And flash the scimitars, and rings the steel;
 Outnumber'd, not outbraved, they still oppose
 Despair to daring, and a front to foes;
 And blood is mingled with the dashing stream,
 Which runs all redly till the morning beam.

XV.

Commanding, aiding, animating all,
 Where foe appear'd to press, or friend to fall,
 Cheers Lara's voice, and waves or strikes his steel,
 Inspiring hope himself had ceased to feel.
 None fled, for well they knew that fight was vain;
 But those that waver turn to smile again,
 While yet they find the firmest of the foe
 Recall before their leader's look and blow:
 Now rife with numbers, now almost alone,
 He rolls their ranks, or reunites his own;
 Himself he spared not—once they seem'd to fly—
 Now was the time, he waved his hand on high,
 And shook—Why sudden droops that plumed crest?
 The shaft is sped—the arrow 's in his breast!
 That fatal gesture left the unguarded side,
 And Death has stricken down yon arm of pride.
 The word of triumph faded from his tongue;
 That hand, so raised, how droopingly it hung!
 But yet the sword instinctively retains,
 Though from its fellow shrink the falling reins;
 These Kaled snatches: dizzy with the blow,
 And senseless bending o'er his saddle-bow,
 Perceives not Lara that his anxious page
 Beguiles his charger from the combat's rage:
 Meantime his followers charge, and charge again;
 Too mix'd the slayers now to heed the slain!

XVI.

Day glimmers on the dying and the dead,
 The cloven cuirass, and the helmetless head;

The war-horse masterless is on the earth,
And that last gasp hath burst his bloody girth;
And near, yet quivering with what life remain'd,
The heel that urged him and the hand that rein'd;
And some too near that rolling torrent lie,
Whose waters mock the lip of those that die;
That panting thirst which scorches in the breath
Of those that die the soldier's fiery death,
In vain impels the burning mouth to crave
One drop—the last—to cool it for the grave;
With feeble and convulsive effort swept,
Their limbs along the crimson'd turf have crept;
The faint remains of life such struggles waste,
But yet they reach the stream, and bend to taste:
They feel its freshness, and almost partake—
Why pause? No further thirst have they to slake—
It is unquench'd, and yet they feel it not;
It was an agony—but now forgot!

XVII.

Beneath a lime, remoter from the scene,
Where but for him that strife had never been,
A breathing but devoted warrior lay:
'T was Lara bleeding fast from life away.
His follower once, and now his only guide,
Kneels Kaled watchful o'er his willing side,
And with his scarf would stanch the tide that rush,
With each convulsion, in a blacker gush;
And then, as his faint breathing waxes low,
In feebler, not less fatal tricklings flow:
He scarce can speak, but motions him 'tis vain,
And merely adds another throb to pain.
He clasps the hand that pang which would assuage,
And sadly smiles his thanks to that dark page,
Who nothing fears, nor feels, nor heeds, nor sees,
Save that damp brow which rests upon his knees;
Save that pale aspect, where the eye, though dim,
Held all the light that shone on earth for him.

XVIII.

The foe arrives, who long had search'd the field,
Their triumph nought till Lara too should yield:
They would remove him, but they see 't were vain,
And he regards them with a calm disdain,
That rose to reconcile him with his fate,
And that escape to death from living hate:
And Otho comes, and leaping from his steed,
Looks on the bleeding foe that made him bleed,
And questions of his state; he answers not,
Scarce glances on him as on one forgot,
And turns to Kaled:—each remaining word
They understood not, if distinctly heard;
His dying tones are in that other tongue,
To which some strange remembrance wildly clung.
They spoke of other scenes, but what—is known
To Kaled, whom their meaning reach'd alone;
And he replied, though faintly, to their sound,
While gazed the rest in dumb amazement round:
They seem'd even then—that twain—unto the last
To half forget the present in the past;
To share between themselves some separate fate,
Whose darkness none beside should penetrate.

XIX.

Their words though faint were many—from the tone
Their import those who heard could judge alone:
From this, you might have deem'd young Kaled's death
More near than Lara's by his voice and breath,
So sad, so deep, and hesitating broke
The accents his scarce-moving pale lips spoke;
But Lara's voice, though low, at first was clear
And calm, till murmuring death gasp'd hoarsely near.
But from his visage little could we guess,
So unrepentant, dark, and passionless,

Save that when struggling nearer to his last,
Upon that page his eye was kindly cast;
And once, as Kaled's answering accents ceased,
Rose Lara's hand, and pointed to the East:
Whether (as then the breaking sun from high Roll'd back the clouds) the morrow caught his eye,
Or that 't was chance, or some remember'd scene,
That raised his arm to point where such had been,
Scarce Kaled seem'd to know, but turn'd away,
As if his heart abhor'd that coming day,
And shrunk his glance before that morning light,
To look on Lara's brow—where all grew night.
Yet ~~some~~ ^{some} seem'd left, though better were its loss;
For when one near display'd the absolving cross,
And proffer'd to his touch the holy bead,
Of which his parting soul might own the need,
He look'd upon it with an eye profane,
And smiled—Heaven pardon! if 't were with disdain;

And Kaled, though he spoke not, nor withdrew
From Lara's face his fix'd despairing view,
With brow repulsive, and with gesture swift,
Flung back the hand which held the sacred gift,
As if such but disturb'd the expiring man,
Nor seem'd to know his life but then began,
That life of Immortality, secure
To none, save them whose faith in Christ is sure.

XX.

But gazing twined the breath that Lara drew,
And dull the film along his dim eye grew;
His limbs stretch'd fluttering, and his head droop'd
o'er
The weak yet still untiring knee that bore;
He press'd the hand he held upon his heart—
It beats no more, but Kaled will not part
With the cold grasp, but feels, and feels in vain,
For that faint throb which answers not again.
"It beats!"—Away, thou dreamer! he is gone—
It once was Lara which thou look'st upon.

XXI.

He gazed, as if not yet had pass'd away
The haughty spirit of that humble clay;
And those around have roused him from his trance,
But cannot tear from thence his fixed glance;
And when, in raising him from where he bore
Within his arms the form that felt no more,
He saw the head his breast would still sustain,
Roll down like earth to earth upon the plain;
He did not dash himself thereby, nor tear
The glossy tendrils of his raven hair,
But strove to stand and gaze, but reel'd and fell,
Scarce breathing more than that he loved so well.
Than that he loved! Oh! never yet beneath
The breast of man such trusty love may breathe!
That trying moment bath at once reveal'd
The secret long and yet but half conceal'd;
In baring to revive that lifeless breast,
His grief seem'd ended, but the sex confess'd;
And life return'd, and Kaled felt no shame—
What now to her was Womanhood or Fame?

XXII.

And Lara sleeps not where his fathers sleep,
But where he died his grave was dug as deep;
Nor is his mortal slumber less profound,
Though priest nor bless'd, nor marble deck'd the mound;
And he was mourn'd by one whose quiet grief,
Less loud, outlasts a people's for their chief.
Vain was all question ask'd her of the past,
And vain e'en menace—silent to the last;
She told nor whence, nor why she left behind
Her all for one who seem'd but little kind.
Why did she love him? Curious fool!—be still—
Is human love the growth of human will?

To her he might be gentleness; the stern
Have deeper thoughts than your dull eyes discern,
And when they love, your smiles guess not how
Beats the strong heart, though less the lips avow.
They were not common links, that form'd the chain
That bound to Lara Kaled's heart and brain;
But that wild tale she brook'd not to unfold,
And said 'tis now each lip that could have told.

XXIII.

They laid him in the earth, and on his breast,
Beside the wound that sent his soul to rest,
They found the scatter'd dints of many a scar,
Which were not planted there in recent war;
Where'er had pass'd his summer years of life,
It seems they vanish'd in a land of strife;
But all unknown his glory or his guilt,
These only told that somewhere blood was spilt,
And Kaledin, who might have spoke the past,
Return'd no more—that night appear'd his last.

XXIV.

Upon that night (a peasant's is the tale)
A bar that cross'd the intervening vale,
When Cynthia's light almost gave way to morn,
And nearly veil'd in mist her waning horn;
A bar, that rose betimes to thread the wood,
And bow the bough that bough't his children's food,
Pass'd by the river that divides the plain
Of Obo's lands and Lara's broad domain:
He heard a tramp—a horse and horseman broke
From out the wood—before him was a cloak
Wung round some burthen at his saddle bow; as Past was his head, and hidden was his brow.
Reared by the sudden sight at such a time,
And some foreboding that it might be crime,
Himself unbended watch'd the stranger's course,
Who reach'd the river, bounded from his horse,
And flung thence the burthen which he bore,
Heaved up the bank, and dash'd it from the shore,
Then pass'd, and look'd, and turn'd, and seem'd to watch,
And still another hurried glance would snatch,
And follow with his step the stream that flow'd,
As if even yet too much its surface show'd:
At once he started, stoop'd, around him strown
The winter floods had scatter'd heaps of stone;
Of them the heaviest thence he gather'd there,
And stung them with a more than common care.
Meanwhile the bar had crept to where unseen
Should'st might safely mark what this might mean:

He caught a glimpse, as of a floating breast,
And something glitter'd star-like on the vest;
But ere he well could mark the buoyant trunk,
A massy fragment smote it, and it sunk;
It rose again, but indistinct to view,
And left the waters of a purple hue,
Then deeply disappear'd: the horseman gazed
Till ebb'd the latest eddy it had raised;
Then turning, vaulted on his pawing steed,
And instant spur'd him into panting speed.
His face was mask'd—the features of the dead,
If dead it were, escaped the observer's dread;
But if in sooth a star its bosom bore,
Such is the badge that knighthood ever wore,
And such 'tis known Sir Ezzelin had worn
Upon the night that led to such a morn.
If thus he perish'd, Heaven receive his soul!
His undiscover'd limbs to ocean roll:
And charity upon the hope would dwell
It was not Lara's hand by which he fell.

XXV.

And Kaled—Lara—Ezzelin, are gone,
Alike without their monumental stone!
The first, all efforts vainly strove to wean
From lingering where her chieftain's blood had been:
Grief had so tamed a spirit once too proud,
Her tears were few, her wailing never loud;
But furious would you tear her from the spot
Where yet she scarce believed that he was not,
Her eye shot forth with all the living fire
That haunts the tigress in her whelpish ire;
But left to waste her weary moments there,
She talk'd all idly unto shapes of air,
Such as the busy brain of Sorrow paints,
And woe to listen to her fond complaints;
And she would sit beneath the very tree
Where lay his drooping head upon her knee:
And in that posture where she saw him fall,
His words, his looks, his dying grasp recall:
And she had shorn, but saved her raven hair,
And oft would snatch it from her bosom there,
And fold, and press it gently to the ground,
As if she stanch'd anew some phantom's wound.
Herself would question, and for him reply;
Then rising, start, and beckon him to fly
From some imagined spectre in pursuit;
Then seat her down upon some linden's root,
And hide her visage with her meagre hand,
Or trace strange characters along the sand.
This could not last—she lies by him she loved;
Her tale untold—her truth too dearly proved.

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

TO JOHN HOBHOUSE, ESQ.,

This Poem is inscribed.

January 22, 1814.

BY HIS FRIEND.

ADVERTISEMENT.

"THE grand army of the Turks (in 1718), under the Prime Visier, to open to themselves a way into the heart of the Morea, and to form the siege of Napoli di Romania, the most considerable place in all that country,* thought it best in the first place to attack Corinth, upon which they made several storms. The garrison being weakened, and the governor seeing that it was impossible to hold out against so mighty a force, thought it fit to beat a parley: but while they were treating about the articles, one of the magazines in the Turkish camp, where in they had six hundred barrels of powder, blew up by accident, whereby six or seven hundred men were killed; which so enraged the Infidels, that they would not grant any capitulation, but stormed the place with so much fury, that they took it, and put most of the garrison with Signior Minotti, the governor, to the sword. The rest, with Antonio Bambo, proveditor extraordinary, were made prisoners of war."—History of the Turks, vol. iii., p. 151.

The Siege of Corinth.

In the year since Jesus died for men,†
Eighteen hundred years and ten,
We were a gallant company,
Riding o'er land, and sailing o'er sea.
Oh! but we went merrily!
We forded the river, and clomb the high hill,
Never our steeds for a day stood still;
Whether we lay in the cave or the shed,
Our sleep fell soft on the hardest bed:
Whether we couch'd in our rough capote,‡
On the rougher plank of our gliding boat,
Or stretch'd on the beach, or our saddles spread
As a pillow beneath the resting head,
Fresh we woke upon the morrow:
All our thoughts and words had scope,
We had health, and we had hope,
Toll and travel, but no sorrow.

We were of all tongues and creeds;—
Some were those who counted beads,
Some of mosque, and some of church,
And some, or I mis-say, of neither;
Yet through the wide world might ye search,
Nor find a motlier crew nor blither.

But some are dead, and some are gone,
And some are scatter'd and alone,
And some are rebels on the hills;
That look along Epirus' valleys,
Where freedom still at moments rallies,
And pays in blood oppression's ills;
And some are in a far country,
And some all restlessly at home;
But never more, oh! never, we Shall meet to revel and to roam.

But those hardy days flew cheerily!
And when they now fall drearily,

* Napoli di Romania is not now the most considerable place in the Morea, but Tripolizza, where the Pacha resides, and maintains his government. Napoli is near Argos. I visited all three in 1810-11; and in the course of journeying through the country from my first arrival in 1808, I crossed the Isthmus eight times in my way from Attica to the Morea, over the mountains, or in the other direction, when passing from the Gulf of Athens to that of Lepanto. Both the routes are picturesque and beautiful, though very different: that by sea has more sameness; but the voyage being always within sight of land, often very near it, presents many attractive views of the islands Salamis, Egina, Poros, &c., and the coast of the Continent.

† On Christmas day, 1814, Lord Byron, enclosing this fragment to Mr. Murray, says,—"I send some lines, written some time ago, and intended as an opening to the 'Siege of Corinth.' I had forgotten them, and am not sure that they had not better be left out now:—on that, you and your synod can determine."—"They are written," says Moore, "in the loosest form of that rambling style of metre, which his admiration of Mr. Coleridge's 'Christabel' led him, at this time, to adopt." It will be seen, hereafter, that the poet had never read "Christabel" at the time when he wrote these lines:—he had, however, the "Lay of the Last Minstrel." With regard to the character of the species of versification at this time so much in vogue, it may be observed, that feeble imitations have since then vulgarized it a good deal to the general ear: but that in the hands of Mr. Coleridge, Sir Walter Scott, and Lord Byron himself, it has often been employed with the most happy effect. Its irregularity, when moulded under the guidance of a delicate taste, is more to the eye than to the ear, and in fact not greater than was admitted in some of the most delicious of the lyrical measures of the ancient Greeks.

‡ In one of his sea excursions, Lord Byron was nearly lost in a Turkish ship of war, owing to the ignorance of the captain and crew.

§ The last tidings recently heard of Dervish (one of the Arnauts who followed me) state him to be in revolt upon the mountains, at the head of some of the bands common in that country in times of trouble.

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

My thoughts, like swallows, skim the main,
And bear my spirit back again
Over the earth, and through the air,
A wild bird and a wanderer.
Tis this that ever wakes my strain,
And oh, too oh, implores again
The few who may endure my lay,
To follow me so far away.
Stranger—will thou follow now,
And all with me on Acro-Corinth's brow?

I.

Many a vanish'd year and age,
And tempest's breath, and battle's rage,
Have swept o'er Corinth; yet she stands,
A fortress firm'd to Freedom's hands.
The whirlwind's wrath, the earthquake's shock,
Have left untouched her hoary rock,
The keystone of a land, which still,
Though fall'n, looks proudly on that hill,
The landmark to the double tide
That perpling rolls on either side,
As if their waters chafed to meet,
Yet pause and crouch beneath her feet.
They could the blood before her shed
None but Thucydæ's brother bleed,
Or fell'd Perseus' despot fled.
Safe from out the earth which drank
The stream of slaughter as it sank,
That sanguine ocean would o'erflow
The Isthmus idly spread below:
Or would the bones of all the slain,
The parish'd there, be piled again,
That rival pyramid might rise
More mountain-like, through those clear skies,
Than yon tower-crag'd Acropolis,
Which seems the very clouds to kiss.

II.

On Sun Clithemon's ridge appears
The glens of twice ten thousand spears;
And downward to the Isthmian plain,
From shore to shore of either main,
The tent is pitch'd, the crescent shines
Along the Moslem's lagging lines;
And the dark Spahi's bands advance
Beneath each banner'd pacha's glance;
And far and wide as eye can reach
The turban'd cohorts throng the beach;
And there the Arab's camel kneels,
And there his sword the Turkler wheels;
The Egyptian hawk left his hand,
The snake around his lair to gird;
And there the pelting thunders pour,
The whirring grow another to the roar,
The cannon in the cannon's breath
The smoke for smothering globe of death;
The fragments from the wall,
The ponderous ball with the ponderous ball:
The cannon with the two replies,
The smoke and smoky skies,
The answer fast and well
The infidel.

And when the life of his brother Thmo-
... killed him for aiming at the ... duty to his country
... Dr. Whiston says, that Pope
... given on the story, and that
... which obliges them to
... own expense.
... and patriarchal:
... and Ground

III.

But near and nearest to the wall
Of those who wish and work its fall,
With deeper skill in war's black art
Than Othman's sons, and high of heart
As any chief that ever stood
Triumphant in the fields of blood;
From post to post, and deed to deed,
Fast spurring on his reeking steed,
Where rallying ranks the trench assail,
And make the foremost Moslem quail;
Or where the battery, guarded well,
Remains as yet impregnable,
Alighting cheerily to inspire
The soldier slackening in his fire;
The first and freshest of the host
Which Stamboul's sultan there can boast,
To guide the follower o'er the field,
To point the tube, the lance to wield,
Or whirl around the bickering blade;—
Was Alp, the Adrian renegade!

IV.

From Venice—once a race of worth
His gentle sire—he drew his birth;
But late an exile from her shore,
Against his countrymen he bore
The arms they taught to bear; and now
The turban girt his shaven brow.
Through many a change had Corinth pass'd
With Greece to Venice' rule at last;
And here, before her walls, with those
To Greece and Venice equal foes,
He stood a foe, with all the zeal
Which young and fiery converts feel,
Within whose heated bosom throng
The memory of a thousand wrongs.
To him had Venice ceased to be
Her ancient civic boast—"the Free;"
And in the palace of St. Mark
Unnamed accusers in the dark
Within the "Lion's mouth" had placed
A charge against him unrefused:
He fled in time, and saved his life,
To waste his future years in strife,
That taught his hand how great her loss
In him who triumph'd o'er the cross,
Against which he rear'd the crescent high,
And battled to avenge or die.

V.

Counourgi!—be whose closing scene
Adorn'd the triumph of Eugene,
When on Carlowitz' bloody plain,
The last and mightiest of the slain,
He sank, regretting not to die,
But cursed the Christian's victory—
Counourgi!—can his glory cease,
That latest conqueror of Greece,
Till Christian hands to Greece restore
The freedom Venice gave of yore?
A hundred years have roll'd away
Since he retir'd the Moslem's way,
And now he led the Mussulman,
And gave the guidance of the van

Visit to Achmet III., after recovering Peloponnesus from the Venetians in one campaign, was mortally wounded in the next against the Germans, at the battle of Peterwaradin (in the plain of Carlowitz), in Hungary, endeavoring to rally his guards. He died of his wounds next day. His last order was the decapitation of General Bruner, and some other German prisoners; and his last words, "Oh that I could thus serve all the Christian dogs!" a speech and act not unlike one of Ge-liglig. He was a young man of great ambition and unbounded presumption; on being told that Prince Eugene, then opposed to him, "was a great general," he said, "I shall become a greater, and at his expense."

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

To Alp, who well repaid the trust
By cities level'd with the dust;
And proved, by many a deed of death,
How firm his heart in novel faith.

VI.

The walls grew weak; and fast and hot
Against them pour'd the ceaseless shot,
With unabating fury sent
From battery to battlement;
And thunder-like the pealing din
Rose from each heated culverin:
And here and there some crackling dome
Was fired before the exploding bomb:
And as the fabric sank beneath
The shattering shell's volcanic breath,
In red and wreathing columns flash'd
The flame, as loud the ruin crash'd,
Or into countless meteors driven,
Its earth-stars melted into heaven;
Whose clouds that day grew doubly dun,
Impervious to the hidden sun,
With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one wide sky of sulphurous hue.

VII.

But not for vengeance, long delay'd,
Alone, did Alp, the renegade,
The Moslem warriors sternly teach
His skill to pierce the promised breach:
Within these walls a maid was pent
His hope would win, without consent
Of that inexorable sire,
Whose heart refused him in its ire,
When Alp, beneath his Christian name,
Her virgin hand aspired to claim.
In happier mood, and earlier time,
While unimpeach'd for traitorous crime,
Gayest in gondola or hall,
He glitter'd through the Carnival;
And tuned the softest serenade
That e'er on Adria's waters play'd
At midnight to Italian maid.

VIII.

And many deem'd her heart was won;
For sought by numbers, given to none,
Had young Francesca's hand remain'd
Still by the church's bonds unchain'd:
And when the Adriatic bore
Lancelotto to the Paynim shore,
Her wonted smiles were seen to fall,
And pensive wax'd the maid and pale;
More constant at confessional,
More rare at masque and festival;
Or seen at such with downcast eyes,
Which conquer'd hearts they ceased to prize:
With listless look she seems to gaze;
With humbler care her form arrays;
Her voice less lively in the song;
Her step, though light, less fleet among
The pairs, on whom the Morning's glance
Breaks, yet unseated with the dance.

IX.

Sent by the state to guard the land
(Which, wrested from the Moslem's hand,
While Sobieski tamed his pride
By Buda's wall and Danube's side,
The chiefs of Venice wrung away
From Patra to Euboea's bay),
Minotti held in Corinth's towers
The Doge's delegated powers,
While yet the pitying eye of Peace
Smiled o'er her long-forgotten Greece:
And ere that faithless truce was broke
Which freed her from the unchristian yoke,

With him his gentle daughter came;
Nor there, since Menelaus' dame
Forsook her lord and land, to prove
What woes await on lawless love,
Had fairer form adorn'd the shore
Than she, the matchless stranger, bore.

X.

The wall is rent, the ruins yawn;
And, with to-morrow's earliest dawn,
O'er the disjointed mass shall vault
The foremost of the fierce assault.
The bands are rank'd; the chosen van
Of Tartar and of Mussulman,
The full of hope, misnamed "forlorn,"
Who hold the thought of death in scorn,
And win their way with falchion's force,
Or pave the path with many a corpse,
O'er which the following brave may rise,
Their stepping-stone—the last who dies!

XI.

'T is midnight: on the mountains brown
The cold, round moon shines deeply down;
Blue roll the waters, blue the sky
Spreads like an ocean hung on high,
Bespangled with those isles of light,
So wildly, spiritually bright;
Who ever gazed upon them shining
And turn'd to earth without repining,
Nor wish'd for wings to flee away,
And mix with their eternal ray?
The waves on either shore lay there
Calm, clear, and azure as the air;
And scarce their foam the pebbles shook,
But murmur'd meekly as the brook.
The winds were pillow'd on the waves;
The banners droop'd along their staves,
And, as they fell around them furling,
Above them shone the crescent curling;
And that deep silence was unbroke,
Save where the watch his signal spoke,
Save where the steed neigh'd oft and shrill,
And echo answer'd from the hill,
And the wide hum of that wild host
Rustled like leaves from coast to coast,
As rose the Muezzin's voice in air
In midnight call to wonted prayer:
It rose, that chanted mournful strain,
Like some lone spirit's o'er the plain:
'T was musical, but sadly sweet,
Such as when winds and harp-strings meet,
And take a long unmeasured tone,
To mortal minstrelsy unknown.
It seem'd to those within the wall
A cry prophetic of their fall:
It struck even the besieger's ear
With something ominous and drear,
An undefined and sudden thrill,
Which makes the heart a moment still,
Then beat with quicker pulse, ashamed
Of that strange sense its silence framed;
Such as a sudden passing-bell
Wakes, though but for a stranger's knell.

XII.

The tent of Alp was on the shore;
The sound was hush'd, the prayer was o'er;
The watch was set, the night-round made,
All mandates issued and obey'd:
'T is but another anxious night,
His pains the morrow may requite
With all revenge and love can pay,
In guerdon for their long delay.
Few hours remain, and he hath need
Of rest, to nerve for many a deed

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

Of slaughter: but within his soul
The thoughts like troubled waters roll.
He stood alone among his host;
Not his loud fanfare boast
To plant the crescent o'er the cross,
Or risk a life with little loss,
Secure in paradise to be
By flowers loved immortality:
Not his, what burning patriots feel,
The stern smallness of zeal,
Profuse of blood, untired in toil,
When bending on the parent soil.
He stood alone—a renegade
Against the country he betray'd;
He stood alone amidst his band,
Without a trusted heart or hand:
They follow'd him, for he was brave,
And great the spell he got and gave;
They crowd'd to him, for he had skill
To warn and wield the vulgar will:
But still his Christian origin
With them was little less than sin.
They curd over his faithless fame
As curd beneath a Wine name;
Since he, their mightiest chief, had been
In youth a bitter Wine.
They did not know how pride can stoop,
When baffled feelings withering droop;
They did not know how hate can burn
In hearts once changed from soft to stern;
Nor all the false and fatal seal
The current of revenge can feel.
He ruled them—man may rule the worst,
By ever daring to be first:
No loss o'er the jackal's way;
The jackal points, he feels the prey,
Then on the vulgar pelting press,
To gauge the relics of success.

XIII.

His head grows fever'd, and his pulse
The quick successive throbs convulse:
In vain from side to side he throws
His form, in search of repose;
Or if he dares, a sound, a start
Awake him with a sullen heart.
The turban on his hot brow press'd,
The mail weigh'd leadlike on his breast,
Though oft and long beneath its weight
Upon his eyes had slumber sat,
Without or couch or canopy
Except a rougher field and sky.
Then now might yield a warrior's bed,
Then now along the heaven was spread.
He could not rest, he could not stay
Within his tent to wait for day,
But walk'd his death along the sand,
Where frowning sleepers strew'd the strand.
What effort then? and why should he Hesitate when the humblest be,
Those whom their toil, worms their toll?
And yet the dream of spoil;
When to the shore thousands pass'd
A night of sleep, prophaned their last,
In slumber'd sleepers strew'd on,
And the sea's grand upon.

XIV.

He could not move light
From the tent of the night.
He could not, though calm,
With airy balm:
He could not, when him lay,
And said, and bay,
He could not, when the show,
He could not, when the show,
He could not, when the show,

Through thousand summers brightly gone,
Along the gulf, the mount, the clime;
It will not melt, like man, to time:
Tyrant and slave are swept away,
Less form'd to wear before the ray;
But that white veil, the lightest, faintest,
Which on the mighty mount thou haltest,
While tower and tree are torn and rent,
Shines o'er its craggy battlement;
In form a peak, in height a cloud,
In texture like a hovering shroud,
Thus high by parting Freedom spread,
As from her fond abode she fled,
And linger'd on the spot, where long
Her prophet spirit spake in song.
Oh! still her step at moments falters
O'er wither'd fields, and ruin'd altars,
And pain would wake, in souls too broken,
By pointing to each glorious token:
But vain her voice, till better days
Dawn in those yet remember'd rays,
Which shone upon the Persian flying,
And saw the Spartan smile in dying.

XV.

Not mindless of these mighty times
Was Alp, despite his flight and crimes;
And through this night, as on he wander'd,
And o'er the past and present ponder'd,
And thought upon the glorious deed
Who there in better cause had bled,
He felt how faint and feebly dim
The fame that could accrue to him,
Who cheer'd the band, and waved the sword,
A traitor in a turban'd horde;
And led them to the lawless siege,
Whose best success were sacrilege.
Not so had those his fancy number'd,
The chiefs whose dust around him slumber'd;
Their phalanx marshall'd on the plain,
Whose bulwarks were not then in vain,
They fell devoted, but undying;
The very gale their name eom'd sighing:
The waters murmur'd of their name;
The woods were peopled with their fame;
The silent pillar, lone and gray,
Claim'd kindred with their sacred clay;
Their spirits wrapp'd the dusky mountain,
Their memory sparkled o'er the fountain;
The meaneft rill, the mightiest river
Roll'd mingling with their fame for ever.
Despite of every yoke she bears,
That land is glory's still and theirs!
'Tis still a watchword to the earth:
When man would do a deed of worth
He points to Greece, and turns to tread,
So sanction'd, on the tyrant's head:
He looks to her, and rushes on Where life is lost, or freedom won.

XVI.

Still by the shore Alp mutely mused,
And woo'd the freshness night diffused.
There shrinks no ebb in that tideless sea,*
Which changeless rolls eternally;
So that wildest of waves, in their angriest mood,
Scarce break on the bounds of the land for a rood:
And the powerless moon beholds them flow,
Heedless if she come or go:
Calm or high, in main or bay,
On their course she hath no sway.
The rock unworn its base doth bare,
And looks o'er the surf, but it comes not there;

*The reader need hardly be reminded that there are no perceptible tides in the Mediterranean.

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

And the fringe of the foam may be seen below,
On the line that it left long ages ago:
A smooth short space of yellow sand
Between it and the greener land.

He wander'd on along the beach,
Till within the range of a carbine's reach
Of the leaguer'd wall; but they saw him not,
Or how could he 'escape from the hostile shot?
Did traitors lurk in the Christians' hold?
Were their hands grown stiff, or their hearts wax'd cold?

I know not, in sooth; but from yonder wall
There dash'd no fire, and there hiss'd no ball,
Though he stood beneath the bastion's frown,
That flank'd the seaward gate of the town;
Though he heard the sound, and could almost tell
The sullen words of the sentinel,
As his measured step on the stone below
Clank'd, as he paced it to and fro;
And he saw the lean dogs beneath the wall
Hold o'er the dead their carnival,
Gorging and growling o'er carcasses and limb;
They were too busy to bark at him!
From a Tartar's skull they had stripp'd the flesh,
As ye peel the fig when its fruit is fresh;
And their white tusks crunch'd o'er the whiter skull.

As it allipp'd through their jaws, when their edge grew dull,
As they lazily mumbled the bones of the dead,
When they scarce could rise from the spot where they fed;

So well had they broken a lingering fast
With those who had fallen for that night's repast.
And Alp knew, by the turbans that roll'd on the sand,

The foremost of these were the best of his band:
Crimson and green were the shawls of their wear,
And each scalp had a single long tuft of hair,
All the rest was shaven and bare.
The scalp was in the wild dog's maw,
The hair was tangled round his jaw:
But close by the shore, on the edge of the gulf,
There sat a vulture flapping a wolf,
Who had stolen from the hills, but kept away,
Scared by the dogs, from the human prey;
But he seized on his share of a steed that lay,
Pick'd by the birds, on the sands of the bay.

XVII.

Alp turned him from the sickening sight:
Never had shaken his nerves in fight;
But he better could brook to behold the dying,
Deep in the tide of their warm blood lying,
Scorch'd with the death-thirst, and writhing in vain,
Than the perishing dead who are past all pain.
There is something of pride in the perilous hour,
Whatever be the shape in which death may lower;
For Fame is there to say who bleeds,
And Honor's eye on daring deeds!
But when all is past, it is humbling to tread
O'er the weltering field of the tombless dead,
And see worms of the earth, and fowls of the air,
Beasts of the forest, all gathering there;
All regarding man as their prey,
All rejoicing in his decay.

XVIII.

There is a temple in ruin stands,
Fashion'd by long-forgotten hands;
Two or three columns, and many a stone,
Marble and granite, with grass o'ergrown!
Out upon Time! it will leave no more
Of the things to come than the things before!
Out upon Time! who for ever will leave
But enough of the past for the future to grieve

O'er that which hath been, and o'er that which must be:

What we have seen, our sons shall see;
Remnants of things that have pass'd away,
Fragments of stone, rear'd by creatures of clay!

XIX.

He sat him down at a pillar's base,
And pass'd his hand athwart his face;
Like one in dreamy musing mood,
Declining was his attitude;
His head was drooping on his breast,
Fever'd, throbbing, and oppress'd;
And o'er his brow, so downward bent,
Oft his beating fingers went,
Hurriedly, as you may see
Your own run over the ivory key,
Ere the measured tone is taken
By the chords you would awaken.
There he sat all heavily,
As he heard the night-wind sigh.
Was it the wind through some hollow stone
Sent that soft and tender moan?
He lifted his head, and he look'd on the moon,
But it was unrippled as glass may be;
He look'd on the long grass—it waved not a blade;
How was that gentle sound convey'd?
He look'd to the banners—each flag lay still,
So did the leaves on Citheron's hill,
And he felt not a breath come over his cheek;
What did that sudden sound bespeak?
He turn'd to the left—is he sure of sight?
There sat a lady, youthful and bright!

XX.

He started up with more of fear
Than if an armed foe were near.
"God of my fathers! what is here?
Who art thou, and wherefore sent
So near a hostile armament?"
His trembling hands refused to sign
The cross he deem'd no more divine;
He had resumed it in that hour,
But conscience wrung away the power.
He gazed, he saw: he knew the face
Of beauty, and the form of grace;
It was Francesca by his side,
The maid who might have been his bride!

The rose was yet upon her cheek,
But mellow'd with a tenderer streak:
Where was the play of her soft lips fled?
Gone was the smile that enliv'd their red.
The ocean's calm within their view,
Beside her eye had less of blue;
But like that cold wave it stood still,
And its glance, though clear, was chill.
Around her form a thin robe twining,
Nought conceal'd her bosom shining;
Through the parting of her hair,
Floating darkly downward there,
Her rounded arm show'd white and bare:
And ere yet she made reply,
Once she raised her hand on high:
It was so wan, and transparent of hue,
You might have seen the moon shine through.

XXI.

"I come from my rest to him I love best,
That I may be happy, and he may be bless'd.
I have pass'd the guards, the gate, the wall;
Sought thee in safety through foes and all.
"T is said the lion will turn and flee
From a maid in the pride of her purity;
And the Power on high, that can shield the good
Thus from the tyrant of the wood,

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

Hath extended his mercy to guard me as well
From the hands of the murdering infidel.
I come—and if I come in vain,
Never, oh never, we meet again!
Thou hast done a fearful deed
In falling away from thy fathers' creed:
But dash that turban to earth, and sign
The sign of the cross, and for ever be mine;
Wring the black drop from thy heart,
And to-morrow unites us no more to part."

"And where should our bridal couch be spread?
In the midst of the dying and the dead?
For to-morrow we give to the slaughter and flame
The sons and the virgins of the Christian name.
None, save thou and thine, I've sworn,
Shall be left upon the morn:
But these will I bear to a lovely spot,
Where our hands shall be join'd, and our sorrow forgot."

There thou yet shalt be my bride,
When once again I've quell'd the pride
Of Venice; and her hated race
Have felt the arm they would debase
Scourge, with a whip of scorpions, those Whom Vice and envy made my foes."

Upon his hand she laid her own—
Lest was the touch, but it thrill'd to the bone,
And shot a chilliness to his heart,
Which fix'd him beyond the power to start.
Though slight was that grasp so mortal cold,
He could not loose him from its hold;
But never did clasp of one so dear
Strike on the pulse with such feeling of fear,
As those thin fingers, long and white,
Flew through his blood by their touch that night.
The feverish glow of his brow was gone,
And his heart sank so still that it felt like stone,
As he look'd on the face, and beheld its hue,
So deeply changed from what he knew:
Fair but faint—without the ray
Of mind, that made each feature play
Like sparkling waves on a sunny day;
And her motionless lips lay still as death,
And her words came forth without her breath.
And there rose not a heave o'er her bosom's swell,
And there seem'd not a pulse in her veins to dwell.
Though her eye shone out, yet the lids were fix'd
And the glance that it gave was wild and unmix'd
With sight of change, as the eye may seem
Of the restless who walk in a troubled dream:
Like the features on acres, that gloomily glare,
Murd' by the breath of the wintry air,
So men by the dying lamp's fitful light,
Lidless, but like him, and awful to sight;
As they stare, through the dimness, about to come down.
From the shadowy wall where their images frown;
Faintly gliding he and fro,
As the gales on his tapestry come and go.

"It is not his love of me given
That sends me, but for the love of heaven,—

Again I say—that turban tear
From off thy faithless brow, and swear
Thine injured country's sons to spare,
Or thou art lost: and never shalt see—
Not earth—that's past—but heaven or me.
If this thou dost accord, albeit
A heavy doom 't is thine to meet,
That doom shall half absolve thy sin,
And mercy's gate may receive thee within:
But pause one moment more, and take
The curse of Him thou didst forsake;
And look once more to heaven, and see
Its love for ever shut from thee.
There is a light cloud by the moon—"—
It is passing, and will pass full soon—
If, by the time its vapors fall
Hath ceased her shadowed orb to veil,
Thy heart within thee is not changed,
Then God and man are both avenged;
Dark will thy doom be, darker still Thine immortality of ill."

Alp look'd to heaven, and saw on high
The sign she spake of in the sky;
But his heart was swollen, and turn'd aside,
By deep interminable pride.
This first false passion of his breast
Roll'd like a torrent o'er the rest.
He saw for mercy! He dismay'd
By wild words of a timid maid!
He, wrong'd by Venice, vow to save
Her sons, devoted to the grave!
No—though that cloud were thunder's worst,
And charged to crush him—let it burst!

He look'd upon it earnestly,
Without an accent of reply;
He watch'd it passing: it is down:
Full on his eye the clear moon shone,
And thus he spake—"Whatever my fate,
I am no changeling—it is too late:
The reed in storms may bow and quiver,
Then rise again: the tree must shiver.
What Venice made me, I must be,
Her foe in all save love to thee:
But thou art safe: oh, fly with me!"
He turn'd, but she is gone!
Nothing is there but the column stone.
Hath she sunk in the earth, or melted in air?
He saw not—he knew not—but nothing is there.

XXII.

The night is passed, and shines the sun
As if that morn were a joyful one.
Lightly and brightly breaks away
The Morning from her mantle gray,
And the Noon will look on a sultry day.
Hark to the trumpet, and the drum,
And the mournful sound of the barbarous horn,
And the flap of the banners, that flit as they're borne,
And the neigh of the steed, and the multitude's hum,
And the clash, and the shout, "They come! they come!"

and his accursed drive hold their infernal empire: and, seduced by a malignant phantom, thou art proceeding to surrender thyself to them! This moment is the last of grace allowed thee: give back Nourmahar to her father, who still retains a few sparks of life: destroy thy tower with all its abominations: drive Carathia from thy councils: be just to thy subjects: respect the ministers of the Prophet: compensate for thy impurities by an exemplary life; and, instead of squandering thy days in voluptuous indulgence, lament thy crimes on the sepulchres of thy ancestors. Thou beholdest the clouds that obscure the sun; at the instant he recovers his splendor, if thy heart be not changed, the time of mercy assigned thee will be past for ever."

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

The horse-tails* are pluck'd from the ground, and the sword
From its sheath; and they form, and but wait for the word.

Tartar, and Spahi, and Turcoman,
Strike your tents, and throng to the van;
Mount ye, spur ye, skirr the plain,
That the fugitive may flee in vain,
When he breaks from the town; and none escape,
Aged or young, in the Christian shape;
While your fellows on foot, in a fiery mass,
Bloodstain the breach through which they pass.
The steeds are all bridled, and snort to the rein;
Curved is each neck, and flowing each mane;
White is the foam of their champ on the bit:
The spears are uplifted; the matches are lit;
The cannon are pointed, and ready to roar,
And crush the wall they have crumbled before:
Forms in his phalanx each Janissar;
Ain at their head; his right arm is bare,
So is the blade of his scimitar;
The khan and the pachas are all at their post;
The vizier himself at the head of the host.
When the culverin's signal is fired, then on;
Leave not in Corinth a living one—
A priest at her altars, a chief in her halls,
A hearth in her mansions, a stone on her walls.
God and the prophet—Allah Hu!
Up to the skies with that wild halloo!
"There the breach lies for passage, the ladder to scale;

And your hands on your sabres, and how should ye fall?

He who first downs with the red cross may crave
His heart's dearest wish; let him ask it, and have!"
Thus utter'd Courmourgi, the dauntless vizier;
The reply was the brandish of sabre and spear,
And the shout of fierce thousands in joyous ire:—
Silence—hark to the signal—fire!

XXIII.

As the wolves, that headlong go
On the stately buffalo,
Though with fiery eyes, and angry roar,
And hoofs that stamp, and horns that gore,
He tramples on earth, or tows on high
The foremost, who rush on his strength but to die;

Thus against the wall they went,
Thus the first were backward bent;
Many a bosom, sheathed in brass,
Strew'd the earth like broken glass,
Shiver'd by the shot, that tore
The ground whereon they moved no more:
Even as they fell, in files they lay,
Like the mower's grass at the close of day,
When his work is done on the levell'd plain;
Such was the fall of the foremost slain.

XXIV.

As the spring tides, with heavy splash,
From the cliffs invading dash
Huge fragments, sapp'd by the ceaseless flow,
Till white and thundering down they go,
Like the avalanche's snow
On the Alpine vales below;
Thus at length, outbreathed and worn,
Corinth's sons were downward borne
By the long and oft renew'd
Charge of the Moslem multitude.
In firmness they stood, and in masses they fell,
Heap'd, by the host of the infidel,
Hand to hand, and foot to foot:
Nothing there, save death, was mute;

Strokes, and thrust, and flash, and cry
For quarter, or for victory,
Mingle there with the volleying thunder,
Which makes the distant cities wonder
How the sounding battle goes,
If with them, or for their foes;
If they must mourn, or may rejoice
In that annihilating voice,
Which pierces the deep hills through and through
With an echo dread and new:
You might have heard it, on that day,
O'er Salamis and Megara;
(We have heard the hearers say,)
Even unto Persus' bay.

XXV.

From the point of encountering blades to the hit,
Sabres and swords with blood were gilt;
But the rampart is won, and the spoil begun,
And all but the after carnage done.
Shriiller shrieks now mingling come
From within the plunder'd dome:
Hark to the haste of flying feet,
That splash in the blood of the slippery street!
But here and there, where vantage ground
Against the foe may still be found,
Desperate groups, of twelve or ten,
Make a pause, and turn again—
With banded backs against the wall,
Fiercely stand, or fighting fall.

There stood an old man—his hairs were white,
But his veteran arm was full of might:
So gallantly bore he the brunt of the fray,
The ~~dead~~ before him, on that day,
In a semicircle lay;
Still he combated unwounded,
Though retreating, unsurrounded.
Many a scar of former fight
Lurk'd beneath his corselet bright;
But of every wound his body bore,
Each and all had been ta'en before:
Though aged, he was so iron of limb,
Few of our youth could cope with him;
And the foe, whom he singly kept at bay,
Outnumber'd his thin hairs of silver gray.
From right to left his sabre swept;
Many an Ottoman mother wept
Sons that were unborn, when dipp'd
His weapon first in Moslem gore,
Ere his years could count a score.
Of all he might have been the sire
Who fell that day beneath his ire:
For, sooner left long years ago,
His wrath made many a childless foe;
And since the day, when in the strait†
His only boy had met his fate,
His parent's iron hand did doom
More than a human hecatomb.
If shades by carnage be appeased,
Patroclus' spirit less was pleased
Than his, Minotti's son, who died
Where Asia's bounds and ours divide.
Buried he lay, where thousands lay
For thousands of years were inhumed on the shore;

What of them is left, to tell
Where they lie, and how they fell?
Not a stone on their turf, nor a bone in their graves;
But they live in the verse that immortally saves.

XXVI.

Hark to the Allah shout! a band
Of the Mussulman bravest and best is at hand:

* The horse-tails, fixed upon a lance, forming a pacha's standard.

† In the naval battle at the mouth of the Dardanelles, between the Venetians and the Turks.

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

Their leader's nervous arm is bare,
Twifter to strike, and never to spare—
Unclenched to the shoulder it waves them on;
Thus in the fight is he ever known:
Others a grander path may show,
To turn the spoil of the greedy foe;
Many a hand 's on a richer hill;
But none on a steel more ruddily gilt;
Many a leather turban may wear,—
Alp is best known by the white arm bare;
Look through the thick of the fight, 'tis there!
There is not a standard on that shore
So well advanced the ranks before:
There is not a banner in Median war
Will lure the Delbis half so far;
It glances like a falling star!
Where'er that mighty arm is seen,
The bravest be, or late have been;
There the craven cries for quarter
Vainly to the vengeful Tartar;
Or the hero, silent lying,
Scorns to yield a groan in dying;
Mustering his last feeble blow
'Gainst the nearest level'd foe,
Though faint beneath the mutual wound,
Grappling on the gory ground.

XXVII.

Still the old man stood erect,
And Alp's career a moment check'd.
"Yield thee, Minotti; quarter take,
For thine own, thy daughter's sake."

"Never, renegade, never!
Though the life of thy gift would last for ever."

"Francesca!—Oh, my promised bride!
Must she too perish by thy pride?"

"She is safe. '—Where? where?'—"In heaven;
From whence thy traitor soul is driven—
Far from thee, and undefiled."
Grimly then Minotti smiled,
As he saw Alp staggering bow
Before his words, as with a blow.

"Oh God! when did she?"—"Yesternight—
Nor weep I for her spirit's flight:
None of my pure race shall be Slaves to Mahomet and thee—
Come on—!"—"That challenge is in vain—
Alp's already with the slain!"
While Minotti's words were wreaking
More revenge in bitter speaking
Than his father's point had found,
Had the time allow'd to wound,
From within the neighboring porch
Of a long-defended church,
Where the last and desperate few
Would the shifting light renew,
The sharp shot dash'd Alp to the ground;
Ere his eye could view the wound
That crash'd through the brain of the infidel,
Down the eyes, and down he fell;
A look that lay within his eyes
As he bent no more to rise,
As the shades of darkness sunk
On the gasping, panting trunk;
As the last, save a quivering
Of the limbs were slightly shivering;
As he lay on his back; his breast
Dash'd with gore and dust,
As the life-blood ceased,
As the body loos'd;
As the heart no throbs,
As the soul no sighs;

Sigh, nor word, nor struggling breath
Heralded his way to death:
Ere his very thought could pray,
Unanell'd he pass'd away,
Without a hope from mercy's aid,—
To the last a Renegade.

XXVIII.

Fearfully the yell arose
Of his followers, and his foes;
These in joy, in fury those:
Then again in conflict mixing,
Clashing swords, and spears transfixing,
Interchanged the blow and thrust,
Hurling warriors in the dust,
Street by street, and foot by foot,
Still Minotti dares dispute
The latest portion of the land
Left beneath his high command;
With him, aiding heart and hand,
The remnant of his gallant band.
Still the church is tenable.

Whence issued late the fated ball
That half avenged the city's fall
When Alp, her fierce assailant, fell;
Thither bending sternly back,
They leave before a bloody track;
And, with their faces to the foe,
Dealing wounds with every blow,
The chief, and his retreating train,
Join to those within the fans;
There they yet may breathe awhile,
Shelter'd by the masonry pile.

XXIX.

Brief breathing-time! the turban'd host,
With adding ranks and raging boast,
Press onwards with such strength and heat,
Their numbers balk their own retreat;
For narrow the way that led to the spot
Where still the Christians yielded not;
And the foremost, if fearful, may vainly try
Through the massy column to turn and fly;
They perforce must do or die.
They die; but ere their eyes could close,
Avengers o'er their bodies rose;
Fresh and furious, fast they fill
The ranks unthinn'd, though slaughter'd still;
And faint the weary Christians wend
Before the still renew'd attacks:
And now the Othmans gain the gate;
Still resists its iron weight,
And still, all deadly aim'd and hot,
From every crevice comes the shot;
From every shatter'd window pour
The volleys of the sulphurous shower:
But the portal wavering grows and weak—
The iron yields, the hinges creak—
It bends—it falls—and all is o'er;
Lost Corinth may resist no more!

XXX.

Darkly, sternly, and all alone,
Minotti stood o'er the altar stone:
Madonna's face upon him shone,
Painted in heavenly hues above,
With eyes of light and looks of love;
And placed upon that holy shrine
To fix our thoughts on things divine,
When pictured there, we kneeling see
Her, and the boy-God on her knee,
Smiling sweetly on each prayer
To heaven, as if to wait it there.
Still she smiled; even now she smiles,
Though slaughter streams along her sides:
Minotti lifted his aged eye,

THE SIEGE OF CORINTH.

And made the sign of a cross with a sigh,
Then seized a torch which blazed thereby;
And still he stood, while, with steel and flame,
Inward and onward the Mussulman came.

XXXI.

The vaults beneath the mosaic stone
Contain'd the dead of ages gone;
Their names were on the gazer floor,
But now illegible with gore;
The carved crests, and curious hues
The varied marble's veins diffuse,
Were smear'd, and slippery—stain'd, and strown
With broken swords, and helms o'orthrown:
There were dead above, and the dead below
Lay cold in many a coffin'd row;
You might see them piled in sable state,
By a pale light through a gloomy grate;
But War had enter'd their dark caves,
And stored along the vaulted graves
Her sulphurous treasures, thickly spread
In masses by the fleshless dead:

Here, throughout the siege, had been
The Christians' chiefest magazine;
To these a late-form'd train now led,
Minotti's last and stern resource
Against the foe's overwhelming force.

XXXII.

The foe came on, and few remain
To strive, and those must strive in vain:
For lack of further lives, to make
The thirst of vengeance now awake,
With barbarous blows they gash the dead,
And lop the already lifeless head,
And fell the statues from their niche,
And spoil the shrines of offerings rich,
And from each other's rude hands wrest
The silver vessels saints had bless'd.
To the high altar on they go;
Oh, but it made a glorious show!
On its table still behold
The cup of consecrated gold;
Massy and deep, a glittering prize,
Brightly it sparkles to plunderers' eyes:
That morn it held the holy wine,
Converted by Christ to his blood so divine,
Which his worshippers drank at the break of
day,
To shrive their souls ere they join'd in the fray.
Still a few drops within it lay:
And round the sacred table glow
Twelve lofty lamps, in splendid row,
From the purest metal cast;
A spoil—the richest, and the last.

XXXIII.

So near they came, the nearest stretch'd
To grasp the spoil he almost reach'd,
When old Minotti's hand
Touch'd with the torch the train—
'T is fired!

Spire, vaults, the shrine, the spoil, the slain,
The turban'd victors, the Christian band,
All that of living or dead remain,
Hurl'd on high with the shiver'd fane,
In one wild roar expired!
The shatter'd town—the walls thrown down—
The waves a moment backward bent—
The hills that shake, although unrent,
As if an earthquake pass'd—
The thousand shapeless things all driven
In cloud and flame athwart the heaven,
By that tremendous blast—
Proclaim'd the desperate conflict o'er
On that too long afflicted shore:
Up to the sky like rockets go
All that mingled there below:
Many a tall and goodly man,
Scorch'd and shrivel'd to a span,
When he fell to earth again,
Like a cinder strew'd the plain:
Down the ashes shower like rain;
Some fell in the gulf, which received the sprinkles
With a thousand circling wrinkles;
Some fell on the shore, but, far away,
Scatter'd o'er the isthmus lay;
Christian or Moslem, which be they?
Let their mothers see and say!
When in cradled rest they lay,
And each nursing mother smiled
On the sweet sleep of her child,
Little deem'd she such a day
Would rend those tender limbs away.
Not the matrons that them bore
Could discern their offspring more;
That one moment left no trace
More of human form or face:
Save a scatter'd scalp or bone:
And down came blazing rafters, strowa
Around, and many a falling stone,
Deeply dented in the clay,
All blacken'd there and reeking lay.
All the living things that heard
That deadly earth-shock disappear'd:
The wild birds flew; the wild dogs fled,
And howling left the unburied dead;
The camels from their keepers broke;
The distant steer forsook the yoke—
The nearer steed plunged o'er the plain,
And burst his girth, and tore his rein;
The bull-frog's note, from out the marsh,
Deep-mouth'd arose, and doubly harsh;
The wolves yell'd on the cavern'd hill,
Where echo roll'd in thunder still;
The jackals' troop, in gather'd cry,
Bay'd from afar complainingly,
With a mix'd and mournful sound,
Like crying babe, and beaten hound;
With sudden wing, and ruffled breast,
The eagle left his rocky nest,
And mounted nearer to the sun,
The clouds beneath him seem'd so dun;
Their smoke assail'd his startled beak,
And made him higher soar and shriek—
Thus was Corinth lost and won!

* I believe I have taken a poetical license to transplant the jackal from Asia. In Greece I never saw nor heard these animals; but among the ruins of Ephesus I have heard them by hundreds. They haunt ruins and follow armies.

Coin of Ancient Corinth, showing the Pegasus, or winged horse.

PARISINA.

TO SCROPE BERDMORE DAVIES, ESQ.,

The following Poem is Inscribed,

BY ONE WHO HAS LONG ADMIR'D HIS TALENTS AND VALUED HIS FRIENDSHIP.

January 22, 1816.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE following poem is grounded on a circumstance mentioned in Gibbon's "Antiquities of the House of Brunswick." I am aware, that in modern times the delicacy or fastidiousness of the reader may deem such subjects unfit for the purposes of poetry. The Greek dramatists, and some of the best of our old English writers, were of a different opinion: as Alfieri and Schiller have also been, more recently, upon the Continent. The following extract will explain the facts on which the story is founded. The name of Asa is substituted for Nicholas, in more metrical.

* Under the reign of Nicholas III., Ferrara was polluted with a domestic tragedy. By the testimony of an attendant, and his own observation, the Marquis of Este discovered the incestuous loves of his wife Parisina, and Hugo his bastard son, a beautiful and valiant youth. They were beheaded in the castle by the sentence of a father and husband, who published his shame, and survived their execution.* He was unfortunate, if they were guilty: if they were innocent, he was still more unfortunate; nor is there any possible situation in which I can sincerely approve the last act of the justice of a parent."—Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works, vol. iii., p. 479.

Parisina.

I.

It is the hour when from the boughs
The nightingale's high note is heard;
It is the hour when lovers vows
Seem sweet in every whisper'd word;
And gentle winds, and waters near,
Make music to the lonely ear,
Each flower the dews have lightly wet,
And in the sky the stars are met,
And on the wave is deeper blue,
And on the leaf a browner hue,
And in the heaven that clear obscure,
So softly dark, and darkly pure,
Which follows the decline of day,
As twilight melts beneath the moon away.†

II.

But it is not to list to the waterfall
That Parisina leaves her hall.
And it is not to gaze on the heavenly light
That the lady walks in the shadow of night;
And if she sits in Este's bower,
'Tis not for the sake of its full-blown flower;
She listens—but not for the nightingale—
Though her ear expects as soft a tale
There glides a step through the foliage thick,
And her cheek grows pale—and her heart beats quick.

There whispers a voice through the rustling leaves,
And her blush returns, and her bosom heaves.
A moment more—and they shall meet—
'Tis past—her lover's at her feet.

III.

And what unto them is the world beside,
With all its change of time and tide?
Its living things—its earth and sky—
Are nothing to their mind and eye.
And heedless as the dead are they
Of aught around, above, beneath;
As if all else had pass'd away.
They only for each other breathe;
Their very sighs are full of joy
So deep, that did it not decay,
That happy madness would destroy
The hearts which feel its fiery away:
Of guilt, of peril, do they deem
In that tumultuous tender dream?
Who that have felt that passion's power,
Or paused, or fear'd in such an hour?
Or thought how brief such moments last?
But yet—they are already past!
Alas! we must awake before
We know such vision comes no more.

IV.

With many a lingering look they leave
The spot of guilty gladness past:

* Ferrara is much decayed and depopulated; but the castle still exists entire; and I saw the court where Parisina and Hugo were beheaded, according to the anecdote of Gibbon."
—Brown Letters, 207.

† The lines contained in this section were printed as set to music some time since, but belonged to the poem where they now appear; the greater part of which was composed prior to "Lara."

PARISINA.

And though they hope, and vow, they grieve,
As if that parting were the last.
The frequent sigh—the long embrace—
The lip that there would cling forever,
While gleams on Parisina's face
The Heaven she fears will not forgive her,
As if each calmly conscious star
Beheld her frailty from afar—
The frequent sigh, the long embrace,
Yet binds them to their trysting-place.
But it must come, and they must part
In fearful heaviness of heart,
With all the deep and shuddering chill
Which follows fast the deeds of ill.

V.

And Hugo is gone to his lonely bed,
To covet there another's bride;
But she must lay her conscious head
A husband's trusting heart beside.
But fever'd in her sleep she seems,
And red her cheek with troubled dreams,
And mutters she in her unrest
A name she dare not breathe by day,
And clasps her lord unto the breast
Which pants for one away:
And he to that embrace awakes,
And, happy in the thought, mistakes
That dreaming sigh, and warm caress,
For such as he was wont to bless;
And could in very fondness weep
O'er her who loves him even in sleep.

VI.

He clasp'd her sleeping to his heart,
And listen'd to each broken word:
He hears—Why doth Prince Azo start,
As if the Archangel's voice he heard?
And well he may—a deeper doom
Could scarcely thunder o'er his tomb,
When he shall wake to sleep no more,
And stand the eternal throne before.
And well he may—his earthly peace
Upon that sound is doom'd to cease.
That sleeping whisper of a name
Bespeaks her guilt and Azo's shame.
And whose that name? that o'er his pillow
Sounds fearful as the breaking billow,
Which rolls the plank upon the shore,
And dashes on the pointed rock
The wretch who sinks to rise no more,—
So came upon his soul the shock.
And whose that name? 'tis Hugo's,—his—
In sooth he had not deem'd of this!—
'Tis Hugo's,—he, the child of one
He loved—his own all-evil son—
The offspring of his wayward youth,
When he betray'd Blanca's truth,
The maid whose folly could confide
In him who made her not his bride.

VII.

He pluck'd his poniard in its sheath,
But sheath'd it ere the point was bare—
Howe'er unworthy now to breathe,
He could not slay a thing so fair—
At least, not smiling—sleeping—there:
Nay more!—he did not wake her then,
But gazed upon her with a glance
Which, had she roused her from her trance,
Had frozen her sense to sleep again;
And o'er his brow the burning lamp
Gleam'd on the dew-drops big and damp.
She spake no more—but still she slumber'd—
While, in his thought, her days are number'd.

VIII.

And with the morn he sought, and found,
In many a tale from those around,
The proof of all he fear'd to know,
Their present guilt, his future woe;
The long conviving dancels seek
To save themselves, and would transfer
The guilt—the shame—the doom to her:
Concealment is no more—they speak
All circumstance which may compel
Full credence to the tale they tell:
And Azo's tortured heart and ear
Have nothing more to feel or hear.

IX.

He was not one who brook'd delay:
Within the chamber of his state,
The chief of Este's ancient sway
Upon his throne of judgment sat;
His nobles and his guards are there,—
Before him is the sinful pair;
Both young,—and one how passing fair!
With swordless belt, and fetter'd hand,
Oh, Christ! that thus a son should stand
Before a father's face!
Yet thus must Hugo meet his sire,
And hear the sentence of his ire,
The tale of his disgrace!
And yet he seems not overcome,
Although, as yet, his voice be dumb.

X.

And still, and pale, and silently
Did Parisina wait her doom;
How changed since last her speaking eye
Glanced gladness round the glittering room,
Where high-born men were proud to wait—
Where Beauty watch'd to imitate
Her gentle voice—her lovely mien—
And gather from her air and gait
The graces of its queen:
Then,—had her eye in sorrow wept,
A thousand warriors forth had leapt,
A thousand swords had sheathless shone,
And made her quarrel all their own.
Now,—what is she? and what are they?
Can she command, or these obey?
All silent and unheeding now,
With downcast eyes and knitting brow,
And folded arms, and freezing air,
And lips that scarce their scorn forbear,
Her knights and dames, her court—is there:
And he, the chosen one, whose lance
Had yet been couch'd before her glance,
Who—were his arms a moment free—
Had died or gain'd her liberty;
The minion of his father's bride,—
He, too, is fetter'd by her side;
Nor sees her swain and full eye swim
Less for her own despair than him:
Those lids—o'er which the violet vein
Wandering, leaves a tender stain,
Shining through the smoothest white
That e'er did softest kisses invite—
Now seem'd with hot and livid glow
To press, not shade, the orbs below;
Which glance so heavily, and fill,
As tear on tear grows gathering still.

XI.

And he for her had also wept,
But for the eyes that on him gazed:
His sorrow, if he felt it, slept;
Stern and erect his brow was raised.
Whate'er the grief his soul avow'd,
He would not shrink before the crowd;

PARISINA.

But yet he dared not look on her:
Remembrance of the hours that were—
His guilt—his love—his present state—
His father's wrath—all good men's hate—
His earthly, his eternal fate—
And here,—oh, here!—he dared not throw
One look upon that deathlike brow!
Else had his rising heart betray'd
Remorse for all the wreck it made.

XII.

And Azo spake:—"But yesterday
I gloried in a wife and son;
That dream this morning pass'd away;
Ere day declines, I shall have none.
My life must linger on alone;
Well,—let that pass,—there breathes not one
Who would not do as I have done:
Those ties are broken—not by me;
Let that too pass,—the doom's prepared!
Hugo, the priest awaits on thee,
And then—thy crime's reward!
Away! address thy prayers to Heaven,
Before its evening stars are met—
Learn if thou there canst be forgiven;
His mercy may absolve thee yet.
But here, upon the earth beneath,
There is no spot where thou and I
Together, for an hour, could breathe:
Farewell! I will not see thee die—
But thou, frail thing! shalt view his head—
Away! I cannot speak the rest:
Go! woman of the wanton breast;
Not I, but thou his blood dost shed:
Go! if that sight thou canst outlive,
And joy thee in the life I give."

XIII.

And here stern Azo hid his face—
For on his brow the swelling vein
Throb'd as if back upon his brain
The hot blood ebb'd and flow'd again;
And therefore bow'd he for a space,
And pass'd his shaking hand along
His eye, to veil it from the throng:
While Hugo raised his chained hands,
And for a brief delay demands
His father's ear: the silent air
Forbids not what his words require.

"It is not that I dread the death—
For thou hast seen me by thy side
All safely through the battle ride,
And that—not once a useless brand—
Thy sword has been wrung from my hand
Hath shed more blood in cause of thine,
Than o'er our own stain the axe of mine:
Then grieve, and mayst resume my breath,
A gift for which I thank thee not;
Nor are my mother's wrongs forgot,
Her slighted love and ruin'd name,
Her forfeit's heritage of shame;
But she is in the grave, where be,
Her soul, thy rival, none shall be.
Her husband's heart—my sword's head—
Shall witness how thou dost the dead
How true, how tender were
Thy vows, thy love—paternal care.
Thou hast not done me wrong—
But thou hast wrong'd—this, deem'st thou
—of thy pride,—
—was destined long;
—voted her charms;
—crime—my birth—
—as little worth;
—her crime,

Because, forsooth, I could not claim
The lawful heirship of thy name,
Nor sit on Este's imperial throne:

Yet, were a few short summers mine,
My name should more than Este's shine
With honors all my own.

I had a sword—and have a breast
That should have won as haught's a crest
As ever waved along the line
Of all these sovereign sires of thine.

Not always knightly spurs are worn
The brightest by the better born;
And mine have lanced my courser's flank
Before proud chiefs of princely rank,
When charging to the cheering cry
(Of 'Este and of Victory!')

I will not plead the cause of crime,
Nor sue thee to redeem from time
A few brief hours or days that most
At length roll o'er my reckless dust;—
Such maddening moments as my past,
They could not, and they did not, last.
Albeit my birth and name be base,
And thy nobility of race
Disdain'd to deck a thing like me—

Yet in my lineaments they trace
Some features of my father's face,
And in my spirit—all of these,
From thee this timelessness of heart—
From thee—nay, whence dost thou start?—
From thee in all their vigor came
My arm of strength, my soul of flame;
Thou didst not give me life alone,
But all that made me more thine own.
See what thy guilty love hath done!
Repaid thee with too like a son!

I am no bastard in my soul,
For that, like thine, abhor'd control:
And for my breath, that hasty boon
Thou gav'st and wilt resume so soon,
I valued it no more than thou,
When rose thy casque above thy brow,
And we, all side by side, have striven,
And o'er the dead our coursers driven:
The past is nothing—and at last
The future can but be the past:
Yet would I that I then had died;

For though thou work'st my mother's ill,
And made thy own my destined bride,
I feel thou art my father still;
And, harsh as sounds thy hard decree,
'Tis not unjust, although from thee,
Begot in sin, to die in shame,
My life began and ends the same:
As err'd the sire, so err'd the son,
And thou must punish both in one.
My crime seems worst to human view,
But God must judge between us two!"

XIV.

He ceased—and stood with folded arms,
On which the circling fetters sounded;
And not an ear but felt as wounded,
Of all the chiefs that there were rank'd,
When those dull chains in meeting clank'd;
Till Parisina's fatal charms
Again attracted every eye—
Would she thus hear him doom'd to die?
She stood, I said, all pale and still,
The living cause of Hugo's ill:
Her eyes unmoved, but full and wide,
Not once had turn'd to either side—
Nor once did those sweet eyelids close,
Or shade the glance o'er which they rose.

"Haught, haughty,—Away, haughty man, thou art insulting me."—SHAKESPEARE.

PARISINA.

But round their orbs of deepest blue
The circling white dilated grew—
And there with glassy gaze she stood
As ice were in her curled blood;
But every now and then a tear
So large and slowly gathered slid
From the long dark fringe of that fair lid,
It was a thing to see, not hear!
And those who saw, it did surprise,
Such drops could fall from human eyes.
To speak she thought—the imperfect note
Was choked within her swelling throat,
Yet seem'd in that low hollow groan
Her whole heart gushing in the tone.
It ceased—again she thought to speak,
Then burst her voice in one long shriek,
And to the earth she fell like stone,
Or statue from its base o'erthrown,
More like a thing that never had life,—
A monument of Aso's wife,—
Than her, that living guilty thing,
Whose every passion was a sting,
Which urged to guilt, but could not bear
That guilt's detection and despair.
But yet she lived—and all too soon
Recover'd from that death-like swoon—
But scarce to reason—every sense
Had been o'erstrung by pangs intense;
And each frail fibre of her brain
(As bowstrings, when relax'd by rain,
The erring arrow launch aside)
Sent forth her thoughts all wild and wide—
The past a blank, the future black,
With glimpses of a dreary track,
Like lightning on the desert path,
When midnight storms are mustering wrath.
She fear'd—she felt that something ill
Lay on her soul, so deep and chill;
That there was sin and shame she knew;
That some one was to die—but who?
She had forgotten—did she breathe?
Could this be still the earth beneath,
The sky above, and men around;
Or were they fiends who now so frown'd
On us, before whose eyes each eye
Till then had smiled in sympathy?
All was confused and undefined
To her all-jarr'd and wandering mind;
A chaos of wild hopes and fears:
And now in laughter, now in tears,
But madly still in each extreme,
She strove with that convulsive dream;
For so it seem'd on her to break:
Oh! vainly must she strive to wake!

XV.

The Convent bells are ringing,
But mournfully and slow;
In the gray square turret swingings,
With a deep sound, to and fro.
Heavily to the heart they go!
Hark! the hymn is singing—
The song for the dead below,
Or the living who shortly shall be so!
For a departing being's soul
The death-hymn peals and the hollow bells knoll:
He is near his mortal goal;
Kneeling at the friar's knee;
Sad to hear—and piteous to see—
Kneeling on the bare cold ground,
With the block before and the guards around—
And the headman with his bare arm ready,
That the blow may be both swift and steady,
Feels if the axe be sharp and true
Since he set its edge near:

While the crowd in a speechless circle gather
To see the Son fall by the doom of the Father!

XVI.

It is a lovely hour as yet
Before the summer sun shall set,
Which rose upon that heavy day,
And mock'd it with his steadiest ray;
And his evening beams are shed
Full on Hugo's fated head,
As his last confession pouring
To the monk, his doom deploping
In penitential hollowness,
He bends to hear his accents bless
With absolution such as may
Wipe our mortal stains away.
That high sun on his head did glisten
As he there did bow and listen,
And the rings of chestnut hair
Cur'd half down his neck so bare;
But brighter still the beam was thrown
Upon the axe which near him shone
With a clear and ghastly glitter—
Oh! that parting hour was bitter!
Even the stern stood chill'd with awe:
Dark the crime, and just the law—
Yet they shudder'd as they saw.

XVII.

The parting prayers are said and over
Of that false son—and daring lover!
His beads and sins are all recounted,
His hours to their last minute mourned;
His mantling cloak before was stripp'd,
His bright brown locks must now be clipp'd;
'Tis done—all closely are they shorn;
The vest which till this moment worn—
The scarf which Parisina gave—
Must not adorn him to the grave.
Even that must now be thrown aside,
And o'er his eyes the kerchief tied;
But no—that last indignity
Shall never approach his haughty eye.
All feelings seemingly subdued,
In deep disdain were half renew'd,
When headman's hands prepare to bind
Those eyes which would not brook such blind,
As if they dared not look on death.
"No—yours may forfeit blood and breath;
These hands are chain'd, but let me die
At least with an unshackled eye—
Strike!"—and as the word he said,
Upon the block he bow'd his head;
These the last accents Hugo spoke:
"Strike!"—and flashing fell the stroke—
Roll'd the head—and, gushing, sunk
Back the stain'd and heaving trunk,
In the dust, which each deep vein
Slaked with its ensanguined rain;
His eyes and lips a moment quiver,
Convulsed and quick—then fix for ever.
He died, as erring man should die,
Without display, without parade;
Meekly had he bow'd and pray'd,
As not disdaining priestly aid,
Nor desperate of all hope on high.
And while before the prior kneeling,
His heart was wear'd from earthly feeling;
His wrathful sire—his paramour—
What were they in such an hour?
No more reproach—no more despair;
No thought but heaven—no word but prayer—
Save the few which from him broke,
When, bared to meet the headman's stroke,
He claim'd to die with eyes unbound,
His sole adieu to those around.

XVIII.

Still as the lips that closed in death,
Each garret's bosom held his breath;
But yet, afar, from man to man,
A cold electric shiver ran,
As down the deadly blow descended
On him whose life and love thus ended;
And, with a hushing sound compress'd,
A sigh shrunk back on every breast.
But no more thrilling noise rose there,
Beyond the blow that to the block
Pierced through with forced and sullen shock,
Save one—what cleaves the silent air
So unobtrusively passing wild?
That, as a mother's o'er her child,
Down to death by sudden blow,
To the sky these accents ro,
Like a soul's in endless woe.
Through Azo's palace-lattice driven,
That horrid voice ascends to heaven,
And every eye is turn'd thereon:
But sound and sight alike are gone!
It was a woman's shriek—and ne'er
In madder accents rose despair;
And those who heard it, as it pass'd,
In mercy wish'd it were the last.

XIX.

Hugo is fallen; and, from that hour,
No more in palace, hall, or bower,
Was Parisina heard or seen:
Her name—as if she never had been—
Was banish'd from each lip and ear,
Like words of wantonness or fear;
And from Prince Azo's voice, by none
Was mention heard of wife or son;
No touch—to memory had they;
There was unremembered clay,
At least the knight's who died that day.
But Parisina's fate has hid
Like dust beneath the coffin lid:
Whether in convent she abode,
And won to heaven her dreary road
By blighted and remorseful years
Of sorrow, and fast and sleepless tears;
Or if she fell in lust or steel,
For that dark love she dared to feel;
Or if, upon the moment slain,
She died by torture less remote,
Like him she saw upon the block,
With heart that shuddered the headman's shock,
In quicken'd brokenness that came,
In pity, o'er her shattered frame,
None know—and none can ever know:
But whatever 'er its end below,
Her life began and closed in woe!

XX.

And Azo found another bride,
And goodly sons grew by his side,
But none so lovely and so brave
As him who wither'd in the grave;
Or if they were—on his cold eye
Their growth but glanced unheeded by,
Or noticed with a smother'd sigh.
But never tear his cheek descended,
And never smile his brow unband;
And o'er that fair broad brow were wrought
The intersected lines of thought;
Those furrows which the burning share
Of sorrow ploughs untimely there;
Scars of the lacerating mind
Which the soul's war doth leave behind.
He was past all mirth or woe:
Nothing more remain'd below
But sleepless nights and heavy days,
A mind all dead to scorn or praise,
A heart which shunn'd itself—and yet
That would not yield—nor could forget;
Which, when it least appear'd to melt,
Intently thought—intensely felt:
The deepest ice which ever froze
Can only o'er the surface close;
The living stream lies quick below,
And flows—and cannot cease to flow.
Still was his seal'd-up bosom haunted
By thoughts which Nature hath implanted;
Too deeply rooted thence to vanish,
How'er our stifled tears we banish;
When, struggling as they rise to start,
We check those waters of the heart.
They are not dried—those tears unshed
But flow back to the fountain head,
And resting in their spring more pure,
Forever in its depth endure,
Unseen, unwept, but uncongeal'd,
And cherish'd most where least reveal'd.
With inward starts of feeling left,
To throb o'er those of life bereft,
Without the power to fill again
The desert gap which made his pain;
Without the hope to meet them where
United souls shall gladness share,
With all the consciousness that he
Had only pass'd a just decree;
That they had wrought their doom of ill;
Yet Azo's age was wretched still.
The tainted branches of the tree,
If lopp'd with care, a strength may give,
By which the rest shall bloom and live
All greenly fresh and wildly free:
But if the lightening, in its wrath,
The waving boughs with fury scathe,
The massy trunk the ruin feels,
And never more a leaf reveals.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON.

SONNET ON CHILLON.

ETERNAL Spirit of the chainless Mind !
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty ! thou art,
For there thy habitation is the heart—
The heart which love of thee alone can bind ;
And when thy sons to fetters are consign'd—
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless gloom,
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,

And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.
Chillon ! thy prison is a holy place,
And thy sad floor an altar—for 't was trod,
Until his very steps have left a trace
Worn, as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
By Bonnivard !—May none those marks efface !
For they appeal from tyranny to God.*

The Prisoner of Chillon.

I.

My hair is gray, but not with years,
Nor grew it white
In a single night,†
As men's have grown from sudden fears :
My limbs are bow'd, though not with toil,
But rusted with a vile repose,
For they have been a dungeon's spoil,
And mine has been the fate of those
To whom the goodly earth and air
Are bann'd, and barr'd—forbidden fare ;
But this was for my father's faith
I suffer'd chains and courted death ;
That father perish'd at the stake
For tenets he would not forsake ;
And for the same his lineal race
In darkness found a dwelling-place ;
We were seven—who now are one,
Six in youth, and one in age,
Finish'd as they had begun,
Proud of persecution's rage ;
One in fire, and two in field,
Their belief with blood have seal'd,
Dying as their father died,
For the God their foes denied ;
Three were in a dungeon cast,
Of whom this wreck is left the last.

* When this poem was composed, I was not sufficiently aware of the history of Bonnivard, or I should have endeavored to dignify the subject by an attempt to celebrate his courage and his virtues. With some account of his life I have been furnished, by the kindness of a citizen of that republic, which is still proud of the memory of a man worthy of the best age of ancient freedom.

Lord Byron wrote this beautiful poem at a small inn, in the little village of Ouchy, near Lausanne, where he happened in June, 1816, to be detained two days by stress of weather : " thereby adding," says Moore, " one more deathless association to the already immortalised localities of the Lake."

† Ludovico Sforza, and others. The same is asserted of Marie Antoinette's, the wife of Louis the Sixteenth, though

II.

There are seven pillars of Gothic mould,
In Chillon's dungeons deep and old,
There are seven columns, massy and gray,
Dim with a dull imprison'd ray,
A sunbeam which hath lost its way,
And through the crevice and the cleft
Of the thick wall is fallen and left ;
Creeping o'er the floor so damp,
Like a marsh's meteor lamp :
And in each pillar there is a ring,
And in each ring there is a chain ;
That iron is a cankering thing,
For in these limbs its teeth remain,
With marks that will not wear away,
Till I have done with this new day,
Which now is painful to these eyes,
Which have not seen the sun so rise
For years—I cannot count them o'er,
I lost their long and heavy score,
When my last brother droop'd and died,
And I lay living by his side.

III.

They chain'd us each to a column stone,
And we were three—yet, each alone ;
We could not move a single pace,
We could not see each other's face,
But with that pale and livid light
That made us strangers in our sight :
And thus together—yet apart,
Fetter'd in hand, but join'd in heart, not in quite so short a period. Grief is said to have the same effect : to numb, and not to feel, this change in here was to be attributed.

" I was struck," says Madame Campan, speaking of Marie Antoinette, " with the astonishing change misfortune had wrought upon her features : her whole head of hair had turned almost white, during her transit from Varennes to Paris." " The same thing occurred to the unfortunate Queen Mary." " With calm but undaunted fortitude," says her historian, " she laid her neck upon the block ; and while one executioner held her hands, the other, at the second stroke, cut off her head, which, falling out of its attire, discovered her hair, already grown quite gray with care and sorrow." The hair of Mary's grandson, Charles I., turned quite gray in like manner, during his stay at Carlisle.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON.

'T was still about-dance in the death
Of the pale gleams of earth,
To hear to each other's speech,
And each turn converter to each
With some new hope or legend old,
Or song heroically told:
But even these at length grew cold.
Our voices took a dreary tone,
As echo of the dungeon stone,
A grating sound—not full and free
As they of yore were wont to be:
It might be funny—but to us
They never sounded like our own.

IV.

I was the eldest of the three,
And to uphold and cheer the rest
I ought to do—and did my best—
And each did well in his degree.
The youngest whom my father loved,
Because our mother's brow was given
To him—with eyes as blue as heaven,
For him my soul was sorely moved:
And truly might it be discern'd:
To me each died in such a nest;
For he was beautiful at day—
(When day was beautiful to me
As to young eagles, being free)—
A pair of eyes, which will not see
A sunset till its summer's gone,
In deepest summer of long light,
The snow-dust of the sun:
And then he was as pure and bright,
And in his natural spirit gay,
With tears for nobody but others' ill,
And tears for how'd like mountain rills,
Which he could smother the woe
Which he could not to view below.

V.

He was the one of purest mind,
And to uphold with his kind;
And to cheer and of a mood
Which would in war had stood,
And in the foremost rank
He was in chains to pine:
And to cheer with their clank,
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:

VI.

He was the one of purest mind,
And to uphold with his kind;
And to cheer and of a mood
Which would in war had stood,
And in the foremost rank
He was in chains to pine:
And to cheer with their clank,
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:

VII.

He was the one of purest mind,
And to uphold with his kind;
And to cheer and of a mood
Which would in war had stood,
And in the foremost rank
He was in chains to pine:
And to cheer with their clank,
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:
And to cheer with their clank:

A double dungeon wall and wave
Have made—and like a living grave
Below the surface of the lake
The dark vault lies wherein we lay,
We heard it ripple night and day;
Sounding o'er our heads it knock'd;
And I have felt the winter's spray
Wash through the bars when winds were high
And wanton in the happy sky;
And then the very rock bath rock'd,
And I have felt it shake, unshock'd,
Because I could have smiled to see
The death that would have set me free.

VIII.

I said my nearer brother pined,
I said his mighty heart declined,
He leath'd and put away his food;
It was not that I was coarse and rude,
For we were used to hunter's fare,
And for the like had little care:
The milk drawn from the mountain goat
Was changed for water from the moat,
Our bread was such as captive's tears
Have moisten'd many a thousand years.
Since man first pent his fellow men
Like brutes within an iron den;
But what were these to us or him?
These wasted not his heart or limb;
My brother's soul was of that mould
Which in a palace had grown cold,
Had his free breathing been denied
The range of the steep mountain's side;
But why delay the truth?—he died.
I saw, and could not hold his head,
Nor reach his dying hand—nor dead,
Though hard I strive, but strive in vain,
To rend and gnash my bonds in twain.
He died—and they unlock'd his chain,
And scoop'd for him a shallow grave
Even from the cold earth of our cave.
I beg'd them, as a boon, to lay
His corpse in dust whereon the day
Might shine—it was a foolish thought,
But then within my brain it wrought,
That even in death his freeborn breast
In such a dungeon could not rest.
I might have spared my idle prayer—
They coldly laugh'd—and laid him there:
The flat and turtleless earth above
The being we so much did love;
His empty chain above it leant,
Such murder's fitting monument!

IX.

But he, the favorite and the flower,
Most cherish'd since his natal hour,
His mother's image in fair face,
The infant love of all his race,
His martyr'd father's dearest thought,
My latest care, for whom I sought
To board my life, that his might be Less wretched now, and one day free;

In the wall; in some of these are rings for the fetters and left fettered: in the pavement the steps of Bonaparte have left their traces. He was confined here several years. It is by this circle that Rousseau has fixed the catastrophe of his Héloïse, in the rescue of one of her children by Julie from the water; the shock of which, and the illness produced by the immersion, is the cause of her death. The chateau is large, and even along the lake for a great distance. It is said, in history, that Charles the Fifth, Duke of Savoy, stormed and took it in 1563: that he there found great hidden treasures, and many wretched beings pining away their lives in these frightful dungeons, amongst whom was the good Bonivard.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON.

He, too, who yet had held untired
 A spirit natural or inspired—
 He, too, was struck, and day by day
 Was wither'd on the stalk away.
 Oh, God! it is a fearful thing
 To see the human soul take wing
 In any shape, in any mood:
 I've seen it rushing forth in blood,
 I've seen it on the breaking ocean
 Strive with a swoln convulsive motion,
 I've seen the sick and ghastly bed
 Of Sin delirious with its dread:
 But these were horrors—this was woe
 Unmix'd with such—but sure and slow:
 He faded, and so calm and meek,
 So softly worn, so sweetly weak,
 So fearless, yet so tender—kind,
 And grieved for those he left behind:
 With all the while a cheek whose bloom
 Was as a mockery of the tomb,
 Whose tints as gently sunk away
 As a departing rainbow's ray—
 An eye of most transparent light,
 That almost made the dungeon bright,
 And not a word of murmur—not
 A groan o'er his untimely lot,—
 A little talk of better days,
 A little hope my own to raise,
 For I was sunk in silence—lost
 In this last loss, of all the most;
 And then the sighs he would suppress
 Of fainting nature's feebleness,
 More slowly drawn, grew less and less:
 I listen'd, but I could not hear;
 I call'd, for I was wild with fear;
 I knew 't was hopeless, but my dread
 Would not be thus admonished;
 I call'd, and thought I heard a sound—
 I burst my chain with one strong bound,
 And rush'd to him—I found him not,
 I only stirr'd in this black spot,
 I only lived—I only drew
 The accursed breath of dungeon dew;
 The last—the sole—the dearest link
 Between me and the eternal brink,
 Which bound me to my failing race,
 Was broken in this fatal place.
 One on the earth, and one beneath—
 My brothers—both had ceased to breathe:
 I took that hand which lay so still,
 Alas! my own was full as chill;
 I had not strength to stir, or strive,
 But felt that I was still alive—
 A frantic feeling, when we know
 That what we love shall ne'er be so.
 I know not why
 I could not die,
 I had no earthly hope but faith,
 And that forbade a selfish death.

IX.

What next befell me then and there
 I know not well—I never knew—
 First came the loss of light, and air,
 And then of darkness too:
 I had no thought, no feeling—none—
 Among the stones I stood a stone,
 And was, scarce conscious what I wist,
 As shrubless crags within the mist;
 For all was blank, and bleak, and gray;
 It was not night—it was not day;
 It was not even the dungeon-light,
 So hateful to my heavy sight,
 But vacancy absorbing space,
 And fixedness—without a place;
 There were no stars—no earth—no time—
 No check—no change—no good—no crime—

But silence, and a stifled breath
 Which neither was of life nor death;
 A sea of stagnant idleness,
 Blind, boundless, mute, and motionless!

X.

A light broke in upon my brain,—
 It was the carol of a bird;
 It ceased, and then it came again,
 The sweetest song ear ever heard,
 And mine was thankful till my eyes
 Ran over with the glad surprise,
 And they that moment could not see
 I was the mate of misery:
 But then by dull degrees came back
 My senses to their wonted track;
 I saw the dungeon walls and floor
 Close slowly round me as before,
 I saw the glimmer of the sun
 Creeping as it before had done,
 But through the crevice where it came
 That bird was perch'd, as fond and tame,
 And tamer than upon the tree;
 A lovely bird, with azure wings,
 And song that said a thousand things,
 And seem'd to say them all for me!
 I never saw its like before,
 I ne'er shall see its likeness more:
 It seem'd like me to want a mate,
 But was not half so desolate,
 And it was come to love me when
 None lived to love me so again,
 And cheering from my dungeon's brink,
 Had brought me back to feel and think.
 I know not if it late were free,
 Or broke its cage to perch on mine,
 But knowing well captivity,
 Sweet bird! I could not wish for thine!
 Or if it were, in winged guise,
 A visitant from paradise
 For—Heaven forgive that thought! the while
 Which made me both to weep and smile;
 I sometimes deem'd that it might be
 My brother's soul come down to me;
 But then at last away it flew,
 And then 't was mortal well I knew,
 For he would never thus have flown,
 And left me twice so doubly lone,—
 Lone—as the core within its shroud,
 Lone—as a solitary cloud,
 A single cloud on a sunny day,
 While all the rest of heaven is clear,
 A frown upon the atmosphere
 That hath no business to appear
 When skies are blue, and earth is gay.

XI.

A kind of change came in my fate,
 My keepers grew compassionate;
 I know not what had made them so,
 They were inured to sights of woe,
 But so it was:—my broken chain
 With links unfastened did remain,
 And it was liberty to stride
 Along my cell from side to side,
 And up and down, and then athwart,
 And tread it over every part;
 And round the pillars one by one,
 Returning where my walk begun,
 Avoiding only, as I trod,
 My brothers' graves without a sod;
 For if I thought with careless tread
 My step profaned their lowly bed,
 My breath came gaspingly and thick,
 And my crush'd heart 'ell blind and sick.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON.

XII.

I made a footing in the wall,
It was not therewith to escape,
For I had buried one and all
Who loved me in a human shape;
And the whole earth would henceforth be
A wider prison unto me:
No child—no sire—no kin had I,
No partner in my misery:
I thought of this, and I was glad,
For thought of them had made me mad;
But I was curious to ascend
To his her'd windows, and to bend
Once more, upon the mountains high,
The quiet of a loving eye.

XIII.

I saw them—and they were the same,
They were not changed like me in frame;
I saw their thousand years of snow
On high—their wide long lake below,
And the blue Rhone in fullest flow;
I heard the torrents leap and gush
Over channell'd rock and broken hush;
I saw the white-walled distant town,
And whiter sails go skimming down;
And then there was a little isle,*
Which in my very face did smile,
The only one in view.
A small green isle, it seem'd no more,
Scarce broader than my dungeon floor,
But in it there were three tall trees,
And o'er it blew the mountain breeze,
And by it there were waters flowing,
And on it there were young flowers growing,
Of gentle breath and hue
The fish-awain by the castle wall,
And they seem'd joyous each and all;
The eagle rode the rising blast,
Methought he never flew so fast

As then to me he seem'd to fly,
And then new tears came in my eye,
And I felt troubled—and would fain
I had not left my recent chain;
And when I did descend again,
The darkness of my dim abode
Fell on me as a heavy load;
It was as is a new-dug grave,
Closing o'er one we sought to save,—
And yet my glance, too much oppress'd,
Had almost need of such a rest.

XIV.

It might be months, or years, or days,
I kept no count—I took no note,
I had no hope my eyes to raise,
And clear them of their dreary mote;
At last men came to set me free,
I ask'd not why, and reck'd not where,
It was at length the same to me,
Fetter'd or fetterless to be,
I learn'd to love despair,
And thus when they appear'd at last,
And all my bonds aside were cast,
These heavy walls to me had grown
A hermitage—and all my own!
And half I felt as they were come
To tear me from a second home:
With spiders I had friendship made,
And watch'd them in their sullen trade,
Had seen the mice by moonlight play,
And why should I feel less than they?
We were all inmates of one place,
And I, the monarch of each race,
Had power to kill—yet, strange to tell!
In quiet we had learn'd to dwell;
My very chains and I grew friends,
So much a long communion tends
To make us what we are—even I
Regain'd my freedom with a sigh.

* Between the entrances of the Rhone and Villeneuve, not far from Chillon, is a very small island, the only one I could perceive, in my voyage round and over the lake, within its circumference. It contains a few trees (I think not above three), and from its angles and diminutive size has a peculiar effect upon the view.

THE CASTLE OF CHILLON.

(From a Photograph taken 1868.)

Lake Lemán lies by Chillon's walls;
A thousand feet in depth below
Its murky waters meet and flow.

Stanzas V-L, Page 115.

BEPPPO: A Venetian Story.

Rehears'd. Farewell, Monsieur Traveller: Look, you leap, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country: be out of love with your Nativity, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce think that you have swam in a Sondolo.
As You Like It, act iv. sc. 1.

Annunciation of the Communicators.

That is, been at Venice, which was much visited by the young English gentlemen of those times, and was then what Paris is now—the seat of all dissipation.
B. A.

Beppo.

I.

'Tis known, at least it should be, that throughout
All countries of the Catholic persuasion,
Some weeks before Shrove Tuesday comes about,
The people take their fill of recreation,
And buy repentance, ere they grow devout,
However high their rank, or low their station,
With fiddling, feasting, dancing, drinking, masking,
And other things which may be had for asking.

II.

The moment night with dusky mantle covers
The skies (and the more dusky the better),
The time less liked by husbands than by lovers
Begins, and Prudery flings aside her fetter;
And Gayety on restless tiptoe hovers,
Giggling with all the gallants who beset her:
And there are songs and quavers, roaring, humming,
Guitars, and every other sort of strumming.

III.

And there are dresses splendid, but fantastical,
Masks of all times and nations, Turks and Jews,
And harlequins and clowns, with feats gymnastical,
Greeks, Romans, Yankee-doodles, and Hindoos;
All kinds of dress, except the ecclesiastical,
All people, as their fancies hit, may choose,
But no one in these parts may quiz the clergy,—
Therefore take heed, ye Freethinkers! I charge ye.

IV.

You'd better walk about begirt with briars,
Instead of coat and smallclothes, than put on
A single stitch reflecting upon friars,
Although you swore it only was in fun;
They'd haul you o'er the coals, and stir the fires
Of Phlegmation with every mother's son,
Nor say one mass to cool the caldron's bubble
That boll'd your bones, unless you paid them double.

V.

But saving this, you may put on what'er
You like by way of doublet, cape, or cloak,
Such as in Monmouth-street, or in Rag Fair,
Would rig you out in seriousness or joke;
And even in Italy such places are,
With prettier name in softer accents spoke,

110

For, bating Covent Garden, I can hit on
No place that's call'd "Piazza" in Great Britain.

VII.

This feast is named the Carnival, which being Interpreted, implies "farewell to flesh:"
So call'd, because the name and thing agreeing,
Through Lent they live on fish both salt and fresh.
But why they usher Lent with so much glee in,
Is more than I can tell, although I guess
'Tis as we take a glass with friends at parting,
In the stage-coach or packet, just at starting.

VII.

And thus they bid farewell to carnal dishes,
And solid meats, and highly spiced ragouts,
To live for forty days on ill-dress'd fishes,
Because they gave no sauces to their stewers,
A thing which causes many "poohs" and "pishes,"
And several oaths (which would not suit the Muse),
From travellers accusom'd by a boy
To eat their salmon, at the least, with soy;

VIII.

And therefore humbly I would recommend
"The curious in fish-sauce," before they cross
The sea, to bid their cook, or wife, or friend,
Walk or ride to the Strand, and buy in gross
(Or if set out beforehand, these may send
By any means least liable to loss)
Ketchup, Soy, Chili-vinegar, and Harvey,
Or, by the Lord! a Lent will well nigh starve ye;

IX.

That is to say, if your religion's Roman,
And you at Rome would do as Romans do,
According to the proverb,—although no man,
If foreign, is obliged to fast; and you,
If Protestant, or sickly, or a woman,
Would rather dine in sin on a ragout—
Dine and be d—d! I don't mean to be coarse,
But that's the penalty, to say no worse.

X.

Of all the places where the Carnival
Was most facetious in the days of yore,
For dance, and song, and serenade, and ball,
And masque, and mime, and mystery, and more
Than I have time to tell now, or at all,
Venice the bell from every city bore,—
And at the moment when I fix my story,
That sea-born city was in all her glory.

XL

They've pretty faces yet, those same Venetians,
Black eyes, arch'd brows, and sweet expressions
still;
Such as of old were copied from the Grecians,
In ancient arts by moderns mimic'd ill.
And like so many Venuses of Titian's
(The best 's at Florence—see it, if ye will),
They look when leaning over the balcony,
Or stepp'd from out a picture by Giorgione,

XIII.

Whose tints are truth and beauty at their best;
And when you to Manfrin's palace go,
That picture (howsoever fine the rest)
Is loveliest to my mind of all the show;
It may perhaps be also to your zest,
And that 's the cause I rhyme upon it so:
'Tis but a portrait of his son, and wife,
And self; but such a woman! love is life!

XIII.

Love in full life and length, not love ideal,
No, nor ideal beauty, that fine name,
But something better still, so very real,
Think the sweet model must have been the same;
A thing that you would purchase, beg, or steal,
Were 't not impossible, besides a shame:
The face recalls some face, as 't were with pain,
You once have seen, but ne'er will see again.

XIV.

One of those forms which fit by us, when we
Are young, and fix our eyes on every face;
And, oh! the loveliness at times we see
In momentary gliding, the soft grace,
The youth, the bloom, the beauty which agree,
In unspun a nameless being we retrace,
Whose course and home we knew not, nor shall
know,
Like the last Placid seen no more below.

XV.

I said that like a picture by Giorgione
Venetian women were, and so they are,
Particularly seen from a balcony
(For beauty 's sometimes best set off afar).
And there, just like a heroine of Goldoni,
They peep from out the blind, or o'er the bar;
And, truth to say, they're mostly very pretty,
And rather like to show 't, more 's the pity!

XVI.

For glances begot ogles, ogles sighs,
Bliss wishes, wishes words, and words a letter,
Which flies on wings of light-beat'd Mercuries,
Who do such things because they know no better;
And then, God knows what mischief may arise,
When love links two young people in one fetter,
Vile amusements, and adulterous beds,
Mopements, humping vows, and hearts, and heads.

XVII.

Shaking one's head that the sex in Deademona
As very fair, but yet suspect in fame,
And to that day knew Venice to Verona
Such women may be probably the same,
Except that about those times was never known a
Honest woman whose suspicion could inflame
To wed a man no more than twenty,
And a smaller servant.

XVIII.

There are ever jealous)
in altogether, of Othello's
in a bed of feather,

But worthier of these much more jolly fellows,
When weary of the matrimonial tether
His head for such a wife no mortal bothers,
But takes at once another, or another's."

XIX.

Didst ever see a Gondola? For fear
You should not, I'll describe it you exactly:
'Tis a long cover'd boat that 's common here,
Carved at the prow, built lightly, but compactly,
Row'd by two rowers, each call'd "Gondolier,"
It glides along the water looking blackly,
Just like a coffin clapt in a canoe,
Where none can make out what you say or do.

XX.

And up and down the long canals they go,
And under the Rialto shoot along,
By night and day, all paces, swift or slow,
And round the theatres, a sable throng,
They wait in their dusk livery of woe,
But not to them do woeful things belong,
For sometimes they contain a deal of fun,
Like mourning coaches when the funeral 's done.

XXI.

But to my story.—'T was some years ago,
It may be thirty, forty, more or less,
The Carnival was at its height, and so
Were all kinds of buffoonery and dress;
A certain lady went to see the show,
Her real name I know not, nor can guess,
And so we'll call her Laura, if you please,
Because it slips into my verse with ease.

XXII.

She was not old, nor young, nor at the years
Which certain people call a "certain age,"
Which yet the most uncertain age appears,
Because I never heard, nor could engage
A person yet by prayers, or bribes, or tears,
To name, define by speech, or write on page,
The period meant precisely by that word,—
Which surely is exceedingly absurd.

XXIII.

Laura was blooming still, had made the best
Of time, and time return'd the compliment,
And treated her genteelly, so that, dress'd,
She look'd extremely well wherever she went;
A pretty woman is a welcome guest,
And Laura's brow a frown had rarely bent;
Indeed she shone all smiles, and seem'd to flatter
Mankind with her black eyes for looking at her.

XXIV.

She was a married woman; 't is convenient,
Because in Christian countries 't is a rule
To view their little slips with eyes more lenient;
Whereas if single ladies play the fool
(Unless within the period intercurrent
A well-timed wedding makes the scandal cool),
I don't know how they ever can get over it,
Except they manage never to discover it.

XXV.

Her husband sail'd upon the Adriatic,
And made some voyages, too, in other seas,
And when he lay in quarantine for pratique
(A forty days' precaution 'gainst disease),
His wife would mount, at times, her highest attic,
For thence she could discern the ship with ease:

* * * Jealousy is not the order of the day in Venice, and daggers are out of fashion, while duels on love matters are unknown—at least, with the husbands."—Even Letter.

BEPPO.

He was a merchant trading to Aleppo,
His name Giuseppe, call'd more briefly, Beppo.

XXVI.

He was a man as dusky as a Spaniard,
Sunburnt with travel, yet a portly figure;
Though color'd, as it were, within a tanyard,
He was a person both of sense and vigor—
A better seaman never yet did man yard;
And she, although her manners show'd no rigor,
Was deem'd a woman of the strictest principle,
So much as to be thought almost invincible.

XXVII.

But several years elapsed since they had met;
Some people thought the ship was lost, and some
That he had somehow blunder'd into debt,
And did not like the thoughts of steering home;
And there were several offer'd any bet,
Or that he would, or that he would not come;
For most men (till by losing render'd eager)
Will back their own opinions with a wager.

XXVIII.

'T is said that their last parting was pathetic,
As partings often are, or ought to be,
And their presentment was quite prophetic
That they should never more each other see
(A sort of morbid feeling, half poetic,
Which I have known occur in two or three),
When kneeling on the shore upon her sad knee,
He left this Adriatic Ariadne.

XXIX.

And Laura waited long, and wept a little,
And thought of wearing weeds, as well she might;
She almost lost all appetite for victual,
And could not sleep with ease alone at night;
She deem'd the window-frames and shutters brittle
Against a daring housebreaker or spite,
And so she thought it prudent to connect her
With a vice-husband, chiefly to protect her.

XXX.

She chose (and what is there they will not choose,
If only you will but oppose their choice?),
Till Beppo should return from his long cruise,
And bid once more her faithful heart rejoice,
A man some women like, and yet abuse—
A coxcomb was he by the public voice;
A Count of wealth, they said, as well as quality,
And in his pleasures of great liberality.

XXXI.

And then he was a Count, and then he knew
Music, and dancing, fiddling, French, and Tuscan;
The last not easy, be it known to you,
For few Italians speak the right Etruscan.
He was a critic upon operas, too,
And knew all niceties of the sock and buskin;
And no Venetian audience could endure a
Song, scene, or air, when he cried "seccatura!"

XXXII.

His "bravo" was decisive, for that sound
Hush'd "Academie" sigh'd in silent awe;
The fiddlers trembled as he look'd around,
For fear of some false note's detected flaw.
The "prima donna's" tuneful heart would bound,
Dreading the deep damnation of his "bah!"
Soprano, basso, even the contra-alto,
Wish'd him five fathom under the Rialto.

XXXIII.

He patronized the Improvisatori,
Nay, could himself extemporize some stanzas,
Wrote rhymes, sang songs, could also tell a story,
Sold pictures, and was skillful in the dance as Italians can be, though in this their glory
Must surely yield the palm to that which France has;
In short he was a perfect cavaliero,
And to his very valet seem'd a hero.

XXXIV.

Then he was faithful too, as well as amorous;
So that no sort of female could complain,
Although they're now and then a little clamorous,
He never put the pretty souls in pain;
His heart was one of those which most enamor us,
Wax to receive, and marble to retain;
He was a lover of the good old school,
Who still become more constant as they cool.

XXXV.

No wonder such accomplishments should turn
A female head, however sage and steady—
With scarce a hope that Beppo could return,
In law he was almost as good as dead, he
Nor sent, nor wrote, nor show'd the least concern,
And she had waited several years already;
And really if a man won't let us know
That he's alive, he's dead, or should be so.

XXXVI.

Besides, within the Alps, to every woman
(Although, God knows, it is a grievous sin),
'T is, I may say, permitted to have two men;
I can't tell who first brought the custom in,
But "Cavalier Serventes" are quite common,
And no one notices, nor cares a pin;
And we may call this (not to say the worst)
A second marriage which corrupts the first.

XXXVII.

The word was formerly a "Cioisbeo,"
But that is now grown vulgar and indecent;
The Spaniards call the person a "Correjo,"
For the same mode subsists in Spain, though recent;
In short, it reaches from the Po to Teio,
And may perhaps at last be o'er the sea sent;
But Heaven preserve Old England from such courses!
Or what becomes of damage and divorces?

XXXVIII.

However, I still think, with all due deference
To the fair single part of the creation,
That married ladies should preserve the preference
In tête-à-tête or general conversation—
And this I say without peculiar reference
To England, France, or any other nation—
Because they know the world, and are at ease,
And being natural, naturally please.

XXXIX.

'T is true, your budding Miss is very charming,
But shy and awkward at first coming out,
So much alarm'd, that she is quite alarming,
All Giggles, Blush; half Pertness, and half Pout;
And glancing at Mamma, for fear there's harm in
What you, she, it, or they, may be about.
The nursery still lispes out in all they utter—
Besides, they always smell of bread and butter.

* Cortejo is pronounced Cortejo, with an aspirate, according to the Arabesque guttural. It means what there is as yet no precise name for in English, though the practice is as common as in any transmontane country whatever.

XL.

But "Cavalleri Servante" is the phrase
Used in poetical circles to express
This supererogatory slave, who stays
Close to the lady as a part of dress,
Her word the only law which he obeys.
He is no slave, as you may guess;
Coach, servants, gondolà, he goes to call,
And carries fan and tippet, gloves and shawl.

XLI.

With all its sinful doings, I must say,
That Italy is a pleasant place to me,
Who love to see the Sun shine every day,
And vines (not nail'd to walls) from trees to tree
Fasten'd, much like the back scene of a play,
Or melodrama, which people flock to see,
When the first act is ended by a dance
In vineyards copied from the south of France.

XLII.

I like on Autumn evenings to ride out,
Without being forced to bid my groom be sure
My cloak is round his middle strapp'd about,
Because the skies are not the most secure;
I knew too that, if stopp'd upon my route,
Where the green alleys wondrously allure,
Reeling with grapes red wagons choke the way,—
In England 't would be dung, dust, or a dray.

XLIII.

I also like to dine on beccafica,
To see the Sun set, sure he 'll rise to-morrow,
Not through a misty morning twinkling weak as
A drunken man's dead eye in maudlin sorrow,
But with all Heaven t' himself; that day will break
As
Beccafica as cloudless, nor be forced to borrow
That sort of farthing candlelight which glimmers
Where smoking London's smoky caldron simmers.

XLIV.

I love the language, that soft bastard Latin,
Which makes like kisses from a female mouth,
And sounds as if it should be writ on satin,
With syllables which breathe of the sweet South,
And gentle liquids gliding all so pat in,
That not a single accent seems uncouth,
Like our harsh northern whistling, grunting guttural,
Which we're obliged to hiss, and spit, and spatter all.

XLV.

I like the woman too (forgive my folly),
From the rich peasant-cheek of ruddy bronze,
And large black eyes that flash on you a volley
Of rays that say a thousand things at once,
To the high dame's brow, more melancholy,
But clear, and with a wild and liquid glance,
Beet on her lips, and soul within her eyes,
Soft as her smile, and sunny as her skies.

XLVI.

Eve of the land which still is Paradise!
Italian beauty! distill thou not inspire
Raphael, who died in thy embrace, and vied
With all well-known of Heaven, or can desire,
In what is such beauty's end?—in what guise,
Though feeding from the fervor of the lyre,
Would'st thou describe thy past and present glow,
What's to be done can create below?†

† The subject of the cause of Raphael's death.

the writer, more especially will be understood to my expression, not casually, taken in a modest way;

XLVII.

"England! with all thy faults I love thee still,"
I said at Calais, and have not forgot it;
I like to speak and lucubrate my fill;
I like the government (but that is not it);
I like the freedom of the press and quill;
I like the Habeas Corpus (when we've got it);
I like a parliamentary debate,
Particularly when 'tis not too late;

XLVIII.

I like the taxes, when they're not too many;
I like a sea-coal fire, when not too dear;
I like a beef-steak, too, as well as any;
Have no objection to a pot of beer;
I like the weather, when it is not rainy,
That is, I like two months of every year.
And so God save the Regent, Church, and King!
Which means that I like all and everything.

XLIX.

Our standing army, and disbanded seamen,
Poor's rate, Reform, my own, the nation's debt,
Our little riots just to show we are free men,
Our trifling bankruptcies in the Gazette,
Our cloudy climate, and our chilly woman,
All these I can forgive, and those forget,
And greatly venerate our recent glories,
And wish they were not owing to the Tories.

L.

But to my tale of Laura,—for I find
Digression is a sin, that by degrees
Becomes exceeding tedious to my mind,
And, therefore, may the reader too dispense—
The gentle reader, who may wash unkid,
And caring little for the author's ease,
Insist on knowing what he means, a hard
And hapless situation for a bard.

LI.

O that I had the art of easy writing
What should be easy reading! could I scale
Parnassus, where the Muses sit inditing
Those pretty poems never known to fail,
How quickly would I print (the world delighting)
A Grecian, Syrian, or Assyrian tale;
And sell you, mix'd with western sentimentalism,
Some samples of the finest Orientalism!

LII.

But I am but a nameless sort of person
(A broken Dandy lately on my travels),
And take for rhyme, to hook my rambling verse on,
The first that Walker's Lexicon unravels,
And when I can't find that, I put a worse on,
Not caring as I ought for critics' cavils;
I've half a mind to tumble down to prose,
But verse is more in fashion—so here goes.

LIII.

The Count and Laura made their new arrangement,
Which lasted, as arrangements sometimes do,
For half a dozen years without estrangement;
They had their little differences, too;
Those jealous whiffs, which never any change
ment;

In such affairs there probably are few
Who have not had this pouting sort of squabble,
From sinners of high station to the rabble.

Perhaps, too, in no very great degree shall he Appear to have offended in this lay,
Since, as all know, without the sex, our sonnets
Would seem unfinish'd, like their unfinish'd bonnets.)
(Signed)

PAULINA'S DAUGHTER.

LIV.

But, on the whole, they were a happy pair,
As happy as unlawful love could make them;
The gentleman was fond, the lady fair,
Their chains so slight, 't was not worth while to break them:
The world beheld them with indulgent air;
The pious only wish'd "the devil take them!"
He took them not: he very often waits,
And leaves old sinners to be young ones' baits.

LV.

But they were young: Oh! what without our youth Would love be! What would youth be without love!
Youth lends it joy, and sweetness, vigor, truth,
Heart, soul, and all that seems as from above;
But, languishing with years, it grows uncouth—
One of the few things experience don't improve,
Which is, perhaps, the reason why old fellows
Are always so preposterously jealous.

LVI.

It was the Carnival, as I have said
Some six and thirty stanzas back, and so
Laura the usual preparations made,
Which you do when your mind's made up to go
To-night to Mrs. Boehm's masquerade,
Spectator, or partaker in the show;
The only difference known between the cases
Is—here, we have six weeks of "varnish'd faces."

LVII.

Laura, when dress'd, was (as I sang before)
A pretty woman as was ever seen,
Fresh as the Angel o'er a new inn door,
Or frontispiece of a new Magazine,
With all the fashions which the last month wore,
Color'd, and silver paper leaved between
That and the title-page, for fear the press
Should soil with parts of speech the parts of dress.

LVIII.

They went to the Ridotto: 't is a hall
Where people dance, and sup, and dance again;
Its proper name, perhaps, were a masked ball,
But that 's of no importance to my strain;
'T is (on a smaller scale) like our Vauxhall,
Excepting that it can't be spoil'd by rain:
The company is "mix'd" (the phrase I quote is
As much as saying, they're below your notice);

LIX.

For a "mix'd company" implies that, save
Yourself and friends, and half a hundred more,
Whom you may bow to without looking grave,
The rest are but a vulgar set, the bore
Of public places, where they basely brave
The fashionable stars of twenty score
Of well-bred persons, call'd "The World;" but I,
Although I know them, really don't know why.

LX.

This is the case in England; at least was During the dynasty of Dandies, now
Perchance succeeded by some other class
Of imitated imitators:—how Irreparably soon decline, alas!
The demagogues of fashion: all below
Is frail; how easily the world is lost
By love, or war, and now and then by frost!

LXI.

Crush'd was Napoleon by the northern Thor,
Who knock'd his army down with icy hammer,
Stopp'd by the elements, like a whaler, or
A blundering novice in his new French grammar;

Good cause had he to doubt the chance of war,
And as for Fortune—but I dare not d—n her,
Because, were I to ponder to infinity,
The more I should believe in her divinity.

LXII.

She rules the present, past, and all to be yet;
She gives us luck in lotteries, love, and marriage;
I cannot say that she's done much for me yet;
Not that I mean her bounties to disparage,
We've not yet closed accounts, and we shall see yet
How much she'll make amends for past miscarriage.
Meantime the goddess I'll no more importune,
Unless to thank her when she's made my fortune.

LXIII.

To turn,—and to return:—the devil take it!
This story slips forever through my fingers,
Because, just as the stanza likes to make it,
It needs must be—and so it rather lingers:
This form of verse began, I can't well break it,
But must keep time and tune like public singers;
But if I once get through my present measure,
I'll take another when I'm next at leisure.

LXIV.

They went to the Ridotto ('t is a place
To which I mean to go myself to-morrow,
Just to divert my thoughts a little space,
Because I'm rather hippish, and may borrow
Some spirits, guessing at what kind of face
May lurk beneath each mask; and as my sorrow
Slackens its pace sometimes, I'll make, or find, Something shall leave it half an hour behind).

LXV.

Now Laura moves along the joyous crowd,
Smiles in her eyes, and simpers on her lips;
To some she whispers, others speaks aloud;
To some she curtsies, and to some she dips,
Complains of warmth, and this complaint avow'd,
Her lover brings the lemonade, she sips;
She then surveys, condemns, but pities still
Her dearest friends for being dress'd so ill.

LXVI.

One has false curls, another too much paint,
A third—where did she buy that frightful turban?
A fourth's so pale she fears she's going to faint,
A fifth's look 's vulgar, dowdyish, and suburban,
A sixth's white silk has got a yellow taint,
A seventh's thin maulin surely will be her bane,
And lo! an eighth appears,—"I'll see no more!"
For fear, like Banquo's kings, they reach a score.

LXVII.

Meantime, while she was thus at others gazing,
Others were levelling their looks at her;
She heard the men's half-whisper'd mode of praising,
And, till 't was done, determined not to stir;
The women only thought it quite amazing
That, at her time of life, so many were Admirers still,—but men are so debased,
Those brazen creatures always suit their taste.

LXVIII.

For my part, now, I ne'er could understand
Why naughty women—but I won't discuss
A thing which is a scandal to the land;
I only don't see why it should be thus;
And if I were but in a gown and band,
Just to entitle me to make a fuss,
I'd preach on this till Wilberforce and Romilly
Should quote in their next speeches from my homily.

LXIX.

While Laura thus was seen, and seeing, smiling,
Talking, she knew not why, and cared not what,

BEPPLO.

At the next London or Parisian ball
You still may mark her cheek, out-blooming all.

LXXXV.

Laura, who knew it would not do at all
To meet the daylight after seven hours' sitting
Among three thousand people at a ball,
To make her curtsy thought it right and fitting.
The Count was at her elbow with her shawl,
And they the room were on the point of quitting,
When lo! those cursed gondollers had got
Just in the very place where they should not.

LXXXVI.

In this they're like our coachmen, and the cause
Is much the same—the crowd, and pulling, hauling,
With blasphemies enough to break their jaws,
They make a never intermitted bawling.
At home, our Bow-street gemmen keep the laws,
And here a sentry stands within your calling;
But for all that, there is a deal of swearing,
And nauseous words past mentioning or bearing.

LXXXVII.

The Count and Laura found their boat at last,
And homeward floated o'er the silent tide,
Discussing all the dances gone and past;
The dancers and their dresses, too, beside;
Some little scandals eke: but all aghast
(As to their palace stairs the rowers glide)
Sate Laura by the side of her Adorer,
When lo! the Mussulman was there before her.

LXXXVIII.

"Sir," said the Count, with brow exceeding grave,
"Your unexpected presence here will make
It necessary for myself to crave
Its import? But perhaps 't is a mistake;
I hope it is so; and, at once to waive
All compliment, I hope so for your sake:
You understand my meaning, or you shall."
"Sir," (quoth the Turk), "'t is no mistake at all:

LXXXIX.

"That lady is my wife!" Much wonder paints
The lady's changing cheek, as well it might;
But where an Englishwoman sometimes faints,
Italian females don't do so outright;
They only call a little on their saints,
And then come to themselves, almost or quite;
Which saves much hartshorn, salts, and sprinkling faces,
And cutting stays, as usual in such cases.

XC.

She said,—what could she say? Why, not a word:
But the Count courteously invited in
The stranger, much appeased by what he heard:
"Such things, perhaps, we'd best discuss within,"
Said he; "don't let us make ourselves absurd
In public, by a scene, nor raise a din,
For then the chief and only satisfaction
Will be much quizzing on the whole transaction."

XCI.

They enter'd, and for coffee call'd—it came,
A beverage for Turks and Christians both,
Although the way they make it's not the same.
Now Laura, much recover'd, or less loth
To speak, cries "Beppo! what's your pagan name?"
Bless me! your beard is of amazing growth!
And how came you to keep away so long?
Are you not sensible 't was very wrong?"

XCII.

"And are you really, truly, now a Turk?
With any other women did you wife?"

Is 't true they use their fingers for a fork?
Well, that's the prettiest shawl—as I'm alive!
You'll give it me? They say you eat no pork.
And how so many years did you contrive
To—Bless me! did I ever? No, I never Saw a man grown so yellow! How's your liver?"

XCIII.

"Beppo! that beard of yours becomes you not;
It shall be shaved before you're a day older:
Why do you wear it? Oh! I had forgot—
Pray don't you think the weather here is colder?
How do I look? You shan't stir from this spot
In that queer dress, for fear that some beholder
Should find you out, and make the story known.
How short your hair is! Lord! how gray it's grown!"

XCIV.

What answer Beppo made to these demands
Is more than I know. He was cast away
About where Troy stood once, and nothing stands:
Became a slave of course, and for his pay
Had bread and bastinadoes, till some bands
Of pirates landing in a neighboring bay,
He join'd the rogues and proper'd, and became
A renegade of indifferent fame.

XCV.

But he grew rich, and with his riches grew so
Keen the desire to see his home again,
He thought himself in duty bound to do so,
And not be always thieving on the main;
Lonely he felt, at times, as Robin Crusoe,
And so he hired a vessel come from Spain,
Bound for Corfu: she was a fine polacca,
Mann'd with twelve hands, and laden with tobacco.

XCVI.

Himself, and much (Heaven knows how gotten!) cash,
He then embark'd, with risk of life and limb,
And got clear off, although the attempt was rash;
He said that Providence protected him—
For my part, I say nothing, lest we clash!
In our opinions:—well, the ship was trim,
Set sail, and kept her reckoning fairly on,
Except three days of calm when off Cape Bonn.

XCVII.

They reach'd the island, he transferr'd his lading
And self and live stock to another bottom,
And pass'd for a true Turkey merchant, trading
With goods of various names, but I've forgot 'em.
However, he got off by this evading,
Or else the people would perhaps have shot him;
And thus at Venice landed to reclaim
His wife, religion, house, and Christian name.

XCVIII.

His wife received, the patriarch rebaptized him
He made the church a present by the way;
He then throw'd the garments which disguised him,
And borrow'd the Count's small clothes for a day:
His friends the more for his long absence prized him,
Finding he'd wherewithal to make them gay,
With dinners, where he oft became the laugh of them,
For stories—but I don't believe the half of them.

XCIX.

Whate'er his youth had suffer'd, his old age
With wealth and talking make him some amends;
Though Laura sometimes put him in a rage,
I've heard the Count and he were always friends.
My pen is at the bottom of a page,
Which being finished, here the story ends;
'T is to be wish'd it had been sooner done,
But stories somehow lengthen when begun.

MAZEPPA.

ADVERTISEMENT.

"CELUI qui remplissait alors cette place était un gentilhomme Polonois, nommé Maseppa, né dans le palatinat de Podolie: il avait été élevé page de Jean Casimir, et avait pris à sa cour quelques teintures des ballets. Une intrigue qu'il eut dans sa jeunesse avec la femme d'un gentilhomme Polonois ayant été découverte, le mari le fit lier tout nu sur un cheval farouche, et le laissa aller en cet état. Le cheval, qui était du pays de l'Ukraine, y retourna, et y porta Maseppa, demi-mort de fatigue et de faim. Quelques payans le secoururent: il resta long-temps parmi eux, et se signala dans plusieurs courses contre les Tartares. La supériorité de ses lumières lui donna une grande considération parmi les Cosaques: sa réputation s'augmentant de jour en jour obligea le Czar à le faire Prince de l'Ukraine."—VOLTAIRE, Hist. de Charles XII., p. 196.

"Le roi fuyant, et poursuivi, eut son cheval tué sous lui; le Colonel Gieta, blessé, et perdant tout son sang, lui donna le sien. Ainsi on remit deux fois à cheval, dans sa fuite, ce conquérant qui n'avait pu y monter pendant la bataille."—Ibid., p. 216.

"Le roi alla par un autre chemin avec quelques cavaliers. Le carrosse où il était rompit dans la marche; on le remit à cheval. Pour comble de disgrâce, il s'égarait pendant la nuit dans un bois; là, son courage ne pouvant plus suppléer à ses forces épuisées, les douleurs de ses blessures devenues plus insupportables par la fatigue, son cheval étant tombé de lassitude, il se coucha quelques heures au pied d'un arbre, en danger d'être surpris à tout moment par les vainqueurs, qui le cherchaient de tous côtés."—Ibid., p. 218.

Mazeppa.*

I.

TwAS after dread Pultowa's day,
When fortune left the royal Swede,
Around a slaughter'd army lay,
No more to combat and to bleed.
The power and glory of the war,
Faithless as their vain votaries, men,
Had pass'd to the triumphant Czar,
And Moscow's walls were safe again,
Until a day more dark and drear,
And a more memorable year,
Should give to slaughter and to shame
A mightier host and haughtier name;†
A greater wreck, a deeper fall,
A shock to one—a thunderbolt to all.

II.

Such was the hazard of the die;
The wounded Charles was taught to fly
By day and night through field and flood,
Stain'd with his own and subjects' blood;

For thousands fell that flight to aid:
And not a voice was heard t'upbraid
Ambition in his humbled hour,
When truth had nought to dread from power.
His horse was slain, and Gieta gave
His own—and died the Russians' slave.
This too sinks after many a league
Of well sustain'd but vain fatigue;
And in the depths of forests, darkling,
The watch-fires in the distance sparkling—

The beacons of surrounding foes—
A king must lay his limbs at length.
Are these the laurels and repose
For which the nations strain their strength?
They laid him by a savage tree,
In outworn nature's agony:
His wounds were stiff—his limbs were stark—
The heavy hour was chill and dark;
The fever in his blood forsook
A transient slumber's fitful aid:
And thus it was; but yet through all,
Kinglike the monarch bore his fall,
And made, in this extreme of ill,
His pangs the vassals of his will:
All silent and subdued were they,
As once the nations round him lay.

* The story is a well known one; namely, that of the young Pole, who, being bound naked on the back of a wild horse, on account of an intrigue with the lady of a certain great noble of his country, was carried by his steed into the heart of the Ukraine, and being there picked up by some Cosacks, in a state apparently of utter hopelessness and exhaustion, recovered, and lived to be long after the prince and leader of the nation among whom he had arrived in this extraordinary manner. Lord Byron has represented the strange and wild incidents of this adventure, as being related in a half serious, half sportive way, by Maseppa himself, to no less a person than Charles the Twelfth of Sweden, in some of whose last campaigns the Cosack Hetman took a distinguished part. He tells it during the desolate bivouac of Charles and the few friends who fled with him towards Turkey, after the bloody overthrow of Pultowa. There is not a little of beauty and gracefulness in this way of setting the picture—the age of Maseppa—the calm, practised indifference with which he now submits to the worst of fortune's deeds—the heroic, unthinking coldness of the royal madman to whom he speaks—the dreary and perilous accompaniments of the scene round the speaker and the audience—all contribute to throw a very striking charm both of preparation and of contrast over the wild story of the Hetman."

† Napoleon Bonaparte.

MAZEPPA.

III.

A band of chiefs!—alas! how few,
 Since but the fleeting of a day
 Had thinn'd it; but this wreck was true
 And chivalrous: upon the clay
 Each sate him down, all sad and mute,
 Beside his monarch and his steed,
 For danger levels man and brute,
 And all are fellows in their need.
 Among the rest, Mazeppa made
 His pillow in an old oak's shade—
 Himself as rough, and scarce less old,
 The Ukraine's Hetman, calm and bold;
 But first, outspent with this long course,
 The Cossack prince rubb'd down his horse,
 And made for him a leafy bed,
 And smooth'd his fetlocks and his mane,
 And slack'd his girth, and stripp'd his rein,
 And joy'd to see how well he fed;
 For until now he had the dread
 His wearied courier might refuse
 To browse beneath the midnight dews:
 But he was hardy as his lord,
 And little cared for bed and board;
 But spirited and docile too,
 What'er was to be done, would do.
 Shaggy and swift, and strong of limb,
 All Tartar-like he carried him;
 Obey'd his voice, and came to call,
 And knew him in the midst of all:
 Though thousands were around,—and Night,
 Without a star, pursued her flight,—
 That steed from sunset until dawn
 His chief would follow like a fawn.

IV.

This done, Mazeppa spread his cloak,
 And laid his lance beneath his oak,
 Felt if his arms in order good
 The long day's march had well withstood—
 If still the powder fill'd the pan,
 And flints unloosen'd kept their lock—
 His sabre's hilt and scabbard felt,
 And whether they had chafed his belt—
 And next the venerable man,
 From out his haversack and can,
 Prepared and spread his slender stook;
 And to the monarch and his men
 The whole or portion offer'd then
 With far less of inquietude
 Than courtiers at a banquet would.
 And Charles of this his slender share
 With smiles partook a moment there,
 To force of cheer a greater show,
 And seem above both wounds and woe;
 And then he said—"Of all our band,
 Though firm of heart and strong of hand,
 In skirmish, march, or forage, none
 Can less have said or more have done
 Than thee, Mazeppa! On the earth
 So fit a pair had never birth,
 Since Alexander's days till now,
 As thy Bucephalus and thou:
 All Scythia's fame to thine should yield
 For pricking on o'er flood and field."
 Mazeppa answer'd—"I'll betide
 The school wherein I learn'd to ride!"
 Quoth Charles—"Old Hetman, wherefore so,
 Since thou hast learn'd the art so well?"
 Mazeppa said—"I were long to tell;
 And we have many a league to go,
 With every now and then a blow,
 And ten to one at least the foe,
 Before our steeds may graze at ease
 Beyond the swift Borysthenes:
 And, sire, your limbs have need of rest,
 And I will be the sentinel

Of this your troop."—"But I request,"
 Said Sweden's monarch, "thou wilt tell
 This tale of thine, and I may reap,
 Perchance, from this the boon of sleep;
 For at this moment from my eyes
 The hope of present slumber flies."

"Well, sire, with such a hope, I'll track
 My seventy years of memory back:
 I think 't was in my twentieth spring,—
 Ay, 't was,—when Casimir was king—
 John Casimir—I was his page
 Six summers, in my earlier age:
 A learned monarch, faith! was he,
 And most unlike your majesty:
 He made no wars, and did not gain
 New realms to lose them back again;
 And (save debates in Warsaw's diet)
 He reign'd in most unseemly quiet;
 Not that he had no cares to vex;
 He loved the muses and the sex;
 And sometimes these so froward are,
 They made him wish himself at war;
 But soon his wrath being o'er, he took Another mistress, or new book:
 And then he gave prodigious fêtes—
 All Warsaw gather'd round his gates
 To gaze upon his splendid court,
 And dances, and chiefs, of princely port:
 He was the Polish Solomon,
 So sung his poets, all but one,
 Who, being unpension'd, made a satire,
 And boasted that he could not flatter.
 It was a court of jousts and mimes,
 Where every courtier tried at rhymes:
 Even I for once produced some verses,
 And sign'd my odes 'Despairing Thyrsis.'
 There was a certain Palatine,

A Count of far and high descent,
 Rich as a salt or silver mine;
 And he was proud, ye may divine,
 As if from heaven he had been sent:
 He had such wealth in blood and ore
 As few could match beneath the throne;
 And he would gaze upon his store,
 And o'er his pedigree would pore,
 Until by some confusion led,
 Which almost look'd like want of head,
 He thought their merits were his own.
 His wife was not of his opinion;
 His junior she by thirty years,
 Grew daily tired of his dominion;
 And, after wishes, hopes, and fears,
 To virtue a few farewell tears,
 A restless dream or two, some glances
 At Warsaw's youth, some songs, and dances,
 Awaited but the usual chances,
 Those happy accidents which render
 The coldest dames so very tender,
 To deck her Count with titles given,
 'Tis said, as passports into heaven;
 But, strange to say, they rarely boast
 Of these, who have deserved them most.

V.

"I was a goodly stripling then;
 At seventy years I so may say,
 That there were few, or boys or men,
 Who, in my dawning time of day,
 Of vassal or of knight's degree,
 Could vie in vanities with me;
 For I had strength, youth, gayety,
 A port, not like to this ye see,

* This comparison of a "salt mine" may, perhaps, be permitted to a Pole, as the wealth of the country consists greatly in the salt mines.

—She was alive, no perished
Her occupation, nor was grieved
Nor to see again, but still Play can for now, as if her will Yet bound her to the place.—

MAZEPPA.—Page 125.

MAZEPPA.

But smooth, as all is rugged now:

For time, and care, and war, have plough'd
My very soul from out my brow;

And thus I should be disavow'd
By all my kind and kin, could they Compare my day and yesterday:
This change was wrought, too, long ere age
Had ta'en my features for his page:
With years, ye know, have not declined
My strength, my courage, or my mind,
Or at this hour I should not be Telling old tales beneath a tree,
With starless skies my canopy.

But let me on: Theresa's form—
Methinks it glides before me now,
Between me and you obstunt's bough,
The memory is so quick and warm;
And yet I find no words to tell
The shape of her I loved so well:
She had the Asiatic eye,

Such as our Turkish neighborhood
Hath mingled with our Polish blood,
Dark as above us is the sky;
But through it stole a tender light,
Like the first moonrise of midnight;
Large, dark, and swimming in the stream,
Which seem'd to melt to its own beam;
All love, half languor, and half fire,
Like saints that at the stake expire,
And lift their raptur'd looks on high,
As though it were a joy to die.

A brow like a midsummer lake,
Transparent with the sun therein,
When waves no murmur dare to make,
And heaven beholds her face within.

A cheek and lip—but why proceed?

I loved her then—I love her still;

And such as I am, love indeed

In fierce extremes—in good and ill.

But still we love even in our rage,

And haunted to our very age

With the vain shadow of the past,

As is Mazeppa to the last.

VI.

"We met—we gazed—I saw, and sigh'd,
She did not speak, and yet replied;
There are ten thousand tones and signs
We hear and see, but none defines—
Involuntary sparks of thought,
Which strike from out the heart o'erwrought,
And form a strange intelligence,
Alike mysterious and intense,
Which link the burning chain that binds,
Without their will, young hearts and minds:
Conveying, as the electric wire,
We know not how, the absorbing fire.
I saw, and sigh'd—in silence wept,
And still reluctant distance kept,
Until I was made known to her,
And we might then and there confer
Without suspicion—then, even then,
I long'd, and was resolved to speak;
But on my lips they died again,
The accents tremulous and weak,
Until one hour—There is a game,
A frivolous and foolish play,
In which we while away the day;
It is—I have forgot the name—
And now, at this, it seems, were set,
Between them chance, which I forget:
I saw her from or lost,
I saw her from or lost, and oh! to see
The face I loved the most.

My sentinel
Might watch as well!)

Until I saw, and thus it was,

That she was penive, nor perceived
Her occupation, nor was grieved
Nor glad to lose or gain; but still Play'd on for hours, as if her will Yet bound her to the place, though not
That hers might be the winning lot.

Then through my brain the thought did pass
Even as a flash of lightning there,
That there was something in her air
Which would not doom me to despair;
And on the thought my words broke forth,

All incoherent as they were;
Their eloquence was little worth,
But yet she listen'd—'t is enough—

Who listens once will listen twice;
Her heart, be sure, is not of ice,
And one refusal no rebuff.

VII.

"I loved, and was beloved again—

They tell me, aye, you never knew
Those gentle frailties; if 't is true,
I shorten all my joy or pain;
To you 't would seem absurd as vain;
But all men are not born to reign,
Or o'er their passions, or as you
Thus o'er themselves and nations too.

I am—or rather was—a prince,
A chief of thousands, and could lead
Them on where each would foremost bleed;
But could not o'er myself evince
The like control.—But to resume:

I loved, and was beloved again;

In sooth, it is a happy doom,

But yet where happiest ends in pain.

We met in secret, and the hour

Which led me to that lady's bower

Was fiery Expectation's dower.

My days and nights were nothing—all

Except that hour which doth recall

In the long lapse from youth to age

No other like itself: I'd give

The Ukraine back again to live

It o'er once more, and be a page.

The happy page, who was the lord

Of one soft heart, and his own sword,

And had no other gem nor wealth

Save nature's gift of youth and health.

We met in secret—doubly sweet,

Some say, they find it so to meet;

I know not that—I would have given

My life but to have call'd her mine

In the full view of earth and heaven;

For I did oft and long repine

That we could only meet by stealth.

VIII.

"For lovers there are many eyes.

And such there were on us;—the devil

On such occasions should be civil—

The devil!—I'm loth to do him wrong,

It might be some untoward saint,

Who would not be at rest too long.

But to his pious bile gave vent—

But one fair night, some lurking spie

Surprised and seized us both.

The Count was something more than wroth—

I was unarm'd; but if in steel,

All cap-à-pie from head to heel,

What 'gainst their numbers could I do?

'T was near his castle, far away

From city or from succor near,

And almost on the break of day;

I did not think to see another,

My moments seem'd reduced to few;

And with one prayer to Mary Mother,
And, it may be, a saint or two,
As I resign'd me to my fate,
They led me to the castle gate:
Theresa's doom I never knew,
Our lot was henceforth separate.
An angry man, ye may opine,
Was he, the proud Count Palatine;
And he had reason good to be,
But he was most enraged lest such
An accident should chance to touch
Upon his future pedigree;
Nor less amazed, that such a blot
His noble 'scutcheon should have got,
While he was highest of his line;
Because unto himself he seem'd
The first of men, nor less he deem'd
In others' eyes, and most in mine.
'Sdeath! with a page—perchance a king
Had reconciled him to the thing;
But with a stripling of a page—
I felt, but cannot paint his rage.

II.

"Bring forth the horse!"—the horse was brought;
In truth, he was a noble steed,
A Tatar of the Ukraine breed,
Who look'd as though the speed of thought
Were in his limbs; but he was wild,
Wild as the wild deer, and untam'd,
With spur and bridle undefeild—
'Twas but a day he had been caught;
And snorting, with erected mane,
And struggling fiercely, but in vain,
In the full foam of wrath and dread
To me the desert-born was led:
They bound me on, that menial throng,
Upon his back with many a thong;
Then loosed him with a sudden lash—
Away!—away!—and on we dash!
Torrents less rapid and less rash.

III.

"Away!—away!—My breath was gone—
I saw not where he hurried on:
'Twas scarcely yet the break of day,
And on he foam'd—away!—away!—
The last of human sounds which rose,
As I was darted from my foe,
Was the wild shout of savage laughter,
Which on the wind came roaring after
A moment from that rabble rout;
With sudden wrath I wrench'd my head,
And snatch'd the cord, which to the mane
Had bound my neck in lieu of rein,
And, writhing half my form about,
Howl'd back my curse; but 'midst the tread,
The thunder of my coursers' speed,
Perchance they did not hear nor heed:
It vexes me—for I would fain
Have paid their insult back again.
I paid it well in after days:
There is not of that castle gate,
Its drawbridge and portcullis' weight,
Stone, bar, moat, bridge, or barrier left;
Nor of its fields a blade of grass,
Save what grows on a ridge of wall,
Where stood the hearth-stone of the hall
And many a time ye there might pass,
Nor dream that e'er that fortress was.
I saw its turrets in a blaze,
Their crackling battlements all cleft,
And the hot lead pour down like rain
From off the scorch'd and blackening roof,
Whose thickness was not vengeance-proof,
They little thought that day of pain,

When launch'd, as on the lightning's flash,
They bade me to destruction dash,
That one day I should come again,
With twice five thousand horse, to thank
The Count for his uncourtous ride.
They play'd me then a bitter prank,
When, with the wild horse for my guide,
They bound me to his foaming flank:
At length I play'd them one as frank—
For time at last sets all things even—
And if we do but watch the hour,
There never yet was human power
Which could evade, if unforgiven,
The patient search and vigil long
Of him who treasures up a wrong.

XI.

"Away, away, my steed and I,
Upon the pinnons of the wind,
All human dwellings left behind;
We sped like meteors through the sky,
When with its crackling sound the night
Is checker'd with the northern light:
Town—village—none were on our track,
But a wild plain of far extent,
And bounded by a forest black;
And, save the scarce-seen battlement
On distant heights of some strong hold,
Against the Tartars built of old,
No trace of man. The year before
A Turkish army had march'd o'er;
And where the Spahi's hoof hath trod,
The verdure flies the bloody sod:
The sky was dull, and dim, and gray,
And a low breeze crept moaning by—
I could have answer'd with a sigh—
But fast we fled, away, away,
And I could neither sigh nor pray;
And my cold sweat-drops fell like rain
Upon the coursers' bristling mane;
But, snorting still with rage and fear,
He flew upon his far career:
At times I almost thought, indeed,
He must have slacken'd in his speed;
But no—my bound and slender frame
Was nothing to his angry might,
And merely like a spur became:
Each motion which I made to free
My swollen limbs from their agony
Increase'd his fury and affright:
I tried my voice,—'twas faint and low,
But yet he answer'd as from a blow;
And, starting to each accent, sprang
As from a sudden trumpet's clang:
Meantime my cords were wet with gore,
Which, oozing through my limbs, ran o'er;
And in my tongue the thirst became
A something fierier far than flame.

XII.

"We near'd the wild wood—'twas so wide,
I saw no bounds on either side;
'Twas studded with old sturdy trees,
That bent not to the roughest breeze
Which howls down from Siberia's waste,
And stripes the forest in its haste,—
But these were few and far between,
Set thick with shrubs more young and green,
Luxuriant with their annual leaves,
Ere strown by those autumnal eves
That nip the forest's foliage dead,
Discolor'd with a lifeless red,
Which stands thereon like stiffen'd gore
Upon the slain when battle's o'er,
And some long winter's night hath shed
Its frost o'er every tombless head,
So cold and stark the raven's beak

MAZEPPA.

May peck implor'd each frozen cheek:
 'Twas a wild waste of underwood,
 And here and there a chestnut stood,
 The strong oak, and the hardy pine;
 But far apart—and well it were,
 Or else a different lot were mine—
 The boughs gave way, and did not tear
 My limbs; and I found strength to bear
 My wounds, already scor'd with cold—
 My bonds forbade to loose my hold.
 We rustled through the leaves like wind,
 Left shrubs, and trees, and wolves behind;
 By night I heard them on the track,
 Their troop came hard upon our back,
 With their long gallop, which can tire
 The bound's deep bite, and hunter's fire:
 Where'er we saw they follow'd on,
 Nor left us with the morning sun;
 Behind I saw them, scarce a rood,
 At daybreak winding through the wood,
 And through the night had heard their feet
 Their stealing, rustling step repeat.
 Oh! how I wish'd for spear or sword,
 At least to die amidst the horde,
 And perish—if it must be so—
 At bay, destroying many a foe!
 When first my courser's race begun,
 I wish'd the goal already won;
 But new I doubted strength and speed.
 Vain doubt! his swift and savage breed
 Had nerved him like the mountain roe;
 Nor faster falls the blinding snow
 Which whelms the peasant near the door
 Whose threshold he shall cross no more,
 Bewilder'd with the dazzling blast,
 Than through the forest paths he pass'd—
 Untired, untamed, and worse than wild;
 All furious as a favor'd child
 Talk'd of its wish; or fiercer still—
 A woman plied—who has her will.

XIII.

"The wood was pass'd; 'twas more than noon,
 But chill the air, although in June;
 Or it might be my veins ran cold—
 Feeling'd endurance tames the bold;
 And I was then not what I seem,
 But headlong as a wintry stream,
 And wore my feelings out before
 I well could count their causes o'er:
 And what with fury, fear, and wrath,
 The tortures which beset my path,
 Cold, hunger, sorrow, shame, distress,
 Thus bound in nature's nakedness;
 Spring from a race whose rising blood
 Wham stirr'd beyond its calmer mood,
 And trodden hard upon, is like
 The rattlesnake's, in set to strike,
 What marvel if this worn-out trunk
 Remains its woe a moment sunk?
 The earth gave way, the skies roll'd round,
 I seem'd to sink upon the ground;
 But get'st, for I was fastly bound.
 My heart beat'd sick, my brain grew sore,
 And shrill'd a while, then beat no more:
 The skies spun like a mighty wheel;
 I saw the trees like drunkards reel,
 And a bright sun sparkling o'er my eyes,
 Whom I no farther: he who dies
 Can see no state than then I died.
 O'er my head that ghastly ride,
 I saw the world come and go,
 And all that wake; but could not make
 A word to say from below:
 I saw the sun, the stars, the moon,
 And all that dash o'er thee,

At the same time upheave and whelm,
 And hurl thee towards a desert realm.
 My undulating life was as
 The fancied lights that flitting pass
 Our shut eyes in deep midnight, when Fever begins upon the brain;
 But soon it pass'd, with little pain,
 But a confusion worse than such:
 I own that I should deem it much,
 Dying, to feel the same again;
 And yet I do suppose we must Feel far more ere we turn to dust:
 No matter; I have bared my brow
 Full in Death's face—before—and now.

XIV.

"My thoughts came back; where was I?
 Cold,
 And numb, and giddy; pulse by pulse
 Life reassumed its lingering hold,
 And thro' by thro'—till grown a pang
 Which for a moment would convulse.
 My blood redow'd, though thick and chill;
 My ear with uncouth noises rang,
 My heart began once more to thrill;
 My sight return'd, though dim, alas!
 And thicken'd, as it were, with glass.
 Methought the dash of waves was nigh;
 There was a gleam too of the sky,
 Studded with stars;—it is no dream;
 The wild horse swims the wilder stream!
 The bright broad river's gushing tide
 Sweeps, winding onward, far and wide,
 And we are half-way, struggling o'er
 To you unknown and silent shore.
 The waters broke my hollow trance,
 And with a temporary strength
 My stiffen'd limbs were rebaptized.
 My courser's broad breast proudly braves,
 And dashes off the ascending waves,
 And onward we advance!
 We reach the slippery shore at length,
 A haven I but little prize,
 For all behind was dark and drear,
 And all before was night and fear.
 How many hours of night or day
 In those suspended pangs I lay,
 I could not tell; I scarcely knew
 If this were human breath I drew.

XV.

"With glossy skin, and dripping mane,
 And reeling limbs, and reeking flank,
 The wild steed's sinewy nerves still strain
 Up the repelling bank.
 We gain the top: a boundless plain
 Spreads through the shadow of the night,
 And onward, onward, onward, seems,
 Like precipices in our dreams,
 To stretch beyond the sight;
 And here and there a speck of white,
 Or scatter'd spot of dusky green,
 In masses broke into the light,
 As rose the moon upon my right:
 But nought distinctly seen
 In the dim waste would indicate
 The omen of a cottage gate;
 No twinkling taper from afar
 Stood like a hospitable star;
 Not even an ignis-fatuus rose
 To make him merry with my woes:
 That very cheat had cheer'd me then!
 Although detected, welcome still,
 Reminding me, through every ill,
 Of the abodes of men.

XVI.

"Onward we went—but slack and slow;
His savage force at length o'erspent,
The drooping courser, faint and low,
All feebly foaming went.
A sickly infant had had power
To guide him forward in that hour;
But useless all to me:
His new-born tanniness nought avail'd—
My limbs were bound; my force had fail'd,
Perchance, had they been free.
With feeble effort still I tried
To rend the bonds so starkly tied,
But still it was in vain;
My limbs were only wrung the more,
And soon the idle strife gave o'er,
Which but prolong'd their pain:
The dizzy race seem'd almost done,
Although no goal was nearly won:
Some streaks announced the coming sun—
How slow, alas! he came!
Methought that mist of dawning gray
Would never dapple into day;
How heavily it roll'd away—
Before the eastern flame
Rose crimson, and deposed the stars,
And call'd the radiance from their cars,
And fill'd the earth, from his deep throne,
With lonely lustre, all his own.

XVII.

"Up rose the sun; the mists were curl'd
Back from the solitary world
Which lay around—behind—before.
What boot'd it to traverse o'er
Plain, forest, river? Man nor brute,
Nor dint of hoof, nor print of foot,
Lay in the wild luxuriant soil;
No sign of travel—none of toll;
The very air was mute;
And not an insect's shrill small horn,
Nor matin bird's new voice was borne
From herb nor thicket. Many a wretch,
Panting as if his heart would burst,
The weary brute still stagger'd on;
And still we were—or seem'd—alone.
At length, while reeling on our way,
Methought I heard a courser neigh,
From out yon tuft of blackening firs.
Is it the wind those branches stir?
No, no! from out the forest prance
A trampling troop; I see them come!
In one vast squadron they advance!
I strove to cry—my lips were dumb.
The steeds rush on in plunging pride;
But where are they the reins to guide?
A thousand horse—and none to ride!
With flowing tail, and flying mane,
Wide nostrils—never stretch'd by pain,
Mouths bloodless to the bit or rein,
And feet that iron never shod,
And flanks unscar'd by spur or rod,
A thousand horse, the wild, the free,
Like waves that follow o'er the sea,
Came thickly thundering on,
As if our faint approach to meet;
The sight renew'd my courser's feet,
A moment staggering, feebly fleet,
A moment, with a faint low neigh,
He answer'd, and then fell;
With gasps and glazing eyes he lay,
And reeking limbs immovable.
His first and last career is done!
On came the troop—they saw him stoop,
They saw me strangely bound along
His back with many a bloody thong:

They stop—they start—they snuff the air,
Gallop a moment here and there,
Approach, retire, wheel round and round,
Then plunging back with sudden bound,
Headed by one black mighty steed,
Who seem'd the patriarch of his breed,
Without a single speck or hair
Of white upon his shaggy hide;
They snort—they foam—neigh—swerve aside,
And backward to the forest fly,
By instinct, from a human eye.
They left me there to my despair,
Link'd to the dead and stiffening wretch,
Whose lifeless limbs beneath me stretch,
Relieved from that unboding weight,
From whence I could not extricate
Nor him nor me—and there we lay,
The dying on the dead!
I little deem'd another day
Would see my houseless, helpless head.

"And there from morn till twilight bound,
I felt the heavy hours toll round,
With just enough of life to see
My last of suns go down on me,
In hopeless certainty of mind,
That makes us feel at length resign'd
To that which our foreboding years
Present the worst and last of fears:
Inevitable—even a boon,
Nor more unkind for coming soon,
Yet shunn'd and dreaded with such care,
As if it only were a snare
That prudence might escape:
At times both wish'd for and implored,
At times sought with self-pointed sword,
Yet still a dark and hideous close
To even intolerable woes,
And welcome in no shape.
And, strange to say, the sons of pleasure,
They who have revel'd beyond measure
In beauty, wassail, wine, and treasure,
Die calm, or calmer, oft than he
Whose heritage was misery:
For he who hath in turn run through
All that was beautiful and new,
Hath nought to hope, and nought to leave;
And, save the future (which is view'd
Not quite as men are base or good,
But as their nerves may be endured),
With nought perhaps to grieve:
The wretch still hopes his woes must end,
And Death, whom he should deem his friend,
Appears, to his distemper'd eyes,
Arrived to rob him of his prize,
The tree of his new Paradise.
To-morrow would have given him all,
Repaid his pangs, repair'd his fall;
To-morrow would have been the first
Of days no more deplored or curst,
But bright, and long, and beckoning years,
Seen dazzling through the mist of tears,
Guerdon of many a painful hour;
To-morrow would have given him power
To rule, to shine, to smite, to save—
And must it dawn upon his grave?

XVIII.

"The sun was sinking—still I lay
Chain'd to the chill and stiffening steed;
I thought to mingle there our clay;
And my dim eyes of death had need,
No hope arose of being freed:
I cast my last looks up the sky,
And there between me and the sun
I saw the expecting raven fly,
Who scarce would wait till both should die,

MAZEPPA.

Ere his repast begun;
 He flew, and perch'd, then flew once more,
 And each time nearer than before;
 I saw his wing, through twilight flit,
 And sure so near he be afit.
 I could have smote, but lack'd the strength;
 But the slight motion of my hand,
 And feeble scratching of the sand,
 The exerted throat's faint struggling noise,
 Which scarcely could be call'd a voice,
 Together scared him off at length.
 I know no more—my latest dream
 Is something of a lovely star
 Which fix'd my dull eyes from afar,
 And went and came with wandering beam,
 And of the cold, dull, swimming, dense
 Sensation of recurring sense,
 And then subsiding back to death,
 And then again a little breath,
 A little thrill, a short suspense,
 An icy sickness curling o'er
 My heart, and marks that cross'd my brain,
 A gasp, a throb, a start of pain,
 A sigh, and nothing more.

XIX.

"I wake—Where was I?—Do I see
 A human face look down on me?
 And lo! a roof above me close?
 Do these limbs on a couch repose?
 Is this a chamber where I lie?
 And is it mortal you bright eye,
 That watchest me with gentle glance?
 I closed my own again—once more,
 As doubtful that my former trances
 Could not as yet be o'er.
 A slender girl, long hair'd, and tall,
 Half-watching by the cottage wall;
 The sparkle of her eye I caught;
 Even with my first return of thought;
 For ever and anon she threw
 A pining, pitying glance on me
 With her black eyes so wild and free:
 I gazed, and gazed, until I knew
 No vision it could be—
 But that I lived, and was released
 From adding to the vulture's feast:
 And when the Cossack maid beheld
 My heavy eyes at length unseal'd,
 She smil'd—and I essay'd to speak,

But fail'd—until she approach'd, and made
 With lip and finger signs that said,
 I must not strive as yet to break
 The silence, till my strength should be Enough to leave my accents free.
 And then her hand on mine she laid,
 And smooth'd the pillow for my head,
 And stole along on tiptoe tread.
 And gently ope'd the door, and spake
 In whispers—ne'er was voice so sweet!
 Even music followed her light feet:
 But those she call'd were not awake,
 And she went forth; but, ere she pass'd,
 Another look on me she cast,
 Another sign she made, to say,
 That I had nought to fear, that all
 Were near, at my command or call,
 And she would not delay
 Her due return:—while she was gone,
 Methought I felt too much alone.

XX.

"She came with mother and with sire—
 What need of more?—I will not tire
 With long recital of the rest,
 Since I became the Cossack's guest.
 They found me senseless on the plain—
 They bore me to the nearest hut—
 They brought me into life again—
 Me—one day o'er their realm to reign!
 Thus the vain fool who strove to glut
 His rage, refining on my pain,
 Sent me forth to the wilderness,
 Bound, naked, bleeding, and alone,
 To pass the desert to a throne,—
 What mortal his own doom may guess?
 Let none despond, let none despair!
 To-morrow the Boryshenes
 May see our coursers graze at ease
 Upon his Turkish bank,—and never Had I such welcome for a river
 As I shall yield when safely there.*
 Courages, good-night!"—The Hetman thrav
 His length beneath the oak-tree shade,
 With leafy couch already made,
 A bed nor comfortless nor new
 To him, who took his rest whence'er
 The hour arrived, no matter where:
 His eyes the hastening slumbers steep.
 And if ye marvel Charles forgot
 To thank his tale, he wonder'd not,—
 The King had been an hour asleep.†

* Charles, having perceived that the day was lost, and the only chance of safety was to retire with the utmost speed, ordered himself to be mounted on horseback, and with the remains of his army fled to a place called Pore-china, situated on the angle formed by the junction of the Dniester and the Boryshenes. Here, accompanied by Mazeppa and a few hundred of his followers, Charles swam over the river, great frost, and proceeding over a desolate country, in danger of perishing with hunger, at length reached the Bog, where he was kindly received by the Turkish pacha.

 The Russian envoy at the Sublime Porte demanded that Mazeppa should be delivered up to Peter; but the old Hetman of the Cossacks opposed this fate by taking a disease which hastened his death."—HARROW'S Peter the Great, pp. 180-181.

† It is impossible not to suspect that the poet had some circumstances of his own personal history in his mind, when he portrayed the fair Polia Potemka, her youthful lover, and the jealous rage of the old Count Palatine.

Ancient Macedonian Coin.

Reverses to correspond to the obverse of the horse.

THE ISLAND;

OR,

Christian and his Comrades.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE foundation of the following story will be found partly in Lieutenant Bligh's "Narrative of the Mutiny and Seizure of the Bounty, in the South Sea, in 1789;" and partly in "Mariner's Account of the Tonga Islands." GENEVA, 1852.

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

THE morning watch was come; the vessel lay
Her course, and gently made her liquid way;
The cloven billow flash'd from off her prow
In furrows form'd by that majestic plough;
The waters with their world were all before;
Behind, the South Sea's many an islet shore.
The quiet night, now dappling, 'gan to wane,
Dividing darkness from the dawning main;
The dolphins, not unconscious of the day,
Swam high, as eager of the coming ray;
The stars from broader beams began to creep,
And lift their shining eyelids from the deep;
The sail resumed its lately shadow'd white,
And the wind flutter'd with a freshening flight;
The purpling ocean owns the coming sun,
But ere he break—a deed is to be done.

II.

The gallant chief within his cabin slept,
Secure in those by whom the watch was kept:
His dreams were of Old England's welcome shore,
Of toils rewarded, and of dangers o'er;
His name was added to the glorious roll
Of those who search the storm-surrounded Pole.
The worst was over, and the rest seem'd sure,
And why should not his slumber be secure?
Alas! his deck was trod by unwilling feet,
And wilder hands would hold the vessel's sheet;
Young hearts, which languish'd for some sunny isle,
Where summer years and summer women smile;
Men without country, who, too long estranged,
Had found no native home, or found it changed,
And, half uncivilized, prefer'd the cave
Of some soft savage to the uncertain wave—
The gushing fruits that nature gave untill'd;
The wood without a path but where they will'd;

* For complete and very interesting details of the past and present condition of the descendants of the mutineers of the "Bounty," during nearly the century they have lived at Pitcairn's Island, see Lady Belcher's "The Mutineers of the Bounty and their Descendants in Pitcairn and Norfolk Islands." London and New York, 1871.

The field o'er which promiscuous Plenty pour'd
Her horn; the equal land without a lord;
The wish—which ages have not yet subdued
In man—to have no master save his mood;
The earth, whose mine was on its face, unsold,
The glowing sun and produce all its gold;
The freedom which can call each grot a home;
The general garden, where all steps may roam,
Where Nature owns a nation as her child,
Exulting in the enjoyment of the wild;
Their shells, their fruits, the only wealth they know,
Their unexploring navy, the canoe;
Their sport, the dashing breakers and the chase;
Their strangest sight, an European face:—
Such was the country which these strangers yearn'd
To see again; a sight they dearly earn'd.

III.

Awake, bold Bligh! the foe is at the gate!
Awake! awake!—Alas! it is too late!
Fiercely beside thy cot the mutineer
Stands, and proclaims the reign of rage and fear.
Thy limbs are bound, the bayonet at thy breast;
The hands, which trembled at thy voice, arrest;
Dragg'd o'er the deck, no more at thy command
The obedient helm shall veer, the sail expand;
That savage spirit, which would lull by wrath
Its desperate escape from duty's path,
Glares round thee, in the scarce believing eyes
Of those who fear the chief they sacrifice:
For ne'er can man his conscience all assuage,
Unless he drain the wine of passion—rage.

IV.

In vain, not silenced by the eye of death,
Thou call'st the loyal with thy menaced breath:—
They come not; they are few, and, overawed,
Must acquiesce, while sterner hearts applaud.
In vain thou dost demand the cause; a curse
Is all the answer, with the threat of worse.
Full in thine eyes is waved the glittering blade,
Close to thy throat the pointed bayonet laid.

+ "A few hours before, my situation had been peculiarly flattering: I had a ship in the most perfect order, stored with every necessary, both for health and service; the object of the voyage was attained, and two-thirds of it now completed. The remaining part had every prospect of success."

The level'd muskets circle round thy breast
In hands as steel'd to do the deadly rest.
Thou dar'st them to their worst, exclaiming—
"Fire!"

But they who pitied not could yet admire;
Some lurking remnant of their former awe
Restrain'd them longer than their broken law;
They would not dip their souls at once in blood,
But left thee to the mercies of the flood.*

V.

"Hoist out the boat!" was now the leader's cry;
And who dare answer "No!" to Mutiny,
In the first dawning of the drunken hour,
The Saturnalia of unhoped-for power?
The boat is lower'd with all the haste of hate,
With its slight plank between thee and thy fate;
Her only cargo such a scant supply
As promises the death their hands deny;
And just enough of water and of bread
To keep, some days, the dying from the dead:
Some cordage, canvas, sails, and lines, and twine,
But treasures all to hermits of the brine,
Were added after, to the earnest prayer
Of those who saw no hope, save sea and air;
And last, that trembling vassal of the Pole—
The feeling compass—Navigation's soul.†

VI.

And now the self-elected chief finds time
To stun the first sensation of his crime,
And raise it in his followers—"Ho! the bow!"‡
Lest passion should return to reason's shoal.
"Brandy for heroes!" Burke could once exclaim—
No doubt a liquid path to epic times;
And such the new-born heroes found it here,
And drain'd the draught with an applauding cheer.
"Huzza for Otabelle!" was the cry.
How strange such shouts from sons of Mutiny!
The gentle island, and the genial soil,
The friendly hearts, the feasts without a toil,
The courteous manners but from nature caught,
The wealth unhoarded, and the love unbought;
Could these have charms for rudest sea-boys, driven
Before the mast by every wind of heaven?
And now, even now prepared with others' woes
To earn mid Virtue's vain desire, repose?
Alas! such is our nature! all but aim
At the same end by pathways not the same;
Our means, our birth, our nation, and our name,
Our fortune, temper, even our outward frame,
Are far more potent o'er our yielding clay
Than aught we know beyond our little day.
Yet still there whispers the small voice within,
Heard through Gain's silence, and o'er Glory's din:
Whatever creed be taught or land be trod,
Man's conscience is the oracle of God.

VII.

The launch is crowded with the faithful few
Who wait their chief, a melancholy crew:

* Just before sunrise, while I was yet asleep, Mr. Christian, the master-at-arms, gunner's mate, and Thomas Burkitt, seaman, came into my cabin, and, seizing me, tied my hands with a cord behind my back, threatening me with instant death, if I spoke or made the least noise. I nevertheless called out as loud as I could, in hopes of assistance; but the officers not of their party were already secured by sentinels at their doors. At my own cabin door were three men, besides the four within; all except Christian had muskets and bayonets: he had only a cut-throat. I was dragged out of bed, and forced on deck in my shirt. On demanding the reason of such violence, the only answer was abuse for not holding my tongue. The boatswain was then ordered to hoist out the launch, accompanied by a threat, if he did not do it instantly, to take care of himself. The boat being hoisted out, Mr.

But some remain'd reluctant on the deck
Of that proud vessel—now a moral wreck—
And view'd their captain's fate with piteous eyes:
While others scoff'd his augur'd miseries,
Sneer'd at the prospect of his pigmy sail,
And the slight bark so laden and so frail.
The tender nautilus, who steers his prow,
The sea-born sailor of his shell canoe,
The ocean Mab, the fairy of the sea,
Seems far less fragile, and, alas! more free.
He, when the lightning-wing'd tornadoes sweep
The surge, is safe—his port is in the deep—
And triumphs o'er the armadas of mankind,
Which shake the world, yet crumble in the wind.

VIII.

When all was now prepared, the vessel clear,
Which hail'd her master in the mutineer,
A seaman, less obdurate than his mates,
Show'd the vain pity which but irritates;
Watch'd his late chieftain with exploring eye,
And told, in signs, repentant sympathy;
Held the moist shaddock to his parched mouth,
Which felt exhaustion's deep and bitter drouth:
But soon observed, this guardian was withdrawn,
Nor further mercy clouds rebellion's dawn.
Then forward stepp'd the bold and froward boy
His chief had cherish'd only to destroy,
And, pointing to the helpless prow beneath,
Exclaim'd, "Depart at once! delay is death!"
Yet then, even then, his feelings ceased not all:
In that last moment could a word recall
Remorse for the black deed as yet half done,
And what he hid from many show'd to one:
When Bligh in stern reproach demanded where
Was now his grateful sense of former care?
Where all his hopes to see his name aspire,
And blazon Britain's thousand glories higher?
His feverish lips thus broke their gloomy spell,
"Tis that! 'tis that! I am in hell! in hell!"
No more he said; but urging to the bark
His chief, commits him to his fragile ark;
These the sole accents from his tongue that tell,
But volumes lurk'd below his fierce farewell.

IX.

The arctic sun rose broad above the wave;
The breeze now sank, now whisper'd from his cave;
As on the Æolian harp, his fitful wings
Now swell'd, now flutter'd o'er his ocean strings.
With slow, despairing oar, the abandon'd skiff
Ploughs its drear progress to the scarce-seen cliff,
Which lifts its peak a cloud above the main:
That boat and ship shall never meet again!
But 'tis not mine to tell their tale of grief,
Their constant peril, and their scant relief;
Their days of danger, and their nights of pain;
Their manly courage even when deem'd in vain;
The sapping famine, rendering scarce a son
Known to his mother in the skeleton;
The ills that lessen'd still their little store,
And starved even Hunger till he wrung no more;

Heyward and Mr. Hallet, two of the midshipmen, and Mr. Samuel, the clerk, were ordered into it. I demanded the intention of giving this order, and endeavored to persuade the people near me not to persist in such acts of violence; but it was to no effect: for the constant answer was, 'Hold your tongue, or you are dead this moment!'

‡ The boatswain and three seamen who were to be put into the boat were allowed to collect twine, canvas, lines, sails, cordage, an eight-and-twenty gallon cask of water; and Mr. Samuel got one hundred and fifty pounds of bread, with a small quantity of rum and wine; also a quadrant and compass."

§ "The mutineers having thus forced those of the seamen whom they wished to get rid of into the boat, Christian directed a dram to be served to each of his crew."—BLIGH.

The varying frowns and favors of the deep,
That now almost ingulfed, then leaves to creep
With crasy oar and shatter'd strength along
The tide that yields reluctant to the strong;
The incessant fever of that arid thirst
Which welcomes, as a well, the clouds that burst
Above their naked bones, and feels delight
In the cold drenching of the stormy night,
And from the outspread canvas gladly wrings
A drop to moisten life's all-gasping springs;
The savage foe escaped, to seek again
More hospitable shelter from the main;
The ghastly spectres which were doom'd at last
To tell as true a tale of dangers past,
As ever the dark annals of the deep
Disclosed for man to dread or woman weep.

II.

We leave them to their fate, but not unknown
Nor unredress'd. Revenge may have her own:
Roused discipline aloud proclaims their cause,
And injured navies urge their broken laws.
Pursue we on his track the mutineer,
Whom distant vengeance had not taught to fear.
Wide o'er the wave—away! away! away!
Once more his eyes shall hail the welcome bay;
Once more the happy shores without a law
Receive the outlaws whom they lately saw;
Nature, and Nature's goddess—woman—woos
To lands where, save their conscience, none accuse;
Where all partake the earth without dispute,
And bread itself is gather'd as a fruit;
Where none contest the fields, the woods, the streams:—

The golden age, where gold disturbs no dreams,
Inhabits or inhabits the shore,
Till Europe taught them better than before:
Bestow'd her customs, and amended theirs,
But left her vices also to their heirs.
Away with this! behold them as they were,
Do good with Nature, or with Nature err.
"Huzza! for Otahite!" was the cry,
As stately swept the gallant vessel by.
The breeze springs up; the lately flapping sail
Extends its arch before the growing gale;
In swifter ripples stream aside the seas,
Which her bold bow flings off with dashing ease.
Thus Argo plough'd the Euxine's virgin foam,
But those she warfed still look'd back to home:
These spurn their country with their rebel bark,
And fly her as the raven fled the ark;
And yet they seek to nestle with the dove,
And tame their fiery spirits down to love.

CANTO THE SECOND.

I.

How pleasant were the songs of Toobonal;
When summer's sun went down the coral bay!
Come, let us to the inlet's softest shade,
And hear the warbling birds! the damsels said:
The wood-dove from the forest deep shall woo,
Like voices of the gods from Bolotoo;

* The now celebrated bread-fruit, to transplant which Captain Bligh's expedition was undertaken.

† The vessel in which Jason embarked in quest of the golden fleece.

‡ The first three sections are taken from an actual song of

We'll cull the flowers that grow above the dead,
For these most bloom where rests the warrior's head;
And we will sit in twilight's face, and see
The sweet moon glancing through the toea tree,
The lofty accents of whose sighing bough
Shall sadly please us as we lean below;
Or climb the steep, and view the surf in vain
Wrestle with rocky giants o'er the main,
Which spurn in columns back the baffled spray.
How beautiful are these! how happy they,
Who, from the toil and tumult of their lives,
Steal to look down where nought but ocean strives!
Even he too loves at times the blue lagoon,
And smooths his ruffled mane beneath the moon.

II.

Yes—from the sepulchre we'll gather flowers,
Then feast like spirits in their promised bowers,
Then plunge and revel in the rolling surf,
Then lay our limbs along the tender turf,
And, wet and shining from the sportive toll,
Anoint our bodies with the fragrant oil,
And plait our garlands gather'd from the grave,
And wear the wreaths that sprung from out the grave.

But lo! night comes, the Moos woos us back,
The sound of mats are heard along our track;
Anon the torchlight dance shall fling its sheen
In flashing mazes o'er the Marly's green;
And we too will be there; we too recall
The memory bright with many a festival,
Ere Fiji blew the spell of war, when foes
For the first time were watted in canoes.
Alas! for them the power of mankind bleeds;
Alas! for them our fields are rank with weeds:
Forgotten is the rapture, or unknown,
Of wandering with the moon and love alone.
But be it so:—they taught us how to wield
The club, and rain our arrows o'er the field:
Now let them reap the harvest of their art!
But feast to-night! to-morrow we depart.
Strike up the dance! the cava bowl fill high!
Drain every drop!—to-morrow we may die.
In summer garments be our limbs array'd;
Around our waists the tappa's white display'd;
Thick wreaths shall form our coronal, like spring's,
And round our necks shall glance the hooni strings;
So shall their brighter hues contrast the glow
Of the dusk bosoms that beat high below.

III.

But now the dance is o'er—yet stay awhile;
Ah, pause! nor yet put out the social smile.
To-morrow for the Moos we depart,
But not to-night—to-night is for the heart.
Again bestow the wreaths we gently woo,
Ye young enchantresses of gay Licoo!
How lovely are your forms! how every sense
Bows to your beauties, soften'd, but intense,
Like to the flowers on Mataloo's steep,
Which fling their fragrance far and wide the deep!—
We too will see Licoo; but—oh! my heart!—
What do I say?—to-morrow we depart!

IV.

Thus rose a song—the harmony of times
Before the winds blew Europe o'er these climes.
True, they had vices—such are Nature's growth—
But only the barbarian's—we have both:
The sordid of civilization, mix'd
With all the savage which man's fall hath fix'd.

the Tonga Islanders, of which a prose translation is given in "Mariner's Account of the Tonga Islands." Toobonal is not, however, one of them; but was one of those where Christian and the mutineers took refuge. I have altered and added, but have retained as much as possible of the original.

Who hath not seen Disimulation's reign,
The prayers of Abel lik'd to deeds of Cain?
Who such would save may from his lattice view
The Old World more degraded than the New,—
Now see no more, save where Columbia roars
Twin giants, born by Freedom to her spheres,
Where Chamberlains, o'er air, earth, wave,
Glares with his Titan eye, and sees no slave.

V.

Such was this ditty of Tradition's days,
Which to the dead a lingering fame conveys
In song, where fame as yet hath left no sign
Beyond the sound whose charm is half divine;
Which leaves no record to the skeptic eye,
But yields young History all to harmony;
A boy Achilles, with the centaur's lyre
In hand, to teach him to surpass his sire.
For one long-cherish'd ballad's simple stave,
Rung from the rock, or mingled with the wave,
Or from the bubbling streamlet's grassy side,
Or gathering mountain echoes as they glide,
Nath greater power o'er each true heart and ear,
Than all the columns Conquest's minions rear;
Invites, when hieroglyphics are a theme
For sages' labors or the student's dream;
Attends, when History's volumes are a toll,—
The first, the finest bud of Feeling's soil.
Such was this rude rhyme—rhyme is of the rude—
But such inspired the Norman's solitude,
Who came and conquer'd; such, wherever rise
Leads which no free destiny or virtue
Exist: and what can our accomplish'd art
Of verse do more than teach the awaken'd heart?

VI.

And sweetly now those untaught melodies
Broke the luxurious silence of the skies,
The sweet slacks of a summer day,
The tropic afternoon of Tobago,
When every flower was bloom, and air was balm,
And the first breath began to stir the palm,
The first yet voiceless wind to urge the wave
All gently to refresh the thirsty cave,
When came the songstress with the stranger boy,
Who might her passion's desolating joy,
So powerful over every heart, but most
O'er those who know not how it may be lost;
O'er those who, basking in the new-born fire,
Like martyrs revel in their funeral pyre,
With such devotion to their ecstasy,
That life knows no such rapture as to die:
And die they do; for earthly life has nought
Match'd with that burst of nature, even in thought;
And all our dreams of better life above
Outshine in one eternal rush of love.

VII.

There sat the gentle savage of the wild,
In growth a woman, though in years a child,
As children's darts within our colder clime,
Whose night is ripe'd rapidly have crime;
The infant of an infant world, as pure
From passion—lovely, warm, and premature;
Dusky like ebony, but bright with all her stars:
Or, as we speak with its native spars;
Whose tongue was a language and a spell,
Whose smile was Aphrodite's in her shell,

With all her loves around her on the deep,
Voluptuous as the first approach of sleep;
Yet full of life—for through her tropic cheek
The blush would make its way, and all but speak;
The sun-born blood suffused her neck, and threw
O'er her clear nut-brown skin a lucid hue,
Like coral reddening through the darken'd wave,
Which draws the diver to the crimson cave,
Such was this daughter of the southern seas,
Herself a billow in her energies,
To bear the bark of others' happiness,
Nor feel a sorrow till their joy grew less:
Her wild and warm yet faithful bosom knew
No joy like what it gave; her hopes ne'er drew Aught from experience, that chill touchstone,
Whose
Sad proof reduces all things from their hues:
She fear'd no ill, because she knew it not,
Or what she knew was soon—too soon—forgot:
Her smiles and tears had pass'd, as light winds pass
O'er lakes to ruffle, not destroy, their glass, Whose depths unsearch'd, and fountains from the hill,
Restore their surface, in itself so still,
Until the earthquake tear the naid's cave,
Root up the spring, and trample on the wave,
And crush the living waters to a mass,
The amphibious desert of the dank morass!
And must their fate be hers? The eternal change
But grasps humanity with quicker range;
And they who fall but fall as worlds will fall,
To rise, if just, a spirit o'er them all.

VIII.

And who is he? the blue-eyed northern child
Of isles more known to man, but scarce less wild;
The fair-hair'd offspring of the Hebrides
Where roars the Pentland with its whirling seas;
Rock'd in his cradle by the roaring wind,
The tempest-born in body and in mind,
His young eyes opening on the ocean foam,
Had from that moment deem'd the deep his home,
The giant comrades of his pensive moods,
The sharer of his craggy solitudes,
The only Mentor of his youth, where'er
His bark was borne; the sport of wave and air;
A careless thing, who placed his choice in chance,
Nursed by the legends of his land's romance;
Eager to hope, but not less firm to bear,
Acquainted with all feelings save despair.
Placed in the Arab's clime, he would have been
As bold a rover as the sands have seen,
And braved their thirst with an enduring lip
As Ishmael, wafted on his desert-ship;
Fix'd upon Chili's shore, a proud cacique;
On Hellas' mountains, a rebellious Greek;
Born in a tent, perhaps a Tamerlane;
Bred to a throne, perhaps unfit to reign.
For the same soul that rends its path to sway,
If rear'd to such, can find no further prey
Beyond itself, and must retrace its way,
Plunging for pleasure into pain: the same
Spirit which made a Nero, Rome's worst shame,
A humble state and discipline of heart,
Had form'd his glorious namesake's counterpart;
Had grant his vice, grant them all his own,
How small their theatre without a throne!

"The desert" is the Oriental figure for the and they deserve the metaphor well.—
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.
"The desert" is the latter for his swiftness.

zala. The first intelligence of his return, to Hannibal, was the sight of Asdrubal's head thrown into his camp. When Hannibal saw this, he exclaimed with a sigh, that "Rome would now be the mistress of the world." And yet to this victory of Nero's it might be owing that his imperial namesake reigned at all. But the infamy of the one has eclipsed the glory of the other. When the name of "Nero" is heard, who thinks of the consul?—But such are human things!

IX.

Thou smilest:—these comparisons seem high
To those who scan all things with dazzled eye;
Link'd to the unknown name of one whose doom
Has nought to do with glory or with Rome,
With Chilli, Hellas, or with Araby:—
Thou smilest?—Smile; 'tis better thus than sigh;
Yet such he might have been; he was a man,
A soaring spirit, ever in the van,
A patriot hero or despotic chief,
To form a nation's glory or its grief,
Born under auspices which make us more
Or less than we delight to ponder o'er.
But these are visions; say, what was he here?
A blooming boy, a truant mutineer.
The fair-hair'd Torquill, free as ocean's spray,
The husband of the bride of Toobonal.

X.

By Neuha's side he sat, and watch'd the waters,—
Neuha, the sun-flower of the island daughters,
High-born (a birth at which the herald smiles,
Without a soutechon for these secret isles),
Of a long race, the valiant and the free,
The naked knights of savage chivalry,
Whose grassy cairns ascend along the shore;
And thine—I've seen—Achilles! do no more.
She, when the thunder-bearing strangers came,
In vast canoes, begirt with bolts of flame,
Topp'd with tall trees, which, loftier than the palm,
Seem'd rooted in the deep amidst its calm:
But when the winds awaken'd, shot forth wings
Broad as the cloud along the horizon flings,
And sway'd the waves like cities of the sea,
Making the very billows look less free:—
She, with her paddling oar and dancing prow, Ebot through the surf, like reindeer through the snow,
Swift gliding o'er the breaker's whitening edge,
Like as a nered in her ocean sledge,
And gazed and wonder'd at the giant bulk,
Which heaved from wave to wave its trampling bulk:
The anchor dropp'd; it lay along the deep,
Like a huge lion in the sun asleep,
While round it swarm'd the proas' fitting chain,
Like summer bees that hum around his mane.

XI.

The white man landed!—need the rest be told?
The New World stretch'd its dusk hand to the Old;
Each was to each a marvel, and the tie
Of wonder warm'd to better sympathy.
Kind was the welcome of the sun-born sires,
And kinder still their daughters' gentler fires.
Their union grew: the children of the storm
Found beauty link'd with many a dusky form;
While these in turn admired the paler glow,
Which seem'd so white in climes that knew no snow.
The chase, the race, the liberty to roam,
The soil where every cottage show'd a home;
The sea-spread net, the lightly-launch'd canoe,
Which stemm'd the studded archipelago,
O'er whose blue bosom rose the starry isles;
The healthy slumber, earn'd by sportive toils;
The palm, the loftiest dryad of the woods,
Within whose bosom infant Bacchus broods,
While eagles scarce build higher than the crest
Which shadows o'er the vineyard in her breast;

* When very young, about eight years of age, after an attack of the scarlet-fever at Aberdeen, I was removed by medical advice into the Highlands. Here I passed occasionally some summers, and from this period I date my love of mountainous countries. I can never forget the effect, a few years afterwards, in England, of the only thing I had long

The cava feast, the yam, the oocoa's root,
Which bears at once the cup, and milk, and fruit;
The bread-tree, which, without the ploughshare, yields

The unreap'd harvest of unfurrow'd fields,
And bakes its unadulterated leaves
Without a furnace in unpurchased groves,
And flings off famine from its fertile breast,
A priceless market for the gathering guest:—
These, with the luxuries of seas and woods,
The airy joys of social solitudes,
Tamed each rude wanderer to the sympathies
Of those who were more happy, if less wise,
Did more than Europe's discipline had done,
And civilized Civilization's son!

XII.

Of these, and there was many a willing pair,
Neuha and Torquill were not the least fair;
Both children of the isles, though distant far;
Both born beneath a sea-presiding star;
Both nourish'd amidst nature's native scenes,
Loved to the last, whatever intervenes
Between us and our childhood's sympathy,
Which still reverts to what first caught the eye.
He who first met the Highlands' swelling blue
Will love each peak that shows a kindred hue,
Hail in each crag a friend's familiar face.
And clasp the mountain in his mind's embrace.
Long have I roam'd through lands which are not
mine,
Adored the Alp, and loved the Apennine,
Revered Parnassus, and beheld the steep
Jove's Ida and Olympus crown the deep:
But 't was not all long ages' lore, nor all
Their nature held me in their thrilling thrall;
The infant rapture still survived the boy,
And Loch-na-gar with Ida look'd o'er Troy.*
Mix'd Celtic memories with the Phrygian mount,
And Highland linn with Castalle's clear fount.
Forgive me, Homer's universal shade!
Forgive me, Phœbus! that my fancy stray'd;
The north and nature taught me to adore
Your scenes sublime, from those beloved before.

XIII.

The love which maketh all things fond and fair,
The youth which makes one rainbow of the air,
The dangers past, that make even man enjoy
The pause in which he ceases to destroy,
The mutual beauty, which the sternest feel
Strike to their hearts like lightning to the steel,
United the half savage and the whole,
The maid and boy, in one absorbing soul.
No more the thundering memory of the fight
Wrapp'd his wean'd bosom in its dark delight;
No more the irksome restlessness of rest
Disturb'd him like the eagle in her nest,
Whose whetted beak and far-pervading eye
Darts for a victim over all the sky:
His heart was tamed to that voluptuous state,
At once Elysian and effeminate,
Which leaves no laurels o'er the hero's urn:—
These wither when for aught save blood they burn;
Yet when their ashes in their nook are laid,
Doth not the myrtle leave as sweet a shade?
Had Cæsar known but Cleopatra's kiss,
Rome had been free, the world had not been his.
And what have Cæsar's deeds and Cæsar's fame
Done for the earth? We feel them in our shame:

seen, even in miniature, of a mountain, in the Malvern Hills. After I returned to Cheltenham, I used to watch them every afternoon, at sunset, with a sensation which I cannot describe. This was boyish enough; but I was then only thirteen years of age, and it was in the holidays.

The gory sanction of his glory stains
The rust which tyrants cherish on our chains.
Though Glory, Nature, Reason, Freedom, bid
Roused millions do what single Brutus did,— Sweep these mere mock-birds of the despot's song
From the tall bough where they have perch'd so long,—

Still are we hawk'd at by such mousing owls,
And take for falcons those ignoble fowls,
When but a word of freedom would dispel
These bugbears, as their terrors show too well.

XIV.

Rapt in the fond forgetfulness of life,
Neuha, the South Sea girl, was all a wife,
With no distracting world to call her off
From love; with no society to scoff
At the new transient flame; no babbling brow'd
Of coxcombry in admiration loud,
Or with adulterous whisper to alloy
Her duty, and her glory, and her joy:
With faith and feelings naked as her form,
She stood as stands a rainbow in a storm,
Changing its hues with bright variety,
But still expanding lovelier o'er the sky,
Howe'er its arch may swell, its colors move,
The cloud-compelling harbinger of love.

XV.

Here, in this grotto of the wave-worn shore,
They pass'd the tropic's red meridian o'er;
Nor long the hours—they never paused o'er time,
Unbroken by the clock's funeral chime,
Which deals the daily pittance of our span,
And points and mocks with iron laugh at man.
What deem'd they of the future or the past?
The present, like a tyrant, held them fast:
Their hour-glass was the sea-sand, and the tide,
Like her smooth billow, saw their moments glide:
Their clock the sun, in his unbounded tow'r;
They reckon'd not, whose day was but an hour;
The nightingale, their only vesper-bell,
Sung sweetly to the rose the day's farewell;*
The broad sun set, but not with lingering sweep,
As in the north he mellowed o'er the deep;
But fiery, full, and fierce, as if he left
The world for ever, earth of light bereft,
Plunged with red forehead down along the wave,
As dives a hero headlong to his grave.
Then rose they, looking first along the skies,
And then for light into each other's eyes,
Wondering that summer should so brief a sun,
And asking if indeed the day were done.

XVI.

And let not this seem strange: the devotee
Lives not in earth, but in his ecstasy;
Around him days and worlds are heedless driven,
His soul is gone before his dust to heaven.
Is love less potent? No—his path is trod,
Alike uplifted gloriously to God;
Or link'd to all we know of heaven below,
The other better self, whose joy or woe
Is more than ours; the all-absorbing flame
Which, kindled by another, grows the same,
Wrapt in one blaze; the pure, yet funeral pile,
Where gentle hearts, like hives, sit and smile.
How often we forget all time, when lone,
Admiring Nature's universal throne,
Her woods, her wilds, her waters, the intense
Reply of hers to our intelligence!

Live not the stars and mountains? Are the waves
Without a spirit? Are the dropping caves
Without a feeling in their silent tears?
No, no;—they woo and clasp us to their spheres,
Dissolve this clog and clod of clay before
Its hour, and merge our soul in the great shore.
Strip off this fond and false identity!—
Who thinks of self, when gazing on the sky?
And who, though gazing lower, ever thought,
In the young moments ere the heart is taught
Time's lesson, of man's baseness or his own?
All nature is his realm, and love his throne.

XVII.

Neuha arose, and Torquill: twilight's hour
Came sad and softly to their rocky bower,
Which, kindling by degrees its dewy spars,
Echo'd their dim light to the mustering stars.
Slowly the pair, partaking nature's calm,
Sought out their cottage, built beneath the palm;
Now smiling and now silent, as the scene;
Lovely as Love—the spirit!—when serene.
The Ocean scarce spoke louder with his swell,
Than breathes his mimic murmur in the shell,†
As, far divided from his parent deep,
The sea-born infant cries, and will not sleep,
Raising his little plaint in vain, to rave
For the broad bosom of his nursing wave:
The woods droop'd darkly, as inclined to rest,
The tropic bird wheel'd rockward to his nest,
And the blue sky spread round them like a lake
Of peace, where Pity her thirst might slake.

XVIII.

But through the palm and plainland, hark, a voice!
Not such as would have been a lover's choice,
In such an hour, to break the air so still;
No dying night-breeze, harping o'er the hill,
Striking the strings of nature, rock and tree,
Those best and earliest lyres of harmony,
With Echo for their chorus; nor the alarm
Of the loud war-whoop to dispel the charm;
Nor the soliloquy of the hermit owl,
Exhaling all his solitary soul,
The dim though large-eyed winged anchorite,
Who peals his dreary pean o'er the night;
But a loud, long, and naval whistle, shrill
As ever started through a sea-bird's bill:
And then a pause, and then a hoarse "Hillo!
Torquill! my boy! what cheer? Ho! brother, bo!"
"Who hails?" cried Torquill, following with his eye
The sound. "Here 's one," was all the brief reply.

XIX.

But here the herald of the self-same mouth
Came breathing o'er the aromatic south,
Not like a "bed of violets" on the gale,
But such as wafts its cloud o'er grog or ale,
Borne from a short frail pipe, which yet had blown
Its gentle odors over either zone,
And, puff'd where'er winds rise or waters roll,
Had wafted smoke from Portsmouth to the Pole,
Opposed its vapor as the lightning flash'd,
And reek'd, 'midst mountain-billows, unabash'd,
To Æolus a constant sacrifice,
Through every change of all the varying skies.
And what was he who bore it?—I may err,
But deem him sailor or philosopher.‡
Sublime tobacco! which from east to west
Cheers the tar's labor or the Turkman's rest;

* The now well-known story of the loves of the nightingale and rose need not be more than alluded to, being sufficiently familiar to the western as to the eastern reader.

† If the reader will apply to his ear the sea-shell on his chimney-piece, he will be aware of what is alluded to. If the text should appear obscure, he will find in "Gebir" the same idea better expressed in two lines.

‡ Hobbes, the father of Locke's and other philosophy, was an inveterate smoker,—even to pipes beyond computation.

Which on the Moslem's ottoman divides
His hours, and rivals opium and his brides;
Magnificent in Stamboul, but less grand,
Though not less loved, in Wapping or the Strand;
Divine in hockas, glorious in a pipe,
When tip'd with amber, mellow, rich, and ripe;
Like other charmers, wooing the caress
More dazlingly when daring in full dress:
Yet thy true lovers more admire by far
Thy naked beauties—Give me a cigar!

XII

Through the approaching darkness of the wood
A human figure broke the solitude,
Fantastically, it may be, array'd,
A seaman in a savage masquerade;
Such as appears to rise out from the deep
When o'er the line the merry vessels sweep,
And the rough saturnalia of the tar
Flock o'er the deck, in Neptune's borrow'd car;
And, pleased, the god of ocean sees his name
Revive once more, though but in mimic game
Of his true sons, who riot in the breeze
Undreamt of in his native Cyclades.
Still the old god delights, from out the main,
To snatch some glimpses of his ancient reign.
Our sailor's jacket, though in ragged trim,
His constant pipe, which never yet burn'd dim,
His foremast air, and somewhat rolling gait,
Like his dear vessel, spoke his former state;
But then a sort of kerchief round his head,
Not over-tightly bound, nor nicely spread;
And, 'stead of trousers (ah! too early torn!
For even the mildest woods will have their thorn),
A curious sort of somewhat scanty mat
Now served for inexpresables and hat;
His naked feet and neck, and sunburnt face,
Perchance might suit alike with either race.
His arms were all his own, our Europe's growth,
Which two worlds bless for civilizing both;
The musket swung behind his shoulders broad,
And somewhat stoop'd by his marine abode,
But brawny as the bear's; and hung beneath,
His cutlase droop'd, unconscious of a sheath,
Or lost or worn away; his pistols were Link'd to his belt, a matrimonial pair—
(Let not this metaphor appear a scoff,
Though one miss'd fire, the other would go off);
These, with a bayonet, not so free from rust
As when the arm-chest held its brighter trust,
Completed his accoutrements, as Night
Survey'd him in his garb heteroclitic.

XIII

"What cheer, Ben Bunting?" cried (when in full view
Our new acquaintance) Torquill. "Aught of new?"
"Ey, ey!" quoth Ben, "not new, but news enow;
A strange sail in the offing."—"Sail! and how?
What! could you make her out?" It cannot be;
I've seen no rag of canvas on the sea."
"Belike," said Ben, "you might not from the bay,
But from the bluff-head, where I watch'd to-day,
I saw her in the doldrums; for the wind
Was light and baffling."—"When the sun declined Where lay she? had she anchor'd?"—"No, but still
She bore down on us, till the wind grew still."
"Her flag?"—"I had no glass: but fore and aft, Egad! she seem'd a whisker-looking craft."
"Arm'd?"—"I expect so;—sent on the look-out:
'Tis time, belike, to put our helm about."

"About?—Whate'er may have us now in chase,
We'll make no running fight, for that were base;
We will die at our quarters, like true men."
"Ey, ey! for that 'tis all the same to Ben."
"Does Christian know this?"—"Ay; he has piped all hands

To quarters. They are furbishing the stands
Of arms; and we have got some guns to bear,
And scaled them. You are wanted."—"That's but fair;

And if it were not, mine is not the soul
To leave my comrades helpless on the shoal.

My Nenha! ah! and must my fate pursue
Not me alone, but one so sweet and true?
But whate'er betide, ah, Nenha! now
Unman me not; the hour will not allow
A tear; I am thine whatever intervenes!"
"Right," quoth Ben, "that will do for the marines."†

CANTO THE THIRD.

I.

The fight was o'er; the flashing through the gloom,
Which robes the cannon as he wings a tomb,
Had ceased; and sulphury vapors upward driven
Had left the earth, and but polluted heaven:
The rattling roar which rung in every volley
Had left the echoes to their melancholy;
No more they shriek'd their horror, boom for boom;
The strife was done, the vanquish'd had their doom;
The mutineers were crush'd, dispersed, or ta'en;
Or liv'd to deem the happiest were the slain.
Few, few escaped, and these were hunted o'er
The isle they loved beyond their native shore.
No further home was theirs, it seem'd, on earth,
Once renegades to that which gave them birth;
Track'd like wild beasts, like them they sought the wild,

As to a mother's bosom flies the child;
But vainly wolves and lions seek their den,
And still more vainly men escape from men.

II.

Beneath a rock whose jutting base protrudes
Far over ocean in his fiercest moods,
When scaling his enormous crag the wave
Is hurl'd down headlong like the foremost brave,
And falls back on the foaming crowd behind,
Which fight beneath the banners of the wind,
But now at rest, a little remnant drew
Together, bleeding, thirsty, faint, and few;
But still their weapons in their hands, and still
With something of the pride of former will,
As men not all unused to mediate,
And strive much more than wonder at their fate.
Their present lot was what they had foreseen,
And dared as what was likely to have been:
Yet still the lingering hope, which deem'd their lot
Not pardon'd, but unsought for or forgot,
Or trusted that, if sought, their distant caves
Might still be mine'd amidst the world of waves,
Had wean'd their thoughts in part from what they saw

And felt, the vengeance of their country's law.

* This rough but jovial ceremony, used in crossing the line, has been so often and so well described, that it need not be more than alluded to.

† That will do for the marines, but the sailors won't be-

Here it is an old saying; and one of the few fragments of former jealousies which still survive (in fact only) between these gallant services.

Onward it came—and, lo! a second follow'd—
Now seen—now hid—where ocean's vale was hol-low'd;

And near, and nearer, till their dusky crew
Presented well-known aspects to the view
Till on the surf their skimming paddles play,
Buoyant as wings, and fitting through the spray;—
Now perching on the wave's high curl, and now
Dash'd downward in the thundering foam below,
Which flings it broad and boiling sheet on sheet,
And slings its high flakes, silver'd into sleet;
But floating still through surf and swell, drew nigh
The barks, like small birds through a lowering sky.

Their art seem'd nature—such the skill to sweep
The wave of these born playmates of the deep.

VIII.

And who the first that, springing on the strand,
Leap'd like a nereid from her shell to land,
With dark but brilliant skin, and dewy eye
Shining with love, and hope, and constancy?
Neuha—the fond, the faithful, the adored—
Her heart on Torquill's like a torrent pour'd:
And smiled, and wept, and near, and nearer clasp'd,
As if to be assured 't was him she grasp'd;
Shudder'd to see his yet warm wound, and then,
To find it trivial, smiled and wept again.
She was a warrior's daughter, and could bear
Such sights, and feel, and mourn, but not despair.
Her lover lived,—nor foes nor fears could blight
That full-blown moment in its all delight:
Joy trickled in her tears, joy fill'd the sob
That rock'd her heart till almost heard to throb;
And paradise was breathing in the sigh
Of nature's child in nature's ecstasy.

IX.

The sterner spirits who beheld that meeting
Were not unmoved: who are, when hearts are greeting?

Even Christian gazed upon the maid and boy
With tearless eye, but yet a gloomy joy
Mix'd with those bitter thoughts the soul arrays
In hopeless visions of our better days,
When all's gone—to the rainbow's latest ray.
"And but for me!" he said, and turn'd away;
Then gazed upon the pair, as in his den
A lion looks upon his cubs again;
And then relapsed into his sullen guise,
As heedless of his further destinies.

X.

But brief their time for good or evil thought;
The billows round the promontory brought
The plash of hostile oars.—Alas! who made
That sound a dread? All around them seem'd array'd

Against them, save the bride of Toobonal:
She, as she caught the first glimpses o'er the bay
Of the arm'd boats, which hurried to complete
The remnant's ruin with their flying feet,
Beckon'd the natives round her to their prows,
Embarck'd their guests and launch'd their light canoes!

In one plac'd Christian and his comrades twain;
But she and Torquill must not part again,
She fix'd him in her own.—Away! away!
They clear the breakers, dash along the bay,
And towards a group of islets, such as bear
The sea-bird's nest and seal's surf-hollow'd lair,
They skim the blue tops of the billows; fast
They dew, and fast their fierce pursuers chased.
They gain upon them—now they lose again,—
Again make way and menace o'er the main;
And now the two canoes in chase divide,
And follow different courses o'er the tide.

To baffle the pursuit.—Away! away!
As life is on each paddle's flight to-day,
And more than life or lives to Neuha: Love
Freights the frail bark and urges to the cove—
And now the refuge and the foe are nigh—
Yet, yet a moment! Fly, thou light ark, fly!

CANTO THE FOURTH

I.

WHITE as a white sail on a dusky sea,
When half the horizon 's clouded and half free,
Fluttering between the dun wave and the sky,
Is hope's last gleam in man's extremity,
Her anchor parts! but still her snowy sail
Attracts our eye amidst the rudest gale:
Though every wave she climbs divides us more,
The heart still follows from the loneliest shore.

II.

Not distant from the isle of Toobonal,
A black rock rears its bosom o'er the spray,
The haunt of birds, a desert to mankind,
Where the rough seal reposes from the wind,
And sleeps unwieldy in his cavern dun,
Or gambols with huge frolic in the sun:
There shrilly to the passing oar is heard
The startled echo of the ocean bird,
Who rears on its bare breast her callow brood,
The feather'd fishers of the solitude.
A narrow segment of the yellow sand
On one side forms the outline of a strand;
Here the young turtle, crawling from his shell,
Steals to the deep wherein his parents dwell;
Chipp'd by the beam, a nurling of the day,
But hatch'd for ocean by the fostering ray;
The rest was one bleak precipice, as o'er
Gave mariners a shelter and despair:
A spot to make the saved regret the deck
Which late went down, and envy the lost wreck.
Such was the stern asylum Neuha chose
To shield her lover from his following foes;
But all its secret was not told; she knew
In this a treasure hidden from the view.

III.

Ere the canoes divided, near the spot,
The men that mann'd what held her Torquill's lot,
By her command removed, to strengthen more
The skiff which wafted Christian from the shore.
This he would have opposed; but with a smile
She pointed calmly to the craggy isle,
And bade him "speed and prosper." She would take
The rest upon herself for Torquill's sake.
They parted with this added aid; afar
The proa darted like a shooting star,
And gain'd on the pursuers, who now steer'd
Right on the rock which she and Torquill near'd.
They pull'd; her arm, though delicate, was free
And firm as ever grappled with the sea,
And yielded scarce to Torquill's manlier strength.
The prow now almost lay within its length
Of the crag's steep, inexorable face,
With nought but soundless waters for its base;
Within a hundred boats' length was the foe,
And now what refuge but their frail canoe?
This Torquill ask'd with half-upbraiding eye,
Which said—"Has Neuha brought me here to die?"

Is this a place of safety, or a grave,
And yon huge rock the tombstone of the wave?"

IV.

They rested on their paddles, and uprose
Neuha, and pointing to the approaching foe,
Cried, "Torquill, follow me, and fearless follow!"
Then plunged at once into the ocean's hollow.
There was no time to pause—the foe was near—
Chains in his eye, and menace in his ear;
With vigor they pull'd on, and as they came,
Hail'd him to yield, and by his forfeit name.
Headlong he leapt—to him the swimmer's skill
Was native, and now all his hope from ill:
But how, or where? He dived, and rose no more;
The boat's crew look'd amazed o'er sea and shore.
There was no landing on that precipice,
Steep, harsh, and slippery as a berg of ice.
They watch'd awhile to see him float again,
But not a trace rebubbled from the main:
The wave roll'd on, no ripple on its face,
Since their first plunge recall'd a single trace;
The little whirl which eddied, and alight foam,
That whiten'd o'er what seem'd their latest home,
White as a sepulchre above the pair
Who left no marble (mournful as an heir)
The quiet proa wavering o'er the tide
Was all that told of Torquill and his bride;
And but for this alone the whole might seem
The vanish'd phantom of a seaman's dream.
They paused and search'd in vain, then pull'd away;
Even superstition now forbade their stay.
Some said he had not plunged into the wave,
But vanish'd like a corpse-light from a grave;
Others, that something supernatural
Glared in his figure, more than mortal tal;
While all agreed that in his cheek and eye
There was a dead hue of eternity.
Still as their oars receded from the crag,
Round every weed a moment would they lag,
Expectant of some token of their prey;
But no—he had melted from them like the spray.

V.

And where was he, the pilgrim of the deep,
Following the mermaid? Had they ceased to weep
For ever? or, received in coral caves,
Wrung life and pity from the softening waves?
Did they with ocean's hidden sovereigns dwell,
And sound with mermen the fantastic shell?
Did Neuha with the mermaids comb her hair
Flowing o'er ocean as it stream'd in air?
Or had they perish'd, and in silence slept
Beneath the gulf wherein they boldly leapt?

VI.

Young Neuha plunged into the deep, and he Follow'd: her track beneath her native sea
Was as a native's of the element,
So smoothly, bravely, brilliantly she went,
Leaving a streak of light behind her heel,
Which struck and flash'd like an amphibious steel.
Closely, and scarcely less expert to trace
The depths where divers hold the pearl in chase,
Torquill, the nursing of the northern seas,
Pursued her liquid steps with heart and ease.
Deep—deeper for an instant Neuha led
The way—then upward soar'd—and as she spread
Her arms, and flung the foam from off her locks,
Laugh'd, and the sound was answer'd by the rocks.

* Of this cave (which is no fiction) the original will be found in the ninth chapter of "Mariner's Account of the Tonga Islands." I have taken the poetical liberty to transplant it to Roobona, the last island where any distinct account is left of Christian and his comrades.

† This may seem too minute for the general outlines (in

They had gain'd a central realm of earth again,
But look'd for tree, and field, and sky, in vain.
Around she pointed to a spacious cave,
Whose only portal was the keyless wave*
(A hollow archway by the sun unseen,
Save through the billows' glassy veil of green,
In some transparent ocean holiday,
When all the finny people are at play),
Wiped with her hair the brine from Torquill's eyes,
And clapp'd her hands with joy at his surprise;
Led him to where the rock appear'd to jut,
And form a something like a Triton's hut;
For all was darkness for a space, till day
Through clefts above let in a sober'd ray;
As in some old cathedral's glimmering aisle
The dusty monuments from light recoil,
Thus sadly in their refuge submarine
The vault drew half her shadow from the scene.

VII.

Forth from her bosom the young savage drew
A pine torch, strongly girded with gnato;—
A plantain leaf o'er all, the more to keep
Its latent sparkle from the sapping deep.
This mantle kept it dry; then from a nook
Of the same plantain leaf a flint she took,
A few shrunk wither'd twigs, and from the blade
Of Torquill's knife struck fire, and thus array'd
The grot with torchlight. Wide it was and high,
And show'd a self-born Gothic canopy:
The arch uprear'd by nature's architect,
The architrave some earthquake might erect;
The buttress from some mountain's bosom hurl'd,
When the Poles crash'd, and water was the world;
Or harden'd from some earth-absorbing fire,
While yet the globe reek'd from its funeral pyre;
The fretted pinnacle, the aisle, the nave,
Were there, all scoop'd by Darkness from her cave.
There, with a little fringe of phantasy,
Fantastic faces mop'd and mow'd on high,
And then a mitre or a shrine would fix
The eye upon its seeming crucifix.
Thus Nature play'd with the stalactites,
And built herself a chapel of the seas.

VIII.

And Neuha took her Torquill by the hand,
And waved along the vault her kindled brand,
And led him into each recess, and show'd
The secret places of their new abode.
Nor these alone, for all had been prepared
Before, to soothe the lover's lot she shared:
The mat for rest; for dress the fresh gnato,
And sandal oil to fence against the dew;
For food the cocoa-nut, the yam, the bread
Born of the fruit; for board the plantain spread
With its broad leaf, or turtle-shell which bore
A banquet in the flesh it cover'd o'er;
The gourd with water recent from the rill,
The ripe banana from the mallow hill;
A pine-torch pile to keep undying light,
And she herself, as beautiful as night,
To fling her shadowy spirit o'er the scene,
And make their subterranean world serene.
She had foreseen, since first the stranger's sail
Drew to their tale, that force or flight might fall,
And form'd a refuge of the rocky den
For Torquill's safety from his countrymen.
Each dawn had waited there her light canoe,
Laden with all the golden fruits that grew;

Mariner's Account) from which it is taken. But few men have travelled without seeing something of the kind—on land, that is. Without adverting to Ellora, in Mungo Park's last journal, he mentions having met with a rock or mountain so exactly resembling a Gothic cathedral, that only minute inspection could convince him that it was a work of nature.

Each eye had seen her gliding through the hour
With all could cheer or deck their sparry bower;
And now she spread her little store with smiles,
The happiest daughter of the loving isles.

IX.

She, as he gazed with grateful wonder, press'd
Her shelter'd love to her impassion'd breast;
And sulted to her soft caresses, told
An olden tale of love,—for love is old,
Old as eternity, but not outworn
With each new being born or to be born:
How a young chief, a thousand moons ago,
Diving for turtle in the depths below,
Had risen, in tracking fast his ocean prey,
Into the cave which round and o'er them lay;
How in some desperate feud of after-time
He shelter'd there a daughter of the olime,
A foe beloved, and offspring of a foe,
Saved by his tribe but for a captive's woe;
How, when the storm of war was still'd, he led
His island clan to where the waters spread
Their deep-green shadow o'er the rocky door,
Then divid—'t seem'd as if to rise no more:
His wondering mates, amazed within their bark,
Or deem'd him mad, or prey to the blue shark;
Row'd round in sorrow the sea-girded rock,
Then paused upon their paddles from the shock;
When, fresh and springing from the deep, they saw

A goddess rise—so deem'd they in their awe;
And their companion, glorious by her side,
Proud and exulting in his mermaid bride;
And how, when undecieved, the pair they bore
With sounding conchs and joyous shouts to shore;
How they had gladly lived and calmly died,
And why not also Torquill and his bride?
Not mine to tell the rapturous caress
Which follow'd wildly in that wild recess
This tale; enough that all within that cave
Was love, though buried strong as in the grave
Where Abelard, through twenty years of death,
When Eloisa's form was lower'd beneath
Their nuptial vault, his arms outstretch'd, and press'd

The kindling ashes to his kindled breast.*
The waves without sang round their couch, their

rose

As much unheeded as if life were o'er;
Within, their hearts made all their harmony,
Love's broken murmur and more broken sigh.

X.

And they, the cause and sharers of the shock
Which left them exiles of the hollow rock,
Where were they? O'er the sea for life they pled,
To seek from Heaven the shelter men denied.
Another course had been their choice—but where?
The wave which bore them still their foes would bear,

Who, disappointed of their former chase,
In search of Christian now renew'd their race.
Eager with anger, their strong arms made way,
Like vultures baffled of their previous prey.
They gain'd upon them, all whose safety lay
In some bleak crag or deeply-hidden bay:
No further chance or choice remain'd; and right
For the first further rock which met their sight
They steer'd, to take their latest view of land,
And yield as victims, or die sword in hand;
Dismiss'd the natives and their shallop, who
Would still have battled for that scanty crew;
But Christian bade them seek their shore again,
Nor add a sacrifice which were in vain;

For what were simple bow and savage spear
Against the arms which must be wielded here?

XI.

They landed on a wild but narrow scene,
Where few but Nature's footsteps yet had been;
Prepared their arms, and with that gloomy eye,
Stern and sustain'd, of man's extremity,
When hope is gone, nor glory's self remains
To cheer resistance against death or chains,—
They stood, the three, as the three hundred stood
Who dyed Thermopylae with holy blood.
But, ah! how different! 't is the cause makes all,
Degrades or hallows courage in its fall.
O'er them no fame, eternal and intense,
Blazed through the clouds of death and beckon'd

hence;

No grateful country, smiling through her tears,
Began the praises of a thousand years;
No Nation's eyes would on their tomb be bent,
No heroes envy them their monument;
However boldly their warm blood was spilt,
Their life was shame, their epitaph was guilt.
And this they knew and felt, at least the one,
The leader of the band he had undone;
Who, born perchance for better things, had set
His life upon a cast which linger'd yet:
But now the die was to be thrown, and all
The chances were in favor of his fall:
And such a fall! But still he faced the shock,
Obdurate as a portion of the rock
Whereon he stood, and fix'd his levell'd gun,
Dark as a sullen cloud before the sun.

XII.

The boat drew nigh, well arm'd, and firm the crew
To act whatever duty bade them do;
Careless of danger, as the onward wind
Is of the leaves it strews, nor looks behind.
And yet perhaps they rather wish'd to go
Against a nation's than a native foe,
And felt that this poor victim of self-will,
Briton no more, had once been Britain's still.
They hail'd him to surrender—no reply;
Their arms were poised, and glitter'd in the sky.
They hail'd again—no answer; yet once more
They offer'd quarter louder than before.
The echoes only, from the rock's rebound,
Took their last farewell of the dying sound.
Then flash'd the flint, and blazed the volleying flame,
And the smoke rose between them and their aim,
While the rock rattled with the bullets' knell,
Which peal'd in vain, and fatten'd as they fell;
Then flew the only answer to be given
By those who had lost all hope in earth or heaven.
After the first fierce peal, as they pull'd nigher,
They heard the voice of Christian shout, "Now,
fire!"

And ere the word upon the echo died,
Two fell; the rest assail'd the rock's rough side,
And, furious at the madness of their foes,
Disdain'd all further efforts, save to close.
But steep the crag, and all without a path,
Each step opposed a bastion to their wrath,
While, placed midst cliffs the least accessible,
Which Christian's eye was train'd to mark full well,
The three maintain'd a strife which must not yield,
In spots where eagles might have chosen to build.
Their every shot told; while the assailant fell,
Dash'd on the shingles like the limpet shell:
But still enough survived, and mounted still,
Scattering their numbers here and there, until Surrounded and commanded, though not nigh
Enough for seizure, near enough to die,

* The tradition is attached to the story of Ellice, that when her body was lowered into the grave of Abelard (who had been buried twenty years), he opened his arms to receive her.

The desperate trio held aloof their fate
But by a thousand, like sharks who have gorged the bait;

Yet to the very last they battled well,
And not a groan inform'd their foes who fell.
Christian died last—twice wounded: and once more
Mercy was offer'd when they saw his gore;
Too late for life, but not too late to die.
With, through a hostile hand, to close his eyes.
A limb was broken, and he droop'd along
The way, as doth a falcon rest of young.
The second revived him, or appear'd to wake
Some passion which a weakly gesture spake:
His bodice'd to the foremost, who drew nigh—
But, as they near'd, he rear'd his weapon high—
His last ball had been aim'd, but from his breast
He turn the topmost button from his vest,
Down the tube dash'd it, level'd, fired, and scall'd
As his foe fell; then, like a serpent, coil'd
His wounded, weary form, to where the steep
Look'd desperate as himself along the deep;
O'er one glance back, and clench'd his hand, and shook

His last rage against the earth which he forsook;
Then plung'd: the rock below received like glass
His body crush'd into one gray mass,
With scarce a shred to tell of human form,
Or fragment for the sea-bird or the worm;
A fair-hair'd scalp, besmear'd with blood and wounds.

Yet rock'd, the remnant of himself and deeds;
Some splinters of his weapons (to the last.
As long as hand could hold, he held them fast)
Yet glitter'd, but at distance—hur'd away
To rest beneath the dew and dashing spray.
The rest was nothing—save a life mispent,
And soul—but who shall answer where it went?
To come to hear, not judge the dead; and they
Who deem to hell, themselves are on the way,
Unless these bulwarks of eternal pains
Are pardon'd their dead hearts for their worse crimes.

XIII.

The dead was over! All were gone or ta'en,
The fugitive, the captive, or the slain.
Chain'd on the deck, where once, a gallant crew,
They stood with honor, were the wretched few
Survivors of the skirmish on the isle;
But the last rock left no surviving spoil.
Cold lay they where they fell, and weltering,
While o'er them flap'd the sea-birds' dewy wing,
Now wheeling nearer from the neighboring surge,
And screaming high their harsh and hungry dirge:
But calm and careless heaved the wave below,
Neutral with unsympathetic flow;
For o'er the face the dolphins sported on,
And sprung the flying-fish against the sun,

Till its dried wing relapsed from its brief height,
To gather moisture for another flight.

XIV.

'Twas morn; and Neuha, who by dawn of day
Swam smoothly forth to catch the rising ray,
And watch if aught approach'd the amphibious lair

Where lay her lover, saw a sail in air:
It flap'd, it fill'd, and to the growing gale
Bent its broad arch: her breath began to fall
With fluttering fear, her heart beat thick and high, While yet a doubt sprung where its course might lie.

But no! it came not; fast and far away
The shadow lessen'd as it clear'd the bay.
She gazed, and flung the sea-foam from her eyes,
To watch as for a rainbow in the skies.
On the horizon verged the distant deck,
Diminut'd, dwindled to a very speck—
Than vanish'd. All was ocean, all was joy!
Down plunged she through the cave to rouse her
boy;

Told all she had seen, and all she hoped, and all
That happy love could augur or recall:
Sprung forth again, with Torquill following free
His bounding nered over the broad sea;
Swam round the rock, to where a shallow cleft
Hid the canoe that Neuha there had left.
Drifting along the tide, without an oar,
That eve the strangers chased them from the shore;
But when these vanish'd, she pursued her prow,
Regain'd, and urged to where they found it now:
Nor ever did more love and joy embark,
Than now were wafted in that slender ark.

XV.

Again their own shore rises on the view,
No more polluted with a hostile hue;
No sullen ship lay bristling o'er the foam,
A floating dungeon:—all was hope and home!
A thousand proas darted o'er the bay,
With sounding shells, and heralded their way;
The chiefs came down, around the people pour'd,
And welcomed Torquill as a son restored;
The women throng'd, embracing and embraced
By Neuha, asking where they had been chased,
And how escaped? The tale was told; and then
One acclamation rent the sky again;
And from that hour a new tradition gave
Their sanctuary the name of "Neuha's Cave."
A hundred fires, far flickering from the height,
Blazed o'er the general revel of the night,
The feast in honor of the guest, return'd
To peace and pleasure, perilously earn'd;
A night succeeded by such happy days
As only the yet infant world displays.

* In the latter account of Frederic the Second of Prussia, there is a singular relation of a young Frenchman, who with his company appeared to be of some rank. He enlisted and carried on his adventures, and after a desperate resistance was wounded, having killed an officer, who attempted to seize him, he was wounded, by the discharge of his musket loaded with a ball of his officers. Some circumstances on his court-martial raised a great interest amongst his judges, who wished to discover his real situation in life, which he offered to disclose, but to the king only, to whom he requested permission to write. This was refused, and Frederic was filled with the greatest indignation, from baffled curiosity or some other motive, when he understood that his request had been denied.

MANFRED:

A Dramatic Poem.*

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Manfred.
Chamois Hunter.
Abbot of St. Maurice.
Manuel.

Herman.
Witch of the Alps.
Arimance.

Nemesis.
The Destinies.
Spirits, &c.

The SCENE of the Drama is amongst the Higher Alps—partly in the Castle of Manfred, and partly in the Mountains.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Manfred alone.—Scene, a Gothic Gallery.—Time, Midnight.

Man. The lamp must be replenish'd, but even then
It will not burn so long as I must watch:
My slumbers—if I slumber—are not sleep,
But a continuance of enduring thought,
Which then I can resist not: In my heart
There is a vigil, and these eyes but close
To look within; and yet I live, and bear
The aspect and the form of breathing men.
But grief should be the instructor of the wise;
Sorrow is knowledge: they who know the most
Must mourn the deepest o'er the fatal truth,
The Tree of Knowledge is not that of Life.
Philosophy and science, and the springs
Of wonder, and the wisdom of the world,
I have essay'd, and in my mind there is
A power to make these subject to itself—
But they avail not: I have done men good,
And I have met with good even among men—
But this avail'd not: I have had my foes,
And none have baffled, many fallen before me—
But this avail'd not:—Good, or evil, life,
Powers, passions, all I see in other beings,
Have been to me as rain unto the sands,
Since that all-nameless hour. I have no dread,
And feel the curse to have no natural fear,
Nor fluttering throb, that beats with hopes or wishes,
Or lurking love of something on the earth.
Now to my task.—

Mysterious Agency!
Ye spirits of the unbounded Universe!
Whom I have sought in darkness and in light—
Ye, who do compass earth about, and dwell
In subtler essence—ye, to whom the tops
Of mountains inaccessible are haunts,
And earth's and ocean's caves familiar things—
I call upon ye by the written charm

Which gives me power upon you—Rise! Appear!

They come not yet.—Now by the voice of him
Who is the first among you—by this sign,
Which makes you tremble—by the claims of him
Who is undying,—Rise! Appear!—Appear!
[A pause.]

If it be so.—Spirits of earth and air,
Ye shall not thus elude me: by a power,
Deeper than all yet urged, a tyrant spell,
Which had its birthplace in a star condemn'd,
The burning wreck of a demolish'd world,
A wandering hell in the eternal space;
By the strong curse which is upon my soul,
The thought which is within me and around me,
I do compel ye to my will.—Appear!
[A star is seen at the darker end of the gallery: it is stationary; and a voice is heard singing.]

First Spirit.

Mortal! to thy bidding bow'd,
From my mansion in the cloud,
Which the breath of twilight builds,
And the summer's sunset gilds
With the azure and vermillion,
Which is mix'd for my pavilion;
Though thy quest may be forbidden,
On a star-beam I have ridden:
To thine adjuration bow'd,
Mortal—be thy wish avow'd!

Voice of the Second Spirit.

Mont Blanc is the monarch of mountains;
They crown'd him long ago
On a throne of rocks, in a robe of clouds,
With a diadem of snow.
Around his waist are forests braced,
The Avalanche in his hand;

* March 3, 1817. Lord Byron wrote to Mr. Murray. "I sent you the other day, in two covers, the first act of 'Manfred,' a drama as mad as Nat Lee's Hedam tragedy, which was published without giving me previous notice."

twenty-five acts and some odd scenes; mine is but in three acts."—March 9, 1817. "You must not publish it (if it ever is published) without giving me previous notice."

But ere it fall, that thundering ball
Must pause for my command.
The Glacier's cold and restless mass
Moves onward day by day;
But I am he who bids it pass,
Or with its ice delay.
I am the spirit of the place,
Could make the mountain bow
And quiver to his cavern'd base—
And what with me wouldst Thou?

Voices of the Third Spirit.

In the blue depth of the waters,
Where the wave hath no strife,
Where the wind is a stranger,
And the sea-snake hath life,
Where the Mermaid is decking
Her green hair with shells,
Like the storm on the surface;
Came the sound of thy speech;
O'er my calm Hall of Coral
The deep echo roll'd—
To the Spirit of Ocean
Thy wishes unfold!

Fourth Spirit.

Where the slumbering earthquake
Lies pillow'd on fire,
And the lakes of bitumen
Rise boilingly higher;
Where the roots of the Andes
Strike deep in the earth,
As their summits to heaven
Shoot soaringly forth;
I have quitted my birthplace,
Thy bidding to bide—
Thy spell hath subdued me,
Thy will be my guide!

Fifth Spirit.

I am the Rider of the wind,
The Stirrer of the storm;
The hurricane I left behind
Is yet with lightning warm;
To speed to thee, o'er shore and sea
I swept upon the blast:
The fleet I met call'd well, and yet
'T will sink ere night be past.

Sixth Spirit.

My dwelling is the shadow of the night,
Why doth thy magic torture me with light?

Seventh Spirit.

The star which rules thy destiny
Was ruled, ere earth began, by me:
It was a world as fresh and fair
As e'er revolved round sun in air;
Its course was free and regular,
Space boom'd not a lovelier star.
The hour arrived—and it became
A wandering mass of shapeless flame,
A pathless comet, and a curse,
The menace of the universe;
Still rolling on with innate force,
Without a sphere, without a course,
A bright deformity on high,
The monster of the upper sky!
And thou! beneath its influence born—
Thou worm! whom I obey and scorn—
Forced by a power (which is not thine,
And lent thee but to make thee mine)
For this brief moment to descend,
Where these weak spirits round thee bend
And parley with a thing like thee—
What wouldst thou, Child of Clay! with
me?

The Seven Spirits.

Earth, ocean, air, night, mountains, winds, thy star,
Are at thy beck and bidding, Child of Clay!
Before thee at thy quest their spirits are—
What wouldst thou with us, son of mortals—say?

Mrs. Forgetfulness.

First Spirit. Of what—of whom—and why?

Man. Of that which is within me; read it there—
Ye know it, and I cannot utter it.

Spirit. We can but give thee that which we possess:

Ask of us subjects, sovereignty, the power
O'er earth—the whole, or portion—or a sign
Which shall control the elements, whereof
We are the dominators, each and all,
These shall be thine.

Man. Oblivion, self-oblivion—
Can ye not wring from out the hidden realms
Ye offer so profusely what I ask?

Spirit. It is not in our essence, in our skill;
But—thou mayst die.

Man. Will death bestow it on me?

Spirit. We are immortal, and do not forget;
We are eternal; and to us the past

Is, as the future, present. Art thou answer'd?

Man. Ye mock me—but the power which brought ye here
Hath made you mine. Slaves, scoff not at my will!

The mind, the spirit, the Promethean spark,
The lightning of my being, is as bright,
Pervading, and far-darting as your own,
And shall not yield to yours, though coop'd in clay!
Answer, or I will teach you what I am.

Spirit. We answer as we answer'd; our reply
Is even in thine own words.

Man. Why say ye so?

Spirit. If, as thou sayst, thine essence be as ours,

We have replied in telling thee, the thing
Mortals call death hath nought to do with us.

Man. I then have call'd ye from your realms in vain;

Ye cannot, or ye will not, aid me.

Spirit. Say;

What we possess we offer; it is thine:
Bethink ere thou dismiss us, ask again—
Kingdom, and sway, and strength, and length of days—

Man. Accursed! what have I to do with days?

They are too long already.—Hence—begone!

Spirit. Yet pause: being here, our will would do these service;

Bethink thee, is there then no other gift

Which we can make not worthless in thine eyes?

Man. No, none; yet stay—one moment, ere we part—

I would behold ye face to face. I hear

Your voices, sweet and melancholy sounds,

As music on the waters; and I see

The steady aspect of a clear large star;

But nothing more. Approach me as ye are,

Or one, or all, in your accustom'd forms.

Spirit. We have no forms beyond the elements

Of which we are the mind and principle:

But choose a form—in that we will appear.

Man. I have no choice; there is no form or

earth

Hideous or beautiful to me. Let him,

Who is most powerful of ye, take such aspect

As unto him may seem most fitting—Come!

Seventh Spirit (appearing in the shape of a beautiful female figure). Behold!

Man. Oh God! if it be thou, and thou

Art not a madness and a mockery,

I yet might be most happy. I will clasp thee,
And we again will be— [The figure vanishes.
My heart is crush'd!
[Manfred falls senseless.

(A Voice is heard in the Incantation which follows.)

When the moon is on the wave,
And the glow-worm in the grass,
And the meteor on the grave,
And the wisp on the morass;
When the falling stars are shooting,
And the answer'd owls are hooting,
And the silent leaves are still
In the shadow of the hill,
Shall my soul be upon thine,
With a power and with a sign.

Though thy slumber may be deep,
Yet thy spirit shall not sleep;
There are shades which will not vanish;
There are thoughts thou canst not banish;
By a power to thee unknown,
Thou canst never be alone;
Thou art wrapt as with a shroud,
Thou art gather'd in a cloud;
And for ever shalt thou dwell
In the spirit of this spell.

Though thou seest me not pass by,
Thou shalt feel me with thine eye
As a thing that, though unseen,
Must be near thee, and hath been;
And when in that secret dread
Thou hast turn'd around thy head,
Thou shalt marvel I am not
As thy shadow on the spot,
And the power which thou dost feel
Shall be what thou must conceal.

And a magic voice and verse
Hath baptized thee with a curse;
And a spirit of the air
Hath begirt thee with a snare;
In the wind there is a voice
Shall forbid thee to rejoice;
And to thee shall Night deny
All the quiet of her sky;
And the day shall have a sun,
Which shall make thee wish it done.

From thy false tears I did distill
An essence which hath strength to kill;
From thy own heart I then did wring
The black blood in its blackest spring;
From thy own smile I snatch'd the snake,
For there it coil'd as in a brake;
From thy own lip I drew the charm
Which gave all these their deadliest harm;
In proving every poison known,
I found the strongest was thine own.

By thy cold breast and serpent smile,
By thy unfathom'd gulfs of guile,
By that most seeming virtuous eye,
By thy shut soul's hypocrisy;
By the perfection of thine art
Which pass'd for human thine own heart;
By thy delight in others' pain,
And by thy brotherhood of Cain,
I call upon thee! and compel
Thyself to be thy proper Hell!

And on thy head I pour the vial
Which doth devote thee to this trial;
Nor to slumber, nor to die,
Shall be in thy destiny;
Though thy death shall still seem near
To thy wish, but as a fear;

Lo! the spell now works around thee,
And the clankless chain hath bound thee;
O'er thy heart and brain together
Hath the word been pass'd—now wither!

SCENE II.—The Mountain of the Jungfrau.—Time, Morning.—Manfred alone upon the Cliffs.

Man. The spirits I have raised abandon me—
The spells which I have studied baffle me—
The remedy I reek'd of tortured me;
I lean no more on superhuman aid;
It hath no power upon the breast, and for
The future, till the past be gul'd in darkness,
It is not of my search.—My mother Earth!
And thou fresh breaking Day, and you, ye Mountains,

Why are ye beautiful? I cannot love ye.
And thou, the bright eye of the universe,
That openest over all, and unto all
Art a delight—thou shalt not on my heart.
And you, ye crags, upon whose extreme edge
I stand, and on the torrent's brink beneath
Behold the tall pines dwindled as to shrubs
In dizziness of distance; when a leap,
A stir, a motion, even a breath, would bring
My breast upon its rocky bosom's bed
To rest for ever—wherefore do I pause?
I feel the impulse—yet I do not plunge;
I see the peril—yet do not recede;
And my brain reels—and yet my foot is firm:
There is a power upon me which withholdeth,
And makes it my fatality to live;
If it be life to wear within myself
This barrenness of spirit, and to be
My own soul's sepulchre, for I have ceased
To justify my deeds unto myself—
The last infirmity of evil. Ay,
Thou winged and cloud-cleaving minister,

[An eagle passes.]
Whose happy flight is highest into heaven,
Well mayst thou swoop so near me—I should be Thy prey, and gorge thine eaglets; thou art gone
Where the eye cannot follow thee; but thine
Yet pierces downward, onward, or above,
With a pervading vision.—Beautiful!
How beautiful is all this visible world!
How glorious in its action and itself!
But we, who name ourselves its sovereigns, we,
Half dust, half deity, alike unfit
To sink or soar, with our mix'd essence make
A conflict of its elements, and breathe
The breath of degradation and of pride,
Contending with low wants and lofty will,
Till our mortality predominates,
And men are—what they name not to themselves,
And trust not to each other. Hark! the note,

[The Shepherd's pipe in the distance is heard.]
The natural music of the mountain reed—
For here the patriarchal days are not
A pastoral fable—pipes in the liberal air,
Mix'd with the sweet bells of the sauntering herd;
My soul would drink those echoes. Oh, that I were
The viewless spirit of a lovely sound,
A living voice, a breathing harmony,
A bodiless enjoyment—born and dying
With the blest tone which made me!

Enter from below a Chamois Hunter.

Chamois Hunter. Even so
This way the chamois leapt: her nimble feet
Have baffled me; my gains to-day will scarce
Repay my break-neck travail.—What is here?
Who seems not of my trade, and yet hath reach'd
A height which none even of our mountaineers,
Save our best hunters, may attain: his garb
Is goodly, his mien manly, and his air

Proud as a freeborn peasant's, at this distance—
I will approach him nearer.

Man. (not perceiving the other). To be thus—
Gray-hair'd with anguish,* like these blasted pines,
Wrecks of a single winter, barkless, branchless,
A blighted trunk upon a cursed root,
Which but supplies a feeling to decay—
And to be thus, eternally but thus,
Having been otherwise! Now furrow'd o'er
With wrinkles, plough'd by moments, not by years
And hours—all tortured into ages—hours
Which I outlive!—Ye toppling crags of ice!
Ye avalanches, whom a breath draws down
In mountainous o'erwhelming, come and crush me!
I hear ye momentarily above, beneath,
Crash with a frequent conflict; but ye pass,
And only fall on things that still would live;
On the young flourishing forest, or the hut
And hamlet of the harmless villager.

C. Hwa. The mists begin to rise from up the valley;

I'll warn him to descend, or he may chance
To lose at once his way and life together.

Man. The mists boil up around the glaciers;
clouds

Rise curling fast beneath me, white and sulphury,
Like foam from the roused ocean of deep Hell,
Whose every wave breaks on a living shore,
Heap'd with the damn'd like pebbles.—I am giddy.

C. Hwa. I must approach him cautiously; if near,
A sudden step will startle him, and he Sems tottering already.

Man. Mountains have fallen,
Leaving a gap in the clouds, and with the shock
Rocking their Alpine brethren; filling up
The ripe green valleys with destruction's splinters;
Dammings the rivers with a sudden dash,
Which crush'd the waters into mist, and made
Their fountains find another channel—thus,
Thus, in its old age, did Mount Rosenberg—
Why stood I not beneath it?

C. Hwa. Friend! have a care,
Your next step may be fatal!—for the love
Of him who made you, stand not on that brink!

Man. (not hearing him). Such would have been for me a fitting tomb;

My bones had then been quiet in their depth;
They had not then been strewn upon the rocks
For the wind's pastime—as thus—thus they shall be—

In this one plunge.—Farewell, ye opening heavens!
Look not upon me thus reproachfully—
You were not meant for me—Earth! take these atoms!

[As Manfred is in act to spring from the cliff, the Chamouis Hunter seizes and retains him with a sudden grasp.]

C. Hwa. Hold, madman!—though weary of thy
life,
Stain not our pure vales with thy guilty blood:
Away with me—I will not quit my hold.

Man. I am most sick at heart—nay, grasp me
not—
I am all feebleness—the mountains whirl
Spinning around me—I grow blind—What art
thou?

C. Hwa. I'll answer that anon.—Away with
me—

The clouds grow thicker—there—now lean on
me—

Place your foot here—here, take this staff, and cling
A moment to that shrub—now give me your hand,
And hold fast by my girdle—softly—well—

The Châlet will be gain'd within an hour:
Come on, we'll quickly find a surer footing,
And something like a pathway, which the torrent
Hath wash'd since winter.—Come, 'tis bravely
done—

You should have been a hunter.—Follow me.
[As they descend the rocks with difficulty, the scene closes.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Cottage amongst the Bernese Alps.

Manfred and the Chamouis Hunter.

C. Hwa. No, no—yet pause—thou must not yet go forth:

Thy mind and body are alike unfit
To trust each other, for some hours, at least;
When thou art better, I will be thy guide—
But whither?

Man. It imports not: I do know
My route full well, and need no further guidance.

C. Hwa. Thy garb and gait bespeak thee of high lineage—

One of the many chiefs, whose castled crags
Look o'er the lower valleys—which of these May call thee lord? I only know their portals;
My way of life leads me but rarely down
To bask by the huge hearths of those old halls,
Carousing with the vassals; but the paths,
Which step from out our mountains to their doors,
I know from childhood—which of these is thine?

Man. No matter.

C. Hwa. Well, sir, pardon me the question,
And be of better cheer. Come, taste my wine;
'Tis of an ancient vintage: many a day
'T has thaw'd my veins among our glaciers, now
Let it do thus for thine.—Come, pledge me fairly.

Man. Away, away! there's blood upon the brim!
Will it then never—never sink in the earth?

C. Hwa. What dost thou mean? thy senses wander from them.

Man. I say 'tis blood—my blood! the pure warm stream

Which ran in the veins of my fathers, and in ours
When we were in our youth, and had one heart,
And loved each other as we should not love,
And this was shed: but still it rises up,
Coloring the clouds, that shut me out from heaven,
Where thou art not—and I shall never be.

C. Hwa. Man of strange words, and some half-maddening sin,

Which makes thee people vacancy, what's'er
Thy dread and suzerance be, there's comfort yet—
The aid of holy men, and heavenly patience—

Man. Patience and patience! Hence—that word was made

For brutes of burthen, not for birds of prey;
Preach it to mortals of a dust like thine,—
I am not of thine order.

C. Hwa. Thanks to heaven!
I would not be of thine for the free fame
Of William Tell; but what's'er thine ill,

It must be borne, and these wild starts are useless.

Man. Do I not bear it?—Look on me—I live.

C. Hwa. This is convulsion, and no healthful life.

Man. I tell thee, man! I have lived many years,
Many long years, but they are nothing now
To those which I must number: ages—ages—
Space and eternity—and consciousness,

With the fierce thirst of death—and still unslaked!

* See foot-note, page IIR.

C. Hun. Why, on thy brow the seal of middle age Hath scarce been set; I am thine elder far.

Man. Think'st thou existence doth depend on mine?

It doth; but actions are our epochs: mine Have made my days and nights imperishable, Endless, and all alike, as sands on the shore, Innumerable atoms; and one desert, Barren and cold, on which the wild waves break, But nothing rests, save carcases and wrecks, Rocks, and the salt-surf weeds of bitterness.

C. Hun. Alas! he's mad—but yet I must not leave him.

Man. I would I were—for then the things I see Would be but a distemper'd dream.

C. Hun. What is it That thou dost see, or think thou look'st upon?

Man. Myself, and thee—a peasant of the Alps— Thy humble virtues, hospitable home, And spirit patient, pious, proud, and free; Thy self-respect, grafted on innocent thoughts; Thy days of health, and nights of sleep; thy toils, By danger dignified, yet guiltless; hopes Of cheerful old age and a quiet grave, With cross and garland over its green turf, And thy grandchildren's love for epitaph; This do I see—and then I look within— It matters not—my soul was scorch'd already!

C. Hun. And wouldst thou then exchange thy lot for mine?

Man. No, friend! I would not wrong thee, nor exchange

My lot with living being: I can bear— However wretchedly, 'tis still to bear— In life what others could not brook to dream, But perish in their slumber.

C. Hun. And with this— This cautious feeling for another's pain, Canst thou be black with evil?—say not so. Can one of gentle thoughts have wreak'd revenge Upon his enemies?

Man. Oh! no, no, no! My injuries came down on those who loved me— On those whom I best loved: I never quell'd An enemy, save in my just defence— But my embrace was fatal.

C. Hun. Heaven give thee rest! And penitence restore thee to thyself; My prayers shall be for thee.

Man. I need them not, But can endure thy pity. I depart— 'Tis time—farewell!—Here 's gold, and thanks for thee—

No words—it is thy due.—Follow me not— I know my path—the mountain peril 's past:— And once again, I charge thee, follow not!

[Exit Manfred.]

SCENE II.—A lower Valley in the Alps.—A Cataract.

[Enter Manfred.]

It is not noon—the sunbow's rays still arch The torrent with the many hues of heaven, And roll the sheeted silver's waving column O'er the crag's headlong perpendicular, And fling its lines of foaming light along, And to and fro, like the pale courser's tail, The Giant steed, to be bestrode by Death, As told in the Apocalypse. No eyes But mine now drink this sight of loveliness; I should be sole in this sweet solitude, And with the Spirit of the place divide The homage of these waters.—I will call her.

[Manfred takes some of the water into the palm of his hand, and flings it in the air, muttering the adjuration. After a pause, the Witch of the Alps rises beneath the arch of the sunbow of the torrent.]

Beautiful Spirit! with thy hair of light, And dazzling eyes of glory, in whose form The charms of earth's least mortal daughters grow To an unearthly stature, in an essence Of purer elements; while the hues of youth,— Carnation'd like a sleeping infant's cheek, Rock'd by the beating of her mother's heart, Or the rose tints, which summer's twilight leaves Upon the lofty glacier's virgin snow, The blush of earth, embracing her heaven,— Tinge thy celestial aspect, and make tame The beauties of the sunbow which bends o'er thee. Beautiful Spirit! in thy calm clear brow, Wherein is glass'd serenity of soul, Which of itself shows immortality, I read that thou wilt pardon to a Son Of Earth, whom the abstruser powers permit At times to commune with them—if that he Avail him of thy spells—to call thee thus, And gaze on thee a moment.

Witch. Son of Earth! I know thee, and the powers which give thee power; I know thee for a man of many thoughts, And deeds of good and ill, extreme in both, Fatal and fated in thy sufferings.

I have expected this—what wouldst thou with me? Man. To look upon thy beauty—nothing further. The face of the earth hath madden'd me, and I Take refuge in her mysteries, and pierce To the abodes of those who govern her— But they can nothing aid me. I have sought From them what they could not bestow, and now I search no further.

Witch. What could be the quest Which is not in the power of the most powerful, The rulers of the invisible?

Man. A boon; But why should I repeat it? 't were in vain.

Witch. I know not that; let thy lips utter it.

Man. Well, though it torture me, 'tis but the same;

My pang shall find a voice. From my youth up—wards

My spirit walk'd not with the souls of men, Nor look'd upon the earth with human eyes; The thirst of their ambition was not mine, The aim of their existence was not mine; My joys, my griefs, my passions, and my powers, Made me a stranger; though I wore the form, I had no sympathy with breathing flesh, Nor midst the creatures of clay that girded me Was there but one who—but of her anon. I said, with men, and with the thoughts of men, I held but alight communion; but instead, My joy was in the wilderness,—to breathe The difficult air of the iced mountain's top, Where the birds dare not build, nor insect's wing Flit o'er the herbless granite; or to plunge Into the torrent, and to roll along

On the swift whirl of the new-breaking wave Of river-stream, or ocean, in their flow. In these my early strength exulted; or To follow through the night the moving moon, The stars and their development; or catch The dazzling lightnings till my eyes grew dim; Or to look, list'ning, on the scatter'd leaves, While Autumn winds were at their evening song. These were my pastimes, and to be alone; For if the beings, of whom I was one,— Hating to be so,—cross'd me in my path, I felt myself degraded back to them, And was all clay again. And then I dived, In my lone wanderings, to the caves of death, Searching its cause in its effect; and drew From wither'd bones, and skulls, and heap'd-up dust,

Conclusions must be forbidden. Then I pass'd
The nights of years in sciences untaught,
Save in the old time; and with time and toil,
And terrible ordeal, and such penance
As is hath bath power upon the air,
And spirits that do compass air and earth,
Heaven, and the peopled infinite, I made
Mine eyes familiar with Eternity,
Such as, before me, did the Magi, and
He who from out their fountain dwellings raised
Eres and Antares,* at Gadara,
As I do these;—and with my knowledge grew
The thirst of knowledge, and the power and joy
Of this most bright intelligence, until,— Witch. Proceed.

Man. Oh! I but thus prolong'd my words,
Bursting these idle attributes, because
As I approach the core of my heart's grief—
But to my task. I have not named to thee
Father or mother, mistress, friend, or being,
With whom I wore the chain of human tie;
If I had such, they seem'd not such to me;
Yet there was one—

Witch.

Spare not thyself—proceed.

Man. She was like me in lineaments—her eyes,
Her hair, her features, all, to the very tone
Even of her voice, they said were like to mine;
But softer'd all, and temper'd into beauty;
She had the same lone thoughts and wanderings,
The quest of hidden knowledge, and a mind
To comprehend the universe: nor these Alone, but with them gentler powers than mine,
Pity, and smiles, and tears—which I had not;
And tenderness—but that I had for her;
Humility—and that I never had.
Her faults were mine—her virtues were her own—
I loved her, and destroy'd her!

Witch.

With thy hand?

Man. Not with my hand, but heart—which broke her heart;
It pined on mine, and wither'd. I have shed
Blood, but not hers—and yet her blood was shed;
I saw—and could not stanch it.

Witch.

And for this—

A being of the race thou dost despise,
The order which thine own would rise above,
Kinging with us and ours,—thou dost forego
The gifts of our great knowledge, and shrink'st back
To mortal mortality—Away!

Man. Daughter of Air! I tell thee, since that hour—

But words are breath—look on me in my sleep,
Or watch my watchings—Come and sit by me!
My solitude is solitude no more.

But people with the Furies—I have gnash'd
My teeth in darkness till returning morn,
Then cursed myself till sunset—I have pray'd
For wisdom as a blessing—it is denied me.

I have affronted death—but in the war
Of elements the waters shrunk from me,
And dead things seem'd hazelous; the cold hand
Of an afflictive demon held me back,
Shook by a single hair, which would not break.
In timor, imagination, all

The elements of my soul—which one day was

A Curse in action—I plunged deep,

But, like an abbing wave, it dash'd me back

Into the sea of my unfulfill'd thought.

Forgetting—forgetting—Forgetfulness

Is all, save where 'tis to be found,

And where to learn; my sciences,

And my superhuman art,

Is mortal here: I dwell in my despair—
And live—and live for ever.

Witch.

It may be

That I can aid thee.

Man.

To do this thy power
Must wake the dead, or lay me low with them.
Do so—in any shape—in any hour—
With any torture—so it be the last.

Witch. That is not in my province; but if thou
Wilt swear obedience to my will, and do
My bidding, it may help thee to thy wishes.

Man. I will not swear—Obey! and whom? the spirits

Whose presence I command, and be the slave
Of those who served me—Never!

Witch.

Is this all?

Hast thou no gentler answer?—Yet bethink thee,
And pause ere thou rejectest.

Man.

I have said it.

Witch. Enough!—I may retire then—say!

Man.

Retire!

(The Witch disappears.)

Man. (alone). We are the fools of time and terror:

Days

Steal on us and steal from us; yet we live,
Loathing our life, and dreading still to die.
In all the days of this detested yoke—
This vital weight upon the struggling heart,
Which sinks with sorrow, or beats quick with pain,
Or joy that ends in agony or faintness—
In all the days of past and future, for
In life there is no present, we can number
How few—how less than few—wherein the soul
Forbears to part for death, and yet draws back
As from a stream in winter, though the chill
Be but a moment's. I have one resource
Still in my science—I can call the dead,
And ask them what it is we dread to be:
The sternest answer can but be the Grave,
And that is nothing. If they answer not—
The buried Prophet answer'd to the Hag
Of Endor; and the Spartan Monarch drew
From the Byzantine maid's unslapping spirit
An answer and his destiny—he slew
That which he loved, unknowing what he slew,
And died unpardon'd—though he call'd in aid
The Phrygian Jove, and in Phigalia roused
The Arcadian Evocators to compel
The indignant shadow to depose her wrath,
Or fix her term of vengeance—she replied
In words of dubious import, but fulfill'd:
If I had never lived, that which I love
Had still been living; had I never loved,
That which I love would still be beautiful—
Happy and giving happiness. What is she?
What is she now?—a sufferer for my sin—
A thing I dare not think upon—or nothing.
Within few hours I shall not call in vain—
Yet in this hour I read the thing I dare:
Until this hour I never shrink to gaze
On spirit, good or evil—now I tremble,
And feel a strange cold thaw upon my heart.
But I can act even what I most abhor
And champion human fears.—The night approaches.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Summit of the Jungfrau Mountain.

Enter First Destiny.

The moon is rising broad, and round, and bright;
And here on snows, where never human foot

the Greeks at the battle of Plataea, and afterwards perished in an attempt to betray the Lacedaemonians, and Cleonice, is told in Plutarch's life of Cimón; and in the Laconica of Pausanias the Sophist, in his description of Greece.

Of common mortal trod, we nightly tread,
And leave no traces; o'er the savage sea,
The glassy ocean of the mountain ice,
We skim its rugged breakers, which put on
The aspect of a tumbling tempest's foam,
Frozen in a moment—a dead whirlpool's image:
And this most steep fantastic pinnacle,
The fretwork of some earthquake—where the clouds
Pause to repose themselves in passing by—
Is sacred to our revels, or our vigils;
Here do I wait my sisters, on our way
To the Hall of Arimanes, for to-night
Is our great festival—'t is strange they come not.

A Voice without, singing.

The Captive Usurper,
Hurled down from the throne,
Lay buried in torpor,
Forgotten and lone;
I broke through his slumbers,
I shiver'd his chain,
I leagu'd him with numbers—
He's Tyrant again!

With the blood of a million he'll answer my care,
With a nation's destruction—his flight and despair.

Second Voice, without.

The ship sail'd on, the ship sail'd fast,
But I left not a sail, and I left not a mast;
There is not a plank of the hull or the deck,
And there is not a wretch to lament o'er his wreck;
Save one, whom I held, as he swam, by the hair,
And he was a subject well worthy my care;
A traitor on land, and a pirate at sea—
But I saved him to wreak further havoc for me!

First Destiny, answering.

The city lies sleeping;
The morn, to deplore it,
May dawn on it weeping;
Sullenly, slowly,
The black plague flew o'er it—
Thousands lie lowly;
Tens of thousands shall perish—
The living shall fly from
The sick they should cherish;
But nothing can vanquish
The touch that they die from.
Sorrow and anguish,
And evil and dread,
Envelope a nation;
The blest are the dead,
Who see not the sight
Of their own desolation;
This work of a night—

This wreck of a realm—this deed of my doing—
For ages I've done, and shall still be renewing!

Enter the Second and Third Destinies.

The Three.

Our hands contain the hearts of men,
Our footsteps are their graves;
We only give to take again
The spirits of our slaves!

First Des. Welcome!—Where 's Nemesis?

Second Des. At some great work;
But what I know not, for my hands were full.

Third Des. Behold she cometh.

Enter Nemesis.

First Des. Say, where hast thou been?
My sisters and thyself are slow to-night.

Nem. I was detain'd repairing shatter'd thrones,
Marrying fools, restoring dynasties,
Avenge men upon their enemies,
And making them repeat their own revenge;

Goading the wise to madness; from the dull
Shaping out oracles to rule the world
Afresh, for they were waxing out of date,
And mortals dared to powder for themselves,
To weigh kings in the balance, and to speak
Of freedom, the forbidden fruit.—Away!
We have outstay'd the hour—mount we our clouds!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Hall of Arimanes—Arimanes on his Throne, a Globe of Fire, surrounded by the Spirits.

Hymn of the Spirits.

Hail to our Master!—Prince of Earth and Air!
Who walks the clouds and waters—in his hand
The sceptre of the elements, which tear
Themselves to chaos at his high command!
He breatheth—and a tempest shakes the sea;
He speaketh—and the clouds reply in thunder;
He gazeth—from his glance the sunbeams flee;
He moveth—earthquakes rend the world asunder.
Beneath his footsteps the volcanoes rise;
His shadow is the Pestilence; his path
The comets herald through the crackling skies;
And planets turn to ashes at his wrath.
To him War offers daily sacrifice;
To him Death pays his tribute; Life is his,
With all its infinite of agonies—
And his the spirit of whatever is!

Enter the Destinies and Nemesis.

First Des. Glory to Arimanes! on the earth
His power increaseth—both my sisters did
His bidding, nor did I neglect my duty!

Second Des. Glory to Arimanes! we who bow
The necks of men, bow down before his throne!

Third Des. Glory to Arimanes! we await
His nod!

Nem. Sovereign of Sovereigns! we are thine,
And all that liveth, more or less, is ours,
And most things wholly so; still to increase
Our power, increasing thine, demands our care,
And we are vigilant. Thy late commands
Have been fulfill'd to the utmost.

Enter Manfred.

A Spirit. What is here?
A mortal!—Thou most rash and fatal wretch,
Bow down and worship!

Second Spirit. I do know the man—
A Magian of great power, and fearful skill!

Third Spirit. Bow down and worship, slave!—
What, know'st thou not
Thine and our Sovereign?—Tremble, and obey!

All the Spirits. Prostrate thyself, and thy com-damned clay,
Child of the Earth! or dread the worst.

Man. I know it;
And yet ye see I kneel not.

Fourth Spirit. 'T will be taught thee.
Man. 'T is taught already;—many a night on the earth,

On the bare ground, have I bow'd down my face,
And strew'd my head with ashes; I have known
The fulness of humiliation, for
I sunk before my vain despair, and knelt
To my own desolation.

Fifth Spirit. Dost thou dare
Refuse to Arimanes on his throne
What the whole earth accords, beholding not
The terror of his glory?—Crouch! I say.

Man. Bid him bow down to that which is above
him,
The overruling Infinite—the Maker
Who made him not for worship—let him kneel,
And we will kneel together.

The Spirit.

Crash the worse!

Dear him in prison!—

First Dem. Hence! A vaunt!—he's mine.
Prince of the Powers invisible! This man
Is of no common order, as his port
And presence here denote; his sufferings
Have been of an immortal nature, like
Our own; his knowledge and his powers and will,
As far as is compatible with clay,
Which clog the ethereal essence, have been such
As clay hath seldom borne; his aspirations
Have been beyond the dwellers of the earth,
And they have only taught him what we know—
That knowledge is not happiness, and science
But an exchange of ignorance for that
Which is another kind of ignorance.
This is not all—the passions, attributes
Of earth and heaven, from which no power, nor being.

Her breath from the worm upwards is exempt,
Have pierced his heart; and in their consequence
Made him a thing, which I, who pity not,
Yet pardon those who pity. He is mine,
And thine, it may be; be it so, or not,
No other Spirit in this region hath
A soul like his—or power upon his soul.

Nem. What doth he here then?

First Dem. Let him answer that.
Nem. Ye knew what I have known; and without power

I could not be amongst ye: but there are Powers deeper still beyond—I come in quest
Of each, to answer unto what I seek.

Nem. What wouldst thou?

Nem. Thou canst not reply to me.
Call up the dead—my question is for them.

Nem. Great Anxians, doth thy will avouch
The wishes of this mortal?

Art.

Yes.

Nem. Whom wouldst thou

Unearth?

One without a tomb—call up

Nem.

Astoria.

Nemesis.

Shadow! or Spirit!

Whatever thou art,

Which still doth inherit

The whole or a part

Of the form of thy birth,

Of the mould of thy clay,

Which return'd to the earth,

Reappear to the day!

Bring what thou borest,

The heart and the form,

And the aspect thou worst

Redeem from the worm.

Appear!—Appear!—Appear!

Who sent thee there requires thee here!

[The Phantom of Astoria rises and stands in the midst.

Nem. O! this be death? there's bloom upon her lips—

Nem. I see it: 'tis no living hue,

But a ghastly tincture—like the unnatural red

Which autumn plants upon the perish'd leaf.

Oh, God! that I should dread

To look upon the same—Astoria!—No,

I cannot speak to her—but bid her speak—

Speak to me, woman me.

Nemesis.

Power which hath broken

Which enthral'd thee,

Who hath spoken,

Who have call'd thee!

Nem.

She is silent,

And in that silence I am more than answer'd.

Nem. My power extends no further. Prince of Air!

It rests with thee alone—command her voice.

Art. Spirit—obey this sceptre!

Nem.

Silent still!

She is not of our order, but belongs
To the other powers. Mortal! thy quest is vain,
And we are baffled also.

Nem.

Hear me, hear me—

Astoria! my beloved! speak to me:
I have so much endured—so much endure—
Look on me! the grave hath not changed these

more

Than I am changed for thee. Thou lovedst me
Too much, as I loved thee: we were not made
To torture thus each other, though it were
The deadliest sin to love as we have loved.
Say that thou loath'st me not—that I do bear
This punishment for both—that thou wilt be
One of the blessed—and that I shall die;
For hitherto all hateful things conspire
To bind me in existence—in a life

Which makes me shrink from immortality—
A future like the past. I cannot rest.
I know not what I ask, nor what I seek:
I feel but what thou art—and what I am;
And I would hear yet once before I perish
The voice which was my music—Speak to me!
For I have call'd on thee in the still night,
Startled the slumbering birds from the hush'd boughs,

And woke the mountain wolves, and made the caves

Acquainted with thy vainly echoed name.

Which answer'd me—many things answer'd me—

Spirits and men—but thou wert silent all.

Yet speak to me! I have outwatch'd the stars,

And gazed o'er heaven in vain in search of thee.

Speak to me! I have wander'd o'er the earth,

And never found thy likeness—Speak to me!

Look on the sands around—they feel for me:

I fear them not, and feel for these alone—

Speak to me! though it be in wrath—but say—

I reck not what—but let me hear thee once—

This once—once more!

Phantom of Astoria. Manfred!

Nem.

Say on, say on—

I live but in the sound—it is thy voice!

Phan. Manfred! To-morrow ends thine earthly ills.

Farewell!

Nem. Yet one word more—am I forgiven?

Phan. Farewell!

Nem. Say, shall we meet again?

Phan. Farewell!

Nem. One word for mercy! Say, thou lovest me.

Phan. Manfred!

[The Spirit of Astoria disappears.

Nem. She's gone, and will not be recall'd;

Her words will be fulfill'd. Return to the earth.

A Spirit. He is convulsed—This is to be a mortal,

And seek the things beyond mortality.

Another Spirit. Yet, see, he mastereth himself, and makes

His torture tributary to his will.

Had he been one of us, he would have made

An awful spirit.

Nem. Hast thou further question

Of our great sovereign, or his worshippers?

Nem. None.

Then for a time farewell.

Nem. We meet then! Where? On the earth?—

Even as thou wilt: and for the grace accorded

I now depart a debtor. Fare ye well!

(Some close.)

[Exit Manfred.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Castle of Manfred.

Manfred and Herman.

Man. What is the hour?

Her. It wants but one till sunset,
And promises a lovely twilight.Man. Say,
Are all things so disposed of in the lower
As I directed?

Her. All, my lord, are ready:

Here is the key and casket.

Man. It is well:
Thou mayst retire.

[Exit Herman.]

Man. (alone). There is a calm upon me—
Inexplicable stillness! which till now
Did not belong to what I knew of life.
If that I did not know philosophy
To be of all our vanities the most, I feel,
The nearest word that ever fool'd the ear
From out the schoolman's jargon, I should deem
The golden secret, the sought "Kalon," found,
And seated in my soul. It will not last,
But it is well to have known it, though but once:
It hath enlarged my thoughts with a new sense,
And I within my tablets would note down
That there is such a feeling. Who is there?

Re-enter Herman.

Her. My lord, the abbot of St. Maurice craves
To greet your presence.

Enter the Abbot of St. Maurice.

Abbot. Peace be with Count Manfred!
Man. Thanks, holy father! welcome to these walls;Thy presence honors them, and blesteth those Who dwell within them.Abbot. Would it were so, Count!—
But I would fain confer with thee alone.Man. Herman, retire.—What would my reverend guest?Abbot. Thus, without prelude:—Age and zeal, my office,

And good intent, must plead my privilege;
Our near, though not acquainted neighborhood,
May also be my herald. Rumors strange,
And of unholy nature, are abroad,
And busy with thy name; a noble name
For centuries: may he who bears it now
Transmit it unimpaired!

Man. Proceed,—I listen.

Abbot. 'Tis said thou holdest converse with the things

Which are forbidden to the search of man;
That with the dwellers of the dark abodes,
The many evil and unheavenly spirits
Which walk the valley of the shade of death,
Thou communest. I know that with mankind,
Thy fellows in creation, thou dost rarely
Exchange thy thoughts, and that thy solitude
Is as an anchorite's, were it but holy.

Man. And what are they who do avouch these things?

Abbot. My pious brethren—the scared peasantry—
Even thy own vassals—who do look on thee
With most unquiet eyes. Thy life's in peril.

Man. Take it.

* Otho, being defeated in a general engagement near Brissium, stabbed himself. Plutarch says, that, though he lived full as badly as Nero, his last moments were those of a philosopher. He comforted his soldiers who lamented his fortune, and expressed his concern for their safety, when

Abbot. I come to save, and not destroy—
I would not pry into thy secret soul:
But if these things be sooth, there still is time
For penitence and pity: reconcile thee
With the true church, and through the church to heaven.

Man. I hear thee. This is my reply: whate'er
I may have been, or am, doth rest between Heaven and myself.—I shall not choose a mortal
To be my mediator. Have I sinned
Against your ordinances? prove and punish!

Abbot. My son! I did not speak of punishment,
But penitence and pardon:—with thyself
The choice of such remains—and for the last,
Our institutions and our strong belief
Have given me power to smooth the path from sin
To higher hope and better thoughts; the first
I leave to heaven.—"Vengeance is mine alone!"
So saith the Lord, and with all humbleness
His servant echoes back the awful word.

Man. Old man! there is no power in holy men,
Nor charm in prayer—nor purifying form
Of penitence—nor outward look—nor fast—
Nor agony—nor, greater than all these,
The innate tortures of that deep despair,
Which is remorse without the fear of hell,
But all in all sufficient to itself
Would make a hell of heaven—can exorcise
From out the unbounded spirit, the quick sense
Of its own sins, wrongs, sufferance, and revenge
Upon itself; there is no future pang
Can deal that justice on the self-condemn'd
He deals on his own soul.

Abbot. All this is well;
For this will pass away, and be succeeded
By an auspicious hope, which shall look up
With calm assurance to that blessed place,
Which all who seek may win, whatever be
Their earthly errors, so they be atoned:
And the commencement of atonement is
The sense of its necessity.—Say on—
And all our church can teach thee shall be taught;
And all we can absolve thee shall be pardon'd.

Man. When Rome's sixth emperor² was near his last,
The victim of a self-inflicted wound,
To shun the torments of a public death
From senates once his slaves, a certain soldier,
With show of loyal pity, would have stanch'd
The gushing throat with his officious robe;
The dying Roman thrust him back, and said—
Some empire still in his expiring glance,
"It is too late—is this fidelity?"

Abbot. And what of this?

Man. I answer with the Roman—

"It is too late!"

Abbot. It never can be so,
To reconcile thyself with thy own soul,
And thy own soul with heaven. Hast thou no hope?

'Tis strange—even those who do despair above,
Yet shape themselves some fantasy on earth,
To which frail twig they cling, like drowning men.

Man. Ay—father! I have had those earthly visions

And noble aspirations in my youth,
To make my own the mind of other men,
The enlightener of nations; and to rise they solicited to pay him the last friendly offices. Martial says:

"Sit Cato, dum vivit, sane vel Cæsare major.
Dum moritur, nunquid major Othone fuit?"

I knew not whether—It might be to fall;
But fall, even as the mountain crumple,
Which having leapt from the more dazzling height,
Even in the flaming strength of its abyss
(Which casts up many columns that become Clouds rising from the reascending skies),
Lie low but mighty still.—But this is past,
My thoughts misdirect themselves.

Alas! And wherefore so?
Man. I could not tame my nature down; for he Must serve who fate would sway—and soothe—and

And waleh all time—and pry into all place—
And be a living life—who would become
A mighty thing amongst the mean, and such
The man are; I disdain'd to mingle with
A herd, though to be leader—and of wolves.
The lion is alone, and so am I.

Alas! And why not live and act with other men?
Man. Because my nature was averse from life;
And yet not cruel; for I would not make,
But find a desolation—like the wind,
The red-hot breath of the most lone sirocco,
Which dwells hot in the desert, and sweeps o'er
The barren sands which bear no shrubs to blast,
And reveals o'er their wild and arid waves,
And seeketh not, so that it is not sought,
But being met is deadly; such hath been
The course of my existence; but there came
Things in my path which are no more.

Alas!
I gh to fear that thou art past all aid
From me and from my calling; yet so young,
I still would—

Man. Look on me! there is an order
Of mortals on the earth, who do become
Old in their youth, and die are middle age,
Without the violence of warlike death;
Some partaking of pleasure—some of study—
Some worn with toil—some of mere weariness—
Some of disease—and some insanity*—
And some of wither'd or of broken hearts;
For this last is a malady which slays
More than are number'd in the lists of Fate,
Taking all shapes, and bearing many names.
Look upon me! for even of all these things
Have I partaken; and of all these things,
One was enough; then wonder not that I Am what I am, but that I ever was,
Or having been, that I am still on earth.

Alas! Yet, hear me still—
Man. Old man! I do respect
Thine age, and reverence thine years; I deem Thy purpose pious, but it is in vain:
Faint me not childish; I would spare thyself,
For more than me, in slumbering at this time
All further colloquy—and so—farewell.

[Exit Manfred.]
Alas! This should have been a noble creature: he Knew all the energy which would have made
A worthy theme of glorious elements,

*This speech has been quoted in more than one of the editions of the book's own life. Much earlier, when only thirteen years of age, he had thus prophesied:—"It seems to me to importune in my youth the greatest misery of all men. My fate has fall around me, and I shall be left a lonely creature. Men are not always take care of themselves. I have no resource but my own resources, and they present no prospect, here or hereafter, as any comfort, satisfaction of surviving my better. I am, and shall be, a lonely man. My days are restless, and my nights are full of visions, my society; and when I have, I am alone. I am lonely, and I shall be lonely."

At the end of the act, it appears to me that the poet has added for a moment to the solitary. I used to doubt

Had they been wisely mingled; as it is,
It is an awful chaos—light and darkness—
And mind and dust—and passions and pure thoughts.

Mix'd, and contending without end or order,
All dormant or destructive: he will perish,
And yet he must not; I will try once more,
For such are worth redemption; and my duty
Is to dare all things for a righteous end.
I'll follow him—but cautiously, though surely.
[Exit Abbot.]

SCENE II.—Another Chamber.

Manfred and Herman.

Her. My lord, you bade me wait on you at sunset:
He sinks behind the mountain.

Man. Doth he so?
I will look on him.

[Manfred advances to the Window of the Hall.]
Glorious orb! the idol
Of early nature, and the vigorous race
Of undissolved mankind, the giant sons;
Of the embrace of angels, with a sex
More beautiful than they, which did draw down
The erring spirits who can ne'er return.
Most glorious orb! that wert a worship, ere
The mystery of thy making was reveal'd!
Thou earliest minister of the Almighty,
Which gladden'd, on their mountain tops, the hearts
Of the Chaldean shepherds, till they pour'd
Themselves in orisons! Thou material God!
And representative of the Unknown—
Who chose thee for his shadow! Thou chief star!
Centre of many stars! which mak'st our earth
Endurable, and temperest the hues
And hearts of all who walk within thy rays!
Sire of the seasons! Monarch of the climates,
And those who dwell in them! for near or far,
Our inborn spirits have a tint of thee,
Even as our outward aspects;—thou dost rise,
And shine, and set in glory. Fare thee well!
I ne'er shall see thee more. As my first glance
Of love and wonder was for thee, then take
My latest look: thou wilt not beam on one
To whom the gifts of life and warmth have been
Of a more fatal nature. He is gone:
I follow.

[Exit Manfred.]

SCENE III.—The Mountains—The Castle of Manfred at some distance—A Terrace before a Tower.
Time, Twilight.

Herman, Manuel, and other Dependents of Manfred.

Her. 'Tis strange enough; night after night, for years,
He hath pursued long vigils in this tower,
Without a witness. I have been within it,—
So have we all been oft-times: but from it,

It—but reflection has taught me better. How far our future state will be individual or, rather, how far it will at all resemble our present existence, is another question; but that the mind is eternal seems as probable as that the body is not so."—Byron Diary, 1821.—"I have no wish to reject Christianity without investigation; on the contrary, I am very desirous of believing; for I have no happiness in my present unsettled notions on religion."—Byron Conversations with Kennedy, 1823.

*"And it came to pass, that the Sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair," etc.—"There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the Sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown."—Genesis, ch. vi., verses
3 and 4.

Or its contents, it were impossible
To draw conclusions absolute, of aught
His studies tend to. To be sure, there is One chamber where none enter: I would give
The fee of what I have to come these three years,
To pore upon its mysteries.

Manuel. 'T were dangerous;
Content thyself with what thou know'st already.

Her. Ah, Manuel! thou art elderly and wise,
And couldst say much; thou hast dwelt within the castle—

How many years is 't?

Manuel. Ere Count Manfred's birth,
I served his father, whom he nought resembles.

Her. There be more sages in like predicament.
But wherein do they differ?

Manuel. I speak not
Of features or of form, but mind and habits;
Count Sigismund was proud,—but gay and free,—
A warrior and a reveller; he dwelt not
With books and solitude, nor made the night
A gloomy vigil, but a festal time.
Merrier than day; he did not turn the rocks
And forests like a wolf, nor walk aside
From men and their delights.

Her. Beshrew the hour,
But those were joyous times! I would that such Would visit the old walls again; they look
As if they had forgotten them.

Manuel. These walls
Must change their chieftain first. Oh! I have

Some strange things in them, Herman.

Her. Come, be friendly;
Relate me some to while away our watch:
I've heard thee darkly speak of an event
Which happen'd hereabouts, by this same tower.

Manuel. That was a night indeed! I do remember

'T was twilight, as it may be now, and such Another evening;—you red cloud, which rests
On Elger's pinnacle, so rested then,—
So like that it might be the same; the wind
Was faint and gusty, and the mountain snows
Began to glitter with the climbing moon;
Count Manfred was, as now, within his tower,—
How occupied, we knew not, but with him
The sole companion of his wanderings
And watchings—her, whom of all earthly things
That lived, the only thing he seem'd to love,—
As he, indeed, by blood was bound to do,
The Lady Astarte, his—

Hush! who comes here?

Enter the Abbot.

Abbot. Where is your master?

Her. Yonder, in the tower.

Abbot. I must speak with him.

Manuel. 'T is impossible;
He is most private, and must not be thus Intruded on.

Abbot. Upon myself I take
The forfeit of my fault, if fault there be—
But I must see him.

Her. Thou hast seen him once
This eve already.

Abbot. Herman! I command thee,
Knock, and apprise the Count of my approach.

Her. We dare not.

Abbot. Then it seems I must be herald
Of my own purpose.

Manuel. Reverend father, stop—
I pray you pause.

Abbot. Why so?

Manuel. But stop this way,
And I will tell you further. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Interior of the Tower.

Manfred alone.

The stars are forth, the moon above the tops
Of the snow-shining mountains.—Beautiful!
I linger yet with Nature, for the Night
Hath been to me a more familiar face
Than that of man; and in her starry shade
Of dim and solitary loveliness,
I learn'd the language of another world.
I do remember me, that in my youth,
When I was wandering,—upon such a night
I stood within the Coliseum's wall,
Midst the chief relics of almighty Rome;
The trees which grew along the broken arches
Waved dark in the blue midnight, and the stars
Shone through the rents of ruin; from afar
The watch-dog bay'd beyond the Tiber; and More near from out the Cæsar's palace came
The owl's long cry, and, interruptedly,
Of distant sentinels the fitful song.
Began and died upon the gentle wind.
Some cypresses beyond the time-worn breach
Appear'd to skirt the horizon, yet they stood
Within a bowshot. Where the Cæsar dwelt,
And dwell the tuneless birds of night, amidst
A grove which springs through level'd battlements,
And twines its roots with the imperial hearths,
Ivy usurps the laurel's place of growth;
But the gladiators' bloody Circus stands,
A noble wreck in ruinous perfection,
While Cæsar's chambers, and the Augustan halls,
Grovel on earth in indistinct decay.—
And thou didst shine, thou rolling moon, upon
All this, and cast a wide and tender light,
Which soften'd down the hoar austerity
Of rugged desolation, and fill'd up,
As 't were anew, the gaps of centuries;
Leaving that beautiful which still was so,
And making that which was not, till the place
Became religion, and the heart ran o'er
With silent worship of the great of old,—
The dead but scepter'd sovereigns, who still rule
Our spirits from their urns.

'T was such a night!
'T is strange that I recall it at this time;
But I have found our thoughts take wildest flight
Even at the moment when they should array
Themselves in pensive order.

Enter the Abbot.

Abbot. My good lord!

I crave a second grace for this approach;
But yet let not my humble zeal offend
By its abruptness—all it hath of ill
Recalls on me; its good in the effect
May light upon your head—could I say Astarte—
Could I touch that, with words or prayers, I should Recall a noble spirit which hath wander'd;
But is not yet all lost.

Man. Thou know'st me not;
My days are number'd, and my deeds recorded:
Retire, or 't will be dangerous—Away!

Abbot. Thou dost not mean to menace me?

Man. Not I;
I simply tell thee peril is at hand,
And would preserve thee.

Abbot. What dost mean?

Man. Look there!

What dost thou see?

Abbot. Nothing.

Man. Look there, I say,
And steadfastly;—now tell me what thou seest.

Abbot. That which should shake me,—but I fear it not:

I see a dusk and awful figure rise,
Like an infernal god, from out the earth;

His face wrapt in a mantle, and his form
Hobbed as with angry clouds; he stands between Thyself and me—but I do fear him not.

Man. Thou hast no cause—he shall not harm thee

—but

His sight may shock thine old limbs into palsy.

I say to thee—Retire!

Abbot.

And I reply—

Never—till I have battled with this fiend :—

What doth he here?

Man.

Why—ay—what doth he here?

I did not send for him,—he is unbidden.

Abbot.

Alas! lost mortal! what with guests like

these

Hast thou to do? I tremble for thy sake:

Why doth he gaze on thee, and thou on him?

Ah! he unveils his aspect: on his brow

The thunder-scars are graven; from his eye

Glares forth the immortality of hell—

Avaunt!

Man. Pronounce—what is thy mission?

Spirit.

Come!

Abbot. What art thou, unknown being? answer!

—speak!

Spirit. The genius of this mortal.—Come! 'tis

time

Man. I am prepared for all things, but deny

The power which summons me. Who sent thee

here?

Spirit. Thou'lt know anon.—Come! come!

Man.

I have commanded

Things of an essence greater far than thine,

And striven with thy masters. Get thee hence!

Spirit.

Mortal! thine hour is come—A way! I say.

Man. I knew, and know my hour is come, but

not

To render up my soul to such as thee:

Away! I'll die as I have lived—alone.

Spirit.

Then I must summon up my brethren.—

Rise!

Abbot. Avaunt! ye evil ones!—Avaunt! I say;

Ye have no power where party hath power,

And I do charge ye in the name—

Spirit.

Old man!

We know ourselves, our mission, and thine order;

Waste not thy holy words on idle uses,

It were in vain: this man is forfeited.

Once more I summon him—Away! away!

Man. I do defy ye.—though I feel my soul leaving from me, yet I do defy ye:

Nor will I hence, while I have earthly breath

To breathe my scorn upon ye—earthly strength

To wrestle, though with spirits; what ye take shall be 'a'en limb by limb.

Spirit.

Reluctant mortal!

Is this the Magian who would so pervade

The world invisible, and make himself

Almost our equal?—Can it be that thou
Art thus in love with life? the very life
Which made thee wretched!

Man.

Thou false fiend, thou liest!

My life is in its last hour,—that I know,

Nor would redeem a moment of that hour;

I do not combat against death, but thee

And thy surrounding angels, my past power

Was purchased by no compact with thy crew,

But by superior science—penance—daring—

And length of watching—strength of mind—and skill

In knowledge of our fathers—when the earth

Saw men and spirits walking side by side,

And gave ye no supremacy: I stand

Upon my strength—I do defy—deny—

Spurn back, and scorn ye!

Spirit.

But thy many crimes

Have made thee—

Man.

What are they to such as thee?

Must crimes be punish'd but by other crimes,

And greater criminals?—Back to thy hell!

Thou hast no power upon me, that I feel:

Thou never shalt possess me, that I know:

What I have done is done; I bear within

A torture which could nothing gain from thine;

The mind which is immortal makes itself

Requital for its good or evil thoughts—

Is its own origin of ill and end—

And its own place and time: its innate sense,

When stripp'd of this mortality, derives

No color from the fleeting things without,

but is absorb'd in suzerainty or in joy,

Born from the knowledge of its own desert.

Thou didst not tempt me, and thou couldst not tempt

me:

I have not been thy dupe, nor am thy prey—

But was my own destroyer, and will be

My own hereafter.—Back, ye baffled fiends!

The hand of death is on me—but not yours!

[The Demons disappear.]

Abbot.

Alas! how pale thou art—thy lips are white—

And thy breast heaves—and in thy gasping throat

The accents rattle: Give thy prayers to heaven—

Pray—albeit but in thought,—but die not thus.

Man.

'Tis over—my dull eyes can fix thee not;

But all things swirl around me, and the earth

Heaves as it were beneath me. Fare thee well—

Give me thy hand.

Abbot.

Cold—cold—even to the heart—

But yet one prayer—Alas! how fares it with thee?

Man.

Old man! 'tis not so difficult to die.

[Manfred expires.]

Abbot.

He's gone—his soul hath 'a'en his earth-

less flight—

Whither? I dread to think—but he is gone.

"Night after night, for years,
He hath pursued long vigils in this tower,
Without a witness."

Act III., Scene III.

MARINO FALIERO, DOGE OF VENICE:

In Historical Tragedy, in Five Acts.*

"Dux inquieti turbidus Adriæ."—HORACE.

PREFACE.

THE conspiracy of the Doge Marino Faliero is one of the most remarkable events in the annals of the most singular government, city, and people of modern history. It occurred in the year 1355. Everything about Venice is, or was, extraordinary—her aspect is like a dream, and her history is like a romance. The story of this doge is to be found in all her Chronicles, and particularly detailed in the "Lives of the Doges," by Marin Sanuto, which is given in the Appendix. (See Appendix, Notes 43 and 44.) It is simply and clearly related, and is perhaps more dramatic in itself than any scenes which can be founded upon the subject.

Marino Faliero appears to have been a man of talents and of courage. I find him commander-in-chief of the land forces at the siege of Zara, where he beat the king of Hungary and his army of eighty thousand men, killing eight thousand men, and keeping the besieged at the same time in check; an exploit to which I know none similar in history, except that of Cesar at Alesia, and of Prince Eugene at Belgrade. He was afterwards commander of the fleet in the same war. He took Capo d'Istria. He was ambassador at Genoa and Rome,—at which last he received the news of his election to the dukedom; his absence being a proof that he sought it by no intrigue, since he was apprised of his predecessor's death and his own succession at the same moment. But he appears to have been of an ungovernable temper. A story is told by Sanuto of his having, many years before, when podesta and captain at Treviso, boxed the ears of the bishop, who was somewhat tardy in bringing the Host. For this, honest Sanuto "saddles him with a judgment," as Thwackum did Square; but he does not tell us whether he was punished or rebuked by the senate for this outrage at the time of its commission. He seems, indeed, to have been afterwards at peace with the church, for we find him ambassador at Rome, and invested with the fief of Val di Marino, in the march of Treviso, and with the title of count, by Lorenzo, Count-bishop of Ceneda. For these facts my authorities are Sanuto, Vettor Sandi, Andrea Navagero, and the account of the siege of Zara, first published by the indefatigable Abate Morelli, in his "Monumenti Venezziani di varia Letteratura," printed in 1796, all of which I have looked over in the original language. The moderns, Dart, Sismondi, and Langier, nearly agree with the ancient chroniclers. Sismondi attributes the conspiracy to his jealousy; but I find this nowhere asserted by the national historians. Vettor Sandi, indeed, says, that "Altri scrissero che . . . dalla gelosa suspition di esso doge esser fatto (Michel Steno) staccar con violenza," etc., etc.; but this appears to have been by no means the general opinion, nor is it alluded to by Sanuto, or by Navagero; and Sandi himself adds, a moment after, that "per altre Venezziane memorie trasparir, che non il solo desiderio di vendetta lo dispose alla congiura ma anche la innata abituale ambition sua, per cui anelava a farsi principe indipendente." The first motive appears to have been excited by the gross affront of the words written by Michel Steno on the ducal chair, and by the light and inadequate sentence of the Forty on the offender, who was one of their "tre Capitani." The attentions of Steno himself appear to have been directed towards one of her damsels, and not to the "dogaresse" herself, against whose fame not the slightest insinuation appears, while she is praised for her beauty, and remarked for her youth. Neither do I find it asserted (unless the hint of Sandi be an assertion), that the doge was actuated by jealousy of his wife; but rather by respect for her, and for his own honor, warranted by his past services and present dignity.

I know not that the historical facts are alluded to in English, unless by Dr. Moore in his View of Italy. His account is false and flippant, full of stale jests about old men and young wives, and wondering at so great an effect from so slight a cause. How so acute and severe an observer of mankind as the author of Zeluco could wonder at this is inconceivable. He knew that a basin of water spilt on Mrs. Maham's gown deprived the Duke of Marlborough of his command, and led to the inglorious peace of Utrecht—that Louis XIV. was plunged into the most desolating wars, because his minister was nettled at his finding fault with a window, and wished to give him another occupation—that Helen lost Troy—that Lucretia expelled the Tarquins from Rome—and that Cava brought the Moors to Spain—that an insulted husband led the Gauls to Clusium, and thence to Rome—that a single verse of Frederic II. of Prussia on the Abbé de Bernis, and a jest on Madame de Pompadour, led to the battle of

* On the original MS. sent from Ravenna, Lord Byron has written:—"Begun April 4, 1800—completed July 18, 1800—finished copying August 16, 17, 1800. It was published in the end of the same year; and, to the poet's great disgust, and in spite of his urgent and repeated remonstrances, was produced on the stage of Drury Lane Theatre early in 1801.

there is dramatic power somewhere, where Joanna Baillie, and Milman, and John Wilson exist. The "City of the Plague," and the "Fall of Jerusalem," are full of the best material for tragedy that has been seen since Horace Walpole, except passages of Eihwald and De Montfort. It is the fashion to underrate Horace Walpole; firstly, because he was a nobleman; and secondly, because he was a gentleman; but, to say nothing of the composition of his incomparable letters, and of the Castle of Otranto, he is the "Ultimus Romanorum," the author of the Mysterious Mother, a tragedy of the highest order, and not a pulling love-play. He is the father of the first romance, and of the last tragedy, in our language, and surely worthy of a higher place than any living writer, be he who he may.

In speaking of the drama of Marino Faliero, I forgot to mention, that the desire of preserving, though still too remote, a nearer approach to unity than the irregularity, which is the reproach of the English theatrical compositions, permits, has induced me to represent the conspiracy as already formed, and the dogs according to it; whereas, in fact, it was of his own preparation, and that of Israel Bertuccio. The other characters (except that of the duchess), incidents, and almost the time, which was wonderfully short for such a design in real life, are strictly historical, except that all the consultations took place in the palace. Had I followed this, the unity would have been better preserved; but I wished to produce the dogs in the full assembly of the conspirators, instead of monotonously placing him always in dialogue with the same individuals. For the real facts, I refer to the Appendix.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

Marino Faliero, Doge of Venice.
Bertuccio Faliero, Nephew of the Doge.
Lioni, a Patrician and Senator.
Benintende, Chief of the Council of Ten.
Michel Steno, One of the Three Capt of the Forty.
Israel Bertuccio, Chief of the Arsenal,
Philip Calendario,
Dagolino,
Bertram,
Signor of the Night ("Signore di Notte"), one of the Officers belonging to the Republic.
First Citizen.

Conspirators.

Second Citizen.

Third Citizen.

Vincenzo,

Pietro,

Battista,

Secretary of the Council of Ten.

Guards, Conspirators, Citizens, The Council of Ten,
The Giants, etc., etc.

WOMEN.

Angiolina, Wife to the Doge.

Marianna, her Friend.

Female Attendants, etc.

SCENE—Venice, in the year 1355.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Antechamber in the Ducal Palace.

Pietro speaks, in entering, to Battista.

Pie. Is not the messenger return'd?

Bas. Not yet;

I have sent frequently, as you commanded,
But still the Signory is deep in council
And long debate on Steno's accusation.

Pie. Too long—at least so thinks the Doge.

Bas. How bears he

These moments of suspense?

Pie. With struggling patience.

Placed at the ducal table, cover'd o'er
With all the apparel of the state; petitions,
Despatches, judgments, acts, reprieves, reports,
He sits as rapt in duty; but when'er
He hears the jarring of a distant door,
Or aught that intimates a coming step,
Or murmur of a voice, his quick eye wanders,

And he will start up from his chair, then pause,
And seat himself again, and fix his gaze
Upon some edict; but I have observed
For the last hour he has not turn'd a leaf.

Bas. 'T is said he is much moved,—and doubtless
't was

Foul scorn in Steno to offend so grossly.

Pie. Ay, if a poor man: Steno's a patrician,
Young, galliard, gay, and haughty.

Bas. Then you think

He will not be judged hardly?

Pie. 'T were enough

He be judged justly; but 't is not for us

To anticipate the sentence of the Forty.

Bas. And here it comes.—What news, Vincenzo?

Enter Vincenzo.

Vin. Decided: but as yet his doom 's unknown: 'T is I saw the president in act to seal assured me. Of what has occurred since Maturin's "Bertram," I am not aware; so that I may be traducing, through ignorance, some excellent new writers: if so, I beg their pardon. I have been absent from England nearly five years, and, till last year, I never read an English newspaper since my departure, and am now only aware of theatrical matters through the medium of the Parisian Gazette of Galignani, and only for the last twelve months. Let me then deprecate all offence to tragic or comic writers, to whom I wish well, and of whom I know nothing. The long complaints of the actual state of the drama arise, however, from no fault of the performers. I can conceive nothing better than Kemble, Cooke, and Keen in their very different manners, or than Elliston in gentleman's comedy, and in some parts of tragedy.

Mrs O'Neill I never saw, having made and kept a determination to see nothing which should divide or disturb my recollection of Siddons. Siddons and Kemble were the ideal of tragic action; I never saw any thing at all resembling them even in person: for this reason, we shall never see again Coriolanus or Macbeth. When Keen is blamed for want of dignity, we should remember that it is a grace, and not an art, and not to be attained by study. In all, not super-natural parts, he is perfect; even his very defects belong, or seem to belong, to the parts themselves, and appear truer to nature. But of Kemble we may say, with reference to his acting, what the Cardinal de Retz said of the Marquis de Montrose, "that he was the only man he ever saw who reminded him of the heroes of Plutarch."

The parchment which will bear the Forty's judgment.
 Enter the Doge, and hastens to inform him. [Recount.]

SCENE II.—The Ducal Chamber.

Marino Faliero, Doge; and his Nephew,
 Bartuccio Faliero.

Ber. F. It cannot be but they will do you justice.

Doge. Ay, such as the Avogadori^o did.

Who sent up my appeal unto the Forty

To try him by his peers, his own tribunal.

Ber. F. His peers will scarce protect him: such an act

Would bring contempt on all authority.

Doge. Know you not Venice? Know you not the Forty?

But we shall see anon.

Ber. F. [addressing Vincenzo, then entering].

How now—what tidings?

Vin. I am charged to tell his highness that the court

Has pass'd its resolution, and that, soon

As the due forms of judgment are gone through,

The sentence will be sent up to the Doge;

In the meantime the Forty doth salute

The Prince of the Republic, and entreat

His acceptance of their duty.

Doge.

Yes—

They are wondrous dutiful, and ever humble.

Sentence is pass'd, you say?

Vin.

It is, your highness:

The president was sealing it, when I

Was call'd in, that no moment might be lost

In forwarding the intimation due

Not only to the Chief of the Republic,

But the complainant, both in one united.

Ber. F. Are you aware, from aught you have perceived,

Of their decision?

Vin.

No, my lord; you know

The strict custom of the courts in Venice.

Ber. F. True; but there still is something given to guess.

Which a shrewd glancer and quick eye would catch

at;

A whisper, or a murmur, or an air

More or less solemn spread o'er the tribunal.

The Forty are but men—most worthy men,

And wise, and just, and cautious—this I grant—

And secret as the grave to which they doom

The guilty: but with all this, in their aspects—

At least in some, the juniors of the number—

A sparkling eye, an eye like yours, Vincenzo,

Would read the sentence ere it was pronounced.

Vin. My lord, I came away upon the moment,

And had no leisure to take note of that

Which passed among the Judges, even in seeming;

My station near the accused too, Michel Steno,

Made me—

Doge [startled]. And how look'd he? deliver that.

Vin. Ours, but not overcast, he stood resign'd

To the decision, what'er it were;—but lo!

He turn'd, for the pursuit of his highness.

Enter the Secretary of the Forty.

High tribunal of the Forty sends

Respect to the Doge Faliero,

Governor of Venice, and requests

That he will deign to approve

The sentence on Michel Steno, born of Venice, and arraign'd upon the charge

Contain'd, together with its penalty,

Within the rescript which I now present.

Doge. Retire, and wait without.

[Recount Secretary and Vincenzo.

Take thou this paper:

I cannot fix them.

Ber. F. Patience, my dear uncle:

Why do you tremble thus?—nay, doubt not, all

Will be as could be wish'd.

Doge.

Say on.

Ber. F. [reading].

In council, without one dissenting voice,

That Michel Steno, by his own confession,

Guilty on the last night of Carnival

Of having graven on the ducal throne

The following words:—

Doge. Wouldst thou repeat them?

Wouldst thou repeat them—thou, a Faliero,

Harb on the deep dishonor of our house,

Dishonor'd in its chief—that chief the prince

Of Venice, first of cities?—To the sentence.

Ber. F. Forgive me, my good lord; I will obey—

[Reads] "That Michel Steno be detain'd a month

In close arrest."

Doge.

Proceed.

Ber. F. My lord, 't is finish'd.

Doge. How say you?—finish'd! Do I dream?—

't is false—

Give me the paper—[Snatches the paper and reads]

"'T is decreed in council

That Michel Steno—Nephew, thine arm!

Ber. F.

Nay,

Cheer up, be calm; this transport is uncall'd for—

Let me seek some assistance.

Doge.

Stop, sir—Stir not—

'T is past.

Ber. F. I cannot but agree with you

The sentence is too slight for the offence;

It is not honorable in the Forty

To affix so slight a penalty to that

Which was a foul affront to you, and even

To them, as being your subjects; but 't is not Yet without remedy: you can appeal

To them once more, or to the Avogadori,

Who, seeing that true justice is withheld,

Will now take up the cause they once declined,

And do you right upon the bold delinquent.

Think you not thus, good uncle? why do you stand

So fix'd? You heed me not;—I pray you, hear me!

Doge [dashing down the ducal bonnet, and offering to trample upon it, exclaims, as he is withheld by his nephew]

Oh, that the Saracen were in Saint Mark's!

Thus would I do him homage,

Ber. F.

For the sake

Of Heaven and all its saints, my lord—

Doge.

Away!

Oh, that the Genoese were in the port!

Oh, that the Huns whom I o'erthrew at Zara

Were ranged around the palace!

Ber. F.

'T is not well

In Venice? Duke to say so.

Doge.

Venice's Duke!

Who now is Duke in Venice? let me see him,

That he may do me right.

Ber. F.

If you forget

Your office, and its dignity and duty,

Remember that of man, and curb this passion.

The Duke of Venice—

Doge [interrupting him]. There is no such thing—

It is a word—nay, worse—a worthless by-word:

The most despised, wrong'd, outraged, helpless

wretch,

the council was valid, unless sanctioned by the presence of one of them.

Who begs his bread, if 't is refused by one,
May win it from another kinder heart :
But he, who is denied his right by those Whose place it is to do no wrong, is poorer
Than the rejected beggar—he 's a slave—
And that am I, and thou, and all our house,
Even from this hour ; the meanest artisan
Will point the finger, and the haughty noble
May spit upon us :—where is our redress ?

Ber. F. The law, my prince—

Doge (interrupting him). You see what it has done—

I ask'd no remedy but from the law—
I sought no vengeance but redress by law—
I call'd no judges but those named by law—
As sovereign, I appeal'd unto my subjects,
The very subjects who had made me sovereign,
And gave me thus a double right to be so.
The rights of place and choice, of birth and service,
Honors and years, these scars, these luxury hairs,
The travel, toil, the perils, the fatigues,
The blood and sweat of almost eighty years,
Were weigh'd 't the balance, 'gainst the foulest stain,

The grossest insult, most contemptuous crime
Of a rank, rash patrician—and found wanting !
And this is to be borne !

Ber. F. I say not that :—
In case your fresh appeal should be rejected,
We will find other means to make all even.

Doge. Appeal again ! art thou my brother's son ?
A scion of the house of Faliero ?

The nephew of a Doge ? and of that blood
Which hath already given three dukes to Venice ?
But thou sayst well—we must be humble now.

Ber. F. My princely uncle ! you are too much moved :

I grant it was a gross offence, and grossly
Left without fitting punishment : but still
This fury doth exceed the provocation,
Or any provocation : if we are wrong'd,
We will ask justice ; if it be denied,
We 'll take it ; but may do all this in calmness—
Deep Vengeance is the daughter of deep Silence.
I have yet scarce a third part of your years,
I love our house, I honor you, its chief,
The guardian of my youth, and its instructor—
But though I understand your grief, and enter
In part of your disdain, it doth appall me
To see your anger, like our Adrian waves,
O'er sweep all bounds, and foam itself to air.

Doge. I tell thee—must I tell thee—what thy father
Would have required no words to comprehend ?
Hast thou no feeling save the external sense
Of torture from the touch ? hast thou no soul—
No pride—no passion—no deep sense of honor ?

Ber. F. 'T is the first time that honor has been doubted,

And were the last, from any other skeptic.

Doge. You know the full offence of this born villain,

This creeping, ooward, rank, acquitted felon,
Who threw his sting into a poisonous libel,
And on the honor of—Oh, God !—my wife,
The nearest, dearest part of all men's honor,
Left a base slur to pass from mouth to mouth
Of loose mechanics, with all coarse foul comments,
And villainous jests, and blasphemies obscene ;
While sneering nobles, in more polish'd guise,
Whisper'd the tale, and smiled upon the lie
Which made me look like them—a courteous wittol,
Patient—ay, proud, it may be, of dishonor.

Ber. F. But still it was a lie—you knew it false,
And so did all men.

Doge. Nephew, the high Roman
Said, " Caesar's wife must not even be suspected,"
And put her from him.

Ber. F. True—but in those days—

Doge. What is it that a Roman would not suffer,
That a Venetian prince must bear ? Old Dandolo
Refused the diadem of all the Cæsars,
And wore the ducal cap I trample on,
Because 't is now degraded.

Ber. F. 'T is even so.

Doge. It is—it is :—I did not visit on
The innocent creature thus most vilely slander'd
Because she took an old man for her lord,
For that he had been long her father's friend
And patron of her house, as if there were
No love in woman's heart but lust of youth
And beardless faces ;—I did not for this Visit the villain's infamy on her,
But craved my country's justice on his head,
The justice due unto the humblest being
Who hath a wife whose faith is sweet to him,
Who hath a home whose hearth is dear to him,
Who hath a name whose honor 's all to him,
When those are tainted by the accursing breath
Of calumny and scorn.

Ber. F. And what redress

Did you expect as his fit punishment ?

Doge. Death ! Was I not the sovereign of the state—

Insulted on his very throne, and made
A mockery to the men who should obey me ?
Was I not injured as a husband ? scorn'd
As man ? reviled, degraded, as a prince ?
Was not offence like his a complication
Of insult and of treason ?—and he lives !
Had he instead of on the Doge's throne
Stamp'd the same brand upon a peasant's stool,
His blood had gilt the threshold ; for the carle
Had stabb'd him on the instant.

Ber. F. Do not doubt it,
He shall not live till sunset—leave to me
The means, and calm yourself.

Doge. Hold, nephew : this Would have sufficed but yesterday ; at present
I have no further wrath against this man.

Ber. F. What mean you ? Is not the offence re-doubled

By this most rank—I will not say—acquittal ;
For it is worse, being full acknowledgment
Of the offence, and leaving it unpunish'd ?

Doge. It is redoubled, but not now by him :
The Forty hath decreed a month's arrest—
We must obey the Forty.

Ber. F. Obey them !
Who have forgot their duty to the sovereign ?

Doge. Why, yes ;—boy, you perceive it then at last :
Whether as fellow-citizen who sues
For justice, or as sovereign who commands it,
They have defrauded me of both my rights
(For here the sovereign is a citizen) ;
But, notwithstanding, harm not thou a hair
Of Steno's head—he shall not wear it long.

Ber. F. Not twelve hours longer, had you left to me

The mode and means : if you had calmly heard me,
I never meant this miscreant should escape,
But wish'd you to repress such gusts of passion,
That we more surely might devise together
His taking off.

Doge. No, nephew, he must live ;
At least, just now—a life so vile as his
Were nothing at this hour ; in th' olden time
Some sacrifices ask'd a single victim,
Great expiations had a hecatomb.

Ber. F. Your wishes are my law ; and yet I fain
Would prove to you how near unto my heart
The honor of our house must ever be.

Doge. Fear not ; you shall have time and place of proof ;

But be not thou too rash, as I have been.

I am ashamed of my own anger now;
I pray you, pardon me.

Ber. F. Why, that's my uncle!
The leader, and the statesman, and the chief
Of commonwealths, and sovereign of himself!
I wonder'd to perceive you so forget.
All prudence in your fury at these years,
Although the cause—

Doge. Ay, think upon the cause—
Forget it not:—When you lie down to rest,
Let it be black among your dreams; and when
The morn returns, so let it stand between
The sun and you, as an ill-omen'd cloud
Upon a summer day of festival:
So will it stand to me:—but speak not, stir not,— Leave all to me:—we shall have much to do,
And you shall have a part.—But now retire,
Till I were alone.

Ber. F. (taking up and placing the ducal bonnet on the table).

Ere I depart,
I pray you to resume what you have spurn'd,
Till you can change it haply for a crown.
And now I take my leave, imploring you
In all things to rely upon my duty
As doth become your near and faithful kinsman,
And not less loyal citizen and subject.

(Exit Bartuccio Faliero.)

Doge. (solus). Adieu, my worthy nephew.
Hollow hauberk! (Taking up the ducal cap.)
Blest with all the thorns that line a crown,
Without investing the insulted brow
With the all-availing majesty of kings;
Thou idle, gilded, and degraded toy,
Let me resume thee as I would a visor. (Puts it on.)
How my brain aches beneath thee! and my temples
Throb feverish under thy dishonest weight.
Could I not turn thee to a diadem?
Could I not shatter the Briarian sceptre
Which is this hundred-headed Senate rules,
Making the people nothing, and the prince
A peasant? In my life I have achieved
Tasks not less difficult—achieved for them,
Who thus repay me! Can I not requite them?
Oh, for one year! Oh, but for even a day
Of my full youth, while yet my body served
My soul as serves the generous steed his lord,
I would have dash'd amongst them, asking few
In aid to overthrow these sworn patricians;
But now I must look round for other hands
To serve this hoary head:—but it shall plan
In such a sort as will not leave the task
Barren, though as yet 'tis but a chaos
Of darkly-breeding thoughts: my fancy is
In her first work, more nearly to the light
Holding the sleeping images of things
For the selection of the pausing judgment.—
The troops are few in—

Enter Vincenzio.
Vin. There is one without Craves audience of your highness.

Doge. I'm unwell—
I can see no one, not even a patrician—
Let him refer his business to the council.

Vin. My lord, I will deliver your reply;
He cannot much import—he's a plebeian,
The master of a galley, I believe.

Doge. How! did you say the patron of a galley?
—a servant of the state:
—how can he say he is on public service.

(Exit Vincenzio.)
Doge. This patron may be sound; I will

I know the people to be discontented:
They have cause, since Sapienza's adverse day,
When Genoa conquer'd: they have further cause,
Since they are nothing in the state, and in
The city worse than nothing—mere machines,
To serve the nobles' most patrician pleasure.
The troops have long arrears of pay, oft promised,
And murmur deeply—any hope of change
Will draw them forward: they shall pay themselves
With plunder:—but the priests—I doubt the priesthood

Will not be with us; they have hated me
Since that rash hour, when, madden'd with the drone,

I smote the tardy bishop at Treviso.*
Quickening his holy march; yet, nevertheless,
They may be won, at least their chief at Rome,
By some well-timed concessions; but, above
All things, I must be speedy: at my hour
Of twilight little light of life remains.

Could I free Venice, and avenge my wrongs,
I had lived too long, and willingly would sleep
Next moment with my sire; and, wanting this,
Better that sixty of my fourscore years
Had been already where—how soon, I care not—
The whole must be extinguish'd:—better that
They ne'er had been, than drag me on to be
The thing these arch-oppressors vain would make
me.

Let me consider—of efficient troops
There are three thousand posted at—

Enter Vincenzio and Isreal Bartuccio.

Vin. May it please
Your highness, the same patron that I speak of
Is here to crave your patience.

Doge. Leave the chamber,
Vincenzio.—

Isreal Bartuccio.
Sir, you may advance—what would you?

I. Ber. Redress.
Doge. Of whom?

I. Ber. Of God and of the Doge.
Doge. Alas! my friend, you seek it of the twain
Of least respect and interest in Venice.
You must address the council.

I. Ber. 'T were in vain;
For he who injured me is one of them.
Doge. There's blood upon thy face—how came it
there?

I. Ber. 'T is mine, and not the first I've shed for Venice,
But the first shed by a Venetian hand:
A noble smote me.

Doge. Doth he live?
I. Ber. Not long—

But for the hope I had and have, that you,
My prince, yourself a soldier, will redress
Him, whom the laws of discipline and Venice
Permit not to protect himself;—if not—
I say no more.

Doge. But something you would do—
Is it not so?

I. Ber. I am a man, my lord.
Doge. Why, so is he who smote you.

I. Ber. He is call'd so;
Nay, more, a noble one—at least, in Venice:
But since he hath forgotten that I am one,
And treats me like a brute, the brute may turn—
'T is said the worm will.

Doge. Say—his name and lineage?

I. Ber. Barbaro.
Doge. What was the cause? or the pretext?

I. Ber. I am the chief of the arsenal,† employ'd

*† This officer was chief of the armaments of the arsenal, and commanded the Bucintauri, for the safety of which, even if

At present in repairing certain galleys
But roughly used by the Genoese last year.
This morning comes the noble Barbaro
Full of reproof, because our artisans
Had left some frivolous order of his house,
To execute the state's decree: I dared
To justify the men—he raised his hand;—
Behold my blood! the first time it e'er flow'd Disseverably.

Doge. Have you long time served?

I. Ber. So long as to remember Zara's siege,
And fight beneath the chief who beat the Huns there,
Sometime my general, now the Doge Faliero.—

Doge. How! are we comrades?—the state's ducal robes

Sit newly on me, and you were appointed
Chief of the arsenal ere I came from Rome;
So that I recognized you not. Who placed you?

I. Ber. The late Doge; keeping still my old command

As patron of a galley: my new office
Was given as the reward of certain scars
(So was your predecessor pleased to say):
I little thought his bounty would conduct me
To his successor as a helpless plaintiff;
At least, in such a cause.

Doge. Are you much hurt?

I. Ber. Irreparably in my self-esteem.

Doge. Speak out; fear nothing: being stung at heart,

What would you do to be revenged on this man?

I. Ber. That which I dare not name, and yet will do.

Doge. Then wherefore came you here?

I. Ber. I come for justice,
Because my general is Doge, and will not See his old soldier trampled on. Had any,
Save Faliero, fill'd the ducal throne,
This blood had been wash'd out in other blood.

Doge. You come to me for justice—unto me!
The Doge of Venice, and I cannot give it;
I cannot even obtain it—it was denied
To me most solemnly an hour ago!

I. Ber. How says your highness?

Doge. Steno is condemn'd
To a month's confinement.

I. Ber. What! the same who dared
To stain the ducal throne with those foul words,
That have cried shame to every ear in Venice?

Doge. Ay, doubtless they have echo'd o'er the arsenal.

Keeping due time with every hammer's clink
As a good jest to jolly artisans;
Or making chorus to the creaking oar,
In the vile tune of every galley-slave,
Who, as he sung the merry stave, exulted
He was not a shamed dotard like the Doge.

I. Ber. Is 't possible? a month's imprisonment!
No more for Steno?

Doge. You have heard the offence,
And now you know his punishment; and then
You ask redress of me! Go to the Forty,
Who pass'd the sentence upon Michel Steno;
They'll do as much by Barbaro, no doubt.

I. Ber. Ah! dared I speak my feelings!

Doge. Give them breath.
Mine have no further outrage to endure.

I. Ber. Then, in a word, it rests but on your word
To punish and avenge—I will not say
My petty wrong, for what is a mere blow,
However vile, to such a thing as I am?—
But the base insult done your state and person.

Doge. You overrate my power, which is a peasant.

This cap is not the monarch's crown; these robes
Might move compassion, like a beggar's rags;
Nay, more, a beggar's are his own, and these
But lent to the poor puppet, who must play
Its part with all its empire in this armine.

I. Ber. Wouldst thou be king?

Doge. Yes—of a happy people.

I. Ber. Wouldst thou be sovereign lord of Venice?
Doge. Ay,

If that the people shared that sovereignty,
So that nor they nor I were further slaves
To this o'ergrown aristocratic Hydra,
The poisonous heads of whose venom'd body
Have breathed a pestilence upon us all.

I. Ber. Yet, thou wast born, and still hast lived, patrician.

Doge. In evil hour was I so born; my birth Hath made me Doge to be insulted: but
I lived and toil'd a soldier and a servant
Of Venice and her people, not the Senate;
Their good and my own honor were my guard.
I have fought and bled; commanded, ay, and conquer'd;

Have made and marr'd peace oft in embassies,
As it might chance to be our country's vantage;
Have traversed land and sea in constant duty,
Through almost sixty years, and still for Venice,
My fathers' and my birthplace, whose dear spires,
Rising at distance o'er the blue Lagoon,
It was reward enough for me to view
Once more; but not for any knot of men,
Nor sect, nor faction, did I bleed or sweat!
But would you know why I have done all this?
Ask of the bleeding pelican why she Hath ripp'd her bosom? Had the bird a voice,
She'd tell thee 't was for all her little ones.

I. Ber. And yet they made thee Duke.

Doge. They made me so;
I sought it not, the flattering fetters met me
Returning from my Roman embassy,
And never having hitherto refused
Toll, charge, or duty for the state, I did not,
At these late years, decline what was the highest
Of all in seeming, but of all most base
In what we have to do and to endure:
Bear witness for me thou, my injured subject,
When I can neither right myself nor thee.

I. Ber. You shall do both, if you possess the will;
And many thousands more not less oppress'd,
Who wait but for a signal—will you give it?

Doge. You speak in riddles.

I. Ber. Which shall soon be read
At peril of my life, if you disdain not
To lend a patient ear.

Doge. Say on.

I. Ber. Not thou,
Nor I alone, are injured and abused,
Contemn'd and trampled on; but the whole people
Groan with the strong conception of their wrongs:
The foreign soldiers in the Senate's pay
Are discontented for their long arrears;
The native mariners, and civic troops,
Feel with their friends; for who is he amongst them
Whose brethren, parents, children, wives, or sisters,
Have not partook oppression, or pollution,
From the patricians? And the hopeless war
Against the Genoese, which is still maintain'd
With the plebeian blood, and treasure wrung
From their hard earnings, has inflamed them further:

an accidental storm should arise, he was responsible with his life. He mounted guard at the ducal palace during an interregnum, and bore the red standard before the new doge on his inauguration; for which service his perquisites were the ducal mantle, and the two silver basins from which the doge scattered the regulated pittance which he was permitted to throw among the people."—AMERLO DE LA HOUTAIRE, 73.

Even now—ah, I forget that speaking thus,
Fate's I pass the sentence of my death!

Doge. And suffering what thou hast done—fear't thou death?

Be silent then, and live on, to be beaten
By those for whom thou hast bled.

I. Ber. No, I will speak
At every hazard; and if Venice' Doge
Should turn dealer, be the shame on him,
And scorn too; for he will lose far more Than I.

Doge. From me fear nothing; out with it!

I. Ber. Know then, that there are met and sworn in secret

A band of brethren, valiant hearts and true;
Men who have proved all fortunes, and have long
Grieved over that of Venice, and have right
To do so; having served her in all climes.
And having rescued her from foreign foes,
Would do the same from those within her walls.
They are not numerous, nor yet too few
For their great purpose; they have arms, and means,
And hearts, and hopes, and faith, and patient cour-

Doge. For what then do they pause?

I. Ber. An hour to strike,

Doge (aside). Saint Mark's shall strike that hour!

I. Ber. I now have placed

My life, my honor, all my earthly hopes
Within thy power, but in the firm belief
That injuries like ours, sprung from one cause,
Will generate one vengeance; should it be so,
Be our chief now—our sovereign hereafter.

Doge. How many are ye?

I. Ber. I'll not answer that

Till I am answer'd.

Doge. How, sir! do you menace?

I. Ber. No; I affirm. I have betray'd myself;
But there's no torture in the mystic wells
Which undermine your palace, nor in those Yet less appalling cells, the "lead'n roofs,"
To force a single name from me of others.
The Fend' and the Pionb' were in vain;
They might wring blood from me, but treachery never.

And I would pass the fearful "Bridge of Sighs,"
Ignore that mine must be the last that e'er
Would echo o'er the Stygian wave which flows
Between the murderers and the murder'd, washing
The prison and the palace walls: there are Those who would live to think on 't, and avenge me.

Doge. If such your power and purpose, why come hither?

To see the justice, being in the course

To do yourself due right?

I. Ber. Because the man,
Who claims protection from authority,
Revolving his accusations and his submission
To that authority, can hardly be suspected of submitting to destroy it.
And I, down too humbly with this blow,
A heavy blow and murder'd throats had made me
A martyr to the Forty's inquisition;
But I, however, however angrily
I would not be a martyr to be fear'd.
I would not be a martyr. But, besides all this,
I have a purpose.

The bells were never rung but by order of the Doge, and presents the ringing this alarm was to be the announcement of the appearance of a Genoese prisoner, when taken from the prison, were sunk in the gallery to the other side,

the other compartment or cell,
The low portal through which this cell is now walled up;

Doge.

What was that?

I. Ber. Some rumors that the Doge was greatly moved

By the reference of the Avogadori
Of Michel Steno's sentence to the Forty
Had reach'd me. I had served you, honor'd you,
And felt that you were dangerously insulted,
Being of an order of such spirits, as Requite tenfold both good and evil: 't was
My wish to prove and urge you to redress.
Now you know all; and that I speak the truth,
My peril be the proof.

Doge. You have deeply ventured;
But all must do so who would greatly win:
Thus far I'll answer you—your secret's safe.

I. Ber. And is this all?

Doge. Unless with all intrusted,
What would you have me answer?

I. Ber. I would have you
Trust him who leaves his life in trust with you.

Doge. But I must know your plan, your names, and numbers;

The last may then be doubled, and the former Matured and strengthen'd.

I. Ber. We're enough already:
You are the sole ally we covet now.

Doge. But bring me to the knowledge of your chiefs.

I. Ber. That shall be done upon your formal pledge

To keep the faith that we will pledge to you.

Doge. When? where?

I. Ber. This night I'll bring to your apartment
Two of the principals; a greater number
Were hazardous.

Doge. Stay, I must think of this.

What if I were to trust myself amongst you,
And leave the palace?

I. Ber. You must come alone.

Doge. With but my nephew.

I. Ber. Not were he your son.
Doge. Wretch! dar'st thou name my son? He died in arms

At Sapienza for this faithless state.

Oh! that he were alive, and I in ashes!

Or that he were alive ere I be ashes!

I should not need the dubious aid of strangers.

I. Ber. Not one of all those strangers whom thou doubtest.

But will regard thee with a filial feeling.

So that thou keep'st a father's faith with them.

Doge. The die is cast. Where is the place of meeting?

I. Ber. At midnight I will be alone and mask'd
Where'er your highness pleases to direct me.

To wait your coming, and conduct you where
You shall receive our homage, and pronounce
Upon our project.

Doge. At what hour arises

The moon?

I. Ber. Late, but the atmosphere is thick and dark;

'T is a sickoo.

Doge. At the midnight hour, then,
Near to the church where sleep my sires; : the
same,

Twin-named from the apostles John and Paul;

but the passage is open, and is still known by the name of the Bridge of Sighs."

* "The doges were all buried in St. Mark's before Faliero.
It is singular that when his predecessor, Andrea Dandolo, died, the Ten made a law that all the future doges should be buried with their families in their own churches—one would think, by a kind of presentment. So that all that is said of his ancestral doges, as buried at St. John's and Paul's is altered from the fact, they being in St. Mark's.—Eden Letters, Oct., 1880.

A gondola,* with one oar only, will
Lurk in the narrow channel which glides by.
Be there.

I. Ber. I will not fail.

Doge.

And now retire—

I. Ber. In the full hope your highness will not falter

In your great purpose. Prince, I take my leave.

(Exit Ierol Bertuccio.)

Doge (solus). At midnight, by the church Saints
John and Paul,

Where sleep my noble fathers, I repair—

To what? to hold a council in the dark

With common ruffians leagued to ruin states!

And will not my great sires leap from the vault,

Where lie two doges who preceded me,
And pluck me down amongst them? Would they could!

For I should rest in honor with the honor'd.

Alas! I must not think of them, but those Who have made me thus unworthy of a name

Noble and brave as aught of consular

On Roman marbles; but I will redeem it

Back to its antique lustre in our annals,

By sweet revenge on all that's base in Venice,

And freedom to the rest, or leave it black

To all the growing calumnies of time,

Which never spare the fame of him who fails,

But try the Cæsar, or the Catiline,

By the true touchstone of desert—success.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—An Apartment in the Ducal Palace.

Angiolina (wife of the Doge) and Marianna.

Ang. What was the Doge's answer?

Mar. That he was

That moment summon'd to a conference;

But 't is by this time ended. I perceived

Not long ago the senators embarking;

And the last gondola may now be seen

Gliding into the throng of barks which stud

The glittering water.

Ang. Would he were return'd!

He has been much disquieted of late;

And Time, which has not tamed his fiery spirit,

Nor yet enfeebled even his mortal frame,

Which seems to be more nourish'd by a soul

So quick and restless that it would consume

Less hardy clay—Time has but little power

On his resentments or his griefs. Unlike

To other spirits of his order, who,

In the first burst of passion, pour away

Their wrath or sorrow, all things wear in him

An aspect of eternity: his thoughts,

His feelings, passions, good or evil, all

Have nothing of old age: and his bold brow

Bears but the scars of mind, the thoughts of years,

Not their decrepitude: and he of late

Has been more agitated than his wont.

Would he were come! for I alone have power

Upon his troubled spirit.

Mar. It is true,

His highness has of late been greatly moved

By the affront of Steno, and with cause:

But the offender doubtless even now

Is doom'd to expiate his rash insult with

Such chastisement as will enforce respect

To female virtue, and to noble blood.

Ang. 'T was a gross insult; but I heed it not

For the rash scorner's falsehood in itself,

But for the effect, the deadly deep impression

Which it has made upon Faliero's soul,

The proud, the fiery, the austere—austere

To all save me: I tremble when I think

To what it may conduct.

Mar. Assuredly

The Doge cannot suspect you?

Ang. Suspect me!

Why Steno dared not: when he saw'd his lie,

Groveling by stealth in the moon's glimmering

light,

His own still conscience smote him for the act,

And every shadow on the walls frown'd shame

Upon his coward calumny.

Mar. 'T were fit

He should be punish'd grievously.

Ang.

He is so.

Mar. What! is the sentence pass'd? is he con-

demn'd?

Ang. I know not that, but he has been detected.

Mar. And deem you this enough for such foul scorn?

Ang. I would not be a judge in my own cause,

Nor do I know what sense of punishment

May reach the soul of rinals such as Steno;

But if his insults sink no deeper in

The minds of the inquisitors than they

Have ruffled mine, he will, for all acquittance,

Be left to his own shamelessness or shame.

Mar. Some sacrifice is due to slander'd virtue.

Ang. Why, what is virtue if it needs a victim?

Or if it must depend upon men's words?

The dying Roman said, " 't was but a name: "

It were indeed no more, if human breath

Could make or mar it.

Mar. Yet full many a dame,

Stainless and faithful, would feel all the wrong

Of such a slander; and less rigid ladies,

Such as abound in Venice, would be loud

And all-inexorable in their cry

For justice.

Ang. This but proves it is the name

And not the quality they prize: the first

Have found it a hard task to hold their honor,

If they require it to be blazon'd forth;

And those who have not kept it, seek its seeming

As they would look out for an ornament

Of which they feel the want, but not because

They think it so; they live in others' thoughts,

And would seem honest, as they must seem fair.

Mar. You have strange thoughts for a patrician dame.

Ang. And yet they were my father's; with his name,

The sole inheritance he left.

Mar. You want none;

Wife to a prince, the chief of the Republic.

Ang. I should have sought none though a peasant's bride,

But feel not less the love and gratitude

Due to my father, who bestow'd my hand

Upon his early, tried, and trusted friend,

The Count Val di Marino, now our Doge.

Mar. And with that hand did he bestow your heart?

Ang. He did so, or it had not been bestow'd.

Mar. Yet this strange disproportion in your years,

* A gondola is not like a common boat, but is as easily rowed with one oar as with two (though, of course, not so

And, let me add, docility of temper,
Might make the world doubt whether such an union
Could make you wisely, permanently happy.

Ang. The world will think with worldlings; but my heart
Has still been in my duties, which are many,
But never difficult.

Mar. And do you love him?

Ang. I love all noble qualities which merit
Love, and I loved my father, who first taught me
To single out what we should love in others,
And to subdue all tendency to lend
The best and purest feelings of our nature
To base passions. He bestow'd my hand
Upon Faliero: he had known him noble,
Brave, generous; rich in all the qualities
Of soldier, citizen, and friend; in all
I still have I found him as my father said.
His faults are those that dwell in the high bosoms
Of men who have commanded; too much pride,
And the deep passions fiercely foster'd by
The use of patricians, and a life
Spent in the storms of state and war; and also
From the quick sense of honor, which becomes
A duty to a certain sign, a vice
When overstrain'd, and this I fear in him.

And thus he has been rash from his youth upwards,
Yet temper'd by redeeming nobleness
In such sort, that the wisest of republics
Has wish'd all its chief employs upon him,
From his first fight to his last embassy,
From which on his return the Dukedom met him.

Mar. But previous to this marriage, had your heart

Not beat for any of the noble youth,
Such as in years had been more meet to match
Beauty like yours? or since have you ne'er seen
One who, if your fair hand were still to give,
Might now pretend to Loredano's daughter?

Ang. I answer'd your first question when I said
I married.

And the second?

Needs no answer.

Mar. I say you pardon, if I have offended.

Ang. I feel no wrath, but some surprise: I knew
not

That wedded bosoms could permit themselves
To ponder upon what they now might choose,
Or might save their past choice.

Mar. 'Tis their past choice
That for too often makes them deem they would
Now choose those wisely, could they cancel it.

Ang. It may be so. I knew not of such thoughts.

Mar. How would the Dogs—shall I retire?

Ang. It may be that you should quit me; he seems wrapt

in thought—How pensively he takes his way!

[Exit Morianus.]

Note the Dogs and Pietro.

Domestic. There is a certain Philip Calandaro
New in the arsenal, who holds command
Of thirty men, and has great influence
Over all the spirits of his comrades:

The man, I hear, is bold and popular,
Cautious and daring, and yet secret; 't would
Be well that the army won: I needs must hope
The Duke's success has secured him,

My lord, pray pardon
My boldness, your meditation;

And now, your kinsman,

Will I inquire your pleasure

And may speak with you.

Ang. At a moment—let me see—at night.

[Exit Pietro.]

Ang.

My lord!

Dogs. My dearest child, forgive me—why delay
So long approaching me?—I saw you not.

Ang. You were absorb'd in thought, and he who
now

Has parted from you might have words of weight
To bear you from the senate.

Dogs.

From the senate?

Ang. I would not interrupt him in his duty
And theirs.

Dogs.

The senate's duty! you mistake;

'T is we who owe all service to the senate.

Ang. I thought the Duke had held command in Venice.

Dogs. He shall.—But let that pass.—We will be joind.

How fares it with you? have you been abroad?

The day is overcast, but the calm wave

Favors the gondoller's light skimming oar;

Or have you held a levee of your friends?

Or has your music made you solitary?

Say—is there aught that you would will within

The little sway now left the Duke? or aught

Of fitting splendor, or of honest pleasure,

Social or lonely, that would glad your heart,

To compensate for many a dull hour, wasted

On an old man oft moved with many cares?

Speak, and 't is done.

Ang.

You're ever kind to me.

I have nothing to desire, or to request,
Except to see you oftener and calmer.

Dogs.

Calmer?

Ang. Ay, calmer, my good lord.—Ah, why

Do you still keep apart, and walk alone,

And let such strong emotions stamp your brow,

As not betraying their full import, yet

Disclose too much!

Dogs.

Disclose too much!—of what?

What is there in disclosure?

Ang.

A heart so ill

At ease.

Dogs. 'T is nothing, child.—But in the state

You know what daily cares oppress all those

Who govern this precarious commonwealth;

Now suffering from the Genoese without,

And malcontents within—'t is this which makes me

More pensive and less tranquil than my wont.

Ang. Yet this existed long before, and never

Till in these late days did I see you thus.

Forgive me; there is something at your heart

More than the mere discharge of public duties,

Which long use and a talent like to yours

Have render'd light, nay, a necessity,

To keep your mind from stagnating. 'T is not

In hostile states, nor perils, thus to shake you;

You, who have stood all storms and never sunk,

And climb'd up to the pinnacle of power

And never faint'd by the way, and stand

Upon it, and can look down steadily

Along the depth beneath, and ne'er feel dizzy.

Were Genoa's galleys riding in the port,

Were civil fury raging in Saint Mark's,

You are not to be wrought on, but would fall,

As you have risen, with an unalter'd brow:

Your feelings now are of a different kind;

Something has stung your pride, not patriotism.

Dogs. Pride! Angiolina? Alas! none is left me.

Ang. Yes—the same sin that overthrow the angels,

And of all sins most easily begets

Mortals the nearest to the angelic nature:

The vile are only vain; the great are proud.

Dogs.

I had the pride of honor, of your honor,

Deep at my heart.—But let us change the theme,

Ang. Ah, no!—As I have ever shared your kindness,

In all things else, let me not be shut out

From your distress: were it of public import,
You know I never sought, would never seek
To win a word from you; but feeling now
Your grief is private, it belongs to me
To lighten or divide it. Since the day
When foolish Steno's ribaldry detected
Unfix'd your quiet, you are greatly changed,
And I would soothe you back to what you were.

Doge. To what I was!—have you heard Steno's sentence?

Ang. No.

Doge. A month's arrest.

Ang.

Is it not enough?

Doge. Enough!—yes, for a drunken galley-alave,
Who, stung by stripes, may murmur at his master;
But not for a deliberate, false, cool villain,
Who stains a lady's and a prince's honor
Even on the throne of his authority.

Ang. There seems to me enough in the conviction
Of a patrician guilty of a falsehood:
All other punishment were light unto
His loss of honor.

Doge. Such men have no honor;
They have but their vile lives—and these are spared.

Ang. You would not have him die for this offence?

Doge. Not now:—being still alive, I'd have him live

Long as he can; he has ceased to merit death;
The guilty saved hath damn'd his hundred judges,
And he is pure, for now his crime is theirs.

Ang. Oh! had this false and flippant libeller
Shed his young blood for his absurd lampoon,
Ne'er from that moment could this breast have known

A joyous hour, or dreamless slumber more.

Doge. Does not the law of Heaven say blood for blood?

And he who taints kills more than he who sheds it.
Is it the pain of blows, or shame of blows,
That make such deadly to the sense of man?
Do not the laws of man say blood for honor,—
And, less than honor, for a little gold?

Say not the laws of nations blood for treason?
Is't nothing to have filled these veins with poison
For their once healthful current? Is it nothing
To have stain'd your name and mine—the noblest names?

Is't nothing to have brought into contempt
A prince before his people? to have fall'd
In the respect accorded by mankind
To youth in woman, and old age in man?
To virtue in your sex, and dignity
In ours?—But let them look to it who have saved
him.

Ang. Heaven bids us to forgive our enemies.

Doge. Doth Heaven forgive her own? Is Satan saved

From wrath eternal?

Ang. Do not speak thus wildly—
Heaven will alike forgive you and your foes.

Doge. Amen! May Heaven forgive them!

Ang. And will you?

Doge. Yes, when they are in heaven!

Ang. And not till then?

Doge. What matters my forgiveness? an old man's,
Worn out, scorn'd, spurn'd, abused; what matters
then

My pardon more than my resentment, both
Being weak and worthless? I have lived too long.—

But let us change the argument.—My child!
My injured wife, the child of Loredano,
The brave, the chivalrous, how little deem'd
Thy father, wedding thee unto his friend,
That he was linking thee to shame!—Alas!

Shame without sin, for thou art faultless. Hadst
thou

But had a different husband, any husband
In Venice save the Doge, this blight, this brand,
This blasphemy had never fallen upon thee.
So young, so beautiful, so good, so pure,
To suffer this, and yet be unavenged!

Ang. I am too well avenged, for you still love me,
And trust, and honor me; and all men know
That you are just, and I am true: what more
Could I require, or you command?

Doge.

'T is well,

And may be better; but whate'er betide,
Be thou at least kind to my memory.

Ang. Why speak you thus?

Doge.

It is no matter why;

But I would still, whatever others think,
Have your respect both now and in my grave.

Ang. Why should you doubt it? has it ever fail'd?

Doge. Come hither, child; I would a word with you.

Your father was my friend; unequal fortune
Made him my debtor for some courtesies
Which bind the good more firmly: when, oppress'd
With his last malady, he will'd our union,
It was not to repay me, long repaid
Before by his great loyalty in friendship;
His object was to place your orphan beauty
In honorable safety from the perils,
Which, in this scorpion nest of vice, assail
A lonely and undower'd maid. I did not Think with him, but would not oppose the thought
Which soothed his death-bed.

Ang.

I have not forgotten

The nobleness with which you bade me speak,
If my young heart held any preference
Which would have made me happier; nor your offer
To make my dowry equal to the rank
Of sought in Venice, and forego all claim
My father's last injunction gave you.

Doge.

Thus,

'T was not a foolish dotard's vile caprice,
Nor the false edge of aged appetite,
Which made me covetous of girlish beauty,
And a young bride: for in my fiercest youth
I sway'd such passions; nor was this my age
Infected with that leprosy of lust
Which taints the hoariest years of vicious men,
Making them ransack to the very last
The dregs of pleasure for their vanish'd joys;
Or buy in selfish marriage some young victim,
Too helpless to refuse a state that's honest,
Too feeling not to know herself a wretch.
Our wedlock was not of this sort; you had Freedom from me to choose, and urged in answer
Your father's choice.

Ang.

I did so; I would do so
In face of earth and heaven; for I have never Repented for my sake; sometimes for yours,
In pondering o'er your late disquietudes.

Doge. I knew my heart would never treat you harshly;

I knew my days could not disturb you long;
And then the daughter of my earliest friend,
His worthy daughter, free to choose again,
Wealthier and wiser, in the ripest bloom
Of womanhood, more skillful to select
By passing these probationary years;
Inheriting a prince's name and riches,
Secured, by the short penance of enduring
An old man for some summers, against all
That law's chicane or envious kinsmen might
Have urged against her right; my best friend's child
Would choose more fitly in respect of years,
And not less truly in a faithful heart.

Ang. My lord, I look'd but to my father's wishes,
Hallow'd by his last words, and to my heart

For doing all its duties, and replying
With faith to him with whom I was affianced.
Ambitions hopes ne'er cross'd my dreams; and should

The hour you speak of came, it will be seen so.

Doge. I do believe you; and I know you true:
For love, romantic love, which in my youth
I knew to be illusion, and ne'er saw lasting, but often fatal, it had been
No less for me, in my most passionate days,
And could not be so now, did such exist.
But such respect, and mildly paid regard
As a true feeling for your welfare, and
A true compliance with all honest wishes;
A business to your virtues, watchfulness
Not shown, but shadowing o'er such little failings
As youth is apt in, so as not to check
Nobly, but win you from them as you knew
You had been won, but thought the change your choice;

A pride not in your beauty, but your conduct,—
A trust in you—a patriarchal love,
And not a docting homage—friendship, faith—
Such estimation in your eyes as these Might claim, I hoped for.

Ang. And have ever had.
Doge. I think so. For the difference in our years
You knew it, choosing me, and chose; I trusted
Not to my qualities, nor would have faith
In such, nor outward ornaments of nature,
Were I still in my five and twentieth spring;
I wanted to the blood of Loredano
Eyes in your veins; I trusted to the soul
God gave you—to the truths your father taught
you—

To your belief in Heaven—to your mild virtues—
To your own faith and honor, for my own.

Ang. You have done well.—I thank you for that trust.

Which I have never for one moment ceased
To honor you the more for.

Doge. Where is honor,
Hence and present-strengthen'd, 't is the rock
Of faith communal: where it is not—where
Light thoughts are lurking, or the vanities
Of worldly pleasure rankle in the heart,
Or sensual throbs convulse it, well I know
'T were hopeless for humanity to dream
Of honesty in such infected blood,
Although 't were wad to him it covets most:
As benediction of the poet's god
Is all his marble-chisel'd beauty, or
The dead deity, Alotides, in
His memory of superhuman manhood,
Would not suffice to bind where virtue is not;
'T is consistency which forms and proves it:
Vice cannot fix, and virtue cannot change.
The one that a woman must for ever fall;
For vice must have variety, while virtue
Stands like the sun, and all which rolls around
Beholds its light, and glory from her aspect.

Ang. And seeing, feeling thus this truth in others:

I yet see justice in: but wherefore yield you
To the base laws of these passions, and
To the great thoughts with restless hate
Of justice and of peace?

You mistake me.
I am not moved more me thus;
I am not moved more me thus;—but let that pass.
I feel so deeply, then, even the severity of Venice,

And laws.
You thus consider it?
I will—but let me lead

To what I urged; all these things being noted,
I wedded you; the world then did me justice
Upon the motive, and my conduct proved
They did me right, while yours were all to praise;
You had all freedom—all respect—all trust
From me and mine: and, born of those who made
Princes at home, and swept kings from their thrones
On foreign shores, in all things you appear'd
Worthy to be our first of native dames.

Ang. To what does this conduct?

Doge. To thus much—that
A miscreant's angry breath may blast it all—
A villain, whom for his unbridled bearing,
Even in the midst of our great festival,
I caused to be conducted forth, and taught
How to demean himself in ducal chambers;
A wretch like this may leave upon the wall
The blighting venom of his sweltering heart,
And this shall spread itself in general poison;
And woman's innocence, man's honor, pass
Into a byword: and the doubly felon
(Who first insulted virgin modesty
By a gross affront to your attendant damsels
Amidst the mobster of our dames in public)
Requite himself for his most just expulsion
By blackening publicly his sovereign's consort,
And be abased by his upright compeers.

Ang. But he has been condemn'd into captivity.

Doge. For such as him a dungeon were acquittal;
And his brief term of mock arrest will pass
Within a palace. But I've done with him;
The rest must be with you.

Ang. With me, my lord?

Doge. Yes, Angiolina. Do not marvel: I
Have let this prey upon me till I feel
My life can not be long; and fain would have you Regard the injunctions you will find within This scroll (giving her a paper)—Fear not; they are for your advantage:

Read them hereafter at the sitting hour.

Ang. My lord, in life, and after life, you shall
Be honor'd still by me: but may your days
Be many yet—and happier than the present!
This passion will give way, and you will be Serene, and what you should be—what you were.

Doge. I will be what I should be, or be nothing!
But never more—oh! never, never more,
O'er the few days or hours which yet await
The blighted old age of Faliero, shall Sweet Quiet shed her sunset! Never more
Those summer shadows rising from the past
Of a not ill-spent nor inglorious life,
Mellowing the last hours as the night approaches,
Shall soothe me to my moment of long rest.
I had but little more to task, or hope,
Save the regards due to the blood and sweat,
And the soul's labor through which I had toil'd
To make my country honor'd. As her servant—
Her servant, though her chief—I would have gone
Down to my fathers with a name serene
And pure as theirs; but this has been denied me.—
Would I had died at Zara!

Ang. There you saved
The state; then live to save her still. A day,
Another day like that would be the best
Reproof to them, and sole revenge for you.

Doge. But one such day occurs within an age;
My life is little less than one, and 't is Enough for Fortune to have granted once,
That which scarce one more favor'd citizen
May win in many states and years. But why
Thus speak I? Venice has forgot that day—
Then why should I remember it?—Farewell,
Sweet Angiolina! I must to my cabinet:
There's much for me to do—and the hour hastens.
Ang. Remember what you were.

Doge. It were in vain!

Joy's recollection is no longer joy,

While Sorrow's memory is a sorrow still.

Ang. At least, whate'er may urge, let me implore
That you will take some little pause of rest;
Your sleep for many nights has been so turbid,
That it had been relief to have awaked you,
Had I not hoped that Nature would o'erpower
At length the thoughts which shook your slumbers
thus.

An hour of rest will give you to your toils
With fitter thoughts and freshen'd strength.

Doge. I cannot—
I must not, if I could; for never was Such reason to be watchful: yet a few—
Yet a few days and dream-perturbed nights,
And I shall slumber well—but where?—no matter.
Adieu, my Angiolina.

Ang. Let me be
An instant—yet an instant your companion!
I cannot bear to leave you thus.

Doge. Come then,
My gentle child, forgive me; thou wert made
For better fortunes than to share in mine,
Now darkling in thy close toward the deep vale
Where Death sits robed in his all-sweeping shadow.
When I am gone—it may be sooner than Even these years warrant, for there is that stirring
Within—above—around, that in this city
Will make the cemeteries populous
As e'er they were by pestilence or war.—
When I am nothing, let that which I was
Be still sometimes a name on thy sweet lips,
A shadow in thy fancy, of a thing
Which would not have thee mourn it, but remember.
Let us begone, my child—the time is pressing.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Retired Spot near the Arsenal.

Israel Bertuccio and Philip Calendario.

Cal. How sped you, Israel, in your late complaint?

I. Ber. Why, well.

Cal. Is 't possible! will he be punish'd?

I. Ber. Yes.

Cal. With what? a mulot or an arrest?

I. Ber. With death!

Cal. Now you rave, or must intend revenge,

Such as I counsel'd you, with your own hand.

I. Ber. Yes; and for one sole draught of hate, forego

The great redress we meditate for Venice,

And change a life of hope for one of exile;

Leaving one scorpion crush'd, and thousands sting-

ing

My friends, my family, my countrymen!

No, Calendario; these same drops of blood,

Shed shamefully, shall have the whole of his

For their requital.—But not only his;

We will not strike for private wrongs alone:

Such are for selfish passions and rash men,

But are unworthy a tyrannicide.

Cal. You have more patience than I care to boast.

Had I been present when you bore this insult,

I must have slain him, or expired myself

In the vain effort to repress my wrath.

I. Ber. Thank Heaven, you were not—all had else been marr'd:

As 't is, our cause looks prosperous still.

Cal. You saw

The Doge—what answer gave he?

I. Ber. That there was

No punishment for such as Barbaro.

Cal. I told you so before, and that 't was idle

To think of justice from such hands.

I. Ber. At least,

It lull'd suspicion, showing confidence.

Had I been silent, not a stirro but

Had kept me in his eye, as meditating

A silent, solitary, deep revenge.

Cal. But wherefore not address you to the Council?

The Doge is a mere puppet, who can scarce

Obtain right for himself. Why speak to him?

I. Ber. You shall know that hereafter.

Cal.

Why not now?

I. Ber. Be patient but till midnight. Get your musters,

And bid our friends prepare their companies:

Set all in readiness to strike the blow,

Perhaps in a few hours; we have long waited

For a fit time—that hour is on the dial,

It may be, of to-morrow's sun: delay

Beyond may breed us double danger. See

That all be punctual at our place of meeting,

And arm'd, excepting those of the Sixteen,

Who will remain among the troops to wait

The signal.

Cal. These brave words have breathed new life

Into my veins; I 'm sick of these protracted

And hesitating councils: day on day

Crawl'd on, and added but another link

To our long fetters, and some freer wrong

Inflicted on our brethren or ourselves,

Helping to swell our tyrants' bloated strength.

Let us but deal upon them, and I care not

For the result, which must be death or freedom!

I 'm weary to the heart of finding neither.

I. Ber. We will be free in life or death! the grave

Is chainless. Have you all the musters ready?

And are the sixteen companies completed

To sixty?

Cal. All save two, in which there are

Twenty-five wanting to make up the number.

I. Ber. No matter; we can do without. Whose are they?

Cal. Bertram's and old Soranzo's, both of whom Appear less forward in the cause than we are.

I. Ber. Your fiery nature makes you deem all those

Who are not resolute, cold; but there exists

Of in concentrated spirits not less daring

Than in more loud avengers. Do not doubt them.

Cal. I do not doubt the elder; but in Bertram

There is a hesitating softness, fatal

To enterprise like ours: I've seen that man

Weep like an infant o'er the misery

Of others, heedless of his own, though greater;

And in a recent quarrel I beheld him

Turn sick at sight of blood, although a villain's.

I. Ber. The truly brave are soft of heart and eyes,

And feel for what their duty bids them do.

I have known Bertram long; there doth not breathe

A soul more full of honor.

Cal.

It may be so:

I apprehend less treachery than weakness;

Yet as he has no mistress, and no wife,

To work upon his milkiness of spirit,

He may go through the ordeal: it is well

He is an orphan, friendless save in us:

A woman or a child had made him less

Than either in resolve.

I. Ber.

Such ties are not

For those who are call'd to the high destinies

Which purify corrupted commonwealths;

We must forget all feelings save the one—

We must resign all passions save our purpose—

We must behold no object save our country—

And only look on death as beautiful,

So that the sacrifice ascend to heaven,

And draw down freedom on her evermore.

Cal. But if we fail—

I. Ber.

They never fail who die

In a great cause: the block may soak their gore;

Their heads may sadden in the sun; their limbs

Be strong to city gates and castle walls—
But still their spirit walks abroad. Though years
Elate, and others share as dark a doom,
They but augment the deep and sweeping thoughts
Which overgrew all others, and conduct
The world at last to freedom. What were we
If Brutus had not lived? He died in giving
Rome liberty, but left a deathless lesson—
A name which is a virtue, and a soul
Which multiplies itself throughout all time,
When wicked men wax mighty, and a state
Turns servile. He and his high friend were styled
"The last of Romans!" Let us be the first
Of true Venetians, sprung from Roman sires.

Col. Our fathers did not fly from Attila
Into these isles, where palaces have sprung
On banks redeemed from the rude ocean's arms,
To own a thousand despots in his place.
Bender bow down before the Hun, and call
A Tatar lord, than these swain silk-worm masters!
The first at least was man, and used his sword
As empire: these unmanly creeping things
Command our sword, and rule us with a word
As with a spell.

I. Ber. It shall be broken soon.
You say that all things are in readiness;
To-day I have not seen the usual round,
And why those knowest; but thy vigilance
Will better have supplied my care: those orders
In recent council to redoubt now
Our efforts to repair the galley, have Lost a fair color to the introduction
Of many of our cause into the arsenal,
As new artificers for their equipment,
Or fresh recruits obtain'd in haste to man
The hoped-for fleet.—Are all supplied with arms?

Col. All who were deem'd trustworthy: there are some
When it were well to keep in ignorance
Till it be time to strike, and then supply them;
When in the heat and hurry of the hour
They have no opportunity to pause,
But needs must on with those who will surround
them.

I. Ber. You have said well. Have you remark'd all such?

Col. I've noted most; and roused the other chiefs
To use like caution in their companies.
As far as I have seen, we are enough
To make the enterprise secure, if 't is Commenced to-morrow; but, till 't is begun,
Each hour is pregnant with a thousand perils.

I. Ber. Let the sixteen meet at the wonted hour,
Rocco, Nicotio, Nicotio Biondo,
And Marco Ghida, who will keep their watch
Within the arsenal, and hold all ready,
Expectant of the signal we will fix on.

Col. We will not fail.

I. Ber. Let all the rest be there;
I have a stranger to present to them.

Col. A stranger! doth he know the secret?

I. Ber. Yes.
Col. And have you dared to peril your friends' lives

On a rash confidence in one we know not?
I. Ber. I have risked no man's life except my own—
Of that be certain: he is one who may Make our assurance doubly sure, according
His aid; and if reluctant, he no less
Is in our power: he comes alone with me,
And cannot 'scape us: but he will not swerve.

Col. I cannot judge of this until I know him:
Is he one of our order?

I. Ber. Ay, in spirit,
Although a child of greatness; he is one
Who would become a throne, or overthrow one—
One who has done great deeds, and seen great changes;

No tyrant, though bred up to tyranny;
Valiant in war, and sage in council; noble
In nature, although haughty; quick, yet wary:
Yet for all this, so full of certain passions,
That if once stirr'd and baffled, as he has been Upon the tenderest points, there is no Fury
In Grecian story like to that which wrings
His vitals with her burning hands, till he Grows capable of all things for revenge;
And add too, that his mind is liberal,
He sees and feels the people are oppress'd,
And shares their sufferings. Take him all in all,
We have need of such, and such have need of us.

Col. And what part would you have him take with us?

I. Ber. It may be, that of chief.

Col. What! and resign
Your own command as leader?

I. Ber. Even so.
My object is to make your cause end well,
And not to push myself to power. Experience,
Some skill, and your own choice, had mark'd me suit.

To act in trust as your commander, till
Some worthier should appear: if I have found such
As you yourselves shall own more worthy, thank you
That I would hesitate from selfishness,
And, covetous of brief authority,
Stake our deep interest on my single thoughts,
Rather than yield to one above me in
All leading qualities? No, Calendario,
Know your friend better; but you all shall judge.
Away! and let us meet at the fix'd hour.
Be vigilant, and all will yet go well.

Col. Worthy Bertuccio, I have known you ever
Trusty and brave, with head and heart to plan
What I have still been prompt to execute.
For my own part, I seek no other chief;
What the rest will decide I know not, but I am with you, as I have ever been,
In all our undertakings. Now farewell,
Until the hour of midnight sees us meet. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Space between the Canal and the Church of San Giovanni e San Paolo. An square space before it.—A Gondola lies in the Canal at some distance.

Enter the Duke alone, disguised.
Duke. 'T is late, the hour, the hour whose

At night, night strike
The waves tottering,
To the corner-stone,
In some hideous dream

Of indistinct but awful augury
Of that which will befall them. Yes, proud city!
Thou must be cleansed of the black blood which makes thee

A lazar-house of tyranny: the task
Is forced upon me, I have sought it not;
And therefore was I punish'd, seeing this Patriotic pestilence spread on and on,
Until at length it smote me in my slumbers,
And I am tainted, and must wash away
The plague-spots in the healing wave. Tall fane!
Where sleep my fathers, whose dim statues shadow

The floor which doth divide us from the dead,
Where all the pregnant hearts of our bold blood,
Moulder'd into a mite of ashes, hold -
In one shrunk heap what once made many heroes,
When what is now a handful shook the earth—
Fane of the tutelar saints who guard our house!
Vault where two doges rest—my sires! who died
The one of toll, the other in the field.
With a long race of other lineal chiefs
And sages, whose great labors, wounds, and state
I have inherited,—let the graves gape,
Till all thin aises be peopled with the dead,
And pour them from thy portals to gaze on me!
I call them up, and them and thee to witness—
What it hath been which put me to this task—
Their pure high blood, their blazon-roll of glories,
Their mighty name dishonor'd all in me,
Not by me, but by the ungrateful nobles
We fought to make us equals, not our lords:—
And chiefly thou, Ordelafo the brave,
Who perish'd in the field, where I since conquer'd,
Battling at Zara, did the hecatombs
Of thine and Venice' foes, there offer'd up
By thy descendant, merit such acquittance?
Spirits! smile down upon me; for my cause
Is yours, in all life now can be of yours,—
Your fame, your name, all mingled up in mine,
And in the future fortunes of our race!
Let me but prosper, and I make this city
Free and immortal, and our house's name
Worthier of what you were, now and hereafter!"

Enter Israel Bertuccio.

I. Ber. Who goes there?

Doge. A friend to Venice.
I. Ber. 'Tis he.

Welcome, my lord,—you are before the time.

Doge. I am ready to proceed to your assembly.

I. Ber. Have with you.—I am proud and pleased to see

Such confident alacrity. Your doubts
Since our last meeting, then, are all dispell'd?

Doge. Not so—but I have set my little left
Of life upon this cast: the die was thrown

When first I listen'd to your treason—Start not!

That is the word; I cannot shape my tongue
To syllable black deeds into smooth names,

Though I be wrought on to commit them. When I heard you tempt your sovereign, and forbore

To have you dragg'd to prison, I became

Your guiltiest accomplice: now you may,

If it so please you, do as much by me.

I. Ber. Strange words, my lord, and most unmerited;

I am no spy, and neither are we traitors.

Doge. We!—We!—no matter—you have earn'd
the right

To talk of us.—But to the point.—If this

Attempt succeeds, and Venice, render'd free

And flourishing, when we are in our graves,

Conducts her generations to our tombs,

And makes her children with their little hands

Strew flowers o'er her deliverers' ashes, then

The consequence will sanctify the deed,

And we shall be like the two Bruti in

The annals of hereafter; but if not,

If we should fail, employing bloody means

And secret plot, although to a good end,

Still we are traitors, honest Israel;—thou

No less than he who was thy sovereign

Six hours ago, and now thy brother rebel.

I. Ber. 'Tis not the moment to consider thus,

Else I could answer—Let us to the meeting,

Or we may be observed in lingering here.

Doge. We are observed, and have been.

I. Ber. We observed!

Let me discover—and this steel—

Doge.

Here are no human witnesses: look there—

What see you?

I. Ber. Only a tall warrior's statue

Bestriding a proud steed, in the dim light

Of the dull moon.

Doge. That warrior was the sire

Of my sire's fathers, and that statue was

Decreed to him by the twice-rescued city:—

Think you that he looks down on us or no?

I. Ber. My lord, these are mere fantasies; there are

No eyes in marble.

Doge. But there are in Death.

I tell thee, man, there is a spirit in Such things that acts and sees, unseen, though

felt;

And, if there be a spell to stir the dead,

'Tis in such deeds as we are now upon.

Deem'st thou the souls of such a race as mine

Can rest, when he, their last descendant chief,

Stands plotting on the brink of their pure graves

With stung plebeians?

I. Ber. It had been as well

To have ponder'd this before,—ere you embark'd

In our great enterprise.—Do you repent?

Doge. No—but I feel, and shall do to the last.

I cannot quench a glorious life at once,

Nor dwindle to the thing I now must be,

And take men's lives by stealth, without some pause:

Yet doubt me not; it is this very feeling,

And knowing what has wrung me to be thus,

Which is your best security. There's not

A roused mechanic in your busy plot

So wrong'd as I, so fall'n, so loudly call'd

To his redress: the very means I am forced

By these fell tyrants to adopt is such,

That I abhor them doubly for the deeds

Which I must do to pay them back for theirs.

I. Ber. Let us away—hark—the hour strikes.

Doge. On—On—

It is our knell, or that of Venice—On!

I. Ber. Say rather, 'tis her freedom's rising

peal

Of triumph.—This way—we are near the place.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The House where the Conspirators meet.

Dagolino, Doro, Bertram, Fedele Trevisano,

Calendaro, Antonio delle Bende, etc., etc.

Cal. (entering). Are all here?

Dag. All with you; except the three

On duty, and our leader Israel,

Who is expected momentarily.

Cal. Where's Bertram?

Ber. Here!

Cal. Have you not been able to complete

The number wanting in your company?

Ber. I had mark'd out some; but I have not dared

To trust them with the secret, till assured

That they were worthy faith.

Cal. There is no need

Of trusting to their faith: who, save ourselves

And our more chosen comrades, is aware

Fully of our intent? they think themselves

Engaged in secret to the Signory.⁴³

To punish some more dissolute young nobles

Who have defied the law in their excesses;

But once drawn up, and their new words well flesh'd

In the rank hearts of the more odious senators,

They will not hesitate to follow up

Their blow upon the others, when they see

The example of their chiefs; and I for one

Will set them such, that they for very shame

And safety will not pause till all have perish'd.

Ber. How any you? all!

Cal. Whom wouldst thou spare?

Ber. I spare?

I have no power to spare. I only question'd, Thinking that even amongst these wicked men There might be some, whose age and qualities Might mark them out for pity.

Cal. Yes, such pity As when the viper hath been cut to pieces, The separate fragments quivering in the sun, In the last agony of venomous life, Deserve and have. Why, I should think as soon Of pitying some particular tang which made One in the jaw of the scorn serpent, as Of saving one of them: they form but links Of one long chain; one mass, one breath, one body; They eat, and drink, and live, and breed together, Reveal, and lie, oppress, and kill in concert,— So let them die as one!

Dog. Should one survive, He would be dangerous as the whole; it is not Their number, be it tens or thousands, but The spirit of this aristocracy Which must be rooted out; and if there were A single shoot of the old tree in life, I would fasten in the soil, and spring again To gloomy verdure and to bitter fruit. Bertram, we must be firm!

Cal. Look to it well, Bertram; I have an eye upon thee.

Ber. Who Distrusts me?

Cal. Not I; for if I did so, Thou wouldst not now be there to talk of trust: It is thy softness, not thy want of faith, Which makes thee to be doubted.

Ber. You should know Who bear me, who and what I am; a man Reason'd like yourselves to overthrow oppression; A kind man, I am apt to think, as some Of you have found me; and if brave or no, Yes, Calendario, can pronounce, who have seen me Put to the proof; or, if you should have doubts, I'll clear them on your person!

Cal. You are welcome, When once our enterprise is o'er, which must not Be interrupted by a private brawl.

Ber. I am no brawler; but can bear myself As lie among the foe as any he Who bears me; also why have I been selected To-wit' your chief comrades? but no less I own my natural weakness; I have not Yel learn'd to think of indiscriminate murder Without some sense of shuddering; and the sight Of blood which sports through hoary scalps is not To me a thing of triumph, nor the death Of men cry'd a glory. Well—too well I know that we must do such things on those Whose gods have raised up such avengers; but I think were some of these who could be saved Turn'd out this sweeping fate, for our own sakes And for our honor, to take off some stain Of execration, which else pollutes it wholly, I had been glad; and see no cause in this For either fear or suspicion!

Dog. Calm thee, Bertram, Be not afraid thou art, and take good heart. It is the cause, and not our will, which asks That we should wash our hands: we'll wash away The blood from our hands!

Ber. And the Doge, disguised. Welcome, Israel. Brave Bertuccio, thou

Dog. It is time to name him.

Our comrades are even now prepared to greet him In brotherhood, as I have made it known That thou wouldst add a brother to our cause, Approved by thee, and thus approved by all, Such is our trust in all thine actions. Now Let him unfold himself.

I. Ber.

Stranger, step forth!

[The Doge discovers himself.]

Consp. To arms!—we are betray'd—it is the Doge! Down with them both! war traitorous captain, and The tyrant he hath sold us to!

Cal. [drawing his sword]. Hold! hold! Who moves a step against them dies. Hold! hear Bertuccio—What! are you appall'd to see A lone, unguarded, weaponless old man Amongst you?—Israel, speak! what means this mystery?

I. Ber. Let them advance and strike at their own bosoms,

Ungrateful suicides! for on our lives Depend their own, their fortunes, and their hopes.

Doge. Strike!—if I dreaded death, a death more fearful

Than any your rash weapons can inflict, I should not now be here:—Oh, noble Courage! The eldest born of Fear, which makes you brave Against this solitary hoary head! See the bold chiefs, who would reform a state And shake down senates, mad with wrath and dread At sight of one patrician! Butcher me! You can; I care not.—Israel, are these men The mighty hearts you spoke of? look upon them!

Cal. Faith! he hath shamed us, and demerely. Was this your trust in your true chief Bertuccio, To turn your swords against him and his guest? Sheathe them, and hear him.

I. Ber.

I disdain to speak.

They might and must have known a heart like mine Incapable of treachery; and the power They gave me to adopt all fitting means To further their design was ne'er abused.

They might be certain that whoever was brought By me into this council had been led To take his choice—as brother, or as victim.

Doge. And which am I to be? your actions leave Some cause to doubt the freedom of the choice.

I. Ber. My lord, we would have perish'd here together,

Had these rash men proceeded; but, behold, They are ashamed of that mad moment's impulse, And drop their heads; believe me, they are such As I described them—Speak to them.

Cal.

Ay, speak:

We are all listening in wonder.

I. Ber. [addressing the Conspirators]. You are safe, Nay, more, almost triumphant—listen then, And know my words for truth.

Doge.

You see me here,

As one of you hath said, an old, unarm'd, Defenceless man; and yesterday you saw me Presiding in the hall of ducal state, Apparent sovereign of our hundred isles, Robed in official purple, dealing out The edicts of a power which is not mine, Not yours, but of our masters—the patricians. Why I was there you know, or think you know; Why I am here, he who hath been most wrong'd, He who among you hath been most insulted, Outraged, and trodden on, until he doubt If he be worm or no, may answer for me, Asking of his own heart, what brought him here? You know my recent story, all men know it, And judge of it far differently from those Who sat in judgment to heap scorn on scorn. But spare me the recital—it is here, Here at my heart the outrage—but my words, Already spent in unavailing plaints,

Would only show my feebleness the more,
And I come here to strengthen even the strong,
And urge them on to deeds, and not to war
With woman's weapons; but I need not urge you.
Our private wrongs have sprung from public vices,
In this—I cannot call it commonwealth,
Nor kingdom, which hath neither prince nor people,
But all the sins of the old Spartan state
Without its virtues—temperance and valor.
The lords of Lacedæmon were true soldiers,
But ours are Sybarites, while we are Helots,
Of whom I am the lowest, most enslaved;
Although dress'd out to head a peasant, as
The Greeks of yore made drunk their slaves to form

A pastime for their children. You are met
To overthrow this monster of a state,
This mockery of a government, this spectre,
Which must be exorcised with blood,—and then
We will renew the times of truth and justice,
Condemning in a fair free commonwealth
Not rash equality but equal rights,
Proportion'd like the columns to the temple,
Giving and taking strength reciprocal,
And making firm the whole with grace and beauty,
So that no part could be removed without Infringement of the general symmetry.
In operating this great change, I claim
To be one of you—if you trust in me;
If not, strike home,—my life is compromised,
And I would rather fall by freemen's hands
Than live another day to act the tyrant
As delegate of tyrants: such I am not,
And never have been—read it in our annals;
I can appeal to my past government
In many lands and cities; they can tell you
If I were an oppressor, or a man

Feeling and thinking for my fellow men.
Haply had I seen what the senate sought,
A thing of robes and trinkets, disen'd out
To sit in state as for a sovereign's picture;
A popular scourge, a ready sentence-signer,
A stickler for the senate and "the Forty,"
A skeptic of all measures which had not
The sanction of "the Ten," a council-fawner,
A tool, a fool, a puppet,—they had ne'er
Foster'd the wretch who stung me. What I suffer
Hae reach'd me through my pity for the people;
That many know, and they who know not yet
Will one day learn; meantime, I do devote,
Whate'er the issue, my last days of life—
My present power such as it is, not that
Of Doge, but of a man who has been great
Before he was degraded to a Doge,
And still has individual means and mind;
I stake my fame (and I had fame)—my breath
(The least of all, for its last hours are nigh)—
My heart—my hope—my soul—upon this cast!
Such as I am, I offer me to you
And to your chiefs; accept me or reject me,—
A prince who fain would be a citizen
Or nothing, and who has left his throne to be so.

Cal. Long live Faliero!—Venice shall be free!
Consps. Long live Faliero!

I. Ber. Comrades I did I well?
Is not this man a host in such a cause?

Dogs. This is no time for eulogies, nor place
For exultation. Am I one of you?

Cal. Ay, and the first amongst us, as thou hast been

Of Venice—be our general and chief.

Dogs. Chief!—general!—I was general at Zara.
And chief in Rhodes and Cyprus, prince in Venice:
I cannot stoop—that is, I am not fit
To lead a band of—patriots: when I lay
Aside the dignities which I have borne,
'Tis not to put on others, but to be

Mate to my fellows—but now to the point:
Israel has stated to me your whole plan—

'Tis bold, but feasible if I assist it,
And must be set in motion instantly.

Cal. Even when thou wilt. Is it not so, my friends?
I have disposed all for a sudden blow;
When shall it be then?

Dogs. At sunrise. So soon?

Dogs. So soon?—so late—each hour accumulates
Peril on peril, and the more so now
Since I have mingled with you;—know you not
The Council, and "the Ten"? the spies, the eyes
Of the patricians dubious of their slaves,
And now more dubious of the prince they have made one?

I tell you, you must strike, and suddenly,
Full to the Hydra's heart—its heads will follow.

Cal. With all my soul and sword, I yield assent;
Our companies are ready, sixty each,
And all now under arms by Israel's order;
Each at their different place of rendezvous,
And vigilant, expectant of some blow;
Let each repair for action to his post!
And now, my lord, the signal?

Dogs. When you hear
The great bell of Saint Mark's, which may not be Struck without special order of the Doge
(The last poor privilege they leave their prince),
March on Saint Mark's!

I. Ber. And there?— By different routes

Dogs. Let your march be directed, every sixty Entering a separate avenue, and still
Upon the way let your cry be of war
And of the Genoese fleet, by the first dawn
Disen'd before the port; form round the palace,
Within whose court will be drawn out in arms
My nephew and the clients of our house,
Many and martial: while the bell tolls on,
Shout ye, "Saint Mark!—the foe is on our waters!"

Cal. I see it now—but on my noble lord.

Dogs. All the patricians looking to the Council (Which they dare not refuse, as the dread signal Pealing from out their patron saint's proud tower)
Will then be gather'd in unto the harvest,
And we will reap them with the sword for sickle.
If some few should be tardy or absent them,
'T will be but to be taken faint and single,
When the majority are put to rest.

Cal. Would that the hour were come! we will not scotch,

But kill.

Ber. Once more, sir, with your pardon, I
Would now repeat the question which I ask'd
Before Bertuccio added to our cause
This great ally who renders it more sure,
And therefore safer, and as such admits
Some dawn of mercy to a portion of
Our victims—must all perish in this slaughter?

Cal. All who encounter me and mine, be sure,
The mercy they have shown, I show.

Consps. All! All!

Is this a time to talk of pity? when
Have they e'er shown, or felt, or feign'd it?

I. Ber. Bertuccio,

This false compassion is a folly, and
Injustice to thy comrades and thy cause!
Dost thou not see, that if we single out
Some for escape, they live but to avenge
The fallen? and how distinguish now the innocent
From out the guilty? all their acts are one—
A single emanation from one body,
Together knit for our oppression!

'Tis Much that we let their children live; I doubt
If all of these even should be set apart;

The hunter may reserve some single cub

From out the Doge's hither, but who e'er
Would seek to save the spotted air or dam,
Unless he perish by their fangs? however,
I will abide by Doge Faliero's counsel:
Let him decide if any should be saved.

Doge. Ask me not—taunt me not with such a question—

Decide yourselves.

I. Ber. You know their private virtues
Far better than we can, to whom alone
Their public vices, and most foul oppression,
Have made them deadly; if there be amongst them
One who deserves to be repeal'd, pronounce.

Doge. Dolfin's father was my friend, and Lando
Fought by my side, and Mare Cornaro shared
My generous animosity: I saved the life
Of Veniero—shall I save it twice?

Would that I could save them and Venice also!
All these men, or their fathers, were my friends
Till they became my subjects; then fell from me
As faithless leaves drop from the overblown flower,
And left me a lone blighted thorny stalk.
Which, in its solitude, can shelter nothing;
So, as they let me wither, let them perish!

Cal. They cannot coexist with Venice's freedom!

Doge. No, though you knew and feel our mutual hate.

Of many wrongs, even ye are ignorant
What fatal poison to the springs of life,
To human ties, and all that's good and dear,
Lurks in the present institutes of Venice:
All these men were my friends: I loved them, they Required honorably my regards;
We served and fought; we smiled and wept in concert;

We revere'd or we sorrow'd side by side;
We made alliances of blood and marriage;
We grew in years and honors fairly,—till
Their own desire, not my ambition, made
Them choose me for their prince, and then farewell,
Farewell all social memory! all thoughts
In common! and sweet bonds which link old friendships.

When the survivors of long years and actions,
Which now belong to history, soothe the days
Which yet remain by treasuring each other,
And never meet, but each beholds the mirror
Of half a century on his brother's brow,
And sees a hundred beings, now in earth,
Fill round them whispering of the days gone by,
And scanning not all dead, as long as two
Of the brave, joyous, reckless, glorious band,
Which once were one and many, still retain
A breath to sigh for them, a tongue to speak
Of deeds that else were silent, save on marble—
Ours! Ours!—and must I do this deed?

I. Ber. My heart, you are much moved: it is not
now

That each thing must be dwelt upon.

Doge. Your patience
A moment—I pause not: mark with me
The gloomy vices of this government.
From the hour they made me Doge, the Doge THEY made me—

Farewell the past! I died to all that had been,
Or rather they to me: no friends, no kindness,
No pity of life—all were cut off:
They came not near me, each approach gave un-
harm.

They could not love me, such was not the law;
They could not love me, 'twas the state's policy;
They could not love me, 'twas a politician's duty;

And I, who had been the danger or the bowl, any thing,
Was now a man of straw, a man of straw, when I stood
Before them, with my household gods shivered
At my feet, and I have forgotten or forgiven

They would'd me, for such was to right the state;
They would not right me, that would give suspicion;
So that I was a slave to my own subjects;
So that I was a foe to my own friends;
Begirt with spies for guards, with robes for power,
With pomp for freedom, gaolers for a council,
Inquisitors for friends, and hell for life!

I had one only fount of quiet left,
And that they poison'd! My pure household gods
Were shiver'd on my hearth, and o'er their shrine
Sate grinning Ribaldry and sneering Scorn.

I. Ber. You have been deeply wrong'd, and now shall be

Nobly avenged before another night.

Doge. I had borne all—it hurt me, but I bore it—
Till this last running over of the cup
Of bitterness—until this last loud insult,
Not only unredress'd, but sanction'd; then,
And thus, I cast all further feelings from me—
The feelings which they crush'd for me, long, long
Before, even in their oath of false allegiance!
Even in that very hour and vow, they abjured
Their friend and made a sovereign, as boys make Playthings, to do their pleasure—and be broken!
I from that hour have seen but senators
In dark suspicious conflict with the Doge,
Brooding with him in mutual hate and fear;
They dreading he should snatch the tyranny
From out their grasp, and he abhorring tyrants.
To me, then, these men have no private life,
Nor claim to ties they have cut off from others;
As senators for arbitrary acts
Amenable, I look on them—as such
Let them be dealt upon.

Cal. And now to action!
Hence, brethren, to our posts, and may this be
The last night of mere words: I'd fain be doing!
Saint Mark's great bell at dawn shall find me wakeful!

I. Ber. Disperse then to your posts: be firm and vigilant;

Think on the wrongs we bear, the rights we claim.
This day and night shall be the last of peril!
Watch for the signal, and then march. I go
To join my band; let each be prompt to marshal
His separate charge: the Doge will now return
To the palace to prepare all for the blow.
We part to meet in freedom and in glory!

Cal. Doge, when I greet you next, my homage to
you

Shall be the head of Steno on this sword!
Doge. No; let him be reserved unto the last,
Nor turn aside to strike at such a prey,
Till nobler game is quarried: his offence
Was a mere ebullition of the vice,
The general corruption generated
By the foul aristocracy: he could not—
He dared not—in more honorable days
Have risk'd it. I have merged all private wrath
Against him in the thought of our great purpose.
A slave insults me—I require his punishment
From his proud master's hands; if he refuse it,
The offence grows his, and let him answer it.

Cal. Yet, as the immediate cause of the alliance
Which consecrates our undertaking more,
I owe him such deep gratitude, that fain
I would repay him as he merits; may I?

Doge. You would but lop the hand, and I the head;
You would but smite the scholar, I the master;
You would but punish Steno, I the senate.
I cannot pause on individual hate,
In the absorbing, sweeping, whole revenge,

12? It has, comparatively, swallowed up in me every other feeling, and I am only a spectator upon earth till a tenfold opportunity offers. It may come yet."—Byron Letters, 1835.

Which, like the sheeted fire from heaven, must blast
Without distinction, as it fell of yore,
Where the Dead Sea hath quench'd two cities'
ashes.

I. Ber. Away, then, to your posts! I but remain
A moment to accompany the Doge
To our late place of tryst, to see no spies
Have been upon the scout, and thence I hasten
To where my allotted band is under arms.

Cal. Farewell, then,—until dawn!

I. Ber.

Consp. We will not fail!—Away! My lord, farewell!

[The Conspirators salute the Doge and Israel Bertuccio, and retire, headed by Philip Calendaro. The Doge and Israel Bertuccio remain.]

I. Ber. We have them in the toll—it cannot fail!
Now thou'rt indeed a sovereign, and wilt make
A name immortal greater than the greatest:
Free citizens have struck at kings ere now;
Cæsars have fallen, and even patrician hands
Have crush'd dictators, as the popular steel
Has reach'd patricians: but, until this hour,
What prince has plotted for his people's freedom?
Or risk'd a life to liberate his subjects?

For ever, and for ever, they conspire

Against the people, to abuse their hands

To chains, but laid aside to carry weapons

Against the fellow nations, so that yoke

On yoke, and slavery and death may whet,

Not ghast, the never-gorged Leviathan!

Now, my lord, to our enterprise:—'t is great,

And greater the reward; why stand you rapt?

A moment back, and you were all impatience!

Doge. And is it then decided? must they die?

I. Ber. Who?

Doge. My own friends by blood and courtesy,

And many deeds and days—the senators?

I. Ber. You pass'd their sentence, and it is a just one.

Doge. Ay, so it seems, and so it is to you;

You are a patriot, plebeian Gracchus—

The rebels' oracle, the people's tribune—

I blame you not—you act in your vocation;

They smote you, and oppress'd you, and despised

you;

So they have me: but you ne'er spake with them;

You never broke their bread, nor shared their salt;

You never had their wine-cup at your lips;

You grew not up with them, nor laugh'd, nor wept,

Nor held a revel in their company;

Ne'er smiled to see them smile, nor claim'd their smile.

In social interchange for yours, nor trusted

Nor wore them in your heart of hearts, as I have:

These hairs of mine are gray, and so are theirs,

The elders of the council: I remember

When all our locks were like the raven's wing,

As we went forth to take our prey around

The isles wrung from the false Mahometan;

And can I see them dabbled o'er with blood?

Each stab to them will seem my suicide.

I. Ber. Doge! Doge! this vacillation is unworthy

A child; if you are not in second childhood,

Call back your nerves to your own purpose, nor

Thus shame yourself and me. By heavens! I'd rather

Forego even now, or fall in our intent,

Than see the man I venerate subside

From high resolves into such shallow weakness!

You have seen blood in battle, shed it, both

Your own and that of others; can you shrink them
From a few drops from veins of hoary vampires,
Who but give back what they have drain'd from millions?

Doge. Bear with me! Step by step, and blow on blow,

I will divide with you; think not I waver:

Ah! no; it is the certainty of all

Which I must do doth make me tremble thus.

But let these last and lingering thoughts have way,

To which you only and the night are conscious,

And both regardless: when the hour arrives,

'T is mine to sound the knell, and strike the blow,

Which shall unpeople many palaces,

And hew the highest genealogic trees

Down to the earth, strew'd with their bleeding fruit,

And crush their blossoms into barrenness:

This will I—must I—have I sworn to do,

Nor ought can turn me from my destiny;

But still I quiver to behold what I

Must be, and think what I have been! Bear with me!

I. Ber. Remain your breast; I feel no such remoance.

I understand it not: why should you change?

You acted, and you act, on your free will.

Doge. Ay, there it is—you feel not, nor do I,

Else I should stab thee on the spot, to save

A thousand lives, and, killing, do no murder;

You feel not—you go to this butcher-work

As if these high-born men were steers for shambles!

When all is over, you'll be free and merry,

And calmly wash those hands incarnadine;

But I, outgoing thee and all thy fellows

In this surpassing massacre, shall be,

Shall see and feel—oh God! oh God! 't is true,

And thou dost well to answer that it was

"My own free will and act," and yet you err,

For I will do this! Doubt not—fear not; I

Will be your most unmerciful accomplice!

And yet I act no more on my free will,

Nor my own feelings—both compel me back;

But there is hell within me and around,

And like the demon who believes and trembles

Must I abhor and do. Away! away!

Get thee unto thy fellows, I will hie me

To gather the retainers of our house.

Doubt not, Saint Mark's great bell shall wake all

Venice,

Except her slaughter'd senate: ere the sun

Be broad upon the Adriatic, there

Shall be a voice of weeping, which shall drown

The roar of waters in the cry of blood!

I am resolv'd—come on.

I. Ber. With all my soul!

Keep a firm rein upon these bursts of passion;

Remember what these men have dealt to thee,

And that this sacrifice will be succeeded

By ages of prosperity and freedom

To this unshackled city: a true tyrant

Would have depopulated empires, nor

Have felt the strange compunction which hath wrung you

To punish a few traitors to the people.

Trust me, such were a pity more misplaced

Than the late mercy of the state to Steno.

Doge. Man, thou hast struck upon the chord which jars

All nature from my heart. Hence to our task!

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Palace of the Patriarcha Lionel. Lionel lying under the mask and cloak which the Venetian Nobles wore in public, attended by a Domestic.

Lionel. I will to rest, right weary of this revel,
The gayest we have held for many moons,
And yet, I know not why, it cheer'd me not;
There came a heaviness across my heart,
Which, in the lightest movement of the dance,
Though eye to eye, and hand in hand united
Even with the lady of my love, oppress'd me,
And through my spirit chill'd my blood, until
A damp like death rose o'er my brow; I strove
To laugh the thought away, but 't would not be:
Through all the music ringing in my ears
A knell was sounding as distinct and clear,
Though low and far, as o'er the Adrian wave
Rose o'er the city's murmur in the night,
Dashing against the outward Lido's bulwark:
So that I left the festival before
It reach'd its zenith, and will woo my pillow
Nor thoughts more tranquil, or forgetfulness.
Antonio, take my mask and cloak, and light
The lamp within my chamber.

Ant. Command you no refreshment? Yes, my lord:

Lionel. Nought, save sleep,
Which will not be commanded. Let me hope it.
[Exit Antonio.]

Though my breast feels too anxious: I will try
Whether the air will calm my spirits: 't is
A goodly night; the cloudy wind which blew
From the Levant hath crept into its cave,
And the broad moon has brighten'd. What a stillness! [Goes to an open lattice.]

And what a contrast with the scene I left,
Where the tall torches' glare, and silver lamps'
More pallid gleam along the tapestried walls,
Spread over the reluctant gloom which haunts
Those vast and dimly-lighted galleries
A dawning mass of artificial light.

Which show'd all things, but nothing as they were.
There I go essaying to recall the past,
After long striving for the hues of youth
As the and labor of the toilet, and Full many a glance at the too faithful mirror,
Frank'd forth in all the pride of ornament,
Forgot myself, and trusting to the falsehood
Of the indulgent beams, which show, yet hide,
Believed myself forgotten, and was fool'd.

There Youth, which needed not, nor thought of such Vain adjuncts, lavish'd its true bloom, and health,
And bridal beauty, in the unwholesome press
Of smok'd and crowded wassailers, and wasted
Its hours of rest in dreaming this was pleasure,
And so shall waste them till the sunrise streams
On yellow cheeks and sunken eyes, which should not Have worn this aspect yet for many a year.

The mask, and the banquet, and the wine—
The garlands, the rose odors, and the flowers—
The sparkling eyes, and flashing ornaments—
The white arms and the raven hair—the braids
And tresses; swanlike bosoms, and the necklace,
As India's wealth, yet daring not
The eye like what it doted; the thin robes,
Which the light clouds 'twixt our gaze and the world's revealing, set so small and sylphlike,

Gleaming with their secret symmetry
Under the forms which terminate so well—
All these, and the dimly come,
And the dimly come, art and nature,
And the dimly come, art and nature,
And the dimly come, art and nature,
And the dimly come, art and nature,

On Arab sands the false mirage, which offers
A lucid lake to his eluded thirst,
Are gone. Around me are the stars and waters—
Worlds mirror'd in the ocean, goodlier sight
Than torches glared back by a gaudy glass:
And the great element, which is to space
What ocean is to earth, spreads its blue depths,
Softened with the first breathings of the spring;
The high moon sails upon her beautiful way,
Serenely smoothing o'er the lofty walls
Of those tall piles and sea-girt palaces,
Whose porphyry pillars, and whose costly fronts,
Fraught with the Orient spoil of many marbles,
Like altars ranged along the broad canal,
Seem each a trophy of some mighty deed
Rear'd up from out the waters, scarce less strangely
Than those more massy and mysterious giants
Of architecture, those Titanian fabrics,
Which point in Egypt's plains to times that have No other record. All is gentle: nought
Stirs rudely; but, congenial with the night,
Whatever walks is gliding like a spirit.
The tinklings of some vigilant guitars
Of sleepless lovers to a wakeful mistress,
And cautious opening of the casement, showing
That he is not unheard; while her young hand,
Fair as the moonlight of which it seems part,
So delicately white, it trembles in
The act of opening the forbidden lattice,
To let in love through music, makes his heart
Thrill like his lyre-strings at the sight:—the dash
Phosphoric of the oar, or rapid twinkle
Of the far lights of skimming gondolas,
And the responsive voices of the choir
Of boatmen answering back with verse for verse;
Some dusky shadow checkering the Rialto;
Some glimmering palace roof, or tapering spire,
Are all the sights and sounds which here pervade
The ocean-born and earth-commanding city—
How sweet and soothing is this hour of calm!
I thank thee, Night! for thou hast chased away
Those horrid bodements which, amidst the throng,
I could not dissipate: and with the blessing
Of thy benign and quiet influence,
Now will I to my couch, although to rest
Is almost wronging such a night as this—
[A knocking is heard from without.]
Hark! what is that? or who, at such a moment?

Enter Antonio.

Ant. My lord, a man without, on urgent business,
Implores to be admitted.

Lionel. Is he a stranger?

Ant. His face is muffled in his cloak, but both
His voice and gestures seem familiar to me;
I craved his name, but this he seem'd reluctant
To trust, save to yourself; most earnestly
He sues to be permitted to approach you.

Lionel. 'T is a strange hour, and a suspicious bearing!

And yet there is slight peril: 't is not in Their houses noble men are struck at; still,
Although I know not that I have a foe
In Venice, 't will be wise to use some caution.
Admit him, and retire; but call up quickly
Some of thy fellows, who may wait without.—
Who can this man be?

[Exit Antonio, and returns with Bertram, muffled.]

Her. My good lord Lionel,
I have no time to lose, nor thou,—dismiss
This menial hence; I would be private with you.

Lionel. It seems the voice of Bertram—Go, Antonio.

[Exit Antonio.]

Now, stranger, what would you at such an hour?

Ber. (discovering himself). A boon, my noble patron: you have granted Many to your poor client, Bertram; add This one, and make him happy.

Lioni. Thou hast known me From boyhood, ever ready to assist thee In all fair objects of advancement, which Besem one of thy station; I would promise Ere thy request was heard, but that the hour, Thy bearing, and this strange and hurried mode Of suing, gives me to suspect this visit Hath some mysterious import—but say on— What has occur'd, some rash and sudden broil?— A cup too much, a scuffle, and a stab? Mere things of every day; so that thou hast not Spilt noble blood, I guarantee thy safety? But then thou must withdraw, for angry friends And relatives, in the first burst of vengeance, Are things in Venice deadlier than the laws.

Ber. My lord, I thank you; but—

Lioni. But what? You have not Raised a rash hand against one of our order? If so, withdraw and fly, and own it not; I would not stay—but then I must not save thee! He who has shed patrician blood—

Ber. I come To save patrician blood, and not to shed it! And thereunto I must be speedy, for Each minute lost may lose a life; since Time Has changed his slow scythe for the two-edged sword, And is about to take, instead of sand, The dust from sepulchres to fill his hour-glass!— Go not thou forth to-morrow!

Lioni. Wherefore not?

What means this menace?

Ber. Do not seek its meaning, But do as I implore thee;—stir not forth, Whate'er be stirring; though the roar of crowds— The cry of women, and the shrieks of babes— The groans of men—the clash of arms—the sound Of rolling drum, shrill trumpet, and hollow bell, Peal in one wide alarm!—Go not forth Until the tocsin's silent, nor even then Till I return!

Lioni. Again, what does this mean?

Ber. Again, I tell thee, ask not; but by all Thou holdest dear on earth or heaven—by all The souls of thy great fathers, and thy hope To emulate them, and to leave behind Descendants worthy both of them and thee— By all thou hast of bless'd in hope or memory— By all thou hast to fear here or hereafter— By all the good deeds thou hast done to me, Good I would now repay with greater good, Remain within—trust to thy household gods, And to my word for safety, if thou dost As I now counsel—but if not, thou art lost!

Lioni. I am indeed already lost in wonder; Surely thou starest! what have I to dread? Who are my foes? or if there be such, why Art thou leagued with them?—thou! or if so leagued, Why comest thou to tell me at this hour, And not before?

Ber. I cannot answer this.

Will thou go forth despite of this true warning?

Lioni. I was not born to shrink from idle threats, The cause of which I know not: at the hour Of council, be it soon or late, I shall not Be found among the absent.

Ber. Say not so!

Once more, art thou determined to go forth?

Lioni. I am. Nor is there aught which shall impede me!

Ber. Then Heaven have mercy on thy soul!

Farewell!

Lioni. Stay—there is more in this than my own safety

Which makes me call thee back; we must not part thus:

Bertram, I have known thee long.

Ber. From childhood, signor, You have been my protector: in the days Of reckless infancy, when rank forgets, Or, rather, is not yet taught to remember Its cold prerogative, we play'd together; Our sports, our smiles, our tears, were mingled oft; My father was your father's client, I His son's scarce less than foster-brother; years Saw us together—happy, heart-full hours! Oh God! the difference 'twixt those hours and this!

Lioni. Bertram, 't is thou who hast forgotten them. Ber. Nor now, nor ever; whate'er betide, I would have saved you: when to manhood's growth We sprung, and you, devoted to the state, As suits your station, the more humble Bertram Was left unto the labors of the humble, Still you forsook me not; and if my fortunes Have not been towering, 't was no fault of him Who ofttimes rescued and supported me.

When struggling with the tides of circumstance Which bear away the weaker: noble blood Ne'er mantled in a nobler heart than thine Has proved to me, the poor plebeian Bertram. Would that thy fellow senators were like thee!

Lioni. Why, what hast thou to say against the senate?

Ber. Nothing.

Lioni. I know that there are angry spirits And turbulent mutterers of stifled treason, Who lurk in narrow places, and walk out Muffled to whisper curses to the night; Disbanded soldiers, discontented ruffians, And desperate libertines who brawl in taverns; Thou herdest not with such: 't is true, of late I have lost sight of thee, but thou wert wont To lead a temperate life, and break thy bread With honest mates, and bear a cheerful aspect. What hath come to thee? in thy hollow eye And hueless cheek, and thine unquiet motions, Sorrow and shame and conscience seem at war To waste thee.

Ber. Rather shame and sorrow light

On the accursed tyranny which rides

The very air in Venice, and makes men

Madden as in the last hours of the plague

Which sweeps the soul deliciously from life!

Lioni. Some villains have been tampering with thee, Bertram;

This is not thy old language, nor own thoughts; Some wretch has made thee drunk with disaffection; But thou must not be lost so; thou wert good And kind, and art not fit for such base acts As vice and villainy would put thee to:

Confess—confide in me—thou know'st my nature.

What is it thou and thine are bound to do,

Which should prevent thy friend, the only son

Of him who was a friend unto thy father,

So that our good will is a heritage

We should bequeath to our posterity

Such as ourselves received it, or augmented;

I say, what is it thou must do, that I

Should deem thee dangerous, and keep the house

Like a sick girl?

Ber. Nay, question me no further:

I must be gone.— And I be murder'd!—say,

Was it not thus thou said'st, my gentle Bertram?

Ber. Who talks of murder? what said I of murder?—

'T is false! I did not utter such a word.

Lioni. Thou didst not; but from out thy wolfish eyes,

So changed from what I knew it, there glares forth The gladiator. If my life 's thine object,

They made the sun shine through the host of Huns
When sallow burghers slunk back to their tents,
And cower'd to hear their own victorious trumpet.
If there be small resistance, you will find
These citizens all lions, like their standard;
But if there's much to do, you'll wish, with me,
A band of iron rustics at our backs.
Ber. F. Thus thinking, I must marvel you resolve
To strike the blow so suddenly.

Doge. Such blows
Must be struck suddenly or never. When I had o'ermaster'd the weak false remorse
Which yearn'd about my heart, too fondly yielding
A moment to the feelings of old days,
I was most fain to strike; and, firstly, that
I might not yield again to such emotions;
And, secondly, because of all these men,
Save Israel and Philip Calendaro,
I know not well the courage or the faith:
To-day might find 'mongst them a traitor to us,
As yesterday a thousand to the senate;
But once in, with their hilts hot in their hands,
They must on for their own sakes; one stroke struck,
And the mere instinct of the first-born Cain,
Which ever lurks somewhere in human hearts,
Though circumstance may keep it in abeyance,
Will urge the rest on like to wolves; the sight
Of blood to crowds begets the thirst of more,
As the first wine-cup leads to the long revel;
And you will find a harder task to quell
Than urge them when they have commenced, but still
That moment, a mere voice, a straw, a shadow,
Are capable of turning them aside.—
How goes the night?

Ber. F. Almost upon the dawn.
Doge. Then it is time to strike upon the bell.
Are the men posted?

Ber. F. By this time they are;
But they have orders not to strike, until
They have command from you through me in person.
Doge. 'Tis well.—Will the morn never put to rest
These stars which twinkle yet o'er all the heavens?
I am settled and bound up, and being so,
The very effort which it cost me to Resolve to cleanse this commonwealth with fire,
Now leaves my mind more steady. I have wept,
And trembled at the thought of this dread duty;
But now I have put down all idle passion,
And look the growing tempest in the face,
As doth the pilot of an admiral galley:
Yet (wouldst thou think it, kinsman?) it hath been
A greater struggle to me, than when nations
Beheld their fate usurped in the approaching fight,
Where I was leader of a phalanx, where Thousands were sure to perish—Yes, to spill
The rank polluted current from the veins
Of a few bloated despots needed more
To steel me to a purpose such as made
Timoleon immortal, than to face
The toils and dangers of a life of war.

Ber. F. It gladdens me to see your former wisdom Subdue the furies which so wrong you are
You were decided.

Doge. It was ever thus
With me; the hour of agitation came
In the first glimmerings of a purpose, when Passion had too much room to sway; but in
The hour of action I have stood as calm
As were the dead who lay around me; this
They knew who made me what I am, and trusted
To the subduing power which I preserved
Over my mood, when its first burst was spent.
But they were not aware that there are things

Which make revenge a virtue by reflection,
And not an impulse of mere anger; though
The laws sleep, justice wakes, and injured souls
Oft do a public right with private wrong,
And justify their deeds unto themselves.—
Methinks the day breaks—is it not so? look,
Thine eyes are clear with youth;—the air puts on
A morning freshness, and, at least to me,
The sea looks grayer through the lattice.

Ber. F. True,
The morn is dappling in the sky.
Doge. A way then!
See that they strike without delay, and with
The first toll from Saint Mark's, march on the palace

With all our house's strength: here I will meet you;
The Sixteen and their companies will move
In separate columns at the self-same moment:
Be sure you post yourself at the great gate:
I would not trust "the Ten" except to us—
The rest, the rabble of patricians, may Glut the more careless swords of those leagu'd
with us.

Remember that the cry is still "Saint Mark!
The Genoese are come—ho! to the rescue!
Saint Mark and Liberty!"—Now—now to action!

Ber. F. Farewell then, noble uncle! we will meet
In freedom and true sovereignty, or never!

Doge. Come hither, my Bertuccio—one embrace;
Speed, for the day grows broader; and send me soon
A messenger to tell me how all goes
When you rejoin our troops, and then sound—sound
The storm-bell from Saint Mark's!

[Exit Bertuccio Faliero.]

Doge (solus). He is gone,
And on each footstep moves a life. 'Tis done.
Now the destroying angel hovers o'er
Venice, and pauses ere he pour the vial,
Even as the eagle overlooks his prey,
And for a moment, poised in middle air,
Suspends the motion of his mighty wings,
Then swoops with his unerring beak. Thou day!
That slowly walk't the waters! march—march on—
I would not smite! the dark, but rather see
That no stroke errs. And you, ye blue sea waves!
I have seen you dyed ere now, and deeply too,
With Genoese, Saracen, and Hunnish gore,
While that of Venice flow'd too, but victorious;
Now thou must wear an unmix'd crimson; no
Barbaric blood can reconcile us now
Unto that horrible incarnadine,
But friend or foe will roll in civic slaughter.
And have I lived to fourscore years for this?
I, who was named Preserver of the City?
I, at whose name the million's caps were hung
Into the air, and cries from tens of thousands
Rose up, imploring Heaven to send me blessings,
And fame, and length of days—to see this day?
But this day, black within the calendar,
Shall be succeeded by a bright millennium.
Doge Dandolo survived to ninety summers
To vanquish empires, and refuse their crown;
I will resign a crown, and make the state
Renew its freedom—but oh! by what means?
The noble end must justify them. What
Are a few drops of human blood? 'tis false,
The blood of tyrants is not human; they,
Like to incarnate Molochs, feed on ours,
Until 'tis time to give them to the tombs
Which they have made so populous.—Oh world!
Oh men! what are ye, and our best designs,
That we must work by crime to punish crime?
And slay as if Death had but this one gate,

* * At last the moment arrives when the bell is to be sounded, and the whole of the conspiring bands are watching in impatience for the signal. The nephew of the doge, and the heir of his house (for he is childless), leaves Faliero in his palace, and goes to strike with his own hand the fatal summons. The doge is left alone.

When a few years would make the sword superfluous?
And I, upon the verge of th' unknown realm,
Yet said so many heralds on before me I—
I must not ponder this. [A pause.]

Hark! was there not
A murmur as of distant voices, and
The tramp of feet in martial unison?
What phantoms even of sound our wishes raise!
It cannot be—the signal hath not rung—
Why pauses it? My nephew's messenger
Should be upon his way to me, and he Himself perhaps even now draws grating back
Upon its ponderous hinge the steep tower portal,
Where swings the golden huge circular bed,
Which never kneels but for a princely death,
Or for a saint in peril, pealing forth
Tremendous bodements; let it do its office,
And be this portal its swiftest and last.
Hark! still the strong tower rock!—What! silent still?

I would go forth, but that my post is here,
To be the centre of reunion to
The oft discordant elements which form
Legions of this nature, and to keep compact
The wavering of the weak, in case of conflict;
For if they should do battle, 't will be here,
Within this palace, that the strife will thicken:
Then here must be my station, as becomes
The peace-mover.—Hark! he comes—he comes,
My nephew, leave Bartuccio's messenger.—
What tidings? Is he marching? hath he sped?
Stay here!—all's lost—yet will I make an effort.

Enter a Signor of the Night, with Guards, &c., &c.

Sig. Dogs, I arrest thee of high treason!
Dogs. Me!
Thy prince, of treason?—Who are they that dare
Cost their own treason under such an order?
Sig. [showing his order]. Behold my order from the assembled Ten.

Dogs. And where are they, and why assembled? no such council can be lawful, till the prince be there, and that duty's mine: on thine
I charge thee, give me way, or marshal me
To the council chamber.

Duke! it may not be:
Nor are they in the walled Hall of Council,
Nor sitting in the convent of Saint Saviour's.

Dogs. You dare to disobey me, then?
Sig. I serve
The state, and needs must serve it faithfully;
My warrant is the will of those who rule it.

Dogs. And till that warrant has my signature
It is illegal, and, as once applied,
Shall stand. Hast thou weigh'd well thy life's peril?

Hark!—dare you dare assume a lawless function?
Sig. 'Tis not my office to reply, but act—
I am plac'd here as guard upon thy person,
And never judge to hear or to decide.

Dogs. [sighing]. I must gain time. So that the storm-bell sound.
All say so, well yet.—Kinsman, speed—speed—
[exit]

Our state's constitution in the balance, and Woe to the tyrant!—d! be they prince and people,
Or slave and prince—

[The great bell of Saint Mark's tolls.
Lol! it sounds—it tolls!
Signor of the Night! and you, ye unhappy slaves in fear,

It is your knell—Swallow on, thou lucky peal!
Now, knaves, what ransom for your lives?

Sig. Confusion!
Stand to your arms, and guard the door—all's lost
Unless that fearful bell be silenced soon.
The officer hath mis'd his path or purpose,
Or met some unforeseen and hideous obstacle.
Anselmo, with thy company proceed
Straight to the Tower: the rest remain with me.

[Exit part of the Guard.
Dogs. Wretch! if thou wouldst have thy vile life, implore it;

It is not now a lease of sixty seconds.
Ay, send thy miserable ruffians forth;
They never shall return.

Sig. So let it be!
They die then in their duty, as will I.

Dogs. Fool! the high eagle flies at nobler game,
Than thou and thy base myrmidons,—live on,
So thou provok'st not peril by resistance,
And learn (if souls so much obscured can bear
To gaze upon the sunbeams) to be free.

Sig. And learn thou to be captive. It hath ceased,
[The bell ceases to toll.]

The traitorous signal, which was to have set
The bloodhound mob on their patriotic prey—
The knell hath rung, but it is not the senate's!

Dogs. [after a pause]. All's silent, and all's lost.
Sig. Now, Dogs, denounce me
As rebel slave of a revolted council!

Have I not done my duty?
Dogs. Peace, thou thing!

Thou hast done a worthy deed, and earn'd the price
Of blood, and they who use thee will reward thee.
But thou wert sent to watch, and not to prate,
As thou saidst even now—then do thine office,
But let it be in silence, as behoves thee,
Since, though thy prisoner, I am thy prince.

Sig. I did not mean to fall in the respect
Due to your rank: in this I shall obey you.

Dogs. [aside]. There now is nothing left me save to die;

And yet how near success! I would have fallen,
And proudly, in the hour of triumph, but
To miss it thus!—

Enter the Signor of the Night, with Bartuccio
Faliero prisoner.

2d Sig. We took him in the act
Of issuing from the tower, where, at his order,
As delegated from the Dogs, the signal
Had thus begun to sound.

1st Sig. Are all the passes
Which lead up to the palace well secured?

2d Sig. They are—besides, it matters not; the chiefs

Are all in chains, and some even now on trial—
Their followers are dispersed, and many taken.

Ber. F. Uncle!

Dogs. It is in vain to war with fortune;
The glory hath departed from our house.

Ber. F. Who would have deem'd it?—Ah! one moment sooner!

Dogs. That moment would have changed the face of ages;

This gives us to eternity.—We'll meet it
As men whose triumph is not in success,
But who can make their own minds all in all,
Equal to every fortune. Droop not, 't is
But a brief passage—I would go alone,
Yet if they send us, as 't is like, together,
Let us go worthy of our sires and selves.

Ber. F. I shall not shame you, uncle.

1st Sig. Lords, our orders
Are to keep guard on both in separate chambers,
Until the council call ye to your trial.

Dogs. Our trial! will they keep their mockery as important change in the old

Even to the last? but let them deal upon us,
As we had dealt on them, but with less pomp.
'Tis but a game of mutual homicides,
Who have cast lots for the first death, and they Have won with false dice—Who hath been our Judas?

1st Sig. I am not warrant to answer that.

Ber. F. I'll answer for thee—'tis a certain Bertram.

Even now deposing to the secret giunta.

Doge. Bertram the Bergamask! With what vile tools

We operate to slay or save! This creature,
Black with a double treason, now will earn
Rewards and honors, and be stamp'd in story
With the geese in the Capitol, which gabbled
Till Rome awoke, and had an annual triumph,
While Manlius, who hurl'd down the Gauls, was cast
From the Tarpeian.

1st Sig. He aspired to treason,
And sought to rule the state.

Doge. He saved the state,
And sought but to reform what he revived—
But this is idle—Come, sirs, do your work.

1st Sig. Noble Bertuccio, we must now remove
you
Into an inner chamber.

Ber. F. Farewell, uncle!

If we shall meet again in life I know not,
But they perhaps will let our ashes mingle.

Doge. Yes, and our spirits, which shall yet go

forth,
And do what our frail clay, thus clogg'd, hath fail'd
in!

They cannot quench the memory of those Who would have hurl'd them from their guilty throne.

And such examples will find heirs, though distant.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Hall of the Council of Ten, assembled with the additional Senators, who, on the Trials of the Conspirators for the Treason of Marino Faliero, composed what was called the Giunta.—Guards, Officers, etc.—Israel Bertuccio and Philip Calendars as Prisoners.—Bertram, Lionel, and Witnesses, etc.

The Chief of the Ten, Benintende.

Ben. There now rests, after such conviction of Their manifold and manifest offences,
But to pronounce on these obdurate men
The sentence of the law:—a grievous task
To those who hear, and those who speak. Alas!
That it should fall to me! and that my days
Of office should be stigmatized through all
The years of coming time, as bearing record
To this most foul and complicated treason
Against a just and free state, known to all
The earth as being the Christian bulwark 'gainst
The Saracen and the schismatic Greek,
The savage Hun, and not less barbarous Frank;
A city which has open'd India's wealth
To Europe; the last Roman refuge from Overwhelming Attila; the ocean's queen;
Proud Genoa's prouder rival! 'Tis to sap
The throne of such a city, these lost men
Have risk'd and forfeited their worthless lives—
So let them die the death.

I. Ber.

We are prepared:
Your racks have done that for us. Let us die.

Ben. If ye have that to say which would obtain
Abatement of your punishment, the giunta
Will hear you; if you have aught to confess,
Now is your time, perhaps it may avail ye.

Ber. F. We stand to hear, and not to speak.

Ben.

Your crimes
Are fully proved by your accomplices,
And all which circumstance can add to aid them;
Yet we would hear from your own lips complete
Avowal of your treason: on the verge
Of that dread gulf which none repass, the truth
Alone can profit you on earth or heaven—
Say, then, what was your motive?

I. Ber.

Justice!

Ben. What

Your object?

I. Ber.

Freedom!

Ben.

You are brief, sir.

I. Ber. So my life grows: I
Was bred a soldier, not a senator.

Ben. Perhaps you think by this blunt brevity
To brave your judges to postpone the sentence?

I. Ber. Do you be brief as I am, and believe me,
I shall prefer that mercy to your pardon.

Ben. Is this your sole reply to the tribunal?

I. Ber. Go, ask your racks what they have wrung from us.

Or place us there again; we have still some blood left,
And some slight sense of pain in these wretch'd limbs:

But this ye dare not do; for if we die there—

And you have left us little life to spend

Upon your engines, gorged with pangs already—

Ye lose the public spectacle, with which

You would appall your slaves to further slavery!

Groans are not words, nor agony assent,

Nor affirmation truth, if nature's sense

Should overcome the soul into a lie,

For a short respite—must we bear or die?

Ben. Say, who were your accomplices?

I. Ber.

The senate.

Ben. What do you mean?

I. Ber.

Ask of the suffering people,
Whom your patrician crimes have driven to crime.

Ben. You know the Doge?

I. Ber.

I served with him at Zara

In the field, when you were pleading here your way

To present office; we exposed our lives,

While you but hazarded the lives of others,

Alike by ~~assent~~ or defence;

And, for the rest, all Venice knows her Doge,

Through his great actions, and the senate's insults.

Ben.

You have held conference with him?

I. Ber.

I am weary—

Even wearier of your questions than your tortures:

I pray you pass to judgment.

Ben. It is coming—

And you, too, Philip Calendars, what

Have you to say why you should not be doom'd?

Cal. I never was a man of many words,

And now have few left worth the utterance.

Ben. A further application of your engine

May change your tone.

Cal.

Most true, it will do so;

A former application did so; but

It will not change my words, or, if it did—

Ben. What then?

Cal.

Will my avowal on yon rack

Stand good in law?

Ben.

Assuredly.

Cal. Whoe'er

The culprit be whom I accuse of treason?

Ben. Without doubt, he will be brought up to trial.

Cal. And on this testimony would he perish?
Ben. So your confusion be detail'd and full,
He will stand here in peril of his life.

Cal. Then look well to thy proud self, President!
For by the stercorality which yawns before me,
I swear that thou, and only thou, shalt be
The traitor I denounce upon that rack.
If I be stretch'd there for the second time.

One of the Ghemiti. Lord President, 'twere best proceed to judgment;

There is no more to be drawn from these men.

Ben. Unhappy men! prepare for instant death.
The nature of your crime, our law, and peril
The state now stands in, leave not an hour's respite.
Ghemiti! Lead them forth, and upon the balcony
Of the red columns, where, on fatal Thursday,
The Dogs stands to behold the chase of bulls,
Let them be justified; and leave exposed
Their wavering faith, in the place of judgment,
To the full view of the assembled people!
And Heaven have mercy on their souls!

The Ghemiti. Amen!
I. Ben. Signora, farewell! we shall not all again
Meet in one place.

Ben. And lest they should essay
To stir up the distracted multitude—Guards! let their mouths be gagged, as even in the act

Of execution. Lead them hence! What! must we
Not even say farewell to some fond friend,
Nor have a last word with our confessor?

Ben. A priest is waiting in the antechamber;
Not for your friends, such interviews would be Painful to them, and useless all to you.

Cal. I knew that we were gagged in life; at least
All those who had not heart to risk their lives
Upon their open thoughts; but still I deem'd
That in the last few moments, the same idle
Freedom of speech accorded to the dying,
Would not now be denied to us; but since—

I. Ben. Even let them have their way, brave Calendaro!

What matter a few syllables? let's die
Without the slightest show of favor from them;
We shall our blood more readily arise

As Heaven against them; and more testify
To their atrocities, than could a volume
Spoken or written of our dying words!

They tremble at our voices—nay, they dread
Our very silence—let them live in fear!

Leave them unto their thoughts, and let us now
Address our own above!—Lead on; we are ready.

Cal. Hushed, hushed thou but hearken'd unko me,
Thou art not now here thus; and you pale villain,
The worst of Bertram, would—

I. Ben. Peace, Calendaro!

What breaks it now to ponder upon this?

Cal. Alas! I find you died in peace with me:
I did not seek this task; 'twas forced upon me:
Oh, you forgive me, though I never can Receive my own forgiveness—frown not thus!

I. Ben. I die and pardon thee!

Cal. (Speaking at her). I die and scorn thee!

(Enter Israel Bertuccio and Philip

Calendaro, Guards, &c.

Ben. Now that these criminals have been disposed

Of, let us proceed to pass our sentence
Upon the traitor upon record

Cal. (To the Doge Faliero)

Our sentence is complete; the time

For such a procedure: shall

And my superiority in action,

You drew me from my honorable toils

Ben. Avogadori, order that the Doge
Be brought before the council.

One of the Ghemiti. And the rest,
When shall they be brought up?

Ben. When all the chiefs
Have been disposed of. Some have fled to Chioggia;
But there are thousands in pursuit of them,
And such precaution taken on terra firma,
As well as in the islands, that we hope
None will escape to utter in strange lands
His libellous tale of treasons 'gainst the senate.

Enter the Doge as Prisoner, with Guards, &c., &c.

Ben. Doge—for such still you are, and by the law
Must be consider'd, till the hour shall come
When you must doff the ducal bonnet from
That head, which could not wear a crown more noble

Than empires can confer, in quiet honor,
But it must plot to overthrow your peers,
Who made you what you are, and quench in blood
A city's glory—we have laid already

Before you in your chamber at full length,
By the Avogadori, all the proofs
Which have appear'd against you; and more ample Never rear'd their sanguinary shadows to Confront a traitor. What have you to say
In your defence?

Doge. What shall I say to ye,
Since my defence must be your condemnation?
You are at once offenders and accusers,
Judges and executioners!—Proceed
Upon your power.

Ben. Your chief accomplices
Having confess'd, there is no hope for you.

Doge. And who be they?

Ben. In number many; but
The first now stands before you and the court,
Bertram, of Bergamo,—would you question him?

Doge (looking at him contemptuously). No.

Ben. And two others, Israel Bertuccio,
And Philip Calendaro, have admitted
Their fellowship in treason with the Doge!

Doge. And where are they?

Ben. Gone to their place, and now
Answering to Heaven for what they did on earth.

Doge. Ah! the plebeian Brutus, is he gone?
And the quick Cassius of the arsenal?—
How did they meet their doom?

Ben. Think of your own:

It is approaching. You decline to plead, then?

Doge. I cannot plead to my inferiors, nor
Can recognise your legal power to try me.
Show me the law!

Ben. On great emergencies
The law must be remodelled or amended:
Our fathers had not fix'd the punishment
Of such a crime, as on the old Roman tables
The sentence against parricide was left
In pure forgetfulness; they could not render
That penal, which had neither name nor thought
In their great bosoms; who would have foreseen
That nature could be fled to such a crime
As ours 'gainst stress, and princes 'gainst their realms?

Your sin hath made us make a law which will Become a precedent 'gainst such haughty traitors,
As would with treason mount to tyranny;
Not even contented with a sceptre, till
They can convert it to a two-edged sword!
Was not the place of Doge sufficient for ye?
What's nobler than the signory of Venice?

Doge. The signory of Venice! You betray'd me—

You—you, who sit there, traitors as ye are!
From my equality with you in birth,
And my superiority in action,

You drew me from my honorable toils

In distant lands—on food—in field—in cities—
You singled me out like a victim to Stand crown'd, but bound and helpless, at the altar
Where you alone could minister. I knew not—
I sought not—wish'd not—dream'd not the election,
Which reach'd me first at Rome, and I obey'd;
But found on my arrival, that, besides
The jealous vigilance which always led you
To mock and mar your sovereign's best intents,
You had, even in the interregnum of
My journey to the capital, curtail'd
And mutilated the few privileges
Yet left the duke: all this I bore, and would Have borne, until my very hearth was stain'd
By the pollution of your ribaldry,
And he, the ribald, whom I see amongst you—
Fit judge in such tribunal!—

Ben. (interrupting him). Michel Steno
Is here in virtue of his office, as
One of the Forty; "the Ten" having craved
A giunta of patricians from the senate
To aid our judgment in a trial arduous
And novel as the present: he was set
Free from the penalty pronounced upon him,
Because the Doge, who should protect the law,
Seeking to abrogate all law, can claim
No punishment of others by the statutes
Which he himself denies and violates!

Doge. His punishment! I rather see him there,
Where he now sits, to glut him with my death,
Than in the mockery of castigation,
Which your foul, outward, juggling show of justice
Decried as sentence! Base as was his crime,
'T was purty compared with your protection.

Ben. And can it be, that the great Doge of Venice,
With three parts of a century of years
And honors on his head, could thus allow
His fury, like an angry boy's, to master
All feeling, wisdom, faith, and fear, on such
A provocation as a young man's petulance?

Doge. A spark creates the flame—"t is the last drop
Which makes the cup run o'er, and mine was full
Already: you oppress'd the prince and people;
I would have freed both, and have fail'd in both:
The price of such success would have been glory,
Vengeance, and victory, and such a name
As would have made Venetian history
Rival to that of Greece and Syracuse
When they were freed, and flourish'd ages after,
And mine to Gelon and to Thrasylus:—
Falling, I know the penalty of failure
Is present infamy and death—the future
Will judge, when Venice is no more, or free;

Till then, the truth is in abeyance. Pause not;
I would have shown no mercy, and I seek none;
My life was staked upon a mighty hazard,
And being lost, take what I would have taken!
I would have stood alone amidst your tombs:
Now you may look round mine, and trample on it,
As you have done upon my heart while living.

Ben. You do confess then, and admit the justice
Of our tribunal?

Doge. I confess to have fail'd;
Fortune is female: from my youth her favors
Were not withheld, the fault was mine to hope
Her former smiles again at this late hour.

Ben. You do not then in aught arraign our equity?

Doge. Noble Venetians! stir me not with questions.

I am resigned to the worst; but in me still
Have something of the blood of brighter days,
And am not over-patient. Pray you, spare me
Further interrogation, which boots nothing,
Except to turn a trial to debate.

I shall but answer that which will offend you,
And please your enemies—a host already;

"T is true, these sullen walls should yield no echo:
But walls have ears—nay, more, they have tongues;
and if

There were no other way for truth to overwhelm them,
You who condemn me, you who fear and slay me,
Yet could not bear in silence to your graves
What you would hear from me of good or evil;
The secret were too mighty for your souls:
Then let it sleep in mine, unless you court
A danger which would double that you escape.
Such my defence would be, had I full scope
To make it famous; for true words are things,
And dying men's are things which long outlive,
And oftentimes avenge them; bury mine,
If ye would fain survive me: take this counsel,
And though too oft ye made me live in wrath,
Let me die calmly; you may grant me this;
I deny nothing—defend nothing—nothing
I ask of you, but silence for myself,
And sentence from the court!

Ben. This full admission
Spare us the harsh necessity of ordering
The torture to elicit the whole truth.

Doge. The torture! you have put me there already,
Daily since I was Doge; but if you will Add the corporeal rack, you may: these limbs
Will yield with age to crushing iron; but There's that within my heart shall strain your engines.

Enter an Officer.

Officer. Noble Venetians! Duchess Faliero
Requests admission to the giunta's presence.

Ben. Say, conscript fathers,* shall she be admitted?

One of the Giunta. She may have revelations of importance

Unto the state, to justify compliance
With her request.

Ben. Is this the general will?

All. It is.
Doge. Oh, admirable laws of Venice!
Which would admit the wife, in the full hope
That she might testify against the husband.
What glory to the chaste Venetian dames!
But such blasphemers 'gainst all honor, as
Sit here, do well to act in their vocation.
Now, villain Steno! if this woman fall,
I'll pardon thee thy lie, and thy escape,
And my own violent death, and thy vile life.

The Duchess enters.

Ben. Lady! this just tribunal has resolved,
Though the request be strange, to grant it, and Whatever be its purport, to accord
A patient hearing with the due respect
Which fits your ancestry, your rank, and virtues:
But you turn pale—no! there, look to the lady!
Place a chair instantly.

Ang. A moment's faintness—
'T is past; I pray you pardon me,—I sit not
In presence of my prince and of my husband,
While he is on his feet.

Ben. Your pleasure, lady?
Ang. Strange rumors, but most true, if all I hear
And see be sooth, have reach'd me, and I come
To know the worst, even at the worst; forgive
The abruptness of my entrance and my bearing.
Is it—I cannot speak—I cannot shape
The question—but you answer it are spoken,
With eyes averted, and with gloomy brows—
Oh God! this is the silence of the grave!

Ben. (after a pause). Spare us, and spare thyself
the repetition

* The Venetian senate took the name of the "conscript fathers."

Of our most awful, but innumerable
Duty to Heaven and man!

Ang. Yet speak; I cannot—
I cannot—no—yet now believe these things.
Is he condemn'd?

Ben.

Alas!

Ang. And was he guilty?

Ben. Lady! the natural distraction of Thy thoughts at such a moment makes the question
Merit forgiveness; else a doubt like this Against a just and paramount tribunal
Were deep offence. But question even the Doge,
And if he can deny the proofs, believe him
Guiltless as thy own bosom.

Ang.

Is it so?

My lord—my sovereign—my poor father's friend—
The mighty in the field, the sage in council;
Umay the words of this man—thou art silent!

Ben. He hath already own'd to us his guilt,
Nor, as thou seest, doth he deny it now.

Ang. Ay, but he must not die! Spare his few years,
Which grief and shame will soon cut down to days!
One day of baffled crime must not efface
Near sixteen lustres crowded with brave acts.

Ben. His doom must be fulfill'd without remission
Of time or penalty—it is a decree.

Ang. He hath been guilty, but there may be mercy.
Ben. Not in this case with justice.

Ang.

Alas! signor,

He who is only just is cruel; who
Upon the earth would live were all judged justly?

Ben. His punishment is safety to the state.

Ang. He was a subject, and hath saved the state;
He was your general, and hath saved the state;
He is your sovereign, and hath ruled the state.

One of the Council. He is a traitor, and betray'd
the state.

Ang. And, but for him, there now had been no state
To save or to destroy; and you, who sit
There to pronounce the death of your deliverer,
Had now been pronouncing at a Moslem ear,
Or digging in the Hunnish mines in fetters!

One of the Council. No, lady, there are others who would die

Rather than breathe in slavery!

Ang.

If there are so

Within these walls, show art not of the number:

The truly brave are generous to the fallen!—
Is there no hope?

Ben.

Lady, it cannot be.

Ang. (turning to the Doge). Then die, Faliero!
since it must be so:

But with the spirit of my father's friend.

Thou hast been guilty of a great offence,

Hath condemn'd by the hardness of these men.

I would have said to them—have pray'd to them—

Have begg'd as foolish mendicants for bread—

Have wept as they will cry unto their God

For mercy, and be answer'd as they answer,—

Had it been fitting for thy name or mine,

And if the cruelty in their cold eyes

Had not succoured the heartless wrath within.

Then, as a prince, address thee to thy doom!

Doge. I have lived too long not to know how to die!

Try using to these men were but the blessing

Of the lash in the butcher, or the cry

Of shame to the savage: I would not take

A life eternal, granted at the hands

Of wicked men whose monstrous villainies

Are to be the groaning nations!

Ang.

Doge,

A word from thee, and with this noble lady,

Whom thou hast grievously offended. Would

Some word, or sentence on my part,

Could lighten this memorable past!

Ang. Let us, as Christians let us

With full contrition

I crave, not pardon, but compassion from you,
And give, however weak, my prayers for both.

Ang. Sage Benintende, now chief judge of Venice,

I speak to thee in answer to yon signor.

Inform the ribald Steno, that his words

Ne'er weigh'd in mind with Loredano's daughter

Further than to create a moment's pity

For such as he is: would that others had

Despised him as I pity! I prefer

My honor to a thousand lives, could such

Be multiplied in mine, but would not have

A single life of others lost for that

Which nothing human can impugn—the sense

Of virtue, looking not to what is call'd

A good name for reward, but to itself.

To me the scorner's words were as the wind

Unto the rock: but as there are—alas!

Spirits more sensitive, on which such things

Light as the whirlwind on the waters; souls

To whom dishonor's shadow is a substance

More terrible than death, here and hereafter;

Men whose vice is to start at vice's scoffing,

And who, though proof against all blandishments

Of pleasure, and all pangs of pain, are feeble

When the proud name on which they pinnacled

Their hopes is breathed on, jealous as the eagle

Of her high seric: let wist we now

Behold, and feel, and suffer, be a lesson

To wretches how they tamper in their spleen

With beings of a higher order. Insects

Have made the lion mad as now; a shaft

Of the heel o'erthrew the bravest of the brave;

A wife's dishonor was the bang of Troy;

A wife's dishonor unking'd Rome for ever;

An injured husband brought the Gauls to Clusium,

And thence to Rome, which perish'd for a time;

An obscene gesture cost Calligula

His life, while Earth yet bore his cruelties;

A virgin's wrong made Spain a Moorish province;

And Steno's lie, couch'd in two worthless lines,

Hath decimated Venice, put in peril

A senate which hath stood eight hundred years,

Discrown'd a prince, cut off his crownless head,

And forged new fetters for a groaning people!

Let the poor wretch, like to the courtesan

Who fired Persepolis, be proud of this,

If it so please him—'t were a pride fit for him!

But let him not insult the last hours of Him, who, whatever he now is, was a hero,

By the intrusion of his very prayers:

Nothing of good can come from such a source,

Nor would we aught with him, nor now, nor ever:

We leave him to himself, that lowest depth

Of human baseness. Pardon is for men,

And not for reptiles—we have none for Steno,

And no resentment: things like him must sting,

And higher beings suffer; 't is the charter

Of life. The man who dies by the edict's sang

May have the crawler crush'd, but feels no anger:

'T was the worm's nature: and some men are worms

In soul, more than the living things of tombs.

Doge. (to Ben.). Signor! complete that which you doon your duty.

Ben. Before we can proceed upon that duty,

We would request the princess to withdraw;

'T will move her too much to be witness to it.

Ang. I know it will, and yet I must endure it,

For 't is a part of mine—I will not quit,

Except by force, my husband's side.—Proceed!

Nay, fear not either shriek, or sigh, or tear;

Though my heart burst, it shall be silent.—Speak!

I have that within which shall o'ermaster all.

Ben. Marino Faliero, Doge of Venice,

Count of Val di Marino, Senator,

And some time General of the Fleet and Army,

Noble Venetian, many times and oft

Intrusted by the state with high employments,

Even to the highest, listen to the sentence.
Convict by many witnesses and proofs,
And by thine own confession, of the guilt
Of treachery and treason, yet unheard of
Until this trial—the decree is death.
Thy goods are confiscate unto the state,
Thy name is razed from out her records, save
Upon a public day of thanksgiving
For this our most miraculous deliverance,
When thou art noted in our calendars
With earthquakes, pestilence, and foreign foes,
And the great enemy of man, as subject
Of grateful masses for Heaven's grace in snatching
Our lives and country from thy wickedness.
The place wherein as Doge thou shouldst be painted,
With thine illustrious predecessors, is
To be left vacant, with a death-black veil
Flung over these dim words engraved beneath,—
"This place is of Marino Faliero, Decapitated for his crimes."

Doge. "His crimes!"
But let it be so:—it will be in vain.
The veil which blackens o'er this blighted name,
And hides, or seems to hide, these lineaments,
Shall draw more gazers than the thousand portraits
Which glitter round it in their pictured trappings—
Your delegated slaves—the people's tyrants!
"Decapitated for his crimes!"—What crimes?
Were it not better to record the facts,
So that the contemplator might approve,
Or at the least learn whence the crimes arose?
When the beholder knows a Doge conspired,
Let him be told the cause—it is your history.

Ben. Time must reply to that; our sons will judge
Their fathers' judgment, which I now pronounce.
As Doge, clad in the ducal robes and cap,
Thou shalt be led hence to the Giants' Staircase,
Where thou and all our princes are invested;
And there, the ducal crown being first resumed
Upon the spot where it was first assumed,
Thy head shall be struck off; and Heaven have mercy
Upon thy soul!

Doge. Is this the giunta's sentence?

Ben. It is.

Doge. I can endure it.—And the time?

Ben. Must be immediate.—Make thy peace with God:

Within an hour thou must be in his presence.
Doge. I am already; and my blood will rise
To Heaven before the souls of those who shed it.—
Are all my lands confiscated?

Ben. They are;
And goods, and jewels, and all kind of treasure,
Except two thousand ducats—these dispose of.

Doge. That's harsh.—I would have fain reserved the lands

Near to Treviso, which I hold by investment
From Laurence the Count-bishop of Ceneda,
In fief perpetual to myself and heirs,
To portion them (leaving my city spoil,
My palace and my treasures, to your forfeit)
Between my consort and my kinsmen.

Ben. These
Lie under the state's ban; their chief, thy nephew,
In peril of his own life; but the council
Postpones his trial for the present. If Thou wilt a state unto thy widow'd princess,
Fear not, for we will do her justice.

Ang. Signors,
I share not in your spoil! From henceforth, know
I am devoted unto God alone,
And take my refuge in the cloister.

Doge. Come!
The hour may be a hard one, but 't will end.
Have I aught else to undergo save death?

Ben. You have nought to do, except confess and die.

The priest is robed, the scimitar is bare,
And both await without.—But, above all,
Think not to speak unto the people; they
Are now by thousands swarming at the gates,
But these are closed: the Ten, the Avogadori,
The giunta, and the chief men of the Forty,
Alone will be beholders of thy doom,
And they are ready to attend the Doge.

Doge. The Doge!

Ben. Yes, Doge, thou hast lived and thou shalt
die

A sovereign; till the moment which precedes
The separation of that head and trunk.
That ducal crown and head shall be united.
Thou hast forgot thy dignity in deigning
To plot with petty traitors; not so we,
Who in the very punishment acknowledge
The prince. Thy vile accomplices have died
The dog's death, and the wolf's; but thou shalt fall
As falls the lion by the hunters' girt
By those who feel a proud compassion for thee,
And mourn even the inevitable death
Provoked by thy wild wrath, and regal fierceness.
Now we remit thee to thy preparation:
Let it be brief, and we ourselves will be Thy guides unto the place where first we were United to thee as thy subjects, and
Thy senate; and must now be parted from thee
As such for ever, on the self-same spot.—
Guards! form the Doge's escort to his chamber
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Doge's Apartment.

The Doge as Prisoner, and the Duchess attending
him.

Doge. Now, that the priest is gone, 'twere useless
all

To linger out the miserable minutes;
But one pang more, the pang of parting from thee,
And I will leave the few last grains of sand
Which yet remain of the accorded hour,
Still falling—I have done with Time.

Alas!
And I have been the cause, the unconscious cause;
And for this funeral marriage, this black union,
Which thou, compliant with my father's wish,
Didst promise at his death, thou hast seal'd thine own.

Doge. Not so: there was that in my spirit ever
Which shaped out for itself some great reverse;
The marvel is, it came not until now—
And yet it was foretold me.

Ang. How foretold you?
Doge. Long years ago—so long, they are a doubt
In memory, and yet they live in annals:
When I was in my youth, and served the senate
And signory as podesta and captain
Of the town of Treviso, on a day
Of festival, the sluggish bishop who Convey'd the Host aroused my rash young anger
By strange delay, and arrogant reply
To my reproof: I raised my hand and smote him,
Until he reel'd beneath his holy burthen;
And as he rose from earth again, he raised
His tremulous hands in pious wrath towards heaven.
Thence pointing to the Host, which had fallen from
him,

He turn'd to me, and said, "The hour will come
When he thou hast o'erthrown shall overthrow thee:
The glory shall depart from out thy house,
The wisdom shall be shaken from thy soul,
And in thy best maturity of mind
A madness of the heart shall seize upon thee;
Passion shall tear thee when all passions cease
In other men, or mellow into virtues;
And majesty, which decks all other heads,

Shall crown to leave thee headless; honors shall
But prove to thee the heralds of destruction,
And heavy hairs of shame, and both of death,
But not such death as fits an aged man."

Thus saying, he pass'd on.—That hour is come.

Ang. And with this warning couldst thou not have striven

To avert the fatal moment, and atone,
By penitence, for that which thou hadst done?

Doge. I own the words went to my heart, so much
That I remember'd them amid the mass
Of life, as if they form'd a spectral voice,
Which shook me in a supernatural dream;
And I repented; but 't was not for me
To pull in resolution: what must be
I could not change, and would not fear.—Nay more,
Thou canst not have forgot, what all remember,
That on my day of landing here as Doge,
On my return from Rome, a mist of such Unwonted density went on before
The Bucentaur, like the columnar cloud
Which usher'd Israel out of Egypt, till
The pilot was misled, and disembark'd us
Between the pillars of Saint Mark's, where 't is
The custom of the state to put to death
Its criminals, instead of touching at
The Lira della Faglia, as the wont is.—
So that all Venice shudder'd at the omen.

Ang. Ah! little boots it now to recollect
Such things.

Doge. And yet I find a comfort in
The thought that these things are the work of Fate;
For I would rather yield to gods than men,
Or cling to any creed of destiny.
Better than deem these mortals, most of whom
I knew to be as worthless as the dust,
And weak as worthless, more than instruments
Of an overruling power: they in themselves
Were all incapable—they could not be Victors of him who oft had conquer'd for them!

Ang. Employ the minutes left in aspirations
Of a more healing nature, and in peace
Even with these wretches take thy flight to heaven.

Doge. I am at peace: the peace of certainty
That a sure hour will come, when their sons' sons,
And this proud city, and these azure waters,
And all which makes them eminent and bright,
Shall be a desolation and a curse,
A blighting and a scoff unto the nations,
A Carthage, and a Tyre, an ocean Babel!

Ang. Speak not thus now: the surge of passion
still

Sways o'er thee to the last: thou dost deceive
Thyself, and canst not injure them—be calmer.

Doge. I stand within eternity, and see
Into eternity, and I behold—

As palpable as I see thy sweet face
For the last time—the days which I denounce
Unto all time against these wave-girl walls,
And they who are indwellers.

Guard (coming forward). Doge of Venice,
The King is in attendance on your highness.

Doge. Thus farewell, Angiolina!—one embrace—
Fare thee the old man who hath been to thee
As a father's friend—love my memory—
I shall not see thee so much for me still living,
But I shall see thee more kindly now,
When the fruits of these long years,
Wealth, and power, and fame, and name,
Have some flowers to bloom

Even o'er the grave, I have nothing left, not even
A little love, or friendship, or esteem,
No, not enough to extract an epitaph
From ostentatious kinsmen: in one hour
I have uprooted all my former life,
And outlived everything, except thy heart.
The pure, the good, the gentle, which will oft
With unimpair'd but not a clamorous grief Still keep—Thou turn'st so pale!—Alas! she faints.

She has no breath, no pulse!—Guards! lend your aid—

I cannot leave her thus, and yet 't is better,
Since every lifeless moment spares a pang.
When she shakes off this temporary death,
I shall be with the Eternal.—Call her women—
One look!—how cold her hand!—as cold as mine
Shall be ere she recovers.—Gently tend her,
And take my last thanks—I am ready now.

[The Attendants of Angiolina enter, and surround their mistress, who has fainted.—
Exeunt the Doge, Guards, etc., etc.]

SCENE III.—The Court of the Ducal Palace; the outer gates are shut against the people.

The Doge enters in his ducal robes, in procession with the Council of Ten and other Patricians, attended by the Guards, till they arrive at the top of the "Ghosts' Staircase" (where the Doges took the oaths); the Executioner is stationed there with his sword.—On arriving, a Chief of the Ten takes off the ducal cap from the Doge's head.

Doge. So now the Doge is nothing, and at last
I am again Marino Faliero:

'T is well to be so, though but for a moment.
Here was I crown'd, and here, bear witness, Heaven!
With how much more contentment I resign
That shining mockery, the ducal bauble,
Than I received the fatal ornament.

One of the Ten. Thou tremblest, Faliero!

Doge. 'T is with age, then.*

Ben. Faliero! hast thou aught further to commend,
Compatible with justice, to the senate?

Doge. I would commend my nephew to their mercy,
My consort to their justice; for methinks
My death, and such a death, might settle all
Between the state and me.

Ben. They shall be cared for;
Even notwithstanding thine unheard-of crime.

Doge. Unheard-of! ay, there's not a history
But shows a thousand crown'd conspirators
Against the people; but to set them free
One sovereign only died, and one is dying.

Ben. And who were they who fell in such a cause?

Doge. The King of Sparta, and the Doge of Venice—

Agis and Faliero!

Ben. Hast thou more
To utter or to do?

Doge. May I speak?

Ben. Thou mayst;

But recollect the people are without,
Beyond the compass of the human voice.

Doge. I speak to Time and to Eternity,
Of which I grow a portion, not to man.

Ye elements! in which to be resolved
I hasten, let my voice be as a spirit
Upon you! Ye blue waves! which bore my banner, on a different occasion by Benault, and other coincidences arising from the subject. I need hardly remind the gentlest reader, that such coincidences must be accidental, from the very facility of their detection by reference to so popular a play on the stage and in the closet as Otway's Chief-d'œuvre.

Ye winds! which flutter'd o'er as if you loved it,
 And fill'd my swelling sails as they were wafted
 To many a triumph! Thou, my native earth,
 Which I have bled for, and thou, foreign earth,
 Which drank this willing blood from many a wound!
 Ye stones, in which my gore will not sink, but Reek up to heaven! Ye skies, which will receive it!
 Thou sun! which shinest on these things, and Thou!
 Who kindest and who quenchest runs!—Attest!
 I am not innocent—but are these guiltless?
 I perish, but not unavenged: far ages
 Float up from the bytes of time in be,
 And show these eyes, before they close, the doom
 Of this proud city, and I leave my curse
 On her and hers for ever!—Yea, the hours
 Are idly engendering of the day,
 When she, who built 'gainst Attila a bulwark,
 Shall yield, and bloodlessly and basely yield,
 Unto a bastard Attila, without Shedding so much blood in her last defence
 As these old veins, old drain'd in shielding her,
 Shall pour in sacrifice.—She shall be bought
 And sold, and be an appanage to those Who shall despise her!—She shall stoop to be
 A province for an empire, potty town
 In lieu of capital, with slaves for senators,
 Beggars for nobles, panders for a people!
 Then when the Hebrew's in thy palaces,
 The Hun in thy high places, and the Greek Walks o'er thy mart, and smiles on it for his:
 When thy patricians beg their bitter bread
 In narrow streets, and in their shameful need
 Make their nobility a plea for pity;
 Then, when the few who still retain a wreck
 Of their great fathers' heritage shall fawn
 Round a barbarian Vice of Kings' Vicegerent,
 Even in the palace where they sway'd as sovereigns,
 Even in the palace where they slew their sovereign,
 Proud of some name they have disgraced, or sprung
 From an adulteress boastful of her guilt,
 With some large gendolier or foreign soldier,
 Shall bear about their bastardy in triumph
 To the third spurious generation:—when Thy sons are in the lowest scale of being,
 Slaves turn'd o'er to the vanquish'd by the victors,
 Despised by cowards for greater cowardice,
 And scorn'd even by the vicious for such vices
 As in the monstrous grasp of their conception
 Defy all codes to image or to name them:
 Then, when of Cyprus, now thy subject kingdom,
 All thine inheritance shall be her shame
 Entail'd on thy less virtuous daughters, grown
 A wider proverb for worse prostitution:—
 When all the ills of conquer'd states shall cling thee,

Vice without splendor, sin without redress
 Even from the gloss of love to smooth it o'er,
 But in its stead, coarse lusts of habitude,
 Prurient yet passionless, cold studied lewdness,
 Depraving nature's frailty to an art:—
 When these and more are heavy on thee, when Smiles without mirth, and pastimes without pleasure.

Youth without honor, age without respect,
 Meanness and weakness, and a sense of woe
 'Gainst which thou wilt not strive, and dar'st not murmur.
 Have made thee last and worst of peopled deserts,
 Then, in the last gasp of thine agony,
 Amidst thy many murders, think of mine!
 Thou den of drunkards with the blood of princes!
 Gehenna of the waters! thou see Sodom!
 Thus I devote thee to the infernal gods!
 Thee and thy serpent seed!

[Here the Doge turns and addresses the Executioner.

Slave, do thine office!
 Strike as I struck the foe! Strike as I would Have struck those tyrants! Strike deep as my curse!
 Strike—and but once!

[The Doge throws himself upon his knees, and as the Executioner raises his sword the scene closes.

SCENE IV.—The Piazza and Piazzetta of Saint Mark's.—The people in crowds gathered round the grated gates of the Ducal Palace, which are shut.

First Citizen. I have gain'd the gate, and can discern the Ten,
 Robed in their gowns of state, ranged round the Doge.

Second Citizen. I cannot reach thee with mine utmost effort.

How is it? let us hear at least, since sight
 In thus prohibited unto the people,
 Except the occupiers of those bars.

First Citizen. One has approach'd the Doge, and now they strip

The ducal bonnet from his head—and now
 He raises his keen eyes to heaven: I see Them glitter, and his lips move—Hush! hush!—no,
 'T was but a murmur—Curse upon the distance!
 His words are inarticulate, but the voice
 Swells up like mutter'd thunder; would we could
 But gather a sole sentence!

Second Citizen. Hush! we perhaps may catch the sound.

First Citizen. 'T is vain,
 I cannot hear him.—How his heavy hair

* Should the dramatic picture seem harsh, let the reader look to the historical, of the period prophesied, or rather of the few years preceding that period. Voltaire calculated that "notre belle merite Meretricide" at 12,000 of regulars, without including volunteers and local militia, on what authority I know not; but it is, perhaps, the only part of the population not decreased. Venice once contained two hundred thousand inhabitants: there are now about ninety thousand; and ~~whereas~~ few individuals can conceive, and none could describe, the actual state into which the more than infernal tyranny of Austria has plunged this unhappy city.

† The chief palaces on the Brenta now belong to the Jews; who in the earlier times of the republic were only allowed to inhabit Mestre, and not to enter the city of Venice. The whole commerce is in the hands of the Jews and Greeks, and the Huns form the garrison.

‡ If the Doge's prophecy seem remarkable, look to the following, made by Alimanni two hundred and seventy years ago:—"There is one very singular prophecy concerning Venice: 'If thou dost not change,' it says to that proud republic, 'thy liberty, which is already on the wing, will not return a century more than the thousandth year.' If we carry back the epoch of Venetian freedom to the establishment of the government under which the republic flourished, we shall find that the date of the election of the first Doge is 697: and if we did add one century to a thousand, that is, eleven hundred years, we shall find the same of the prediction to be literally this: 'Thy liberty will not last till 1697.' Recollect that Venice ceased to be free in the year 1797, the fifth year of the French republic; and you will perceive, that there never was prediction more pointed, or more exactly followed by the event.

§ Of the first fifty dogs, few abdicated—but were banished with their eyes put out—few were committed—and also deposed: so that nineteen out of fifty left the throne by violence, besides two who fell in battle: ~~the same~~ ^{the same} being previous to the reign of Marino Faliero. One of his more immediate predecessors, Andrea Dandolo, died of venereal disease. Marino Faliero himself perished as related. ~~Amongst his successors, Francesco, after seeing his son repeatedly murdered and banished, was deposed, and died of breaking a blood-vessel, on hearing the bell of Saint Mark's toll for the election of his successor. Morosini was impeached for the first of Candia: but this was previous to his dukedom, during which he conquered the Morza, and was styled the Redeemer of the Venetian Republic.~~ Faliero might truly say,

"Thou den of drunkards with the blood of princes!"

Streams on the wind like foam upon the wave!
Now—now—he kneels—and now they form a circle
Round him, and all is hidden—but I see
The lifted sword in air—Ah! hark! it falls!

[The people murmur.

Third Off. Then they have murder'd him who would have freed us.

Fourth Off. He was a kind man to the commons
ever.

Fifth Off. Wily they did to keep their portals bar'd.

Would we had known the work they were preparing
As we were summon'd here—we would have brought

Weapons, and saved them!

Sixth Off.

Are you sure he's dead?

First Off. I saw the sword fall—Lo! what have we here?

*Enter on the Balcony of the Palace which fronts
Saint Mark's Place a Chief of the Ten, with a bloody sword. He waves it thrice before the people, and exclaims,*

"Justice hath dealt upon the mighty Traitor!"

[The gates are opened; the populace rush in towards the "Giants' Staircase," where the execution has taken place. The foremost of them exclaims to those behind,

The gory head rolls down the Giants' Steps!

[The curtain falls.

HEAVEN AND EARTH:

A Mystery.

FOUNDED ON THE FOLLOWING PARABLE IN GENESIS, CHAP. VI.

"And it came to pass . . . that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."

"And woman waiting for her demon lover."—COLLIERIDGE.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

ACTRESS.

Samson.
Anazel.
Japheth, the Archangel.

MAN.

Moah and his Son.
Irad.
Japhet.

WOMEN.

Anah.
Abolihannah.

Chorus of Spirits of the Earth.—Chorus of Moriah.

PART I.

SCENE I.—A woody and mountainous district near Mount Ararat.—Time, Midnight.

Enter Anah and Abolihannah.

Anah. Our father sleeps: it is the hour when they
Who love us are accustomed to descend
Through the deep clouds o'er rocky Ararat:—
How my heart beats!

Let us proceed upon

Our mission.

But the stars are hidden.

How do I, but not with fear
Of those that delay.

My sister, though
—oh, too much!
What art thou going to say? my heart grows impious.
Where is there is the impulse of loving

But, Abolihannah,
I have not seen since his angel loved me:

This cannot be of good; and though I know not
That I do wrong, I feel a thousand fears
Which are not ominous of right.

Who?

Then wed thee
Unto some son of clay, and toil and spin!
There's Japhet loves thee well, hath loved thee long:
Marry, and bring forth dust!

Anah.

I should have loved

Anazel not less were he mortal; yet
I am glad he is not. I cannot outlive him.
And when I think that his immortal wings
Will one day hover o'er the sepulchre
Of the poor child of clay which so adored him,
As he adores the Highest, death becomes
Less terrible; but yet I pity him:
His grief will be of ages, or at least
Mine would be such for him, were I the seraph,
And he the perishable.

Who?

Rather say,

That he will single forth some other daughter
Of earth, and love her as he once loved Anah.

"Heaven and Earth" was written at Ravenna, in October, 1855, by Mr. Murray, in the following month.
It is a lyrical drama, entitled "A Mystery," and has been written by Sternhold and St. John, and perhaps for melody.
It is written in Greek, then I intended to write it in Latin, but called when I have the opportunity of the action, which may either close there without impropriety, or be continued in a way that I have in view. I wish the first part to be published before the second; because, if it isn't success, it is better to stop there than to go on in a fruitless experiment.

Though without delay revised by Mr. Gifford, and printed, this "First Part" was not published till 1856, when it appeared in the second number of the "Liberal." The "Mystery" was never completed.

Anah. And if it should be so, and she loved him,
Better thus than that he should weep for me.

Aho. If I thought thus of Samiassa's love,
All seraph as he is, I'd spurn him from me.
But to our invocation!—"Tis the hour.

Anah. Seraph!

From thy sphere!

Whatever star contain thy glory;

In the eternal depths of heaven

Albeit thou watchest with "the seven" *
Though through space infinite and hoary

Before thy bright wings worlds be driven,
Yet hear!

Oh! think of her who holds thee dear!

And though she nothing is to thee,

Yet think that thou art all to her.

Thou canst not tell,—and never be Such pangs decreed to aught save me,—

The bitterness of tears.

Eternity is in thine years,

Unborn, undying beauty in thine eyes;

With me thou canst not sympathize,
Except in love, and there thou must Acknowledge that more loving dust

Ne'er went beneath the skies.

Thou walk'st thy many worlds, thou seest
The face of him who made thee great,

As he hath made me of the least
Of those cast out from Eden's gate:

Yet, Seraph dear!

Oh hear!

For thou hast loved me, and I would not die
Until I know what I must die in knowing,

That thou forget'st in thine eternity
Her whose heart death could not keep from o'erflowing

For thee, immortal essence as thou art!

Great is their love who love in sin and fear;

And such, I feel, are waging in my heart
A war unworthy: to an Adamite

Forgive, my Seraph! that such thoughts appear,
For sorrow is our element;

Delight

An Eden kept afar from sight,

Though sometimes with our visions blent.
The hour is near

Which tells me we are not abandon'd quite.—
Appear! Appear!

Seraph!

My own Azazel! be but here,

And leave the stars to their own light.
Aho. Samiassa!

Wheresoe'er

Thou rulest in the upper air—
Or warring with the spirits who may dare

Dispute with him
Who made all empires, empire; or recalling

Some wandering star, which shoots through the abyss,

Whose tenants dying, while their world is falling,

Share the dim destiny of clay in this;

Or joining with the inferior cherubim,
Thou deignest to partake their hymn—

Samiassa!

I call thee, I await thee, and I love thee.
Many may worship thee, that will I not:

If that thy spirit down to mine may move thee,
Descend and share my lot!

Though I be form'd of clay,
And thou of beams

More bright than those of day
On Eden's streams,

Thine immortality cannot repay

* The archangels, said to be seven in number, and to occupy the eighth rank in the celestial hierarchy.

With love more warm than mine

My love. There is a ray

In me, which, though forbidden yet to shine,
I feel was lighted at thy God's and thine.

It may be hidden long: death and decay
Our mother Eve bequeath'd us—but my heart

Defies it: though this life must pass away,
Is that a cause for thee and me to part?

Thou art immortal—so am I: I feel—
I feel my immortality o'er sweep

All pains, all tears, all time, all fears, and peal,
Like the eternal thunders of the deep,

Into my ears this truth—"Thou liv'st for ever!"
But if it be in joy

I know not, nor would know;

That secret rests with the Almighty giver
Who folds in clouds the founts of bliss and woe.

But thee and me he never can destroy;
Change us he may, but not o'erwhelm; we are

Of as eternal essence, and must war
With him if he will war with us: with thee

I can share all things, even immortal sorrow;
For thou hast ventured to share life with me,

And shall I shrink from thine eternity?
No! though the serpent's sting should pierce me thorough,

And thou thyself wert like the serpent, coil

Around me still! and I will smile,
And curse thee not; but hold

Thee in as warm a fold
As—but descend, and prove

A mortal's love

For an immortal. If the skies contain
More joy than thou canst give and take, remain!

Anah. Sister! sister! I view them winging
Their bright way through the parted night.

Aho. The clouds from off their pinions flinging,
As though they bore to-morrow's light.

Anah. But if our father see the sight!
Aho. He would but deem it was the moon

Rising unto some sorcerer's tune
An hour too soon.

Anah. They come! As comes!—Azazel!

Aho.

Haste

To meet them! Oh! for wings to bear
My spirit, while they hover there,

To Samiassa's breast!

Anah. Lo! they have kindled all the west,
Like a returning sunset;—lo!

On Ararat's late secret crest
A mild and many-color'd bow,

The remnant of their flashing path,
Now shines! and now, behold! it hath

Return'd to night, as rippling foam,
Which the leviathan hath lash'd

From his unfathomable home,
When sporting on the face of the calm deep,

Subsides soon after he again hath dash'd
Down, down, to where the ocean's fountains sleep.

Aho. They have touch'd earth! Samiassa!

Anah.

My Azazel!
[Receant.

SCENE II.

Enter Irad and Japhet.

Irak. Despond not: wherefore wilt thou wander
thus

To add thy silence to the silent night,
And lift thy tearful eye unto the stars?

They cannot aid thee.

Japh.

But they soothe me—now

Perhaps she looks upon them as I look.
Methinks a being that is beautiful

Becometh more so as it looks on beauty,
The eternal beauty of undying things.

Oh, Anah!

Irak. But she loves thee not.

Japh. Alas!

Irak. And proud Abethamah spurs me also.

Japh. I feel for thee too.

Irak. Let her keep her pride,

Mine hath enabled me to bear her scorn:

It may be, time too will avenge it.

Japh.

Find joy in such a thought?

Irak.

Nor joy nor sorrow.

I loved her well; I would have loved her better,

Had love been met with love; as 'tis, I leave her

To brighter destinies, if so she deems them.

Japh. What destinies?

Irak.

I have some cause to think

She loves another.

Japh.

Anah!

Irak.

No; her sister.

Japh.

What other?

Irak.

That I know not; but her air,

Not her words, tells me she loves another.

Japh.

Ay, but not Anah: she but loves her God.

Irak.

What'er she loveth, so she loves thee not,

What can it profit thee?

Japh.

True, nothing; but

I love.

Irak.

And so do I.

Japh.

And now thou lov'st not,

Or think'st thou lov'st not, art thou happier?

Irak.

Yes.

Japh.

I pity thee.

Irak.

Me! why?

Japh.

For being happy,

Deprived of that which makes my misery.

Irak. I take thy taunt as part of thy distemper,

And would not feel as thou dost for more shekels

Than all our father's herds would bring, if weigh'd

Against the metal of the sons of Cain—

The yellow dust they try to barter with us,

As if such useless and discolored trash,

The refuse of the earth, could be received

For milk, and wool, and flesh, and fruits, and all

Our flocks and wilderness afford.—Go, Japhet,

Sigh to the stars, as wolves howl to the moon—

I wait back to my rest.

Japh.

And so would I,

If I could rest.

Irak.

Thou wilt not to our tents then?

Japh. No, Irak; I will to the cavern, whose

Mouth they say opens from the internal world

To let the tender spirits of the earth

Perch when they walk its surface.

Irak.

Wherefore so?

What wouldst thou then?

Japh.

Soothe further my sad spirit

With gloom as sad: it is a hopeless spot,

And I am hopeless.

Irak.

But 'tis dangerous;

Strange sounds and sights have peopled it with

Strange beings.

Shouldst thou go with thee.

Japh.

Irak, no; believe me

I feel no evil thought, and fear no evil.

Irak.

But evil things will be thy foe the more

As not being of them: turn thy steps aside,

Or let mine be with thine.

Japh.

No, neither, Irak;

I have pressed alone.

Irak.

Then peace be with thee!

Japh.

(Exit Irak.)

Peace! I have sought it where it

Is to be found.

Love, too, which perhaps deserved it;

Love, too, heaviness of heart,

Love, too, restless days,

Love, too, to sweet sleep,

Peace! what peace? the

Of desolation, and the stillness of

The untrodden forest, only broken by

The sweeping tempest through its groaning boughs;

Such is the stillness of the fatal state

Of my mind evermore. The earth's grown wicked,

And many signs and portents have proclaim'd

A change at hand, and an overwhelming doom

To perishable beings. Oh, my Anah!

When the dread hour denounced shall open wide

The fountains of the deep, how mightest thou

Have lain within this bosom, folded from

The elements; this bosom, which in vain

Hath beat for thee, and then will beat more vainly,

While thine—Oh, God! at least remit to her

Thy wrath! for she is pure amidst the falling

As a star in the clouds, which cannot quench,

Although they obscure it for an hour. My Anah!

How would I have adored thee, but thou wouldst

not;

And still would I redeem thee—see thee live

When ocean is earth's grave, and, unopposed

By rock or shallow, the leviathan,

Lord of the shoreless sea and watery world,

Shall wonder at his boundlessness of realm.

[Exit Japhet.]

Enter Noah and Shem.

Noah. Where is thy brother Japhet?

Shem.

He went forth,

According to his wont, to meet with Irak,

He said; but, as I fear, to bend his steps

Towards Anah's tents, round which he hovers nightly.

Like a dove round and round its pillaged nest;

Or else he walks the wild up to the cavern

Which opens to the heart of Ararat.

Noah. What doth he there? It is an evil spot

Upon an earth all evil; for things worse

Than even wicked men resort there: he Still loves this daughter of a fated race,

Although he could not wed her if she loved him,

And that she doth not. Oh, the unhappy hearts

Of men! that one of my blood, knowing well

The destiny and evil of these days,

And that the hour approacheth, should indulge

In such forbidden yearnings! Lead the way;

He must be sought for!

Shem.

Go not forward, father;

I will seek Japhet.

Noah.

Do not fear for me:

All evil things are powerless on the man

Selected by Jehovah.—Let us on.

Shem.

To the tents of the father of the sisters?

Noah. No; to the cavern of the Caucasus.

[Exit Noah and Shem.]

SCENE III.—The Mountains.—A Cavern, and the Rocks of Caucasus.

Japh. (solus). Ye wilds, that look eternal; and thou cave,

Which seem'th unfathomable; and ye mountains,

So varied and so terrible in beauty;

Here, in your rugged majesty of rocks

And toppling trees that twine their roots with stone

In perpendicular places, where the foot

Of man would tremble, could be reach them—yes,

Ye look eternal! Yet, in a few days,

Perhaps even hours, ye will be changed, rent, hurld

Before the mass of waters; and yon cave,

Which seems to lead into a lower world,

Shall have its depth search'd by the sweeping wave.

And dolphins gambol in the lion's den!

And man!—Oh, men! my fellow beings! Who Shall weep above your universal grave.

Save I? Who shall be left to weep? My kinsmen.

Alas! what am I better than ye are

That I must live beyond ye? Where shall be
The pleasant places where I thought of Anah
While I had hope? or the more savage haunts,
Scarce less beloved, where I despair'd for her?
And can it be!—Shall you exulting peak,
Whose glittering top is like a distant star,
Lie low beneath the boiling of the deep?
No more to have the morning sun break forth,
And scatter back the mists in floating folds
From its tremendous brow? no more to have Day's broad orb drop behind its head at even,
Leaving it with a crown of many hues?
No more to be the beacon of the world,
For angels to alight on, as the spot
Nearest the stars? And can those words "no more"
Be meant for thee, for all things, save for us,
And the predestined creeping things reserved
By my sire to Jehovah's bidding? May
He preserve them, and I not have the power
To snatch the loveliest of earth's daughters from
A doom which even some serpent, with his mate,
Shall 'scape to save his kind to be prolong'd,
To hiss and sting through some emerging world,
Reeking and dank from out the slime, whose ooze Shall slumber o'er the wreck of this, until
The salt morass subside into a sphere
Beneath the sun, and be the monument,
The sole and undistinguish'd sepulchre,
Of yet quick myriads of all life? How much
Breath will be still'd at once! All-beauteous world!
So young, so mark'd out for destruction, I
By a cleft heart look on thee day by day,
And night by night, thy number'd days and nights:
I cannot save thee, cannot save even her
Whose love had made me love thee more; but as A portion of thy dust, I cannot think
Upon thy coming doom without a feeling
Such as—Oh God! and canst thou—(He pauses.
A rushing sound from the cavern is heard, and shouts of laughter—afterwards a Spirit passes.

Japh. In the name
Of the Most High, what art thou?
Spirit (laughs). Ha! ha! ha!
Japh. By all that earth holds holiest, speak!
Spirit (laughs). Ha! ha! ha!
Japh. By the approaching deluge! by the earth
Which will be strangled by the ocean! by
The deep which will lay open all her fountains!
The heaven which will convert her clouds to seas,
And the Omnipotent who makes and crushes!
Thou unknown, terrible, and indistinct,
Yet awful Thing of Shadows, speak to me!
Why dost thou laugh that horrid laugh?

Spirit. Why weep'st thou?
Japh. For earth and all her children.

Spirit. Ha! ha! ha! (Spirit vanishes.
Japh. How the fiend mocks the tortures of a world,

The coming desolation of an orb,
On which the sun shall rise and warm no life!
How the earth sleeps! and all that in it is Sleep too upon the very eve of death!
Why should they wake to meet it? What are here,
Which look like death in life, and speak like
things

Born ere this dying world? They come like clouds!
(Various Spirits pass from the cavern.

Spirit. Rejoice!
The abhorred race
Which could not keep in Eden their high place,
But listen'd to the voice
Of knowledge without power,
Are nigh the hour
Of death!

Not slow, not single, not by sword, nor sorrow,
Nor years, nor heart-break, nor time's sapping motion,

Shall they drop off. Behold their last to-morrow!
Earth shall be ocean!
And no breath,
Save of the winds, be on the unbounded wave!
Angels shall tire their wings, but find no spot:
Not even a rock from out the liquid grave
Shall lift its point to save,
Or show the place where strong Despair hath died,
After long looking o'er the ocean wide
For the expected ebb which cometh not:
All shall be void,
Destroy'd!

Another element shall be the lord
Of life, and the abhor'd
Children of dust be quench'd; and of each hue
Of earth nought left but the unbroken blue;
And of the variegated mountain
Shall nought remain
Unchanged, or of the level plain;
Cedar and pine shall lift their tops in vain:
All merged within the universal fountain,
Man, earth, and fire, shall die,
And sea and sky

Look vast and lifeless in the eternal eye.
Upon the foam
Who shall erect a home?
Japh. (coming forward). My sire!
Earth's seed shall not expire;
Only the evil shall be put away
From day.
Avaunt! ye exulting demons of the waste!
Who bowl your hideous joy
When God destroys whom you dare not destroy;
Hence! hence!
Back to your inner caves!
Until the waves

Shall search you in your secret place,
And drive your sullen race
Forth, to be roll'd upon the tossing winds,
In restless wretchedness along all space!
Spirit. Son of the saved!
When thou and thine have braved
The wide and warring element;
When the great barrier of the deep is rent,
Shall thou and thine be good or happy?—No!
Thy new world and new race shall be of woe—
Less goodly in their aspect, in their years
Less than the glorious giants, who
Yet walk the world in pride,
The Sons of Heaven by many a mortal bride.

Thine shall be nothing of the past, save tears.
And art thou not ashamed
Thus to survive,
And eat, and drink, and wife?
With a base heart so far subdued and tamed,
As even to hear this wide destruction named,
Without such grief and courage, as should rather
Bid thee await the world-dissolving wave,
Than seek a shelter with thy favor'd father,
And build thy city o'er the drown'd earth's grave?

Who would outlive their kind,
Except the base and blind?
Mine

Hateth thine
As of a different order in the sphere,
But not our own.
There is not one who hath not left a throne
Vacant in heavens to dwell in darkness here,
Rather than see his mates endure alone.
Go, wretch! and give
A life like thine to other wretches—live!
And when the annihilating waters roar
Above what they have done,
Envy the giant patriarchs then no more,
And scorn thy sire as the surviving one!
Thyself for being his son!

Chorus of Spirits issuing from the cavern.

Rejoice!

No more the human voice
Shall vex our joys in middle air
With prayer;

No more

Shall they adore;

And we, who ne'er for ages have adored
The prayer-exacting Lord,
To whom the omission of a sacrifice
Is vice;

We, we shall view the deep's salt sources pour'd
Until one element shall do the work
Of all in chaos; until they,
The creatures proud of their poor clay,
Shall perish, and their bleached bones shall lurk
In caves, in dens, in clefts of mountains, where
The deep shall follow to their latest lair;
Where even the brutes, in their despair,
Shall come to prey on man and on each other,
And the striped tiger shall lie down to die
Beside the lamb, as though he were his brother;
Till all things shall be as they were,
Semi and uncreated, save the sky:

While a brief truce

Is made with Death, who shall forbear
The little remnant of the past creation,
To generate new nations for his use;
The remnant, scathing o'er the undulation
Of the subduing deluge, from its alms,
When the hot sun hath baked the reeking soil
Into a world, shall give again to Time
New bads—years—diseases—sorrow—crime—
With all companionship of hate and toll,

Until—

Japh. (interrupting them). The eternal will Shall design to expound this dream
Of good and evil; and redeem
Us to himself all times, all things;
And, gather'd under his almighty wings,
Abolish hell!

And to the expanded Earth

Restore the beauty of her birth,

Her Eden in an endless paradise,

Where man no more can fall as once he fell,

And even the very demons shall do well!

Spirits. And when shall take effect this wondrous spell?

Japh. When the Redeemer cometh; first in pain,
And then in glory.

Spirits. Mountains still struggle in the mortal chain.

THE earth wax hoary;

We with ourselves, and hell, and heaven, in vain,
Until the clouds look gory

With the blood reeking from each battle plain;
New times, new crimes, new arts, new men; but Still the old tann, old crimes, and oldest ill,

Shall be endured your race in different forms;

But the same moral storms
Shall overwrap the future, as the waves
In a few hours the glorious giants' graves.*

Chorus of Spirits.

Rejoice!

Rejoice!

Now! Now! Alas! we can hear the voice
Of the coming doom's gloomy swell;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

And we can hear their piercing wings;
And we can hear their piercing wings;

The fountains of the great deep shall be broken,
And heaven set wide her windows;† while mankind

View, unacknowledged, each tremendous token—
Still, as they were from the beginning, blind.

We hear the sound they cannot hear,
The mustering thunders of the threatening

sphere;
Yet a few hours their coming is delay'd;
Their flashing banners, folded still on high,
Yet undisplay'd,

Save to the Spirit's all-pervading eye.
How! how! oh Earth!

Thy death is nearer than thy recent birth;
Tremble, ye mountains, soon to shrink below
The ocean's overflow!

The wave shall break upon your cliffs; and shells,
The little shells, of ocean's least things be Deposited where now the eagle's offspring builds—
How shall he shriek o'er the remorseless sea!

And call his nestlings up with fruitless yell,
Unanswer'd, save by the encroaching swell;—
While man shall long in vain for his broad wings,
The wings which could not save:—

Where could he rest them, while the whole space brings

Nought to his eye beyond the deep, his grave?
Brethren, rejoice!

And loudly lift each superhuman voice—
All die,

Save the slight remnant of Seth's seed—
The seed of Seth,

Exempt for future Sorrow's sake from death.
But of the sons of Cain

None shall remain;
And all his goodly daughters
Must lie beneath the desolating waters;

Or, floating upward, with their long hair laid
Along the wave, the cruel heaven upbraid,

Which would not spare
Beings even in death so fair,
It is decreed,

All die!

And to the universal human cry
The universal silence shall succeed!

Fly, brethren, fly!
But still rejoice!

We tell!
They fall!

So perish all
These petty foes of Heaven who shrink from hell!

(The Spirits disappear, soaring upwards.)
Japh. (alone). God hath proclaim'd the destiny of earth!

My father's ark of safety hath announced it;
The very demons shriek it from their caves;

The scroll of Enoch prophesied it long
In silent books, which, in their silence, say

More to the mind than thunder to the ear:
And yet men listen'd not, nor listen; but

Walk dorkling to their doom; which, though no
night,

Shakes them no more in their dim disbelief,
Than their last cries shall shake the Almighty purpose,

Or deaf obedient ocean, which fulfils it.
No sign yet hangs its banner in the air;

The clouds are few, and of their wonted texture;
The sun will rise upon the earth's last day

As on the fourth day of creation, when God said unto him, "Shine!" and he broke forth

Into the dawn, which lighted not the yet broken up; and the windows of heaven were opened."— Ibid.

* The book of Enoch, preserved by the Ethiopians, is said by them to be anterior to the flood.

† Ibid.

189

Uniform'd forefather of mankind—but roused
Before the human orison the earlier
Made and far sweeter voices of the birds,
Which in the open firmament of heaven
Have wings like angels, and like them salute
Heaven first each day before the Adamites:
Their matins now draw nigh—the east is kindling—
And they will sing! and day will break! Both near,
So near the awful close! For these must drop
Their outworn pinions on the deep; and day,
After the bright course of a few brief morrows,—
Ay, day will rise; but upon what?—a chaos,
Which was ere day; and which, renew'd, makes
time

Nothing! for, without life, what are the hours?
No more to dust than is eternity
Unto Jehovah, who created both.
Without him, even eternity would be
A void; without man, time, as made for man,
Dies with man, and is swallow'd in that deep
Which has no fountain; as his race will be Devour'd by that which drowns his infant world.—
What have we here? Shapes of both earth and air,
No—all of heaven, they are so beautiful.
I cannot trace their features; but their forms,
How lovely they move along the side
Of the gray mountain, scattering its mist!
And after the swart savage spirits, whose Infernal immortality pour'd forth
Their impious hymn of triumph, they shall be Welcome as Eden. It may be they come
To tell me the reprieve of our young world,
For which I have so often pray'd—They come!
Anah! oh, God! and with her—

Enter Samiass, Azazel, Anah, and Aholbamah.

Anah. Japhet! Lo!
Sam. A son of Adam!
Aza. What doth the earth-born here,
While all his race are slumbering?
Japh. Angel! what
Dost thou on earth when thou shouldst be on high?
Aza. Know'st thou not, or forgett'st thou, that a part
Of our great function is to guard thine earth?
Japh. But all good angels have forsaken earth,
Which is condemn'd; nay, even the evil fly
The approaching chaos. Anah! Anah! my
In vain, and long, and still to be beloved!
Why walk'st thou with this spirit, in those hours
When no good spirit longer lights below?
Anah. Japhet, I cannot answer thee; yet, yet
Forgive me—
Japh. May the Heaven, which soon no more
Will pardon, do so! for thou art greatly tempted.
Aho. Back to thy tents, insulting son of Noah!
We know thee not.

Japh. The hour may come when thou
Mayst know me better; and thy sister know
Me still the same which I have ever been.

Sam. Son of the patriarch, who hath ever been Upright before his God, whate'er thy gifts,
And thy words seem of sorrow, mix'd with wrath,
How have Azazel, or myself, brought on thee
Wrong?

Japh. Wrong! the greatest of all wrongs; but thou
Sayst well; though she be dust, I did not, could
not,

Deserve her. Farewell, Anah! I have said
That word so often! but now say it, ne'er
To be repeated. Angel! or whate'er
Thou art, or must be soon, hast thou the power
To save this beautiful—these beautiful
Children of Cain?

From what?
And is it so,
That ye too know not? Angels! angels! ye
Have shared man's sin, and it may be, now must Partake his punishment; or, at the least,
My sorrow.

Sam. Sorrow! I ne'er thought till now
To hear an Adamite speak riddles to me.
Japh. And hath not the Most High expounded
them?

Then ye are lost, as they are lost.

Aho. So be it!
If they love as they are loved, they will not shrink
More to be mortal, than I would to dare
An immortality of agonies
With Samiass!

Anah. Sister! sister! speak not
Thus.

Aza. Fearest thou, my Anah? Yes, for thee:

Anah. I would resign the greater remnant of
This little life of mine, before one hour
Of thine eternally should know a pang.

Japh. It is for him, then! for the seraph thou Hast left me! That is nothing, if thou hast not Left thy God too! for unions like to these,
Between a mortal and an immortal, cannot
Be happy or be hallow'd. We are sent Upon the earth to toil and die; and they Are made to minister on high unto
The Highest: but if he can save thee, soon
The hour will come in which celestial aid
Alone can do so.

Anah. Ah! he speaks of death.
Sam. Of death to us! and those who are with us;
But that the man seems full of sorrow, I Could smile.

Japh. I grieve not for myself, nor fear;
I am safe, not for my own deers, but those
Of a well-doing sire, who hath been found Righteous enough to save his children. Would
His power was greater of redemption! or
That by exchanging my own life for hers,
Who could alone have made mine happy, she,
The last and loveliest of Cain's race, could share
The ark which shall receive a remnant of
The seed of Seth!

Aho. And dost thou think that we,
With Cain's, the eldest born of Adam's, blood
Warm in our veins,—strong Cain! who was begotten
In Paradise,—would mingle with Seth's children?
Seth, the last offspring of old Adam's dotage?
No, not to save all earth, were earth in peril!
Our race hath always dwelt apart from thine
From the beginning, and shall do so ever.

Japh. I did not speak to thee, Aholbamah!
Too much of the forefather whom thou vauntest
Has come down in that haughty blood which springs

From him who shed the first, and that a brother's!
But thou, my Anah! let me call thee mine,
Albeit thou art not; 't is a word I cannot Part with, although I must from thee. My Anah!
Thou who dost rather make me dream that Abel
Had left a daughter, whose pure pious race
Survived in thee, so much unlike thou art
The rest of the stern Cainites, save in beauty,
For all of them are fairest in their favor—

Aho. (interrupting him). And wouldst thou have her like our father's foe

In mind, in soul? If I partook thy thought,
And dream'd that aught of Abel was in her!—
Get thee hence, son of Noah; thou makest strife.

Japh. Offspring of Cain, thy father did so!

Aho. But
He slew not Seth; and what hast thou to do
With other deeds between his God and him?

Japh. Those speakest well: his God hath judged him, and

I had not named his dead, but that thyself Didst seem to glory in him; nor to shrink From what he had done.

Abn. He was our fathers' father; The aidest born of man, the strongest, bravest, And most enduring:—Shall I blush for him From whom we had our being? Look upon Our race; behold their stature and their beauty, Their courage, strength, and length of days—

Japh. They are number'd. Abn. Be it so! but while yet their hours endure, I glory in my brethren and our fathers.

Japh. My sire and race but glory in their God, Anah! and thou?—

Anah. What'e'er our God decrees, The God of Seth, as Cain, I must obey, And will endeavor patiently to obey.

But could I dare to pray in his dread hour Of universal vengeance (if such should be), It would not be to live, alone exempt Of all my house. My sister! oh, my sister! What were the world, or other worlds, or all The brightest future, without the sweet past— Thy love—my father's—all the life, and all The things which sprang up with me, like the stars,

Making my dim existence radiant with Soft lights which were not mine? Aholbamah! Oh! if there should be mercy—seek it, find it: I abhor death, because that thou must die.

Abn. What, hast this dreamer, with his father's ask,

The bright star he hath built to scare the world, Shaken my sister? are we not the loved Of seraphs? and if we were not, must we Obe to a son of Noah for our lives?

Rather than thus—But the enthusiast dreams The worst of dreams, the fantasies engender'd By hopeless love and heated vigils. Who Shall shake these solid mountains, this firm earth, And bid those clouds and waters take a shape Distinct from that which we and all our sires Have seen them wear on their eternal way? Who shall do this?

Japh. He whose one word produced them. Abn. Who heard that word?

Japh. The universe, which leap'd To life before it. Ah! smallest thou still in scorn? Turn to thy seraphs: if they attest it not, They are none.

Sam. Aholbamah, own thy God!

Abn. I have ever hail'd our Maker, Samiase, As thine, and mine: a God of love, not sorrow.

Japh. Alas! what else is love but sorrow? Even He who made earth in love had soon to grieve Above the first and best inhabitants.

Abn. 'Tis said so.

Japh. It is even so.

Enter Noah and Shem.

Noah. Japhet! What Dost thou have with these children of the wicked? Dost thou dare not to partake their coming doom?

Japh. Father, it cannot be a sin to seek To save an earth-born being; and behold, These are one of the sinful, since they have The fellowship of angels.

Noah. These are they, then, Who have the throne of God, to take their wives Among the sons of Cain: the sons of heaven, The daughters for their beauty?

Abn.

Thou hast said it.

Noah. Woo, woo, was to such communion! Has not God made a barrier between earth And heaven, and limited each, kind to kind?

Sam. Was not man made in high Jehovah's image?

Did God not love what he had made? And what Do we but imitate and emulate His love unto created love?

Noah. I am But man, and was not made to judge mankind, Far less the sons of God; but as our God Has deign'd to commune with me, and reveal His judgments, I reply, that the descent Of seraphs from the everlasting seat Unto a perishable and perishing, Even on the very eve of perishing, world, Cannot be good.

Abn. What! though it were to save?

Noah. Not ye in all your glory can redeem What he who made you glorious hath condemn'd. Were your immortal mission safety, 't would Be general, not for two, though beautiful; And beautiful they are, but not the less Condemn'd.

Japh. Oh, father! say it not.

Noah. If that thou wouldst avoid their doom, forget That they exist: they soon shall cease to be, While thou shalt be the sire of a new world, And better.

Japh. Let me die with this, and them!

Noah. Thou shouldst for such a thought, but shalt not; he

Who can, redeems thee.

Sam. And why him and thee, More than what he, thy son, prefers to both?

Noah. Ask him who made thee greater than myself And mine, but not less subject to his own Almightiness. And lo! his mildest and Least to be tempted messenger appears!

Enter Raphael, the Archangel.

Raph. Spirits!

Whose seat is near the throne,

What do ye here?

Is thus a seraph's duty to be shown,

Now that the hour is near

When earth must be alone?

Return!

Adore and burn

In glorious homage with the elected "seven."

Your place is heaven.

Sam. Raphael!

The first and fairest of the sons of God,

How long hath this been law,

That earth by angels must be left untrod?

Earth! which oft saw

Jehovah's footsteps not disdain her sod!

The world he loved, and made

For love; and oft have we obey'd

His frequent mission with delighted pinions:

Adoring him in his least works display'd;

Watching this youngest star of his dominions;

And, as the latest birth of his great world,

Eager to keep it worthy of our Lord.

Why is thy brow sovereign?

And wherefore speak'st thou of destruction near?

Raph. Had Samiase and Anziel been

In their true place, with the angelic choir,

Written in fire

They would have seen

Michael.—"I return you," says Michael, "the reviler. I have corrected the rejected, and changed the name of Michael to Raphael, who was an angel of gentler sympathies."—Byron Letters, July 4, 1808.

Jehovah's late decree,
 And not inquired their Maker's breath of me:
 But ignorance must ever be
 A part of sin;
 And even the spirits' knowledge shall grow less
 As they wax proud within;
 For Blindness is the first-born of Excess.
 When all good angels left the world, ye stay'd,
 Stung with strange passions, and debased
 By mortal feelings for a mortal maid:
 But ye are pardon'd thus far, and replaced
 With your pure equals. Hence! away! away!
 Or stay,
 And lose eternity by that delay.
Asa. And thou! if earth be thus forbidden
 In the decree
 To us until this moment hidden,
 Dost thou not err as we
 In being here?
Raph. I came to call ye back to your fit sphere,
 In the great name and at the word of God.
 Dear, dearest in themselves, and scarce less dear
 That which I came to do: till now we trod
 Together the eternal space; together Let us still walk the stars. True, earth must die!
 Her race, return'd into her womb, must wither,
 And much which she inherits: but, oh! why
 Cannot this earth be made, or be destroy'd,
 Without involving ever some vast void
 In the immortal ranks? immortal still
 In their immeasurable forfeiture.
 Our brother Satan fell; his burning will
 Rather than longer worship dared endure!
 But ye who still are pure!
Seraphs! less mighty than that mightiest one,
 Think how he was undone!
 And think if tempting man can recompense
 For heaven desired too late?
 Long have I war'd!
 Long must I war
 With him who deem'd it hard
 To be created, and to acknowledge him
 Who midst the cherubim
 Made him as suns to a dependent star,
 Leaving the archangels at his right hand dim.
 I loved him—beautiful he was: oh heaven!
 Save his who made, what beauty and what power
 Was ever like to Satan's! Would the hour
 In which he fell could ever be forgiven!
 The wish is impious: but, oh ye!
 Yet undestroy'd, be warn'd! Eternity
 With him, or with his God, is in your choice:
 He hath not tempted you: he cannot tempt
 The angels, from his further snares exempt:
 But man hath listen'd to his voice,
 And ye to woman's—beautiful she is,
 The serpent's voice less subtle than her kiss.
 The snake but vanquish'd dust; but she will draw
 A second host from heaven, to break heaven's law.
 Yet, yet, oh fly!
 Ye cannot die;
 But they Shall pass away,
 While ye shall fill with shrieks the upper sky
 For perishable clay,
 Whose memory in your immortality
 Shall long outlast the sun which gave them day.
 Think how your essence differeth from theirs
 In all but suffering! why partake
 The agony to which they must be heirs—
 Born to be plough'd with years, and sown with CARES;
 And reap'd by Death, lord of the human soil?
 Even had their days been left to toil their path
 Through time to dust, unshorten'd by God's wrath,
 Still they are Evil's prey and Sorrow's spoil.

Alas. Let them fly!
 I hear the voice which says that all must die
 Sooner than our white-bearded patriarchs died;
 And that on high
 An ocean is prepared,
 While from below
 The deep shall rise to meet heaven's overflow.
 Few shall be spared,
 It seems; and of that few, the race of Cain
 Must lift their eyes to Adam's God in vain.
 Sister! since it is so,
 And the eternal Lord
 In vain would be implored
 For the remission of one hour of woe,
 Let us resign even what we have adored,
 And meet the wave, as we would meet the sword,
 If not unmoved, yet undismay'd.
 And wailing less for us than those who shall Survive in mortal or immortal thrall,
 And, when the fatal waters are allay'd,
 Weep for the myriads who can weep no more.
 Fly, seraphs! to your own eternal shore,
 Where winds nor howl nor waters roar.
 Our portion is to die.
 And yours to live for ever:
 But which is best, a dead eternity,
 Or living, is but known to the great Giver.
 Obey him, as we shall obey;
 I would not keep this life of mine in clay
 An hour beyond his will;
 Nor see ye lose a portion of his grace,
 For all the mercy which Seth's race
 Find still.
 Fly!
 And as your pinions bear ye back to heaven,
 Think that my love still mounts with thee on high,
 Samiasee!
 And if I look up with a tearless eye,
 'Tis that an angel's bride disdain's to weep—
 Farewell! Now rise, inexorable Deep!
Anah. And must we die?
 And must I lose thee too,
 Azazel!
 Oh my heart! my heart!
 Thy prophecies were true!
 And yet thou wert so happy too!
 The blow, though not unlook'd for, falls as new:
 But yet depart!
 Ah! why?
 Yet let me not retain thee—fly!
 My pang can be but brief; but thine would be Eternal, if repulsed from heaven for me.
 Too much already hast thou delg'd
 To one of Adam's race!
 Our doom is sorrow: not to us alone,
 But to the spirits who have not disdain'd
 To love us, cometh anguish with disgrace.
 The first who taught us knowledge hath been hurl'd
 From his once archangelic throne
 Into some unknown world:
 And thou, Azazel! No—
 Thou shalt not suffer woe
 For me. Away! nor weep!
 Thou canst not weep; but yet
 Mayst suffer more, not weeping: then forget
 Her, whom the surges of the all-strangling deep
 Can bring no pang like this. Fly! fly!
 Being gone, 't will be less difficult to die.
Japh. Oh say not so!
 Father! and thou, archangel, thou!
 Surely celestial mercy lurks below
 That pure severe serenity of brow:
 Let them not meet this sea without a shore.
 Save in our ark, or let me be no more!
Noah. Peace, child of passion, peace!
 If not within thy heart, yet with thy tongue
 Do God no wrong!

Live as he wills it—die, when he ordains,
A righteous death, amidst the seed of Cain's.
Cease, or be sorrowful in silence; cease
To weary Heaven's ear with thy selfish plaint.
Wouldst thou have God commit a sin for thee?

Such would it be
To alter his intent
For a mere mortal sorrow. Be a man!
And bear what Adam's race must bear, and can.
Japh. Ay, father! but when they are gone,
And we are all alone,

Floating upon the azure desert, and
The depth beneath us hides our own dear land,
And dearer, silent friends and brethren, all
Buried in its immeasurable breast,
Who, who, our tears, our shrieks, shall then command?

Can we in desolation's peace have rest?
Oh God! be thou a God, and spare
Yet while 'tis time!
Renew not Adam's fall:
Mankind were then but twain,
But they are numerous now as are the waves
And the tremendous rain,
Whose drops shall be less thick than would their graves.

Were graves permitted to the seed of Cain.
Noah. Silence, vain boy! each word of thine's a crime.

Angels, forgive this stripling's fond despair.
Eph. Scraphs! these mortals speak in passion:
Ye!

Who are, or should be, passionless and pure,
May now return with me. It may not be:
Sara.

We have chosen, and will endure.

Eph. Say'st thou?

Ass. He hath said it, and I say, Amen!

Eph. Again!
Then from this hour,
Shorn as ye are of all celestial power,
And aliens from your God,
Farewell!

Japh. Alas! where shall they dwell?
Hark, hark! Deep sounds, and deeper still,
Are howling from the mountain's bosom:
There's not a breath of wind upon the hill.
Yet quivers every leaf, and drops each blossom:
Earth groans as if beneath a heavy load.
Noah. Hark, hark! the sea-birds cry!
In clouds they overspread the hurld sky,
And hover round the mountain, where before
Never a white wing, wetted by the wave,
Yet dared to soar,
Even when the waters wax'd too fierce to brave.
Soon it shall be their only shore,
And then, no more!

Japh. The sun! the sun!
He smelt, but his better light is gone,
And a black circle, bound
His glaring disk around,
Prodigious o'erh's last of summer days hath shone!
The clouds return into the hues of night,
Save where their burn-color'd edges streak
The verge where brighter moons were wont to break.

Noah. And lo! yon flash of light,
The distant thunder's harbinger, appears!
It cometh! hence, away!
Leave to the elements their evil prey!
Hence to where our all-hallow'd ark uprears
His safe and wreckless sides!

Japh. Oh, father, stay!
Lead not my Anah to the swallowing tides!
Noah. What are we not leave all life to such? Hebrew.

Part I. Act I.

Noah. With them! Then die

How dar'st thou look on that prophetic sky,
And seek to save what all things now condemn,
In overwhelming union

With just Jehovah's wrath!

Japh. Can rage and justice join in the same path?

Noah. Blaphemer! dar'st thou murmur even
now?

Eph. Patriarch, be still a father! smooth thy brow:

Thy son, despite his folly, shall not sink;
He knows not what he says, yet shall not drink
With sobs the salt foam of the swelling waters;
But be, when passion passeth, good as thou,
Nor perish like heaven's children with man's daughters.

Alas. The tempest cometh; heaven and earth unite

For the annihilation of all life.

Unequal is the strife

Between our strength and the Eternal Might!

Sara. But ours is with thee: we will bear ye far
To some untroubled star,

Where thou and Anah shalt partake our lot:

And if thou dost not weep for thy lost earth,

Our forfeit heaven shall also be forgot.

Anah. Oh! my dear father's tante, my place of birth!

And mountains, land, and woods! when ye are not,
Who shall dry up my tears!

Ass. Thy spirit-lord.

Fear not: though we are shut from heaven,

Yet much is ours, whence we cannot be driven.

Eph. Rebel! thy words are wicked as thy deeds

Shall henceforth be but weak: the flaming sword,

Which chased the first-born out of Paradise,

Still flashes in the angelic hands.

Ass. It cannot slay us: threaten dust with death,

And talk of weapons unto that which bleeds.

What are thy swords in our immortal eyes?

Eph. The moment cometh to approve thy strength:

And learn at length

How vain to war with what thy God commands:

Thy former force was in thy faith.

Enter Mortals, flying for refuge.

Chorus of Mortals.

The heavens and earth are mingling—God! oh God!

What have we done? Yet spare!

Hark! even the forest beasts howl forth their prayer!

The dragon crawls from out his den,

To herd, in terror, innocent with men;

And the birds scream their agony through air.

Yet, yet, Jehovah! yet withdraw thy rod

Of wrath, and pity thine own world's despair!

Hear not Man only but all Nature plead!

Eph. Farewell, thou earth! ye wretched sons of clay,

I cannot, must not, aid you. 'Tis decreed!

[Exit Eph.]

Japh. Some clouds sweep on as vultures for their prey.

While others, fix'd as rocks, await the word

At which their wrathful vials shall be pour'd.

No azure more shall robe the firmament.

Nor spangled stars beglorious: Death hath risen:

In the sun's place a pale and ghastly glare

Hath wound itself around the dying air.

Ass. Come, Anah! quit this chase-founded prison,

To which the elements again repair,

To turn it into what it was: beneath

The shelter of these wings thou shalt be safe,
As was the eagle's nestling once within
Its mother's—Let the coming chaos chafe
With all its elements! Heed not their din!
A brighter world than this, where thou shalt breathe!

Ethereal life, will we explore:
These darken'd clouds are not the only skies.
[Asasiel and Samiase fly off and disappear with Anah and Aholibamah.]

Japh. They are gone! They have disappear'd amidst the roar

Of the forsaken world; and never more,
Whether they live, or die with all earth's life,
Now near its last, can aught restore
Anah unto these eyes.

Chorus of Mortals.

Oh son of Noah! mercy on thy kind!
What! wilt thou leave us all—all—behind?
While safe amidst the elemental strife,
Thou sitt'st within thy guarded ark?

A Mother (offering her infant to Japhet). Oh let this child embark!

I brought him forth in woe,

But thought it joy

To see him to my bosom clinging so.

Why was he born?

What hath he done—

My unwean'd son—

To move Jehovah's wrath or scorn?

What is there in this milk of mine, that death
Should stir all heaven and earth up to destroy

My boy,

And roll the waters o'er his placid breast?

Save him, thou seed of Seth!

Or cursed be—with him who made

Thee and thy race, for which we are betray'd!

Japh. Peace! 'tis no hour for curses, but for prayer.

Chorus of Mortals.

For prayer!!!

And where

Shall prayer ascend,

When the swain cleads unto the mountains' bend

And burst,

And gushing oceans every barrier rend,

Until the very deserts know no thirst?

Accursed

Be he who made thee and thy sire!

We deem our curses vain; we must expire;

But as we know the worst,

Why should our hymn be raised, our knees be bent

Before the implacable Omnipotent,

Since we must fall the same?

If he hath made earth, let it be his shame,

To make a world for torture.—Lo! they come,

The loathsome waters, in their rage!

And with their roar make wholesome Nature dumb!

The forest's trees (coeval with the hour

When Paradise upsprung,

Ere Eve gave Adam knowledge for her dower,

Or Adam his first hymn of slavery sung),

So massy, vast, yet green in their old age,

Are overtopp'd,

Their summer blossoms by the surges lopp'd,

Which rise, and rise, and rise.

Vainly we look up to the lowering skies—

They meet the seas,

And shut out God from our beseeching eyes.

Fly, son of Noah, fly! and take thine ease

In thine allotted ocean-tent;

And view, all floating o'er the element,

The corpses of the world of thy young days:

Then to Jehovah raise

Thy song of praise!

A Mortal. Blessed are the dead

Who die in the Lord!

And though the waters be o'er earth outspread,

Yet, as his word,

Be the decree adored!

He gave me life—he taketh but

The breath which is his own:

And though these eyes should be for ever shut,

Nor longer this weak voice before his throne

Be heard in supplicating tone,

Still blessed be the Lord,

For what is past,

For that which is:

For all are his,

From first to last—

Time—space—eternity—life—death—

The vast known and immeasurable unknown.

He made, and can unmake:

And shall I, for a little gasp of breath,

Blaspheme and groan?

No; let me die, as I have lived, in faith,

Nor quiver, though the universe may quake!

Chorus of Mortals.

Where shall we fly?

Not to the mountains high;

For now their torrents rush, with double roar,

To meet the ocean, which, advancing still,

Already grasps each drowning hill,

Nor leaves an unsearch'd cave.

Enter a Woman.

Woman. Oh, save me, save!

Our valley is no more:

My father and my father's tent,

My brethren and my brethren's herds,

The pleasant trees that o'er our noonday bent,

And sent forth evening songs from sweetest birds,

The little rivulet which freshen'd all

Our pastures green,

Nor more are to be seen.

When to the mountain cliff I climb'd this morn,

I turn'd to bless the spot,

And not a leaf appear'd about to fall;—

And now they are not!—

Why was I born?

Japh. To die! in youth to die!

And happier in that doom,

Than to behold the universal tomb

Which I

Am thus condemn'd to weep above in vain.

Why, when all perish, why must I remain?

[*The waters rise; Men fly in every direction;
many are overtaken by the waves; the Chorus of Mortals disperses in search of safety up the mountains; Japhet remains upon a rock, while the Ark floats towards him in the distance.*]

SARDANAPALUS:

A Tragedy.

IN

THE ILLUSTRIOUS GOETHE

A STRANGE PROMISE TO OFFER THE HONOUR

OF A LITERARY VASAL TO HIS LIEGE LORD, THE FIRST OF RECENT WRITERS, WHO HAS CREATED THE LITERATURE OF HIS OWN COUNTRY,

AND ILLUSTRATED THAT OF SHAKESPEARE

HIS UNWORTHY PRODUCTION WHICH THE AUTHOR VENTURES TO IMMORTALISE TO HIM

Is Entitled

SARDANAPALUS.

PREFACE

IN publishing the following tragedy, I have only to repeat, that they were not composed with the most remote view to the stage. On the attempt made by the managers in a former instance, the public opinion has been already expressed. With regard to my own private feelings, as it seems that they are to stand for nothing, I shall say nothing.

For the historical foundation of the following compositions, the reader is referred to the Notes.

The author has in one instance attempted to preserve, and in the other to approach, the "unities;" conceiving that with any very distant departure from them, there may be poetry, but can be no drama. He is aware of the unpopularity of this notion in present English literature; but it is not a system of his own, being merely an opinion, which, not very long ago, was the law of literature throughout the world, and is still so in the more civilised parts of it. But "moins avous changé tout cela," and see reaping the advantages of the change. The writer is far from conceiving that anything he can adduce by personal precept or example can at all approach his regular, or even irregular predecessors; he is merely giving a reason why he preferred the more regular formation of a structure, however feeble, to an entire abandonment of all rules whatsoever. Where he has failed, the failure is in the architect,—and not in the art.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

Sardanapalus, King of Minosah and Assyria, etc.
Artabanus, the Slave who aspired to the Throne.
Botanus, a Chaldean and Soothsayer.
Salmassar, the King's Brother-in-law.
Aladdin, an Assyrian Officer of the Palace.
Pursh.
Hittog.
Mith.
Salm.

WOMEN.

Marina, the Queen.
Myrrha, an Ionian Female Slave, and the Favorite of Sardanapalus.
Women composing the Harem of Sardanapalus, Guards, Attendants, Chaldean Priests, Mades, etc., etc.

SCENE.—A Hall in the Royal Palace of Nineveh.

* On the original MS. Lord Byron has written:—"Mev. Salmassar, May 2, 1811.—I began this drama on the 18th of January, 1811; and continued the two first acts very slowly, and by intervals. The three last acts were written since the 18th of May, 1811 (this present month); that is to say, in a fortnight. Sardanapalus was published in December, 1811, and was received with very great approbation.

+ "With burning zeal and try labors, in my old age, I sought to do justice with gratitude and diffidence on the extraordinary talents of this dedication, nor interpret them as the work of a superior genius, no less original in the choice than inexhaustible in the materials of his subjects."—GOETHE.

§ "Sardanapalus" originally appeared in the same volume with "The Two Foscari."

¶ In this tragedy it has been my intention to follow the account of Diodorus Siculus; reducing it, however, to such dramatic regularity as I best could, and striving to approach the unities. I therefore suppose the rebellion to explode and succeed in one day by a sudden conspiracy, instead of the long war of the history.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Palace.

Salmenee (solus). He hath wrong'd his queen,
but still he is her lord;
He hath wrong'd my sister, still he is my brother;
He hath wrong'd his people, still he is their over-sign.

And I must be his friend as well as subject:
He must not perish thus. I will not see
The blood of Nimrod and Semiramis
Sink in the earth, and thirteen hundred years
Of empire ending like a shepherd's tale;
He must be roused. In his effeminate heart
There is a careless courage which corruption
Has not all quench'd, and latent energies
Repress'd by circumstance, but not destroy'd—
Steep'd, but not drown'd, in deep voluptuousness.
If born a peasant, he had been a man.
To have reach'd an empire: to an empire born,
He will bequeath none; nothing but a name,
Which his sons will not prize in heritage:
Yet, not all lost, even yet he may redeem
His sloth and shame, by only being that
Which he should be, as easily as the thing
He should not be and is. Were it less toll
To sway his nations than consume his life?
To head an army than to rule a harem?
He sweats in palling pleasures, dulls his soul,
And saps his goodly strength, in toils which yield
not

Health like the chase, nor glory like the war—
He must be roused. Alas! there is no sound (Sound of soft music heard from within.)
To rouse him short of thunder. Hark! the lute,
The lyre, the timbrel; the lascivious tinklings
Of lulling instruments, the softening voices
Of women, and of beings less than women,
Must chime in to the echo of his revel,
While the great king of all we know of earth
Lolls crown'd with roses, and his diadem
Lies negligently by to be caught up
By the first manly hand which dares to snatch it.
Lo, where they come! already I perceive
The reeking odors of the perfumed train,
And see the bright gems of the glittering girls,
At once his chorus and his council, flash
Along the gallery, and amidst the damsels,
As femininely garb'd, and scarce less female,
The grandson of Semiramis, the man-queen—
He comes! Shall I await him? yes, and front him,
And tell him what all good men tell each other,
Speaking of him and his. They come, the slaves,
Led by the monarch subject to his slaves.

SCENE II.—Enter Sardanapalus effeminately dressed, his Head crowned with flowers, and his Robe negligently flowing, attended by a Train of Women and young Slaves.

Sar. (speaking to some of his attendants). Let the pavilion over the Euphrates
Be garlanded, and lit, and furnish'd forth
For an especial banquet; at the hour
Of midnight we will sup there: see nought wanting,
And bid the galley be prepared. There is
A cooling breeze which crisps the broad clear river:
We will embark anon. Fair nymphs, who deign
To share the soft hours of Sardanapalus,
We'll meet again in that the sweetest hour,
When we shall gather like the stars above us,
And you will form a heaven as bright as theirs;

Till then, let each be mistress of her time,
And thou, my own Ionian Myrrha,* choose,
Wilt thou along with them or me?

Myr. My lord—
Sar. My lord, my life! why answerest thou so coldly?

It is the curse of kings to be so answer'd.
Rule thy own hours, thou ruler mine—say, wouldst
thou

Accompany our guests, or charm away
The moments from me?

Myr. The king's choice is mine.
Sar. I pray thee say not so: my chiefest joy
Is to contribute to thine every wish.

I do not dare to breathe my own desire,
Lest it should clash with thine; for thou art still Too prompt to sacrifice thy thoughts for others.

Myr. I would remain: I have no happiness
Save in beholding thine; yet—

Sar. Yet! what yet?
Thy own sweet will shall be the only barrier
Which ever rises betwixt thee and me.

Myr. I think the present is the worsted hour
Of council; it were better I retire.

Sal. (comes forward and says). The Ionian slave says well: let her retire.

Sar. Who answers? How now, brother?

Sal. The queen's brother,
And your most faithful vassal, royal lord.

Sar. (addressing his train). As I have said, let all dispose their hours

Till midnight, when again we pray your presence.

(To Myrrha, who is going.) Myrrha! I thought thou wouldst remain.

Myr. Great king,

Thou didst not say so.

Sar. But thou lookedst it:
I know each glance of those Ionic eyes,
Which said thou wouldst not leave me.

Myr. Sirs! your brother—
Sal. His consort's brother, minion of Ionia!

How darest thou name me and not blush?

Sar. Not blush!
Thou hast no more eyes than heart to make her crimson.

Like to the dying day on Caucasus,
Where sunset tints the snow with ruy shadows,
And then reproach her with thine own cold blind-
ness.

Which will not see it. What, in tears, my Myrrha?

Sal. Let them flow on; she weeps for more than one,
And is herself the cause of bitterer tears.

Sar. Cursed be he who caused those tears to flow!
Sal. Curse not thyself—millions do that already.

Sar. Thou dost forget thee: make me not remember.

I am a monarch.

Sal. Would thou couldst!

Myr. My sovereign,
I pray, and thus too, prince, permit my shame.

Sar. Since it must be so, and this chid has check'd

Thy gentle spirit, go; but recollect
That we must forthwith meet: I had rather lose
An empire than thy presence.

Sal. It may be,
Thou wilt lose both, and both for ever!

Sar. Brother,

I can at least command myself, who listen

*The Ionian name had been still more comprehensive, having included the Achæans and the Bœotians, who, together with those to whom it was afterwards confined, would make nearly the whole of the Greek nation; and amidst the On-tastis it was always the general name for the Greeks.

MIRRORED'S GRACES, vol. 1., p. 126.

To language such as this: yet urge me not Beyond my easy nature.

Sol. 'T is beyond
That easy, far too easy, idle nature,
Which I would urge these. Oh that I could rouse
these!

Though 't were against myself.

Sar. By the god Beal!

The man would make me tyrant.

Sol. So thou art.

Think'st thou there is no tyranny but that
Of blood and chains? The despotism of vice—
The weakness and the wickedness of luxury—
The negligence—the apathy—the evils
Of sensual sloth—produce ten thousand tyrants,
Whose delegated cruelty surpasses

The worst acts of one energetic master,
However harsh and hard in his own bearing.
The false and fond examples of thy lusts
Corrupt no less than they oppress, and sap
In the same moment all thy pageant power
And those who should sustain it: so that whether
A foreign foe invade, or civil broil

Distract within, both will alike prove fatal:

The first thy subjects have no heart to conquer;

The last they rather would assist than vanquish.

Sar. Why, what makes thee thus mouthpiece of the people?

Sol. Forgiveness of the queen my sister's wrongs;

A natural love unto my infant nephews;

Faith to the king, a faith he may need shortly,

In more than words: respect for Nimrod's line;

Also, another thing thou knowest not.

Sar. What's that?

Sol. To thee an unknown word.

Sar. Yet speak it;

I love to learn.

Sol. Virtue.

Sar. Not know the word!

Never was word yet rung so in my ears—

Worse than the rabble's shout, or spitting trumpet:

I've heard thy sister talk of nothing else.

Sol. To change the irksome theme, then, hear of vice.

Sar. From whom?

Sol. Even from the winds, if thou couldst listen
Unto the echoes of the nation's voice.

Sar. Come, I'm indulgent, as thou knowest, patient.

As thou hast often proved—speak out, what moves
thee?

Sol. Thy peril.

Sar. Say on.

Sol. Thus, then: all the nations,

For they are many, whom thy father left
In heritage, are loud in wrath against thee.

Sar. 'Gainst me? What would the slaves?

Sol. A king.

Sar. And what

Am I then?

Sol. In their eyes a nothing; but

In mine a man who might be something still.

Sar. The railing drunkards! why, what would they have?

Have they not peace and plenty?

Sol. Of the first

More than is glorious; of the last, far less

Than the king seeks of.

Sar. Whose then is the crime,

But the false misings, who provide no better?

Sol. And somewhat in the monarch who ne'er looks

Beyond his palace walls, or if he stirs

From them, 't is but to some mountain palace,

Whose barbarous bands wear down. Oh, glorious Beal!

Who built up this vast empire, and wert made

A god, and the best shines like a god

Through the long centuries of thy renown.
This, thy presumed descendant, ne'er beheld
As king the kingdoms thou didst leave as hero,
Won with thy blood, and toil, and time, and peril!
For what? to furnish imposts for a revolt,
Or multiplied extortions for a minion.

Sar. I understand thee—thou wouldst have me go Forth as a conqueror. By all the stars
Which the Chaldeans read! the restless slaves
Deserve that I should curse them with their wishes,
And lead them forth to glory.

Sol. Wherefore not?

Semiramis—a woman only—led
These our Assyrians to the solar shores
Of Ganges.

Sar. 'T is most true. And how return'd?

Sol. Why, like a man—a hero: baffled, but Not vanquish'd. With but twenty guards, she made

Good her retreat to Bactria.

Sar. And how many

Left she behind in India to the vultures?

Sol. Our annals say not.

Sar. Then I will say for them—

That she had better woven within her palace

Some twenty garments, than with twenty guards

Have fled to Bactria, leaving to the ravens,

And wolves, and men—the fiercer of the three,

Her myriads of fond subjects. Is this glory?

Then let me live in ignominy ever.

Sol. All warlike spirits have not the same fate.

Semiramis, the glorious parent of

A hundred kings, although she fall'd in India,

Brought Persia, Media, Bactria, to the realm

Which she once sway'd—and thou might'st sway.

Sar. I envy them—

She but subdued them.

Sol. It may be ere long

That they will need her sword more than your sceptre.

Sar. There was a certain Bacchus, was there not?

I've heard my Greek girls speak of such—they say

He was a god, that is, a Grecian god,

An idol foreign to Assyria's worship,

Who conquer'd this same golden realm of Ind

Thou prat'st of, where Semiramis was vanquish'd.

Sol. I have heard of such a man; and thou patternis't

That he is deem'd a god for what he did.

Sar. And in his godship I will honor him—

Not much as man. What, ho! my cupbearer!

Sol. What means the king?

Sar. To worship your new god

And ancient conqueror. Some wine, I say.

Enter Cupbearer.

Sar. (addressing the Cupbearer.) Bring me the golden goblet thick with gems.

Which bears the name of Nimrod's chalice. Hence,

Fill full, and bear it quickly. (Exit Cupbearer.)

Sol. Is this moment

A fitting one for the resumption of Thy yet unalost-off revels?

Re-enter Cupbearer, with wine.

Sar. (taking the cup from him.) Noble kinsman,

If these barbarian Greeks of the far shores

And skirts of these our realms be not, this Bacchus

Conquer'd the whole of India, did he not?

Sol. He did, and thence was deem'd a deity.

Sar. Not so:—of all his conquests a few columns

Which may be his, and might be mine, if I Thought them worth purchase and conveyance, are

The landmarks of the seas of gore he shed,

The realms he wasted, and the hearts he broke.

But here, here in this goblet is his title

To immortality—the immortal grape

From which he first express'd the soul, and gave
To gladden that of man, as some atonement
For the victorious mischiefs he had done.
Had it not been for this, he would have been
A mortal still in name as in his grave;
And, like my ancestor Semiramis,
A sort of semi-glorious human monster.
Here 's that which defied him—let it now
Humanize thee; my surly, chiding brother,
Pledge me to the Greek god!

Sal. For all thy realms
I would not so blaspheme our country's creed.

Sar. That is to say, thou thinkest him a hero,
That he shed blood by oceans; and no god,
Because he turn'd a fruit to an enchantment,
Which cheers the sad, revives the old, inspires
The young, makes weariness forget his toil,
And fear her danger; opens a new world
When this, the present, palls. Well, then I pledge
these

And him as a true man, who did his utmost
In good or evil to surprise mankind. [Drinks.]

Sal. Wilt thou resume a revel at this hour?
Sar. And if I did, 't were better than a trophy,
Being bought without a tear. But that is not
My present purpose: since thou wilt not pledge me,
Continue what thou plearest.

(To the Cupbearer.) Boy, retire.
[Exit Cupbearer.]

Sal. I would but have recall'd thee from thy dream;

Better by me awaken'd than rebellion.

Sar. Who should rebel? or why? what cause?
[Enter]

I am the lawful king, descended from
A race of kings who knew no predecessors.
What have I done to thee, or to the people,
That thou shouldst rail, or they rise up against me?

Sal. Of what thou hast done to me, I speak not.
Sar. But
Thou think'st that I have wrong'd the queen: is 't not so?

Sal. Think! thou hast wrong'd her!
Sar. Patience, prince, and hear me.

She has all power and splendor of her station,
Respect, the tutelage of Assyria's heirs,
The homage and the appanage of sovereignty.
I married her as monarchs wed—for state,
And loved her as most husbands love their wives.
If she or thou supposedst I could link me
Like a Chaldean peasant to his mate,
Ye knew not me, nor monarchs, nor mankind.

Sal. I pray thee, change the theme: my blood disdains

Complaint, and Salmenes' sister seeks not Reluctant love even from Assyria's lord!
Nor would she deign to accept divided passion

With foreign strumpets and Ionian slaves.
The queen is silent.

Sar. And why not her brother?

Sal. I only echo thee the voice of empires,
Which he who long neglects not long will govern.

Sar. The ungrateful and ungracious slaves! they murder

Because I have not abed their blood, nor led them
To dry in the desert's dust by myriads,
Or whiten with their bones the banks of Ganges;
Nor decimated them with savage laws,
Nor sweated them to build up pyramids,
Or Babylonian walls.

Sal. Yet these are trophies
More worthy of a people and their prince
Than songs, and lutes, and feasts, and concubines,
And lavish'd treasures, and contemned virtues.

Sar. Or for my trophies I have founded cities:
There 's Tarsus and Anchialus, both built
In one day—what could that blood-loving beldame,
My martial grandam, chaste Semiramis,
Do more, except destroy them?

Sal. 'T is most true;
I own thy merit in those founded cities,
Built for a whim, receded with a verse,
Which shames both them and thee to coming ages.

Sar. Shame me! By Baal, the cities, though well built,

Are not more goodly than the verse! Say what
Thou wilt 'gainst me, my mode of life or rule,
But nothing 'gainst the truth of that brief record.
Why, those few lines contain the history
Of all things human: hear—"Sardanapalus,
The king, and son of Anacynadaraxes,
In one day built Anchialus and Tarsus.
Eat, drink, and love; the rest 's not worth a fillip."

Sal. A worthy moral, and a wise inscription,
For a king to put up before his subjects!

Sar. Oh, thou wouldst have me doubtless set up edicts—

"Obey the king—contribute to his treasure—
Recruit his phalanx—spill your blood at bidding—
Fall down and worship, or get up and toll."
Or thus—"Sardanapalus on this spot
Slew fifty thousand of his enemies.

These are their sepulchres, and this his trophy."
I leave such things to conquerors; enough
For me, if I can make my subjects feel
The weight of human misery less, and glide
Ungrudging to the tomb: I take no license
Which I deny to them. We all are men.

Sal. Thy aires have been revered as gods—
Sar. In dust

And death, where they are neither gods nor men.
Talk not of such to me! the worms are gods;
At least they banqueted upon your gods,
And died for lack of further nutriment.

* "For this expedition he took only a small chosen body of the phalanx, but all his light troops. In the first day's march he reached Anchialus, a town said to have been founded by the king of Assyria, Sardanapalus. The fortifications, in their magnitude and extent, still, in Arrian's time, bore the character of greatness, which the Assyrians appear singularly to have affected in works of the kind. A monument representing Sardanapalus was found there, warranted by an inscription in Assyrian characters, of course in the old Assyrian language, which the Greeks, whether well or ill, interpreted thus: 'Sardanapalus, son of Anacynadaraxes, in one day founded Anchialus and Tarsus. Eat, drink, play: all other human joys are not worth a fillip.' Supposing this version nearly exact (for Arrian says it was not quite so), whether the purpose has not been to invite to civil order a people disposed to turbulence, rather than to recommend moderate luxury, may perhaps reasonably be questioned. What, indeed, could be the object of a king of Assyria in founding such towns in a country so distant from his capital, and so divided from it by an immense extent of sandy deserts and lofty mountains, and, still more, how the inhabitants could be at once in circumstances to abandon themselves to the intemperate joys which their prince has been supposed to have recommended, is not obvious: but it may deserve observation that, in that line of coast, the southern of Lower Asia, ruins of cities, evidently of an age after Alexander, yet barely named in history, at this day astonish the adventurous traveller by their magnificence and elegance. Amid the desolation which, under a singularly barbarous government, has for so many centuries been daily spreading in the finest countries of the globe, whether more from soil and climate, or from opportunities for commerce, extraordinary means must have been found for communities to flourish there; whence it may seem that the measures of Sardanapalus were directed by juster views than have been commonly ascribed to him; but that monarch having been the last of a dynasty ended by a revolution, obloquy on his memory would follow of course from the policy of his successors and their partisans. The inconsistency of traditions concerning Sardanapalus is striking in Diodorus's account of him."—Mitford's Greece, vol. ix., p. 211.

Those gods were merely men: look to their issue—
I feel a thousand mortal things about me,
But nothing godlike,—unless it may be
The thing which you condemn, a disposition
To love and to be merciful, to pardon
The follies of my species, and (that's human)
To be indulgent to my own.

Sal. Alas!
The doom of Nineveh is seal'd!—Woe—woe
To the untravell'd city!

Sar. What dost dread?
Sal. Thou art guarded by thy foes: in a few hours
The tempest may break out which overwhelms thee,
And thine and mine; and in another day
What is shall be the past of Belus' race.

Sar. What must we dread?
Sal. Ambitious treachery,
Which has environ'd thee with snares; but yet
There is resource: empower me with thy signet
To quell the machinations, and I lay
The heads of thy chief foes before thy feet.

Sar. The heads—how many?
Sal. Must I stay to number
When even thine own's in peril? Let me go;
Give me thy signet—trust me with the rest.

Sar. I will trust no man with unlimited lives.
When we take those from others, we no know
What we have taken, nor the thing we give.
Sal. Wouldst thou not take their lives who seek for thine?

Sar. That's a hard question—But I answer, Yes.
Cannot the thing be done without? Who are they Whom thou suspectest?—Let them be arrested.

Sal. I would thou wouldst not ask me; the next moment

Will send my answer through thy babbling troop
Of paramours, and thence fly o'er the palace,
Even to the city, and so baffle all.—
Trust me.

Sar. Thou knowest I have done so ever;
Take thou the signet. [Gives the signet.]

Sal. I have one more request.
Sar. Name it.

Sal. That thou this night forbear the banquet
In the pavilion over the Euphrates.

Sar. Forbear the banquet! Not for all the plotters

That ever shook a kingdom! Let them come,
And do their worst: I shall not blench for them;
Nor rise the sooner: nor forbear the goblet;
Nor crown me with a single rose the less;
Nor lose one joyous hour.—I fear them not.

Sal. But thou wouldst arm thee, wouldst thou not, if needful?

Sar. Perhaps. I have the goodliest armor, and
A sword of such a temper; and a bow
And javelin, which might furnish Nimrod forth:
A little heavy, but yet not unwieldy.
And now I think on't, 'tis long since I've used them,
Even in the chase. Hast ever seen them, brother?

Sal. Is this a time for such fantastic trifling?—
It need be, wilt thou wear them?

Sar. Will I not?
Oh! if it must be so, and these rash slaves
Will not be ruled with less, I'll use the sword
Thou shalt wish it turn'd into a distaff.

Sal. They say thy sceptre's turn'd to that already.
Sar. That's false! but let them say so: the old
sceptre,

Of whose our captives often sing, related
To that of their chief hero, Hercules,
Because he loved a Lydian queen: thou seest
The sceptre of all the nations seize
On those they can sink their sovereigns.

Sal. They did not speak thus of thy fathers.
No;

They were kept to toil and combat;

And never changed their chains but for their armor:
Now they have peace and pasture, and the license
To revel and to rail; it irks me not.
I would not give the amble of one fair girl
For all the popular breath that e'er divided
A name from nothing. What are the rank tongues
Of this vile herd, grown insolent with feeding,
That I should prize their noisy praise, or dread
Their noisome clamor?

Sal. You have said they are men;
As such their hearts are something.

Sar. So my dogs are;*
And better, as more faithful:—but, proceed;
Thou hast my signet:—since they are tumultuous,
Let them be temper'd, yet not roughly, till
Necessity enforce it. I hate all pain,
Given or received; we have enough within us,
The meanest vassal as the loftiest monarch,
Not to add to each other's natural burthen
Of mortal misery, but rather lessen,
By mild reciprocal alleviation,
The fatal penalties imposed on life:
But this they know not, or they will not know.
I have, by Baal! done all I could to soothe them:
I made no wars, I added no new imposts,
I interfered not with their civil lives.
I let them pass their days as best might suit them,
Passing my own as suited me.

Sal. Thou stopp'st
Short of the duties of a king; and therefore
They say thou art unfit to be a monarch.

Sar. They lie.—Unhappily, I am unfit
To be aught save a monarch; else for me,
The meanest Mede might be the king instead.

Sal. There is one Mede, at least, who seeks to be so.
Sar. What mean'st thou?—'t is thy secret; thou dost dearest

Few questions, and I'm not of curious nature.
Take the fit steps; and, since necessity
Requires, I sanction and support thee. Ne'er
Was man who more desired to rule in peace
The peaceful only: if they rouse me, better
They had conjured up stern Nimrod from his ashes,
"The mighty hunter." I will turn these realms
To one wide desert chase of brutes, who were,
But would no more, by their own choice, be human.
What they have found me, they belie; that which They yet may find me—shall defy their wish
To speak it worse; and let them thank themselves.

Sal. Then thou at last canst feel?
Sar. Feel! who feels not Ingratitude?

Sal. I will not pause to answer
With words, but deeds. Keep thou awake that energy

Which sleeps at times, but is not dead within thee,
And thou mayst yet be glorious in thy reign,
As powerful in thy realm. Farewell! [Exit Salmenece.]

Sar. [solus.]
He's gone; and on his finger bears my signet,
Which is to him a sceptre. He is stern
As I am heedless; and the slaves deserve
To feel a master. What may be the danger
I know not:—he hath found it, let him quell it.
Must I consume my life—this little life—
In guarding against all may make it less?
It is not worth so much! It were to die
Before my hour, to live in dread of death,
Tracing revolt; suspecting all about me,
Because they are near; and all who are remote,
Because they are far. But if it should be so—
If they should sweep me off from earth and empire,
Why, what is earth or empire of the earth?

*See page 485. "Inscription on the Monument of a New foundland Dog."

I have loved, and lived, and multiplied my image;
To die is no less natural than those—
Acts of this clay! 'Tis true I have not shed
Blood as I might have done, in oceans, till
My name became the synonym of death—
A terror and a trophy. But for this
I feel no penitence; my life is love:
If I must shed blood, it shall be by force.
Till now, no drop from an Assyrian vein
Hath flow'd for me, nor hath the smallest coin
Of Nineveh's vast treasures e'er been lavish'd
On objects which could cost her sons a tear:
If then they hate me, 'tis because I hate not:
If they rebel, 'tis because I oppress not.
Oh, men! ye must be ruled with scythes, not sceptres,
And mow'd down like the grass, else all we reap
Is rank abundance, and a rotten harvest
Of discontents infecting the fair soil,
Making a desert of fertility.—
I'll think no more.—Within there, ho!

Enter an Attendant.

Sar. Slave, tell
The Ionian Myrrha we would crave her presence.
Attend. King, she is here.

Myrrha enters.

Sar. (apart to Attendant.) Away!
(Addressing Myrrha.) Beautiful being!
Thou dost almost anticipate my heart:
It throb'd for thee, and here thou comest: let me
Deem that some unknown influence, some sweet oracle,

Communicates between us, though unseen,
In absence, and attracts us to each other.

Myr. There doth.

Sar. I know there doth, but not its name:
What is it?

Myr. In my native land a god,
And in my heart a feeling like a god's,
Exalted; yet I own 'tis only mortal;
For what I feel is humble, and yet happy—
That is, it would be happy; but—[Myrrha pauses.

Sar. There comes
For ever something between us and what
We deem our happiness: let me remove
The barrier which that hesitating accent
Proclaims to thine, and mine is seal'd.

Myr. My lord—my king—sire—sovereign! thus it is—

For ever thus, address'd with awe. I ne'er
Can see a smile, unless in some broad banquet's
Intoxicating glare, when the buffoons
Have gorged themselves up to equality,
Or I have quaff'd me down to their abasement.
Myrrha, I can hear all these things, these names,
Lord—king—sire—monarch—nay, time was I prized
them;

That is, I suffer'd them—from slaves and nobles;
But when they falter from the lips I love,
The lips which have been press'd to mine, a chill
Comes o'er my heart, a cold sense of the falsehood
Of this my station, which represses feeling
In those for whom I have felt most, and makes me
Wish that I could lay down the dull tiara,
And share a cottage on the Caucasus
With thee, and wear no crowns but those of flowers.

Myr. Would that we could!

Sar. And dost thou feel this?—Why?
Myr. Then thou wouldst know what thou canst never know.

Sar. And that is—

Myr. The true value of a heart;

At least, a woman's.

Sar. I have proved a thousand—
A thousand, and a thousand.

300

Myr.

Sar.

Myr. Not one! the time may come thou mayst.

Sar.

Hear, Myrrha; Salmenes has declared—
Or why or how he hath divin'd it, Belus,
Who founded our great realm, knows more than I—
But Salmenes hath declared my throne
In peril.

Myr. He did well.

Sar.

And sayst thou so?
Thou whom he spurn'd so harshly, and now dared
Drive from our presence with his savage jeers,
And made thee weep and blush?

Myr.

I should do both
More frequently, and he did well to call me
Back to my duty. But thou speak'st of peril—
Peril to thee—

Sar.

Ay, from dark plots and snares
From Medes—and discontented troops and nations.
I know not what—a labyrinth of things—
A maze of mutter'd threats and mysteries:
Thou know'st the man—it is his usual custom.
But he is honest. Come, we'll think no more on 't—
But of the midnight festival.

Myr.

'Tis time
To think of aught save festivals. Thou hast not Spurn'd his sage cautions?

Sar.

What?—and dost thou fear?

Myr.

I'm a Greek, and how should I fear
death?

A slave, and wherefore should I dread my freedom?

Sar.

Then wherefore dost thou turn so pale?

Myr.

I love.

And do not I? I love thee far—far more
Than either the brief life or the wide realm,
Which, it may be, are menaced;—yet I blench not.

Myr. That means thou lovest not thyself nor me;
For he who loves another loves himself,
Even for that other's sake. This is too rash:
Kingdoms and lives are not to be so lost.

Sar. Lost!—why, who is the aspiring chief who dared

Assume to win them?

Myr.

Who is he should dread
To try so much? When he who is their ruler
Forgets himself, will they remember him?

Sar.

Myrrha?

Myr.

Frown not upon me: you have smiled
Too often on me not to make those frowns
Bitterer to bear than any punishment

Which they may augur.—King, I am your subject!
Master, I am your slave! Man, I have loved you!—
Loved you, I know not by what fatal weakness,
Although a Greek, and born a foe to monarchs—
A slave, and hating fetters—an Ionian,
And, therefore, when I love a stranger, more
Degraded by that passion than by chains!

Still I have loved you. If that love were strong Enough to overcome all former nature,
Shall I not claim the privilege to save you?

Sar. Save me, my beauty! Thou art very fair,
And what I seek of thee is love—not safety.

Myr. And without love where dwells security?

Sar. I speak of woman's love.

Myr. The very first
Of human life must spring from woman's breast,
Your first small words are taught you from her lips,
Your first tears quench'd by her, and your last sighs

Too often breathed out in a woman's hearing,
When men have shrunk from the ignoble care
Of watching the last hour of him who led them.

Sar. My eloquent Ionian! thou speak'st much,
The very chorus of the tragic song

I have heard thee talk of as the favorite pastime
Of thy far father-land. Nay, weep not—calm thee

Myr. I weep not.—But I pray thee, do not speak
About my fathers or their land.

Sar. Yet oft
Thou speakst of them.

Myr. True—true: constant thought
Will overflow in words unconsciously;
But when another speaks of Greece, it wounds me.

Sar. Well, then, how wouldest thou save me, as thou saidst?

Myr. By teaching thee to save thyself, and not Thyself alone, but these vast realms, from all
The rage of the worst war—the war of brethren.

Sar. Why, child, I loathe all war, and warriors;
I live in peace and pleasure: what can man
Do more?

Myr. Alas! my lord, with common men
There needs too oft the show of war to keep
The substance of sweet peace; and for a king,
Tis sometimes better to be fear'd than loved.

Sar. And I have never sought but for the last.

Myr. And now art neither.

Sar. Dost thou say so, Myrrha?

Myr. I speak of civic popular love, self-love,
Which means that men are kept in awe and law,
Yet not oppress'd—at least they must not think so;
Or if they think so, deem it necessary,
To ward off worse oppression, their own passions.

A king of feasts, and flowers, and wine, and revel,
And love, and mirth, was never king of glory.

Sar. Glory! what's that?

Myr. Ask of the gods thy fathers.

Sar. They cannot answer; when the priests speak for them.

Tis for some small addition to the temple.

Myr. Look to the annals of thine empire's found-
ing.

Sar. They are so blotted o'er with blood, I cannot But what wouldest have? the empire has been founded.

I cannot go on multiplying empires.

Myr. Preserve thine own.

Sar. At least, I will enjoy it.

Come, Myrrha, let us go on to the Euphrates:
The hour invites, the galleys are prepared,
And the pavilion, deck'd for our return,
In fit adornment for the evening banquet,
Shall blaze with beauty and with light, until
It seems unto the stars which are above us
As if an opposite star; and we will sit Crown'd with fresh flowers like—

Victims.

Sar. No, like sovereigns,
The shepherd kings of patriarchal times,
Who knew no brighter gems than summer wreaths,
And none but teachen triumphs. Well, Pania,
Let us on.

Enter Pania.

Pan. May the king live for ever!

Sar. Not an hour
Longer than he can love. How my soul hates
This language, which makes life itself a lie,
Flattering dust with eternity. Well, Pania!
Be brief.

Pan. I am charged by Salmenes to Rehearse his prayer unto the king,
That for this day, at least, he will not quit
The palace: when the general returns,
He will release such reasons as will warrant
His absence, and perhaps obtain the pardon
Of his prohibition.

Sar. What! am I then coop'd?

Alas! can I not even breathe
The sweet air of heaven? Tell prince Salmenes,
When he comes tramping round the walls
Of my palace, I would still go forth.

And yet—

Oh, monarch, listen.—

How many a day and moon thou hast reclined
Within these palace walls in sicken dalliance,
And never shown thee to thy people's longing;
Leaving thy subjects' eyes ungratified.
The satraps uncontroll'd, the gods unworshipp'd,
And all things in the anarchy of sloth.
Till all, save evil, slumber'd through the realm!
And wilt thou not now tarry for a day,—
A day which may redeem thee? Wilt thou not Yield to the few still faithful a few hours.
For them, for thee, for thy past fathers' race,
And for thy sons' inheritance?

Pan. 'Tis true!
From the deep urgency with which the prince
Despatch'd me to your sacred presence, I Must dare to add my feeble voice to that
Which now has spoken.

Sar. No, it must not be.

Myr. For the sake of thy realm!

Sar. Away!

Pan. For that

Of all thy faithful subjects, who will rally
Round thee and thine!

Sar. These are mere fantasies:

There is no peril:—'t is a sullen scheme
Of Salmenes, to approve his seal,
And show himself more necessary to us.

Myr. By all that's good and glorious, take this counsel.

Sar. Business to-morrow.

Myr. Ay, or death to-night.

Sar. Why let it come then unexpectedly
'Midst joy and gentleness, mirth and love;
So let me fall like the pluck'd rose!—far better
Thus than be wither'd.

Myr. Then thou wilt not yield,

Even for the sake of all that ever stirr'd
A monarch into action, to forego
A trifling revel?

Sar. No.

Myr. Then yield for mine;

For my sake!

Sar. Thine, my Myrrha!

Myr. 'T is the first

Boon which I ever ask'd Assyria's king.

Sar. That's true, and were't my kingdom, must be granted.

Well, for thy sake, I yield me. Pania, hence!

Thou hear'st me.

Pan. And obey. [Exit Pania.]

Sar. I marvel at thee.

What is thy motive, Myrrha, thus to urge me?

Myr. Thy safety; and the certainty that nought
Could urge the prince thy kinsman to require
Thus much from thee, but some impending danger.

Sar. And if I do not dread it, why shouldst thou?

Myr. Because thou dost not fear, I fear for thee.

Sar. To-morrow thou wilt smile at these vain fancies.

Myr. If the worst come, I shall be where none
weep,

And that is better than the power to smile.

And thou?

Sar. I shall be king, as heretofore.

Myr. Where?

Sar. With Beal, Nimrod, and Semiramis,
Sole in Assyria, or with them elsewhere.

Fate made me what I am—may make me nothing—
But either that or nothing must I be:

I will not live degraded.

Myr. Hadst thou felt

Thus always, none would ever dare degrade thee.

Sar. And who will do so now?

Myr. Dost thou suspect none?

Sar. Suspect!—that's a spy's office. Oh! we lose

Ten thousand precious moments in vain words,

ACT II.

SARDANAPALUS.

SCENE I.

And vainer fears. Within there!—Ye slaves, deck
The hall of Nimrod for the evening revel:
If I must make a prison of our palace,
At least we'll wear our fetters jocundly:
If the Euphrates be forbid us, and
The summer dwelling on its beauteous border,
Here we are still unmenaced. Ho! within there!
(Exit Sardanapalus.)

Myr. (sola). Why do I love this man? My country's daughters
Love none but heroes. But I have no country!
The slave hath lost all save her bonds. I love him;
And that's the heaviest link of the long chain—
To love whom we esteem not. Be it so:
The hour is coming when he'll need all love,
And find none. To fall from him now were baser Than to have stabb'd him on his throne when highest
Would have been noble in my country's creed:

I was not made for either. Could I save him,
I should not love him better, but myself;
And I have need of the last, for I have fallen
In my own thoughts, by loving this soft stranger:
And yet methinks I love him more, perceiving
That he is hated of his own barbarians,
The natural foes of all the blood of Greece.
Could I but wake a single thought like those
Which even the Phrygians felt when battling him,
Twixt Ilion and the sea, within his heart,
He would tread down the barbarous crowds, and triumph.

He loves me, and I love him; the slave loves
Her master, and would free him from his vices.
If not, I have a means of freedom still,
And if I cannot teach him how to reign,
May show him how alone a king can leave
His throne. I must not lose him from my sight.
(Exit)

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Portal of the same Hall of the Palace.

Belshazzar (sola). The sun goes down: methinks he sets more slowly,
Taking his last look of Assyria's empire.
How red he glares amongst those deepening clouds,
Like the blood he predicts! If not in vain,
Thou sun that sinkest, and ye stars which rise,
I have outwatch'd ye, reading ray by ray
The edicts of your orbs, which make time tremble
For what he brings the nations, 'tis the furthest
Hour of Assyria's years. And yet how calm!
An earthquake should announce so great a fall—
A summer's sun disclose it. Yeon disk,
To the star-read Chaldean, bears upon
Its everlasting page the end of what Seem'd everlasting; but oh, thou true sun!
The burning oracle of all that live,
As fountain of all life, and symbol of
Him who bestows it, wherefore dost thou limit
Thy lore unto calamity? Why not Unfold the rise of days more worthy thine
All-glorious burst from ocean? why not dart
A beam of hope athwart the future years,
As of wrath to its days? Hear me! oh, hear me!
I am thy worshipper, thy priest, thy servant—
I have gazed on thee at thy rise and fall,
And bow'd my head beneath thy midday beams,
When my eye dared not meet thee. I have watch'd
For thee, and after thee, and pray'd to thee,
And sacrific'd to thee, and read, and fear'd thee,
And ask'd of thee, and thou hast answer'd—but
Only to thus much: while I speak, he sinks—
Is gone—and leaves his beauty, not his knowledge,
To the delighted west, which revels in Its hues of dying glory. Yet what is Death, so it be but glorious? 'Tis a sunset;
And mortals may be happy to resemble
The gods but in decay.

Enter Arbaces, by an inner door.

Arb. Belshazzar, why
So rapt in thy devotions? Dost thou stand
Gazing to trace thy disappearing god
Into some realm of undiscover'd day?
Our business is with night—'t is come.

Bel. But not

Gone.

Arb. Let it roll on—we are ready.

Bel. Yes.

Would it were over!

Arb. Does the prophet doubt,
To whom the very stars shine victory?

Bel. I do not doubt of victory—but the victor.

Arb. Well, let thy science settle that. Meantime
I have prepared as many glittering spears
As will out-sparkle our allies—your planets.
There is no more to thwart us. The she-king,
That less than woman, is even now upon
The waters with his female mates. The order
Is issued for the feast in the pavilion.
The first cup which he drains will be the last
Quaff'd by the line of Nimrod.

Bel. 'T was a brave one.

Arb. And is a weak one—'t is worn out—we'll mend it.

Bel. Art sure of that?

Arb. Its founder was a hunter—
I am a soldier—what is there to fear?

Bel. The soldier.

Arb. And the priest, it may be: but

If you thought thus, or think, why not retain

Your king of concubines? why stir me up?

Why spur me to this enterprise? your own

No less than mine?

Bel. Look to the sky! I look.

Arb. I look.

Arb. A fair summer's twilight, and

The gathering of the stars.

Bel. And midst them, mark

Yon earliest, and the brightest, which so quivers,

As it would quit its place in the blue ether.

Arb. Well?

Bel. 'T is thy natal ruler—thy birth planet.

Arb. (touching his scabbard). My star is in this scabbard: when it shines,

It shall out-dazzle comets. Let us think

Of what is to be done to justify

Thy planets and their portents. When we conquer,

They shall have temples—ay, and priests—and thou

Shalt be the pontiff of—what gods thou wilt;

For I observe that they are ever just,

And own the bravest for the most devout.

Bel. Ay, and the most devout for brave—thou hast not

Seen me turn back from battle.

Arb. No; I own thee

As firm in fight as Babylon's captain,

As skilful in Chaldaea's worship: now,

Will it but please thee to forget the priest,

And be the warrior?

Bel. Why not both?

Arb. The better; yet it almost shames me, we shall have little to effect. This woman's warfare surpasses the very conqueror. To have pluck'd bold and bloody despot from his throne, and grappled with him, clashing steel with steel, that were heroic or to win or fall; not to upraise my sword against this silkworm, and hear him whine, it may be—

Bel. Do not deem it; and were he all you think, his guards are hardy, and headed by the cool, stern Salemenes.

Arb. They'll not resist.

Bel. Why not? they are soldiers. True, and therefore need a soldier to command them.

Arb. That Salemenes is. But not their king. Besides, he hates the effeminate thing that governs, for the queen's sake, his sister. Mark you not he keeps aloof from all the revels?

Bel. But not from the council—there he is ever constant. Arb. And ever thwarted: what would you have more to make a rebel out of? A fool reigning, his blood dishonor'd, and himself disdain'd: why, it is his revenge we work for.

Bel. Could he be brought to think so: this I doubt of.

Arb. What, if we sound him?

Bel. Yes—if the time served.

Enter Balen. Bel. Satraps! The king commands your presence at the feast to-night. To hear is to obey.

Bel. In the pavilion?

Arb. No; here in the palace.

Bel. How! in the palace? It was not thus order'd.

Arb. It is no order'd now.

Bel. And why?

Arb. I know not.

Bel. May I retire?

Arb. Stay.

Bel. (to Arb. aside). Hush! let him go his way.

(Alternately to Bel.) Yes, Balen, thank the monarch, kiss the hem

Of his imperial robe, and say, his slaves

Will take the crumbs he deigns to scatter from his royal table at the hour—was't midnight?

Bel. It was: the place, the hall of Nimrod. Lords,

I humble me before you, and depart. [Exit Balen.]

Arb. I like not this sudden change of place;

There is some mystery: wherefore should he change it?

Bel. Doth he not change a thousand times a day?

Both is of all things the most fanciful—

And moves more passages in its intents

Than generals in their marches, when they seek

To leave their foe at fault.—Why dost thou muse?

Arb. He loved that gay pavilion,—it was ever

His summer dotage.

Bel. And he loved his queen—

And thrice a thousand harlotry beauties—

And he has loved all things by turns, except

Wisdom and glory.

Arb. Skill—I like it not.

It be has changed—why, so must we: the attack

Was easy in the isolated bower,

But with drawing guards and drunken courtiers:

But in the hall of Nimrod—

Is it so?

Must a feeble soldier fear'd to mount a horse—does it disappoint thee

To find there is a slipperier step or two

Than that was counted on?

Arb. When the hour comes,

Thou shalt perceive how far I fear or no.

Thou hast seen my life at stake—and gayly play'd for;

But here is more upon the die—a kingdom.

Bel. I have foretold already—thou wilt win it:

Then on, and prosper.

Arb. Now were I a soothsayer,

I would have boded so much to myself.

But be the stars obey'd—I cannot quarrel

With them, nor their interpreter. Who's here?

Enter Salemenes.

Sal. Satraps!

Bel. My prince!

Sal. Well met—I sought ye both,

But elsewhere than the palace.

Arb. Wherefore so?

Sal. 'Tis not the hour.

Arb. The hour!—what hour?

Sal. Of midnight.

Bel. Midnight, my lord!

Sal. What, are you not invited?

Bel. Oh! yes—we had forgotten.

Sal. Is it usual

Thus to forget a sovereign's invitation?

Arb. Why—we but now received it.

Sal. Then why here?

Arb. On duty.

Sal. On what duty?

Bel. On the state's.

We have the privilege to approach the presence;

But found the monarch absent.

Sal. And I too

Am upon duty.

Arb. May we crave its purport?

Sal. To arrest two traitors. Guards! Within there!

Enter Guards.

Sal. Satraps,

Your swords.

Bel. (delivering his). My lord, behold my scimitar.

Arb. (drawing his sword). Take mine.

Sal. (advancing). I will.

Arb. But in your heart the blade—

The hilt quite not this hand.

Sal. (drawing). How! dost thou brave me?

'T is well—this saves a trial, and false mercy.

Soldiers, hew down the rebel!

Arb. Soldiers! Ay—

Alone you dare not.

Sal. Alone! foolish slave—

What is there in thee that a prince should shrink from

Of open force? We dread thy treason, not

Thy strength: thy tooth is nought without its venom—

The serpent's, not the lion's. Cut him down.

Bel. (interposing). Arbaces! are you mad? Have

I not render'd

My sword? Then trust like me our sovereign's

justice.

Arb. No—I will sooner trust the stars thou

Brav'st of.

And this slight arm, and die a king at least

Of my own breath and body—so far that

None else shall chain them.

Sal. (to the Guards). You hear him, and me.

Take him not,—kill.

[The Guards attack Arbaces, who defends himself valiantly and dexterously till they waver.

Sal. Is it even so; and must

I do the hangman's office? Recreants! see

How you should fell a traitor.

[Salemenes attacks Arbaces.

Enter Sardanapalus and Train.

Sar. Hold your hands—
Upon your lives, I say. What, deaf or drunken?
My sword! O fool, I wear no sword: here, fellow,
Give me thy weapon. [To a Guard.]

[Sardanapalus snatches a sword from one of the soldiers, and rushes between the combatants—they separate.]

Sar. In my very palace!
What hinders me from cleaving you in twain,
Audacious brawlers?

Bel. Sire, your justice.

Sar. Or—

Your weakness.

Sar. [raising the sword.] How?

Bel. Strikes! so the blow's repeated
Upon you traitor—whom you spare a moment,
I trust, for torture—I'm content.

Sar. What—him!

Who dares assail Arbaces?

Sol. I!

Sar. Indeed!

Prince, you forget yourself. Upon what warrant?

Sol. [showing the signal.] Thine.

Arb. [confused.] The king's!

Sol. Yes! and let the king confirm it.

Sar. I parted not from this for such a purpose.

Sol. You parted with it for your safety—I

Employ'd it for the best. Pronounce in person.

Here I am but your slave—a moment past

I was your representative.

Sar. Then sheathe

Your swords.

[Arbaces and Salemenes return their swords to the eunuchs.]

Sol. Mine's sheathed: I pray you sheathe not yours;

'Tis the sole sceptre left you now with safety.

Sar. A heavy one; the hilt, too, hurts my hand.

[To a Guard.] Here, fellow, take thy weapon back.

Well, sire,

What doth this mean?

Bel. The prince must answer that.

Sol. Truth upon my part, treason upon theirs.

Sar. Treason—Arbaces! treachery and Belesar!

That were an union I will not believe.

Bel. Where is the proof?

Sol. I'll answer that, if once

The king demands your fellow-traitor's sword.

Arb. [to Sol.] A sword which hath been drawn

as oft as thine

Against his foes.

Sol. And now against his brother,

And in an hour or so against himself.

Sar. That is not possible: be dared not; no—

No—I'll not hear of such things. These vain dickerings

Are spawn'd in courts by base intrigues, and base

Hirelings, who live by lies on good men's lives.

You must have been deceived, my brother.

Sol.

Let him deliver up his weapon, and

Proclaim himself your subject by that duty,

And I will answer all.

Sar. Why, if I thought so—

But no, it cannot be: the Mede Arbaces—

The trusty, rough, true soldier—the best captain

Of all who discipline our nations—No,

I'll not insult him thus, to bid him render

The scimitar to me he never yielded

Unto our enemies. Chief, keep your weapon.

Sol. [delivering back the signal.] Monarch, take back your signal.

Sar. No, retain it;

But use it with more moderation.

Sol. Sire,

I used it for your honor, and restore it
Because I cannot keep it with my own.
Bestow it on Arbaces.

Sar. So I should:

He never ask'd it.

Sol. Doubt not, he will have it.

Without that hollow semblance of respect.

Bel. I know not what hath prejudiced the prince

So strongly 'gainst two subjects, than whom none

Have been more zealous for Assyria's weal.

Sol. Peace, factious priest and faithless soldier!

thou

Unit'st in thy own person the worst vices

Of the most dangerous orders of mankind.

Keep thy smooth words and juggling homilies

For those who know thee not. Thy fellow's sin

Is, at the least, a bold one, and not temper'd

By the tricks taught thee in Chaldaea.

Bel.

My liege—the son of Belus! he blasphemes

The worship of the land, which bows the knee

Before your fathers.

Sar. Oh! for that I pray you

Let him have absolution. I dispense with

The worship of dead men; feeling that I

Am mortal, and believing that the race

From whence I sprung are—what I see them—ashes.

Bel. King! do not deem so: they are with the stars,

And—

Sar. You shall join them there ere they will die,

If you preach further—Why, this is rank treason.

Sol. My lord!

Sar. To school me in the worship of Assyria's idols! Let him be released—

Give him his sword.

Sol. My lord, and king, and brother,

I pray ye pause.

Sar. Yes, and be sermoniz'd.

And dinn'd, and deafen'd with dead men and dead,

And all Chaldaea's starry mysteries.

Bel. Monarch! respect them.

Sar. Oh! for that—I love them!

I love to watch them in the deep blue vault,

And to compare them with my Myrrha's eyes;

I love to see their rays redoubled in

The tremulous silver of Euphrates' wave,

As the light breeze of midnight crimps the broad

And rolling water, sighing through the sedges

Which fringe his banks: but whether they may be

Gods, as some say, or the abodes of gods,

As others hold, or simply lamps of night,

Worlds, or the lights of worlds, I know nor care not.

There's something sweet in my uncertainty

I would not change for your Chaldaean lore;

Besides, I know of these all clay can know

Of aught above it, or below it—nothing.

I see their brilliancy and feel their beauty—

When they shine on my grave I shall know neither.

Bel. For neither, sire, say better.

Sar. I will wait,

If it so please you, pontiff, for that knowledge.

In the mean time receive your sword, and know

That I prefer your service militant

Unto your ministry—not loving either.

Sol. [aside.] His lusts have made him mad. Then must I save him,

Spite of himself.

Sar. Please you to hear me, monarch!

And chiefly thou, my priest, because I doubt thee

More than the soldier; and would doubt thee all

Wert thou not half a warrior: let us part

In peace—I'll not say pardon—which must be

Earn'd by the guilty: this I'll not pronounce ye,

Although upon this breath of mine depends

Your own; and, deadlier for ye, on my fate.

But fear not—for that I am soft, not tender.

And so live on. What I like thing some think me,
 Your heads would now be dripping the last drops
 Of their attained gore from the high gates
 Of this our palace, into the dry dust,
 Their only portion of the coveted kingdom
 They would be crown'd to reign o'er—let that pass.
 As I have said, I will not deem ye guilty,
 Nor deem ye guiltless. Albeit better men
 Than ye or I stand ready to arraign you;
 And should I leave your fate to sterner judges,
 And proofs of all kinds, I might sacrifice
 Two men, who, whatever they now are, were Once honest. Ye are free, sirs.

Arb. Sirs, this clemency—

Bel. (interrupting him). Is worthy of yourself;
 and, although innocent,

We thank—

Ser. Priest! keep your thankgivings for Belus;
 His offspring needs none.

Bel. But being innocent—

Ser. Be silent—Guilt is loud. If ye are loyal,
 Ye are injured men, and should be sad, not grateful.

Bel. So we should be, were justice always done
 By earthly power omnipotent; but innocence
 Must oft receive her right as a mere favor.

Ser. That's a good sentence for a homily,
 Though not for this occasion. Priests keep it
 To plead thy sovereign's cause before his people.

Bel. I trust there is no cause.

Ser. No cause, perhaps;

But many causes:—if ye meet with such
 In the exercise of your inquisitive function
 On earth, or should you read of it in heaven
 In some mysterious twinkle of the stars,
 Which are your chronicles, I pray you note,
 That there are worse things betwixt earth and heaven.

Than him who ruleth many and slays none;
 And, hating not himself, yet loves his fellows
 Enough to spare even those who would not spare him
 Were they once masters—but that's doubtful. Satraps!

Your swords and persons are at liberty
 To use them as ye will—but from this hour
 I have no call for either. Salmenees!
 Follow me.

[Exeunt Sardanapalus, Salmenees, and the Train, etc., leaving Arbaces and Belus.]

Bel. Now what think you?

Arb. That we are lost.

Bel. That we have won the kingdom.

Arb. What? thus suspected—with the sword slung o'er me

But by a single hair, and that still wavering,
 To be blown down by his imperious breath
 Which spared us—why, I know not.

Bel. Seek not why;

But let us profit by the interval.
 The hour is still our own—our power the same—
 The night the same we destined. He hath changed
 Nothing except our ignorance of all
 Suspicion into such a certainty
 As must make madness of delay.

Arb. And yet—

Bel. What, doubting still?

Arb. He spared our lives, nay, more,
 Saved them from Salmenees.

Bel. And how long

Will it so spare? till the first drunken minute.
 Arb. Or sober, rather. Yet he did it nobly;
 Gave royally what we had forfeited

Bel. Say bravely.

Arb. Somewhat of both, perhaps.
 But Salmenees'd me, and, whatever betide,
 I will not shrink on.

Bel. And lose the world!
 Arb. Lose anything except my own esteem.
 Bel. I blush that we should owe our lives to such
 A king of distaffs!

Arb. But no less we owe them;
 And I should blush far more to take the grantor's!
 Bel. Thou mayst endure what'er thou wilt—the stars

Have written otherwise.
 Arb. Though they came down,
 And marshall'd me the way in all their brightness,

I would not follow.

Bel. This is weakness—worse
 Than a sacred beldam's dreaming of the dead,
 And waking in the dark.—Go to—go to!

Arb. Methought he look'd like Nimrod as he spoke,

Even as the proud imperial statue stands
 Looking the monarch of the kings around it,
 And aways, while they but ornament, the temple.

Bel. I told you that you had too much despised

him,

And that there was some royalty within him—

What then? he is the nobler foe.

Arb. But wa

The meaner.—Would he had not spared us!

Bel. So—

Wouldst thou be sacrificed thus readily?

Arb. No—but it had been better to have died
 Than live ungrateful.

Bel. Oh, the souls of some men!

Thou wouldst digest what some call treason, and

Fools treachery—and, behold, upon the sudden,

Because for something or for nothing, this

Rash reveller steps, ostentatiously,

'Twixt thee and Salmenees; thou art turn'd

Into—what shall I say?—Sardanapalus!

I know no name more ignominious.

Arb. But

An hour ago, who dared to term me such

Had held his life but lightly—as it is,

I must forgive you, even as he forgave us—

Salmenees herself would not have done it.

Bel. No—the queen liked no sharers of the kingdom,

Not even a husband.

Arb. I must serve him truly—

Bel. And humbly?

Arb. No, sir, proudly—being honest.

I shall be nearer thrones than you to heaven;

And if not quite so haughty, yet more lofty.

You may do your own deeming—you have codes,

And mysteries, and corollaries of Right and wrong, which I lack for my direction,

And must pursue but what a plain heart teaches.

But now you know me.

Bel. Have you finish'd?

Arb. Yes—

With you.

Bel. And would, perhaps, betray as well

As quit me?

Arb. That's a sacerdotal thought,

And not a soldier's.

Bel. Be it what you will—

Truce with these wranglings, and but hear me.

Arb. No—

There is more peril in your subtle spirit

Than in a phalanx.

Bel. If it must be so—

I'll on alone.

Arb. Alone!

Bel. Thrones hold but one.

Arb. But this is all'd.

Bel. With worse than vacancy—

A despised monarch. Look to it, Arbaces:

I have still aided, cherish'd, loved, and urged you!

Was willing even to serve you, in the hope
To serve and save Assyria. Heaven itself
Seem'd to consent, and all events were friendly,
Even to the last, till that your spirit shrunk
Into a shallow softness; but now, rather Than see my country languish, I will be
Her saviour or the victim of her tyrant,
Or one or both, for sometimes both are one;
And, if I win, Arbaces is my servant.

Arb. Your servant!

Bel. Why not? better than be slave,
The pardon'd slave of the Sardanapalus!

Enter Pania.

Pan. My lords, I bear an order from the king.
Arb. It is obey'd ere spoken.

Bel. Notwithstanding,
Let's hear it.

Pan. Forthwith, on this very night,
Repair to your respective satrapies
Of Babylon and Media.

Bel. With our troops?

Pan. My order is unto the satraps and
Their household train.

Arb. But—

It must be obey'd:

Say, we depart.

Pan. My order is to see you
Depart, and not to bear your answer.

Bel. (aside). Ay!

Well, sir, we will accompany you hence.
Pan. I will retire to marshal forth the guard
Of honor which befits your rank, and wait
Your leisure, so that if the hour exceeds not.

[Exit Pania.]

Bel. Now then obey!

Arb. Doubtless.

Bel. Yes, to the gates
That grate the palace, which is now our prison—
No further.

Arb. Thou hast harp'd the truth indeed!
The realm itself, in all its wide extension,
Yawns dungeons at each step for thee and me.

Bel. Graves!

Arb. If I thought so, this good sword should dig
One more than mine.

Bel. It shall have work enough.
Let me hope better than thou augurst;

At present, let us hence as best we may.
Thou dost agree with me in understanding
This order as a sentence?

Arb. Why, what other

Interpretation should it bear? It is
The very policy of orient monarchs—

Pardon and poison—favours and a sword—
A distant voyage, and an eternal sleep.

How many satraps in his father's time—
For he I own is, or at least was, bloodless—

Bel. But will not, can not be so now.

Arb. I doubt it.
How many satraps have I seen set out
In his sire's day for mighty vicerealties,
Whose tombs are on their path! I know not how,
But they all sicken'd by the way, it was
So long and heavy.

Bel. Let us but regain
The free air of the city, and we'll shorten
The journey.

Arb. 'T will be shorten'd at the gates,
It may be.

Bel. No; they hardly will risk that.
They mean us to die privately, but not
Within the palace or the city walls,
Where we are known, and may have partisans:
If they had meant to slay us here, we were
No longer with the living. Let us hence.

Arb. If I but thought he did not mean my life—

Bel. Fool! hence—what else should despotism alarm?

Mean? Let us but rejoin our troops, and march.

Arb. Towards our provinces?

Bel. No; towards your kingdom.

There's time, there's heart, and hope, and power,
and means,

Which their half measures leave us in full scope—
Away!

Arb. And I even yet repenting must Relapse to guilt!

Bel. Self-defence is a virtue,

Sole bulwark of all right. Away, I say!

Let's leave this place, the air grows thick and choking,

And the walls have a scent of nightshade—hence!
Let us not leave them time for further council.

Our quick departure proves our civic zeal;

Our quick departure hinders our good escort,

The worthy Pania, from anticipating

The orders of some parang from hence:

Nay, there's no other choice, but—hence, I say!

[Exit with Arbaces, who follows reluctantly.]

Enter Sardanapalus and Salemenes.

Sar. Well, all is remedied, and without bloodshed,
That worst of mockeries of a remedy;

We are now secure by these men's exile.

Sal. Yes,

As he who treads on flowers is from the adder

Twined round their roots.

Sar. Why, what wouldst have me do?

Sal. Undo what you have done.

Sar. Revoke my pardon?

Sal. Replace the crown now tottering on your temples.

Sar. That were tyrannical.

Sal. But sure.

We are so.

What danger can they work upon the frontier?

Sal. They are not there yet—never should they be so.

Were I well listen'd to.

Sar. Nay, I have listen'd

Impartially to thee—why not to them?

Sal. You may know that hereafter; as it is,

I take my leave, to order forth the guard.

Sar. And you will join us at the banquet?

Sal. Sire,

Dispense with me—I am no wassailer:

Command me in all service save the Bacchant's.

Sar. Nay, but 'tis fit to revel now and then.

Sal. And fit that some should watch for those who revel

Too oft. Am I permitted to depart?

Sar. Yes—Stay a moment, my good Salemenes,

My brother, my best subject, better prince

Than I am king. You should have been the monarch,

And I—I know not what, and care not; but Think not I am insensible to all

Thine honest wisdom, and thy rough yet kind,

Though oft-reproving, suzerance of my follies.

If I have spared these men against thy counsel,

That is, their lives—it is not that I doubt

The advice was sound; but, let them live: we will

not

Cavil about their lives—so let them mend them.

Their banishment will leave me still sound asleep,

Which their death had not left me.

Sal.

Thus you run

The risk to sleep forever, to save traitors—

A moment's pang now changed for years of crime.

Still let them be made quiet.

Sar.

Tempt me not:

My word is past.

Sal.

But it may be recall'd.

Sar. 'T is royal.

Sol. And should therefore be decisive.
This half indulgence of an exile serves
But to provoke—a pardon should be full,
Or it is none.

Ser. And who persuaded me
After I had repeal'd them, or at least
Only dismiss'd them from our presence, who Urged me to send them to their satrapies?

Sol. True; that I had forgotten; that is, sire,
If they e'er reach'd their satrapies—why, then,
Reprove me more for my advice?

Ser. And if
They do not reach them—look to it!—in safety,
In safety, mark me—and security—
Look to thine own.

Sol. Permit me to depart;
Their safety shall be cared for.

Ser. Get thee hence, then;
And, prithee, think more gently of thy brother.

Sol. Sire, I shall ever duly serve my sovereign.
[Exit Salmeneus.]

Ser. (solus). That man is of a temper too severe;
Hard but as lofty as the rock, and free
From all the taints of common earth—while I Am softer clay, impregnated with flowers:
But as our mould is, must the produce be.
If I have err'd this time, 'tis on the side
Where error sits most lightly on that sense,
I know not what to call it; but it reckons
With me oftentimes for pain, and sometimes pleasure.

A spirit which seems placed about my heart
To count its throbs, not quicken them, and ask Questions which mortal never dared to ask me,
For Beal, though an oracular deity—
Albeit his marble face majestic
Frowns as the shadows of the evening dim
His brows to changed expression, till at times
I think the statue looks in act to speak.
Away with these vain thoughts! I will be joyous—
And here comes Joy's true herald.

Enter Myrrha. King! the sky
Is overcast, and masters muttering thunder,
In clouds that seem approaching fast, and show
In forked flashes a commanding tempest.
Will you then quit the palace?

Ser. Tempest, sayst thou?

My. Ay, my good lord.

Ser. For my own part, I should be
Not ill content to vary the smooth scene,
And watch the warring elements; but this
Would little suit the silken garments and Smooth faces of our festive friends. Say, Myrrha,
Art thou of those who dread the roar of clouds?

My. In my own country we respect their voices
As auguries of Jove.

Ser. Jove!—ay, your Beal—

Ours also has a property in thunder,
And ever and anon some falling bolt
Proves his divinity,—and yet sometimes
Strikes his own altar.

My. That were a dread omen.

Ser. Yes—for the priests. Well, we will not go forth

Beyond the palace walls to-night, but make
Our feast within.

My. Now, Jove be praised! that he Hath heard the prayer thou wouldst not hear. The gods

Are kinder to thee than thou to thyself,
And flash this storm between thee and thy foes,
To abide thee from them.

Ser. Child, if there be peril,
Methinks it is the same within these walls
As on the river's brink.

My. Not so; these walls
Are high, and strong, and guarded. Treason has
To penetrate through many a winding way,
And many portal; but in the pavilion
There is no bulwark.

Ser. No, nor in the palace,
Nor in the fortress, nor upon the top
Of cloud-fenced Caucasus, where the eagle sits Nestled in pathless clefts, if treachery be:
Even as the arrow finds the airy king,
The steel will reach the earthly. But be calm:
The men, or innocent or guilty, are Banish'd, and far upon their way.

My. They live, then?

Ser. So anguinary? Thou! I would not shrink
From just infliction of due punishment
On those who seek your life: were 't otherwise,
I should not merit mine. Besides, you heard
The princely Salmeneus.

Ser. This is strange;
The gentle and the austere are both against me,
And urge me to revenge.

My. 'Tis a Greek virtue.
Ser. But not a kingly one—I'll none on 't; or
If ever I indulge in 't, it shall be
With kings—my equals.

My. These men sought to be so.
Ser. Myrrha, this is too feminine, and springs
From fear—

My. For you.

Ser. No matter, still 'tis fear.
I have observed your sex, once roused to wrath,
Are timidly vindictive to a pitch
Of perseverance, which I would not copy.
I thought you were exempt from this, as from
The childish helplessness of Asian women.

My. My lord, I am no boaster of my love,
Nor of my attributes; I have shared your splendor,
And will partake your fortunes. You may live
To find one alive more true than subject myriads:
But this the gods avert! I am content
To be beloved on trust for what I feel,
Rather than prove it to you in your griefs,
Which might not yield to any cares of mine.

Ser. Grief cannot come where perfect love exists,
Except to brighten it, and vanish from
That which it could not scare away. Let's in—
The hour approaches, and we must prepare
To meet the invited guests, who grace our feast.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Hall of the Palace illuminated.—
Sardanapalus and his Guests at Table.—A Storm without, and Thunder occasionally heard during the Banquet.

Ser. Will fall! why this is as it should be: here
Is my tragedy, amidst bright eyes and faces
Smiling to me! Here sorrow cannot reach.

Zam. Nor elsewhere—where the king is, pleasure sparkles.

Ser. Is not this better now than Nimrod's hunt-
ings.

Or my wild grandam's chase in search of kingdoms
She could not keep when conquer'd?

Al. Mighty though

They were, as all thy royal line have been,

Yet none of those who went before have reach'd
The acmé of Sardanapalus, who
Has placed his joy in peace—the sole true glory.

Sar. And pleasure, good Altada, to which glory
Is but the path. What is it that we seek?
Enjoyment! We have cut the way short to it,
And not gone tracking it through human ashes,
Making a grave with every footstep.

Zam. No;
All hearts are happy, and all voices bless
The king of peace, who holds a world in jubilee.

Sar. Art sure of that? I have heard otherwise;
Some say that there be traitors.

Zam. Traitors they
Who dare to say so!—"T is impossible.
What cause?

Sar. What cause? true,—all the goblet up?
We will not think of them: there are none such,
Or if there be, they are gone.

Alt. Guests, to my pledge!
Down on your knees, and drink a measure to
The safety of the king—the monarch, say I?
The god Sardanapalus!

[Zames and the Guests kneel, and exclaim—Mightier than
His father Baal, the god Sardanapalus!

[It thunders as they kneel; some start up in confusion.

Zam. Why do you rise, my friends? in that strong
peal
His father gods consented.

Myr. Menaced, rather.
King, wilt thou bear this mad impiety?

Sar. Impiety!—nay, if the sires who reign'd
Before me can be gods, I'll not disgrace
Their lineage. But arise, my pious friends;
Hoard your devotion for the thunderer there:
I seek but to be loved, not worshipp'd.

Alt. Both—
Both you must ever be by all true subjects.

Sar. Methinks the thunders still increase: it is An awful night.

Myr. Oh yes, for those who have
No palace to protect their worshippers.

Sar. That's true, my Myrrha; and could I convert
My realm to one wide shelter for the wretched,
I'd do it.

Myr. Thou'rt no god, then, not to be Able to work a will so good and general,
As thy wish would imply.

Sar. And your gods, then,
Who can, and do not?

Myr. Do not speak of that,
Lest we provoke them.

Sar. True, they love not censure
Better than mortals. Friend, a thought has struck
me:

Were there no temples, would there, think ye, be
Air worshippers? that is, when it is angry,
And petting as even now.

Myr. The Persian prays
Upon his mountain.

Sar. Yes, when the sun shines.
Myr. And I would ask, if this your palace were Unroof'd and desolate, how many flatterers
Would lick the dust in which the king lay low?

Alt. The fair Ionian is too sarcastic
Upon a nation whom she knows not well;
The Assyrians know no pleasure but their king's,
And homage is their pride.

Sar. Nay, pardon, guests,
The fair Greek's readiness of speech.

Alt. Pardon! sire:
We honor her of all things next to thee.

Hark! what was that?

Zam. That! nothing but the jar
Of distant portals shaken by the wind.

Alt. It sounded like the clash of—Hark again!

Zam. The big rain pattering on the roof.

Sar. No more.
Myrrha, my love, hast thou thy shell in order?
Sing me a song of Sappho, her, thou know'st,
Who in thy country threw—

Enter Pania, with his sword and garments bloody and disordered. The Guests rise in confusion.

Pan. (to the Guards). Look to the portals;
And with your best speed to the walls without.

Your arms! To arms! The king's in danger. Monarch,

Excuse this haste,—'t is faith.

Sar. Speak on.

Pan. It is
As Salemenes fear'd: the faithless satraps—

Sar. You are wounded—give some wine. Take breath, good Pania.

Pan. 'Tis nothing—a mere flesh wound. I am worn

More with my speed to warn my sovereign,
Than hurt in his defence.

Myr. Well, sir, the rebels?

Pan. Soon as Arbaces and Belshazzar reach'd
Their stations in the city, they refused

To march; and on my attempt to use the power
Which I was delegated with, they call'd

Upon their troops, who rose in fierce defiance.

Myr. All?

Pan. Too many.

Sar. Spare not of thy free speech
To spare mine ears the truth.

Pan. My own slight guard
Were faithful, and what's left of it is still so.

Myr. And are these all the force still faithful?

Pan. No—

The Bactrians, now led on by Salemenes,
Who even then was on his way, still urged
By strong suspicion of the Median chiefs,
Are numerous, and make strong head against
The rebels, fighting inch by inch, and forming
An orb around the palace, where they mean
To centre all their force, and save the king.

(He hesitates.) I am charged to—

Myr. 'T is no time for hesitation.
Pan. Prince Salemenes doth implore the king
To arm himself, although but for a moment,
And show himself unto the soldiers: his
Sole presence in this instant might do more
Than hosts can do in his behalf.

Sar. What, ho!

My armor there.

Myr. And wilt thou?

Sar. Will I not?
Ho, there!—But seek not for the buckler: 't is Too heavy:—a light cuirass and my sword.

Where are the rebels?

Pan. Scarce a furlong's length
From the outward wall, the fiercest conflict rages.

Sar. Then I may charge on horseback. Sifters, ho!
Order my horse out.—There is space enough

Even in our courts, and by the outer gate,
To marshal half the horsemen of Arabia.

[Exit Sfero for the armor.

Myr. How I do love thee!

Sar. I ne'er doubted it.

Myr. But now I know thee.

Sar. (to his Attendants). Bring down my spear, too—

Where's Salemenes?

Pan. Where a soldier should be,
In the thick of the fight.

Sar. Then hasten to him—Is
The path still open, and communication

Left 'twixt the palace and the phalanx?

Pan.

'T was

When I late left him, and I have no fear:
Our troops were steady, and the phalanx form'd.
Sar. Tell him to spare his person for the present,
And that I will not spare my own—and say,
I come.

Pen. There's victory in the very word.

[Exit Penia.]
Sar. Alçada—Zames—forth, and arm ye! There
Is all in readiness in the armory.
See that the women are bestow'd in safety
In the remote apartments: let a guard
Be set before them, with strict charge to quit
The post but with their lives—command it, Zames.
Alçada, arm yourself, and return here:
Your post is near our person.

[Mount Zames, Alçada, and all save Myrrha.]

Enter Sfero and others with the King's Arms, etc.

Sfe. King! your arms.

Sar. (arming himself). Give me the cuirass—so:
my baldric; now

My sword: I had forgot the helm—where is it?
That's well—no, 't is too heavy: you mistake,
too—

It was not this I meant, but that which bears
A diadem around it.

Sfe. Sir, I deem'd
That too conspicuous from the precious stones
To risk your sacred brow beneath—and, trust me,
This is of better metal, though less rich.

Sar. You deem'd it! Are you too turn'd a rebel?
Fellow!

Your part is to obey: return, and—no—
It is too late—I will go forth without it.

Sfe. At least, wear this.

Sar. Wear Caucasus! why, 't is
A mountain on my temples.

Sfe. Sir, the meanest
Soldier goes not forth thus exposed to battle.
All men will recognize you—for the storm
Has ceased, and the moon breaks forth in her bright—

Sar. I go forth to be recognized, and thus Shall be no sooner. Now—my spear! I'm arm'd.

[In going steps short, and turns to Sfero.]
Sfero—I had forgotten—bring the mirror.

Sfe. The mirror, sir?
Sar. Yes, sir, of polish'd brass,
Brought from the spoils of India—but be speedy.

[Exit Sfero.]
Sar. Myrrha, retire unto a place of safety.
Why want you not forth with the other damsels?

Myr. Because my place is here.
Sar. And when I am gone—

Myr. I follow.
Sar. You! to battle?

Myr. If it were so,
I were not the first Greek girl had trod the path.

I will wait here your return.

Sar. The place
Is spacious, and the first to be sought out,
If they prevail; and if it be so,
And I return not—

Myr. Still we meet again.
Sar. How?

Myr. In the spot where all must meet at last—
In Hades! if there be, as I believe,
A shore beyond the Styx: and if there be not,
In ashes.

Sar. Darest thou so much?

Myr. I dare all things,
To retrieve what I have loved, to be
A wife's body: forth, and do your bravest.

[Re-enter Sfero with the mirror.]
Sfe. (to Myrrha). This cuirass fits me well,

And the helm not at all. Methinks I seem [Flings away the helmet after trying it again.]
Passing well in these toys; and now to prove them.
Alçada! Where's Alçada?

Sfe. Waiting, sire,
Without: he has your shield in readiness.

Sar. True: I forgot he is my shield-bearer
By right of blood, derived from age to age.
Myrrha, embrace me—yet once more—once more—
Love me, whate'er betide. My chiefest glory
Shall be to make me worthy of your love.

Myr. Go forth, and conquer!
[Re-enter Sardanapalus and Sfero.]

Now, I am alone.

All are gone forth, and of that all how few Perhaps return! Let him but vanquish, and Me perish! If he vanquish not, I perish:
For I will not outlive him. He has wound
About my heart, I know not how nor why.
Not for that he is king: for now his kingdom
Rocks underneath his throne, and the earth yawns

To yield him no more of it than a grave;
And yet I love him more. Oh, mighty Jove!
Forgive this monstrous love for a barbarian,
Who knows not of Olympus! yes, I love him
Now, now, far more than—Hark—to the war about!

Methinks it nears me. If it should be so,
[She draws forth a small vial.]

This cunning Colchian poison, which my father Learn'd to compound on Euxine shores, and taught
me

How to preserve, shall free me! It had freed me
Long ere this hour, but that I loved, until
I half forgot I was a slave:—where all
Are slaves save one, and proud of servitude,
So they are served in turn by something lower
In the degree of bondage, we forget
That shackles worn like ornaments no less
Are chains. Again that shout! and now the clash
Of arms—and now—and now—

[Enter Alçada.]

Alk. Ho, Sfero, ho!

Myr. He is not here; what wouldst thou with him? How

Goes on the conflict?

Alk. Dubiously and fiercely.

Myr. And the king?

Alk. Like a king. I must find Sfero,
And bring him a new spear and his own helmet.

He fights till now bareheaded, and by far
Too much exposed. The soldiers knew his face,
And the foe too; and in the moon's broad light,
His silk tiara and his flowing hair

Make him a mark too royal. Every arrow
Is pointed at the fair hair and fair features,
And the broad fillet which crowns both.

Myr. Ye gods,
Who fulminate o'er my father's land, protect him!

Were you sent by the king?

Alk. By Salemenes,

Who sent me privily upon this charge,
Without the knowledge of the careless sovereign.

The king! the king fights as he reveals! ho!

What, Sfero! I will seek the armory—
He must be there.

[Exit Alçada.]

Myr. 'T is no dishonor—no—
'T is no dishonor to have loved this man.

I almost wish now, what I never wish'd
Before, that he were Grecian. If Alcides
Were shamed in wearing Lylian Omphale's
She-garb, and wielding her vile distaff, surely
He, who springs up a Hercules at once,
Nursed in effeminate arts from youth to manhood,
And rushes from the banquet to the battle,
As though it were a bed of love, deserves

That a Greek girl should be his paramour,
And a Greek bard his minstrel, a Greek tomb
His monument. How goes the strife, sir?

Enter an Officer.

Officer. Lost, almost past recovery. Zamez! Where Is Zamez?

Myr. Posted with the guard appointed
To watch before the apartment of the women.

[Exit Officer.]

Myr. (sola.) He's gone; and told no more than that all's lost!

What need have I to know more? In those words,
Those little words, a kingdom and a king,
A line of thirteen ages, and the lives
Of thousands, and the fortune of all left
With life, are merged; and I, too, with the great,
Like a small bubble breaking with the wave
Which bore it, shall be nothing. At the least,
My fate is in my keeping: no proud victor
Shall count me with his spoils.

Enter Pania.

Pan. Away with me,
Myrrha, without delay; we must not lose
A moment—all that's left us now.

Myr. The king?
Pan. Sent me here to conduct you hence, beyond
The river, by a secret passage.

Myr. Then
He lives—

Pan. And charged me to secure your life,
And beg you to live on for his sake, till
He can rejoice you.

Myr. Will he then give way?
Pan. Not till the last. Still, still he does what he Despair can do; and step by step disputes
The very palace.

Myr. They are here, then:—ay,
Their shouts coming ringing through the ancient halls,
Never profaned by rebel echoes till
This fatal night. Farewell, Assyria's line!
Farewell to all of Nimrod! Even the name
Is now no more.

Pan. Away with me—away!
Myr. No: I'll die here!—Away, and tell your king
I loved him to the last.

Enter Sardanapalus and Salemenes with Soldiers.
Pania quits Myrrha, and ranges herself with them.

Sar. Since it is thus,
We'll die where we were born—in our own halls.
Serry your ranks—stand firm. I have despatch'd
A trusty squire for the guard of Zamez,
All fresh and faithful; they'll be here anon.
All is not over.—Pania, look to Myrrha.

[Pania returns towards Myrrha.]

Sol. We have breathing time: yet once more charge, my friends—
One for Assyria!

Sar. Rather say for Bactria!
My faithful Bactrians, I will henceforth be King of your nation, and we'll hold together
This realm as province.

Sol. Hark! they come—they come.

Enter Beleses and Arbaces with the Rebels.

Arb. Set on, we have them in the toll. Charge!
charge!

Bel. On! on!—Heaven fights for us, and with us.
—On!

[They charge the King and Salemenes with their Troops, who defend themselves till the arrival of Zamez, with the Guard before *mentioned. The Rebels are then driven off, and pursued by Salemenes, &c. As the King is going to join the pursuit, Beleses crosses

him.*

Bel. Ho! tyrant—I will end this war.

Sar. Even so,
My warlike priest, and precious prophet, and
Grateful and trusty subject:—yield, I pray thee.
I would reserve thee for a sifter doom.
Rather than dip my hands in holy blood.

Bel. Thine hour is come.

Sar. No, thine.—I've lately read,
Though but a young astrologer, the stars;
And ranging round the zodiac, found thy fate
In the sign of the Scorpion, which proclaims
That thou wilt now be crush'd.

Bel. But not by thee.

[They fight; Beleses is wounded and disarmed.]
Sar. (raising his sword to despatch him, exclaiming)—
Now call upon thy planets, will they shoot
From the sky to preserve thy rear and credit?

[A party of Rebels enter and rescue Beleses.]
They assault the King, who, in turn, is rescued by a party of his Soldiers, who drive the Rebels off.

The villain was a prophet after all.

Upon them—ho! there—victory is ours.

[Exit in pursuit.]
Myr. (to Pan.). Pursue! Why stand'st thou here, and leav'st the ranks

Of fellow soldiers conquering without thee?

Pan. The king's command was not to quit thee.

Myr. No!
Think not of me—a single soldier's arm
Must not be wanting now. I ask no guard,
I need no guard: what, with a world at stake,
Keep watch upon a woman? Hence, I say,
Or thou art shamed! Nay, then, I will go forth,
A feeble female, 'midst their desperate strife,
And bid thee guard me there—where thou should'st shield

Thy sovereign.

[Exit Myrrha.]

Pan. Yet stay, damsel!—She is gone.
If aught of ill betide her, better I
Had lost my life. Sardanapalus holds her
Far dearer than his kingdom, yet he fights
For that too; and can I do less than he,
Who never flash'd a scimitar till now?
Myrrha, return, and I obey you, though
In disobedience to the monarch.

[Exit Pania.]

Enter Altada and Sfero by an opposite door.

Alt. Myrrha!
What, gone? yet she was here when the fight raged,
And Pania also. Can aught have befallen them?

Sfe. I saw both safe, when late the rebels fled:
They probably are but retired to make
Their way back to the harem.

Alt. If the king
Prove victor, as it seems even now he must,
And miss his own Ionian, we are doom'd
To worse than captive rebels.

Sfe. Let us trace them:
She cannot be fled far; and, found, she makes
A richer prize to our soft sovereign
Than his recover'd kingdom.

Alt. Real himself
Ne'er fought more fiercely to win empire, than
His sliken son to save it; he defies
All augury of foes or friends; and lies
The close and sultry summer's day, which bodes
A twilight tempest, bursts forth in such thunder
As sweeps the air and deluges the earth.
The man's inscrutable.

Sfe. Not more than others.
All are the sons of circumstance; away—
Let's seek the slave out, or prepare to be

Tortured for his indolence, and Condemn'd without a crime.

[Aloud.]

Enter Salemenes and Soldiers, etc.

Sal. The triumph is Flattering: they are beaten backward from the palace,
And we have open'd regular access
To the troops station'd on the other side
Euphrates, who may still be true: nay, must be,
When they hear of our victory. But where
Is the chief victor? where's the king?

Enter Sardanapalus, crown'd, etc., and Myrrha.

Sal. Here, brother.

Sal. Unhurt, I hope.

Sal. Not quite; but let it pass.

We've clear'd the palace—

Sal. And I trust the city.

Our numbers gather; and I've order'd onward

A cloud of Parthians, hitherto reserved,

All fresh and sary, to be pour'd upon them

In their retreat, which soon will be a flight.

Sal. It is already, or at least they march'd

Faster than I could follow with my Bactrians,

Who spared no speed. I am spent: give me a seat.

Sal. There stands the throne, sire.

Sal. 'Tis no place to rest on,

For mind nor body: let me have a couch,

[They place a seat.]

A peasant's stool, I care not what: so—now

I breathe more freely.

Sal. This great hour has proved

The brightest and most glorious of your life.

Sal. And the most tiresome. Where's my cupbearer?

Bring me some water.

Sal. (smiling). 'Tis the first time he Ever had such an order: even I,

Your most suters of counsellors, would now

Suggest a purpler beverage.

Sal. Blood—doubtless.

But there's enough of that shed; as for wine,

I have learn'd to-night the price of the pure element:

Thrice have I drank of it, and thrice renew'd,

With greater strength than the grape ever gave me,

My charge upon the rebels. Where's the soldier

Who gave me water in his helmet?

One of the Guards. Slain, sire!

An arrow pierc'd his brain, while, scattering

The last drops from his helm, he stood in act

To place it on his brow.

Sal. Slain! unrewarded!

And slain to serve my thirst: that's hard, poor

slave!

Had he but lived, I would have gorged him with

Gold: all the gold of earth could ne'er repay

The pleasure of that draught: for I was parch'd

As I am now. [They bring water—he drinks.]

I live again—from henceforth

The goblet I reserve for hours of love,

But war on water.

Sal. And that handage, sire,

Which girds your arm?

Sal. A scratch from brave Belshazz.

Myr. Oh! he is wounded!

Sal. Not too much of that;

And yet it feels a little stiff and painful,

Now I am cooler.

Myr. You have bound it with—

Sal. The fillet of my diadem: the first time

That ornament was ever sought to me

Save on interturbance.

Myr. (to the Guards). Summon speedily

A band of the most skilful: pray, retire:

I will attend your wound and tend it.

Sal. Do so,

For now it throbs sufficiently: but what

Know'st thou of wounds? yet wherefore do I ask?

Know'st thou, my brother, where I lighted on

This minion?

Sal. Herding with the other females,

Like frighten'd antelopes.

Sal. No; like the dam

Of the young lion, femininely raging

(And femininely maneth furiously,

Because all passions in excess are female)

Against the hunter flying with her cub,

She urged on with her voice and gesture, and

Her flaming hair and flashing eyes, the soldiers,

In the pursuit.

Sal. Indeed!

Sal. You see, this night

Made warriors of more than me. I paused

To look upon her, and her kindled cheek;

Her large black eyes, that flash'd through her long

hair

As it stream'd o'er her; her blue veins that rose

Along her most transparent brow; her nostril

Dilated from its symmetry; her lips

Apart; her voice that clove through all the din,

As a lute's piercest through the cymbals' clash,

Jarr'd but not drown'd by the loud brattling; her

Waved arms, more dazzling with their own born whiteness

Than the steel her hand held, which she caught up

From a dead soldier's grasp;—all these things

made

Her seem unto the troops a prophesess

Of victory, or Victory herself,

Come down to hail us hers.

Sal. (aside). This is too much.

Again the love-fit's on him, and all's lost,

Unless we turn his thoughts.

[Aloud.] But pray thee, sire,

Think of your wound—you said even now 'twas painful.

Sal. That's true, too; but I must not think of it.

Sal. I have look'd to all things needful, and will receive reports of progress made in such

Orders as I had given, and then return

To hear your further pleasure.

Sal. Be it so.

Sal. (in retiring). Myrrha!

Myr. Prince!

Sal. You have shown a soul to-night,

Which, were he not my sister's lord—But now

I have no time; thou lovest the king?

Myr. I love

Sardanapalus.

Sal. But wouldst have him king still?

Myr. I would not have him less than what he should be.

Sal. Well then, to have him king, and yours, and

all

He should, or should not be; to have him Nee,

Let him not sink back into luxury.

You have more power upon his spirit than

Wisdom within these walls, or fierce rebellion

Raging without: look well that he relapse not.

Myr. There need not the voice of Salemenes

To urge me on to this: I will not fail.

All that a woman's weakness can—

Sal. Is power

Omnipotent o'er such a heart as his:

Exert it wisely. [Exit Salemenes.]

Sal. Myrrha! what, at whispers

With my stern brother? I shall soon be jealous.

Myr. (smiling). You have cause, sire; for on the earth there breathes not

A man more worthy of a woman's love—

A soldier's trust—a subject's reverence—
A king's esteem—the whole world's admiration!
Sar. Praise him, but not so warmly. I must not Hear those sweet lips grow eloquent in sight
That throws me into shade: yet you speak truth.

Myr. And now retire, to have your wound look'd to.
Pray, lean on me.
Sar. Yes, love! but not from pain.
[Exeunt cross.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Sardanapalus discovered sleeping upon a Couch, and occasionally disturbed in his Slumbers, with Myrrha watching.

Myr. (sola, gazing). I have stolen upon his rest, if rest it be,
Which thus convulses slumber: shall I wake him?
No, he seems calmer. Oh, thou God of Quiet!
Whose reign is o'er seal'd eyelids and soft dreams,
Or deep, deep sleep, so as to be unfathom'd,
Look like thy brother, Death—so still—so stirless—
For then we are happiest, as it may be, we
Are happiest of all within the realm
Of thy stern, silent, and unawakening twin.
Again he moves—again the play of pain
Shoots o'er his features, as the sudden gust
Cries the reluctant lake that lay so calm
Beneath the mountain shadow; or the blast
Ruffles the autumn leaves, that drooping cling
Faintly and motionless to their loved boughs.
I must awake him—yet not yet: who knows
From what I rouse him? It seems pain; but if I quicken him to heavier pain? The fever
Of this tumultuous night, the grief too of His wound, though slight, may cause all this, and shake

Me more to see than him to suffer. No:
Let Nature use her own maternal means,
And I attend to second, not disturb her.

Sar. (awakening). Not so—although ye multiplied the stars,
And gave them to me as a realm to share
From you and with you! I would not so purchase
The empire of eternity. Hence—hence—
Old hunter of the earliest brutes! and ye,
Who hunted fellow creatures as if brutes!
Once bloody mortals—and now bloodier idols,
If your priests lie not! And thou, ghastly beldam!
Dripping with dusky gore, and trampling on
The carcases of Ind—away! away!
Where am I? Where the spectres? Where—

No—that
Is no false phantom: I should know it 'midst
All that the dead dare gloomily raise up
From their black gulf to daunt the living. Myrrha!

Myr. Alas! thou art pale, and on thy brow the drops

Gather like night dew. My beloved, hush—
Calm thee. Thy speech seems of another world,
And thou art lord of this. Be of good cheer;
All will go well.

Sar. Thy hand—so—'tis thy hand;
'Tis flesh; grasp—clasp—yet closer, till I feel Myself that which I was.

Myr. At least know me
For what I am, and ever must be—thine.

Sar. I know it now. I know this life again.
Ah, Myrrha! I have been where we shall be.

Myr. My lord!

Sar. I've been 't the grave—where worms are lords,

And kings are—But I did not deem it so;
I thought 't was nothing.

Myr. So it is; except Unto the timid, who anticipate
That which may never be.

Sar. Oh, Myrrha! if Sleep shows such things, what may not death disclose?

Myr. I know no evil death can show, which life
Has not already shown to those who live
Embodied longest. If there be indeed
A shore where mind survives, 't will be as mind,
All unincorporate: or if there fits
A shadow of this cumbrous clog of clay,
Which stalks, methinks, between our souls and
heaven,
And fetters us to earth—at least the phantom,
Whate'er it have to fear, will not fear death.

Sar. I fear it not; but I have felt—have seen—
A legion of the dead.

Myr. And so have I.
The dust we tread upon was once alive,
And wretched. But proceed: what hast thou seen?
Speak it, 't will lighten thy dream'd mind.

Sar. Methought—
Myr. Yet pause, thou art tired—in pain—in hastened; all

Which can impair both strength and spirit: seek Rather to sleep again.

Sar. Not now—I would not Dream; though I know it now to be a dream
What I have dreamt:—and canst thou bear to hear it?

Myr. I can bear all things, dreams of life or death,
Which I participate with you, in semblance
Or full reality.

Sar. And this look'd real,
I tell you: after that these eyes were open,
I saw them in their flight—for then they fled.

Myr. Say on.

Sar. I saw, that is, I dream'd myself
Here—here—even where we are, guests as we were,
Myself a host that deem'd himself but guest,
Willing to equal all in social freedom;
But, on my right hand and my left, instead
Of thee and Zamea, and our custom'd meeting,
Was ranged on my left hand a baughty, dark,
And deadly face; I could not recognize it,
Yet I had seen it, though I knew not where:
The features were a giant's, and the eye
Was still, yet lighted; his long locks curl'd down
On his vast bust, whence a huge quiver rose
With shaft-heads feather'd from the eagle's wing,
That peep'd up bristling through his serpent hair.
I invited him to fill the cup which stood
Between us, but he answer'd not; I fill'd it—
He took it not, but stared upon me, till
I trembled at the fix'd glare of his eye:
I frown'd upon him as a king should frown;
He frown'd not in his turn, but look'd upon me
With the same aspect, which appall'd me more,
Because it chang'd not: and I turn'd for refuge
To milder guests, and sought them on the right,
Where thou wert wont to be. But—

Myr. [Exeunt cross.]
What hast thou seen?
Sar. In thy own chair—thy own place in the quiet—

I sought thy sweet face in the circle—thou
Instead—a gray-hair'd, wither'd, bloody-
And bloody-handed, ghastly, ghastly thing.

Female in garb, and crown'd upon the brow,
Furrow'd with years, yet sneering with the passion

Of vengeance, leering too with that of lust,
Sate:—my veins curdled.

Myr.

In this all?

Upon
Her right hand—her lank, bird-like, right hand—stood

A goblet, bubbling o'er with blood; and on
Her left, another, fill'd with—what I saw not,
But turn'd from it and her. But all along
The table sat a range of crown'd wretches,
Of various aspects, but of one expression.

Myr. And felt you not this a mere vision?

Sar.

No:

It was so palpable, I could have touch'd them.

I turn'd from one face to another, in
The hope to find at last one which I knew
Ere I saw theirs: but no—all turn'd upon me,
And stared, but neither ate nor drank, but stared,
Till I grew stone, as they seem'd half to be,
Yet breathing stone, for I felt life in them,
And life in me: there was a horrid kind
Of sympathy between us, as if they
Had lost a part of death to come to me,
And I the half of life to sit by them.

We were in an existence all apart
From heaven or earth—And rather let me see Death all than such a being!

Myr.

And the end?

Sar. At last I ate, marble, as they, when rose
The hunter and the crone; and smiling on me—
Yes, the enlarged but noble aspect of
The hunter smiled upon me—I should say,
His lips, for his eyes moved not—and the woman's Thin lips relax'd to something like a smile.
Both rose, and the crown'd figures on each hand
Rose also, as if aping their chief shades—
Mine mimics even in death—but I ate still:
A desperate courage crept through every limb.
And at the last I fear'd them not, but laugh'd
Full in their phantom faces. But then—then
The hunter laid his hand on mine; I took it,
And grasp'd it—but it melted from my own;
While he too vanish'd, and left nothing but
The memory of a hero, for he look'd so.

Myr. And was: the ancestor of heroes, too,
And thine no less.

Sar.

Ay, Myrrha, but the woman,

The female who remain'd, she flew upon me,
And burnt my lips with her noisome kisses;
And, flinging down the goblets on each hand,
Methought their poisons flow'd around us, till
Each form'd a hideous river. Still she clung:
The other phantoms, like a row of statues,
Stood dull as in our temples, but she still Embraced me, while I shrink from her, as if,
In lieu of her remote descendant, I
Had been the son who slew her for her incest.
Then—then—a chaos of all loathsome things
Throng'd thick and shapeless: I was dead, yet feel-

ing—
Buried, and raised again—consumed by worms,
Purged by the flames, and wither'd in the air!
I can fix nothing further of my thoughts,
Save that I long'd for thee, and sought for thee,
In all these agonies,—and woke and found thee.

Myr. So shalt thou find me ever at thy side,
Here and hereafter, if the last may be.
But think not of these things—The mere creations
Of late events, acting upon a frame
Bound to toil, yet overwrought by toil
Such as might try the sternest.

Sar.

I am better.

Now that I see thee once more, what was seen
Before—

Enter Salemenes.

Sol.

Is the king so soon awake?

Sar. Yes, brother, and I would I had not slept;
For all the predecessors of our line
Rose up, methought, to drag me down to them.
My father was amongst them, too; but he,
I know not why, kept from me, leaving me
Between the hunter-founder of our race,
And her, the homicide and husband-killer,
Whom you call glorious.

Sol.

So I term you also,

Now you have shown a spirit like to hers.
By daybreak I propose that we set forth
And charge once more the rebel crew, who still Keep gathering head, repulsed, but not quite quell'd.

Sar. How wears the night?

Sol.

There yet remains some hours

Of darkness: use them for your further rest.

Sar. No, not to-night, if 'tis not gone: methought

I pass'd hours in that vision.

Myr.

Scarcely one;

I watch'd by you: it was a heavy hour,
But an hour only.

Sar.

Let us then hold council:

To-morrow we set forth.

Sol.

But are that time

I had a grace to seek.

Sar.

'Tis granted.

Sol.

Hear it

Ere you reply too readily; and 'tis

For your ear only.

Myr.

Prince, I take my leave.

[Exit Myrrha.]

Sol.

That slave deserves her freedom.

Sar.

Freedom only!

That slave deserves to share a throne.

Sol.

Your patience—

'Tis not yet vacant, and 'tis of its partner

I come to speak with you.

Sar.

How! of the queen?

Sol. Even so. I judged it fitting for their safety,
That, ere the dawn, she set forth with her children
For Paphlagonia, where our kinsman Cotta
Governs; and there at all events secure
My nephews and your sons their lives, and with
them

Their just pretensions to the crown in case—

Sar. I perish—as is probable; well thought—
Let them set forth with a sure escort.

Sol.

That

Is all provided, and the galley ready
To drop down the Euphrates; but ere they Depart, will you not see—

Sar.

My sons? It may

Unman my heart, and the poor boys will weep;
And what can I reply to comfort them,
Save with some hollow hopes, and ill-worn smiles?
You know I cannot feign.

Sol.

But you can feel!

At least, I trust so: in a word, the queen
Requests to see you ere you part—for ever.

Sar. Unto what end? what purpose? I will grant
Aught—all that she can ask—but such a meeting.

Sol. You know, or ought to know, enough of women,

Since you have studied them so steadily,
That what they ask in aught that touches on
The heart, is dearer to their feelings or
Their fancy, than the whole external world.

I think as you do of my sister's wish;
But 'twas her wish—she is my sister—you
Her husband—will you grant it?

Sar.

'T will be useless.

But let her come.

Sar. I go. [Exit Salmenes.]
 Sar. We have lived asunder
 Too long to meet again—and now to meet!
 Have I not scars, and pangs, and snow,
 To bear alone, that we must mingle sorrows,
 Who have ceased to mingle love?

Re-enter Salmenes and Zarina.

Sar. My sister! Courage:
 Shame not our blood with trembling, but remember
 From whence we sprung. The queen is present, sire.
 Zar. I pray thee, brother, leave me.

Sar. Since you ask it.
[Exit Salmenes.]

Zor. Alone with him! How many a year has pass'd,
 Though we are still so young, since we have met,
 Which I have worn in widowhood of heart!
 He loved me not: yet he seems little changed—
 Changed to me only—would the change were mutual!

He speaks not—scarce regards me—not a word,
 Nor look—yet he was soft of voice and aspect,
 Indifferent, not austere. My lord!

Sar. Zarina!
 Zor. No, not Zarina—do not say Zarina.
 That tone—that word—annihilate long years,
 And things which make them longer.

Sar. 'T is too late
 To think of these past dreams. Let's not reproach—
 That is, reproach me not—for the last time—
 Zor. And first, I ne'er reproach'd you.

Sar. 'T is most true;
 And that reproach comes heavier on my heart.
 Than—But our hearts are not in our own power.
 Zor. Nor hands; but I gave both.

Sar. Your brother said
 It was your will to see me, are you went
 From Nineveh with—[He hesitates.]

Zor. Our children: it is true.
 I wish'd to thank you that you have not divided
 My heart from all that's left it now to love—
 Those who are yours and mine, who look like you,
 And look upon me as you look'd upon me
 Once—But they have not changed.

Sar. Nor ever will.
 I fain would have them dutiful.

Zor. I cherish
 Those infants, not alone from the blind love
 Of a fond mother, but as a fond woman.
 They are now the only tie between us.

Sar. Deem not
 I have not done you justice: rather make them
 Resemble your own line, than their own sire.
 I trust them with you—to you: fit them for
 A throne, or, if that be denied—You have heard
 Of this night's tumults?

Zor. I had half forgotten,
 And could have welcomed any grief, save yours,
 Which gave me to behold your face again.

Sar. The throne—I say it not in fear—but 't is
 In peril: they perhaps may never mount it;
 But let them not for this lose sight of it.
 I will dare all things to bequeath it them;
 But if I fail, then they must win it back
 Bravely—and, won, wear it wisely, not as I
 Have wasted down my royalty.

Zor. They ne'er
 Shall know from me of aught but what may honor
 Their father's memory.

Sar. Rather let them hear
 The truth from you than from a trampling world.
 If they be in adversity, they'll learn
 Too soon the scorn of crowds for crownless princes,
 And find that all their father's sins are theirs.
 My boys—I could have borne it were I childless.

Zor. Oh! do not say so—do not poison all

My peace left, by unwishing that thou wert
 A father. If thou conquerest, they shall reign,
 And honor him who saved the realm for them,
 So little cared for as his own; and if—

Sar. 'T is lost, all earth will cry out, Thank your father!

And they will swell the echo with a curse.
 Zor. That they shall never do; but rather honor
 The name of him, who, dying like a king,
 In his last hours did more for his own memory
 Than many monarchs in a length of days,
 Which date the flight of time, but make no annals.

Sar. Our annals draw perchance unto their close;
 But at the least, what'er the past, their end
 Shall be like their beginning—memorable.

Zor. Yet, be not rash—be careful of your life,
 Live but for those who love.

Sar. And who are they?
 A slave, who loves from passion—I'll not say
 Ambition—she has seen throes shake, and loves:
 A few friends who have revel'd till we are
 As one, for they are nothing if I fall;
 A brother I have injured—children whom
 I have neglected, and a spouse—

Who loves.

Zor. And pardons?
 Sar. I have never thought of this,
 And cannot pardon till I have condemn'd.

Sar. My wife!
 Zor. Now blessings on thee for that word!
 I never thought to hear it more—from thee.

Sar. Oh! thou wilt hear it from my subjects.
 Yes—

These slaves, whom I have nurtured, pamper'd, fed,
 And swain with peace, and gorged with plenty, till
 They reign themselves—all monarchs in their imaginations—

Now swarm forth in rebellion, and demand
 His death, who made their lives a jubilee;
 While the few upon whom I have no claim
 Are faithful! This is true, yet monstrous.

Zor. 'T is Perhaps too natural; for benefits
 Turn poison in bad minds.

Sar. And good ones make Good out of evil. Happier than the bee,
 Which hives not but from wholesome flowers.

Zor. Then may
 The honey, nor inquire whence 't is derived.
 Be satisfied—you are not all abandon'd.

Sar. My life insures me that. How long, bethink
 you,

Were not I yet a king, should I be mortal;
 That is, where mortals are, not where they must be?
 Zor. I know not. But yet live for me—that is,
 Your children's sake!

Sar. My gentle, wrong'd Zarina!

I am the very slave of circumstance
 And impulse—borne away with every breath!

Misplaced upon the throne—misplaced in life.
 I know not what I could have been, but feel
 I am not what I should be—let it end.

But take this with thee: if I was not arm'd
 To prize a love like thine, a mind like thine,
 Nor dote even on thy beauty—as I've doted
 On lesser charms, for no cause save that such Devotion was a duty, and I hated

All that look'd like a chain for me or others
 (This even rebellion must avouch); yet hear
 These words, perhaps among my last—~~that none~~
 E'er valued more thy virtues, though he knew not

To profit by them—as the miner lights
 Upon a vein of virgin ore, discovering
 That which avails him nothing: he hath found it,
 But 't is not his—but some superior's, who Placed him to dig, but not divide the wealth.

Which sparkles at his feet; nor dare he dig—

Not poise it, but must grovel on, upturning
The sullen earth.

Sar. Oh! If thou hast at length
Discover'd that my love is worth esteem,
I ask no more—but let us hence together,
And I—let me say so—ah! yet be happy.
Assyria is not all the earth—we'll find
A world out of our own—and be more blest'd
Than I have ever been, or thou, with all
An empire to indulge thee.

Enter Salmenes.

Sai. I must part ye—
The moments, which must not be lost, are passing.
Sar. Inhuman brother! wilt thou thus weigh out
Instants so high and blest?

Sai. Blest!
Sar. He hath been
So gentle with me, that I cannot think
Of quitting.

Sai. So—this feminine farewell
Kinds as such partings end, in no departure.
I thought as much, and yielded against all
My better bodings. But it must not be.

Sar. Not be?
Sai. Remain, and perish—
Sar. With my husband—

Sai. And children.
Sar. Alas!
Sai. Hear me, sister, like
My sister—all's prepared to make your safety
Certain, and of the boys too, our last hopes:
'Tis not a single question of mere feeling,
Though that were much—but 't is a point of state:
The rebels would do more to seize upon
The offspring of their sovereign, and so crush—
Sar. Ah! do not name it.

Sai. Well, then, mark me: when
They are safe beyond the Median's grasp, the rebels
Have rais'd their chief aim—the extinction of
The line of Nimrod. Though the present king
Fall, his sons live for victory and vengeance.
Sar. But could not I remain, alone?

Sai. What! leave
Your children, with two parents and yet orphans—
In a strange land—so young, so distant?

Sar. No—
My heart will break.

Sai. Now you know all—decide.
Sar. Zarina, he hath spoken well, and we Must yield awhile to this necessity.
Remaining here, you may lose all; departing,
You save the better part of what is left,
To both of us, and to such loyal hearts
As yet beat in these kingdoms.

Sai. The time presses.

Sar. Go, then. If e'er we meet again, perhaps
I may be worthier of you—and, if not,
Remember that my faults, though not atoned for,
Are ended. Yet, I dread thy nature will Grieve more above the blighted name and ashes
Which once were mightiest in Assyria—than—
But I grow womanish again, and must not:
I must learn sternness now. My sins have all
Been of the softer order—hide thy tears—
I do not bid thee not to shed them—'t were Easier to stop Euphrates at its source
Than one tear of a true and tender heart—
But let me not behold them; they unman me.
Hear when I had reman'd myself. My brother,
Lead her away.

Sar. Oh, God! I never shall
Behold him more!

Sai. (turning to conduct Sar.) Nay, sister, I must be obey'd.

Sar. I must remain—away! you shall not hold me.
He shall be alone!—I live alone!

Sai. He shall not die alone; but lonely you
Have lived for years.

Sar. That's false! I knew he lived,
And lived upon his image—let me go!

Sai. (conducting her off the stage.) Nay, then, I must use some fraternal force,
Which you will pardon.

Sar. Never. Help me! Oh!
Sardanapalus, wilt thou thus behold me
Torn from thee?

Sai. Nay—then all is lost again,
If that this moment is not gain'd.

Sar. My brain turns—
My eyes fail—where is he? (She faints.)

Sar. (advancing.) No—set her down—
She's dead—and you have slain her.

Sai. 'T is the mere
Faintness of o'erwrought passion: in the air
She will recover. Pray, keep back.—(Aside.) I must Aval myself of this sole moment to Bear her to where her children are embark'd,
I' the royal galley on the river. (Salmenes bears her
Sar. (solus.) This, too— (off.)

And this too must I suffer—I, who never Inflicted purposely on human hearts
A voluntary pang! But that is false—
She loved me, and I loved her.—Fatal passion!
Why dost thou not expire at once in hearts
Which thou hast lighted up at once? Zarina!
I must pay dearly for the desolation
Now brought upon thee. Had I never loved
But thee, I should have been an unopposed
Monarch of honoring nations. To what gulfs
A single deviation from the track
Of human duties leads even those who claim
The homage of mankind as their born due,
And find it, till they forfeit it themselves!

Enter Myrrha.

Sar. You here! Who call'd you?

Myr. No one—but I heard
Far off a voice of wail and lamentation,
And thought—

Sar. It forms no portion of your duties
To enter here till sought for.

Myr. Though I might,
Perhaps, recall some softer words of yours
(Although they too were childing), which reproved me,
Because I ever dreaded to intrude;
Resisting my own wish and your injunction
To heed no time nor place, but approach you
Uncall'd for:—I retire.

Sar. Yet stay—being here.
I pray you pardon me: events have sour'd me
Till I wax peevish—heed it not: I shall Soon be myself again.

Myr. I wait with patience,
What I shall see with pleasure.

Sar. Scarce a moment
Before your entrance in this hall, Zarina,
Queen of Assyria, departed hence.

Myr. Ah!

Sar. Wherefore do you start?
Myr. Did I do so?

Sar. 'T was well you enter'd by another portal.
Else you had met. That pang at least is spared her!

Myr. I know to feel for her.
Sar. That is too much,
And beyond nature—'t is not mutual
Nor possible. You cannot pity her,
Nor she ought but—

Myr. Despise the favorite slave?
Not more than I have ever scorn'd myself.

Sar. Scorn'd! what, to be the envy of your sex,
And lord it o'er the heart of the world's lord?

Myr. Were you the lord of twice ten thousand worlds—

As you are like to lose the one you sway'd—
I did abuse myself as much in being
Your paramour, as though you were a peasant—
Nay, more, if that the peasant were a Greek.

Sar. You talk it well—

And truly.

In the hour
Of man's adversity all things grow daring
Against the falling; but as I am not Quite fall'n, nor now disposed to bear reproaches,
Perhaps because I merit them too often,
Let us then part while peace is still between us.

Myr. Part!

Sar. Have not all past human beings parted,
And must not all the present one day part?

Myr. Why?

Sar. For your safety, which I will have look'd
to,

With a strong escort to your native land;
And such gifts, as, if you had not been all
A queen, shall make your dowry worth a kingdom.

Myr. I pray you talk not thus.

Sar. The queen is gone:
You need not shame to follow. I would fall
Alone—I seek no partners but in pleasure.

Myr. And I no pleasure but in parting not.

You shall not force me from you.

Sar. Think well of it—

It soon may be too late.

Myr. So let it be;

For then you cannot separate me from you.

Sar. And will not; but I thought you wish'd it.

Myr. I!

Sar. You spoke of your abasement.

Myr. And I feel it

Deeply—more deeply than all things but love.

Sar. Then fly from it.

Myr. 'T will not recall the past—

'T will not restore my honor, nor my heart.

No—here I stand or fall. If that you conquer,

I live to joy in your great triumph: should

Your lot be different, I'll not weep, but share it.

You did not doubt me a few hours ago.

Sar. Your courage never—nor your love till

now;

And none could make me doubt it save yourself.

Those words—

Myr. Were words. I pray you, let the proofs

Be in the past acts you were pleased to praise

This very night, and in my further bearing,

Beside, wherever you are borne by fate.

Sar. I am content; and, trusting in my cause,

Think we may yet be victors and return

To peace—the only victory I covet.

To me war is no glory—conquest no

Remown. To be forced thus to uphold my right

Sits heavier on my heart than all the wrongs

These men would bow me down with. Never,

never

Can I forget this night, even should I live

To add it to the memory of others.

I thought to have made mine inoffensive rule

An era of sweet peace 'midst bloody annals,

A green spot amidst desert centuries,

On which the future would turn back and smile,

And cultivate, or sigh when it could not Recall Sardanapalus' golden reign.

I thought to have made my realm a paradise,

And every moon an epoch of new pleasures.

I took the rabble's shouts for love—the breath

Of friends for truth—the lips of woman for

My only guerdon—so they are, my Myrrha:

(He kisses her.)

Kiss me. Now let them take my realm and life!

They shall have both, but never thee!

Myr.

Man may despoil his brother man of all

No, never

That's great or glittering—kingdoms fall—bests yield—

Friends fall—lives fly—and all betray—and, more

Than all, the most indebted—but a heart

That loves without self-love! 'Tis here—now prove it.

Enter Salemenes.

Sar. I sought you—How! she here again?

Sar. Return not

Now to reproof: methinks your aspect speaks

Of higher matter than a woman's presence.

Sar. The only woman whom it much imports me

At such a moment now is safe in absence—

The queen's embark'd.

Sar. And well? say that much.

Sar.

Her transient weakness has pass'd o'er; at least,

It settled into tearless silence: her

Pale face and glittering eye, after a glance

Upon her sleeping children, were still fix'd

Upon the palace towers as the swift galley

Stole down the hurrying stream beneath the star-

light;

But she said nothing.

Sar. Would I felt no more

Than she has said!

Sar. 'Tis now too late to feel.

Your feelings cannot cancel a sole pang:

To change them, my advices bring sure tidings

That the rebellious Medes and Chaldees, marshall'd

By their two leaders, are already up

In arms again; and, serrying their ranks,

Prepare to attack: they have apparently

Been joined by other satraps.

Sar.

Let us be first, then.

Sar. That were hardly prudent

Now, though it was our first intention. If

By noon to-morrow we are join'd by those

I've sent for by sure messengers, we shall be

In strength enough to venture an attack,

Ay, and pursuit too: but till then, my voice

Is to await the onset.

Sar.

I detest

That waiting: though it seems so safe to fight

Behind high walls, and hurl down foes into

Deep fosses, or behold them sprawl on spikes

Strew'd to receive them, still I like it not—

My soul seems lukewarm; but when I set on

them,

Though they were piled on mountains, I would have

A pluck at them, or perish in hot blood!—

Let me then charge!

Sar. You talk like a young soldier.

Sar. I am no soldier, but a man: speak not

Of soldiership, I loathe the word, and those Who pride themselves upon it; but direct me

Where I may pour upon them.

Sar.

You must spare

To expose your life too hastily: 'tis not

Like mine or any other subject's breath;

The whole war turns upon it—with it; this

Alone creates it, kindles, and may quench it—

Prolong it—and it.

Sar.

Then let us end both!

'T were better thus, perhaps, than prolong either;

I'm sick of one, perchance of both.

[A trumpet sounds without.]

Sar.

Hark!

Let us

Reply, not listen.

Sar.

And your wound!

Sar. 'T is bound—

'T is heal'd—I had forgotten it. Away!

A leech's lancet would have scratch'd me deeper;

The slave that gave it might be well ashamed
To have struck so weakly.

Sal. Now, may none this hour
Strike with a better aim!

Sar. Ay, if we conquer;
But if not, they will only leave to me

A task they might have spared their king. Upon them!

Sal. I am with you.

[Trumpets sounds again.]

Sar. Ho, my arms! again, my arms!
[Screams.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same Hall in the Palace.

Myrrha and Balas.

Myr. (as a window). The day at last has broken.

What a night

Hath usher'd it! How beautiful in heaven!
Though varied with a transitory storm,
More beautiful in that variety!
How hideous upon earth! where peace and hope,
And love and revel, in an hour were trampled
By human passions to a human chase,
Not yet resolved to separate elements.—

'T is warring still! And can the sun so rise,
So bright, so rolling back the clouds into Vapors more lovely than the unclouded sky,
With golden pinnacles, and snowy mountains,
And billows purpler than the ocean's, making
In heaven a glorious mockery of the earth,
So like we almost deem it permanent;
So fleeting, we can scarcely call it aught
Beyond a vision, 't is so transiently
Scatter'd along the eternal vault: and yet
It dwells upon the soul, and soothes the soul,
And blends itself into the soul, until
Sunrise and sunset form the haunted epoch
Of sorrow and of love; which they who mark not,
Know not the realms where those twin genii
(Who chasten and who purify our hearts,
So that we would not change their sweet rebukes
For all the boisterous joys that ever shook
The air with clamor) build the palaces
Where their fond votaries repose and breathe
Briefly,—but in that brief calm inhale
Enough of heaven to enable them to bear
The rest of common, heavy, human hours,
And dream them through in placid suffrance;
Though seemingly employ'd like all the rest
Of tolling breachers in allotted tasks
Of pain or pleasure, two names for one feeling,
Which our internal, restless agony
Would vary in the sound, although the sense
Escapes our highest efforts to be happy.

Bal. You muse right calmly: and can you so watch

The sunrise which may be our last?

Myr. It is
Therefore that I so watch it, and reproach
Those eyes, which never may behold it more,
For having look'd upon it oft, too oft,
Without the reverence and the rapture due
To that which keeps all earth from being as fragile
As I am in this form. Come, look upon it,
The Chaldee's god, which, when I gaze upon,
I grow almost a convert to your Bal.

Bal. As now he reigns in heaven, so once on earth
He sway'd.

Myr. He sways it now far more, then; never
Had earthly monarch half the power and glory
Which centres in a single ray of his.

Bal. Surely he is a god!

Myr. So we Greeks deem too;
And yet I sometimes think that gorgeous orb
Was rather be the abode of gods than one
Of the immortal sovereigns. Now he breaks
Through all the clouds, and fills my eyes with light
That sweeps the world out. I can look no more.

Bal. Hark! heard you not a sound?

Myr. No, 't was mere fancy;
They battle it beyond the wall, and not
As in late midnight conflict in the very Chambers: the palace has become a fortress
Since that insidious hour; and here, within
The very centre, girded by vast courts
And regal halls of pyramid proportions,
Which must be carried one by one before
They penetrate to where they then arrived,
We are as much shut in even from the sound
Of peril as from glory.

Bal. But they reach'd
Thus far before.

Myr. Yes, by surprise, and were Beat back by valor: now at once we have Courage and vigilance to guard us.

Bal. May they Prosper!

Myr. That is the prayer of many, and
The dread of more: it is an anxious hour;
I strive to keep it from my thoughts. Alas!
How vainly!

Bal. It is said the king's demeanor
In the late action scarcely more appall'd
The rebels than astonish'd his true subjects.

Myr. 'T is easy to astonish or appall
The vulgar mass which moulds a horde of slaves;
But he did bravely.

Bal. Slew he not Belshazzar?

Myr. I heard the soldiers say he struck him down.
The wretch was overthrown, but rescued to Triumph, perhaps, o'er one who vanquish'd him
In fight, as he had spared him in his peril;
And by that heedless pity risk'd a crown.

Bal. Hark!

Myr. You are right: some steps approach, but slowly.

Enter Soldiers, bearing in Malmenes wounded, with a broken Javelin in his Side: they seat him upon one of the Couches which furnish the apartment.

Myr. Oh, Jove!

Bal. Then all is over.

Sal. That is false.

Hew down the slave who says so, if a soldier.

Myr. Spare him—he's none: a mere court butterfly,

That flutters in the pageant of a monarch.

Sal. Let him live on, then.

Myr. So wilt thou, I trust.

Sal. I fain would live this hour out, and the event,
But doubt it. Wherefore did ye bear me here?

Sol. By the king's order. When the javelin struck
you,

You fell and fainted: 't was his strict command
To bear you to this hall.

Sal. 'T was not ill done:

For seeming slain in that cold dizzy trance,
The night might shake our soldiers—but—'t is vain,
I feel it ebbing!

Myr. Let me see the wound;
I am not quite skilless: in my native land
'T is part of our instruction. War being constant,
We are derv'd to look on such things.

Sol.
The javelin.
Myr. Hold! no, no, it cannot be.
Sol. I am sped, then!
Myr. With the blood that fast must follow
The extracted weapon, I do fear thy life.
Sol. And I not death. Where was the king when
you
Convey'd me from the spot where I was stricken?
Sol. Upon the same ground, and encouraging
With voice and gesture the dispirited troops
Who had seen you fall, and falter'd back.
Sol. Whom heard ye
Named next to the command?
Sol. I did not hear.
Sol. Fly, then, and tell him, 't was my last request

That Zamez take my post until the junction,
So hoped for, yet delay'd, of Ofratazes,
Satrap of Susa. Leave me here: our troops
Are not so numerous as to spare your absence.
Sol. But, prince—
Sol. Hence, I say! Here's a courtier and
A woman, the best chamber company.
As you would not permit me to expire
Upon the field, I'll have no idle soldiers
About my sick couch. Hence! and do my bidding!
[Exeunt the Soldiers.]

Myr. Gallant and glorious spirit! must the earth
So soon resign thee?
Sol. Gentle Myrrha, 'tis
The end I would have chosen, had I saved
The monarch or the monarchy by this;
As 'tis, I have not outlived them.
Myr. You wax paler.
Sol. Your hand; this broken weapon but prolongs
My pangs, without sustaining life enough
To make me useful: I would draw it forth,
And my life with it, could I but bear how
The fight goes.

Enter Sardanapalus and Soldiers.

Sar. My best brother!
Sol. And the battle
Is lost?
Sar. (despondingly). You see me here.
Sol. I'd rather see you thus!
[He draws out the weapon from the wound, and dies.]

Sar. And thus I will be seen; unless the succor,
The last frail reed of our beleaguerr'd hopes,
Arrive with Ofratazes.

Myr. Did you not Receive a token from your dying brother,
Appointing Zamez chief?

Sar. I did.
Myr. Where's Zamez?
Sar. Dead.

Myr. And Altada?
Sar. Dying.
Myr. Pania? Sfero?
Sar. Pania yet lives; but Sfero's fled, or captive.
I am alone.

Myr. And is all lost?
Sar. Our walls,
Though thinly mann'd, may still hold out against
Their present force, or aught save treachery:
But 't the field—

Myr. I thought 't was the intent
Of Salemenes not to risk a sally
Till ye were strengthen'd by the expected succor.
Sar. I overruled him.

Myr. Well, the fault's a brave one.
Sar. But fatal. Oh, my brother! I would give
These realms, of which thou wert the ornament,
The sword and shield, the sole redeeming honor,
To call back—But I will not weep for thee;

Best extract

Thou shalt be mourn'd for as thou wouldst be mourn'd.

It grieves me most that thou couldst quit this life
Believing that I could survive what thou
Hast died for—our long royalty of race.
If I redeem it, I will give thee blood
Of thousands, tears of millions, for atonement
(The tears of all the good are thine already).
If not, we meet again soon,—if the spirit
Within us lives beyond;—thou readest mine,
And dost me justice now. Let me once clasp
That yet warm hand, and fold that throbbles heart.
[Embraces the body.]

To this which beats so bitterly. Now, bear
The body hence.

Soldier. Where?
Sar. To my proper chamber.

Place it beneath my canopy, as though
The king lay there: when this is done, we will Speak further of the rites due to such ashes.
[Exeunt Soldiers with the body of Salemenes.]

Enter Pania.

Sar. Well, Pania! have you placed the guards, and issued
The order fix'd on?

Pan. Sire, I have obey'd.
Sar. And do the soldiers keep their hearts up?
Pan. Sire!

Sar. I'm answer'd! When a king asks twice, and has
A question as an answer to his question,
It is a portent. What! they are dishearten'd?

Pan. The death of Salemenes, and the shouts
Of the exulting rebels on his fall,
Have made them—

Sar. Rage—not droop—it should have been.
We'll find the means to rouse them.

Pan. Such a loss
Might sadden even a victory.

Sar. Alas!
Who can so feel it as I feel? but yet,
Though coop'd within these walls, they are strong,
and we
Have those without will break their way through hosts,

To make their sovereign's dwelling what it was—
A palace; not a prison, nor a fortress.

Enter an Officer, hastily.

Sar. Thy face seems ominous. Speak!
Off. I dare not.
Sar. Dare not?

While millions dare revolt with sword in hand!
That's strange. I pray thee break that loyal silence
Which loathes to shock its sovereign; we can bear
Worse than thou hast to tell.

Pan. Proceed, thou heavenly
Off. The wall which skirted near the river's brink
Is thrown down by the sudden inundation
Of the Euphrates, which now rolling, swirls
From the enormous mountains where it rises,
By the late rains of that tempestuous region,
O'erflows its banks, and hath destroy'd the balwark.

Pan. That's a black augury! it has been said
For ages, "That the city ne'er should yield
To man, until the river grew its foe."

Sar. I can forgive the omen, not the ravage.
How much is swept down of the wall?

Off. About
Some twenty stadia.*

Sar. And all this is left
Pervious to the assailants?

Off. For the present.

* About two miles and a half.

The river's fury must impede the assault;
But when he shrinks into his wonted channel,
And may be cross'd by the accustomed banks,
The palace is their own.

Sar. That shall be never.
Though men, and gods, and elements, and omens,
Have risen up 'gainst one who ne'er provoked them,
My fathers' house shall never be a cave
For wolves to horde and howl in.

Pan. With your sanction,
I will proceed to the spot, and take such measures
For the assurance of the vacant space
As time and means permit.

Sar. About it straight,
And bring me back, as speedily as full
And fair investigation may permit.
Report of the true state of this irruption
Of waters. [Exeunt Pania and the Officer.

Myr. Thus the way varies rise up Against you.

Sar. They are not my subjects, girl,
And may be pardon'd, since they can't be punish'd.

Myr. I joy to see this portent shakes you not.
Sar. I am past the fear of portents: they can tell
me

Nothing I have not told myself since midnight.
Despair anticipates such things.

Myr. Despair!
Sar. No; not despair precisely. When we know
All that can come, and how to meet it, our Resolves, if firm, may merit a more noble
Word than this to give it utterance.
But what are words to us? we have well nigh done
With them and all things.

Myr. Save one dead—the last
And greatest to all mortals: crowning act
Of all that was—or is—or is to be—
The only thing common to all mankind,
So different in their births, tongues, sexes, natures,
Hues, features, climes, times, feelings, intellects,
Without one point of union save in this,
To which we tend, for which we're born, and thread
The labyrinth of mystery, call'd life.

Sar. Our clew being well nigh wound out, let's be cheerful.

They who have nothing more to fear may well
Indulge a smile at that which once appall'd;
As children at discover'd bugbears.

Re-enter Pania.

Pan. 'Tis
As was reported: I have order'd there
A double guard, withdrawing from the wall
Where it was strongest the required addition,
To watch the treach'rous occasion'd by the waters.

Sar. You have done your duty faithfully, and as My worthy Pania! further ties between us
Draw near a closer—I pray you take this key:

[Gives a key.

It opens to a secret chamber, placed
Behind the couch in my own chamber. (Now
Press'd by a nobler weight than e'er it bore—
Through a long line of sovereigns have lain down
Along its golden frame—as bearing for
A time what late was Salmenece's.) Search
The secret covert to which this will lead you;
'Tis full of treasure;* take it for yourself
And your companions: there's enough to lead ye,
Though ye be many. Let the slaves be freed, too;
And all the inmates of the palace, of
Whichever sex, now quit it in an hour.

Thence launch the regal barks, once form'd for pleasure,
And now to serve for safety, and embark.

The river's broad and uncommanded
(More potent than a king) by these besiegers.
Fly! and be happy!

Pan. Under your protection!
So you accompany your faithful guard.

Sar. No, Pania! that must not be; get thee hence,
And leave me to my fate.

Pan. 'Tis the first time
I ever disobey'd; but now—

Sar. So all men
Dare beard me now, and insolence within Apes Treason from without. Question no further;
'Tis my command, my last command. Wilt thou
Oppose it? then!

Pan. But yet—not yet.

Sar. Well, then,
Swear that you will obey when I shall give
The signal.

Pan. With a heavy but true heart,
I promise.

Sar. 'Tis enough. Now order here
Fagots, pine-nuts, and wither'd leaves, and such Things as catch fire and blaze with one sole spark;
Bring cedar, too, and precious drugs, and spices,
And mighty planks, to nourish a tall pile;
Bring frankincense and myrrh, too, for it is
For a great sacrifice I build the pyre!
And heap them round yon throne.

Pan. My lord!
Sar. I have said it,
And you have sworn.

Pan. And could keep my faith
Without a vow. [Exit Pania.

Myr. What mean you? You shall know
Anon—what the whole earth shall ne'er forget.

Pania, returning with a Herald.

Pan. My king, in going forth upon my duty,
This herald has been brought before me, craving
An audience.

Sar. Let him speak.

Her. The King Arbaces—
Sar. What, crown'd already?—But, proceed.
Her. Belessen,

The anointed high-priest—
Sar. Of what god, or demon?
With new kings rise new altars. But, proceed:
You are sent to prate your masters' will, and not Reply to mine.

Her. And Satrap Ofrance—

Sar. Why, he is ours.

Her. (showing a ring). Be sure that he is now
In the camp of the conquerors: behold
His signet-ring.

Sar. 'Tis his. A worthy triad!
Poor Salmenece! thou hast died in time
To see one treachery the less: this man
Was thy true friend and my most trusted subject.
Proceed.

Her. They offer thee thy life, and freedom
Of choice to mingle out a residence
In any of the frontier provinces,
Guarded and watch'd, but not confined in person,
Where thou shalt pass thy days in peace; but on Condition that the three young princes are Given up as hostages.

Sar. (ironically). The generous victors!
Her. I wait the answer.

*Salmenece makes these treasures amount to a thousand millions of pounds of gold, and ten times as many in value of silver, which is a sum that exceeds all credibility. A hint is given by the attempt to sum up the whole value; which induces me to believe that Arbaces must have very much exaggerated; however, we may be assured, from his account, that the treasures were immensely great."—BOLLEN.

Sar. Answer, slave! How long
Have slaves decided on the doom of kings?

Her. Since they were free.

Sar. Mouthpiece of mutiny!
Thou at the least shalt learn the penalty
Of treason, though its proxy only. Panis!
Let his head be thrown from our walls within
The rebels' lines, his carcass down the river.
Away with him!

[Panis and the Guards seizing him.]

Pan. I never yet obey'd
Your orders with more pleasure than the present.
Hence with him, soldiers! do not soil this hall
Of royalty with treasonable gore;
Put him to rest without.

Her. A single word:
My office, king, is sacred.

Sar. And what's mine?
That thou shouldst come and dare to ask of me
To lay it down?

Her. I but obey'd my orders
At the same peril, if refused, as now
Incur'd by my obedience.

Sar. So there are
New monarchs of an hour's growth as despotic
As sovereigns swathed in purple, and enthroned
From birth to manhood!

Her. My life waits your breath.
Yours (I speak humbly)—but it may be—yours
May also be in danger scarce less imminent;
Would it then suit the last hours of a line
Such as is that of Nimrod, to destroy
A peaceful herald, unarm'd, in his office;
And violate not only all that man
Holds sacred between man and man—but that
More holy tie which links us with the gods?

Sar. He's right.—Let him go free.—My life's last act

Shall not be one of wrath. Here, fellow, take [Gives him a golden cup from a table near.]
This golden goblet, let it hold your wine,
And think of me; or melt it into ingots,
And think of nothing but their weight and value.

Her. I thank you doubly for my life, and this
Most gorgeous gift, which renders it more precious.
But must I bear no answer?

Sar. Yes,—I ask

An hour's truce to consider. But an hour's?

Sar. An hour's; if at the expiration of
That time your masters hear no further from me,
They are to deem that I reject their terms,
And not beddingly.

Her. I shall not fail
To be a faithful legate of your pleasure.

Sar. And hark! a word more.

Her. I shall not forget it,
Whatever it be.

Sar. Commend me to Belshazz;
And tell him, ere a year expire, I summon
Him hence to meet me.

Her. Where?

Sar. At Babylon.
At least from thence he will depart to meet me.

Her. I shall obey you to the letter. [Exit Herald.]

Sar. Panis!

Now, my good Panis!—quick—with what I order'd.
Pan. My lord,—the soldiers are already charged.
And, see! they enter.

[Soldiers enter, and form a Pile about the Throne, etc.]

Sar. Higher, my good soldiers,
And thicker yet; and see that the foundation
Be such as will not speedily exhaust
Its own too subtle flame; nor yet be quenched
With slight officious aid, would bring to quell it.
Let the throne form the core of it; I would not Leave that, save fraught with fire unquenchable,

To the new comers. Frame the whole as if
'T were to enkindle the strong tower of our Inveterate enemies. Now it bears an aspect!
How say you, Panis, will this pile suffice
For a king's obsequies?

Pan. Ay, for a kingdom's.

I understand you, now.

Sar. And blame me?

Pan. Let me but fire the pile, and share it with you.

Myr. That duty's mine.

Pan. A woman's!

Myr. 'T is the soldier's

Part to die for his sovereign, and why not

The woman's with her lover?

Pan. 'T is most strange!

Myr. But not so rare, my Panis, as thou think'st

it.

In the mean time, live thou.—Farewell! the pile is ready.

Pan. I should chafe to leave my sovereign

With but a single female to partake

His death.

Sar. Too many far have heralded

Me to the dust, already. Get thee hence;

Enrich thee.

Pan. And live wretched!

Sar. Think upon

Thy vow:—'t is sacred and irrevocable.

Pan. Since it is so, farewell.

Sar. Search well my chamber,

Feel no remorse at bearing off the gold;

Remember, what you leave you leave the slaves

Who slew me: and when you have borne away

All safe off to your boats, blow one long blast

Upon the trumpet as you quit the palace.

The river's brink is too remote, its stream

Too loud at present to permit the echo

To reach distinctly from its banks. Then fly,—

And as you sail, turn back; but still keep on

Your way along the Euphrates: if you reach

The land of Paphlagonia, where the queen

Is safe with my three sons in Cotta's court,

Say what you saw at parting, and request

That she remember what I said at one

Parting more mournful still.

Pan. That royal hand!

Let me then once more press it to my lips;

And these poor soldiers who throng round you, and

Would fain die with you!

[The Soldiers and Panis throng round him, kissing his hand and the hem of his robe.]

Sar. My best! my last friends!

Let's not unman each other—part at once:

All farewells should be sudden, when for ever,

Else they make an eternity of moments.

And clog the last sad sands of life with tears.

Hence, and be happy; trust me, I am not

Now to be pitied; or far more for what

Is past than present;—for the future, 'tis

In the hands of the deities, if such

There be: I shall know soon. Farewell—Farewell.

[Exeunt Panis and Soldiers.]

Myr. These men were honest: it is comfort still

That our last looks should be on loving faces.

Sar. And lovely ones, my beautiful!—but hear me!

If at this moment,—for we now are on

The brink,—thou feel'st an inward shrinking from

This leap through flame into the future, say it:

I shall not love thee less; nay, perhaps more,

For yielding to thy nature; and there's time

Yet for thee to escape hence.

Myr. Shall I light

One of the torches which lie heap'd beneath

The ever-burning lamp that burns without

Before Baal's shrine, in the adjoining hall?

Sar. Do so. Is that thy answer?

Myr.

Thou shalt see.

[Exit Myrrha.]

Sar. (solus). She's firm. My fathers! whom I will rejoice,

It may be, purified by death from some
Of the gross stains of too material being,
I would not leave your ancient first abode
To the desolation of usurping bondmen;
If I have not kept your intertance
As ye bequeath'd it, this bright part of it,
Your treasure, your shade, your sacred relics
Of arms and records, monuments and spoils,
In which they would have revel'd, I bear with me
To you in that absorbing element,
Which most personalities the soul as leaving
The least of matter unconsumed before
Its fiery workings.—and the light of this Most royal of funeral pyres shall be
Not a mere pillar form'd of cloud and flame,
A beacon in the horizon for a day,
And then a mount of ashes, but a light
To lesson ages, rebel nations, and Voluptuous princes. Time shall quench full many
A people's records, and a hero's acts;
Sweep empire after empire, like this first
Of empires, into nothing; but even then
Shall spare this feed of mine, and hold it up
A problem few dare imitate, and none
Imitate—but, it may be, avoid the life
Which led to such a consummation.

Myrrha returns with a lighted Torch in one Hand, and a Cup in the other.

Myr.

Lo!

I've lit the lamp which lights us to the stars.

Sar. And the cup?

Myr.

'Tis my country's custom to

Make a libation to the gods.

Sar.

And mine

To make libations amongst men. I've not Forgot the custom; and although alone,
Will drain one draught in memory of many
A joyous banquet past.

[Sardanapalus takes the cup, and after drinking and tinkling the reversed cup, as a drop falls, exclaims—

And this libation

Is for the excellent Belesen.

Myr.

Why

Dwells thy mind rather upon that man's name
Than on his mate's in villainy?

Sar.

The one

Is a mere soldier, a mere tool, a kind
Of human sword in a friend's hand; the other
Is master-mover of his warlike puppet;
But I dismiss them from my mind.—Yet pause,

My Myrrha! dost thou truly follow me,
Freely and fearlessly?

Myr.

And dost thou think
A Greek girl dare not do for love, that which
An Indian widow braves for custom?

Sar.

Then

We but await the signal.

Myr.

It is long

In sounding.

Sar.

Now, farewell: one last embrace.

Myr.

Embrace, but not the last; there is one more.

Sar.

True, the commingling fire will mix our ashes.

Myr.

And pure as is my love to thee, shall they,
Purged from the dross of earth, and earthly passion,

Mix pale with thine. A single thought yet irks me.

Sar.

Say it.
Myr. It is that no kind hand will gather
The dust of both into one urn.

Sar.

The better:
Rather let them be borne abroad upon
The winds of heaven, and scatter'd into air,
Than be polluted more by human hands
Of slaves and traitors. In this blazing palace,
And its enormous walls of reeking ruin,
We leave a nobler monument than Egypt
Hath piled in her brick mountains, o'er dead kings,
Or king, for none know whether those proud piles
Be for their monarch, or their ox-god Apis:
So much for monuments that have forgotten
Their very record!

Myr.

Then farewell, thou earth!
And loveliest spot of earth! farewell, Ionia!
Be thou still free and beautiful, and far
Aloof from desolation! My last prayer
Was for thee, my last thoughts, save one, were of thee!

Sar.

And that?

Myr.

Is yours.

[The trumpet of Panda sounds without.

Sar.

Hark!

Myr.

Now!

Sar.

Adieu, Assyria!

I loved thee well, my own, my fathers' land,
And better as my country than my kingdom.
I sated thee with peace and joys; and this
Is my reward! and now I owe thee nothing,
Not even a grave.

Myr.

Now, Myrrha!

Art thou ready?

Myr.

As the torch in thy grasp.

Myr.

[Myrrha fires the pile.

'T is fired! I come.
[As Myrrha springs forward to throw herself into the flames, the Curtain falls.

THE BANNERS OF ASSYRIA.

[From the Monuments.]

THE TWO FOSCARI: In Historical Tragedy.*

"The father suffers, but the governor's resolved."—CARRO.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

MEN.

Francis Foscari, Doge of Venice.
Jacopo Foscari, Son of the Doge.
James Loredano, a Patrieian.
Marco Massimo, a Chief of the Forty.
Barbarigo, a Senator.

Other Senators, the Council of Ten, Guards, Attendants, etc., etc.

WOMAN.

Martina, Wife of young Foscari.

SCHERL.—The Ducal Palace, Venice.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Ducal Palace.

Enter Loredano and Barbarigo, meeting.

Lor. Where is the prisoner?

Bar. Reposing from
The Question.

Lor. The hour's past—six'd yesterday
For the resumption of his trial.—Let us
Rejoin our colleagues in the council, and Urge his recall.

Bar. Nay, let him profit by
A few brief minutes for his tortured limbs;
He was o'erwrought by the Question yesterday,
And may die under it if now repeated.

Lor. Well?

Bar. I yield not to you in love of justice,
Or hate of the ambitious Foscari,
Father and son, and all their noxious race;
But the poor wretch has suffer'd beyond nature's
Most stoical endurance.

Lor. Without owning
His crime.

Bar. Perhaps without committing any.
But he avow'd the letter to the Duke
Of Milan, and his sufferings half atone for Such weakness.

Lor. We shall see.

Bar. You, Loredano,
Pursue hereditary hate too far.

Lor. How far?

Bar. To extermination.
Lor. When they are
Extinct, you may say this.—Let's in to council.

Bar. Yet pause—the number of our colleagues is
not
Complete yet; two are wanting ere we can Proceed.

Lor. And the chief judge, the Doge?

Bar. No—his,
With more than Roman fortitude, is ever

First at the board in this unhappy process
Against his last and only son.

Lor. True—true—
His last.

Bar. Will nothing move you?

Lor. Feel he, think you?

Bar. He shows it not.

Lor. I have marked that—the wretch!

Bar. But yesterday, I hear, on his return
To the ducal chambers, as he pass'd the threshold,
The old man fainted.

Lor. It begins to work, then.

Bar. The work is half your own.

Lor. And should be all mine—

My father and my uncle are no more.

Bar. I have read their epitaph, which says they died
By poison.†

Lor. When the Doge declared that he Should never deem himself a sovereign till
The death of Peter Loredano, both
The brothers sicken'd shortly:—he is sovereign.

Bar. A wretched one.

Lor. What should they be who make Orphans?

Bar. But did the Doge make you so? Yes.

Lor. What solid proofs?

Bar. When princes set themselves
To work in secret, proofs and process are Alike made difficult; but I have such
Of the first, as shall make the second needless.
Lor. But you will move by law?

Bar. By all the laws
Which he would leave us.

Lor. They are such in this
Our state as render retribution easier
Than 'mongst remoter nations. Is it true
That you have written in your books of commerce
(The wealthy practice of our highest nobles),

* "Began June the 15th, completed July the 9th, Ravenna, 1861.—Byron."—MS. An account of the incidents on which this play is founded, is given in the Appendix, Note 46.

† "Veneno esibito." The tomb is in the church of S. Maria.

"Doge Foscari, my debtor for the deaths
Of Marco and Pietro Lombardo,
My sire and uncle?"

Bar. It is written thus.

Bar. And will you leave it uneras'd?

Bar. Till balanced.

Bar. And how?

(Two Senators pass over the stage, as in their way to "the Hall of the Council of Ten.")

Bar. You see the number is complete.

Bar. (solus). Follow thee! I have follow'd long

Thy path of desolation, as the wave

Sweeps after that before it, alike whelming

The wreck that creaks to the wild winds, and wretch

Who shrieks within its riven ribs, as gush

The waters through them; but this son and sire

Might move the elements to pause, and yet

Must I on hardly like them—O! would

I could as blindly and remorselessly!

Lo, where he comes!—Be still, my heart! they are

Thy foes, must be thy victims! wilt thou beat

For those who almost broke thee?

Enter Guards, with young Foscari as prisoner, etc.

Guard. Let him rest.

Signor, take time.

Jac. Fos. I thank thee, friend, I'm feeble:

But thou mayst stand reproved.

Guard. I'll stand the hazard.

Jac. Fos. That's kind!—I meet some pity, but no mercy:

This is the first.

Guard. And might be last, did they

Who rule behold us.

Bar. (addressing to the Guard). There is one who does:

Yet fear not; I will neither be thy judge

Nor thy accuser: though the hour is past,

Wait their last summons—I am of "the Ten,"

And waiting for that summons, sanction you

Even by my presence: when the last call sounds,

We'll be together.—Look well to the prisoner!

Jac. Fos. What voice is that?—"Tis Barbarigo's!

Ah!

Our house's foe, and one of my few judges.

Bar. To balance such a foe, if such there be,

Thy father sits amongst thy judges.

Jac. Fos. True,

He judges.

Bar. Then deem not the laws too harsh

Which yield so much indulgence to a sire

As to allow his voice in such high matter

As the state's safety—

Jac. Fos. And his son's! I'm faint;

Let me approach, I pray you, for a breath

Of air, yon window which o'erlooks the waters.

Enter an Officer, who whispers Barbarigo.

Bar. (to the Guard). Let him approach. I must not speak with him.

Further than this: I have transgress'd my duty

In this brief parley, and must now redeem it

Within the Council Chamber. (Exit Barbarigo.)

(Guard conducting Jacopo Foscari to the window.)

Guard. There, sir, 'tis

Open—how feel you?

Jac. Fos. Like a boy—Oh, Venice!

Guard. And your limbs?

Jac. Fos. Limbs! how often have they borne me

Bounding o'er yon blue tide, as I have skim'd

The gondolas along in childish race,

And, masqued as a young gondolier, amidst

My gay competitors, noble as I,

Reared by our pleasure, in the pride of strength;

While the fair populace of crowding beauties,

Waiting at partison, cheer'd us on

With darding smiles, and wishes audible,
And waving kerchiefs, and applauding hands,
Even to the goal! How many a time have I
Cloven with arm still lustier, breast more daring,
The wave all roughen'd; with a swimmer's stroke
Flinging the billows back from my drench'd hair,
And laughing from my lip the audacious brine,
Which kiss'd it like a wine-cup, rising o'er
The waves as they arose, and prouder still
The loftier they uplifted me; and oft,
In wantonness of spirit, plunging down
Into their green and glassy gulfs, and making
My way to shells and sea-weed, all unseen
By those above, till they wax'd fearful; then
Returning with my grasp full of such tokens
As show'd that I had search'd the deep: exulting,
With a far-dashing stroke, and drawing deep
The long-suspended breath, again I spurn'd
The foam which broke around me, and pursued
My track like a sea-bird.—I was a boy then.

Guard. Be a man now: there never was more need
Of manhood's strength.

Jac. Fos. (looking from the lattice). My beautiful,

my own,

Thine Adrian sea-breeze, how it fans my face!

Thy very winds feel native to my veins,

And cool them into calmness! How unlike

The hot gales of the horrid Cyclades,

Which howl'd about my Candiot dungeon, and Made my heart sick!

Guard. I see the color comes

Back to your cheek: Heaven send you strength to bear

What more may be imposed!—I dread to think on't.

Jac. Fos. They will not banish me again!—No—no.

Let them wring on; I am strong yet.

Guard. Confess,

And the rack will be spared you.

Jac. Fos. I confess'd

Once—twice before: both times they exiled me.

Guard. And the third time will slay you.

Jac. Fos. Let them do so,

So I be buried in my birthplace: better

Be ashes here than sought that lives elsewhere.

Guard. And can you so much love the soil which hates you?

Jac. Fos. The soil!—Oh no, it is the seed of the soil

Which persecutes me; but my native earth

Will take me as a mother to her arms.

I ask no more than a Venetian grave,

A dungeon, what they will, so it be here.

Enter an Officer.

Off. Bring in the prisoner!

Guard. Signor, you hear the order.

Jac. Fos. Ay, I am used to such a summons: 'tis

The third time they have tortured me;—then lend

me

Thine arm. (To the Guard.)

Off. Take mine, sir; 'tis my duty to

Be nearest to your person.

Jac. Fos. You!—you are he

Who yesterday presid'd o'er my page—

Away!—I'll walk alone.

Off. As you please, signor;

The sentence was not of my signing, but

I dared not disobey the council when

They—

Jac. Fos. Bade thee stretch me on their horrid engine.

I pray thee touch me not—that is, just now;

The time will come they will renew that order,

But keep off from me till 'tis issued. As

I look upon thy hands, my curdling limbs

Quiver with the anticipated wrenching,

And the cold drops strain through my brow, as if—

But onward—I have borne it—I can bear it.—
How looks my father?

Off. With his wonted aspect.
Jac. Fos. So does the earth, and sky, the blue of ocean,

The brightness of our city, and her domes,
The mirth of her Piazza, even now
Its merry hum of nations pierces here,
Even here, into these chambers of the unknown
Who govern, and the unknown and the unnumber'd
Judged and destroy'd in silence,—all things wear
The self-same aspect, to my very aile!
Nothing can sympathize with Foscari,
Not even a Foscari.—Sir, I attend you.

[Re-enters Jacopo Foscari, Officer, etc.]

Enter Memmo and another Senator.

Mem. He's gone—we are too late—think you
"the Ten?"

Will sit for any length of time to-day?

Sen. They say the prisoner is most obdurate,
Persisting in his first avowal; but
More I know not.

Mem. And that is much; the secrets
Of your terrific chamber are as hidden
From us, the premier nobles of the state,
As from the people.

Sen. Save the wonted rumors,
Which—like the tales of spectres, that are rife
Near ruin'd buildings—never have been proved,
Nor wholly disbelieved: men know as little
Of the state's real acts as of the grave's
Unfathom'd mysteries.

Mem. But with length of time
We gain a step in knowledge, and I look Forward to be one day of the decemviri.

Sen. Or Doge?

Mem. Why, no; not if I can avoid it.
Sen. 'Tis the first station of the state, and may
Be lawfully desired, and lawfully
Attain'd by noble aspirants.

Mem. To such
I leave it; though born noble, my ambition
Is limited: I'd rather be an unit
Of an united and imperial "Ten,"
Than shine a lonely, though a gilded cipher.—
Whom have we here? the wife of Foscari?

Enter Marina, with a female Attendant.

Mar. What, no one?—I am wrong; there still are two;
But they are senators.

Mem. Most noble lady,
Command us.

Mar. I command!—Alas! my life
Has been one long entreaty, and a vain one.

Mem. I understand thee, but I must not answer.

Mar. (fiercely). True—none dare answer here save on the rack,

Or question save those—

Mem. (interrupting her). High-born dame!® be-think thee

Where thou now art.

Mar. Where I now am!—It was
My husband's father's palace.

Mem. The Duke's palace.
Mar. And his son's prison!—True, I have not forgot it;

And if there were no other nearer, bitterer
Remembrances, would thank the illustrious Memmo
For pointing out the pleasure of the place.

* She was a Contarini—

"A daughter of the house that now among its ancestors in monumental brass

Numbers eight degrees."—BOGNA.

On the occasion of her marriage with the younger Foscari, 224

Mem. Be calm!

Mar. (looking up towards heaven). I am; but ah, thou eternal God!

Canst thou continue so, with such a world?

Mem. Thy husband yet may be absolved.

Mar.

He is,

In heaven. I pray you, signor senator,
Speak not of that; you are a man of office,
So is the Doge; he has a son at stake
Now, at this moment, and I have a husband,
Or had; in they are there within, or were at least;
An hour since, face to face, as judge and culprit:
Will he condemn him?

Mem.

I trust not.

Mar.

But if

He does not, there are those will sentence both.

Mem. They can.

Mar. And with them power and will are one
In wickedness:—my husband's lost!

Mem.

Not so;

Justice is judge in Venice.

Mar.

If it were so,

There now would be no Venice. But let it
Live on, so the good die not, till the hour
Of nature's summons; but "the Ten's" is quicker,
And we must wait on't. Ah! a voice of wail!

[A faint cry within.]

Sen. Hark!

Mem.

'T was a cry of—

Mar. No, no; not my husband's—
Not Foscari's.

Mem.

The voice was—

Mar. Not his; no.
He shriek! No; that should be his father's part,
Not his—not his—he'll die in silence.

[A faint groan again within.]

Mem.

Again?
Mar. His voice! it seem'd so: I will not Believe it. Should he shrink, I cannot cease
To love; but no—no—no—it must have been
A fearful pang which wrung a groan from him.

Sen. And, feeling for thy husband's wrongs, wouldst thou

Have him bear more than mortal pain in silence?

Mar. We all must bear our tortures. I have not Left barren the great house of Foscari, Though they sweep both the Doge and son from
life;

I have endured as much in giving life
To those who will succeed them, as they can
In leaving it: but mine were joyful pangs;
And yet they wrung me till I could have shriek'd,
But did not; for my hope was to bring forth
Heroes, and would not welcome them with tears.

Mem. All's silent now.

Mar. Perhaps all's over; but I will not deem it: he hath nerved himself,
And now defies them.

Enter an Officer hastily.

Mem. How now, friend, what seek you?

Off. A leech. The prisoner has fainted.

Mem.

[Exit Officer.]

"I were better to retire.

Sen. (offering to assist her). I pray thee do so.

Mar. Oh! I will tend him.

Mem. You! Remember, lady!
Ingress is given to none within these chambers,
Except "the Ten," and their families.

the Bucentaur came out in its splendor; and a hundred boats was thrown across the Canal Grande for the groom, and his retinue of three hundred horse. According to Sanuto, the tournament in the place of St. Mark lasted three days, and were attended by thirty thousand people.

Mar. Know that none who enter there return
As they have enter'd—many never; but
They shall not balk my entrance.
Mem. Alas! this
Is but to expose yourself to harsh repulse,
And worse suspense.

Mar. Who shall oppose me?
Mem. They
Whose duty 'tis to do so.

Mar. 'Tis their duty
To trample on all human feelings, all
Ties which bind man to man, to emulate
The fiends, who will one day requite them in Variety of torturing! Yet I'll pass.
Mem. It is impossible.

Mar. That shall be tried.
Despair defies even despotism: there is
That in my heart would make its way through hosts
With level'd spears; and think you a few jailers
Shall put me from my path? Give me, then, way;
This is the Doge's palace; I am wife
Of the Duke's son, the innocent Duke's son,
And they shall hear this!

Mem. It will only serve
More to exasperate his judges.
Mar. What
Are judges who give way to anger? they
Who do so are assassins. Give me way.
[Exit Marina.]

Sen. Poor lady!
Mem. 'Tis mere desperation: she
Will not be admitted o'er the threshold.
Sen. And
Even if she be so, cannot save her husband.
But, see, the officer returns.

[The Officer passes over the stage with another person.]

Mem. I hardly Thought that "the Ten" had even this touch of pity,
Or would permit assistance to this sufferer.

Sen. Fify! Is 't pity to recall to feeling
The wretch too happy to escape to death
By the compassionate trance, poor nature's last
Resource against the tyranny of pain?

Mem. I marvel they condemn him not at once.
Sen. That's not their policy: they'd have him live,
Because he fears not death; and banish him,
Because all earth, except his native land,
To him is one wide prison, and each breath
Of foreign air he draws seems a slow poison,
Consuming but not killing.

Mem. Circumstance
Confirming his crimes, but he avows them not.

Sen. None, save the Letter, which he says was written.

Address'd to Milan's duke, in the full knowledge
That it would fall into the senate's hands,
And thus he should be reconveyed to Venice.

Mem. But as a culprit.

Sen. Yes, but to his country;
And that was all he sought,—so he avouches.

Mem. The accusation of the bribes was proved.

Sen. Not clearly, and the charge of homicide
Has been annul'd by the death-bed confession
Of Nicolas Erizzo, who slew the late
Chief of "the Ten."

Mem. Then why not clear him?

Sen. That
They ought to answer; for it is well known
That Almore Donato, as I said,
Was slain by Erizzo for private vengeance.
Mem. There must be more in this strange process than
The apparent crimes of the accused disclose—
But here come two of "the Ten;" let us retire.
[Re-enter Memmo and Senator.]

Enter Loredano and Barbarigo.
Bar. (addressing Lor.). That were too much: believe me, 't was not meet
The trial should go further at this moment.
Lor. And so the council must break up, and Justice

Pause in her full career, because a woman
Breaks in on our deliberations?
Bar. No.
That's not the cause; you saw the prisoner's state.
Lor. And had he not recover'd?

Bar. To relapse
Upon the least renewal.
Lor. 'T was not tried.
Bar. 'T is vain to murmur; the majority
In council were against you.

Lor. Thanks to you, sir,
And the old ducal dotard, who combined
The worthy voices which o'erruled my own.
Bar. I am a judge; but must confess that part
Of our stern duty, which prescribes the Question,
And bids us sit and see its sharp infliction,
Makes me wish—

Lor. What?
Bar. That you would sometimes feel,
As I do always.

Lor. Go to, you're a child,
Infirm of feeling as of purpose, blown
About by every breath, shook by a sigh,
And melted by a tear—a precious judge
For Venice! and a worthy statesman to Be partner in my policy!

Bar. He shud
No tears.
Lor. He cried out twice.

Bar. A saint had done so,
Even with the crown of glory in his eye,
At such inhuman artifice of pain
As was forced on him; but he did not cry
For pity; not a word nor groan escaped him,
And those two shrieks were not in supplication,
But wrung from pang, and follow'd by no prayers.

Lor. He mutter'd many times between his teeth,
But inarticulately.

Bar. That I heard not;
You stood more near him.

Lor. I did so.
Bar. Methought,
To my surprise too, you were touch'd with mercy,
And were the first to call out for assistance
When he was falling.

Lor. I believed that swoon
His last.

Bar. And have I not oft heard thee name
His and his father's death your nearest wish?

Lor. If he diss innocents, that is to say,
With his guilt unavow'd, he'll be lamented.
Bar. What, wouldst thou slay his memory?

from him the truth, which is clear from parole and written evidence; for while he was on the sord, he uttered neither word nor groan, but only murmured something to himself indistinctly and under his breath; therefore, as the honor of the state requires, he is condemned to a more distant banishment: to Candia." Will it be credited that a direct proof of his innocence, obtained by the discovery of the real assassin, wrought no change in his unjust and cruel sentence?

*The extraordinary sentence pronounced against him, still existing among the archives of Venice, runs thus:—"Giacopo Foscari, accused of the murder of Hermolao Donato, has been tried and examined; and from the testimony, evidence, and documents exhibited, it distinctly appears that he is guilty of the capital crime; nevertheless, on account of his obstinate and unrepentant conduct, and spite in his possession, of which that conduct is proof, it has not been possible to extract

Lor. Wouldst thou have
His state descend to his children, as it must,
If he die unattainted?

Bar. War with them too?

Lor. With all their house, till theirs or mine are nothing.

Bar. And the deep agony of his pale wife,
And the repress'd convulsion of the high
And princely brow of his old father, which Broke forth in a slight shuddering, though rarely,
Or in some clammy drops, soon wiped away
In stern serenity; these moved you not?

[Exit Loredano.]

He's silent in his hate, as Foscari
Was in his suffering; and the poor wretch moved me
More by his silence than a thousand outcries
Could have effected. 'T was a dreadful sight
When his distracted wife broke through into

The hall of our tribunal, and beheld
What we could scarcely look upon, long used
To such sights. I must think no more of this,
Lest I forget in this compassion for
Our foes, their former injuries, and lose
The hold of vengeance Loredano plans
For him and me; but mine would be content
With lesser retribution than he thirsts for,
And I would mitigate his deeper hatred
To milder thoughts; but for the present, Foscari
Has a short hourly respite, granted at
The instance of the elders of the council,
Moved doubtless by his wife's appearance in
The hall, and his own sufferings.—Lo! they come!
How feeble and forlorn! I cannot bear
To look on them again in this extremity:
I'll hence, and try to soften Loredano.

[Exit Barbarigo.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Doge's Palace.

The Doge and a Senator.

Sen. Is it your pleasure to sign the report
Now, or postpone it till to-morrow?

Doge. Now;
I overlook'd it yesterday: it wants
Merely the signatura. Give me the pen—

[The Doge sits down and signs the paper.]

There, signor.

Sen. [looking at the paper]. You have forgot; it is not sign'd.

Doge. Not sign'd? Ah, I perceive my eyes begin

To wax more weak with age. I did not see
That I had dip'd the pen without effect.

Sen. [dipping the pen into the ink and placing the paper before the Doge.] Your hand, too, shakes, my lord: allow me, thus—

Doge. 'T is done, I thank you.

Sen. Thus the act confirm'd
By you and by "the Ten" gives peace to Venice.

Doge. 'T is long since she enjoy'd it: may it be
As long ere she resume her arms!

Sen. 'T is almost
Thirty-four years of nearly ceaseless warfare
With the Turk, and the powers of Italy;
The state had need of some repose.

Doge. No doubt:
I found her Queen of Ocean, and I leave her
Lady of Lombardy: it is a comfort
That I have added to her diadem
The gems of Brescia and Ravenna; Crema
And Bergamo no less are hers; her realm
By land has grown by thus much in my reign,
While her sea-way has not shrunk.

Sen. 'T is most true,
And merits all our country's gratitude.

Doge. Perhaps so.

Sen. Which should be made manifest.
Doge. I have not complain'd, sir.

Sen. My good lord, forgive me.

Doge. For what?

Sen. My heart bleeds for you.

Doge. For me, signor?

Sen. And for your—

Doge. Stop!

Sen. It must have way, my lord:
I have too many duties towards you
And all your house, for past and present kindness,
Not to feel deeply for your son.

Doge. Was this
In your commission?

What, my lord?

Sen. This practice
Doge. Of things you know not: but the treaty's sign'd:
Return with it to them who sent you.

Sen. I
Obey. I had in charge, too, from the council,
That you would fix an hour for their reunion.

Doge. Say, when they will—now, even at this moment,

If it so please them: I am the state's servant.

Sen. They would accord some time for your repose.

Doge. I have no repose; that is, none which shall cause

The loss of an hour's time unto the state.

Let them meet when they will. I shall be found
Where I should be, and what I have been ever.

[Exit Senator.]

[The Doge remains in silence.]

Enter an Attendant.

Att. Prince!

Doge. Say on.

Att. The illustrious lady Foscari

Requests an audience.

Doge. Bid her enter. Poor

Marina! [Exit Attendant.]

[The Doge remains in silence as before.]

Enter Marina.

Mar. I have ventured, father, on Your privacy.

Doge. I have none from you, my child.

Command my time, when not commanded by
The state.

Mar. I wish'd to speak to you of Ama.

Doge. Your husband?

Mar. And your son.

Doge. Proceed, my daughter!

Mar. I had obtain'd permission from "the Ten"

To attend my husband for a limited number

Of hours.

Doge. You had so.

Mar. 'T is revoked.

Doge.

Mar. "The Ten."—When we had reach'd "the Bridge of Sighs,"

Which I prepared to pass with Foscari,

The gloomy guardian of that passage first

Demurr'd: a messenger was sent back to

"The Ten;" but as the court no longer sets,

And no permission had been given in writing,

I was thrust back, with the assurance that

Until that high tribunal reassembled,
The dungeon walls must still divide us.

Doge. True,
The form has been omitted in the haste
With which the court adjourn'd; and till it meets,
'Tis dubious.

Mar. Till it meets! and when it meets,
They'll torture him again; and he and I
Must purchase, by renewal of the rack,
The interview of husband and of wife,
The holiest tie beneath the heavens!—Oh, God!
Dost thou see this?

Doge. Child—child—
Mar. (abruptly). Call me not "child!"
You soon will have no children—you deserve none—
You, who can talk thus calmly of a son
In circumstances which would call forth tears
Of blood from Spartans! Though these did not weep
Their boys who died in battle, is it written
That they beheld them perish piecemeal, nor Stretch'd forth a hand to save them?

Doge. You behold me:
I cannot weep—I would I could; but if
Each white hair on this head were a young life,
This diadem nap the diadem of earth,
This diadem ring with which I wed the waves
A tallman to still them—I'd give all
For him.

Mar. With less he surely might be saved.
Doge. That answer only shows you know not Venice.

Alas! how should you? she knows not herself,
In all her mystery. Hear me—they who aim
At Foscari, aim no less at his father;
The sire's destruction would not save the son;
They work by different means to the same end,
And that is—but they have not conquer'd yet.

Mar. But they have crush'd.
Doge. Nor crush'd as yet—I live.
Mar. And your son—how long will he live?

Doge. I trust,
For all that yet is past, as many years
And happier than his father. The rash boy,
With womanish impatience to return,
Hath ruin'd all by that detected letter:
A high crime, which I neither can deny
Nor palliate, as parent or as Duke:
Had he but borne a little, little longer
His Candido exile, I had hopes—he has quenched
them—
He must return.

To exile? Mar. I have said it.
Doge. And can I not go with him?

Doge. You well know
This prayer of yours was twice denied before
By the assembled "Ten," and hardly now
Will be accorded to a third request,
Since aggravated errors on the part
Of your lord renders them still more austere.

Mar. Austere? Atrocious! The old human sands,
With one foot in the grave, with dim eyes, strange
To tears save drops of dotage, with long white
And scanty hairs, and shaking hands, and heads
As pained as their hearts are hard, they counsel,
Cabal, and put men's lives out, as if life
Were no more than the feelings long extinguish'd
Is their accursed bosoms.

Doge. You know not—
Mar. I do—I do—and so should you, methinks—
That these are demons; could it be else that Men, who have been of women born and suckled—
Who have loved, or talk'd at least of love—have Their hands, as sacred vows—have danced their

Upon their knees, perhaps have mourn'd above
them—

In pain, in peril, or in death—who are,
Or were at least in seeming, human, could
Do as they have done by yours, and you yourself—
You, who abet them?

Doge. I forgive this, for
You know not what you say.

Mar. You know it well,
And feel it nothing.

Doge. I have borne so much,
That words have ceased to shake me.

Mar. Oh, no doubt!
You have seen your son's blood flow, and your flesh shook not:
And, after that, what are a woman's words?
No more than woman's tears, that they should shake
you.

Doge. Woman, this clamorous grief of thine, I tell thee,

Is no more in the balance weigh'd with that
Which—but I pity thee, my poor Marina!

Mar. Pity my husband, or I cast it from me;
Pity thy son! Thou pity!—'T is a word
Strange to thy heart—how came it on thy lips?

Doge. I must bear these reproaches, though they wrong me.

Couldst thou but read—

Mar. 'T is not upon thy brow,
Nor in thine eyes, nor in thine acts,—where then
Should I behold this sympathy? or shall I

Doge. (pointing downwards). There.

Mar. In the earth?
Doge. To which I am tending: when
It lies upon this heart, far lighter, though
Loaded with marble, than the thoughts which press it
Now, you will know me better.

Mar. Are you, then,

Indeed, thus to be pitted?

Doge. Pitted! None
Shall ever use that base word, with which men
Cloak their soul's hearsed triumph, as a fit one
To mingle with my name; that name shall be,
As far as I have borne it, what it was
When I received it.

Mar. But for the poor children
Of him thou canst not, or thou wilt not save,
You were the last to bear it.

Doge. Would it were so!

Better for him he never had been born;
Better for me.—I have seen our house dishonor'd.

Mar. That's false! A truer, nobler, trustier heart,
More loving, or more loyal, never beat
Within a human breast. I would not change
My exiled, persecuted, mangled husband,
Oppress'd but not disgraced, crush'd, overwhelm'd,
Alive, or dead, for prince or paladin
In story or in fable, with a world
To back his suit. Dishonor'd!—As dishonor'd!
I tell thee, Doge, 't is Venice is dishonor'd!
His name shall be her foulest, worst reproach,
For what he suffers, not for what he did.
'T is ye who are all traitors, tyrant!—ye!
Did you but love your country like this victim
Who totters back in chains to tortures, and Submits to all things rather than to exile,
You'd fling yourselves before him, and implore
His grace for your enormous guilt.

Doge. He was Indeed all you have said. I better bore
The deaths of the two sons Heaven took from me,
Than Jacopo's disgrace.

Mar. That word again?

Doge. Has he not been condemn'd?

Mar. Is none but guilt so?

Doge. Time may restore his memory—I would hope so.

He was my pride, my—but 't is useless now—I am not given to tears, but wept for joy
When he was born: those drops were ominous.

Mar. I say he's innocent! And were he not so, is our own blood and kin to shrink from us in fatal moments?

Doge. I shrank not from him:
But I have other duties than a father's;
The state would not dispense me from those duties;
Twice I demanded it, but was refused:
They must then be fulfill'd.

Enter an Attendant.

A message from

Att. "The Ten."

Who bears it?

Att.

Noble Loredano.

Doge. He!—but admit him. [Exit Attendant.]

Mar.

Must I then retire?

Doge. Perhaps it is not requisite, if this Concerns your husband, and if not—Well, signor,
Your pleasure! [To Loredano, entering.]

Lor. I bear that of "the Ten."

Doge. They
Have chosen well their envoy.

Lor. 'T is their choice
Which leads me here.

Doge. It does their wisdom honor,
And no less to their courtesy.—Proceed.

Lor. We have decided.

Doge. We?

Lor. "The Ten" in council.
Doge. What! have they met again, and met without

Apprising me?

Lor. They wish'd to spare your feelings,
No less than age.

Doge. That's new—when spared they either?
I thank them, notwithstanding.

Lor. You know well
That they have power to act at their discretion,
With or without the presence of the Doge.

Doge. 'T is some years since I learn'd this, long before

I became Doge, or dream'd of such advancement.
You need not school me, signor: I sate in
That council when you were a young patrician.

Lor. True, in my father's time; I have heard him
and

The admiral, his brother, say as much.
Your highness may remember them; they both Died suddenly.

Doge. And if they did so, better
So die than live on lingeringly in pain.

Lor. No doubt: yet most men like to live their days out.

Doge. And did not they?

Lor. The grave knows best: they died,
As I said, suddenly.

Doge. Is that so strange,
That you repeat the word emphatically?

Lor. So far from strange, that never was there
death

In my mind half so natural as theirs.

Think you not so?

Doge. What should I think of mortals?
Lor. That they have mortal foes.

Doge. I understand you;
Your sires were mine, and you are heir in all things.

Lor. You best know if I should be so.

Doge. I do.

Your fathers were my foes, and I have heard
Foul rumors were abroad; I have also read
Their epitaph, attributing their deaths
To poison. 'T is perhaps as true as most Inscriptions upon tombs, and yet no less
A fable.

Lor. Who dares say so?

Doge. I!—"T is true

Your fathers were mine enemies, as bitter
As their son e'er can be, and I no less
Was theirs; but I was openly their foe:
I never work'd by plot in council, nor Cabal in commonwealth, nor secret means
Of practice against life by steel or drug.
The proof is, your existence.

Lor. I fear not.

Doge. You have no cause, being what I am; but were I
That you would have me thought, you long ere
now

Were past the sense of fear. Hate on; I care not.

Lor. I never yet knew that a noble's life
In Venice had to dread a Doge's frown,
That is, by open means.

Doge. But I, good signor,
Am, or at least was, more than a mere duke,
In blood, in mind, in means; and that they know
Who dream'd to elect me, and have since
Striven all they dare to weigh me down: be sure,
Before or since that period, had I held you
At so much price as to require your absence,
A word of mine had set such spirits to work
As would have made you nothing. But in all things
I have observed the strictest reverence;
Not for the laws alone, for those you have strain'd
(I do not speak of you but as a single Voice of the many) somewhat beyond what
I could enforce for my authority,
Were I disposed to brawl; but, as I said,
I have observed with veneration, like
A priest's for the high altar, even unto
The sacrifice of my own blood and quiet,
Safety, and all eave honor, the decrees,
The health, the pride, and welfare of the state.
And now, sir, to your business.

Lor. 'T is decreed,
That, without further repetition of
The Question, or continuance of the trial,
Which only tends to show how stubborn guilt is ("The Ten" dispensing with the stricter law
Which still prescribes the Question till a full Confession, and the prisoner partly having Avow'd his crime in not denying that
The letter to the Duke of Milan's his),
James Foscari return to banishment,
And sail in the same galley which convey'd him.

Mar. Thank God! At least they will not drag him more

Before that horrid tribunal. Would he
But think so, to my mind the happiest doom,
Not he alone, but all who dwell here, could Desire, were to escape from such a land.

Doge. That is not a Venetian thought, my daughter.

Mar. No, 'twas too human. May I share his exile?

Lor. Of this "the Ten" said nothing.

Mar. So I thought!
That were too human, also. But it was not inhibited?

Lor. It was not named.
Mar. (to the Doge). Then, father,
Surely you can obtain or grant me thus much:

Doge. I will endeavor.

Mar. And you, signor?

Lor. Lady?

'T is not for me to anticipate the pleasure
Of the tribunal.

Mar. Pleasure! what a word
To use for the decrees of—

Doge. Daughter, know you
In what a presence you pronounce these things?

Mar. A prince's and his subject's.

Lor.

Subject!

Mar.

Oh!

It galls you:—well, you are his equal, as
You think; but that you are not, nor would be,
Were he a peasant:—well, then, you're a prince,
A princely noble; and what then am I?

Lor. The offspring of a noble house.

Mar.

And wedded

To one as noble. What, or whose, then, is
The presence that should silence my free thoughts?

Lor. The presence of your husband's judges.

Doge.

And

The deference due even to the lightest word
That falls from those who rule in Venice.

Mar.

Keep

Those maxims for your mass of scared mechanics,
Your merchants, your Dalmatian and Greek slaves,
Your tributaries, your dumb citizens,
And mask'd nobility, your squire, and
Your spies, your galley and your other slaves,
To whom your midnight carryings off and drown-
ings,

Your dungeons next the palace roofs, or under
The water's level; your mysterious meetings,
And unknown dooms, and sudden executions,
Your "Bridge of Sighs," your strangling chamber,
and

Your torturing instruments, have made ye seem
The beings of another and worse world!
Keep such for them: I fear ye not. I know ye;
Have known and proved your worst, in the infernal Process of my poor husband! Treat me as Ye treated him:—you did so, in so dealing
With him. Then what have I to fear from you,
Even if I were of fearful nature, which
I trust I am not?

Doge.

You hear, she speaks wildly.

Mar. Not wisely, yet not wildly.

Lor.

Lady! words

Utter'd within these walls I bear no further
Than to the threshold, saving such as pass
Between the Duke and me on the state's service.
Doge! have you aught in answer?

Doge.

Something from

The Doge; it may be also from a parent.

Lor. My mission here is to the Doge.

Doge.

Then say

The Doge will choose his own ambassador,
Or state in person what is meet; and for
The father—

Lor.

I remember mine.—Farewell!

I kiss the hands of the illustrious lady,
And bow me to the Duke. [Exit Loredano.]

Mar.

Are you content?

Doge. I am what you behold.

Mar.

And that's a mystery.

Doge.

All things are so to mortals; who can read
them

Save he who made? or, if they can, the few
And gifted spirits, who have studied long
That loathsome volume—man, and pored upon
Those black and bloody leaves, his heart and brain,
But learn a magic which recoils upon
The adept who pursues it; all the sins
We find in others, nature made our own;
All our advantages are those of fortune;
Birth, wealth, health, beauty, are her accidents,
And when we cry out against Fate, 'twere well
We should remember Fortune can take nought
Save what she gives—the rest was nakedness,
And lusts, and appetites, and vanities,
The universal heritage, to battle
With as we may, and least in humblest stations,
Where hunger swallows all in one low want,

And the original ordinance, that man
Must sweat for his poor pittance, keeps all passions
Aloof, save fear of famine! All is low,
And false, and hollow—clay from first to last,
The prince's urn no less than potter's vessel.
Our fame is in men's breath, our lives upon
Less than their breath; our durance upon days,
Our days on seasons; our whole being on Something which is not us!—So, we are slaves,
The greatest as the meanest—nothing rests
Upon our will; the will itself no less
Depends upon a straw than on a storm;
And when we think we lead, we are most led,
And still towards death, a thing which comes as much

Without our act or choice as birth, so that
Methinks we must have sinn'd in some old world,
And this is hell: the best is, that it is not eternal.

Mar. These are things we cannot judge
On earth.

Doge. And how then shall we judge each other,
Who are all earth, and I, who am call'd upon
To judge my son? I have administer'd
My country faithfully—victoriously—
I dare them to the proof, the oath of what
She was and is: my reign has doubled realms
And, in reward, the gratitude of Venice
Has left, or is about to leave, me single.

Mar. And Foscari? I do not think of such things,
So I be left with him.

Doge.

You shall be so:

Thus much they cannot well deny.

Mar.

And if

They should, I will fly with him.

Doge.

That can ne'er be.

And whither would you fly?

Mar.

I know not, seek not—

To Syria, Egypt, to the Ottoman—
Any where, where we might breathe unfetter'd,
And live nor girt by spies, nor liable
To edicts of inquisitors of state.

Doge. What, wouldst thou have a renegade for husband,

And turn him into traitor?

Mar.

He is none!

The country is the traitress, which thrusts forth
Her best and bravest from her. Tyranny
Is far the worst of treasons. Dost thou deem None rebels except subjects? The prince who Neglects or violates his trust is more
A brigand than the robber-chief.

Doge.

I cannot

Charge me with such a breach of faith.

Mar.

No; thou

Observe'st, obey'st such laws as make old Draco's
A code of mercy by comparison.

Doge. I found the law; I did not make it. Were I
A subject, still I might find parts and portions Fit for amendment; but as prince, I never Would change, for the sake of my house, the charter
Left by our fathers.

Mar.

Did they make it for

The ruin of their children?

Doge.

Under such laws, Venice

Has risen to what she is—a state to rival
In deeds, and days, and away, and, let me add,
In glory (for we have had Roman spirits
Amongst us), all that history has bequeath'd
Of Rome and Carthage in their best times, when
The people sway'd by senators.

Mar.

Rather say,

Grown'd under the stern oligarchs.

Doge.

Perhaps so;

But yet subdued the world: in such a state
An individual, be he richest of Such rank as is permitted, or the meanest,

Without a name, is alike nothing, when
The policy, irrevocably tending
To one great end, must be maintain'd in vigor.

Mar. This means that you are more a Doge than father.

Doge. It means, I am more citizen than either.
If we had not for many centuries
Had thousands of such citizens, and shall,
I trust, have still such, Venice were no city.

Mar. Accused by the city where the laws
Would stifle nature's!

Doge. Had I as many sons
As I have years, I would have given them all,
Not without feeling, but I would have given them
To the state's service, to fulfill her wishes
On the flood, in the field, or, if it must be,
As it, alas! has been, to ostracism,
Exile, or chains, or whatsoever worse
She might decree.

Mar. And this is patriotism?
To me it seems the worst barbarity.
Let me seek out my husband: the sage "Ten,"
With all its jealousy, will hardly war
So far with a weak woman as deny me
A moment's access to his dungeon.

Doge. I'll
So far take on myself, as order that
You may be admitted.

Mar. And what shall I say
To Foscari from his father?

Doge. That he obey
The laws.

Mar. And nothing more? Will you not see him
Ere he depart? It may be the last time.

Doge. The last!—my boy!—the last time I shall see
My last of children! Tell him I will come.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Prison of Jacopo Foscari.

Jac. Fos. (solus). No light, save yon faint gleam,
Which shows me walls

Which never echo'd but to sorrow's sounds,
The sigh of long imprisonment, the step
Of feet on which the iron clank'd, the groan
Of death, the imprecation of despair!
And yet for this I have return'd to Venice,
With some faint hope, 'tis true, that time, which wears

The marble down, had worn away the hate
Of men's hearts: but I knew them not, and here
Must I consume my own, which never beat
For Venice but with such a yearning as
The dove has for her distant nest, when wheeling High in the air on her return to greet
Her callow brood. What letters are these which [Approaching the wall.

Are scrawl'd along the inexorable wall?
Will the gleam let me trace them? Ah! the names
Of my sad predecessors in this place,
The dates of their despair, the brief words of
A grief too great for many. This stone page
Holds like an epitaph their history;
And the poor captive's tale is graven on
His dungeon barrier, like the lover's record
Upon the bark of some tall tree, which bears
His own and his beloved's name. Alas!
I recognize some names familiar to me,
And blighted like to mine, which I will add,
Fittest for such a chronicle as this,
Which only can be read, as writ, by wretches.

[He engraves his name.

Enter a Familiar of "the Ten."

Fam. I bring you food.

Jac. Fos. I pray you set it down;
I am past hunger: but my lips are parch'd—
The water!

Fam. There.

Jac. Fos. (after drinking). I thank you: I am better.

Fam. I am commanded to inform you that
Your further trial is postponed.

Jac. Fos. Till when?

Fam. I know not.—It is also in my orders
That your illustrious lady be admitted.

Jac. Fos. Ah! they relent, then,—I had ceased to hope it:

'T was time.

Enter Marina.

Mar. My best beloved!

END

Jac. Fos. (embracing her). My true wife,
And only friend! What happiness!

Mar. We'll part
No more.

Jac. Fos. How! wouldst thou share a dungeon? AY.

Mar. The rack, the grave, all—anything with thee,
But the tomb last of all, for there we shall Be ignorant of each other, yet I will Share that—all things except new separation;
It is too much to have survived the first.
How dost thou? How are those worn limbs? Alas!
Why do I ask? Thy paleness—

Jac. Fos. 'Tis the joy
Of seeing thee again so soon, and so
Without expectancy, has sent the blood
Back to my heart, and left my cheeks like thine,
For thou art pale too, my Marina!

Mar. 'Tis
The gloom of this eternal cell, which never Knew sunbeam, and the sallow sullen glare
Of the familiar's torch, which seems akin
To darkness more than light, by lending to
The dungeon vapors its bituminous smoke,
Which cloud whate'er we gaze on, even thine eyes—
No, not thine eyes—they sparkle—how they sparkle!
Jac. Fos. And thine!—but I am blinded by the torch.

Mar. As I had been without it. Couldst thou see here?

Jac. Fos. Nothing at first; but use and time had taught me

Familiarity with what was darkness;
And the gray twilight of such glimmerings as Glide through the crevices made by the winds
Was kinder to mine eyes than the full sun,
When gorgeously o'ergliding any towers
Save those of Venice: but a moment ere Thou camest hither I was busy writing.

Mar. What?

Jac. Fos. My name: look, 'tis there—scraped next

The name of him who here preceded me,
If dungeon dates say true.

Mar. And what of him?

Jac. Fos. These walls are silent of men's deeds;
they only

Seem to hint shrewdly of them. Such stern walls
Were never piled on high save o'er the dead,
Or those who soon must be so.—What of him?
Thou askest.—What of me? may soon be ask'd
With the like answer—doubt and dreadful memories
Unless thou tell'st my tale.

To teach you not to shrink now from a lot,
Which, as compared with what you have undergone
Of late, is mercy.

Jac. Fbs. Ah! you never yet
Were far away from Venice, never saw
Her beautiful towers in the receding distance,
While every furrow of the vessel's track
Seem'd ploughing deep into your heart; you never Saw day go down upon your native spires
So calmly with its gold and crimson glory,
And after dreaming a disturbed vision
Of them and theirs, awoke and found them not.

Mar. I will divide this with you. Let us think
Of our departure from this much-loved city
(Since you must lose it, as it seems), and this Chamber of state, her gratitude allots you.
Our children will be cared for by the Doge,
And by my uncles: we must sail ere night.

Jac. Fbs. That's sudden. Shall I not behold my father?

Mar. You will.

Jac. Fbs. Where?

Mar. Here, or in the ducal chamber—
He said not which. I would that you could bear
Your exile as he bears it.

Jac. Fbs. Blame him not.
I sometimes murmur for a moment; but
He could not now act otherwise. A show
Of feeling or compassion on his part
Would have but drawn upon his aged head
Suspicion from "the Ten," and upon mine
Accumulated ill.

Mar. Accumulated!

What pangs are those they have spared you?

Jac. Fbs. That of leaving
Venice without beholding him or you,
Which might have been forbidden now, as 't was Upon my former exile.

Mar. That is true,
And thus far I am also the state's debtor,
And shall be more so when I see us both
Floating on the free waves—away—away—
Be it to the earth's end, from this abhor'd,
Unjust, and—

Jac. Fbs. Curse it not. If I am silent,
Who dares accuse my country?

Mar. Men and angels!
The blood of myriads reeking up to heaven,
The groans of slaves in chains, and men in dungeons,
Mothers, and wives, and sons, and sires, and subjects,
Held in the bondage of ten bald-heads; and Though last, not least, thy silence. Couldst thou say
Aught in its favor, who would praise like thee?

Jac. Fbs. Let us address us then, since so it must be.

To our departure. Who comes here?

Enter Loredano, attended by Familiars.

Lor. (to the Familiars). Retire.
But leave the torch. [Exeunt the two Familiars.]

Jac. Fbs. Most welcome, noble signor.
I did not deem this poor place could have drawn
Such presence hither.

Lor. 'Tis not the first time
I have visited these places.

Mar. Nor would be
The last, were all men's merits well rewarded.
Came you here to insult us, or remain
As spy upon us, or as hostage for us?

Lor. Neither are of my office, noble lady!
I am sent hither to your husband, to Announce "the Ten's" decree.

Mar. That tenderness
Has been anticipated: it is known.

Lor. As how?

Mar. I have inform'd him, not so gently,

Doubtless, as your niece feelings would prescribe,
The indulgence of your colleagues: but he knew it.
If you come for our thanks, take them, and hence!
The dungeon gloom is deep enough without you,
And full of reptiles, not less loathsome, though
Their sting is honester.

Jac. Fbs. I pray you, calm you.
What can avail such words?

Mar. To let him know
That he is known.

Lor. Let the fair dame preserve
Her sex's privilege.

Mar. I have some sons, sir,
Will one day thank you better.

Lor. You do well

To nurse them wisely. Foscari—you know

Your sentence, then?

Jac. Fbs. Return to Candia?

Lor. True—

For life.

Jac. Fbs. Not long.

Lor. I said—for life.

Jac. Fbs. And I

Repeat—not long.

Lor. A year's imprisonment
In Canes—afterwards the freedom of

The whole isle.
Jac. Fbs. Both the same to me: the after Freedom as is the first imprisonment.

Is 't true my wife accompanies me?

Lor. Yes,

If she so wills it.

Mar. Who obtain'd that justice?

Lor. One who wars not with women.

Mar. But oppresses

Men: howsoever, let him have my thanks

For the only boon I would have ask'd or taken

From him or such as he is.

Lor. He receives them

As they are offer'd.

Mar. May they thrive with him

So much!—no more.

Jac. Fbs. Is this, sir, your whole mission?

Because we have brief time for preparation

And you perceive your presence doth disquiet

This lady, of a house noble as yours.

Mar. Nobler!

Lor. How nobler?

Mar. As more generous!

We say the "generous steed" to express the purity
Of his high blood. Thus much I've learnt, although Venetian (who see few steeds save of bronze),
From those Venetians who have skim'd the coasts
Of Egypt and her neighbor Araby:

And why not say as soon the "generous man"?

If race be ought, it is in qualities

More than in years; and mine, which is as old

As yours, is better in its product, nay—

Look not so stern—but get you back, and pore

Upon your genealogic tree's most green

Of leaves and most mature of fruits, and there

Blush to find ancestors, who would have blush'd

For such a son—thou cold inveterate hater!

Jac. Fbs. Again, Marina!

Mar. Again! still, Marina.

See you not, he comes here to glut his hate

With a last look upon our misery?

Let him partake it!

Jac. Fbs. That were difficult.

Mar. Nothing more easy. He partakes it now—

Ay, he may well beneath a marble brow

And sneering lip the pang; but he partakes it.

A few brief words of truth shame the devil's servants

No less than master; I have probed his soul

A moment, as the eternal fire, ere long,

Will reach it always. See how he shrinks from me!

With death, and chains, and exile in his hand,
To scatter o'er his kind as he thinks fit;
They are his weapons, not his armor, for
I have pierced him to the core of his cold heart.
I care not for his frowns! We can but die,
And he but live, for him the very worst
Of destinies: each day secures him more
His tempter's.

Jac. Fos. This is mere insanity.

Mar. It may be so; and who hath made us mad?

Lor. Let her go on; it irks not me.

Mar. That's false!

You came here to enjoy a heartless triumph
Of cold looks upon manifold griefs! You came
To be sued to in vain—to mark our tears,
And heard our groans—to gaze upon the wreck
Which you have made a prince's son—my husband;
In short, to trample on the fallen—an office
The hangman shrinks from, as all men from him!
How have you sped? We are wretched, signor, as Your plots could make, and vengeance could desire us.

And how feel you?

Lor. As rocks.

Mar. By thunder blasted:
They feel not, but no less are shiver'd. Come,
Foscari; now let us go, and leave this felon,
The sole fit habitation of such a cell,
Which he has peopled often, but ne'er fitly
Till he himself shall brood in it alone.

Enter the Doge.

Jac. Fos. My father!

Doge (embracing him). Jacopo! my son—my son!
Jac. Fos. My father still! How long it is since I
Have heard this name my name—our name!

Doge. My boy!

Couldst thou but know—

Jac. Fos. I rarely, sir, have murmur'd.

Doge. I feel too much thou hast not.

Mar. Dogs! look there!

[She points to Loredano.

Doge. I see the man—what mean'st thou?

Mar. Caution.

Lor. Being

The virtue which this noble lady most
May practice, she doth well to recommend it.

Mar. Wretch! 'tis no virtue, but the policy
Of those who vain must deal perforce with vice:

As such I recommend it, as I would
To one whose foot was on an adder's path.

Doge. Daughter, it is superfluous; I have long Known Loredano.

Lor. You may know him better.

Mar. Yes; were he could not.

Jac. Fos. Father, let not these
Our parting hours be lost in listening to Reproaches, which boot nothing. Is it—Is it,
Indeed, our last of meetings?

Doge. You behold

These white hairs!

Jac. Fos. And I feel, besides, that mine
Will never be so white. Embrace me, father!

I loved you ever—never more than now.
Look to my children—to your last child's children:

Let them be all to you which he was once,
And never be to you what I am now.

Mar. May I not see them also?

Jac. Fos. No—not here.

Jac. Fos. They might behold their parent anywhere.

Mar. I would that they beheld their father in
A place which would not mingle fear with love,
To freeze their young blood in its natural current.
They have had well, slept soft, and knew not that
Their day was a mere hunted outlaw. Well

I know his fate may one day be their heritage;
But let it only be their heritage,
And not their present foe. Their senses, though
Alive to love, are yet awake to terror;
And these vile damps, too, and you thick green wave

Which floats above the place where we now stand—
A cell so far below the water's level,
Sending its pestilence through every crevice,
Might strike them: this is not their atmosphere,
However you—and you—and most of all,
As worthless—you, sir, noble Loredano!
May breathe it without prejudice.

Jac. Fos. I have not
Reflected upon this, but acquiesce.
I shall depart, then, without meeting them?

Doge. Not so: they shall await you in my chamber.

Jac. Fos. And must I leave them—all?

Lor. You must.

Jac. Fos. Not one?

Lor. They are the state's.

Mar. I thought they had been mine.

Lor. They are, in all maternal things.

Mar. That is,

In all things painful. If they're sick, they will Be left to me to tend them; should they die,
To me to bury and to mourn; but if

They live, they'll make you soldiers, senators,
Slaves, exiles—what you will; or if they are Females with portions, brides and brides for nobles!

Behold the state's care for its sons and mothers!

Lor. The hour approaches, and the wind is fair.

Jac. Fos. How know you that here, where the genial wind

Ne'er blows in all its blustering freedom?

Lor. 'T was so

When I came here. The galley floats within
A bow-shot of the "Riva di Schiavoni."

Jac. Fos. Father! I pray you to precede me, and Prepare my children to behold their father.

Doge. Be firm, my son!

Jac. Fos. I will do my endeavor.

Mar. Farewell! at least to this detested dungeon.

And him to whose good offices you owe
In your past imprisonment.

Lor. And present

Liberation.

Doge. He speaks truth.

Jac. Fos. No doubt! but 'tis
Exchange of chains for heavier chains I owe him.

He knows this, or he had not sought to change
them.

But I reproach not.

Lor. The time narrows, signor.

Jac. Fos. Alas! I little thought so lingeringly
To leave abodes like this: but when I feel
That every step I take, even from this cell,
Is one away from Venice, I look back
Even on these dull damp walls and—

Doge. Boy! no tears.

Mar. Let them flow on: he wept not on the rack
To shame him, and they cannot shame him now.

They will relieve his heart—that too kind heart—
And I will find an hour to wipe away
Those tears, or add my own. I could weep now,
But would not gratify you wretch so far.

Let us proceed. Dogs, lead the way.

Lor. (to the Familiars). The torch, there!

Mar. Yes, light us on, as to a funeral pyre,
With Loredano mourning like an heir.

Doge. My son, you are feeble; take this hand.

Jac. Fos. Alas!

Must youth support itself on age, and I
Who ought be the prop of yours?

Lor. Take mine.

Mar. Touch it not, Foscari; 't will sting you.
 Signor,
 Stand off! be sure, that if a grasp of yours
 Would raise us from the gulf wherein we are plunged,

Nor hand of ours would stretch itself to meet it.
 Come, Foscari, take the hand the altar gave you;
 It could not save, but will support you ever.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Ducal Palace.

Enter Loredano and Barbarigo.

Bar. And have you confidence in such a project?

Lor. I have.

Bar. 'T is hard upon his years.

Lor. Say rather

Kind to relieve him from the cares of state.

Bar. 'T will break his heart.

Lor. Age has no heart to break.

He has seen his son's half broken, and, except

A start of feeling in his dungeon, never Swerved.

Bar. In his countenance, I grant you, never;

But I have seen him sometimes in a calm

So desolate, that the most clamorous grief

Had nought to envy him within. Where is he?

Lor. In his own portion of the palace, with

His son, and the whole race of Foscari.

Bar. Bidding farewell.

Lor. A last. As soon he shall

Bid to his dukedom.

Bar. When embarks the son?

Lor. Forthwith—when this long leave is taken.

'T is

Time to admonish them again. Forbear;

Bar. Retrench not from their moments.

Lor. Not I, now

We have higher business for our own. This day

Shall be the last of the old Doge's reign,

As the first of his son's last banishment,

And that is vengeance.

Bar. In my mind, too deep.

Lor. 'T is moderate—not even life for life, the rule

Denounced of retribution from all time;

They owe me still my father's and my uncle's.

Bar. Did not the Doge deny this strongly?

Lor. Doubtless.

Bar. And did not this shake your suspicion?

Lor. No.

Bar. But if this deposition should take place

By our united influence in the council,

It must be done with all the deference

Due to his years, his station, and his deeds.

Lor. As much of ceremony as you will,

So that the thing be done. You may, for aught

I care, depute the council on their knees

(Like Barbarossa to the Pope), to beg him

To have the courtesy to abdicate.

Bar. What, if he will not?

Lor. We'll elect another,

And make him null.

Bar. But will the laws uphold us?

Lor. What laws?—"The Ten" are laws; and if they were not,

I will be legislator in this business.

Bar. At your own peril?

Lor. There is none, I tell you,

Our powers are such.

Bar. But he has twice already

Solicited permission to retire,

And twice it was refused.

Lor. The better reason

To grant it the third time.

Bar. Unask'd?

Lor. It shows

The impression of his former instances:

If they were from his heart, he may be thankful:

If not, 't will punish his hypocrisy.

Come, they are met by this time; let us join them.

And be thou fix'd in purpose for this once.

I have prepared such arguments as will not Fail to move them, and remove him: since

Their thoughts, their objects, have been sounded, do not

You, with your wonted scruples, teach us pause,

And all will prosper.

Bar. Could I but be certain

This is no prelude to such persecution

Of the sire as has fallen upon the son,

I would support you.

Lor. He is safe, I tell you;

His fourscore years and five may linger on

As long as he can drag them; 't is his throne

Alone is aim'd at.

Bar. But discarded princes

Are seldom long of life.

Lor. And men of eighty

More seldom still.

Bar. And why not wait these few years?

Lor. Because we have waited long enough, and he Lived longer than enough. Hence! in to council!

[Exeunt Loredano and Barbarigo.]

Enter Memmo and a Senator.

Sen. A summons to "the Ten!" Why so?

Mem.

"The Ten"

Alone can answer: they are rarely wont

To let their thoughts anticipate their purpose

By previous proclamation. We are summon'd—

That is enough:

Sen. For them, but not for us;

I would know why.

Mem. You will know why anon,

If you obey: and, if not, you no less

Will know why you should have obey'd.

Sen.

I mean not

To oppose them, but—

Mem. In Venice "but" 's a traitor.

But me no "buts" unless you would pass o'er

The Bridge which few repass.

Sen.

I am silent.

Mem.

Why

Thus hesitate? "The Ten" have call'd in aid

Of their deliberation five and twenty

Patricians of the senate—you are one,

And I another; and it seems to me

Both honor'd by the choice or chance which leads us

To mingle with a body so august.

Sen. Most true. I say no more.

Mem.

As we hope, signor.

And all may honestly (that is, all those

Of noble blood may) one day hope to be

Decemvirs, it is surely for the senate's

Chosen delegates a school of wisdom, to

Be thus admitted, though as novices,

To view the mysteries.

Sen.

Let us view them: they,

No doubt, are worth it.

Mem.

Being worth our lives

If we divulge them, doubtless they are worth

Something, at least to you or me.

Sen.

I sought not

A place within the sanctuary; but being

Chosen, however reluctantly so chosen,
I shall fulfill my office.

Mar. Let us not
Be latest in obeying "the Ten's" summons.
Sen. All are not met, but I am of your thought
So far—let's in.

Mar. The earliest are most welcome
In earnest council—we will not be least so.

[Exeunt.]

Enter the Doge, Jacopo Foscari, and Marina.

Jac. Fos. Ah, father! though I must and will depart.

Yet—yet—I pray you to obtain for me
That I once more return unto my home,
How'er remote the period. Let there be
A point of time, as beacon to my heart,
With any penalty annex'd they please,
But let me still return.

Doge. Son Jacopo,
Go and obey our country's will: 'tis not
For us to look beyond.

Jac. Fos. But still I must Look back. I pray you think of me.

Doge. Alas!
You ever were my dearest offspring, when
They were more numerous, nor can be less so
Now you are last: but did the state demand
The exile of the disinterred ashes
Of your three goodly brothers, now in earth,
And their desponding shades came fitting round
To impede the act, I must no less obey
A duty paramount to every duty.

Mar. My husband! let us on: this but prolongs
Our sorrow.

Jac. Fos. But we are not summon'd yet;
The galley's sails are not unfur'd:—who knows
The wind may change.

Mar. And if it do, it will not Change their hearts, or your lot: the galley's oars
Will quickly clear the harbor.

Jac. Fos. Oh, ye elements!
Where are your storms?

Mar. In human breasts. Alas!
Will nothing calm you?

Jac. Fos. Never yet did mariner
Put up to patron saint such prayers for prosperous
And pleasant breezes, as I call upon you,
Ye tutelary saints of my own city! which
Ye love not with more holy love than I,
To lash up from the deep the Adrian waves,
And waken Auster, sovereign of the tempest!
Till the sea dash me back on my own shore
A broken corpse upon the barren Lido,
Where I may mingle with the sands which skirt
The land I love, and never shall see more!

Mar. And wish you this with me beside you?

Jac. Fos. No—
No—not for thee, too good, too kind! Mayst thou
Live long to be a mother to those children
Thy fond fidelity for a time deprives
Of such support! But for myself alone,
May all the winds of heaven howl down the Gulf,
And tear the vessel, till the mariners,
Appall'd, turn their despairing eyes on me;
As the Phœnicæans did on Jonah, then
Cast me out from amongst them, as an offering To appease the waves. The billow which destroys
me

Will be more merciful than man, and bear me
Dead, but still bear me to a native grave,
From fishers' hands, upon the desolate strand,
Which, of its thousand wrecks, hath ne'er received
One honored like the heart which then
Will be—But wherefore breaks it not? why live I?
Mar. To man thyself, I trust, with time, to master
Such restless passion. Until now thou wert

A sufferer, but not a loud one: why,
What is this to the things thou hast borne in silence—
Imprisonment and actual torture?

Jac. Fos. Double,
Triple, and tenfold torture! But you are right,
It must be borne. Father, your blessing.

Doge. Would
It could avail thee! but no less thou hast it.

Jac. Fos. Forgive—
Doge. What?

Jac. Fos. My poor mother, for my birth,
And me for having lived, and you yourself
(As I forgive you) for the gift of life,
Which you bestow'd upon me as my sire.

Mar. What hast thou done?
Jac. Fos. Nothing. I cannot charge
My memory with much save sorrow: but
I have been so beyond the common lot
Chasten'd and visited, I needs must think
That I was wicked. If it be so, may
What I have undergone have keep me from
A like hereafter!

Mar. Fear not: that's reserved
For your oppressors.

Jac. Fos. Let me hope not.

Mar. Hope not?
Jac. Fos. I cannot wish them all they have inflicted.

Mar. All! the consummate fiends! A thousand-
fold

May the worm which ne'er dieth feed upon them!

Jac. Fos. They may repent.

Mar. And if they do, Heaven will not Accept the tardy penitance of sinners.

Enter an Officer and Guards.

Off. Signor! the boat is at the shore—the wind
Is rising—we are ready to attend you.

Jac. Fos. And I to be attended. Once more, father,
Farewell!

Doge. Take it. Alas! how thine own trembles!
Jac. Fos. No—you mistake; 'tis yours that shakes, my father.

Farewell!

Doge. Farewell! Is there aught else?

Jac. Fos. No—nothing.
[To the Officer.]

Lend me your arm, good signor.

Off. You turn pale—
Let me support you—paler—ho! some aid there!
Some water!

Mar. Ah, he is dying!

Jac. Fos. Now, I'm ready—
My eyes swim strangely—where's the door?

Mar. Away!

Let me support him—my best love! Oh, God!

How faintly beats this heart—this pulse!

Jac. Fos. The light!

Is it the light?—I am faint.

[Officer presents him with water.]

Off. He will be better,

Perhaps, in the air.

Jac. Fos. I doubt not. Father—wife—

Your hands!

Mar. There's death in that damp clammy grasp.

Oh, God!—My Foscari, how fare you?

Jac. Fos. Well!

[He dies.]

Off. He's gone!

Doge. He's free.

Mar. No—no, he is not dead;

There must be life yet in that heart—he could not

Thus leave me.

Doge. Daughter!

Mar. Hold thy peace, old man!

I am no daughter now—then hast no son.

Oh, Foscari!

Off. We must remove the body.
Mar. Touch it not, dungeon miscreants! your base office
 Ends with his life, and goes not beyond murder,
 Even by your murderous laws. Leave his remains
 To those who know to honor them.
Off. I must
 Inform the signory, and learn their pleasure.
Doge. Inform the signory from me, the Doge,
 They have no further power upon those ashes:
 While he lived, he was theirs, as fits a subject—
 Now he is mine—my broken-hearted boy!

[Exit Officer.]

Mar. And I must live!
Doge. Your children live, Marina.
Mar. My children! true—they live, and I must live
 To bring them up to serve the state, and die
 As died their father. Oh! what best of blessings
 Were barrenness in Venice! Would my mother
 Had been so!
Doge. My unhappy children!
Mar. What!
 You feel it then at last—you!—Where is now
 The stoic of the state?
Doge (throwing himself down by the body). Here.
Mar. Ay, weep on!
 I thought you had no tears—you hoarded them
 Until they are useless; but weep on! he never Shall weep more—never, never more.

Enter Loredano and Barbarigo.

Lor. What's here?
Mar. Ah! the devil come to insult the dead!
Avant!
 Incarnate Lucifer! 't is holy ground.
 A martyr's ashes now lie there, which make it
 A shrine. Get thee back to thy place of torment!
Bar. Lady, we knew not of this sad event,
 But pass'd here merely on our path from council.
Mar. Pass on.
Lor. We sought the Doge.
Mar. (pointing to the Doge, who is still on the ground by his son's body). He's busy, look,
 About the business you provided for him.
 Are ye content?
Bar. We will not interrupt
 A parent's sorrows.
Mar. No, ye only make them,
 Then leave them.
Doge (rising). Sirs, I am ready.
Bar. No—not now.
Lor. Yet 't was important.
Doge. If 't was so, I can Only repeat—I am ready.
Bar. It shall not be
 Just now, though Venice totter'd o'er the deep
 Like a frail vessel. I respect your griefs.
Doge. I thank you. If the tidings which you bring
 Are evil, you may say them; nothing further
 Can touch me more than him thou look'st on there;
 If they be good, say on: you need not fear
 That they can comfort me.
Bar. I would they could!
Doge. I spoke not to you, but to Loredano.
He understands me.
Mar. Ah! I thought it would be so.
Doge. What mean you?
Mar. Lo! there is the blood beginning
 To flow through the dead lips of Foscari—
 The body bleeds in presence of the assassin.
 (To Loredano). Thou cowardly murderer by law,
 behold
 How death itself bears witness to thy deeds!
Doge. My child! this is a fantasy of grief.
 Bear hence the body. (To his attendants). Signora,
 if it please you,

Within an hour I'll hear you.
 [Exeunt Doge, Marina, and attendants with the body. Maserio Loredano and Barbarigo.]
Bar. He must not
 Be troubled now.
Lor. He said himself that nought
 Could give him trouble further.
Bar. These are words;
 But grief is lonely, and the breaking in Upon it barbarous.
Lor. Sorrow preys upon
 Its solitude, and nothing more diverts it
 From its sad visions of the other world,
 Than calling it at moments back to this.
 The busy have no time for tears.
Bar. And therefore
 You would deprive this old man of all business?
Lor. The thing's decreed. The giunta and "the Ten"
 Have made it law—who shall oppose that law?
Bar. Humanity!
Lor. Because his son is dead?
Bar. And yet unburied.
Lor. Had we known this when
 The act was passing, it might have suspended
 Its passage, but impedes it not—once past.
Bar. I'll not consent.
Lor. You have committed to
 All that's essential—leave the rest to me.
Bar. Why press his abdication now?
Lor. The feelings
 Of private passion may not interrupt
 The public benefit; and what the state
 Decides to-day must not give way before
 To-morrow for a natural accident.
Bar. You have a son.
Lor. I have—and had a father.
Bar. Still so inexorable?
Lor. Still.
Bar. But let him
 Inter his son before we press upon him
 This edict.
Lor. Let him call up into life
 My sire and uncle—I consent. Men may,
 Even aged men, be, or appear to be,
 Sires of a hundred sons, but cannot kindle
 An atom of their ancestors from earth.
 The victims are not equal: he has seen
 His sons expire by natural deaths, and I
 My sires by violent and mysterious maladies.
 I used no poison, bribed no subtle master
 Of the destructive art of healing,
 To shorten the path to the eternal cure.
 His sons—and he had four—are dead, without
 My dabbling in vile drugs.
Bar. And art thou sure
 He dealt in such?
Lor. Most sure.
Bar. And yet he seems
 All openness.
Lor. And so he seem'd not long Ago to Carmagnuola.
Bar. The attainted
 And foreign traitor?
Lor. Even so: when he,
 After the very night in which "the Ten"
 (Join'd with the Doge) decided his destruction,
 Met the great Duke at daybreak with a jest,
 Demanding whether he should anger him
 "The good day or good night?" his Dogeship an-swer'd,
 "That he in truth had pass'd a night of vigil,
 In which (he added with a gracious smile),
 There often has been question about you."
 "T was true; the question was the death resolved

* An historical fact. See Daru, tom. ii.

Of Carmagnuola, eight months ere he died;
And the old Doge, who knew him doom'd, smiled on him

With deadly countenance, eight long months before—hand—

Eight months of such hypocrisy as is learn't but in eighty years. Brave Carmagnuola is dead; so is young Foscari and his brethren—
I never smiled on them.

Bar. Was Carmagnuola

Your friend?

Lor. He was the safeguard of the city.
In early life its foe, but, in his manhood, its saviour first, then victim.

Bar. Ah! that seems
The penalty of saving cities. He

Whom we now act against not only saved
Our own, but added others to our way.

Lor. The Romans (and we ape them) gave a crown

To him who took a city; and they gave

A crown to him who saved a citizen

In battle: the rewards are equal. Now,

If we should measure forth the cities taken

By the Doge Foscari, with citizens

Destroy'd by him, or through him, the account

Were fearfully against him, although narrow'd

To private havoc, such as between him

And my dead father.

Bar. Are you then thus fix'd?

Lor. Why, what should change me?

Bar. That which changes me:

But you, I know, are marble to retain

A feud. But when all is accomplish'd, when

The old man is deposed, his name degraded,

His sons all dead, his family depress'd,

And you and yours triumphant, shall you sleep?

Lor. More soundly.

Bar. That's an error, and you'll find it

Ere you sleep with your fathers.

Lor. They sleep not

In their accelerated graves, nor will

Till Foscari fills his. Each night I see them Stalk frowning round my couch, and, pointing towards

The ducal palace, marshal me to vengeance.

Bar. Fancy's distemper! There's no passion

More spectral or fantastical than Hate;

Not even its opposite, Love, so peoples air

With phantoms, as this madness of the heart.

Enter an Officer.

Lor. Where go you, sirrah?

Off. By the ducal order
To forward the preparatory rites
For the late Foscari's interment.

Bar. Their

Vault has been often open'd of late years.

Lor. 'T will be full soon, and may be closed for ever.

Off. May I pass on?

Lor. You may.

Bar. How bears the Doge

This last calamity?

Off. With desperate firmness.

In presence of another he says little,

But I perceive his lips move now and then;

And once or twice I heard him, from the adjoining

Apartment, mutter forth the words—"My son!"

Scarce audibly. I must proceed. [Exit Officer.]

Bar. This stroke

Will move all Venice in his favor.

Lor. Right!

We must be speedy; let us call together

The delegates appointed to convey

The council's resolution.

Bar. I protest

Against it at this moment.

Lor. As you please—

I'll take their voices on it nevertheless,

And see whose most may sway them, yours or mine.

[Re-enter Barbarigo and Loredano.]

ACT V.

SCENE 1.—The Doge's Apartment.

The Doge and Attendants.

At. My lord, the deputation is in waiting;

But add, that if another hour would better

Accord with your will, they will make it theirs.

Doge. To me all hours are alike. Let them approach. [Exit Attendant.]

An Officer. Prince! I have done your bidding.

Doge. What command?

Off. A melancholy one—to call the attendance

Of—

Doge. True—true—true: I crave your pardon. I

Begin to fall in apprehension, and

Wax very old—old almost as my years.

Till now I fought them off, but they begin

To overtake me.

Enter the Deputation, consisting of six of the Signory, and the Chief of the Ten.

Noble men, your pleasure!

Chief of the Ten. In the first place, the council doth condole

With the Doge on his late and private grief.

Doge. No more—no more of that.

Chief of the Ten. Will not the Duke

Accept the homage of respect? I do think it as 't is given—proceed.

Chief of the Ten. "The Ten,"

With appointed giunta from the senate

Of twenty-five of the best-born patricians,

Having deliberated on the state

Of the republic, and the overwhelming cares

Which, at this moment, doubly must oppress

Your years, so long devoted to your country,

Have judged it fitting, with all reverence,

Now to solicit from your wisdom (which Upon reflection must accord in this)

The resignation of the ducal ring,

Which you have worn so long and venerably:

And to prove that they are not ungrateful, nor

Cold to your years and services, they add

An appanage of twenty hundred golden

Ducats, to make retirement not less splendid

Than should become a sovereign's retreat.

Doge. Did I hear rightly?

Chief of the Ten. Need I say again?

Doge. No—Have you done?

Chief of the Ten. I have spoken. Twenty-four Hours are accorded you to give an answer.

Doge. I shall not need so many seconds.

Chief of the Ten. We

Will now retire.

Doge. Stay! Four and twenty hours

Will alter nothing which I have to say.

Chief of the Ten. Speak!

Doge. When I twice before reiterated

My wish to abdicate, it was refused me;

And not alone refused, but ye exacted

An oath from me that I would never more

Renew this instance. I have sworn to die

In full exertion of the functions which
My country call'd me here to exercise—
According to my honor and my conscience—
I cannot break my oath.

Chief of the Ten. Reduce us not
To the alternative of a decree,
Instead of your compliance.

Doge. Providence
Prolongs my days to prove and chasten me;
But ye have no right to reproach my length
Of days, since every hour has been the country's.
I am ready to lay down my life for her,
As I have laid down dearer things than life:
But for my dignity—I hold it of
The whole republic: when the general will
Is manifest, then you shall all be answer'd.

Chief of the Ten. We grieve for such an answer;
but it cannot

Avail you aught.

Doge. I can submit to all things,
But nothing will advance: no, not a moment.
What you decree—decree.

Chief of the Ten. With this, then, must we Return to those who sent us?

Doge. You have heard me.

Chief of the Ten. With all due reverence we retire.
[Exeunt the Deputation, etc.]

Enter an Attendant.

Att. My lord,
The noble dame Marina craves an audience.

Doge. My time is hers.

Enter Marina.

Mar. My lord, if I intrude—
Perhaps you fain would be alone?

Doge. Alone! Alone!

Alone, come all the world around me, I

Am now and evermore. But we will bear it.

Mar. We will, and for the sake of those who are,
Endeavor—Oh, my husband!

Doge. Give it way:

I cannot comfort thee.

Mar. He might have lived,

So form'd for gentle privacy of life,

So loving, so beloved; the native of Another land, and who so blest and blessing

As my poor Foscari? Nothing was wanting

Unto his happiness and mine save not

To be Venetian.

Doge. Or a prince's son.

Mar. Yes; all things which conduce to other men's Imperfect happiness or high ambition.

By some strange destiny, to him proved deadly.

The country and the people whom he loved,

The prince of whom he was the elder born,

And—

Doge. Soon may be a prince no longer.

Mar. How?

Doge. They have taken my son from me, and now aim

At my too long worn diadem and ring.

Let them resume the gewgaws!

Mar. Oh, the tyrants!

In such an hour too!

Doge. 'T is the fittest time;

An hour ago I should have felt it.

Mar. And

Will you not now resent it?—Oh, for vengeance!

But he, who, had he been enough protected,

Might have repaid protection in this moment,

Cannot assist his father.

Doge. Nor should do so

Against his country, had he a thousand lives

Instead of that—

Mar. They tortured from him. This

May be pure patriotism. I am a woman:

To me my husband and my children were
Country and home. I loved him—how I loved him!
I have seen him pass through such an ordeal as
The old martyrs would have shrunk from: he is gone,

And I, who would have given my blood for him,
Have nought to give but tears! But could I com-

pass

The retribution of his wrongs!—Well, well!

I have sons, who shall be men.

Doge. Your grief distracts you.

Mar. I thought I could have borne it, when I saw

him

Bow'd down by such oppression; yes, I thought

That I would rather look upon his come

Than his prolong'd captivity:—I am patient

For that thought now. Would I were in his grave!

Doge. I must look on him once more.

Mar. Come with me!

Doge. Is he—

Mar. Our bridal bed is now his bier.

Doge. And he is in his shroud!

Mar. Come, come, old man!

[Exeunt the Doge and Marina.]

Enter Barberigo and Loredano.

Bar. (to an Attendant). Where is the Doge?

Att. This instant retired hence

With the illustrious lady his son's widow.

Lor. Where?

Att. To the chamber where the body lies.

Bar. Let us return, then.

Lor.

You forget, you cannot.

We have the implicit order of the giunta

To await their coming here, and join them in

Their office: they'll be here soon after us.

Bar. And will they press their answer on the

Doge?

Lor. 'T was his own wish that all should be done promptly.

He answer'd quickly, and must so be answer'd;

His dignity is look'd to, his estate

Cared for—what would he more?

Bar.

Die in his robes!

He could not have lived long; but I have done

My best to save his honors, and opposed

This proposition to the last, though vainly.

Why would the general vote compel me hither?

Lor. 'T was fit that some one of such different

thoughts

From ours should be a witness, lest false tongues

Should whisper that a harsh majority

Dreaded to have its acts beheld by others.

Bar. And not less, I must needs think, for the sake

Of humbling me for my vain opposition.

You are ingenious, Loredano, in

Your modes of vengeance, nay, poetical,

A very Ovid in the art of hating;

'T is thus (although a secondary object,

Yet hate has microscopic eyes) to you

I owe, by way of toll to the more zealous,

This undesired association in

Your giunta's duties.

Lor.

How!—my giunta!

Bar.

They speak your language, watch your nod, approve

Your plans, and do your work. Are they not yours?

Lor. You talk unwarily. 'T were best they hear

not

This from you.

Bar. Oh! they'll hear as much one day

From louder tongues than mine; they have pass

beyond

Even their exorbitance of power: and when

This happens in the most condemn'd and abused

States, stung humanity will rise to check it.

Lor. You talk but idly.

Bar. That remains for proof.
Here come our colleagues.

Enter the Deputation as before.

Chief of the Ten. Is the Duke aware
We seek his presence?

All. He shall be inform'd. [Exit Ascendant.]

Bar. The Duke is with his son. If it be so,
Chief of the Ten. We will remit him till the rites are over.
Let us return. 'Tis time enough to-morrow.

Lor. (aside to Bar.) Now the rich man's hell-fire upon your tongue,
Unquench'd, unquenchable! I'll have it torn
From its vile babbling roots, till you shall utter Nothing but sobe through blood, for this! Sage signora,

I pray ye be not hasty. [Aloud to the others.]
Bar. But be human!

Lor. See, the Duke comes!

Enter the Doge.

Doge. I have obey'd your summons.
Chief of the Ten. We come once more to urge our past request.

Doge. And I to answer.

Chief of the Ten. What?

Doge. My only answer.

You have heard it.

Chief of the Ten. Hear you then the last decree,
Definitive and absolute!

Doge. To the point—
To the point! I know of old the forms of office,
And gentle preludes to strong acts—Go on!

Chief of the Ten. You are no longer Doge: you are released

From your imperial oath as sovereign;
Your ducal robes must be put off; but for
Your services, the state allots the appanage
Already mention'd in our former congress.
Three days are left you to remove from hence,
Under the penalty to see confiscated
All your own private fortune.

Doge. That last clause,
I am proud to say, would not enrich the treasury.

Chief of the Ten. Your answer, Duke!

Lor. Your answer, Francesco Foscari!

Doge. If I could have foreseen that my old age
Was prejudicial to the state, the chief
Of the republic never would have shown
Himself so far ungrateful, as to place
His own high dignity before his country;
But this life having been so many years
Not useless to that country, I would fain
Have consecrated my last moments to her.
But the decree being render'd, I obey.

Chief of the Ten. If you would have the three days named extended,

We willingly will lengthen them to eight,
As sign of our esteem.

Doge. Not eight hours, signor,
Nor even eight minutes—there's the ducal ring,

[Taking off his ring and cap.]
And there the ducal diadem. And so

The Adriatic's free to wed another.

Chief of the Ten. Yet go not forth so quickly.
Doge. I am old, sir,

And even to move but slowly must begin
To move betimes. Methinks I see amongst you

A face I know not—Senator! your name,
You, by your garb, Chief of the Forty!

Memo. Signor,
I am the son of Marco Memmo.

Doge. Ah!
Your father was my friend.—But sons and fathers!—
What, be I say servants there!

All. My prince!
Doge. No prince—

There are the princes of the prince! (Pointing to the Ten's Deputation.)—Prepare

To part from hence upon the instant.

Chief of the Ten. Why

So rashly? 't will give scandal.

Doge. Answer that;

[To the Ten.]

It is your province.—Sir, bestir yourselves:

[To the Servants.]

There is one burden which I beg you bear

With care, although 'tis past all further harm—

But I will look to that myself.

Bar. He means

The body of his son.

Doge. And call Marina,

My daughter!

Enter Marina.

Doge. Get thee ready; we must mourn

Elsewhere.

Mar. And everywhere.

Doge. True; but in freedom,

Without these jealous spies upon the great.

Signora, you may depart: what would you more?

We are going: do you fear that we shall bear

The palace with us? Its old walls, ten times

As old as I am, and I'm very old,

Have served you, so have I, and I and they Could tell a tale; but I invoke them not

To fall upon you! else they would, as erst

The pillars of stone Dagon's temple on

The Israelite and his Philistine foes.

Such power I do believe there might exist

In such a curse as mine, provoked by such

As you; but I curse not. Adieu, good signora!

May the next duke be better than the present.

Lor. The present duke is Paschal Malipiero.

Doge. Not till I pass the threshold of these doors.

Lor. Saint Mark's great bell is soon about to toll

For his inauguration.

Doge. Earth and heaven!

Ye will reverberate this peal; and I

Live to hear this!—the first Doge who e'er heard

Such sound for his successor! Happier he,

My attained predecessor, stern Faliero—

This insult at the least was spared him.

Lor. What!

Do you regret a traitor?

Doge. No—I merely

Envy the dead.

Chief of the Ten. My lord, if you indeed

Are bent upon this rash abandonment

Of the state's palace, at the least retire

By the private staircase, which conducts you towards

The landing place of the canal.

Doge. No. I

Will now descend the stairs by which I mounted

To sovereignty—the Giants' Stairs, on whose

Broad eminence I was invested duke.

My services have call'd me up those steps,

The malice of my foes will drive me down them.

There five and thirty years ago was I

Install'd, and traversed these same halls, from which

I never thought to be divorced except

A come—a come, it might be, fighting for them—

But not push'd hence by fellow citizens.

But come; my son and I will go together—

He to his grave, and I to pray for mine.

Chief of the Ten. What! thus in public?

Doge. I was publicly

Elected, and so will I be deposited.

Marina! art thou willing?

Mar. Here's my arm!

Doge. And here my staff: thus propp'd will I go forth.

Chief of the Ten. It must not be—the people will perceive it.

Doge. The people!—There's no people, you well know it.

Else you dare not deal thus by them or me.

There is a populace, perhaps, whose looks may shame you; but they dare not groan nor curse you.

Save with their hearts and eyes.

Chief of the Ten. You speak in passion, Else—

Doge. You have reason. I have spoken much more than my wont: it is a foible which was not of mine, but more excuses you, inasmuch as it shows that I approach a dotage which may justify this deed of yours, although the law does not, nor will. Farewell, sire!

Bar. You shall not depart without

An escort fitting past and present rank.

We will accompany, with due respect,

The Doge unto his private palace. Say!

My brethren, will we not?

Different Voices.

Ay!—Ay!

Doge. You shall not

Stir—in my train, at least. I enter'd here

As sovereign—I go out as citizen.

By the same portals, but as citizen.

All these vain ceremonies are base insults,

Which only ulcerate the heart the more,

Applying poisons there as antidotes.

Pomp is for princes—I am none!—That's false,

I am, but only to these gates.—Ah!

Lor.

Hark!

[The great bell of Saint Mark's tolls.]

Bar. The bell!

Chief of the Ten. Saint Mark's, which tolls for the election Of Malipiero.

Doge. Well I recognize

The sound! I heard it once, but once before,

And that is five and thirty years ago!

Even then I was not young.

Bar. Sit down, my lord!

You tremble.

Doge. 'Tis the knell of my poor boy!

My heart aches bitterly.

Bar. I pray you sit.

Doge. No; my seat here has been a throne till now.

Marina! let us go.

Mar. Most readily.

Doge (walks a few steps, then stops). I feel athirst—will no one bring me here

A cup of water?

Bar. I—

Mar. And I—

Lor. And I—

[The Doge takes a goblet from the hand of Loredano.]

Doge. I take yours, Loredano, from the hand Most fit for such an hour as this.

Lor. Why so?

Doge. 'Tis said that our Venetian crystal has Such pure antipathy to poisons as

To burst, if aught of venom touches it.

You bore this goblet, and it is not broken.

Lor. Well, sir!

Doge. Then it is false, or you are true.

For my own part, I credit neither; 'tis

An idle legend.

Mar. You talk wildly, and

Had better now be seated, not as yet

Depart. Ah! now you look as look'd my husband!

Bar. He sinks!—support him!—quick—a chair—support him!

Doge. The bell tolls on!—let's hence—my brain's on fire!

Bar. I do beseech you, lean upon us!

Doge. No!—

A sovereign should die standing. My poor boy!

Off with your arms!—That bell!

[The Doge drops down and dies.]

Mar. My God! My God!

Bar. (to Lor.). Behold! your work's completed!

Chief of the Ten. Is there then

No aid? Call in assistance!

At.

'Tis all over.

Chief of the Ten. If it be so, at least his obsequies

Shall be such as befits his name and nation,

His rank, and his devotion to the duties

Of the realm, while his age permitted him

To do himself and them full justice. Brethren,

Say, shall it not be so?

Bar. He has not had

The misery to die a subject where

He reign'd: then let his funeral rites be princely.*

Chief of the Ten. We are agreed, then?

*All, except Lor., answer.* Yes.

Chief of the Ten. Heaven's peace be with him!

Mar. Signora, your pardon: this is mockery.

Juggle no more with that poor remnant, which,

A moment since, while yet it had a soul

(A soul by whom you have increased your empire,

And made your power as proud as was his glory),

You banish'd from his palace, and tore down

From his high place, with such relentless coldness;

And now, when he can neither know these honors,

Nor would accept them if he could, you, signora,

Purpose with idle and superfluous pomp

To make a pageant over what you trampled.

A princely funeral will be your reproach,

And not his honor.

Chief of the Ten. Lady, we revoke not

Our purposes so readily.

Mar. I know it,

As far as wretches torturing the living.

I thought the dead had been beyond even you,

Though (some, no doubt) consign'd to powers which may

Resemble that you exercise on earth.

Leave him to me; you would have done so for

His drags of life, which you have kindly shorten'd:

It is my last of duties, and may prove

A dreary comfort in my desolation.

Grief is fantastical, and loves the dead,

And the apparel of the grave.

Chief of the Ten. Do you

Pretend still to this office?

Mar. I do, signora.

Though his possessions have been all consumed

In the state's service, I have still my dowry,

Which shall be consecrated to his rites,

And those of—[She stops with agitation.]

Chief of the Ten. Best retain it for your children.

Mar. Ay, they are fatherless; I thank you.

Chief of the Ten. W^e

Cannot comply with your request. His relics

Shall be exposed with wonted pomp, and follow'd

Unto their home by the new Doge, not clad

As Doge, but simply as a senator.

Mar. I have heard of murderers, who have inter'd

Their victims; but ne'er heard, until this hour,

Of so much splendor in hypocrisy

O'er those they slew. I've heard of widows' tears—

Alas! I have shed none—always thanks to you!

I've heard of heirs in sables—you have left none

To the deceased, so you would act the part

* By a decree of the council, the trappings of supreme power of which the doge had divested himself while living, were restored to him when dead; and he was interred, with dual magnificence, in the church of the Minorites, the new doge attending as a mourner.—See DARE.

Of such. Well, sir, your will be done! as one day I trust, Heaven's will be done too!

Chief of the Tm. Know you, lady, To whom ye speak, and perils of such speech?
Mor. I know the former better than yourselves; The latter—like yourselves; and can face both.
 Wish you more funerals?

Bar. Heed not her rash words; Her circumstances must excuse her bearing.

Chief of the Tm. We will not note them down.
Bar. (turning to Lor., who is writing upon his tablets). What art thou writing.

With such an earnest brow, upon thy tablets?
Lor. (pointing to the Doge's body). That he has paid me!

Chief of the Tm. What debt did he owe you?
Lor. A long and just one; Nature's debt and mine.
 [Curtain falls.]

THE DEFORMED TRANSFORMED.

3 DRAMA.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THIS production* is founded partly on the story of a novel called "The Three Brothers," published many years ago, from which M. G. Lewis's "Wood Demon" was also taken, and partly on the "Faust" of the great Goethe. The present publication contains the two first parts only, and the opening chorus of the third. The rest may, perhaps, appear hereafter.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Stranger, afterwards Caesar.
 Arnold.
 Bertha.

Philbert.
 Cellini.
 Bertha.

Citizens.
 Spirits, Soldiers, Citizens of Rome,
 Priests, Peasants, &c.

PART I.

SCENE I.—A Forest.

Enter Arnold and his Mother Bertha.

Ber. Out, hunchback!

Arn. I was born so, mother!†
Ber. Out,

Thou incubus! Thou nightmare! Of seven sons, The sole abortion!

Arn. Would that I had been so, And never seen the light!

Ber. I would so too! But as thou hast—hence, hence—and do thy best! That back of thine may bear its burden; 'tis More high, if not so broad as that of others.

Arn. It bears its burden;—but, my heart! Will it Sustain that which you lay upon it, mother? I love, or, at the least, I loved you: nothing Save you, in nature, can love aught like me. You nursed me—do not kill me!

Ber. Yes—I nursed thee, Because thou wert my first-born, and I knew not If there would be another unlike thee, That monstrous sport of nature. But get hence, And gather wood!

Arn. I will: but when I bring it, Speak to me kindly. Though my brothers are So beautiful and lusty, and as free As the free chase they follow, do not spurn me; Our milk has been the same.

Ber. As is the hedgehog's, Which sucks at midnight from the wholesome dam Of the young bull, until the milkmaid finds

The nipple next day sore and udder dry.† Call not thy brothers brethren! Call me not Mother; for if I brought thee forth, it was As foolish hens at times hatch vipers, by Sitting upon strange eggs. Out, urchin, out!

[Exit Bertha.]
Arn. (solus). Oh, mother!—She is gone, and I must do

Her bidding;—wearily but willingly I would fulfill it, could I only hope

A kind word in return. What aill I do?

[Arnold begins to cut wood: in doing this he wounds one of his hands.]

My labor for the day is over now.

Accursed be this blood that flows so fast;

For double curses will be my meed now

At home—What home? I have no home, no kin,

No kind—not made like other creatures, or To share their sports or pleasures. Must I bleed too

Like thee? Oh that each drop which falls to earth Would rise a snake to sting them, as they have stung me!

Or that the devil, to whom they liken me,

Would aid his likeness! If I must partake

His form, why not his power? Is it because I have not his will too? For one kind word

From her who bore me would still reconcile me

Even to this hateful aspect. Let me wash

The wound.

[Arnold goes to a spring, and stoops to wash his hand: he starts back.]

*This drama was begun at Pisa in 1831, but was not published till January, 1834.

†One of the few names of Lord Byron's "Memoirs," which related to his early days, was where, in speaking of his own misfortune on the subject of his deformed foot, he described the feelings of horror and humiliation that came over him, when his mother, in one of her fits of passion, called him "a lame brat!" It may be questioned, whether this drama was not indebted for its origin to this single recollection.

‡This is now generally believed to be a vulgar error: the smallness of the animal's mouth rendering it incapable of the mischief laid to its charge.

They are right; and Nature's mirror shows me
What she hath made me. I will not look on it Again, and scarce dare think on't. Hideous wretch

That I am! The very waters mock me with My horrid shadow—like a demon placed
Deep in the fountain to scare back the cattle
From drinking therein.

[He pauses.]

And shall I live on,
A burden to the earth, myself, and shame
Unto what brought me into life! Thou blood,
Which flowed so freely from a scratch, let me
Try if thou wilt not in a fuller stream
Pour forth my woes for ever with thyself
On earth, to which I will restore at once
This hateful compound of her atoms, and Resolve back to her elements, and take
The shape of any reptile save myself.
And make a world for myriads of new worms!
This knife! now let me prove if it will sever
This wither'd alip of nature's nightshade—my Vile form—from the creation, as it hath
The green bough from the forest.

[Arnold places the knife in the ground, with the point upwards.]

Now 'tis set,
And I can fall upon it. Yet one glance
On the fair day, which sees no foul thing like Myself, and the sweet sun which warm'd me, but
In vain. The birds—how joyously they sing!
So let them, for I would not be lamented:
But let their merriest notes be Arnold's knell;
The fallen leaves my monument; the murmur
Of the near fountain my sole elegy.
Now, knife, stand firmly, as I fain would fall!

[As he rushes to throw himself upon the knife, his eye is suddenly caught by the fountain, which seems in motion.]

The fountain moves without a wind: but shall
The ripple of a spring change my resolve?
No. Yet it moves again! The waters stir,
Not as with air, but by some subterranean
And rooking power of the internal world.
What's here? A mist! No more!

[A cloud comes from the fountain. He stands gazing upon it; it is dispelled, and a tall black man comes towards him.]

Arn. What would you? Speak!

Spirit or man?

Stran. As man is both, why not Say both in one?

Arn. Your form is man's, and yet
You may be devil.

Stran. So many men are that
Which is so call'd or thought, that you may add me
To which you please, without much wrong to either.
But come! you wish to kill yourself;—pursue
Your purpose.

Arn. You have interrupted me.

Stran. What is that resolution which can e'er
Be interrupted? If I be the devil

You deem, a single moment would have made you
Mine, and forever, by your suicide;
And yet my coming saves you.

Arn. I said not
You were the demon, but that your approach
Was like one.

Stran. Unless you keep company
With him (and you seem scarce used to such high Society) you can't tell how he approaches;
And for his aspect, look upon the fountain.
And then on me, and judge which of us twain
Look likest what the bores believe to be
Their eleven-footed terror.

Arn. Do you—dare you
To taunt me with my born deformity?

243

Stran. Were I to taunt a buffalo with this Cloven foot of thine, or the swift dromedary
With thy sublime of hump, the animals
Would revel in the compliment. And yet
Both beings are more swift, more strong, more mighty
In action and endurance than thyself,
And all the fierce and fair of the same kind
With thee. Thy form is natural: 'twas only
Nature's mistaken largess to bestow
The gifts which are of others upon men.

Arn. Give me the strength then of the buffalo's foot.

When he spurs high the dust, beholding his Near enemy; or let me have the long
And patient swiftness of the dromedary,
The helpless dromedary!—and I'll bear
Thy fiendish sarcasm with a patient patience.

Stran. I will.

Arn. (with surprise). Thou canst?

Stran. Perhaps. Would you aught else?

Arn. Thou mockest me.

Stran. Not I. Why should I mock

What all are mocking? That's poor sport, methinks.
To talk to thee in human language (for Thou canst not yet speak mine), the forest
Hunts not the wretched coney, but the bear,
Or wolf, or lion, leaving pakey game
To petty burghers, who leave once a year
Their walls, to fill their household caldrons with Such scullion prey. The meanest gibe at them—
Now I can mock the mightiest.

Arn. Then waste not
Thy time on me: I seek thee not.

Stran. Your thoughts
Are not far from me. Do not send me back:

I am not so easily recall'd to do
Good service.

Arn. What wilt thou do for me?

Stran. Change
Shapes with you, if you will, three years so like
you;

Or form you to your wish in any shape.

Arn. Oh! then you are indeed the demon, for Nought else would wittingly wear mine.

Stran. I'll show you
The brightest which the world e'er bore, and give thee

Thy choice.

Arn. On what condition?

Stran. There's a question!

An hour ago you would have given your soul
To look like other men, and now you pause
To wear the form of herces.

Arn. No; I will not.

I must not compromise my soul.

Stran. What soul?

Worth naming so, would dwell in such a carcass?

Arn. 'Tis an aspiring one, whatever the form
In which it is mislodged. But name your compact.
Must it be sign'd in blood?

Stran. Not in your own.

Arn. Whose blood then?

Stran. We will talk of that hereafter.

But I'll be moderate with you, for I see

Great things within you. You shall have no less

But your own will, no contract save your death.

Are you content?

Arn. I take thee at thy word.

Stran. Now then!—

[The Stronger approaches the fountain, and turns to Arnold.]

A little of your blood!

Arn. To mingle with the magic of the fountain?

And make the charm effective.

Arn. (holding out his wounded arm). Yes.

Stron. Not now. A few drops will suffice for this.
[The Stranger takes some of Arnold's blood in his hand, and casts it into the fountain.]

Shadows of beauty!
 Shadows of power!
 Rise to your duty—
 This is the hour!
 Walk lovely and pliant
 From the depth of this fountain,
 As the cloud-shapen giant Bestrides the Haris Mountain.*

Come as ye were,
 That our eyes may behold
 The model in air
 Of the form I will mould,
 Bright as the Iris
 When ether is spann'd;—
 Such his desire is, [Pointing to Arnold.]

Such my command!
 Demons heroic—
 Demons who wore
 The form of the stoic
 Or sophist of yore—
 Or the shape of each victor,
 From Macedon's boy
 To each high Roman's picture
 Who breathed to destroy—
 Shadows of beauty!
 Shadows of power!
 Up to your duty—
 This is the hour!

[Various phantoms arise from the waters, and pass in succession before the Stranger and Arnold.]

Arn. What do I see?

Stron. The black-eyed Roman, with
 The eagle's beak between those eyes which ne'er
 Beheld a conqueror, or look'd along
 The land he made not Rome's, while Rome became

His, and all theirs who heir'd his very name.
 Arn. The phantom's bald; my quest is beauty.
 Could I

Inherit but his fame with his defects!

Stron. His brow was girt with laurels more than hairs.

You see his aspect—choose it, or reject.

I can but promise you his form: his fame

Must be long sought and fought for.

Arn. I will fight too,
 Not as a mock Cæsar. Let him pass;

His aspect may be fair, but suits me not.

Stron. Then you are far more difficult to please

Than Cato's sister, or than Brutus' mother,

Or Cleopatra at sixteen—an age

When love is not less in the eye than heart.

But be it so! Shadow, pass on!

[The phantom of Julius Cæsar disappears.]

Arn. And can it

Be, that the man who shook the earth is gone,

And left no footstep?

Stron. There you err. His substance

Left graves enough, and woes enough, and fame

More than enough to track his memory;

But for his shadow, 'tis no more than yours,

Except a little longer and less crook'd

'T the sun. Behold another!

[A second phantom passes.]

Arn. Who is he?

Stron. He was the fairest and the bravest of Athenians. Look upon him well.

Arn. He is

More lovely than the last. How beautiful!

Stron. Such was the curled son of Cimon;—

Wouldst thou

Invest thee with his form?

Arn. Would that I had Been born with it! But since I may choose further,
 I will look further.

[The shade of Alcibiades disappears.]

Stron. Lo! behold again!

Arn. What! that low, swarthy, short-nosed,

Round-eyed satyr,

With the wide nostrils and Sthenes' aspect,

The splay feet and low stature! I? I had better

Remain that which I am.

Stron. And yet he was

The earth's perfection of all mental beauty,

And personification of all virtue.

But you reject him?

Arn. If his form could bring me

That which redeem'd it—no.

Stron. I have no power

To promise that; but you may try, and find it

Easier in such a form, or in your own.

Arn. No. I was not born for philosophy,

Though I have that about me which has need on 't.

Let him flast on.

Stron. Be air, thou hemlock-drinker!

[The shadow of Socrates disappears: another rises.]

Arn. What! that stone broad brow and white

curly beard

And manly aspect look like Hercules.

Save that his jocund eye hath more of Bacchus

Than the and purger of the infernal world,

Leaning dejected on his club of conquest,

As if he knew the worthlessness of those

For whom he had fought.

Stron. It was the man who lost

The ancient world for love.

Arn. I cannot blame him,

Since I have risk'd my soul because I find not

That which he exchanged the earth for.

Stron. Since so far

You seem congenial, will you wear his features?

Arn. No. As you leave me choice, I am difficult,

If but to see the heres I should ne'er

Have seen else on this side of the dim shore

Whence they float back before us.

Stron. Hence, triumvir!

Thy Cleopatra's waiting.

[The shade of Antony disappears: another rises.]

Arn. Who is this?

Who truly looketh like a demi-god,

Blooming and bright, with golden hair, and stature,

If not more high than mortal, yet immortal

In all that nameless bearing of his limbs,

Which he wears as the sun his rays—a something

Which shines from him, and yet is but the flashing

Emanation of a thing more glorious still.

Was he e'er human only?

Stron. Let the earth speak,

If there be atoms of him left, or even

Of the more solid gold that formed his urn.

Arn. Who was this glory of mankind?

Stron. The shame

Of Greece in peace, her thunderbolt in war—

*This is a well-known German superstition—a gigantic being, presumed by reflection on the Brocken.—The Brocken is one of the loftiest of the Haris mountains, a picture-scene which lies in the kingdom of Hanover. From its summit, during periods of authentic history, the Brocken has been viewed of the marvellous.

†The shade of Sthenes was that of a satyr and buffoon, but his soul was all virtue, and from within him came such divine and pathetic things as pierced the heart, and drew tears from the heavens.—PLATO.

‡"The beauty and mind of Demetrius Poliorcetes were so inimitable that no statuary or painter could hit off a likeness."—PLUTARCH.

Demetrius the Macedonian, and Taker of cities.

Arms. Yet one shadow more.

Stran. (addressing the shadow). Get thee to Lamia's lap!

[The shade of Demetrius Poliorcetes vanishes: another rises.]

I'll fit you still.

Fear not, my hunchback: if the shadows of
That which existed please not your nice taste,
I'll animate the ideal marble, fill
Your soul be reconciled to her new garment.

Arms. Content! I will fix here.

Stran. I must commend
Your choice. The godlike son of the sea-goddess,
The unshorn boy of Peleus, with his locks
As beautiful and clear as the amber waves
Of rich Pactolus, roll'd o'er sands of gold,
Softened by intervening crystal, and Rippled like flowing waters by the wind,
All vow'd to Sparghius as they were—behold them!
And him—as he stood by Polixena,
With sanction'd and with soften'd love, before
The altar, gazing on his Trojan bride,
With some remorse within for Hector slain
And Priam weeping, mingled with deep passion
For the sweet downcast virgin, whose young hand
Trembled in his who slew her brother. So
He stood! the temple! Look upon him as Greece look'd her last upon her best, the instant
Ere Paris' arrow flew.

Arms. I gaze upon him
As if I were his soul, whose form shall soon
Envelop mine.

Stran. You have done well. The greatest Deformity should only barter with
The extremest beauty, if the proverb's true
Of mortals, that extremes meet.

Arms. Come! Be quick!
I am impatient.

Stran. As a youthful beauty
Before her glass. You both see what is not,
But dream it is what must be.

Arms. Must I wait?

Stran. No; that were a pity. But a word or two:
His stature is twelve cubits; would you so far Outstep these times, and be a Titan? Or (To talk canonically) wax a son
Of Anak?

Arms. Why not?

Stran. Glorious ambition!
I love thee most in dwarfs! A mortal of Philistine stature would have gladly pared
His own Goliath down to a slight David;
But thou, my manikin, wouldst soar a show
Rather than a hero. Thou shalt be indulged,
If such be thy desire; and yet, by being
A little less removed from present men
In figure, thou canst sway them more; for all
Would rise against thee now, as if to hunt
A new-found mammoth: and their cursed engines,
Their culverins, and so forth, would find way
Through our friend's armor there, with greater ease
Than the adulterer's arrow through his heel,
Which Thetis had forgotten to baptize
In Styx.

Arms. Then let it be as thou deem'st best.

Stran. Thou shalt be beauteous as the thing thou seest.

And strong as what it was, and—

Arms. I ask not

For valor, since deformity is daring.

It is its essence to o'ertake mankind

By heart and soul, and make itself the equal—

As, the superior of the rest. There is

A spur in its halt movements, to become

All that the others cannot, in such things

As still are free to both, to compensate

For stepdame Nature's avarice at first.

They woo with fearless deeds the smiles of fortune,

And oft, like Timour the lame Tartar, win them.

Stran. Well spoken! and thou doubtless wilt

Female
Form'd as thou art. I may dianas the mould
Of shadow, which must turn to flesh, to incase
This daring soul, which could achieve no less Without it.

Arms. Had no power presented me
The possibility of change, I would Have done the best which spirit may to make
Its way with all deformity's dull, deadly,
Discouraging weight upon me, like a mountain,
In feeling, on my heart as on my shoulders—
An hateful and unsightly molehill, to
The eyes of happier men. I would have look'd
On beauty in that sex which is the type
Of all we know or dream of beautiful
Beyond the world they brighten, with a sigh—
Not of love, but despair; nor sought to win,
Though to a heart all love, what could not love me
In turn, because of this vile crooked clog,
Which makes me lonely. Nay, I could have borne
It all, had not my mother spurn'd me from her.
The she-bear licks her cubs into a sort
Of shape;—my dam beheld my shape was hopeless.

Had she exposed me, like the Spartan, ere
I knew the passionate part of life, I had Been a clod of the valley,—happier nothing
Than what I am. But even thus, the lowest,
Ugliest, and meanest of mankind, what courage
And perseverance could have done, perchance
Had made me something—as it has made heroes
Of the same mould as mine. You lately saw me
Master of my own life, and quick to quit it;
And he who is so is the master of Whatever dreads to die.

Stran. Decide between
What you have been, or will be.

Arms. I have done so.
You have open'd brighter prospects to my eyes,
And sweeter to my heart. As I am now,
I might be fear'd, admired, respected, loved
Of all save those next to me, of whom I
Would be beloved. As thou showest me
A choice of forms, I take the one I view.
Haste! haste!

Stran. And what shall I wear?

Arms. Surely, be
Who can command all forms will choose the highest,
Something superior even to that which was Pelides now before us. Perhaps his
Who slew him, that of Paris; or—still higher—
The poet's god, clothed in such limbs as are Themselves a poetry.

Stran. Less will content me;
For I, too, love a change.

Arms. Your aspect is Dusky, but not uncomely.

Stran. If I chose,
I might be whiter; but I have a penchant
For black—it is so honest, and besides
Can neither blush with shame nor pale with fear;

* Lord Byron's chief incentive, when a boy, to distinction, was that mark of deformity, by the acute sense of which he was first stung into the ambition of being great. In one of his letters to Mr. Hunt, he declares it to be his own opinion that 'an addiction to poetry is very generally the result of an uneasy mind in an uneasy body; disease or deformity,' he adds, 'have been the attendants of many of our best: Collins mad—Chatterton, I think, mad—Cowper mad—Pope crooked—Milton blind,' &c. &c."

But I have worn it long enough of late,
And now I'll take your figure.

Arn. Mine! Yes. You
Stran. Shall change with Thetis' son, and I with Bertha,
Your mother's offspring. People have their tastes:
You have yours—I mine.

Arn. Despatch! Despatch!
Stran. Even so

[The Stranger takes some earth and moulds it along the turf, and then addresses the phantom of Achilles.

Beautiful shadow
Of Thetis's boy!
Who sleeps in the meadow
Whose grass grows o'er Troy:
From the red earth, like Adam,*
Thy likeness I shape,
As the being who made him,
Whose actions I ape.

Thou clay, be all glowing,
Till the rose in his cheek
Be as fair as, when blowing,
It wears its first streak!

Ye violets, I scatter,
Now turn into eyes!

And thou, sunshiny water,
Of blood take the guise!

Let these hyacinth boughs
Be his long flowing hair,
And wave o'er his brows,
As thou wavest in air!

Let his heart be this marble
I tear from the rock!
But his voice as the warble
Of birds on yon oak!

Let his flesh be the purest
Of mould, in which grew
The lily-root surest,
And drank the best dew!

Let his limbs be the lightest
Which clay can compound,
And his aspect the brightest
On earth to be found!

Elements, near me,
Be mingled and stirr'd,
Know me, and hear me,
And leap to my word!

Sunbeams, awaken
This earth's animation!
'Tis done! He hath taken
His stand in creation!

[Arnold falls senseless; his soul passes into the shape of Achilles, which rises from the ground; while the phantom has disappeared, part by part, as the figure was formed from the earth.

Arn. (in his new form). I love, and I shall be beloved! Oh, life!

At last I feel thee! Glorious spirit!

Stran. Stop!
What shall become of your abandon'd garment,
You hump, and lump, and clod of ugliness,
Which late you wore, or were?

Arn. Who cares? Let wolves
And vultures take it, if they will.

Stran. And if
They do, and are not scared by it, you'll say
It must be peace-time, and no better fare
Abroad in the fields.

Arn. Let us but leave it there!
No matter what becomes of it.

Stran. That's ungracious,
If not ungrateful. Whatso'er it be,
It hath sustain'd your soul full many a day.

Arn. Ay, as the dunghill may conceal a gem
Which is now set in gold, as jewels should be.

Stran. But if I give another form, it must be
By fair exchange, not robbery. For they
Who make men without women's aid have long
Had patents for the same, and do not love
Your interlopers. The devil may take men,
Not make them,—though he reap the benefit
Of the original workmanship:—and therefore
Some one must be found to assume the shape
You have quitted.

Arn. Who would do so?
Stran. That I know not,
And therefore I must.

Arn. You! I said it ere
You inhabited your present dome of beauty.

Arn. True. I forget all things in the new joy
Of this immortal change.

Stran. In a few moments
I will be as you were, and you shall see
Yourself for ever by you, as your shadow.

Arn. I would be spared this. But it cannot be.
Stran. What! shrink already, being what you are,
From seeing what you were?

Arn. Do as thou wilt.
Stran. (to the late form of Arnold, extended on the turf).

Clay! not dead, but soulless!
Though no man would choose thee,
An immortal no less
Deigns not to refuse thee.

Clay thou art; and unto spirit
All clay is of equal merit.

Fire! without which nought can live;
Fire! but in which nought can live,
Save the fabled salamander,
Or immortal souls, which wander,

Praying what doth not forgive,
Howling for a drop of water,
Burning in a quenchless lot:

Fire! the only element
Where nor fish, beast, bird, nor worm,
Save the worm which dieth not,
Can preserve a moment's form,

But must with thyself be blent:
Fire! man's safeguard and his slaughterer;
Fire! Creation's first-born daughter,
And Destruction's threaten'd son,

When heaven with the world hath done:
Fire! assist me to renew
Life in what lies in my view
Stiff and cold!

His resurrection rests with me and you!
One little, marshy spark of flame—
And he again shall seem the same;
But I his spirit's place shall hold!

[An ignis-fatuus flies through the wood and rests on the brow of the body. The Stranger disappears; the body rises.

Arn. (in his new form). Oh! horrible!
Stran. (in Arnold's late shape). What! tremblest
thou?

Arn. Not so—
I merely shudder. Where is fled the shape
Thou lately worest?

Stran. To the world of shadows,
But let us thread the present. Whither wilt thou?
Arn. Must thou be my companion?

Stran. Wherefore not?
Your betters keep worse company.

Arn. My betters!
Stran. Oh! you wax proud, I see, of your new form:

I'm glad of that. Ungrateful too! That's well;
You improve space;—two changes in an instant,

*Adam means "red earth," from which the first man was formed.

And you are old in the world's ways already.
But bear with me: indeed you'll find me useful
Upon your pilgrimage. But come, pronounce
Where shall we now be errant?

Arn. Where the world
Is thickest, that I may behold it in Its workings.

Stron. That's to say, where there is war
And woman in activity. Let's see!
Spain—Italy—the new Atlantic world—
Africa, with all its Moors. In very truth,
There is small choice: the whole race are just now
Tugging as usual at each other's hearts.

Arn. I have heard great things of Rome.

Stron. A goodly choice—
And scarce a better to be found on earth.
Since Sodom was put out. The field is wide too;
For now the Frank, and Hun, and Spanish acorn
Of the old Vandals, are at play along
The sunny shores of the world's garden.

Arn. How
Shall we proceed?

Stron. Like gallants, on good courseries.
What, ho! my chargers! Never yet were better,
Since Phaeton was upset into the Po.
Our pages too!

Enter two Pages, with four coal-black horses.

Arn. A noble sight!

Stron. And of
A nobler breed. Match me in Barbary,
Or your Kochilini race of Araby,
With these!

Arn. The mighty steam, which volumes high
From their proud nostrils, burns the very air;
And sparks of flame, like dancing fire-flies, wheel
Around their manes, as common insects swarm
Round common steeds towards sunset.

Stron. Mount, my lord:
They and I are your servitors.

Arn. And these
Our dark-eyed pages—what may be their names?

Stron. You shall baptize them.

Arn. What! in holy water?
Stron. Why not? The deeper sinner, better saint.
Arn. They are beautiful, and cannot, sure, be demons.

Stron. True; the devil's always ugly; and your beauty
Is never diabolical.

Arn. I'll call him
Who bears the golden horn, and wears such bright
And blooming aspect, Horn; for he looks
Like to the lovely boy lost in the forest,
And never found till now. And for the other,
And darker, and more thoughtful, who smiles not,
But looks as serious though serene as night,
He shall be Memnon, from the Ethiop king
Whose statue turns a harper once a day.
And you?

Stron. I have ten thousand names, and twice
As many attributes; but as I wear
A human shape, will take a human name.

Arn. More human than the shape (though it was mine once),
I trust.

Stron. Then call me Cæsar.

Arn. Why, that name
Belongs to empires, and has been but borne
By the world's lords.

Stron. And therefore fittest for
The devil in disguise—since so you deem me,
Unless you call me pope instead.

Arn. Well, then,
Cæsar thou shalt be. For myself, my name
Shall be plain Arnold still.

Cæsar. We'll add a title—

"Count Arnold:" 't hath no ungracious sound,
And will look well upon a billet-doux.

Arn. Or in an order for a battle-field.
Cæsar. (sings). To horse! to horse! my coal-black steed

Paws the ground and snuffs the air!
There's not a foal of Arab's breed
More knows whom he must bear;

On the hill he will not tire,
Swifter as it waxes higher:
In the marsh he will not slacken,

On the plain be overtaken;
In the wave he will not sink,
Nor pause at the brook's side to drink;

In the race he will not pant,
In the combat he'll not faint!
On the stones he will not stumble,

Time nor toil shall make him humble;
In the stall he will not stiffen,
But be winged as a griffin,

Only flying with his feet:
And will not such a voyage be sweet?
Merrily! merrily! never unsoothed,

Shall our bonny black horses skim over the ground!
From the Alps to the Caucasus, ride we, or fly!
For we'll leave them behind in the glance of an eye.

(They mount their horses and disappear.)

SCENE II.—A Camp before the Walls of Rome.

Arnold and Cæsar.

Cæsar. You are well enter'd now.

Arn. Ay; but my soul
Has been o'er carcasses: mine eyes are full
Of blood.

Cæsar. Then wipe them, and see clearly. Why!
Thou art a conqueror; the chosen knight
And free companion of the gallant Bourbon,
Late constable of France: and now to be
Lord of the city which hath been earth's lord
Under its emperors, and—changing sex,
Not sceptre, an hermaphrodite of empire—
Lady of the old world.

Arn. How old? What! am I then
New worlds?

Cæsar. To you. You'll find there are such shortly,
By its rich harvests, new disease, and gold;
From one half of the world named a whole new one,
Because you know no better than the dust
And dubious notice of your eyes and ears.

Arn. I'll trust them.
Cæsar. Do! They will deceive you sweetly,
And that is better than the bitter truth.

Arn. Dog!
Cæsar. Man!

Devil!
Cæsar. Your obedient humble servant.

Arn. Say master rather. Thou hast lured me on,
Through scenes of blood and lust, till I am lured.
Cæsar. And where wouldst thou be?

Arn. Oh, at peace—in peace.
Cæsar. And where is that which is so? From the
To the winding worm, all life is motion; and your
In life commotion is the extremest point
Of life. The planet wheels till it becomes

A comet, and destroying as it sweeps
The stars, goes out. The poor worms whirl the way,
Living upon the death of other things,

But still, like them, must live and die, the subjects
Of something which has made it live and die.

You must obey what all obey, the rule
Of fix'd necessity: against her edict
Rebellion prospers not.

Arn. And when it prospers
Cæsar. 'T is no rebellion.

Arn. Will it prosper now?

Ces. The Bourbon hath given orders for the assault,

And by the dawn there will be work.

Arn.

And shall the city yield? I see the giant
Abode of the true God, and his true saint,
Saint Peter, rear its dome and cross into
That sky whence Christ ascended from the cross,
Which his blood made a badge of glory and
Of joy (as once of torture unto him,
God and God's Son, man's sole and only refuge).

Ces. 'T is there, and shall be.

Arn.

What?

Ces.

The crucifix

Above, and many altar shrines below.

Also some culverins upon the walls,
Andarquebusses, and what not; besides
The men who are to kindle them to death
Of other men.

Arn.

And those scarce mortal arches,
File above pile of everlasting wall.
The theatre where emperors and their subjects
(Those subjects Romans) stood at gaze upon
The battles of the monarchs of the wild
And wood, the lion and his tusk rebels
Of the then untamed desert, brought to joust
In the arena (as right well they might,
When they had left no human foe unconquer'd);
Made even the forest pay its tribute of Lime to their amphitheatre, as well
As Dacia men to die the eternal death
For a sole instant's pastime, and "Pass on
To a new gladiator"—Must it fall?

Ces. The city, or the amphitheatre?

The church, or one, or all? for you confound

Both them and me.

Arn.

To-morrow sounds the assault

With the first cock-crow.

Ces.

Which, if it end with
The evening's first nightingale, will be Something new in the annals of great sieges;
For men must have their prey after long toil.

Arn. The sun goes down as calmly, and perhaps
More beautifully, than he did on Rome
On the day Hannu kept her wall.

Ces.

I saw him.

Arn. You!

Ces. Yes, sir. You forget I am or was Spirit, till I took up with your cast shape
And a worse name. I'm Caesar and a hunchback
Now. Well! the first of Cæsars was a bald-head,
And loved his laurels better as a wig.
(So history says) than as a glory. Thus
The world runs on, but we'll be merry still.
I saw your Romulus (simple as I am)
Slay his own twin, quickborn of the same womb,
Because he leapt a ditch ('t was then no wall,
Whatever it now be); and Rome's earliest cement
Was brother's blood; and if its native blood
Be split till the choked Tiber be as red
As o'er 't was yellow, it will never wear
The deep hue of the ocean and the earth,
Which the great robber sons of fratricide
Have made their never-ceasing scene of slaughter
For ages.

Arn. But what have these done, their far
Remote descendants, who have lived in peace,
The peace of heaven, and in her sunshine of Fifty?

Ces. And what had they done, whom the old
Romans e'er swept?—Hark!

Arn. They are soldiers singing
A reckless roundelay, upon the eve
Of many deaths, it may be of their own.

Ces. And why should they not sing as well as swains?

They are black ones, to be sure.

Arn. So, you are learn'd,
I see, too?

Ces. In my grammar, certes. I
Was educated for a monk of all times,
And once I was well versed in the forgotten
Etruscan letters, and—were I so minded—
Could make their hieroglyphics plainer than Your alphabet.

Arn. And wherefore do you not?

Ces. It answers better to resolve the alphabet
Back into hieroglyphics. Like your statesman,
And prophet, possessor, doctor, alchemist,
Philosopher, and what not, they have built
More Babels, without new dispersion, than The stammering young ones of the food's dull ones.

Who fall'd and fled each other. Why? why, marry,
Because no man could understand his neighbor.
They are wiser now, and will not separate
For nonsense. Nay, it is their brotherhood,
Their Shabboloth, their Koran, Talmud, their Cabala; their best brick-work, wherewithal
They build more—

Arn. (interrupting him). Oh, thou everlasting anealer!

Be silent! How the soldiers' rough strain seems Softened by distance to a hymn-like cadence!
Listen!

Ces. Yes. I have heard the angels sing.

Arn. And demons bowl.

Ces. And man, too. Let us listen:
I love all music.

Song of the Soldiers within.

The black bands came over
The Alps and their snow;
With Bourbon, the rover,
They pass'd the broad Po.
We have beaten all foemen,
We have captured a king,
We have turn'd back on no men,
And so let us sing!
Here's the Bourbon for ever!
Though penniless all,
We'll have one more endeavor
At yonder old wall.
With the Bourbon we'll gather
At day-dawn before
The gates, and together
Or break or climb o'er
The wall: on the ladder
As mounts each firm foot,
Our shout shall grow gladder,
And death only be mute.
With the Bourbon we'll mount o'er
The walls of old Rome,
And who then shall count o'er
The spoils of each dome?
Up! up with the Hiy!
And down with the keys!
In old Rome, the seven-hilly,
We'll revel at ease.
Her streets shall be gory,
Her Tiber all red,
And her temples so hoary
Shall clang with our tread.

* Buchanan relates of Julius Cæsar that his baldness gave him such uneasiness, having often found himself, upon that subject, exposed to the ridicule of his enemies; and that, therefore, all the honors conferred upon him by the senate and people, there was none which he either accepted or used with so much pleasure as the right of wearing continually a laurel crown.

Oh, the Bourbon! the Bourbon!
The Bourbon for aye!
Of our song bear the burden!
And fire, fire away!
With Spain for the vanguard,
Our varied host comes;
And next to the Spaniard
Beat Germany's drums;
And Italy's lances
Are couch'd at their mother;
But our leader from France is,
Who war'd with his brother.
Oh, the Bourbon! the Bourbon!
Sans country or home,
We'll follow the Bourbon,
To plunder old Rome.

Cæs. An indifferent song
For those within the walls, methinks, to hear.
Arn. Yes, if they keep to their chorus. But here comes
The general with his chiefs and men of trust.
A goodly rebel!

Enter the Constable Bourbon; " cum suis," etc., etc.

Phil. How now, noble prince,
You are not cheerful?
Bourb. Why should I be so?
Phil. Upon the eve of conquest, such as ours,
Most men would be so.
Bourb. If I were secure!
Phil. Doubt not our soldiers. Were the walls of adamant.

They'd crack them. Hunger is a sharp artillery.
Bourb. That they will falter is my least of fears.
That they will be repulsed, with Bourbon for their chief, and all their kindred appetites
To marshall them on—were those hoary walls Mountains, and those who guard them like the gods
Of the old fables, I would trust my Titans;—
But now—

Phil. They are but men who war with mortals.
Bourb. True: but those walls have girded in great ages,
And sent forth mighty spirits. The past earth
And present phantom of imperious Rome
Is peopled with those warriors; and methinks
They flit along the eternal city's rampart,
And stretch their glorious, gory, shadowy hands,
And beckon me away!

Phil. So let them! Wilt thou
Turn back from shadowy menaces of shadows?
Bourb. They do not menace me. I could have faced,

Methinks, a Sylla's menace; but they clasp,
And raise, and wring their dim and deathlike hands,

And with their thin aspen faces and fix'd eyes
Fascinate mine. Look there!

Phil. I look upon
A lofty battlement.

Bourb. And there!

Phil. Not even
A guard in sight; they wisely keep below,
Shelter'd by the gray parapet from some Stray bullet of our lanquenets, who might Practice in the cool twilight.

Bourb. You are blind.

Phil. If seeing nothing more than may be seen
Be so.

Bourb. A thousand years have mann'd the walls
With all their heroes,—the last Cato stands
And tears his bowels, rather than survive

The liberty of that I would enslave.
And the first Cæsar with his triumphs flits
From battlement to battlement.

Phil. Then conquer!

The walls for which he conquer'd, and be greater!

Bourb. True: so I will, or perish.

Phil. You can not.

In such an enterprise to die is rather

The dawn of an eternal day, than death.

[Count Arnold and Cæsar advance.

Cæs. And the mere men—do they too sweat beneath

The noon of this same ever-scorching glory?

Bourb. Ah!

Welcome the bitter hunchback! and his master,

The beauty of our host, and brave as beautiful,

And generous as lovely. We shall find

Work for you both ere morning.

Cæs. You will find,

So please your highness, no less for yourself.

Bourb. And if I do, there will not be a laborer

More forward, hunchback!

Cæs. You may well say so,

For you have seen that back—as general,

Placed in the rear in action—but your foes

Have never seen it.

Bourb. That's a fair retort,

For I provoked it:—but the Bourbon's breast

Has been, and ever shall be, far advanced

In danger's face as yours, were you the devil.

Cæs. And if I were, I might have saved myself

The toll of coming here.

Phil. Why so?

Cæs. One-half

Of your brave bands of their own bold accord

Will go to him, the other half be sent,

More swiftly, not less surely.

Bourb. Arnold, your Slight crook'd friend's as snake-like in his words

As his deeds.

Cæs. Your highness much mistakes me.

The first snake was a flatterer—I am none;

And for my deeds, I only sting when stung.

Bourb. You are brave, and that's enough for me;

and quick

In speech as sharp in action—and that's more.

I am not alone a soldier, but the soldier's

Comrade.

Cæs. They are but bad company, your highness:

And worse even for their friends than foes, as being

More permanent acquaintance.

Phil. How now, fellow!

Thou waxest insolent, beyond the privilege

Of a buffoon.

Cæs. You mean I speak the truth.

I'll lie—it is as easy: then you'll praise me

For calling you a hero.

Bourb. Philibert!

Let him alone; he's brave, and ever has

Been first, with that swart face and mountain shoulder,

In field or storm, and patient in starvation;

And for his tongue, the camp is full of license,

And the sharp stinging of a lively rogue

Is, to my mind, far preferable to

The gross, dull, heavy, gloomy execration

Of a mere famish'd, sullen, grumbling slave,

Whom nothing can convince save a full meal,

And wine, and sleep, and a few maravedia,

With which he deems him rich.

Cæs. It would be well

If the earth's princes ask'd no more.

Bourb. Be silent!

* Charles of Bourbon was cousin to Francis I., and constable of France. Being bitterly persecuted by the queen-mother for having declined the honor of her hand, and also by the king, he transferred his services to the emperor Charles V.

Cæs. Ay, but not idle. Work yourself with words!
You have few to speak.

Phil. What means the audacious prater?

Cæs. To prate, like other prophets.

Bourb. Philibert!

Why will you vex him? Have we not enough
To think on? Arnold! I will lead the attack
To-morrow.

Arn. I have heard as much, my lord.

Bourb. And you will follow?

Arn. Since I must not lead.

Bourb. 'Tis necessary for the further daring
Of our too needy army, that their chief
Plant the first foot upon the foremost ladder's
First step.

Cæs. Upon its topmost, let us hope:
So shall he have his full deserts.

Bourb. The world's

Great capital perchance is ours to-morrow.

Through every change the seven-hill'd city hath

Retain'd her sway o'er nations, and the Cæsars

But yielded to the Alarics, the Alarics

Unto the pontiffs. Roman, Goth, or priest,

Still the world's masters! Civilised, barbarian,

Or saintly, still the walls of Romulus

Have been the circus of an empire. Well!

'Twas their turn—now 'tis ours; and let us hope

That we will fight as well, and rule much better.

Cæs. No doubt, the camp's the school of civic rights.

What would you make of Rome?

Bourb. That which it was.

Cæs. In Alaric's time?

Bourb. No, slave! In the first Cæsar's,

Whose name you bear like other curs—

Cæs. And kings!

'Tis a great name for blood-hounds.

Bourb. There's a demon

In that fierce rattle-makè thy tongue. Wilt never

Be serious?

Cæs. On the eve of battle, no;—

That were not soldier-like. 'Tis for the general

To be more pensive: we adventurers

Must be more cheerful. Wherefore should we think?

Our tutelary deity, in a leader's shape,
Takes care of us. Keep thought aloof from hosts!
If the knaves take to thinking, you will have
To crack those walls alone.

Bourb. You may sneer, since

'Tis lucky for you that you fight no worse for 't.

Cæs. I thank you for the freedom; 'tis the only

Pay I have taken in your highness' service.

Bourb. Well, sir, to-morrow you shall pay yourself.

Look on those towers; they hold my treasury;

But, Philibert, we'll in to council. Arnold,

We would request your presence.

Arn. Prince! my service

Is yours, as in the field.

Bourb. In both we prize it,

And yours will be a post of trust at daybreak.

Cæs. And mine?

Bourb. To follow glory with the Bourbons.

Good-night!

Arn. (to Cæs.). Prepare our armor for the assault.

And wait within my tent.

(Exit Bourbons, Arnold, Philibert, etc.)

Cæs. (solus). Within thy tent!

Think'st thou that I pass from thee with my presence?

Or that this crooked coffer, which contain'd

Thy principle of life, is aught to me

Except a mask? And these are men, forsooth!

Heroes and chiefs, the flower of Adam's bastards!

This is the consequence of giving matter

The power of thought. It is a stubborn substance,

And thinks chaotically, as it acts,

Ever relapsing into its first elements.

Well! I must play with these poor puppets: 'tis

Amongst the stars, which these poor creatures deem

Were made for them to look at. 'T were a jest now

To bring one down amongst them, and set fire

Unto their ant-hill: how the pismires then

Would scamper o'er the scalding soil, and, ceasing

From tearing down each other's nests, pipe forth

One universal orison! Ha! ha!

(Exit Cæsar.)

PART II.

SCENE I.—Before the Walls of Rome.—The Assault: the Army in motion, with ladders to scale the walls; Bourbon, with a white scarf over his armor, foremost.

Chorus of Spirits in the air.

1.

'Tis the morn, but dim and dark.

Whither flies the silent lark?

Whither shrinks the clouded sun?

Is the day indeed begun?

Nature's eye is melancholy

O'er the city high and holy:

But without there is a din

Should arouse the saints within,

And revive the heroic ashes

Round which yellow Tiber dashes.

Oh, ye even hills! awaken,

See your very base be shaken!

2.

Quicken to the steady tramp!

None is in their every tramp!

Each step is out of tune,

And the times obey the moon!

On they march, though to self-slaughter,
Regular as rolling water,
Whose high waves o'er-sweep the border
Of huge moles, but keep their order,
Breaking only rank by rank.
Hearken to the armor's clank!
Look down o'er each frowning warrior,
How he glares upon the barrier:
Look on each step of each ladder,
As the stripes that streak an adder.

3.

Look upon the bristling wall,
Mann'd without an interval!
Round and round, and tier on tier,
Cannon's black mouth, shining spear,
Lit match, bell-mouth'd musketoon,
Gaping to be murderous soon;
All the warlike gear of old,
Mix'd with what we now behold,
In this strife 'twixt old and new,
Gather like a locusts' crew.
Shade of Remus! 'tis a time
Awful as thy brother's crime!
Christians war against Christ's shrine:—
Must its lot be like to thine?

Near—and near—and nearer still,
As the earthquake sweeps the hill,
First with trembling, hollow motion,
Like a sea—awaken'd ocean,
Then with stronger shock, and louder,
Till the rocks are crush'd to powder,—
Onward sweeps the rolling host!
Heroes of the immortal host!
Mighty chiefs! eternal shadows!
First flowers of the bloody meadows
Which encompass Rome, the mother
Of a people without brother!
Will you sleep when nations quarrel
Plough the root up of your laurals?
Ye who weep o'er Carthage burning,
Weep not—strike! for Rome is mourning! *

Onward sweep the varied nations!
Famine long hath dealt their rations.
To the wall, with hate and hunger,
Numerous as wolves, and stronger,
On they sweep. Oh, glorious city,
Must thou be a theme for pity?
Fight, like your first sire, each Roman!
Alaric was a gentle foeman,
Match'd with Bourbon's black banditti!
Rouse thee, thou eternal city;
Rouse thee! Rather give the torch
With thine own hand to thy porch,
Than behold such hosts pollute
Your worst dwelling with their foot.

Ah! behold you bleeding spectre!
Ilion's children find no Hector;
Priam's offspring loved their brother;
Rome's great sire forgot his mother,
When he slew his gallant twin,
With inexorable sin.
See the giant shadow stride
O'er the ramparts high and wide!
When the first o'erleapt thy wall,
Its foundation mourn'd thy fall.
Now, though towering like a Babel,
Who to stop his steps are able?
Stalking o'er thy highest dome,
Remus claims his vengeance, Rome!

Now they reach thee in their anger:
Fire and smoke and hellish clangor
Are around thee, thou world's wonder!
Death is in thy walls and under.
Now the meeting steel first clashes,
Downward then the ladder crashes,
With its iron load all gleaming,
Lying at the foot blaspheming!
Up again! for every warrior
Slain, another climbs the barrier.
Thicker grows the strife: thy ditches
Europe's mingling gore enriches.
Rome! although thy wall may perish,
Such manure thy fields will cherish,
Making gay the harvest-home;
But thy hearths, alas! oh, Rome!—
Yet be Rome amidst thine anguish,
Fight as thou wast wont to vanquish!

* Scipio, the second Africanus, is said to have repeated a verse of Homer, and wept over the burning of Carthage. He had better have granted it a capitulation.

* Finding himself mortally wounded, Bayard ordered one of his attendants to place him under a tree with his face to-

Yet once more, ye old Penates!
Let not your quench'd hearths be idle!
Yet again, ye shadowy heroes,
Yield not to these stranger Neros!
Though the son who slew his mother
Shed Rome's blood, he was your brother:
'T was the Roman curb'd the Roman;—
Brennus was a baffled foeman.
Yet again, ye saints and martyrs,
Rise! for yours are hotter charters!
Mighty gods of temples falling,
Yet in ruin still appalling!
Mightier founders of those altars,
True and Christian,—strike the assassin!
Tiber! Tiber! let thy torrent
Show even nature's self abhorrent.
Let each breathing heart dissent
Turn, as doth the lion baited!
Rome be crush'd to one wide tomb,
But be still the Roman's Rome!

Bourbon, Arnold, Caesar, and others, enter at the foot of the wall. Arnold is about to plant his ladder.

Bourb. Hold, Arnold! I am first.

Arn.

Bourb. Hold, sir, I charge you! Follow! I am provid

Of such a follower, but will brook no leader.
[Bourbon plants his ladder, and begins to mount.

Now, boys! On! on!

[A shot strikes him, and Bourbon falls.

Ces.

And off!

Arn. Eternal power!
The host will be appall'd,—but vengeance! vengeance!

Bourb. 'T is nothing—lend me your hand.

[Bourbon takes Arnold by the hand, and rises; but as he puts his foot on the step, falls again.

Arnold! I am aged.
Conceal my fall—all will go well—conceal it!
Fling my cloak o'er what will be dust soon;
Let not the soldiers see it.

Arn.

Removed; the aid of— You must be

Bourb.

No, my gallant boy!

Death is upon me. But what is one life?

The Bourbon's spirit shall command them still.

Keep them yet ignorant that I am but clay.

Till they are conquerors—then do as you may.

Ces. Need not your highness choose to die the cross?

We have no priest here, but the hit of sword

May serve instead:—it did the same for Bayard.

Bourb. Thou bitter slave! to name him at this time!

But I deserve it.

Arn. (to Caesar). Villain, hold your peace!

Ces. What, when a Christian dies? Shall I not offer

A Christian "Vade in pace"?

Arn.

Those eyes are glazing which o'erlook'd the world,

And saw no equal.

Bourb.

Arnold, shouldst thou see

France—But hark! hark! the assassin grows warmer—Oh!

For but an hour, a minute more of life,

To die within the wall! Hence, Arnold, hence!

You lose time—they will conquer Rome against the

wards the enemy; then, fixing his eyes on the point of the sword, which he held up instead of a cross, he turned his prayers to God, and in this posture he calmly awaited the approach of death.—ROMANUS, Charles V.

Arn. And without thee!
Bourb. Not so; I'll lead them still
 In spirit. Cover up my dust, and breathe not That I have ceased to breathe. Away! and be Victorious!

Arn. But I must not leave thee thus.
Bourb. You must—farewell—Up! up! the world is winning. [Bourbon dies.]

Cas. (to Arnold). Come, count, to business.

Arn. True. I'll weep hereafter.
[Arnold covers Bourbon's body with a mantle, and mounts the ladder, crying]

The Bourbon! Bourbon! On, boys! Rome is ours!
Cas. Good night, lord constable! thou wert a
 man.

[Cæsar follows Arnold; they reach the battlement; Arnold and Cæsar are struck down.]

Cas. A precious Somerset! Is your countship injured?

Arn. No. [Remounts the ladder.]

Cas. A rare blood-bound, when his own is heated!
 And 't is no boy's play. Now he strikes them down!
 His hand is on the battlement—he grasps it
 As though it were an altar; now his foot
 Is on it, and—What have we here?—a Roman?

[A man falls.]
 The first bird of the covey! he has fallen
 On the outside of the nest. Why, how now, fellow?

Wounded Man. A drop of water!

Cas. Blood 's the only liquid
 Nearer than Tibber.

Wounded Man. I have died for Rome. [Dies.]

Cas. And so did Bourbon, in another sense.
 On these immortal men! and their great motives!
 But I must after my young charge. He is
 By this time 't the forum. Charge! charge!

[Cæsar mounts the ladder; the scene closes.]

SCENE II.—The City.—Combats between the Besiegers and Besieged in the streets. Sublimities flying in confusion.

Enter Cæsar.

Cas. I cannot find my hero; he is mix'd
 With the heroic crowd that now pursue
 The fugitives, or battle with the desperate.
 What have we here? A cardinal or two
 That do not seem in love with martyrdom.
 How the old red-shanks scamper! Could they doff
 Their hose as they have doff'd their hats, 't would be
 A blessing, as a mark the loss for plunder.
 But let them fly; the crimson kennels now
 Will not much stain their stockings, since the mire
 Is of the self-same purple hue.

Enter a Party fighting.—Arnold at the head of the Besiegers.

He comes,
 Hand in hand with the mild twins—Gore and Glory.
 Holla! hold, count!

Arn. Away! they must not rally.

Cas. I tell thee, be not rash; a golden bridge
 Is for a flying enemy. I gave thee

A form of beauty, and an Exemption from some maladies of body,
 But not of mind, which is not mine to give.
 But though I gave the form of Theb's son,
 I dipt thee not in Styx; and 'gainst a foe
 I would not warrant thy chivalric heart
 More than Pelides' head; why then, be cautious,
 And know thyself a mortal still.

Arn. And who
 With aught of soul would combat if he were Invulnerable? That were pretty sport.
 Think'at thou I beat for hares when lions roar?

[Arnold rushes into the combat.]

Cas. A precious sample of humanity!
 Well, his blood 's up; and if a little 's shed,
 'T will serve to curb his fever.

[Arnold engages with a Roman, who retires towards a portico.]

Arn. Yield thee, slave!

I promise quarter.

Rom. That 's soon said.

Arn. And done—
 My word is known.

Rom. So shall be my deeds.
[They re-engage. Cæsar comes forward.]

Cas. Why, Arnold! hold thine own: thou hast in hand

A famous artisan, a cunning sculptor;
 Also a dealer in the sword and dagger.

Not so, my musketeer; 't was he who slew
 The Bourbon from the wall.

Arn. Ay, did he so?

Then he hath carved his monument.

Rom. I yet
 May live to carve your betterer!

Cas. Well said, my man of marble! Benvenuto,
 Thou hast some practice in both ways; and he
 Who slays Cellini will have work'd as hard

As e'er thou didst upon Cæsar's blocks!

[Arnold disarms and wounds Cellini, but slightly; the latter draws a pistol, and fires; then retires, and disappears through the portico.]

Cas. How farrest thou? Thou hast a taste, methinks,

Of red Bellona's banquet.

Arn. (staggered). 'T is a scratch.

Lend me thy scarf. He shall not scape me thus.

Cas. Where is it?

Arn. In the shoulder, not the sword arm—
 And that 's enough. I am thirsty: would I had A helm of water!

Cas. That 's a liquid now
 In requisition, but by no means easiest
 To come at.

Arn. And my thirst increases;—but
 I'll find a way to quench it.

Cas. Or be quench'd
 Thyself.

Arn. The chance is even; we will throw
 The dice thereon. But I lose time in prating;
 Prithee be quick.

[Cæsar binds on the scarf.]
 And what dost thou so idly?

Why dost not strike?

"On the 1st of May, 1587, the Constable and his army came in sight of Rome, and the next morning commenced the attack. Bourbon wore a white vest over his armor, in order, he said, to be more conspicuous both to his friends and foes.
 He led on to the walls, and commenced a furious assault, which was repelled with equal violence. Seeing that his army began to waver, he seized a scabbard-ladder from a soldier standing, and was in the act of ascending, when he was struck by a musket-ball, and fell. Feeling that his wound was mortal, he desired that his body might be concealed from his enemies, and instantly expired."—Romanorum.

"Letting my argument," says Benvenuto Cellini, "I discovered a mark, a deliberate aim at a person who seemed to be lifted above the rest; but the mist prevented me from distinguishing whether he was on horseback or on foot. Then turning suddenly about to Alessandro and Cecchino, I bid them fire off their pieces, and showed them how to compass every shot of the besiegers. Having accordingly fired twice for the enemy's onset, I cautiously approached the walls, and perceived that there was an extraordinary confusion among the assailants, occasioned by our having shot the Duke of Bourbon; he was, as I understood afterwards, that chief personage whom I saw raised above the rest."—Vol. I. p.

100. This, however, is one of the many stories in Cellini's amusing autobiography which nobody seems ever to have believed.

Ces. Your old philosophers
Beheld mankind, as mere spectators of
The Olympic games. When I behold a prize
Worth wrestling for, I may be found a Milo.
Arn. Ay, 'gainst an oak.
Ces. A forest, when it suits me:
I combat with a mass, or not at all.
Meantime, pursue thy sport as I do mine:
Which is just now to gaze, since all these laborers
Will reap my harvest gratis.
Arn. Thou art still
A head!
Ces. And thou—a man.
Arn. Why, such I fain would show me.
Ces. True—as men are.
Arn. And what is that?
Ces. Thou feeblest and thou weest.
[Exit Arnold, joining in the combat which still continues between detached parties. The scene closes.]

SCENE III.—Saint Peter's—The Interior of the Church—The Pope at the Altar—Priests, etc., crouching in confusion, and Citizens flying for refuge, pursued by Soldiers.

Enter Caesar.

A Spanish Soldier. Down with them, comrades!
seize upon those lamps!
Cleave you bald-pated shaveling to the chine!
His rosary's of gold!

Lutheran Soldier. Revenge! revenge!
Plunder hereafter, but for vengeance now—
Yonder stands Anti-Christ!

Ces. (interposing). How now, schismatic?
What wouldst thou?

Luth. Sold. In the holy name of Christ,
Destroy proud Anti-Christ. I am a Christian.

Ces. Yes, a disciple that would make the founder
Of your belief renounce it, could he see
Such proselytes. Beat stint thyself to plunder.

Luth. Sold. I say he is the devil.
Ces. Hush! keep that secret,
Lest he should recognize you for his own.

Luth. Sold. Why would you have him? I repeat
he is
The devil, or the devil's vicar upon earth.

Ces. And that's the reason: would you make a quarrel
With your best friends? You had far best be quiet;
His hour is not yet come.

Luth. Sold. That shall be seen!
[The Lutheran Soldier rushes forward; a shot strikes him from one of the Pope's Guards, and he falls at the foot of the Altar.]

Ces. (to the Lutheran). I told you so.
Luth. Sold. And will you not avenge me?
Ces. Not I! You know that "Vengeance is the Lord's:"

You see he loves no interlopers.
Luth. Sold. (dying). Oh!

Had I but slain him, I had gone on high,
Crown'd with eternal glory! Heaven, forgive
My feebleness of arm that reach'd him not,
And take thy servant to thy mercy. 'Tis
A glorious triumph still; proud Babylon's
No more; the Harlot of the Seven Hills
Hath changed her scarlet raiment for sackcloth
And ashes!

[The Lutheran dies.
Ces. Yes, thine own amidst the rest.
Well done, old Babel!

[The Guards defend themselves desperately, while the Pontiff escapes, by a private passage, to the Vatican and the Castle of Saint Angelo.]

Ces. Hal! right nobly battled!
Now, priest! now, soldier! the two great professions,
Together by the ears and hearts! I have not
Seen a more comic pantomime since Titus
Took Jewry. But the Romans had the best then;
Now they must take their turn.

Soldiers. He hath escaped!
Follow!
Another Sold. They have barr'd the narrow passage up,
And it is clogged with dead even to the door.
Ces. I am glad he hath escaped: he may thank me for't.

In part. I would not have his bulls shew'd—
'T were worth one-half our empire: his indulgences
Demand come in return—no, no, he must not
Fall!—and besides, his now escape may furnish
A future miracle, in future proof
Of his infallibility. [To the Spanish Soldier.]

Well, cut-throats!
What do you pause for? If you make not haste,
There will not be a link of pious gold left.
And you, too, Catholics! Would ye return
From such a pilgrimage without a relic?
The very Lutherans have more true devotion:
See how they strip the shrines!

Soldiers. By holy Peter
He speaks the truth; the heretic will bear
The best away.
Ces. And that were shame! Go to!
Assist in their conversion.
(The Soldiers disperse: many quit the Church, others enter.)

Ces. They are gone,
And others come: so flows the wave on wave
Of what these creatures call eternity.
Deeming themselves the breakers of the ocean,
While they are but its bubbles, ignorant
That foam is their foundation. So, another!

*Enter Olympia, flying from the pursuit—She springs
upon the Altar.*

Sold. She's mine!
Another Sold. (opposing the former). You see, I track'd her first: and were she
The Pope's niece, I'll not yield her. [They fight.]
3d Sold. (advancing towards Olympia). You may settle
Your claims; I'll make mine good.
Olimp. Infernal slave!
You touch me not alive.
3d Sold. Alive or dead!

Olimp. (embracing a massive crucifix). Respect your God!
3d Sold. Yes, when he shines in gold.
Girl, you but grasp your dowry.
[As he advances, Olympia, with a strong and sudden effort, casts down the crucifix: it strikes the Soldier, who falls.]

3d Sold. Oh, great God!

Olimp. Ah! now you recognize Him.

3d Sold. My brain's a crash! My

Comrades, help, ho! All's darkness! [He dies.]

Other Soldiers (coming up). Slay her, although she had a thousand lives:
She hath kill'd our comrade.

Olimp. Welcome such a death!
You have no life to give, which the worst slave city of Rome. For this picture of horror, see especially the

"Reckage of Rome," by Jacopo Bonagatti, in Giornale
Samminiatese, the 16^{to} trovò presento," and "L'Arte di Col-
lari," vol. I, p. 124.

the Pontiff escapes, by a private passage, to the Vatican and the Castle of Saint Angelo.

Now, priest! now, soldier! the two great professions,
Together by the ears and hearts! I have not
Seen a more comic pantomime since Titus
Took Jewry. But the Romans had the best then;
Now they must take their turn.

Soldiers. He hath escaped!
Follow!

Another Sold. They have barr'd the narrow passage up,
And it is clogged with dead even to the door.

Ces. I am glad he hath escaped: he may thank me for't.

In part. I would not have his bulls shew'd—
'T were worth one-half our empire: his indulgences
Demand come in return—no, no, he must not
Fall!—and besides, his now escape may furnish
A future miracle, in future proof
Of his infallibility. [To the Spanish Soldier.]

Well, cut-throats!
What do you pause for? If you make not haste,
There will not be a link of pious gold left.

And you, too, Catholics! Would ye return
From such a pilgrimage without a relic?
The very Lutherans have more true devotion:
See how they strip the shrines!

Soldiers. By holy Peter
He speaks the truth; the heretic will bear
The best away.

Ces. And that were shame! Go to!
Assist in their conversion.

(The Soldiers disperse: many quit the Church, others enter.)

Ces. They are gone,
And others come: so flows the wave on wave
Of what these creatures call eternity.

Deeming themselves the breakers of the ocean,
While they are but its bubbles, ignorant
That foam is their foundation. So, another!

*Enter Olympia, flying from the pursuit—She springs
upon the Altar.*

Sold. She's mine!
Another Sold. (opposing the former). You see, I track'd her first: and were she
The Pope's niece, I'll not yield her. [They fight.]

3d Sold. (advancing towards Olympia). You may settle
Your claims; I'll make mine good.

Olimp. Infernal slave!
You touch me not alive.

3d Sold. Alive or dead!
Olimp. (embracing a massive crucifix). Respect
your God!

3d Sold. Yes, when he shines in gold.
Girl, you but grasp your dowry.

[As he advances, Olympia, with a strong and sudden effort, casts down the crucifix: it strikes the Soldier, who falls.]

3d Sold. Oh, great God!
Olimp. Ah! now you recognize Him.

3d Sold. My brain's a crash! My
Comrades, help, ho! All's darkness! [He dies.]

Other Soldiers (coming up). Slay her, although she had a thousand lives:
She hath kill'd our comrade.

Olimp. Welcome such a death!
You have no life to give, which the worst slave

*The castle of St. Angelo was besieged from the 6th of May to the 6th of June, during which time slaughter and destruction, accompanied with every excess of impiety, rapine, and lust, on the side of the imperialists, devastated the city of Rome. For this picture of horror, see especially the

"Reckage of Rome," by Jacopo Bonagatti, in Giornale
Samminiatese, the 16^{to} trovò presento," and "L'Arte di Col-
lari," vol. I, p. 124.

Would take. Great God! through thy redeeming Son,
And thy Son's Mother, now receive me as
I would approach thee, worthy her, and him, and thee!

Enter Arnold.

Arn. What do I see? Accursed jackals!
Forbear!

Ces. (aside and laughing). Ha! ha! here's equity!
The dogs

Have as much right as he. But to the issue!
Soldiers. Count, she hath slain our comrade.

Arn. With what weapon?
Sold. The cross, beneath which he is crush'd;
behold him!

Lie there, more like a worm than man; she cast it
Upon his head.

Arn. Even so; there is a woman
Worthy a brave man's liking. Were ye such,
Ye would have honor'd her. But get ye hence,
And thank your meanness, other God you have none,
For your existences. Had you touch'd a hair
Of those dishevel'd locks, I would have thinn'd
Your ranks more than the enemy. Away!
Ye jackals! gnaw the bones the lion leaves,
But not even these till he permits.

A Sold. (murmuring). The lion
Might conquer for himself then.

Arn. (casts him down). Mutineer!
Rebel in hell—you shall obey on earth!

[The Soldiers assault Arnold.]
Arn. Come on! I'm glad on't! I will show you, slaves,

How you should be commanded, and who led you
First o'er the wall you were so shy to scale,
Until I waved my banners from its height,
As you are bold within it.

[Arnold moves down the foremost; the rest throw down their arms.]

Soldiers. Mercy! mercy!
Arn. Then learn to grant it. Have I taught you
who

Led you o'er Rome's eternal battlements?
Soldiers. We saw it, and we know it; yet forgive
A moment's error in the heat of conquest—
The conquest which you led to.

Arn. Get you hence!
Hence to your quarters! you will find them fix'd
In the Colonna palace.

Olymp. (aside). In my father's
Rome!

Arn. (to the Soldiers). Leave your arms; ye have no further need.

Of such: the city's render'd. And mark well
You keep your hands clean, or I'll find out a stream

As red as Tiber now runs, for your baptism.
Soldiers. (deposing their arms and departing). We obey!

Arn. (to Olympia). Lady, you are safe.
Olymp. I should be so,

Had I a knife even; but it matters not—
Death hath a thousand gates; and on the marble,
Even at the altar foot, whence I look down
Upon destruction, shall my head be dash'd,
Ere thou ascend it. God forgive thee, man!

Arn. I wish to merit his forgiveness, and Thine own, although I have not injured thee.

Olymp. No! thou hast only sack'd my native land—

No injury!—and made my father's house
A den of thieves! No injury!—this temple—
Slippery with Roman and with holy gore.

No injury! And now thou wouldst preserve me,
To be—but that shall never be!

[She raises her eyes to Heaven, folds her robe

round her, and prepares to dash herself down on the side of the Altar opposite to that where Arnold stands.]

Arn. Hold! hold!
I swear.

Olymp. Spare thine already forfeit soul
A perjury for which even hell would loose thee.
I know thee.

Arn. No, thou know'st me not; I am not
Of these men, though—

Olymp. I judge thee by thy mates;
It is for God to judge thee as thou art.
I see thee purple with the blood of Rome;
Take mine, 't is all thou e'er shalt have of me,
And here, upon the marble of this temple,
Where the baptismal font baptized me God's,
I offer him a blood less holy
But not less pure (pure as it left me then,
A redeem'd infant) than the holy water
The saints have sanctified!

[Olympia waves her hand to Arnold with disdain, and dashes herself on the pavement from the Altar.]

Arn. Eternal God!
I feel thee now! Help! help! She's gone.

Ces. (approaches). I am here.
Arn. Thou! but oh, save her!

Ces. (assisting him to raise Olympia). She hath done it well!

The leap was serious.
Arn. Oh! she is lifeless!
Ces. If

She be so, I have nought to do with that:
The resurrection is beyond me.

Arn. Slave!
Ces. Ay, slave or master, 't is all one: methinks
Good words, however, are as well at times.

Arn. Words!—Canst thou aid her?
Ces. I will try. A sprinkling
Of that same holy water may be useful.

[He brings some in his helmet from the font.]
Arn. 'T is mixed with blood.

Ces. There is no cleaner now
In Rome.

Arn. How pale! how beautiful! how lifeless!
Alive or dead, thou essence of all beauty,
I love but thee!

Ces. Even so Achilles loved
Penthesilea: with his form it seems
You have his heart, and yet it was no soft one.

Arn. She breathes! But no, 't was nothing, or the last

Faint flutter life disputes with death.
Ces. She breathes.

Arn. Thou sayst it? Then 't is truth.
Ces. You do me right—
The devil speaks truth much oftener than he's deem'd:

He hath an ignorant audience.
Arn. (without attending to him). Yes! her heart beats.

Alas! that the first beat of the only heart
I ever wish'd to beat with mine should vibrate
To an assassin's pulse.

Ces. A sage reflection,
But somewhat late! the day. Where shall we bear her?

I may she live.
Arn. And will she live?
Ces. As much

As dust can. Then she is dead!
Arn. Bah! bah! You are so,
Ces. And do not know it. She will come to life—
Such as you think so, such as you now are;
But we must work by human means.

Arn. We will

Convey her unto the Colonna palace,
Where I have pitch'd my banner.

Ces. Come then! raise her up!

Arn. Softly!

Ces. As softly as they bear the dead,
Perhaps because they cannot feel the jolting.

Arn. But doth she live indeed?

Ces. Nay, never fear!

But, if you rue it after, blame not me.

Arn. Let her but live!

Ces. The spirit of her life
Is yet within her breast, and may revive.

Count! count! I am your servant in all things,

And this is a new office:—'t is not oft

I am employ'd in such; but you perceive

How staunch a friend is what you call a fiend.

On earth you have often only fiends for friends;

Now I desert not mine. Soft! bear her hence,

The beautiful half-dead, and nearly spirit!

I am almost enamour'd of her, as

Of old the angels of her earliest sex.

Arn. Thou!

Ces. I! But fear not. I'll not be your rival.

Arn. Rival.

Ces. I could be one right formidable;

But since I slew the seven husbands of Tobias' future bride (and after all

Was smok'd out by some incense), I have laid

Aside intrigue: 't is rarely worth the trouble

Of gaining, or—what is more difficult—

Getting rid of your prize again; for there's

The rub! at least to mortals.

Arn.

Prithus, peace!

Softly! methinks her lips move, her eyes open!

Ces. Like stars, no doubt; for that's a metaphor

For Lucifer and Venus.

Arn.

To the palace

Colonna, as I told you! Oh! I know

Ces.

My way through Rome.

Arn.

Now onward, onward! Gently!

[Exeunt, bearing Olympia. The scene closes.]

PART III.

SCENE I.—A Castle in the Apennines, surrounded by a wild but smiling Country. Chorus of Peasants singing before the Gates.

Chorus.

1.

The wars are over,

The spring is come;

The bride and her lover

Have sought their home:

They are happy, we rejoice;

Let their hearts have an echo in every voice!

2.

The spring is come; the violet's gone,

The first-born child of the early sun:

With us she is but a winter's flower,

The snow on the hills cannot blast her bower,

And she lifts up her dewy eye of blue

To the youngest sky of the self-same hue.

3.

And when the spring comes with her host

Of flowers, that flower beloved the most

Shrinks from the crowd that may confuse

Her heavenly odor and virgin hues.

4.

Pluck the others, but still remember

Their herald out of dim December—

The morning star of all the flowers,

The pledge of daylight's lengthen'd hours:

Nor, midst the roses, e'er forget

The virgin, virgin violet.

Enter Caesar.

Ces. (singing). The wars are all over,

Our swords are all idle.

The steed bites the bridle.

The casque's on the wall.

There's rest for the rover;

But his armor is rusty,

And the veteran grows crusty,

As he yawns in the hall.

He drinks—but what's drinking?

A mere pause from thinking!

No bugle awakes him with life and death call.

Chorus.

But the hound bayeth loudly,

The boar's in the wood,

And the falcon longs proudly

To spring from her hood:

On the wrist of the noble

She sits like a crest,

And the air is in trouble

With birds from their nest.

Ces. Oh! shadow of glory!

Dim image of war!

But the chase hath no story,

Her hero no star,

Since Nimrod, the founder

Of empire and chase,

Who made the woods wonder

And quake for their race.

When the lion was young,

In the pride of his might,

Then 't was sport for the strong

To embrace him in fight;

To go forth, with a pine

For a spear, 'gainst the mammoth,

Or strike through the ravine

At the foaming behemoth;

While man was in stature

As towers in our time,

The first-born of nature,

And, like her, sublime!

Chorus.

But the wars are over,

The spring is come;

The bride and her lover

Have sought their home:

They are happy, and we rejoice;

Let their hearts have an echo from every valley!

[Exeunt the Peasants, singing.]

CAIN: A Mystery.*

"How the serpent was marvellous than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made."—Gen. ch. III, v. 1.

TO SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

THE MOVEMENT OF CAIN

As Narrated,

BY HIS GRACIOUS FRIEND AND FAITHFUL SERVANT,

THE AUTHOR.

PREFACE.

THE following scenes are entitled "A Mystery," in conformity with the ancient title annexed to dramas upon similar subjects, which were styled "Mysteries, or Moralities." The author has by no means taken the same liberties with his subject which were common formerly, as may be seen by any reader curious enough to refer to those very profane productions, whether in English, French, Italian, or Spanish. The author has endeavored to preserve the language adapted to his characters; and where it is (and this is but rarely) taken from actual Scripture, he has made no little alteration, even of words, as the rhythm would permit. The reader will recollect that the book of Genesis does not state that Eve was tempted by a demon, but by "the serpent;" and that only because he was "the most subtle of all the beasts of the field." Whatever interpretation the Rabbins and the Fathers may have put upon this, I take the words as I find them, and reply, with Bishop Watson upon similar occasions, when the Fathers were quoted to him, as Moderator in the schools of Cambridge, "Behold the Book!"—holding up the Scripture. It is to be recollected that my present subject has nothing to do with the New Testament, to which no reference can be here made without anachronism. With the poems upon similar topics I have not been recently familiar. Since I was twenty, I have never read Milton; but I had read him so frequently before that this may make little difference. Goethe's "Death of Abel" I have never read since I was eight years of age, at Aberdeen. The general impression of my recollection is delight; but of the contents I remember only that Cain's wife was called Mahala, and Abel's Thims: in the following pages I have called them "Adeh" and "Ellah," the earliest female names which occur in Genesis; they were those of Lamech's wives: those of Cain and Abel are not called by their names.

Whether, then, a coincidence of subject may have caused the same in expression, I know nothing, and care as little.

The reader will please bear in mind (what few choose to recollect), that there is no allusion to a future state in any of the books of Moses, nor indeed in the Old Testament. For a reason for this extraordinary omission he may consult Warburton's "Divine Legation;" whether satisfactory or not, no better has yet been assigned. I have therefore supposed it new to Cain, without, I hope, any perversion of Holy Writ.

With regard to the language of Lucifer, it was difficult for me to make him talk like a clergyman upon the same subjects; but I have done what I could to restrain him within the bounds of spiritual politeness.

If he disclaims having tempted Eve in the shape of the Serpent, it is only because the book of Genesis has not the most distant allusion to anything of the kind, but merely to the Serpent in his serpentine capacity.

Note.—The reader will perceive that the author has partly adopted in this poem the notion of Cuvier, that the world has been destroyed several times before the creation of man. This speculation, derived from the different strata and the bones of enormous and unknown animals found in them, is not contrary to the Mosiac account, but rather confirms it; as no human bones have yet been discovered in those strata, although those of many known animals are found near the remains of the unknown. The assertion of Lucifer, that the pre-Adamite world was also peopled by rational beings much more intelligent than man, and proportionally powerful to the mammoth, etc., is, of course, a poetical fiction to help him make out his case. I ought to add, that there is a "tragedy" of Albert, called "Abels." I have never read that, nor any other of the posthumous works of the writer, except his Life.

RAVENNA, Sept. 21, 1821.

* "Cain" was begun at Ravenna, on the 18th of July, 1821, completed on the 9th of September, and published, in the same volume with Sardanapalus and the Two Fowls, in December. Perhaps no production of Lord Byron has been more generally admired, on the score of ability, than this "Mystery;"—certainly none, on first appearing, exposed the author to a fiercer tempest of personal abuse.—See ante, Life of Byron.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

Adam.

Cain.

Abel.

SPIRITS.

Angel of the Lord.

Lucifer.

WOMEN.

Eve.

Abel.

Eliak.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Land without Paradise.—Time, Sunrise.

Adam, Eve, Cain, Abel, Eliak, offering a Sacrifice.

Adam. God, the Eternal! Infinite! All-wise!—Who out of darkness on the deep didst make Light on the waters with a word—all hail! Jehovah, with returning light, all hail!

Eve. God! who didst name the day, and separate Morning from night, till then divided never—Who didst divide the wave from wave, and call Part of thy work the firmament—all hail!

Abel. God! who didst call the elements into Earth—ocean—air—and fire, and with the day And night, and worlds, which these illuminate, Or shadow, madest beings to enjoy them,

And love both them and thee—all hail! all hail! Adam. God, the Eternal! Parent of all things! Who didst create these best and beauteous beings, To be beloved, more than all, save thee—

Let me love thee and them!—All hail! all hail! Eliak. Oh, God! who loving, making, blessing all, Yet didst permit the serpent to creep in, And drive my father forth from Paradise.

Keep us from further evil!—Hail! all hail! Adam. Son Cain, my first-born, wherefore art thou silent?

Cain. Why should I speak?

Adam. To pray.*

Cain. Have ye not pray'd?

Adam. We have, most fervently.

Cain. And loudly: I

Have heard you.

Adam. So will God, I trust.

Abel. Amen!

Adam. But thou, my eldest born, art silent still.

Cain. 'Tis better I should be so.

Adam. Wherefore so?

Cain. I have nought to ask.

Adam. Nor ought to thank for?

Cain. No.

Adam. Dost thou not live?

Cain. Must I not die?

Eve. Alas!

The fruit of our forbidden tree begins

To fall.

Adam. And we must gather it again.

Oh, God! why didst thou plant the tree of knowledge?

Cain. And wherefore pluck'd ye not the tree of life?

Ye might have then defied him.

Adam. Oh! my son,

Blaspheme not: these are serpent's words.

Cain. Why not?

The snake spoke truth: it was the tree of knowledge;

It was the tree of life: knowledge is good.

And life is good; and how can both be evil?

Eve. My boy! thou speakest as I spoke, in sin,

Before thy birth: let me not see renew'd

My misery in thine. I have repented.

Let me not see my offspring fall into The snares beyond the walls of Paradise, Which e'en in Paradise destroy'd his parents. Content thee with what is. Had we been so, Thou now hadst been contented.—Oh, my son!

Adam. Our orisons completed, let us bend, Each to his task of toil—not heavy, though Needful: the earth is young, and yields us thine Her fruits with little labor.

Eve. Cain, my son, Behold thy father cheerful and resign'd, And do as he doth.

Eliak. Wilt thou not, my brother?

Abel. Why wilt thou wear this gloom upon thy brow,

Which can avail thee nothing, save to weary

The Eternal anger?

Adam. My beloved Cain,

Wilt thou frown even on me?

Cain. No, Adam!

I fain would be alone a little while.

Abel. I'm sick at heart; but it will pass.

Precede me, brother—I will follow shortly.

And you, too, sisters, tarry not behind:

Your gentleness must not be harshly mist.

I'll follow you anon.

Adam. If not, I will Return to seek you here.

Abel. The peace of God

Be on your spirit, brother!

Eliak. Amen!

Cain (solas). And this to Life!—Toll! and wherefore should I toll?

My father could not keep his place in Eden.

What had I done in this?—I was unborn:

I sought not to be born; nor love the serpent.

To which that birth has brought me.

Yield to the serpent and the woman? or

Yielding, why suffer? What was there in

The tree was planted, and why not for this?

If not, why place him near it, where he

The fairest in the centre? They have

One answer to all questions. "I was born,

And he is good." How know I that?

He is all-powerful, must all-good, too,

Which I must feed on for a fault not mine.

Whom have we here?—A shape like to the

Yet of a sterner and a sadder aspect

Of spiritual essence: why do I quake?

Why should I fear him more than other men?

Whom I see daily wave their fiery swords

Before the gates round which I linger on

In twilight's hour, to catch a glimpse of Gardens which are my just inheritance.

Are the night closes o'er the inhabited

And the immortal trees which overtop

The cherubim-defended battlements?

If I shrink not from these, the fire

Why should I quail from him who now

Yet he seems mightier far than them, and

Beauteous, and yet not all as beautiful

*"Prayer," said Lord Byron, at Cephalonia, "does not consist in the act of kneeling, nor in repeating certain words in a solemn manner. Devotion is the affection of the heart, and this I feel; for when I view the wonders of creation, I bow to the majesty of heaven; and when I reflect on the moment of life, health, and happiness, I feel that I am indebted for having bestowed these upon me."

As he hath been, and might be: sorrow seems
Half of his immortality. And is it
So? and can aught grieve save humanity?
He cometh.

Enter Lucifer.

Lucifer. Mortal!

Cain. Spirit, who art thou?

Lucifer. Minister of spirits.

Cain. And being so, canst thou

Leave them, and walk with dust?

Lucifer. I know the thoughts

Of dust, and feel for it, and with you.

Cain. How!

You know my thoughts?

Lucifer. They are the thoughts of all

Worthy of thought;—tis your immortal part

Which speaks within you.

Cain. What immortal part?

This has not been reveal'd: the tree of life

Was withheld from us by my father's folly,

While that of knowledge, by my mother's haste,

Was pluck'd too soon; and all the fruit is death!

Lucifer. They have deceived thee; thou shalt live.

Cain. I live,

But live to die: and, living, see no thing

To make death hateful, save an inmate clinging,

A loathsome, and yet all invincible

Instinct of life, which I abhor, as I

Despise myself, yet cannot overcome—

And so I live. Would I had never lived!

Lucifer. Thou livest, and must live for ever:

Think not

The earth, which is thine outward covering, is

Existence—it will cease, and thou wilt be

No less than thou art now.

Cain. No less! and why

No more?

Lucifer. It may be thou shalt be as we.

Cain. And ye?

Lucifer. Are everlasting.

Cain. Are ye happy?

Lucifer. We are mighty.

Cain. Are ye happy?

Lucifer. No: art thou?

Cain. How should I be so? Look on me!

Lucifer. Poor clay!

And thou pretendest to be wretched! Thou!

Cain. I am;—and thou, with all thy might, what art thou?

Lucifer. One who aspired to be what made thee,

and

Would not have made thee what thou art.

Cain. Ah!

Thou look'st almost a god; and—

Lucifer. I am none:

And having fail'd to be one, would be nought

Have what I am. He conquer'd; let him reign!

Cain. Who?

Lucifer. Thy sire's Maker, and the earth's.

Cain. And heaven's,

And all that in them is. So I have heard

His seraphs sing; and so my father saith.

Lucifer. They say—what they must sing and say,

on pain

Of being that which I am—and thou art—

Of spirits and of men.

Cain. And what is that?

Lucifer. Better who dare use their immortality—

With thee, look the Omnipotent tyrant in the conquering face, and tell him that thou art not good! If he has made, which I know not, nor believe—let him make us—he cannot unmake:

—may, he'd have us so,

—let him! He is great—

is no happier than

We in our conflict: Goodness would not make Evil; and what else hath he made? But let him
Sit on his vast and solitary throne,
Creating worlds, to make eternity
Less burdensome to his immense existence
And unparticipated solitude;
Let him crowd orb on orb: he is alone
Indefinite, indissoluble tyrant;
Could he but crush himself, 'twere the best boon
He ever granted: but let him reign on,
And multiply himself in misery!
Spirits and Men, at least we sympathise—
And, suffering in concert, make our pangs
Innumerable more endurable,
By the unbounded sympathy of all
With all! But He! so wretched in his height,
So restless in his wretchedness, must still Create, and recreate—

Cain. Thou speak'st to me of things which long have swum

In visions through my thought: I never could

Reconcile what I saw with what I heard.

My father and my mother talk to me

Of serpents, and of fruits and trees: I see

The gates of what they call their Paradise

Guarded by fiery-sworded cherubim,

Which shut them out, and me: I feel the weight

Of daily toil, and constant thought: I look

Around a world where I seem nothing, with Thoughts which arise within me, as if they Could master all things:—but I thought alone

This misery was mine.—My father is

Tamed down; my mother has forgot the mind

Which made her thirst for knowledge at the risk

Of an eternal curse; my brother is

A watching shepherd boy, who offers up

The firstlings of the flock to him who bids

The earth yield nothing to us without sweat;

My sister Zillah sings an earlier hymn

Than the birds' madrigals; and my Adah, my Own and beloved, she, too, understands not

The mind which overwhelms me: never till

Now met I aught to sympathize with me.

'T is well—I rather would consort with spirits.

Lucifer. And hadst thou not been fit by thine own soul

For such companionship, I would not now

Have stood before thee as I am: a serpent

Had been enough to charm ye, as before.

Cain. Ah! didst thou tempt my mother?

Lucifer. I tempt none,

Save with the truth: was not the tree the free

Of knowledge? and was not the tree of life

Still fruitful? Did I bid her pluck them not?

Did I plant things prohibited within

The reach of beings innocent, and curious

By their own innocence? I would have made ye

Gods; and even he who trust ye forth, so thrust ye

Because "ye should not eat the fruits of life,

And become gods as we." Were those his words?

Cain. They were, as I have heard from those who heard them,

In thunder.

Lucifer. Then who was the demon? He

Who would not let ye live, or he who would Have made ye live for ever in the joy

And power of knowledge?

Cain. Would they had snatch'd both

The fruits, or neither!

Lucifer. One is yours already;

The other may be still.

Cain. How so?

Lucifer. By being

Yourselves, in your resistance. Nothing can

Quench the mind, if the mind will be itself

And centre of surrounding things—'t is made

To sway.

Cain. But didst thou tempt my parents?
Lucifer. Poor clay! what should I tempt them for, or how? I?
Cain. They say the serpent was a spirit.
Lucifer. Who
 Saith that? It is not written so on high;
 The proud One will not so far falsify,
 Though man's vast fears and little vanity
 Would make him cast upon the spiritual nature
 His own low failing. The snake was the snake—
 No more; and yet not less than those he tempted,
 In nature being earth also—more in wisdom,
 Since he could overcome them, and foreknew
 The knowledge fatal to their narrow joys.
 Think'st thou I'd take the shape of things that die?

Cain. But the thing had a demon?
Lucifer. He but woke one
 In those he spake to with his forked tongue.
 I tell thee that the serpent was no more
 Than a mere serpent: ask the cherubim
 Who guard the tempting tree. When thousand ages
 Have roll'd o'er your dead sages, and your seed's,
 The seed of the then world may thus array
 Their earliest fault in fable, and attribute
 To me a shape I scorn, as I scorn all
 That bows to him, who made things but to bend
 Before his sullen, sole eternity;
 But we, who see the truth, must speak it. Thy Fond parents listen'd to a creeping thing.
 And fell. For what should spirits tempt them?
 What
 Was there to envy in the narrow bounds
 Of Paradise, that spirits who pervade
 Space—but I speak to thee of what thou know'st
 not,
 With all thy tree of knowledge.

Cain. But thou canst not Speak aught of knowledge which I would not know,
 And do not thirst to know, and bear a mind
 To know.

Lucifer. And heart to look on?
Cain. Be it proved.
Lucifer. Darest thou look on death?
Cain. He has not yet
 Been seen.

Lucifer. But must be undergone.
Cain. My father
 Says he is something dreadful, and my mother
 Weeps when he's named; and Abel lifts his eyes
 To heaven, and Zillah casts hers to the earth,
 And sighs a prayer; and Adah looks on me,
 And speaks not.

Lucifer. And thou?
Cain. Thoughts unspeakable
 Crowd in my breast to burning, when I hear
 Of this almighty Death, who is, it seems,
 Inevitable. Could I wrestle with him?
 I wrestled with the lion, when a boy,
 In play, till he ran roaring from my grips.

Lucifer. It has no shape; but will absorb all things
 That bear the form of earth-born being.

Cain. Ah!
 I thought it was a being: who could do
 Such evil things to beings save a being?

Lucifer. Ask the Destroyer.
Cain. Who?
Lucifer. The Maker—call him
 Which name thou wilt; he makes but to destroy.

Cain. I knew not that, yet thought it, since I heard

Of death: although I know not what it is,
 Yet it seems horrible. I have look'd out
 In the vast desolate night in search of him;
 And when I saw gigantic shadows in

The umbrage of the walls of Eden, checking
 By the far flashing of the cherubs' swords,
 I watch'd for what I thought his coming: but
 With fear rose longing in my heart to know
 What 't was which shook us all—but nothing came.
 And then I turn'd my weary eyes from off
 Our native and forbidden Paradise,
 Up to the lights above us, in the azure,
 Which are so beautiful: shall they, too, die?
Lucifer. Perhaps—but long outlive both thou and thee.

Cain. I'm glad of that: I would not have them
 die—

They are so lovely. What is death? I fear,
 I feel, it is a dreadful thing; but what,
 I cannot compass: 't is denounced against us.
 Both them who sinn'd and sinn'd not, as an ill—
 What ill?

Lucifer. To be resolved into the earth.
Cain. But shall I know it?

Lucifer. As I know not death,
 I cannot answer.

Cain. Were I quiet earth,
 That were no evil: would I ne'er had been Aught else but dust!

Lucifer. That is a grovelling wish,
 Less than thy father's, for he wished to know.

Cain. But not to live, or wherefore plank'st thou not
 The life-tree?

Lucifer. He was hinder'd.
Cain. Doubtly

Not to snatch first that fruit:—but ere he pluck'd
 The knowledge, he was ignorant of death.

Alas! I scarcely now know what it is.
 And yet I fear it—fear I know not what!

Lucifer. And I, who know all things, still ing: see

What is true knowledge.

Cain. Wilt thou teach me?

Lucifer. Ay, upon one condition.

Cain. Name it.

Lucifer. Thou dost fall down and worship me—thy Lord.

Cain. Thou art not the Lord my father worshipp'd.

Lucifer. His equal?

Cain. His equal?
Lucifer. No;—I have nought in common with him!

Nor would: I would be aught above—heaven's Aught save a sharer or a servant of
 His power. I dwell apart: but I am
 Many there are who worship me, and love me,
 Who shall—be thou amongst the first.

Cain. As yet have bow'd unto my father's God.

Although my brother Abel oft implor'd
 That I would join with him in sacrifice.

Why should I bow to thee?

Lucifer. Hast thou
 To him?

Cain. Have I not said it?—must I
 Could not thy mighty knowledge teach me?

Lucifer. He who bows not to him
 me!

Cain. But I will bend to neither.

Lucifer. Thou art my worshipper: not would'st thou
 Him makes thee mine the same.

Cain. And thou art mine.

Lucifer. Thou 'lt know here—and Cain. Be taught the mystery of my being.

Lucifer. Where I will lead thee.

Cain. But I am
 To till the earth—for I had promised
Lucifer.

Cain. To cull some first-fruits.

Lucifer.

Why?

To offer up

With Abel on an altar.

Lucifer.

Saidst thou not

Thou ne'er hadst bent to him who made thee?

Cain.

Yes—

But Abel's earnest prayer has wrought upon me;

The offering is more his than mine—and Adah—

Lucifer. Why dost thou hesitate?

Cain.

She is my sister;

Born on the same day, of the same womb; and

She wrung from me, with tears, this promise; and

Rather than see her weep, I would, methinks,

Bear all—and worship aught.

Lucifer.

Then follow me!

Cain. I will.

Enter Adah.

Adah. My brother, I have come for thee:

It is our hour of rest and joy—and we Have less without thee. Thou hast labor'd not

Like them; but I have done thy task: the fruits

Are ripe, and glowing as the light which ripens:

Come away.

Cain.

Seest thou not?

I see an angel;

We have seen many: will he share our hour

Of rest?—he is welcome.

Cain.

But he is not like

The angels we have seen.

Adah.

Are there, then, others?

But he is welcome, as they were: they design'd

To be our guests—will he?

Cain (to Lucifer).

Wilt thou?

I ask

Lucifer.

See to be mine.

Cain.

I must away with him.

Adah. And leave us?

Cain.

Ay.

And me?

Adah.

Beloved Adah!

Cain.

Let me go with thee.

Lucifer.

No, she must not.

Adah.

Who

Art thou that stoppest between heart and heart?

Cain.

He is a god.

Adah.

How know'st thou?

Cain.

He speaks like

A god.

Adah. So did the serpent, and it lied.

Lucifer. Thou errest, Adah!—was not the tree

that

Knowledge?

Adah.

Ay—to our eternal sorrow.

Lucifer. And yet that grief is knowledge—so he led not:

But if he did betray you, 't was with truth;

And truth in its own essence cannot be guilt.

Adah.

But all we know of it has gather'd

Its ill: serpents from our home,

And toil, and sweat, and heaviness;

And all of that which was—and hope of that

Which doth not. Cain! walk not with this spirit.

Be with what we have borne, and love me—I love thee.

Lucifer.

More than thy mother, and thy sire?

Adah.

Is that a sin, too?

Lucifer.

No, not yet:

But he will be in your children.

Adah.

What!

Thy daughter love her brother Enoch?

Or will she love her brother Cain?

Lucifer.

Oh, my God!

How can I bring forth things that love

Love? How can they not draw their milk

Out of this bosom? was not he, their father,

Born of the same sole womb, in the same hour

With me? did we not love each other? and

In multiplying our being multiply

Things which will love each other as we love

Them?—And as I love thee, my Cain! go not

Forth with this spirit; he is not of ours.

Lucifer. The sin I speak of is not of my making,

And cannot be a sin in you—where'er

It seem in those who will replace ye in Mortality.

Adah.

What is the sin which is not

Sin in itself? Can circumstance make sin

Or virtue?—if it doth, we are the slaves

Of—

Lucifer. Higher things than ye are slaves: and higher

Than them or ye would be so, did they not

Prefer an independency of torture

To the smooth agonies of adulation,

In hymns and harpings, and self-seeking prayers;

To that which is omnipotent, because

It is omnipotent, and not from love,

But terror and self-hope.

Adah.

Omnipotence

Must be all goodness.

Lucifer.

Was it so in Eden?

Adah. Fiend! tempt me not with beauty; thou art fairer

Than was the serpent, and as false.

Lucifer.

As true,

Ask Eve, your mother: bears she not the knowledge

Of good and evil?

Adah.

Oh, my mother! thou

Hast pluck'd a fruit more fatal to thine offspring

Than to thyself; thou at the least hast pass'd

Thy youth in Paradise, in innocent

And happy intercourse with happy spirits:

But we, thy children, ignorant of Eden,

Are girt about by demons, who assume

The words of God, and tempt us with our own

Dissatisfied and curious thoughts—as thou

Wert work'd on by the snake, in thy most flush'd

And heedless, harmless wantonness of blame.

I cannot answer this immortal thing

Which stands before me; I cannot abhor him;

I look upon him with a pleasing fear,

And yet I fly not from him; in his eye

There is a fastening attraction which

Fixes my fluttering eyes on his; my heart

Beats quick; he awes me, and yet draws me near,

Nearer and nearer:—Cain—Cain—save me from him!

Cain.

What dreads my Adah? This is no ill

spirit.

Adah. He is not God—nor God's: I have beheld

The cherubs and the seraphs; he looks not

Like them.

Cain.

But there are spirits loftier still—

The archangels.

Lucifer.

And still loftier than the archangels.

Adah.

Ay—but not blessed.

Lucifer.

If the blessedness

Consists in slavery—no.

Adah.

I have heard it said,

The seraphs love most—cherubim know most—

And this should be a cherub—since he loves not.

Lucifer. And if the higher knowledge quenches

love,

What must he be you cannot love when known?

Since the all-knowing cherubim love least,

The seraphs' love can be but ignorance:

That they are not compatible, the doom

Of thy fond parents, for their darling, proves.

Choose betwixt love and knowledge—since there is

No other choice: your sire hath chosen already:

His worship is but fear.

Adah. Oh, Cain! choose love.
Cain. For thee, my Adah, I choose not—it was Born with me—but I love nought else.

Adah. Our parents?
Cain. Did they love us when they snatch'd from the tree

That which hath driven us all from Paradise?
Adah. We were not born then—and if we had been,

Should we not love them and our children, Cain?

Cain. My little Enoch! and his sleeping sister!

Could I but deem them happy, I would half

Forget—but it can never be forgotten

Through thrice a thousand generations! never

Shall men love the remembrance of the man

Who sow'd the seed of evil and mankind

In the same hour! They pluck'd the tree of science

And sin—and, not content with their own sorrow,

Begot me—thee—and all the few that are,

And all the unnumber'd and innumerable

Multitudes, millions, myriads, which may be,

To inherit agonies accumulated

By ages!—and I must be sire of such things!

Thy beauty and thy love—my love and joy,

The rapturous moment and the placid hour,

All we love in our children and each other,

But lead them and ourselves through many years

Of sin and pain—or few, but still of sorrow,

Intercheck'd with an instant of brief pleasure.

To Death—the unknown! Methinks the tree of knowledge

Hath not fulfill'd its promise:—if they sinn'd,

At least they ought to have known all things that are

Of knowledge—and the mystery of death.

What do they know?—that they are miserable.

What need of snakes and fruits to teach us that?

Adah. I am not wretched, Cain, and if thou

Wert happy—

Cain. Be thou happy, then, alone—

I will have nought to do with happiness,

Which humbles me and mine.

Adah. Alone I could not,

Nor would be happy: but with those around us,

I think I could be so, despite of death.

Which, as I know it not, I dread not, though

It seems an awful shadow—if I may

Judge from what I have heard.

Lucifer. And thou couldst not Alone, thou sayst, be happy?

Adah. Alone! Oh, my God!

Who could be happy and alone, or good?

To me my solitude seems sin; unless

When I think how soon I shall see my brother,

His brother, and our children, and our parents.

Lucifer. Yet thy God is alone; and is he happy?

Lonely, and good?

Adah. He is not so; he hath

The angels and the mortals to make happy,

And thus becomes so in diffusing joy.

What else can joy be, but the spreading joy?

Lucifer. Ask of your sire, the exile fresh from

Eden;

Or of his first-born son: ask your own heart;

It is not tranquil.

Adah. Alas! no! and you—

Are you of heaven?

Lucifer. If I am not, inquire

The cause of this all-spreading happiness

(Which you proclaim) of the all-great and good

Maker of life and living things; it is

His secret, and he keeps it. We must bear,

And some of us resist, and both in vain,

His seraphs say; but it is worth the trial,

Since better may not be without: there is

A wisdom in the spirit, which directs

To right, as in the dim blue air the eye

Of you, young mortals, lights at once upon
 The star which watches, welcoming the morn'g.

Adah. It is a beautiful star; I love it for its beauty.

Lucifer. And why not adore?

Adah. Adores the Invisible only.

Lucifer. But the symbols

Of the Invisible are the loveliest

Of what is visible; and yon bright star

Is leader of the host of heaven.

Adah. Our father

Saith that he has beheld the God himself

Who made him and our mother.

Lucifer. Hast thou seen him?

Adah. Yes—in his works.

Lucifer. But in his being?

Adah. No—

Save in my father, who is God's own image;

Or in his angels, who are like to thee—

And brighter, yet less beautiful and powerful.

In seeming: as the silent sunny noon,

All light, they look upon us; but thou seem'st

Like an ethereal night, where long white clouds

Break the deep purple, and unnumber'd stars

Spangle the wonderful mysterious vast

With things that look as if they would be

So beautiful, unnumber'd, and enduring.

Not dazzling, and yet drawing us to them.

They fill my eyes with tears, and so deep

Thou seem'st unhappy: do not make us

And I will weep for thee.

Lucifer. Alas! thou know'st

Couldst thou but know what oceans will be

Adah. By me?

Lucifer. By all.

Adah. What all?

Lucifer. The million

The myriad myriads—the all-peopled

The unpeopled earth—and the o'er-peopled

Of which thy bosom is the germ.

Adah. Oh, Cain!

This spirit curseth us.

Cain. Let him say so;

Him will I follow.

Adah. Whither?

Lucifer. To a place

Whence he shall come back to thee in an hour

But in that hour see things of many days.

Adah. How can that be?

Lucifer. Did not your

Out of old worlds this new one in few days

And cannot I, who aided in this work,

Show in an hour what he hath made in

Or hath destroy'd in few?

Cain. Lead on.

Adah. In sooth, return within an hour?

Lucifer. He

With us acts are exempt from time, and

Can crowd eternity into an hour.

Or stretch an hour into eternity:

We breathe not by a mortal measurement

But that's a mystery. Cain, come on Adah. Will he return?

Lucifer. Ay, woman

Of mortals from that place (the first and

Who shall return, save Orin, shall

thee.

To make that silent and expectant

As populous as this: at present there

Are few inhabitants.

Adah. Where dwell

Lucifer. Throughout all space dwell? Where are

Thy God or Gods—there are Divided with me: life and death

Eternity—and heaven and earth—and that
Which is not heaven nor earth, but peopled with Those who once peopled or shall people both—
These are my realms! So that I do divide
His, and possess a kingdom which is not
His. If I were not that which I have said, Could I stand here? His angels are within Your vision.

Adam. So they were when the fair serpent
Spoke with our mother first.

Lucifer. Cain! thou hast heard.
If thou dost long for knowledge, I can satiate
That thirst; nor ask thee to partake of fruits
Which shall deprive thee of a single good.
The conqueror has left thee. Follow me.
Cain. Spirit, I have said it.

[Recount Lucifer and Cain.
Adam follows, exclaiming.] Cain! my brother!
Cain!

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Abyss of Space.

Cain. I tread on air, and sink not; yet I fear
To sink.

Lucifer. Have faith in me, and thou shalt be Borne on the air, of which I am the prince.

Cain. Can I do so without impiety?
Lucifer. Believe—and sink not! doubt—and perish! thus

Would run the edict of the other God,
Who names me demon to his angels; they
Echo the sound to miserable things,
Which, knowing nought beyond their shallow
senses,

Worship the word which strikes their ear, and deem Evil or good what is proclaimed to them
In their abasement. I will have none such:

Worship or worship not, thou shalt behold
The worlds beyond thy little world, nor be Amazed for doubts beyond thy little life,
With torture of my doomings. There will come
As hour, when, toss'd upon some water-drops,
A man shall say to a man, "Believe in me,
And walk the waters;" and the man shall walk
The billows and be safe. I will not say,
Believe in me, as a conditional creed
To save thee; but fly with me o'er the gulf
Of space an equal flight, and I will show
What thou dar'st not deny—the history
Of past, and present, and of future worlds.

Cain. Oh, god, or demon, or whate'er thou art,
Is yon our earth?

Lucifer. Dost thou not recognize
The dust which form'd your father?

Cain. Can it be?
You small white circles, swinging in far ether,
With an inferior circle near it still,
Which looks like that which lit our earthly night?
Is this our Paradise? Where are its walls,
And they who guard them?

Lucifer. Point me out the site
Of Paradise.

Cain. How should I? As we move
Like sunbeams onward, it grows small and smaller,
And as it waxes little, and then less,
Gathers a halo round it, like the light
Which shone the roundest of the stars, when I
Look'd them from the skirts of Paradise:
Methinks they both, as we recede from them,
Appear to join the innumerable stars
Which are around us; and, as we move on,
Increase their myriads.

Lucifer. And if there should be Less power than thine own, inhabited
By weaker things, and they themselves far more
Powerless than the dust of thy dull earth,
And most multiplied to animated atoms,
And all doom'd to death, and wretched,
Wouldst thou think?

I should be proud of thought
That such high thought were

Link'd to a servile mass of matter, and,
Knowing such things, aspiring to such things,
And science still beyond them, were chain'd down
To the most gross and petty paltry wants,
All foul and fulsome, and the very best
Of thine enjoyments a sweet degradation,
A most enervating and filthy cheat
To lure thee on to the renewal of Fresh souls and bodies, all foredoom'd to be
As frail, and few so happy—

Cain. Spirit! I
Know nought of death, save as a dreadful thing
Of which I have heard my parents speak, as of
A hideous heritage I owe to them
No less than life: a heritage not happy.
If I may judge, till now. But, spirit! if It be as thou hast said (and I within Feel the prophetic torture of its truth),
Here let me die: for to give birth to those
Who can but suffer many years, and die,
Methinks is merely propagating death,
And multiplying murder.

Lucifer. Thou canst not
All die—there is what must survive.

Cain. The Other
Spake not of this unto my father, when
He shut him forth from Paradise, with death
Written upon his forehead. But at least
Let what is mortal of me perish, that I may be in the rest as angels are.

Lucifer. I am angelic: wouldst thou be as I am?

Cain. I know not what thou art; I see thy power,
And see thou show'st me things beyond my power,
Beyond all power of my born faculties,
Although inferior still to my desires
And my conceptions.

Lucifer. What are they which dwell
So humbly in their pride, as to sojourn
With worms in clay?

Cain. And what art thou who dwellest
So haughtily in spirit, and canst range
Nature and immortality—and yet
Seem'st sorrowful?

Lucifer. I seem that which I am;
And therefore do I ask of thee, if thou
Wouldst be immortal?

Cain. Thou hast said, I must be Immortal in despite of me. I knew not
This until lately—but since it must be,
Let me, or happy or unhappy, learn
To anticipate my immortality.

Lucifer. Thou didst before I came upon thee.

Cain. How?

Lucifer. By suffering.

Cain. And must torture be immortal?

Lucifer. We and thy sons will try. But now,
Behold!

Is it not glorious?

Cain. Oh, thou beautiful
And unimaginable ether! and
Ye multiplying realms of increased
And still increasing lights! what are ye? what

Is this blue wilderness of intervenient
Air, where ye roll along, as I have seen
The leaves along the limpid streams of Eden?
Is your course measured for ye? Or do ye
Sweep on in your unbounded revelry
Through an aerial universe of endless
Expansion—at which my soul aches to think—
Intoxicated with eternity?
Oh, God! Oh, Gods! or whatsoever ye are!
How beautiful ye are! how beautiful
Your works, or accidents, or whatsoever
They may be! Let me die, as atoms die
(If that they die), or know ye in your night
And knowledge! My thoughts are not in this hour Unworthy what I see, though my dust is;
Spirit! let me expire, or see them nearer.

Lucifer. Art thou not nearer? Look back to thine
earth!

Cain. Where is it? I see nothing save a mass
Of most innumerable lights?

Lucifer. Look there!

Cain. I cannot see it.

Yet it sparkles still.

Cain. That!—yonder!

Lucifer.

Yes.

Cain. And wilt thou tell me so?
Why, I have seen the fire-dies and fire-worms
Sprinkle the dusky groves and the green banks
In the dim twilight, brighter than yon world
Which bears them.

Lucifer. Thou hast seen both worms and worlds,
Each bright and sparkling—what dost think of them?

Cain. That they are beautiful in their own sphere,
And that the night, which makes both beautiful,
The little shining fire-fly in its flight,
And the immortal star in its great course,
Must both be guided.

Lucifer. But by whom or what?

Cain. Show me.

Lucifer. Darest thou behold?

Cain. How know I what
I dare behold? As yet, thou hast shown nought
I dare not gaze on further.

Lucifer. On, then, with me.

Wouldst thou behold things mortal or immortal?

Cain. Why, what are things?

Lucifer. Both partly: but what doth
Sit next thy heart?

Cain. The things I see.

Lucifer. But what
Sits nearest it?

Cain. The things I have not seen,

Nor ever shall—the mysteries of death.

Lucifer. What, if I show to thee things which have died,
As I have shown thee much which cannot die?

Cain. Do so.

Lucifer. Away, then! on our mighty wings.

Cain. Oh! how we cleave the blue! The stars fade from us!

The earth! where is my earth? Let me look on it,
For I was made of it.

Lucifer. 'Tis now beyond thee,

Less, in the universe, than thou in it;

Yet deem not that thou canst escape it; thou
Shalt soon return to earth, and all its dust:

'Tis part of thy eternity, and mine.

Cain. Where dost thou lead me?

Lucifer.

To what was before thee!
The phantasm of the world; of which thy world
Is but the wreck.

Cain. What! is it not then new?

Lucifer. No more than life is; and that was ere thou

Or I were, or the things which seem to us
Greater than either: many things will have

No end; and some, which would pretend to have
Had no beginning, have had one at none.
As thou; and mightier things have been extirped.
To make way for much meaner than we own
Surmise; for moments only and the space
Have been and must be all unchangeable.
But changes make not death, except to clay;
But thou art clay,—and canst but comprehend
That which was clay, and such thou shalt become.

Cain. Clay, spirit! what thou wilt, I can endure.

Lucifer. Away, then!

Cain. But the lights fade from me fast,

And some till now grow larger as we approach!

And were the look of worlds.

Lucifer.

Cain. And Edens in them?

Lucifer.

Cain.

Lucifer. Yes, or things higher.

Cain.

Lucifer. Wouldst thou have man without death?

Must no reptiles

Breathe save the erect ones?

Cain.

Where fly we?

Lucifer. To the world of phantoms, which

Are beings past, and shadows still to come.

Cain. But it grows dark and dumb,—the stars are gone!

Lucifer. And yet thou seest.

Cain.

No sun, no moon, no lights innumerable.

The very blue of the empurpled night

Fades to a dreary twilight, yet I see

Huge dusky masses: but unlike the world

We were approaching, which, begirt with light

Seem'd full of life even when their streamers

Of light gave way, and show'd them talking

Unequal, of deep valleys and vast mountains

And some emitting sparks, and some displaying

Enormous liquid plains, and some begirt

With luminous belts, and floating masses, which took,

Like them, the features of fair earth:—but

All here seems dark and dreadful.

Lucifer.

Thou seekest to behold death, and dead things!

Cain. I seek it not; but as I know there are Such, and that my sire's sin makes him such,

And all that we inherit, Hable

To such, I would behold at once, what I

Must one day see perforce.

Lucifer.

Cain.

Lucifer. And so it shall be ever; but we will Unfold its gates!

Cain. Enormous vapours roll

Apart—what's this?

Lucifer.

Cain.

Lucifer. Return! be sure: how else should be peopled?

Its present realm is thin to what it will be

Through thee and thine.

Cain. The clouds still of

And wider, and make widening streets

Lucifer. Advance!

Cain.

Lucifer. And thou!

Fear not—witness

Couldst not have gone beyond thy world,

[They disappear through the clouds.]

SCENE II.—Eden.

Enter Lucifer and Cain.

Cain. How silent and how vast worlds!

For they seem more than one, and yet more peopled
Than the huge brilliant luminous orbs which swung
So thickly in the upper air, that I
Had deem'd them rather the bright populace
Of some all unimaginable heaven,
Than things to be inhabited themselves,
But that on drawing near them I beheld
Their swelling into palpable immensity
Of matter, which seem'd made for life to dwell on,
Rather than life itself. But here, all is So shadowy and so full of twilight, that
It speaks of a day past.

Lucifer. It is the realm
Of death.—Wouldst have it present?

Cain. Till I know
That which it really is, I cannot answer.
But if it be as I have heard my father
Deal out in his long homilies, 'tis a thing—
Oh God! I dare not think on't! Cursed be
He who invented life that leads to death!
Or the dull mass of life, that, being life,
Could not retain, but needs must forfeit it—
Even for the innocent!

Lucifer. Dost thou curse thy father?
Cain. Cursed be not me in giving me my birth?
Cursed be not me before my birth, in daring
To pluck the fruit forbidden?

Lucifer. Thou sayst well:
The curse is mutual 'twixt thy sire and thee—
But for thy sons and brother?

Cain. Let them share it
With me, their sire and brother! What else is Bequeath'd to me? I leave them my inheritance.
Oh, ye interminable gloomy realms
Of swimming shadows and enormous shapes,
Some fully shown, some indistinct, and all
Mighty and melancholy—what are ye?
Live ye, or have ye lived?

Lucifer. Somewhat of both.

Cain. Then what is death?
Lucifer. What! Hath not he who made ye
Said 'tis another life?

Cain. I'll now be talk
Said nothing, save that all shall die.

Lucifer. Perhaps
He one day will unfold that further secret.

Cain. Happy the day!

Lucifer. Yes; happy! when unfolded,
Through agonies unspeakable, and clogg'd
With agonies eternal, to innumerable
Yet unborn myriads of unconscious atoms,
All to be animated for this only!

Cain. What are these mighty phantoms which I see
Floating around me?—They wear not the form
Of the intelligences I have seen
Round our regretted and unenter'd Eden,
Nor wear the form of man as I have view'd it
In Adam's, and in Abel's, and in mine,
Nor in my sister-bride's, nor in my children's:
And yet they have an aspect, which, though not
Of men nor angels, looks like something which,
If not the last, rose higher than the first,
Haughty, and high, and beautiful, and full
Of exulting strength, but of inexplicable
Shape: for I never saw such. They bear not
The wing of scorch, nor the face of man,
Nor form of mightiest brute, nor aught that is
New breathing: mighty yet and beautiful

As the most beautiful and mighty which Live, and yet so unlike them, that I scarce
Can call them living.

Lucifer. Yet they lived.

Cain. Where?
Lucifer. Where

Thou livest.

Cain. When?

Lucifer. On what thou callest earth

They did inhabit.

Cain. Adam is the first.

Lucifer. Of thine, I grant thee—but too mean to be
The last of these.

Cain. And what are they?

Lucifer. That which

Thou shalt be.

Cain. But what were they?

Lucifer. Living, high,
Intelligent, good, great, and glorious things,

As much superior unto all thy sire,
Adam, could e'er have been in Eden, as
The sixty-thousandth generation shall be,
In its dull damp degeneracy, to Thee and thy son;—and how weak they are, judge
By thy own flesh.

Cain. Ah me! and did they perish?

Lucifer. Yea, from their earth, as thou wilt fade from thine.

Cain. But was mine theirs?

Lucifer. It was.

Cain. But not as now.

It is too little and too lowly to Sustain such creatures.*

Lucifer. True, it was more glorious,

Cain. And wherefore did it fall?

Lucifer. Ask him who tells.

Cain. But how?

Lucifer. By a most crushing and inexorable
Destruction and disorder of the elements,
Which struck a world to chaos, as a chase
Subduing has struck out a world: such things,
Though rare in time, are frequent in eternity.—
Pass on, and gaze upon the past.

Cain. 'Tis awful!

Lucifer. And true. Behold these phantoms! they were once

Material as thou art.

Cain. And must I be

Like them?

Lucifer. Let him who made thee answer that.

I show thee what thy predecessors are,

And what they were thou feelest, in degree

Inferior as thy petty feelings and

Thy pettier portion of the immortal part

Of high intelligence and earthly strength.

What ye in common have with what they had

Is life, and what ye shall have—death: the rest

Of your poor attributes is such as suits

Reptiles engender'd out of the unbinding

Slime of a mighty universe, crush'd into

A scarcely-yet shaped planet, peopled with

Things whose enjoyment was to be in blindness—

A Paradise of Ignorance, from which Knowledge was barr'd as poison. But behold

What these superior beings are or were:

Or, if it irk thee, turn thee back and till

The earth, thy task—I'll wait thee there in safety.

Cain. No: I'll stay here.

* It is, according to some speculations, you could prove the young many thousand years older than the Mosaic chronology of the world would knock up Adam and Eve, and the Apple and Serpent—well, what is to be put up in their stead?—or how is the serpent removed? Things must have had a beginning, and then they are where or how? I sometimes think that the world, and all of those higher material being wrecked and degraded in the hardship and struggle through chaos into conformity, or something like it—as we see Laplanders, Esquimaux, etc., inferior, in the present date, as the elements become more inexorable. But even then, this higher pre-Adamite supposititious creation must have had an origin and a Creator; for a Creator is a more natural imagination than a fortuitous concourse of atoms: all things resemble to a fountain, though they may flow to an ocean."—Byron Diary, 1811.

Lucifer. How long?
Cain. For ever! Since I must one day return here from the earth, I rather would remain; I am sick of all That dust has shown me—let me dwell in shadow.
Lucifer. It cannot be: thou now beholdest as A vision that which is reality.
 To make thyself fit for this dwelling, thou Must pass through what the things thou seest have pass'd—
 The gates of death.

Cain. By what gates have we enter'd Even now?

Lucifer. By mine! But, plighted to return, My spirit buoys thee up to breathe in regions Where all is breathless save thyself. Gaze on; But do not think to dwell here till thine hour Is come.

Cain. And these, too; can they ne'er repose To earth again?

Lucifer. Their earth is gone for ever— So changed by its convulsion, they would not Be conscious to a single present spot Of its new scarcely harden'd surface—'t was— Oh, what a beautiful world it was!

Cain. And is. It is not with the earth, though I must till it, I feel at war, but that I may not profit By what it bears of beautiful untolling, Nor gratify my thousand swelling thoughts With knowledge, nor allay my thousand fears Of death and life.

Lucifer. What thy world is, thou seest, But cannot not comprehend the shadow of That which it was.

Cain. And those enormous creatures, Phantoms inferior in the encephalic (At least so seeming) to the things we have pass'd, Resembling somewhat the wild habitants Of the deep woods of earth, the hugest which Roar nightly in the forest, but ten-fold in magnitude and terror; taller than The cherub-guarded walls of Eden, with Eyes flashing like the fiery swords which fence them, And tusks projecting like the trees stripp'd of Their bark and branches—what were they?

Lucifer. The Mammoth is in thy world;—but these lie By myriads underneath its surface.

Cain. But

None on it?

Lucifer. No: for thy frail race to war With them would render the curse on it useless— 'T would be destroy'd so early.

Cain. But why war?

Lucifer. You have forgotten the denunciation Which drove your race from Eden—war with all things,

And death to all things, and disease to most things, And pangs, and bitterness; these were the fruits Of the forbidden tree.

Cain. But animals—

Did they, too, eat of it, that they must die?

Lucifer. Your Maker told ye, they were made for you,

As you for him.—You would not have their doom Superior to your own? Had Adam not Fallen, all had stood.

Cain. Alas! the hopeless wretches! They too must share my sire's fate, like his sons; Like them, too, without having shared the apple; Like them, too, without the so dear-bought knowledge!

It was a lying tree—for we know nothing. At least it promised knowledge at the price Of death—but knowledge still: but what knows man?

Lucifer. It may be death leads to the knowledge;

And being of all things the sole thing certain, At least leads to the surest science: death. The tree was true, though deadly.

Cain. Then this people I see them, but I know them not.

Lucifer. Thy hour is yet afar, and matter cannot Comprehend spirit wholly—but 't is something To know there are such realms.

Cain. We know shadows. That there was death.

Lucifer. But not what was beyond it.

Cain. Nor know I now.

Lucifer. Thou knowest that there is A state, and many states beyond thine own— And this thou knowest not this morn.

Cain. Seems dim and shadowy.

Lucifer. Be content; it will Soon clearer to thine immortality.

Cain. And you immeasurable liquid space Of glorious azure which floats on beyond, Which looks like water, and which I thought was The river which flows out of Paradise Past my own dwelling, but that it is hazy And boundless, and of an ethereal hue— What is it?

Lucifer. There is still some such on earth. Although inferior, and thy children shall Dwell near it—'t is the phantom of an ocean.

Cain. 'T is like another world; a liquid mass And those inordinate creatures sporting on Its shining surface?

Lucifer. Are its tabernacles. The past leviathans.

Cain. And you immense Serpent, which rears its dripping mane and Head ten times higher than the haughtiest eagle, Forth from the abyss looking as he could only Himself around the orbs we lately look'd on— Is he not of the kind which bark'd beneath The tree in Eden?

Lucifer. Eve, thy mother, had Can tell what shape of serpent tempted her.

Cain. This seems too terrible. No death Had more of beauty.

Lucifer. Hast thou ne'er seen a snake? Cain. Many of the same kind (at least) But never that precisely which tempted thee.

The fatal fruit, nor even of the same hue.

Lucifer. Your father saw him not?

Cain. No: 't was my

Who tempted him—she tempted by the serpent.

Lucifer. Good man! whence'er thy wife's sons' wives

Tempt thee or them to aught that's evil, Be sure thou seest first who hath tempted.

Cain. Thy precept comes too late; I know more

For serpents to tempt woman to.

Lucifer. But thou

Are some things still which women may know to,

And man tempt woman:—let thy sons learn My counsel is a kind one; for 't is even Given chiefly at my own expense.

'T will not be follow'd, so there's little harm.

Cain. I understand not this.

Lucifer. The

Thyself most wicked and unhappy, Not so?

Cain. For crime, I know not— I have felt much.

Lucifer. First-born of the first man!
Thy present state of sin—and thou art evil,
Of sorrow—and thou sufferest, are both Eden
In all its innocence compared to what
Thou shortly mayest be; and that state again
In its redoubled wretchedness, a Paradise
To what thy sons' sons' sons, accumulating
In generations like to dust (which they
In fact but add to), shall endure and do.—
Now let us back to earth!

Cain. And wherefore didst thou
Lead me here only to inform me this?

Lucifer. Was not thy quest for knowledge?

Cain. Yes; as being

The road to happiness.

Lucifer. If truth be so,

Thou hast it.

Cain. Then my father's God did well

When he prohibited the fatal tree.

Lucifer. But had done better in not planting it.

But ignorance of evil doth not save

From evil; it must still roll on the same,

A part of all things.

Cain. Not of all things. No:

I'll not believe it—for I thirst for good.

Lucifer. And who and what doth not? Who covets evil

For its own bitter sake?—None—nothing! 'Tis

The heaven of all life, and lifeless ones.

Cain. Within those glorious orbs which we behold,

Distant, and dazzling, and innumerable,

Ere we came down into this phantom realm,

Ill cannot come: they are too beautiful.

Lucifer. Thou hast seen them from afar—

Cain. And what of that?

Distance can but diminish glory—they,

When nearer, must be more ineffable.

Lucifer. Approach the things of earth most beautiful,

And judge their beauty near.

Cain. I have done this—

The loveliest thing I know is loveliest nearest.

Lucifer. Then there must be delusion.—What is that?

Which being nearest to thine eyes is still

More beautiful than beauteous things remote?

Cain. My sister Adah.—All the stars of heaven,

The deep blue noon of night, lit by an orb

Which looks a spirit, or a spirit's world—

The hues of twilight—the sun's gorgeous coming—

His setting indescribable, which fills

My eyes with pleasant tears as I behold

Him sink, and feel my heart float softly with him

Along that western paradise of clouds—

The forest shade—the green bough—the bird's voice—

The vesper bird's, which seems to sing of love,

And mingles with the song of cherubim,

As the day gleams over Eden's walls:—

All these are nothing, to my eyes and heart,

Like Adah's face: I turn from earth and heaven

To gaze on it.

Lucifer. 'Tis fair as frail mortality,

In the first dawn and bloom of young creation,

And earliest embraces of earth's parents,

Can make its offering: still it is delusion.

Cain. You think so, being not her brother.

Lucifer. Mortal!

My brotherhood's with those who have no children.

Cain. Then thou canst have no fellowship with us.

Lucifer. It may be that thine own shall be for me.

But what dost thou possess a beautiful thing, beyond all beauty in thine eyes,

Which thou wretched?

Why do I exist?

Why am I troubled? Why are all things so?

Why am I made up of sin, as the maker

Of things unhappy! To produce destruction
Can surely never be the task of joy,
And yet my sire says he's omnipotent:
Then why is evil—he being good? I ask'd
This question of my father; and he said,
Because this evil only was the path
To good. Strange good, that must arise from out
Its deadly opposite! I lately saw

A lamb stung by a reptile: the poor suckling
Lay foaming on the earth, beneath the vain
And piteous bleating of its restless dam;
My father pluck'd some herbs, and laid them to
The wound; and by degrees the helpless wretch
Resumed its careless life, and rose to drain
The mother's milk, who o'er it tremulous
Stood licking its reviving limbs with joy.
Behold, my son! said Adam, how from evil
Springs good!

Lucifer. What didst thou answer?

Cain. Nothing; for

He is my father: but I thought, that 't were

A better portion for the animal

Never to have been stung at all, than to Purchase renewal of its little life

With agonies unutterable, though

Dispall'd by antidotes.

Lucifer. But as thou saidst

Of all beloved things thou lovest her

Who shared thy mother's milk, and giveth hers

Unto thy children—

Cain. Most assuredly:

What should I be without her?

Lucifer. What am I?

Cain. Dost thou love nothing?

Lucifer. What does thy God love?

Cain. All things, my father says; but I confess

I see it not in their allotment here.

Lucifer. And, therefore, thou canst not see if I

love

Or no, except some vast and general purpose,

To which particular things must make like snows.

Cain. Shows! what are they?

Lucifer. Be happier in not knowing

What thy remoter offspring must encounter;

But bask beneath the clime which knows no winter.

Cain. But dost thou not love something like thyself?

Lucifer. And dost thou love thyself?

Cain. Yes, but love more

What makes my feelings more endurable,

And is more than myself, because I love it.

Lucifer. Thou lovest it because 't is beautiful,

As was the apple in thy mother's eye;

And when it ceases to be so, thy love

Will cease, like any other appetite.

Cain. Cease to be beautiful! how can that be?

Lucifer. With time.

Cain. But time has pass'd, and hitherto

Even Adam and my mother both are fair:

Not fair like Adah and the seraphim—

But very fair.

Lucifer. All that must pass away

In them and her.

Cain. I'm sorry for it; but Cannot conceive my love for her the less.

And when her beauty disappears, methinks

He who creates all beauty will lose more

Than me in seeing perish such a work.

Lucifer. I pity thee who lovest what must perish.

Cain. And I thee who lovest nothing.

Lucifer. And thy brother—

Sits he not near thy heart?

Cain. Why should he not?

Lucifer. Thy father loves him well—so does thy

God.

Cain. And so do I.

Lucifer. 'T is well and meetly done.

Cain. Meekly!
 Lucifer. He is the second born of flesh,
 And is his mother's favorite.
 Cain. Let him keep
 Her favor, since the serpent was the first
 To win it.
 Lucifer. And his father's?
 Cain. What is that
 To me? show I not love that which all love?
 Lucifer. And the Jehovah—the indulgent Lord,
 And bounteous planter of barr'd Paradise—
 He, too, looks smilingly on Abel.
 Cain. I
 Ne'er saw him, and I know not if he smiles.
 Lucifer. But you have seen his angels.
 Cain. Rarely.
 Lucifer. But Sufficiently to see they love your brother:
 His sacrifices are acceptable.
 Cain. So be they! wherefore speak to me of this?
 Lucifer. Because thou hast thought of this ere
 now.
 Cain. And if I have thought, why recall a thought that—(he pauses, as agitated)—Spirit!
 Here we are in thy world: speak not of mine.
 Thou hast shown me wonders: thou hast shown me those
 Mighty pre-Adamites who walk'd the earth
 Of which ours is the wreck; thou hast pointed out
 Myriads of stary worlds, of which our own
 Is the dim and remote companion, in Infinity of life: thou hast shown me shadows
 Of that existence with the dreaded name
 Which may be brought us—Death; thou hast shown me much—
 But not all: show me where Jehovah dwells,
 In his especial Paradise,—or thine.
 Where is it?
 Lucifer. Here, and o'er all space.
 Cain. But ye
 Have some allotted dwelling—as all things;
 Clay has its earth, and other worlds their tenants;
 All temporary breathing creatures their Peculiar element; and things which have Long ceased to breathe our breath, have theirs, thou sayst;
 And the Jehovah and thyself have thine—
 Ye do not dwell together?
 Lucifer. No, we reign
 Together; but our dwellings are asunder.
 Cain. Would there were only one of yel perchance
 An unity of purpose might make union
 In elements which seem now jarr'd in storms.
 How came ye, being spirits, wise and infinite,
 To separate? Are ye not as brethren in
 Your essence, and your nature, and your glory?
 Lucifer. Art thou not Abel's brother?
 Cain. We are brethren,
 And so we shall remain; but were it not so,
 Is spirit like to flesh? can it fall out?
 Infinity with immortality?
 Jarring and turning space to misery—
 For what?
 Lucifer. To reign.
 Cain. Did ye not tell me that
 Ye are both eternal?
 Lucifer. Yes!
 Cain. And what I have seen,
 You bide immensity, is boundless?
 Lucifer. Ay.
 Cain. And cannot ye both reign then?—is there
 not
 Enough?—why should ye differ?
 Lucifer. We both reign.
 Cain. But one of you makes evil.
 Lucifer. Which?

Cain.
 If thou canst do man good, why dost thou not?
 Lucifer. And why not he who made? I cannot
 not;
 Ye are his creatures, and not mine.
 Cain. Then I cannot
 His creatures, as thou sayst we are, or show me
 Thy dwelling, or his dwelling.
 Lucifer. I could show thee
 Both; but the time will come thou shalt see one
 Of them for evermore.
 Cain. And why not now?
 Lucifer. Thy human mind hath scarcely grasp to gather
 The little I have shown thee into Cain
 And clear thought: and thou wouldst go on aspiring
 To the great double Mysteries! the two Principles!
 And gaze upon them on their secret thrones!
 Dust! limit thy ambition; for to see
 Either of these would be for thee to perish!
 Cain. And let me perish, as I see them!
 Lucifer. These
 The son of her who snatch'd the apple speaks!
 But thou wouldst only perish, and not see things,
 That sight is for the other state.
 Cain. Of death?
 Lucifer. That is the prelude.
 Cain. Then I stand in awe,
 Now that I know it leads to something definite.
 Lucifer. And now I will convey thee to thy world
 Where thou shalt multiply the race of Adam—Eat, drink, toil, tremble, laugh, weep, sleep, and Cain. And to what end have I toiled thus?
 Which thou hast shown me?
 Lucifer. Didst thou not Knowledge? And have I not, in what I have Taught thee to know thyself?
 Cain. Alas! I know
 Nothing.
 Lucifer. And this should be the human
 Of knowledge, to know mortal nature's
 name;
 Bequeath that science to thy children, and
 'T will spare them many tortures.
 Cain. Hast
 Thou speak'd it proudly; but thyself, I think,
 Hast a superior.
 Lucifer. No! by heaven, which holds
 Holds, and the abyss, and the incalculable
 Of works and life, which I hold with mine,
 I have a victor—true; but no superior.
 Homage he has from all—but none from me.
 I battle it against him, as I battled
 In highest heaven. Through all elements
 And the unfathomable gulfs of Hades,
 And the infinity of endless ages,
 All, all, will I dispute! And would by
 And star by star, and universe by universe,
 Shall tremble in the balance, till the great
 Conflict shall cease, if ever it shall cease,
 Which it ne'er shall, till he or I be conquered.
 And what can quench our immortality,
 Or mutual and irrevocable hate?
 He as a conqueror will call the conqueror
 Evil; but what will be the good he gains?
 Were I the victor, his works would be
 The only evil ones. And you, ye now
 And scarce born mortals, what have you
 To you already, in your little world?
 Cain. But few! and some of them
 Lucifer.
 With me, then, to thine earth, and
 Of his celestial boons to you and yours.
 Evil and good are things in their
 And not made good or evil by the

But if he gives you good—so call him; if Evil springs from him, do not name it mine,
 Till ye know better its true fount; and judge
 Not by words, though of spirits, but the fruits
 Of your existence, such as it must be.
 One good gift has the fatal apple given—
 Your reason:—let it not be over-aw'd

By tyrannous threats to force you into faith
 'Gainst all external sense and inward feeling;
 Think and endure,—and form an inner world
 In your own bosom—where the outward fails;
 So shall you nearer be the spiritual
 Nature, and war triumphant with your own.
[They disappear.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Earth near Eden, as in Act I.

Enter Cain and Adah.

Adah. Hush! tread softly, Cain.

Cain. I will: but wherefore?

Adah. Our little Knoch sleeps upon you bed

Of heaven, beneath the cypress.

Cain. Cypress! 'tis

A gloomy tree, which looks as if it mourn'd
 O'er what it shadows; wherefore didst thou chooseit
 For our child's canopy?Adah. Because its branches
 Shut out the sun like night, and therefore seem'd
 Fitting to shadow slumber.

Cain. Ay, the last—

And longest; but no matter—lead me to him.

[They go up to the child.]

How lovely he appears, his little cheeks,

In their pure incarnation, lying with
 The rose leaves strewn beneath them.

Adah. And his lips, too,

How beautifully parted! No; you shall not

Kiss him, at least not now; he will awake soon.

His hour of midday rest is nearly over;

But it were pity to disturb him till

'T is closed.

Cain. You have said well; I will contain

My heart till then. He smiles, and sleeps!—Sleep on,
 And smile, thou little, young inheritorOf a world scarce less young: sleep on, and smile!
 Thine are the hours and days when both are cheeringAnd innocent! thou hast not pick'd the fruit—
 Thou know'st not thou art naked! Must the timeCome thou shalt be answer'd for sins unknown,
 Which were not thine nor mine? But now sleep on!His cheeks are reddening into deeper smiles,
 And shining lids are trembling o'er his longlashes, dark as the cypress which waves o'er them;
 Half open, from beneath them the clear bluelaughs out, although in slumber. He must dream—
 Of what? Of Paradise!—Ay! dream of it,My disinherited boy! 'T is but a dream;
 For never more thyself, thy sons, nor fathers,

Shall walk in that forbidden place of joy!

Adah. Dear Cain! Nay, do not whisper o'er our son

Such melancholy yearnings o'er the past:

Why wilt thou always mourn for Paradise?

Can we not make another?

Cain. Where?

Adah. Here, or

Where'er thou wilt: where'er thou art, I feel not

The want of this so much regretted Eden.

Have I not thee, our boy, our sire, and brother,

And Elisha—our sweet sister, and our Eve,
 To whom we owe so much besides our birth?

Cain. Yes—death, too, is amongst the debts we owe her.

Adah. Cain! that proud spirit, who withdrew

(his power)

Hath left thee still deeper. I had hoped

That wandering which thou hast beheld,

The maddest of past and present worlds,

Should have led thy mind into the calm

Of a contented knowledge; but I see
 Thy guide hath done thee evil: still I thank him,
 And can forgive him all, that he so soon
 Hath given thee back to us.

Cain. So soon?

Adah. 'T is scarcely

Two hours since ye departed: two long hours

To me, but only hours upon the sun.

Cain. And yet I have approach'd that sun, and seen

Worlds which he once shone on, and never more

Shall light; and worlds he never lit: methought

Years had roll'd o'er my absence.

Adah. Hardly hours.

Cain. The mind then hath capacity of time,

And measures it by that which it beholds,

Pleasing or painful: little or almighty.

I had beheld the immemorial works

Of endless beings; skirr'd extinguish'd worlds;

And, gazing on eternity, methought

I had borrow'd more by a few drops of ages

From its immensity; but now I feel

My littleness again. Well said the spirit,

That I was nothing!

Adah. Wherefore said he so?

Jehovah said not that.

Cain. No: he contents him

With making us the nothing which we are;

And after flattering dust with glimpses of

Eden and immortality, resolves

It back to dust again—for what?

Adah. Thou know'st—

Even for our parents' error.

Cain. What is that

To us? they sinn'd, then let them die!

Adah. Thou hast not spoken well, nor is that thought

Thy own, but of the spirit who was with thee.

Would I could die for them, so they might live!

Cain. Why, so say I—provided that one victim

Might satiate the insatiable of life,

And that our little rosy sleeper there

Might never taste of death nor human sorrow,

Nor hand it down to those who spring from him.

Adah. How know we that some such atonement

one day

May not redeem our race?

Cain. By sacrificing

The harmless for the guilty? what atonement

Were there? why, we are innocent: what have we

Done, that we must be victims for a deed

Before our birth, or need have victims to

Atono for this mysterious, nameless sin—

If it be such a sin to seek for knowledge?

Adah. Alas! thou sinnest now, my Cain: thy words

Sound impious in mine ears.

Cain. Then leave me!

Adah. Never,

Though thy God left thee.

Cain. Say, what have we here?

Adah. Two altars, which our brother Abel made

During thine absence, whereupon to offer

A sacrifice to God on thy return.

Cain. And how knew he, that I would be so ready

With the burnt offerings, which he daily brings
With a meek brow, whose base humility
Shows more of fear than worship, as a bribe
To the Creator?

Adam. Surely, 'tis well done.

Cain. One altar may suffice; I have no offering.

Adam. The fruits of the earth, the early, beautiful

Blossom and bud, and bloom of flowers and fruits,
These are a goodly offering to the Lord,
Given with a gentle and a contrite spirit.

Cain. I have toil'd, and till'd, and sweaten in the sun

According to the curse:—must I do more?

For what should I be gentle? for a war
With all the elements are they will yield
The bread we eat? For what must I be grateful?

For being dust, and grovelling in the dust,
Till I return to dust? If I am nothing—

For nothing shall I be as hypocrite,
And seem well pleased with pain? For what should

I be contrite? for my father's sin, already Expiate with what we all have undergone,
And to be more than expiated by

The ages prophesied, upon our seed.
Little seems our young blooming sleeper, there,
The germ of an eternal misery

To myriads is within him! better 't were
I snatch'd him in his sleep, and dash'd him 'gainst
The rocks, than let him live to—

Adam. Oh, my God!
Touch not the child—my child! my child! Oh,

Cain!

Cain. Fear not! for all the stars, and all the power

Which sways them, I would not accost you infant
With ruder greeting than a father's kiss.

Adam. Then, why so awful in thy speech?

Cain. I said,
'T were better that he ceased to live, than give Life to so much of sorrow as he must Endure, and, harder still, bequeath; but since

That saying jars you, let us only say—

'T were better that he never had been born.

Adam. Oh, do not say so! Where were then the joys,

The mother's joys of watching, nourishing,
And loving him? Soft! he awakes. Sweet Enoch!

[She goes to the child.]

Oh, Cain! look on him; see how full of life,
Of strength, of bloom, of beauty, and of joy,
How like to me—how like to thee, when gentle,

For then we are all alike; is't not so, Cain?

Mother, and sire, and son, our features are Reflected in each other; as they are

In the clear waters, when they are gentle, and
When thou art gentle. Love us, then, my Cain!

And love thyself for our sakes, for we love thee.

Look! how he laughs and stretches out his arms,
And opens wide his blue eyes upon thine,

To hail his father; while his little form
Flutters as wing'd with joy. Talk not of pain!

The childless cherubs well might envy thee
The pleasures of a parent! Bless him, Cain!

As yet he hath no words to thank thee, but
His heart will, and thine own too.

Cain. Bless thee, boy!

If that a mortal blessing may avail thee,
To save thee from the serpent's curse!

Adam. It shall.

Surely a father's blessing may avert
A reptile's subtlety.

Cain. Of that I doubt;

But bless him as 'twere thine.

Adam. Our brother comes.

Cain. Thy brother Abel.

Enter Abel.

Abel. Welcome, Cain! My brother!
The peace of God be on thee.

Cain. Abel, hail!

Abel. Our sister tells me that thou hast been wandering,

In high communion with a spirit, far Beyond our wonted range. Was he of those

We have seen and spoken with, like to our father?

Cain. No.

Abel. Why then commune with him? he may be
A foe to the Most High.

Cain. And friend to man.

Has the Most High been so—if so you term him?

Abel. Term him! your words are stings to—my brother.

My sister Adah, leave us for awhile—
We mean to sacrifice.

Adam. Farewell, my Cain!

But first embrace thy son. May his soft eyes,
And Abel's pious ministry, recall these
To peace and holiness!

[Exit Adam, with her child.]

Abel. I know not.

Abel. Nor what thou hast seen?

Cain. The immortal, the unbounded, the omnipotent,
The overpowering mysteries of space—
The innumerable worlds that were and are—
A whirlwind of such overwhelming things
Suns, moons, and earths, upon their vast spheres

Singing in thunder round me, as have many Unfit for mortal converse; leave me, Abel.

Abel. Thine eyes are flashing with ungodly
light—

Thy cheek is dash'd with an unnatural hue—
Thy words are fraught with an unnatural
What may this mean?

Cain. It means—I pray thee, leave me
Abel. Not till we have pray'd and sacrificed together.

Cain. Abel, I pray thee, sacrifice alone—
Jehovah loves thee well.

Abel. Both well, I have.

Cain. But thee the better: I care not for Thou art fitter for his worship than I am.

Revere him, then—but let it be alone—
At least, without me.

Abel. Brother, I should
Deserve the name of our great father's son.

If, as my elder, I revered thee not,
And in the worship of our God call'd not
On thee to join me, and precede me in
Our priesthood—'t is thy place.

Cain. But I have

Asserted it.

Abel. The more my grief; I pray thee,
To do so now; thy soul seems laboring,
Some strong delusion; it will calm thee.

Cain. Nothing can calm me more. Cain! may I Know I what calm was in the soul, when I have seen the elements still'd. My brother,
me!

Or let me leave thee to thy pious purpose.

Abel. Neither; we must perform together.

Spurn me not.

Cain. If it must be so—

What shall I do?

Abel. Choose one of them.

Cain. Choose for me: they to me are
And stone.

Abel. Choose thou!

Cain. I have chosen.
Abel. 'Tis the highest,
 And smiles thee, as the elder. Now prepare Thine offerings.

Cain. Where are thine?
Abel. Behold them here—
 The firstlings of the flock, and fat thereof—
 A shepherd's humble offering.
Cain. I have no flocks;
 I am a tiller of the ground, and must Yield what it yieldeth to my toil—its fruit:

[He gathers fruits.
They dress their altars, and kindle a flame upon them.
Abel. My brother, as the elder, offer first
 Thy prayer and thanksgiving with sacrifice.

Cain. No—I am new to this; lead thou the way,
 And I will follow—as I may.

Abel (kneeling). Oh, God!
 Who made us, and who breathed the breath of life
 Within our nostrils, who hath blessed us,
 And spared, despite our father's sin, to make
 His children all lost, as they might have been,
 Had not thy justice been so temper'd with
 The mercy which is thy delight, as to Accord a pardon like a Paradise,
 Compared with our great crimes:—Sole Lord of light,
 Of good, and glory, and eternity!
 Without whom all were evil, and with whom Nothing can err, except to some good and
 Of thine omnipotent benevolence—
 Inscrutable, but still to be fulfill'd—
 Accept from out thy humble first of shepherds'
 First of the first-born flocks—an offering,
 In itself nothing—as what offering can be Aught unto thee?—but yet accept it for
 The thanksgiving of him who spreads it in
 The face of thy high heaven, bowing his own
 Even to the dust, of which he is, in honor
 Of thee, and of thy name, for evermore!

Cain (standing erect during this speech). Spirit!
 Whate'er or whose'er thou art,
 Omnipotent, it may be—and, if good,
 Shows in the exemption of thy deeds from evil;
 Jehovah upon earth! and God in heaven!
 And it may be with other names, because Thine attributes seem many, as thy works:—
 If thou must be propitiated with prayers,
 Take them! If thou must be induced with altars,
 And soften'd with a sacrifice, receive them!
 Two beings here erect them unto thee.
 If thou lov'st blood, the shepherd's shrine, which smokes

On my right hand, hath shed it for thy service
 In the first of his flock, whose limbs now reek
 In imaginary incense to thy skies;
 Or if the sweet and blooming fruits of earth,
 And tulkier seasons, which the unstain'd turf
 I spread them on now offers in the face
 Of the broad sun which ripen'd them, may seem Good to thee, inasmuch as they have not
 Suffer'd in limb or life, and rather form
 A sample of thy works, than supplication
 To look on ours! If a shrine without victim,
 And altar without gore, may win thy favor,
 Look as it! and for him who dresseth it,
 He is—as thou mad'st him; and seeks nothing
 Which must be won by kneeling; if he's evil,
 Strike him! thou art omnipotent, and may'st—
 For what can be oppose? If he be good,
 Strike him, or spare him, as thou wilt! since all Beings upon thee, and good and evil seem
 To rest no power themselves, save in thy will;
 And whether that be good or ill I know not,
 I am omnipotent, nor fit to judge
 Of any, but merely to endure

Its mandate; which thus far I have endured.

[The fire upon the altar of Abel kindles into a column of the brightest flame, and ascends to heaven; while a whirlwind throws down the altar of Cain, and scatters the fruits abroad upon the earth.

Abel (kneeling). Oh, brother, pray! Jehovah's wrath with thee.

Cain. Why so?

Abel. Thy fruits are scatter'd on the earth.
Cain. From earth they came, to earth let them
 return;

Their seed will bear fresh fruit there ere the summer:

Thy burnt flesh-off'ring prospers better; see How heav'n links up the flames, when thick with blood!

Abel. Think not upon my offering's acceptance,
 But make another of thine own before
 It is too late.

Cain. I will build no more altars,

Nor suffer any.—

Abel (rising). Cain! what meanest thou?
Cain. To cast down yon vile flatterer of the clouds,
 The smoky harbinger of thy dull pray'rs—
 Thine altar, with its blood of lambs and kids,
 Which fed on milk, to be destroy'd in blood.

Abel (opposing him). Thou shalt not—add not impious works to impious
 Words! let that altar stand—'tis hallow'd now
 By the immortal pleasure of Jehovah
 In his acceptance of the victims.

Cain.

[His!
His pleasure! what was his high pleasure in
The fumes of scorching flesh and smoking blood,
To the pain of the bleating mothers, which Still yearn for their dead offspring? or the pangs
Of the sad ignorant victims underneath
Thy pious knife? Give way! this bloody record
Shall not stand in the sun, to shame creation!

Abel. Brother, give back! thou shalt not touch my altar

With violence: if that thou wilt adopt it,
 To try another sacrifice, 'tis thine.

Cain. Another sacrifice! Give way, or else

That sacrifice may be—

Abel.

Cain. What mean'st thou? Give—
 Give way!—thy God loves blood!—then look to it:—
 Give way, ere he hath more!

Abel. In his great name,
 I stand between thee and the shrine which hath
 Had his acceptance.

Cain. If thou lov'st thyself,
 Stand back till I have strew'd this turf along
 Its native soil:—else—

Abel (opposing him). I love God far more Than life.

Cain (striking him with a brand, on the temples, which he snatches from the altar). Then take thy life unto thy God,

Since he loves lives.

Abel (falls). What hast thou done, my brother?

Cain. Brother!

Abel. Oh, God! receive thy servant, and Forgive his slayer, for he knew not what
 He did—Cain, give me—give me thy hand; and tell
 Poor Zillah—

Cain (after a moment's stupefaction). My hand!
 'Tis all red, and with—

What?

[A long pause.—Looking slowly round.
 Where art I? alone! Where's Abel? where Cain? Can it be that I am he? My brother,
 Awake!—why liest thou so on the green earth?
 'Tis not the hour of slumber—why so pale?
 What, hast thou!—thou wert full of life this morn

Abel! I pray thee, mock me not! I amote
Too fiercely, but not fatally. Ah, why
Wouldst thou oppose me? This is mockery;
And only done to daunt me:—'t was a blow—
And but a blow. Stir—stir—nay, only stir!
Why, so—that's well!—thou breath'st! breathe upon me!

Oh, God! Oh, God!
Abel (very faintly). What's he who speaks of God?
Cain. Thy murderer.

Abel. Then may God forgive him! Cain,
Comfort poor Zillah!—she has but one brother
Now. [Abel dies.]

Cain. And I none!—Who makes me brotherless?
His eyes are open! then he is not dead!
Death is like sleep; and sleep shuts down our lids.
His lips, too, are apart; why then he breathes!
And yet I feel it not.—His heart!—his heart!
Let me see, doth it beat? methinks—No!—no!
This is a vision, else I am become
The native of another and worse world.
The earth swims round me;—what is this?—'t is wet;

(Puts his hand to his brow, and then looks at it.)
And yet there are no dew! 'T is blood—my blood—
My brother's and my own! and shed by me!
Then what have I further to do with life,
Since I have taken life from my own flesh?
But he cannot be dead!—Is silence death?
No; he will wake; then let me watch by him.
Life cannot be so slight, as to be quench'd
Thus quickly!—be hath spoken to me since—
What shall I say to him?—My brother!—No:
He will not answer to that name; for brethren
Smite not each other. Yet—yet—speak to me.
Oh! for a word more of that gentle voice,
That I may bear to hear my own again!

(Enter Zillah.)

Zillah. I heard a heavy sound; what can it be?
'T is Cain; and watching by my husband. What Doth thou there, brother? Doth he sleep? Oh, heav'n!

What means this paleness, and you stream?—No, no!
It is not blood; for who would shed his blood?
Abel! what's this?—who hath done this? He moves not;

He breathes not; and his hands drop down from mine
With stony lifelessness! Ah! cruel Cain!
Why cam'st thou not in time to save him from
This violence? Whatever hath assail'd him,
Thou wert the stronger, and shouldst have stepp'd in Between him and aggression! Father!—Eve!
Adam!—come hither! Death is in the world!

(Exit Zillah, calling on her Parents, etc.)

Cain (solus). And who hath brought him there?—

I—who abhor
The name of Death so deeply, that the thought
Empoison'd all my life, before I knew
His aspect—I have led him here, and giv'n
My brother to his cold and still embrace,
As if he would not have asserted his Inexorable claim without my aid.
I am awake at last—a dreary dream
Had madden'd me;—but he shall ne'er awake!

(Enter Adam, Eve, Adam, and Zillah.)

Adam. A voice of woe from Zillah brings me
here.—

What do I see?—'T is true!—My son! my son!
Woman, behold the serpent's work, and thine!

(To Eve.)

Eve. Oh! speak not of it now: the serpent's fangs
Are in my heart. My best beloved, Abel!
Jehovah! this is punishment beyond
A mother's sin, to take him from me!

Adam.

Who,

Or what hath done this deed?—speak, Cain, thou
thou
Wert present; was it some more hostile angel,
Who walks not with Jehovah? or some wild
Brute of the forest?

Eve. Ah! a livid light
Breaks through, as from a thunder-cloud! yon blood,
Massy and bloody! snatch'd from off the altar,
And black with smoke, and red with—

Adam. Speak, my son!
Speak, and assure us, wretched as we are,
That we are not more miserable still.

Adam. Speak, Cain! and say it was not thou?
Eve. It was.

I see it now—he hangs his gruffly head,
And covers his ferocious eyes with hands
Incarnadine.

Adam. Mother, thou dost him wrong—
Cain!—clear thee from this horrible accusation,
Which grief wrings from my parent.

Eve. Hear, Jehovah!
May the eternal serpent's curse be on him!
For he was fitter for his seed than ours.
May all his days be desolate. May—

Adam. Hold!

Curse him not, mother, for he is thy son—
Curse him not, mother, for he is my brother,
And my betroth'd.

Eve. He hath left thee no brother—
Zillah no husband—no son! for thus
I curse him from my sight for evermore!
All bonds I break between us, as he broke
That of his nature, in you—Oh, death! death!
Why didst thou not take me, who first insear'd him?
Why didst thou not so now?

Adam. Eve! let not this,
Thy natural grief, lead to impiety!
A heavy doom was long foretold to us;
And now that it begins, let it be borne
In such sort as may show our God that we Are faithful servants to his holy will.

Eve (pointing to Cain). His will! the will yon incarnate spirit

Of death, whom I have brought upon the world
To strew it with the dead. May all the comfort
Of life be on him! and his agonies Drive him forth o'er the wilderness. Him we

From Eden, till his children do by him
As he did by his brother! May the sword
And wings of fiery cherubim pursue him

By day and night—snakes spring up in his path
Earth's fruits be ashes in his mouth—the serpent
On which he lays his head to sleep be strew'd

With scorpions! May his dreams be of his woe
His waking a continual dread of death!
May the clear rivers turn to blood as he

Slopes down to stain them with his rage!
May every element abate or change to him!
May he live in the pangs which others die

And death itself wax something worse than life!
To him who first acquainted him with death!
Hence, fratricide! henceforth that word

Through all the coming myriads of men
Who shall abhor thee, though thou wert
May the grass wither from thy feet! the vine
Deny thee shelter! earth a home! the dust

A grave! the sun his light! and heaven his
A grave! the sun his light! and heaven his

Adam. Cain! get thee forth; we dwell together.

Depart! and leave the dead to me—I am
Henceforth alone—we never must meet more.

Adam. Oh, part not with him thus, my son!
not

Add thy deep curse to Eve's upon his head!
Adam. I curse him not: his spirit be Come, Zillah!

Zillah. I must watch my husband's come.
Adam. We will return again, when he is gone
Who hath provided for us this dread office.
Come, Zillah!

Zillah. Yet one kiss on yon pale clay,
And those lips once so warm—my heart! my heart!
[Embraces Adam and Zillah, weeping.]
Adam. Cain! thou hast heard, we must go forth.

I am ready,
So shall our children be. I will bear Enoch,
And you his sister. Ere the sun declines
Let us depart, nor walk the wilderness
Under the cloud of night.—Nay, speak to me,
To me—thine own.

Cain. Leave me!
Adam. Why, all have left thee.
Cain. And wherefore lingerest thou? Dost thou not fear

To dwell with one who hath done this? I fear Adam. Nothing except to leave thee, much as I shrink from the deed which leaves thee brotherless.
I must not speak of this—it is between thee
And the great God.

A Voice from within exclaims, Cain! Cain!
Adam. Hear'st thou that voice?
The Voice within. Cain! Cain!
Adam. It soundeth like an angel's tone.

Enter the Angel of the Lord.

Angel. Where is thy brother Abel?
Cain. Am I then

My brother's keeper?
Angel. Cain! what hast thou done?
The voice of thy slain brother's blood cries out,
Even from the ground, unto the Lord!—Now art

thou
Cursed from the earth, which open'd late her mouth
To drink thy brother's blood from thy rash hand.
Henceforth, when thou shalt till the ground, it shall not

Yield thee her strength: a fugitive shalt thou
Be from this day, and vagabond on earth!
Adam. This punishment is more than he can bear.
Behold, thou driv'st him from the face of earth,
And from the face of God shall he be hid.

A fugitive and vagabond on earth,
Till he come to pass, that whose findeth him
Shall slay him.

Cain. Would they could! but who are they Shall slay me? Where are these on the lone earth,
As yet unpeopled?

Angel. Thou hast slain thy brother,
And who shall warrant thee against thy son?
Adam. Angel of Light! be merciful, nor say
That this poor aching breast now nourishes
A murderer in my boy, and of his father.

Angel. Then he would but be what his father is.
Did not the milk of Eve give nutriment
To him thou now seest so bearnear'd with blood?
The fratricide might well engender parricide.—
But it shall not be so—the Lord thy God
And mine commandeth me to set his seal
On Cain, so that he may go forth in safety.

Who slayeth Cain, a sevenfold vengeance shall
Be taken on his head. Come hither!

Cain. What
Wouldst thou with me?
Angel. To mark upon thy brow
Remission from such deeds as thou hast done.

Cain. No, let me die!
Angel. It must not be.
[The Angel sets the mark on Cain's brow.]
It burns

My brow, but nought to that which is within it.
—He looks upon the mark. Let me meet it as I may.

Angel. Stern hast thou been and stubborn from the womb.

As the ground thou must henceforth till; but he Thou slew'st was gentle as the flocks he tended.

Cain. After the fall too soon was I begotten;
Ere yet my mother's mind subsided from
The serpent, and my sire still mourn'd for Eden.
That which I am, I am; I did not seek

For life, nor did I make myself; but could I
With my own death redeem him from the dust—
And why not so? let him return to-day,
And I lie ghastly! so shall be restored
By God the life to him he loved; and taken
From me a being I ne'er loved to bear.

Angel. Who shall heal murder? what is done is done;
Go forth! fulfill thy days! and be thy deeds
Unlike the last! [The Angel disappears.]

Adam. He's gone, let us go forth;
I hear our little Enoch cry within
Our bower.

Cain. Ah! little knows he what he weeps for!
And I who have shed blood cannot shed tears!
But the four rivers* would not cleanse my soul.
Think'st thou my boy will bear to look on me?

Adam. If I thought that he would not, I would—Cain (interrupting her). No,
No more of threats: we have had too many of them;
Go to our children: I will follow thee.

Adam. I will not leave thee lonely with the dead;
Let us depart together.

Cain. Oh! thou dead
And everlasting witness! whose unsinking
Blood darkens earth and heaven! what thou now art
I know not! but if thou seest what I am,

I think thou wilt forgive him, whom his God
Can ne'er forgive, nor his own soul.—Farewell!
I must not, dare not touch what I have made thee.
I, who sprung from the same womb with thee, drain'd
The same breast, clasp'd thee often to my own,
In fondness brotherly and boyish, I
Can never meet thee more, nor even dare

To do that for thee, which thou shouldst have done
For me—compose thy limbs into their grave—
The first grave yet dug for mortality.
But who hath dug that grave? Oh, earth! Oh,
earth!

For all the fruits thou hast render'd to me, I
Give thee back this.—Now for the wilderness.
[Adam stoops down and kisses the body of Abel.]

Adam. A dreary, and an early doom, my brother,
Has been thy lot! Of all who mourn for thee,
I alone must not weep. My office is Henceforth to dry up tears, and not to shed them:

But yet, of all who mourn, none mourn like me,
Not only for myself, but him who slew thee.
Now, Cain! I will divide thy burden with thee.

Cain. Eastward from Eden will we take our way:
'T is the most desolate, and suits my steps.

Adam. Lead! thou shalt be my guide, and may our God
Be thine! Now let us carry forth our children.

Cain. And he who lieth there was childless. I
Have dried the fountain of a gentle race,
Which might have graced his recent marriage
couch,

And might have tamper'd this stern blood of mine,
Uniting with our children Abel's offspring!
Oh, Abel!

Adam. Peace be with him!
Cain. But with me!—
[Exeunt.]

* The "four rivers" which flowed round Eden, and consequently the only waters with which Cain was acquainted upon earth.

WERNER; OR, THE INHERITANCE:

A Tragedy.

TO THE ILLUSTRIOUS GOETHE,

BY ONE OF HIS HONORABLE ADMIRERS, THE TRAGEDY

Is Dedicated.

PREFACE.

THE following drama* is taken entirely from the "German's Tale, Krutimer," published many years ago in Let's Canterbury Tales; written (I believe) by two sisters, of whom one furnished only this story and another, both of which are considered superior to the remainder of the collection. I have adopted the characters, plan, and even the language, of many parts of this story. Some of the characters are modified or altered, a few of the names changed, and one character, Ida of Sculenheim, added by myself: but in the rest the original is chiefly followed. When I was young (about fourteen, I think), I first read this tale, which made a deep impression upon me; and may, indeed, be said to contain the germ of much that I have since written. I am not sure that it ever was very popular; or, at any rate, its popularity has since been eclipsed by that of other great writers in the same department. But I have generally found that those who had read it, agreed with me in their estimate of the singular power of mind and conception which it developed. I should also add conception, rather than execution; for the story might, perhaps, have been developed with greater advantage. Amongst those whose opinions against it mine upon this story, I could mention some very high names: but it is not necessary, nor indeed of any use; for every one must judge according to his own feelings. I merely refer the reader to the original story, that he may see to what extent I have borrowed from it; and am not unwilling that he should find much greater pleasure in perusing it; than the drama which is founded upon its contents.

I had begun a drama upon this tale so far back as 1816 (the first I ever attempted, except one at thirteen years old, called "Urie and Ithina," which I had some chance to burn), and had nearly completed an act, when I was interrupted by circumstances. This is now long amongst my papers in England; but as it has not been found, I have rewritten the first, and added the subsequent acts.

The whole is neither intended, nor in any degree adapted, for the stage.†

Pisa, February, 1822.

* The tragedy of "Werner" was begun at Pisa, December 18, 1821, completed January 30, 1822, and published in London in the November following. The reviews of "Werner" were, without exception, unfavorable. One critique of the time thus opens:—

"Who could be so absurd as to think, that a dramatist has no right to make free with other people's fables? On the contrary, we are quite aware that that particular species of genius which is exhibited in the construction of plots, never at any period flourished in England. We all know that Shakespeare himself took his stories from Italian novels, Danish sagas, English Chronicles, Plutarch's Lives—from anywhere rather than from his own invention. But did he take the Hamlet, or Juliet, or Richard the Third, or Antony and Cleopatra, from any of these foreign sources? Did he not find, in the noblest sense of the word, all the characters of his pieces? Who dreams that any old Italian novelist, or ballad-maker, could have formed the imagination of such a creature as Juliet? Who dreams that the Hamlet of Shakespeare, the princely enthusiast, the melancholy philosopher, that spirit reared even to pain, that most incomprehensible and unapproachable of all the creations of human genius, is the same being, in any thing but the name, with the rough, strong-hearted, bloody-handed Amleth of the north? Who is there that supposes Goethe to have taken the character of Mr Faust from the nursery rhymes and penny pamphlets about the devil and Doctor Faustus? Or who, to come nearer home, imagines that Lord Byron himself found Mr Sardanapalus in Dionysius of Halicarnassus?

"But here Lord Byron has invented nothing—absolutely nothing. There is not one incident in his play, not only the most trivial, that is not to be found in Miss Let's story, occurring exactly in the same manner, brought about by exactly the same agents, and producing exactly the same effects on the plot. And then as to the characters—not only is every one of them to be found in "Krutimer," but every one is to be found there more fully and powerfully developed. Indeed, but for the preparations which we had received from our old familiarity with Miss Let's own admirable work, we rather incline to think that we should have been unable to comprehend the plot of her noble imitation, or indeed, in several of what seem to be meant for his most characteristic delineations. The fact is, that this undervaluing character of this humble fidelity of imitation, is a thing so perfectly foreign in any thing worthy the name of literature, that we can find no one who has not read the Canterbury Tales with his eyes open, the least conception of what it amounts to.

"Those who have never read Miss Let's book, will, however, be pleased with this production; for, in truth, the story is one of the most powerfully conceived, one of the most picturesque, and at the same time instructive stories that we are acquainted with.

"Krutimer, or the German's Tale," possesses, moreover, the yet clearer, as to its structure, strength of character, and admirable contrast of characters; and, above all, the most lively interest, blended with sad sublimity to the most affecting of moral lessons."

* Werner is, however, the only one of Lord Byron's dramas that proved successful in representation.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

Werner.
Ulric.
Stralsheim.
Idenstein.

Gaber.
Fritz.
Henriek.
Eric.
Arnsheim.
Meister.

Rodolph.
Ludwig.

WOMEN.

Josephine.
Ida Stralsheim.

SCENE.—Partly on the Frontier of Silesia, and partly in Hohenlof Castle, near Prague. TIME.—The Close of the Thirty Years' War.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Hall of a decayed Palace near a small Town on the Northern Frontier of Silesia—the Night tempestuous.

Werner and Josephine his wife.

Jos. My love, be calmer!

Wer. I am calm.

Jos. To me—

Yes, but not to thyself: thy pace is hurried,
And no one walks a chamber like to ours
With steps like thine when his heart is at rest.
Were it a garden, I should deem thee happy,
And stepping with the bee from flower to flower;
But here!

Wer. 'T is chill; the tapestry lets through
The wind to which it waves: my blood is frozen.

Jos. Ah, no!

Wer. (smiling). Why! wouldst thou have it so?
I would

Have it a healthful current.

Wer. Let it flow

Until 't is split or check'd—how soon, I care not.

Jos. And am I nothing in thy heart?

Wer. All—all.
Jos. Then canst thou wish for that which must break mine?

Wer. (approaching her slowly). But for thee I had been—no matter what,

But much of good and evil; what I am,
Thou knowest; what I might or should have been,
Thou knowest not: but still I love thee, nor shall aught divide us.

[Werner walks on abruptly, and then approaches Josephine.]

The storm of the night

Perhaps affects me; I am a thing of feelings,
And have of late been sickly, as, alas!
Thou know'st by sufferings more than mine, my love!

In watching me.

Jos. To see thee well is much—

To see thee happy—

Wer. Where hast thou seen such?

Let me be wretched with the rest!

Jos. But think

How many in this hour of tempest shiver
Beneath the biting wind and heavy rain,
Whose every drop bows them down nearer earth,
Which hath no chamber for them save beneath
Her surface.

Wer. And that's not the worst: who cares
For chambers? rest is all. The wretches whom Thou namest—ay, the wind howls round them, and
The dull and dropping rain saps in their bones
The creeping marrow. I have been a soldier,
A hunter, and a traveller, and am
A beggar, and should know the thing thou talk'st
of.

Jos. And art thou not now shelter'd from them
all?

Wer. Yes. And from these alone.

Jos. And that is something.

Wer. True—to a peasant.

Jos.

Should the nobly born

Be thankful for that refuge which their habits
Of early delicacy render more

Needful than to the peasant, when the ebb

Of fortune leaves them on the shoals of life?

Wer. It is not that, thou know'st it is not: we

Have borne all this, I'll not say patiently,

Except in thee—but we have borne it.

Jos.

Well?

Wer. Something beyond our outward sufferings (though

These were enough to gnaw into our souls)

Hath stung me oft, and, more than ever, now,

When, but for this untoward sickness, which

Seized me upon this desolate frontier, and

Hath wasted, not alone my strength, but means,

And leaves us—no! this is beyond me!—but

For this I had been happy—thou been happy—

The splendor of my rank sustain'd—my name—

My father's name—been still upheld; and, more

Than those—

Jos. (abruptly). My son—our son—our Ulric,

Been clasp'd again in these long-empty arms,

And all a mother's hunger satisfied.

Twelve years! he was but eight then:—beautiful

He was, and beautiful he must be now,

My Ulric! my adored!

Wer.

I have been full oft

The chase of Fortune; now she hath o'erthrown

My spirit where it cannot turn at bay,—

Sick, poor, and lonely.

Jos.

Lonely! my dear husband?

Wer. Or worse—involving all I love, in this Far worse than solitude. Alone, I had died,

And all been over in a nameless grave.

Jos. And I had not outlived thee; but pray take Comfort! We have struggled long; and they who strive

With Fortune win or weary her at last,

So that they find the goal, or cease to feel

Further. Take comfort,—we shall find our boy.

Wer. We were in sight of him, of everything

Which could bring compensation for past sorrow—

And to be baffled thus!

Jos.

We are not baffled.

Wer. Are we not penniless?

Jos.

We ne'er were wealthy.

Wer. But I was born to wealth, and rank, and power;

Enjoy'd them, loved them, and, alas! abused them,

And forfeited them by my father's wrath,

In my o'er-fervent youth; but for the abuse

Long sufferings have atoned. My father's death

Left the path open, yet not without snare.

This cold and creeping kinsman, who so long

Kept his eye on me, as the snake upon

The fluttering bird, hath ere this time outstept me,

Become the master of my rights, and lord

Of that which lifts him up to princes in Dominion and domain.

Jos.

Who knows? our son

May have return'd back to his grandsire, and
Even now uphold thy rights for thee?

Wer. 'T is hopeless.
Since his strange disappearance from my father's Entailing, as it were, my sins upon Himself, no tidings have reveal'd his course.
I parted with him to his grandsire, on
The promise that his anger would stop short
Of the third generation; but Heaven seems
To claim her stern prerogative, and visit
Upon my boy his father's faults and follies.

Jos. I must hope better still,—at least we have yet
Baffled the long pursuit of Stralensheim.

Wer. We should have done, but for this fatal sickness;

More fatal than a mortal malady,
Because it takes not life, but life's sole solace;
Even now I feel my spirit girt about
By the snares of this avaricious fiend;—
How do I know he hath not track'd us here?

Jos. He does not know thy person; and his spies,
Who so long watch'd thee, have been left at Ham-burgh.

Our unexpected journey, and this change
Of name, leaves all discovery far behind:
None hold us here for aught save what we seem.

Wer. Save what we seem! save what we are—sick beggars.

Even to our very hopes.—Ha! ha! Alas!

That bitter laugh! Wer. Who would read in this form
The high soul of the son of a long line?

Who, in this garb, the heir of princely lands?

Who, in this sunken, sickly eye, the pride

Of rank and ancestry? In this worn cheek

And famine-bellow'd brow, the lord of halls

Which daily feast a thousand vassals?

Jos. Ponder'd not thus upon these worldly things,

My Werner! when you deign'd to choose for bride

The foreign daughter of a wandering exile.

Wer. An exile's daughter with an outcast son

Were a fit marriage; but I still had hopes

To lift thee to the state we both were born for.

Your father's house was noble, though decay'd;

And worthy by its birth to match with ours.

Jos. Your father did not think so, though 'twas

noble;

But had my birth been all my claim to match

With thee, I should have deem'd it what it is.

Wer. And what is that in thine eyes?

Jos. Has done in our behalf,—nothing. All which it

Wer. How,—nothing?

Jos. Or worse; for it has been a canker in Thy heart from the beginning: but for this,

We had not felt our poverty but as

Millions of myriads feel it, cheerfully;

But for these phantoms of thy feudal fathers,

Thou mightst have earn'd thy bread, as thousands earn it;

Or, if that seem too humble, tried by commerce,

Or other civic means, to amend thy fortunes.

Wer. (ironically). And been an Hanseatic burgher?

Excellent!

Jos. What'er thou mightst have been, to me thou

art

What no state high or low can ever change,

My heart's first choice;—which chose thee, knowing neither

Thy birth, thy hopes, thy pride; nought, save thy sorrows:

While they last, let me comfort or divide them:

When they end, let mine and with them, or thee!

Wer. My better angel! such I have ever found —in thee;

This rashness, or this weakness of my temper,
Ne'er rais'd a thought to injure thee or thine.
Thou didst not mar my fortunes: my own madness
In youth was such as to unmake an empire,
Had such been my inheritance; but now,
Chasten'd, subdued, outworn, and taught to know
Myself—to lose this for our son and thee!
Trust me, when, in my two-and-twentieth spring,
My father barr'd me from my fathers' home,
The last sole scion of a thousand sires
(For I was then the last), it hurt me less
Than to behold my boy and my boy's mother
Excluded in their innocence from what
My faults deserved—exclusion; although them
My passions were all living serpents, and Twined like the Gorgon's round me.

[A loud knocking is heard.

Back!

A knocking!

Jos. Who can it be at this lone hour? We have Few visitors.

Wer. And poverty hath none.

Save those who come to make it poorer still.

Well, I am prepared.

[Werner puts his hand into his bosom, as if in search for some weapon.

Jos. Oh! do not look so. I

Will to the door. It cannot be of import

In this lone spot of wintry desolation:—

The very desert seven men from mankind.

[She goes to the door.

Enter Idenstein.

Iden. A fair good evening to my father's house

And worthy—What's your name, my friend?

Wer. Am not

Not afraid to demand it?

Iden. Not afraid?

Egad! I am afraid. You look as if

I ask'd for something better than your name,

By the face you put on it.

Wer. Better, sir!

Iden. Better or worse, like matrimony: what Shall I say more? You have been a guest this month

Here in the prince's palace—(to be sure,

His highness had resign'd it to the ghosts

And rats these twelve years—but 't is still a palace)—

I say you have been our lodger, and as yet

We do not know your name.

Wer. My name is Werner.

Iden. A goodly name, a very worthy name,

As e'er was gilt upon a trader's board:

I have a cousin in the lazaretto

Of Hamburg, who has got a wife who bears

The same. He is an officer of trust,

Surgeon's assistant (hoping to be surgeon),

And has done miracles! the way of business.

Perhaps you are related to my relative.

Wer. To yours?

Jos. Oh, yes; we are, but distant.

[Aside to Werner.]

Cannot you humor the dull gossip till

We learn his purposes?

Iden. Well, I'm glad of that.

I thought so all along, such natural yearning

Play'd round my heart:—blood is not water.

And so let's have some wine, and drink up

Our better acquaintance: relatives should be

Friends.

Wer. You appear to have drunk enough

And if you had not, I've no wine to offer.

Else it were yours: but this you know,

know:

You see I am poor, and sick, and will not

That I would be alone; but to your knowledge

What brings you here?

Iden. Why, what should bring me here?
Wer. I know not, though I think that I could guess.

That which will send you hence.

Jos. (aside). Patience, dear Werner!

Iden. You don't know what has happen'd, then?

Jos. How should we?

Iden. The river has overflowed.

Jos. Alas! we have known

That to our sorrow for these five days; since

It keeps us here.

Iden. But what you don't know is,

That a great personage, who fain would cross

Against the stream and three postillions' wishes,

Is drown'd below the ford, with five post-horses,

A monkey, and a mastiff, and a valet.

Jos. Poor creatures! are you sure?

Iden. Yes, of the monkey,

And the valet, and the cattle; but as yet

We know not if his excellency's dead

Or no; your noblemen are hard to drown,

As it is fit that men in office should be;

But what is certain is, that he has swallow'd

Enough of the Oder to have burst two peasants:

And now a Saxon and Hungarian traveller,

Who, at their proper peril, snatch'd him from

The whirling river, have sent on to crave

A lodging, or a grave, according as

He may turn out with the live or dead body.

Jos. And where will you receive him? here, I hope.

If we can be of service—say the word.

Iden. Here? no; but in the prince's own apartment.

As fits a noble guest:—'tis damp, no doubt,

Not having been inhabited these twelve years;

But then he comes from a much damper place,

So scarcely will catch cold in 't, if he be

Still liable to cold—and if not, why

He'll be worse lodged to-morrow: nevertheless,

I have order'd fire and all appliances

To be got ready for the worst—that is,

As can he should survive.

Jos. Poor gentlemen!

Hope he will, with all my heart.

Wer. Intendant,

Have you not learn'd his name?

Iden. My Josephine,

(Aside to his wife.)

(Exit Josephine.)

Iden. I'll lift this fool.

Iden. His name? oh Lord!

Who knows if he hath now a name or no?

'Tis time enough to ask it when he's able

To give an answer, or if not, to put

His name upon his epitaph. Methought

Just now you chid me for demanding names?

Wer. True, true, I did so; you say well and wisely.

Enter Gabor.

Gab. If I intrude, I crave—

Iden. Oh, no intrusion.

This is the palace; this a stranger like yourself; I pray you make yourself at home:

But where's his excellency? and how fares he?

Gab. Weakly and wearily, but out of peril:

He passed to change his garments in a cottage

(where I don't'd mine for these, and came on hither),

And has almost recover'd from his drenching.

He will be here anon.

Iden. What ho, there! bustle!

Without there, Herman, Weiburg, Peter, Conrad!

(Gives directions to different servants who enter.)

A nobleman sleeps here to-night—see that

All is in order in the damask chamber—

Keep up the stove—I will myself to the cellar—

And Madame Idenstein (my consort, stranger)

Shall furnish forth the bed apparel; for,

To say the truth, they are marvellous scant of this

Within the palace precincts, since his highness

Left it some dozen years ago. And then

His excellency will sup, doubtless?

Gab. Faith!

I cannot tell; but I should think the pillow

Would please him better than the table after

His soaking in your river: but for fear

Your viands should be thrown away, I mean

To sup myself, and have a friend without

Who will do honor to your good cheer with

A traveller's appetite.

Iden. But are you sure

His excellency—But his name: what is it?

Gab. I do not know.

Iden. And yet you saved his life.

Gab. I help'd my friend to do so.

Iden. Well, that's strange,

To save a man's life whom you do not know.

Gab. Not so; for there are some I know so well,

I scarce should give myself the trouble.

Iden. Pray,

Good friend, and who may you be?

Gab. By my family,

Hungarian.

Iden. Which is call'd?

Gab. It matters little.

Iden. (aside). I think that all the world are grown anonymous,

Since no one cares to tell me what he's call'd!

Pray, has his excellency a large suite?

Gab. Sufficient.

Iden. How many?

Gab. I did not count them.

We came up by mere accident, and just

In time to drag him through his carriage window.

Iden. Well, what would I give to save a great

man!

No doubt you'll have a swingeing sum as recompense.

Gab. Perhaps.

Iden. Now, how much do you reckon on?

Gab. I have not yet put up myself to sale:

In the mean time, my best reward would be

A glass of your Hockheimer—a green glass,

Wreath'd with rich grapes and bacchanal devices,

Overflowing with the oldest of your vintage;

For which I promise you, in case you e'er

Run hazard of being drown'd (although I own

It seems, of all deaths, the least likely for you),

I'll pull you out for nothing. Quick, my friend,

And think, for every bumper I shall quaff,

A wave the less may roll above your head.

Iden. (aside). I don't much like this fellow—close and dry.

He seems, two things which suit me not: however,

Wine he shall have; if that unlock him not,

I shall not sleep to-night for curiosity.

(Exit Idenstein.)

Gab. (to Werner). This master of the ceremonies is

The intendant of the palace, I presume:

'Tis a fine building, but decay'd.

Wer. The apartment

Design'd for him you rescued will be found

In lister order for a sickly guest.

Gab. I wonder then you occupied it not,

For you seem delicate in health.

Wer. (quickly). Sir!

Gab. Pray

Excuse me; have I said ought to offend you?

Wer. Nothing: but we are strangers to each other.

Gab. And that 'tis the reason I would have unless so:

I thought our bustling host without had said

You were a chance and passing guest, the counter-

part

Of me and my companions.

Wer. Very true.

Gab. Then, as we never met before, and never,

It may be, may again encounter, why,
I thought to cheer up this old dungeon here
(At least to me) by asking you to share
The fare of my companions and myself.

Wer. Pray, pardon me; my health—

Gab. Even as you please.
I have been a soldier, and perhaps am blunt
In bearing.

Wer. I have also served, and can Requite a soldier's greeting.

Gab. In what service?
The Imperial?

Wer. (quickly, and then interrupting himself). I commanded—no—I mean
I served; but it is many years ago.
When first Bohemia raised her banner 'gainst
The Austrian.

Gab. Well, that's over now, and peace
Has turn'd some thousand gallant hearts adrift
To live as they best may; and to say truth,
Some take the shortest.

Wer. What is that?

Gab. What's that?
They lay their hands on. All Silesia and Lusatia's woods are tenanted by bands
Of late troops, who levy on the country
Their maintenance: the Chateaux must keep
Their castle walls—beyond them 't is but doubtful
Travel for your rich count or full-blown baron.
My comfort is that, wander where I may,
I've little left to lose now.

Wer. And I—nothing.

Gab. That's harder still. You say you were a soldier.

Wer. I was.

Gab. You look one still. All soldiers are
Or should be comrades, even though enemies.
Our swords when drawn must cross, our engines aim (While level'd) at each other's hearts; but when
A truce, a peace, or what you will, remits
The steel into its scabbard, and lets sleep
The spark which lights the matchlock, we are brethren.

You are poor and sickly—I am not rich, but healthy;
I want for nothing which I cannot want;
You seem devoid of this—will share it?

[Gabor pulls out his purse.

Wer. Who
Told you I was a beggar?

Gab. You yourself,
In saying you were a soldier during peace-time.

Wer. (looking at him with suspicion). You know me not?

Gab. I know no man, not even Myself: how should I then know one I ne'er
Beheld till half an hour since?

Wer. Sir, I thank you.
Your offer's noble were it to a friend,
And not unkind as to an unknown stranger,
Though scarcely prudent; but no less I thank you.
I am a beggar in all save his trade;

And when I beg of any one, it shall be
Of him who was the first to offer what Few can obtain by asking. Pardon me. [Exit.

Gab. (solus). A goodly fellow by his looks, though worn,

As most good fellows are, by pain or pleasure,
Which tear life out of us before our time;
I scarce know which most quickly; but he seems To have seen better days, as who has not
Who has seen yesterday!—But here approaches
Our sage intendant, with the wine: however,
For the cup's sake I'll bear the cupbearer.

Enter Idenstein.

Iden. 'T is here! the supernaculum! twenty years
Of age, if 't is a day.

Gab.

Which speech makes
Young women and old wine; and 't is great pity,
Of two such excellent things, increase of young,
Which still improves the one, should spoil the other.

Fill full—Here's to our hostess!—our fair wife!
[Takes the glass.]

Iden. Fair!—Well, I trust your taste in wine is equal

To that you show for beauty: but I pledge you Nevertheless.

Gab. Is not the lovely woman
I met in the adjacent hall, who, with
An air, and port, and eye, which would have better
Bescom'd this palace in its brightest days
(Though in a garb adapted to its present Abandonment), return'd my salutation—
Is not the same your spouse?

Iden. I would she were
But you're mistaken—that 's the stranger's wife.

Gab. And by her aspect she might be a princess.
Though time hath touch'd her too, she still retains Much beauty, and more majesty.

Iden. And that
Is more than I can say for Madame Idenstein.

At least in beauty: as for majesty,
She has some of its properties which might
Be spared—but never mind!

Gab. I don't. But who May be this stranger? He too hath a bearing Above his outward fortunes.

Iden. There I differ.

He's poor as Job, and not so patient; but
Who he may be, or what, or sight of him,
Except his name (and that I only learn'd
To-night), I know not.

Gab. But how came he here?

Iden. In a most miserable old calèche,
About a month since, and immediately
Fell sick, almost to death. He should have died.

Gab. Tender and true!—but why?

Iden. Why, what is Without a living? He has not a stiver.

Gab. In that case, I much wonder that a person
Of your apparent prudence should admit
Guests so forlorn into this noble mansion.

Iden. That's true; but pity, as you know, ~~can~~ make

One's heart commit these follies; and besides,
They had some valuables left at that time,
Which paid their way up to the present hour.
And so I thought they might as well be lodged
Here as at the small tavern, and I gave them
The run of some of the oldest palace rooms.
They served to air them, at the least as long
As they could pay for firewood.

Gab. Poor souls!

Iden. Exceeding poor.

Gab. And yet unused to poverty.

If I mistake not. Whither were they going?

Iden. Oh! Heaven knows where, unless to itself.

Some days ago that look'd the likeliest journey
For Werner.

Gab. Werner! I have heard the name.
But it may be a feign'd one.

Iden. Like enough!
But hark! a noise of wheels and voices, and
A blaze of torches from without. As sure,
As destiny, his excellency's come.

I must be at my post: will you not join me
To help him from his carriage, and present
Your humble duty at the door?

Gab. I draw
From out that carriage when he would
His barony or county to repel

The rushing river from his gurgling throat.
He has valets now enough: they stood aloof then,
Hacking their dripping ears upon the shore,
All roaring "Help!" but offering none; and as
For duty (as you call it)—I did mine them,
Now do yours. Hence, and bow and cringe him
before!

Idea. I ringe!—but I shall lose the opportunity—
Plagues take it! he'll be here, and I not there!
[Exit Idenstein hastily.]

Re-enter Werner.

Wer. (to himself). I heard a noise of wheels and voices. How
All sounds now jar me! (Perceiving Gabor.) Still here! Is he not
A spy of my purest? His frank offer
So suddenly, and to a stranger, wore
The aspect of a secret enemy;
For friends are slow at such.

Gab. Sir, you seem rapt;
And yet the time is not akin to thought.
These old walls will be noisy soon. The baron,
Or count (or whatever this half-drown'd noble
May be), for whom this desolate village and
Its lone inhabitants show more respect
Than did the elements, is come.

Idea. (without). This way—
This way, your excellency!—have a care,
The staircase is a little gloomy, and
Somewhat decay'd; but if we had expected
So high a guest—Pray take my arm, my lord!

Enter Stralenheim, Idenstein, and Attendants—partly his own, and partly Retainers of the Domain of which Idenstein is Intendant.

Stral. I'll rest me here a moment.
Idea. (to the servants). Ho! a chair!
Instantly, kneave! [Stralenheim sits down.]

Wer. (aside). 'Tis he!
Stral. I'm better now.

Who are these strangers?
Idea. Please you, my good lord,
One says he is no stranger.

Wer. (aloud and hastily). Who says that?
[They look at him with surprise.]

Idea. Why, no one spoke of you, or to you!—but Here's one his excellency may be pleased
To recognize. [Pointing to Gabor.]

Gab. I seek not to disturb
His noble memory.

Stral. I apprehend
This is one of the strangers to whose aid
I owe my rescue. Is not that the other?
[Pointing to Werner.]

My state when I was succor'd must excuse
My uncertainty to whom I owe so much.

Idea. He!—no, my lord, herather wants for reason
Than can afford it. 'Tis a poor sick man,
Travel-tired, and lately risen from a bed
From whence he never dream'd to rise.

Stral. Methought
That there were two.

Gab. There were, in company;
But, in the service render'd to your lordship,
I need must say but one, and he is absent.

The chief part of whatever aid was render'd
Was his: it was his fortune to be first.

My will was not inferior, but his strength
And youth outstripp'd me; therefore do not waste
Four thanks on me. I was but a glad second
To a soldier principal.

Stral. Where is he?

An Athen. My lord, he tarried in the cottage
where

that company rested for an hour, and will be here to-morrow.

Stral. Till
That hour arrives, I can but offer thanks,
And then—

Gab. I seek no more, and scarce deserve
So much. My comrade may speak for himself.

Stral. (fixing his eyes upon Werner: then aside.)
It cannot be! and yet he must be look'd to.

'Tis twenty years since I beheld him with These eyes; and, though my agents still have kept
Their on him, policy has held aloof

My own from his, not to alarm him into Suspicion of my plan. Why did I leave
At Hamburg those who would have made assurances

If this be or no? I thought, ere now,
To have been lord of Siegendorf, and parted
In haste, though even the elements appear
To fight against me, and this sudden flood
May keep me prisoner here till—

[He pauses, and looks at Werner: then resumes.]

Be watch'd. If it is he, he is so changed,
His father, rising from his grave again,
Would pass him by unknown. I must be wary:
An error would spoil all.

Idea. Your lordship seems Pensive. Will it not please you to pass on?

Stral. 'Tis past fatigue which gives my weigh'ddown spirit

An outward show of thought. I will to rest.

Idea. The prince's chamber is prepared, with all
The very furniture the prince used when
Last here, in its full splendor.

[Aside.] Somewhat tatter'd,
And devilish damp, but fine enough by torchlight;
And that's enough for your right noble blood
Of twenty quarterings upon a hatchment;

So let their bearer sleep 'neath something like one
Now, as he one day will for ever lie.

Stral. (rising and turning to Gabor). Good night, good people! Sir, I trust to-morrow
Will find me apt to requite your service.

In the meantime I crave your company
A moment in my chamber.

Gab. I attend you.

Stral. (after a few steps, pauses, and calls Werner). Friend!

Wer. Sir!

Idea. Sir! Lord—oh Lord! Why don't you say
His lordship, or his excellency? Pray,
My lord, excuse this poor man's want of breeding:
He hath not been accusom'd to admission
To such a presence.

Stral. (to Idenstein). Peace, intendant!

Idea. Oh!

I am dumb.

Stral. (to Werner). Have you been long here?

Wer. Long?

Stral. I sought

An answer, not an echo.

Wer. You may seek

Both from the walls. I am not used to answer
Those whom I know not.

Stral. Indeed! Nevertheless,
You might reply with courtesy to what
Is ask'd in kindness.

Wer. When I know it such,
I will requite—that is, reply—in unison.

Stral. The intendant said you had been detain'd by sickness—

If I could aid you—journeying the same way?

Wer. (quickly). I am not journeying the same way.

Stral. How know ye

That, are you know my route?

Wer. Because there is

But one way that the rich and poor must tread
Together. You diverged from that dread path

Some hours ago, and I some days: henceforth
Our roads must lie asunder, though they tend
All to one home.

Stral. Your language is above

Your station.

Wer. (bitterly). Is it?

Stral. Or, at least, beyond

Your garb.

Wer. 'T is well that it is not beneath it,
As sometimes happens to the better clad.

But, in a word, what would you with me?

Stral. (startled).

Wer. Yes—you! You know me not, and question me.

And wonder that I answer not—not knowing
My inquirer. Explain what you would have,
And then I'll satisfy yourself, or me.

Stral. I knew not that you had reasons for reserve.

Wer. Many have such?—Have you none?

Stral. None which can

Interest a mere stranger.

Wer. Then forgive

The same unknown and humble stranger, if

He wishes to remain so to the man

Who can have nought in common with him.

Stral.

I will not balk your humor, though untoward;

I only meant you service—but good night!

Instantly, show the way! (To Gabor.) Sir, you will with me?

(Baron Stralenheim and Attendants, Idenstein

and Gabor.

Wer. (alone). 'T is he! I am taken in the toils.

Before

I quitted Hamburg, Giulio, his late steward,
Inform'd me, that he had obtain'd an order
From Brandenburg's elector, for the arrest
Of Krutze (such the name I then bore), when I came upon the frontier; the free city
Alone preserved my freedom—till I left
Its walls—fool that I was to quit them! But I deem'd this humble garb, and route obscure,
Had baffled the slow hounds in their pursuit.
What's to be done? He knows me not by person,
Nor could aught, save the eye of apprehension,
Have recognized him, after twenty years,
We met so rarely and so coldly in Our youth. But those about him! Now I can Divine the frankness of the Hungarian, who
No doubt is a mere tool and spy of Stralenheim's,
To sound and to secure me. Without means!
Sick, poor—begirt too with the flooding rivers,
Impassable even to the wealthy, with
All the appliances which purchase modes
Of overpowering peril, with men's lives—
How can I hope! An hour ago methought
My state beyond despair; and now, 't is such,
The past seems paradise. Another day,
And I'm detected,—on the very eve
Of honors, rights, and my inheritance,
When a few drops of gold might save me still
In favoring an escape.

(Enter Idenstein and Fritz in conversation.

Fritz. Immediately.

Iden. I tell you 't is impossible.

Fritz.

Be tried, however; and if one express

Fall, you must send on others, till the answer

Arrives from Frankfurt, from the commandant.

Iden. I will do what I can.

Fritz.

To spare no trouble; you will be repaid

Tenfold.

Iden. The Baron is retired to rest?

Fritz. He hath thrown himself into an easy chair

Beside the fire, and slumbers; and has order'd

He may not be disturb'd until eleven.

When he will take himself to bed.

Iden.

An hour is past I'll do my best to serve him.

Fritz. Remember!

Iden. The devil take these great men! They Think all things made for them. Now hence!

Rouse up some half a dozen shuffling venal

From their scant pallets, and, as port of

Their lives, despatch them o'er the river towards

Frankfort. Methinks the baron's own experience

Some hours ago might teach him follow-footing:

But no, "it must," and there's an end. How now

Are you there, Mynheer Werner?

Wer.

Your noble guest right quickly. You have left

Iden. And seems to like that none should sleep beside

Here is a packet for the commandant

Of Frankfort, at all risks and all expense;

But I must not lose time: Good night!

Wer.

So, so, it thickens! Ay, "the commandant"

This tallies well with all the prior steps

Of this cool, calculating fiend, who walks

Between me and my father's house. He doubt

He writes for a detachment to convey me

Into some secret fortress.—Sooner than

This—

(Werner looks around, and catches up a bag

lying on a table in a recess.

Now I am master of myself at least.

Hark!—footsteps! How do I know that Stralheim

Will wait for even the show of that authority,

Which is to overshadow usurpation?

That he suspects me 't is certain. I'm alone;

He with a numerous train. I wait; he darts

In gold, in numbers, rank, authority.

I nameless, or involving in my name

Destruction, till I reach my own domain;

He full-blown with his titles, which impose

Still further on these obscure petty burgs

Than they could do elsewhere. Hark! I remember still!

I'll to the secret passage, which communicated

With the—No! all is silent—'t was my fancy!

Still as the breathless interval between

The flash and thunder:—I must hush my soul

Amidst its perils. Yet I will retire,

To see if still be unexplored the passage

I wot of: it will serve me as a den

Of secrecy for some hours, at the worst.

(Werner draws a panel, and retires, closing it after him.

Enter Gabor and Josephine.

Gab. Where is your husband?

Joe. Here, I thought: I left him

Not long since in his chamber. But these women

Have many outlets, and he may be gone

To accompany the Intendant.

Gab. Have you seen him?

Put many questions to the Intendant on

The subject of your lord, and, to be plain,

I have my doubts if he means well.

Joe. Ah!

What can there be in common with the great

And wealthy baron, and the unknown Werner?

Gab. That you know best.

Joe. Or, if it were me, how

Come you to stir yourself in his behalf?

Gab. I help'd to save him, as is perill; but I did not pledge myself to serve him to Oppression. I know well these notions

Their thousand modes of tramping on

I have proved them; and my spirit

I find them practicing against the weak :—
This is my only motive.

Jos. It would be
Not easy to persuade my consent of
Your good intentions.

Geb. Is he so suspicious?
Jos. He was not once; but time and troubles have Made him what you behold.

Geb. I'm sorry for it.
Suspicion is a heavy armor, and
With its own weight impedes more than protects.
Good night! I trust to meet with him at daybreak.
(Exit Gabor.)

Re-enter Idenstein and some Peasants. Josephine retires up the Hall.

First Peasant. But if I'm drowned?
Iden. Why, you will be well paid for't,
And have risk'd more than drowning for as much,
I doubt not.

Second Peasant. But our wives and families?
Iden. Cannot be worse off than they are, and may Be better.

Third Peasant. I have neither, and will venture.
Iden. That's right. A gallant cause, and fit to be
A soldier. I'll promote you to the ranks
In the prince's body-guard—if you succeed :
And you shall have besides, in sparkling coin,
Two thalers.

Third Peasant. No more!
Iden. Out upon your avarice!
Can that low vice alloy so much ambition?

I tell thee, fellow, that two thalers in Small change will subdivide into a treasure.
Do not five hundred thousand heroes daily
Risk lives and souls for the title of one thaler?
When had you half the sum?

Third Peasant. Never—but ne'er
The less I must have three.

Iden. Have you forgot
Whose vessel you were born, knave?

Third Peasant. No—the prince's,
And not the stranger's.

Iden. Strah! In the prince's Absence, I am sovereign; and the baron is My intimate connection;—"Cousin Idenstein!
(Quoth he) you'll order out a dozen villains."
And so, you villains! troop—march—march I say;
And if a single dog's ear of this packet
Be sprinkled by the Oder—look to it!
For every page of paper, shall a hide
Of yours be stretch'd as parchment on a drum,
Like Zieka's skin, to beat alarm to all
Refractory vassals, who cannot effect
Impossibilities.—Away, ye earth-worms!
(Exit, driving them out.)

Jos. (coming forward). I fain would avenge these scenes, too oft repeated.

Of feudal tyranny o'er petty victims;
I cannot aid, and will not witness such.
Even here, in this remote, unnamed, dull spot,
The dimmest in the district's map, exist
The violence of wealth in poverty
O'er something poorer still—the pride of rank
In servitude, o'er something still more servile;

And vice in misery affecting still
A tatter'd splendor. What a state of being!
In Tuscany, my own dear sunny land,
Our nobles were but citizens and merchants,
Like Cosmo. We had evils, but not such
As these: and our all-ripe and gushing valleys
Made poverty more cheerful, where each herb
Was in itself a meal, and every vine
Rain'd, as it were, the beverage which makes glad
The heart of man; and the ne'er unfelt sun
(But rarely clouded, and when clouded, leaving
His warmth behind in memory of his beams)
Makes the worn mantle, and the thin robe, less Oppressive than an emperor's jewell'd purple.
But, here! the despots of the north appear
To imitate the lee-wind of their clime,
Searching the shivering vessel through his rage,
To wring his soul—as the bleak elements
His form. And 't is to be amongst these sovereigns
My husband pants! and such his pride of birth—
That twenty years of usage, such as no
Father born in a humble state could nerve
His soul to persecute a son withal,
Hath changed no atom of his early nature;
But I, born nobly also, from my father's Kindness was taught a different lesson. Father!
May thy long-tried and now rewarded spirit
Look down on us and our so long desired
Ulric! I love my son, as thou didst me!
What's that? Thou, Werner! can it be? and thus?

Enter Werner hastily, with the knife in his hand, by the secret panel, which he closes hurriedly after him.

Wern. (not at first recognising her). Discover'd!
then I'll stab—(recognising her.) Ah! Josephine,

Why art thou not at rest? What rest? My God!
Jos. What doth this mean?

Wern. (showing a rouleau). Here's gold—gold,
Josephine,

Will rescue us from this detested dungeon.
Jos. And how obtain'd?—that knife!

Wern. 'T is bloodless—yet.

Away! we must to our chamber.

Jos. But whence comest thou?
Wern. Ask not! but let us think where we shall go—

This—this will make us way—(showing the gold)—
I'll fit them now.

Jos. I dare not think thee guilty of dishonor.

Wern. Dishonor!

Jos. I have said it.

Wern. Let us hence.

'T is the last night, I trust, that we need pass here.

Jos. And not the worst, I hope.

Wern. Hope! I make sure.

But let us to our chamber.

Jos. Yet one question—

What hast thou done?

Wern. (fiercely). Left one thing undone, which Had made all well: let me not think of it!

Away!
Jos. Alas, that I should doubt of thee!
(Exit.)

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the same Palace.

Enter Idenstein and Others.

Mrs. Fine doings! goodly doings! honest doings!—(entering in a prince's palace)

—(at this hour, such a din no'er was heard of.)

Frés. It hardly could, unless the rats despoil'd
The mice of a few shreds of tapestry.
Iden. Oh! that I e'er should live to see this day!
The honor of our city's gone for ever.
Frés. Well, but now to discover the delinquent:
The baron is determined not to lose
This sum without a search.

Iden. And so am I.
Frits. But whom do you suspect?
Iden. Suspect! all people
 Without—within—above—below—Heaven help me!
Frits. Is there no other entrance to the chamber?
Iden. None whatsoever.
Frits. Are you sure of that?
Iden. Certain. I have lived and served here since my birth,
 And if there were such, must have heard of such,
 Or seen it.
Frits. Then it must be some one who
 Had access to the antechamber.
Iden. Doubtless.
Frits. The man called Werner's poor!
Iden. Poor as a miser.
 But lodged so far off, in the other wing,
 By which there's no communication with
 The baron's chamber, that it can't be he.
 Besides, I bade him "good night" in the hall,
 Almost a mile off, and which only leads
 To his own apartment, about the same time
 When this burglarious, larcenous felony
 Appears to have been committed.
Frits. There's another,
 The stranger—
Iden. The Hungarian?
Frits. He who help'd
 To fish the baron from the Oder.
Iden. Not
 Unlikely. But hold—might it not have been
 One of the suite?
Frits. How? We, sir!
Iden. No—not you,
 But some of the inferior knaves. You say
 The baron was asleep in the great chair—
 The velvet chair—in his embroider'd night-gown;
 His toilet spread before him, and upon it
 A cabinet with letters, papers, and Several rouleaux of gold; of which one only
 Has disappear'd:—the door unbolted, with No difficult access to any.
Frits. Good sir,
 Be not so quick; the honor of the corps
 Which forms the baron's household's unimpeach'd
 From steward to scullion, save in the fair way
 Of speculation; such as in accounts,
 Weights, measures, larder, cellar, buttery,
 Where all men take their prey; as also in Postage of letters, gathering of rents,
 Purveying feasts, and understanding with
 The honest trades who furnish noble masters:
 But for your petty, picking, downright thievery,
 We scorn it as we do board-wages. Then
 Had one of our folks done it, he would not Have been so poor a spirit as to hazard
 His neck for one rouleau, but have swoop'd all;
 Also the cabinet, if portable.
Iden. There is some sense in that—Frits. No, sir, be sure
 'T was none of our corps; but some petty, trivial
 Picker and stealer, without art or genius.
 The only question is—Who else could have Access, save the Hungarian and yourself?
Iden. You don't mean me?
Frits. No, sir; I honor more
 Your talents—
Iden. And my principles, I hope.
Frits. Of course. But to the point: What's to be done?
Iden. Nothing—but there's a good deal to be said.
 We'll offer a reward; move heaven and earth,
 And the police (though there's none nearer than Frankfurt); post notices in manuscript
 (For we've no printer); and set by my clerk
 To read them (for few can, save he and I);
 We'll send out villains to strip beggars, and

Search empty pockets; also, to arrest
 All gipseis, and ill-clothed and sallow people.
 Prisoners we'll have at least, if not the culprit;
 And for the baron's gold—if 't is not found,
 At least he shall have the full satisfaction
 Of melting twice its substance in the raising
 The ghost of this rouleau. Here's alchemy
 For your lord's losses!
Frits. He hath found a better.
Iden. Where?
Frits. In a most immense inheritance.
 The late Count Slegendorf, his distant kinsman,
 Is dead near Prague, in his castle, and my lord
 Is on his way to take possession.
Iden. Was there
 No heir?
Frits. Oh, yes; but he has disappear'd
 Long from the world's eye, and perhaps the world.
 A prodigal son, beneath his father's ban
 For the last twenty years; for whom his sire
 Refused to kill the fatted calf; and, therefore,
 If living, he must chew the hanks still. But
 The baron would find means to silence him,
 Were he to reappear: he's politic,
 And has much influence with a certain court.
Iden. He's fortunate.
Frits. 'T is true, there is a grandson,
 Whom the late count reclaim'd from his son's hands,
 And educated as his heir; but then
 His birth is doubtful.
Iden. How so?
Frits. His sire made
 A left-hand, love, imprudent sort of marriage,
 With an Italian exile's dark-eyed daughter:
 Noble, they say, too; but no match for such
 A house as Slegendorf's. The grandsire ill
 Could brook the alliance; and could ne'er be brought
 To see the parents, though he took the son.
Iden. If he's a lad of mettle, he may yet
 Dispute your claim, and weave a web that may Puzzle your baron to unravel.
Frits. Why,
 For mettle, he has quite enough: they say,
 He forms a happy mixture of his sire
 And grandsire's qualities,—impetuous as
 The former, and deep as the latter; but
 The strangest is, that he too disappear'd
 Some months ago.
Iden. The devil he did!
Frits. Why, yes:
 It must have been at his suggestion, at
 An hour so critical as was the eve
 Of the old man's death, whose heart was broken by it.
Iden. Was there no cause assign'd?
Frits. Plenty, no doubt,
 And none perhaps the true one. Some averr'd
 It was to seek his parents; some because
 The old man held his spirit in so strictly (But that could scarce be, for he doted on him):
 A third believed he wish'd to serve in war.
 But peace being made soon after his departure,
 He might have since return'd, were that the motive;
 A fourth set charitably have surmised,
 As there was something strange and mystic in him,
 That in the wild exuberance of his nature
 He had join'd the black bands, who lay waste
 Lunatia,
 The mountains of Bohemia and Silesia,
 Since the last years of war had dwindled into
 A kind of general condottiero system
 Of bandit warfare; each troop with his chief,
 And all against mankind.
Iden. That cannot be.
 A young heir, bred to wealth and luxury,
 To risk his life and honors with disbanded
 Soldiers and desperadoes!

Fritz. Heaven best knows!
But there are human natures so allied
Unto the savage love of enterprise,
That they will seek for peril as a pleasure.
I've heard that nothing can reclaim your Indian,
Or tame the tiger, though their infancy
Were fed on milk and honey. After all,
Your Wallenstein, your Tilly and Gustavus,
Your Banner, and your Tortenson and Weimar,
Were but the same thing upon a grand scale;
And now that they are gone, and peace proclaim'd,
They who would follow the same pastime must Pursue it on their own account. Here comes
The baron, and the Saxon stranger, who
Was his chief aid in yesterday's escape,
But did not leave the cottage by the Oder
Until this morning.

Enter Stralenheim and Ulric.

Stral. Since you have refused
All compensation, gentle stranger, save
Inadequate thanks, you almost check even them,
Making me feel the worthlessness of words,
And bluish at my own barren gratitude.
They seem so niggardly, compared with what
Your courteous courage did in my behalf.—
Ulric. I pray you press the theme no further.
Stral. But
Can I not serve you? You are young, and of
That mould which throws out heroes; fair in favor;
Brave, I know, by my living now to say so;
And doubtless, with such a form and heart,
Would look into the fiery eyes of war,
As ardently for glory as you dared
An obscure death to save an unknown stranger,
In an as perilous, but opposite, element.
You are made for the service: I have served;
Have rank by birth and soldiership, and friends,
Who shall be yours. 'Tis true this pause of peace
Favors such views at present scantily;
But 't will not last, men's spirits are too stirring;
And, after thirty years of conflict, peace
Is but a petty war, as the times show us
In every forest, or a mere arm'd truce.
War will reclaim his own; and, in the mean time,
You might obtain a post, which would ensure
A higher soon, and, by my influence, fail not To rise. I speak of Brandenburg, wherein
I stand well with the elector; in Bohemia,
Like you, I am a stranger, and we are now
Upon its frontier.

Ulric. You perceive my garb
Is Saxon, and of course my service due
To my own sovereign. If I must decline
Your offer, 't is with the same feeling which Induced it.

Stral. Why, this is mere usury!
I owe my life to you, and you refuse
The acquittance of the interest of the debt,
To heap more obligations on me, till
I bow beneath them.

Ulric. You shall say so when I claim the payment.

Stral. Well, sir, since you will not—
You are nobly born?

Ulric. I have heard my kinsmen say so.

Stral. Your actions show it. Might I ask your name?

Ulric. Ulric.

Stral. Your house's?

Ulric. When I'm worthy of it,

I'll answer you.

Stral. Must probably an Austrian,
Whom these unsettled times forbid to boast
His lineage on these wild and dangerous frontiers,
Whence the name of his country is abhor'd.

(Aloud to Fritz and Idenstein.)

So, sir! how have ye sped in your researches!
Iden. Indifferent well, your excellency.

Stral. Then
I am to deem the plunderer is caught?

Iden. Humph!—not exactly.

Stral.

Iden. Or at least suspected?

Iden. Oh! for that matter, very much suspected?

Stral. Who may he be?

Iden. Why, don't you know, my lord?

Stral. How should I? I was fast asleep.

Iden.

And so
Was I, and that 's the cause I know no more
Than does your excellency.

Stral.

Iden. Dolt!

Why, if
Your lordship, being robb'd, don't recognise

The rogue; how should I, not being robb'd, identify

The thief among so many? In the crowd,

May it please your excellency, your thief looks

Exactly like the rest, or rather better:

'T is only at the bar and in the dungeon

That wise men know your felon by his features;

But I'll engage, that if seen there but once,

Whether he be found criminal or no,

His face shall be so.

Stral. (to Fritz.) Prithes, Fritz, inform me

What hath been done to trace the fellow?

Fritz. Faith!

My lord, not much as yet, except conjecture.

Stral. Besides the loss (which, I must own, affects

me

Just now materially), I needs would find

The villain out of public motives; for

So dexterous a spoiler, who could creep

Through my attendants, and so many peopled

And lighted chambers, on my rest, and smatch

The gold before my scarce-closed eyes, would soon

Leave bare your borough, Sir Intendant!

Iden. True,

If there were ought to carry off, my lord.

Ulric. What is all this?

Stral. You join'd us but this morning,

And have not heard that I was robb'd last night.

Ulric. Some rumor of it reach'd me as I pass'd

The outer chambers of the palace, but

I know no further.

Stral. It is a strange business;

The Intendant can inform you of the facts.

Iden. Most willingly. You see—

Stral. (impatiently.) Deferr your tale,

Till certain of the hearer's patience.

Iden. That

Can only be approved by proofs. You see—

Stral. (again interrupting him, and addressing Ulric.) In short, I was asleep upon a chair,

My cabinet before me, with some gold

Upon it (more than I much like to lose,

Though in part only): some ingenious person

Contrived to glide through all my own attendants,

Besides those of the place, and bore away

A hundred golden ducats, which to find

I would be vain, and there 's an end. Perhaps

You (as I still am rather faint) would add

To yesterday's great obligation, this

Though slighter, yet not slight, to aid these men

(Who seem but lukewarm) in recovering it?

Ulric. Most willingly, and without loss of time—

(To Idenstein.) Come hither, mynheer!

Iden. But so much haste bodes

Right little speed, and—

Ulric. Standing motionless

None; so let's march: we'll talk as we go on.

Iden. But—

Ulric. Show the spot, and then I'll answer you.

Fritz. I will, sir, with his excellency's leave.

Stral. Do so, and take you old ass with you.

Fritz. Hence!

Ulr. Come on, old oracle, expound thy riddle!
[Exit with Idemata and Frds.]

Siral. (solus). A stalwart, active, soldier-looking stripling,

Handsome as Hercules ere his first labor,
And with a brow of thought beyond his years
When in repose, till his eye kindles up
In answering yours. I wish I could engage him:
I have need of some such spirits near me now,
For this inheritance is worth a struggle.
And though I am not the man to yield without one,
Neither are they who now rise up between me
And my desire. The boy, they say, 's a bold one;
But he hath play'd the truant in some hour
Of freakish folly, leaving fortune to Champion his claims. That's well. The father,

where
For years I've track'd, as does the blood-hound, never

In sight, but constantly in scent, had put me
To fault; but here I have him, and that's better.
It must be he! All circumstance proclaims it;
And careless voices, knowing not the cause
Of my inquiries, still confirm it.—Yes,
The man, his bearing, and the mystery
Of his arrival, and the time; the account, too,
The attendant gave (for I have not beheld her)
Of his wife's dignified but foreign aspect;
Besides the sympathy with which we met,
As snakes and lions shrink back from each other
By secret instinct that both must be foes
Deadly, without being natural prey to either;
All—all—confirm it to my mind. However,
We'll grapple ne'ertheless. In a few hours
The order comes from Frankfort, if these waters
Rise not the higher (and the weather favors
Their quick abatement), and I'll have him safe
Within a dungeon, where he may avouch
His real estate and name; and there's no harm
done,

Should be prove other than I deem. This robbery
(Save for the actual loss) is lucky also:
He's poor, and that's suspicious—he's unknown,
And that's defenceless.—True, we have no proofs
Of guilt,—but what hath he of innocence?
Were he a man indifferent to my prospects
In other bearings, I should rather lay
The imputation on the Hungarian, who Hath something which I like not; and alone
Of all around, except the attendant, and
The prince's household and my own, had ingross
Familiar to the chamber.

Enter Gaber.

Friend, how fare you?

Gab. As those who fare well everywhere, when they

Have supp'd and slumber'd, no great matter how—
And you, my lord?

Siral. Better in rest than purse:

Mine inn is like to cost me dear.

Gab. I heard

Of your late loss; but 't is a trifle to

One of your order.

Siral. You would hardly think so,

Were the loss yours.

Gab. I never had so much
(At once) in my whole life, and therefore am not Fit to decide. But I came here to seek you.

Your couriers are turn'd back—I have outstripp'd

them,

In my return.

Siral. You!—Why?

Gab. I went at daybreak,

To watch for the abatement of the river,

As being anxious to resume my journey.

Your messengers were all check'd like myself;

223

And, seeing the case hopeless, I wait
The current's pleasure.

Siral. Would the dogs were in it!
Why did they not, at least, attempt the passage?
I order'd this at all risks.

Gab. Could you order
The Oder to divide, as Moses did
The Red Sea (scarcely redder than the sand
Of the swollen stream), and be obey'd, perhaps
They might have ventured.

Siral. I must see to it:

The knaves! the slaves!—but they shall answer for this. [Exit Siral and Frds.]

Gab. (solus). There goes my noble, feudal, suitwill'd baron!

Epitome of what brave chivalry
The preux chevaliers of the good old times
Have left us. Yesterday he would have given
His lands (if he hath any), and, still denser,
His sixteen quarterings, for as much fresh air
As would have fill'd a bladder, while he lay
Gurgling and foaming half-way through the window
Of his o'erst and water-log'd conveyance;
And now he storms at half a dozen wretches
Because they love their lives too! Yet, be 's right:
'T is strange they should, when such as he may put
them

To hazard at his pleasure. Oh, thou world!

Thou art indeed a melancholy jest!
[Exit Gaber.]

SCENE II.—The Apartment of Weener, in the Palace.

Enter Josephine and Ulr.

Jos. Stand back, and let me look on thee again!

My Ulr!—my beloved!—can it be—

After twelve years?

Ulr. My dearest mother!

Jos. Yes!

My dream is realized—how beautiful!—
How more than all I sigh'd for! Heaven, reward
A mother's thanks!—a mother's tears of joy!
This is indeed thy work!—At such an hour, too,
He comes not only as a son, but savior.

Ulr. If such a joy await me, it must double
What I now feel, and lighten from my heart
A part of the long debt of duty, not
Of love (for that was ne'er withheld)—forgive me!
This long delay was not my fault.

Jos. I know it,
But cannot think of sorrow now, and doubt
If I e'er felt it, 't is so dazzled from
My memory by this oblivious transport!—
My son!

Enter Weener.

Wer. What have we here,—more strangers?
Jos. Yes.

Look upon him! What do you see?
Wer. A stranger.

For the first time—

Ulr. (kneeling). For twelve long years, my father!

Wer. Oh, God!

Jos. He faints!

Wer. No—I am better now—

Ulr! (Embraces her.)

Ulr. My father, legendary!

Wer. (starting). Hush! hush!

The walls may hear that name!

Ulr. What then?

Wer. What then?

But we will talk of that anon. Remember,

I must be known here by the name of Weener.

Come to my arms again! Why, then,

I should have been, and was not. Josephine,

Sure 't is no father's fondness dawns on

But, had I seen that form amid ten thousand
Youth of the choicest, my heart would have chosen
This for my son!

Ulr. And yet you knew me not!

Wer. Alas! I have had that upon my soul,
Which makes me look on all men with an eye
That only knows the evil at first glance.

Ulr. My memory served me far more fondly: I
Have not forgotten aught; and oftentimes in
The proud and princely halls of—I'll not name
them,

As you may that 'tis perilous—but 't the pomp
Of your sire's feudal mansion, I look'd back
To the Bohemian mountains many a sunset,
And wept to see another day go down
O'er thee and me, with those huge hills between us.
They shall not part us more.

Wer. You are aware my father is no more?

Ulr. Oh, heavens! I left him in a green old age,
And looking like the oak, worn, but still steady
Amidst the elements, whilst younger trees
Fall fast around him. 'T was scarce three months since.

Wer. Why did you leave him?

Jos. (embracing Ulr.). Can you ask that question?

Is he not here?

Wer. True: he hath sought his parents,
And found them; but, oh! how, and in what state!

Ulr. All shall be better'd. What we have to do
Is to proceed, and to assert our rights,
Or rather yours; for I waive all, unless
Your father has disposed in such a sort
Of his broad lands as to make mine the foremost,
So that I must prefer my claim for form:
But I trust better, and that all is yours.

Wer. Have you not heard of Stralenheim?

Ulr. I saved
His life but yesterday: he's here.

Wer. You saved
The serpent who will sting us all!

Ulr. You speak
Riddles: what is this Stralenheim to us?

Wer. Every thing. One who claims our father's lands:

Our distant kinsman, and our nearest foe.

Ulr. I never heard his name till now. The count,
Indeed, spoke sometimes of a kinsman, who,
If his own line should fall, might be remotely
Involved in the succession; but his titles
Were never named before me—and what then?
His right must yield to ours.

Wer. Ay, if at Prague;
But here he is all-powerful; and has spread
Snares for thy father, which, if hitherto
He hath escaped them, is by fortune, not
By favor.

Ulr. Doth he personally know you?

Wer. No; but he guesses shrewdly at my person,
As he betray'd last night; and I, perhaps,
But owe my temporary liberty
To his uncertainty.

Ulr. I think you wrong him
(Excuse me for the phrase); but Stralenheim
Is not what you judge him, or, if so,
He owes me something both for past and present.
I saved his life, he therefore trusts in me.
He hath been plunder'd too, since he came hither
In such a manner; and as such not now
Able to trace the villain who hath robb'd him:
I have pledged myself to do so; and the business
Which brought me here was chiefly that; but I
Have found, in searching for another's dross,
My own whole treasure—you, my parents!

Wer. (appalled).

Tell me to-morrow that name of "villain"?

Who

Ulr. What

More noble name belongs to common thieves?
Wer. Who taught you thus to brand an unknown being?

With an infernal stigma?

Ulr. My own feelings
Taught me to name a ruffian from his deeds.

Wer. Who taught you, long-sought and ill-found boy! that

It would be safe for my own son to insult me?

Ulr. I named a villain. What is there in common
With such a being and my father!

Wer. Every thing!

That ruffian is thy father!

Jos. Oh, my son!

Believe him not—and yet!—(her voice fails.)

Ulr. (starts, looks earnestly at Werner, and then says slowly). And you avow it?

Wer. Ulr! before you dare despise your father,
Learn to divine and judge his actions. Young,
Bash, new to life, and rear'd in luxury's lap,
Is it for you to measure passion's force,
Or misery's temptation? Wait—not long,
It cometh like the night, and quickly!—Wait!—
Wait till, like me, your hopes are blighted—till
Sorrow and shame are handmaids of your cabin;
Famine and poverty your guests at table;
Despair your bed-fellow—then rise, but not From sleep, and judge! Should that day e'er arrive—

Should you see then the serpent, who hath coil'd
Himself around all that is dear and noble
Of you and yours, lie slumbering in your path,
With but his folds between your steps and happiness,
When he, who lives but to tear from you name,
Lands, life itself, lies at your mercy, with Chance your conductor; midnight for your mantle;
The bare knife in your hand, and earth asleep,
Even to your deadliest foe; and he, as 'twere,
Inviting death, by looking like it, while
His death alone can save you:—Thank your God
If then, like me, content with petty plunder
You turn aside—I did so.

Ulr. But—
Wer. (abruptly). Hear me!

I will not brook a human voice—scarce dare
Listen to my own (if that be human still)—
Hear me! you do not know this man—I do.
He's mean, deceitful, avaricious. You
Deem yourself safe, as young and brave; but learn
None are secure from desperation, few
From subtlety. My worst foe, Stralenheim, Housed in a prince's palace, couch'd within
A prince's chamber, lay below my knife!
An instant—a mere motion—the least impulse—
Had swept him and all fears of mine from earth.
He was within my power—my knife was raised—
Withdrawn—and I'm in his!—are you not so?
Who tells you that he knows you not? Who says
He hath not lured you here to end you? or
To plunge you, with your parents, in a dungeon?
[He pauses.]

Ulr. Proceed—proceed!

Wer. He hath ever known,
And hunted through each change of time—name—
fortune—

And why not you? Are you more versed in men?
He wound snares round me; flung along my path
Reptiles, whom, in my youth, I would have spurn'd
Even from my presence; but, in spurning now
Fill only with fresh venom. Will you be More patient? Ulr!—Ulr!—there are crimes
Made venial by the occasion, and temptations
Which nature cannot master or forbear.

Ulr. (who looks first at him, and then at Josephine).

My mother!

Wer. Ah! I thought so: you have now

Only one parent. I have lost alike
Father and son, and stand alone.

Utr.

(Werner rushes out of the chamber.)
Joe. (to Utric). Follow him not, until this storm of passion

Abates. Think 'at thou, that were it well for him,
I had not follow'd?

Utr.

I obey you, mother,
Although reluctantly. My first act shall not
Be one of disobedience.

Joe.

Oh! he is good!
Condemn him not from his own mouth, but trust
To me, who have borne so much with him, and for
him.

That this is but the surface of his soul,
And that the depth is rich in better things.

Utr. These then are but my father's principles?
My mother thinks not with him?

Joe.

Nor doth he
Think as he speaks. Alas! long years of grief
Have made him sometimes thus.

Utr.

Explain to me
More clearly, then, these claims of Stralenheim,
That, when I see the subject in its bearings,
I may prepare to face him, or at least
To extricate you from your present perils.
I pledge myself to accomplish this—but would
I had arrived a few hours sooner!

Joe.

Ay!
Hast thou but done so!

Enter Gabor and Idenstein, with Attendants.

Gab. (to Utric). I have sought you, comrade.
So this is my reward!

Utr.

What do you mean?
Gab. 'Sdeath! have I lived to these years, and for this!
(To Idenstein.) But for your age and folly, I would—

Iden.

Help!
Hands off! Touch an intendant!

Gab.

Do not think
I'll honor you so much as save your throat
From the Ravenstone* by choking you myself.

Iden.

I thank you for the respite: but there are Those who have greater need of it than me.

Utr.

Unriddle this vile wrangling, or—
Gab. At once, then,
The baron has been robb'd, and upon me
This worthy personage has deign'd to fix
His kind suspicions—me! whom he ne'er saw
Till yester evening.

Iden.

Wouldst have me suspect
My own acquaintances? You have to learn
That I keep better company.

Gab.

You shall
Keep the best shortly, and the last for all men,
The worms! you hound of malice!

Utr. (interfering).

Nay, no violence:
He's old, unarm'd—be temperate, Gabor!

Gab. (letting go Idenstein).

True:
I am a fool to lose myself because
Fools deem me knave: it is their homage.

Utr. (to Idenstein).

How
Fare you?

Iden.

Help!
I have help'd you.

Utr.

Kill him! then

Iden.

I'll say so.

Gab.

I am calm—live on!

Iden.

That's more

Than you shall do, if there be judge or judgment
In Germany. The baron shall decide!

Gab. Does he abet you in your accusation?

Iden. Does he not?

Gab.

Then next time let him go sink
Ere I go hang for snatching him from drowning.
But here he comes!

Enter Stralenheim.

Gab. (goes up to him). My noble lord, I'm here!

Stral. Well, sir!

Gab.

Have you aught with me?
What should I

Stral.

Have with you?
You know best, if yesterday's
Flood has not wash'd away your memory;

But that's a trifle. I stand here accused,

In phrases not equivocal, by you

Intendant, of the pillage of your person

Or chamber:—is the charge your own or his?

Stral.

I accuse no man.
Gab. Then you acquit me, baron?

Stral. I know not whom to accuse, or to acquit,
Or scarcely to suspect.

Gab.

But you at least
Should know whom not to suspect. I am insulted—
Oppress'd here by these menials, and I look
To you for remedy—teach them their duty!
To look for thieves at home were part of it,
If duly taught; but, in one word, if I
Have an accuser, let it be a man
Worthy to be so of a man like me.
I am your equal.

Stral.

You! Ay, sir; and, for
Aught that you know, superior; but proceed—
I do not ask for hints, and surmises,
And circumstance, and proofs: I know enough

Of what I have done for you, and what you owe me,

To have at least waited your payment rather

Than paid myself, had I been eager of Your gold. I also know, that were I even

The villain I am deem'd, the service render'd

So recently would not permit you to Pursue me to the death, except through shame.

Such as would leave your scutcheon but a blank.

But this is nothing: I demand of you

Justice upon your unjust servants, and

From your own lips a disavowal of

All sanction of their insolence: thus much

You owe to the unknown, who asks no more,

And never thought to have ask'd so much.

Stral.

This tone

May be of innocence.

Gab.

'Sdeath! who dare doubt it,

Except such villains as ne'er had it?

Stral.

Y'm

Are hot, sir.

Utr.

Must I turn an icicle

Before the breath of menials, and their master?

Stral. Utric! you know this man; I found him in Your company.

Gab.

We found you in the Oder;

Would we had left you there!

Stral.

I give you thanks, sir.

Gab. I've earn'd them; but might have earn'd more from others,

Perchance, if I had left you to your fate.

Stral. Utric! you know this man?

Gab.

No more than you do,

If he avouches not my honor.

Utr.

I

Can vouch your courage, and, as far as my Own brief connection led me, honor.

Stral.

Then

I'm satisfied.

Gab. (ironically).

Right easily, methinks.

* The Ravenstone, "Rabenstein," is the stone gable of Germany, and so called from the ravens perching on it.

What is the spell in his asseveration
More than in mine?

Stral. I merely said that I
Was satisfied—not that you are absolved.

Gab. Again! Am I accused or no?
Stral. Go to!

You war too insolent. If circumstance
And general suspicion be against you,
Is the fault mine? Is 't not enough that I
Decline all question of your guilt or innocence?

Gab. My lord, my lord, this is mere cozenage,
A vile equivocation; you well know
Your doubts are certainties to all around you—
Your looks a voice—your frowns a sentence; you
Are practicing your power on me—because
You have it; but beware! you know not whom
You strive to tread on.

Stral. Threat'st thou?

Gab. Not so much
As you accuse. You hint the basest injury,
And I retort it with an open warning.

Stral. As you have said, 'tis true I owe you something,

For which you seem disposed to pay yourself.

Gab. Not with your gold.

Stral. With bootless insolence.

[To his Attendants and Idenstein.]

You need not farther to molest this man.

But let him go his way. Ulric, good morrow!

[Exit Stralenhelm, Idenstein, and Attendants.]

Gab. (following). I'll after him and—

Ulric (stopping him). Not a step.

Gab. Who shall

Oppose me?

Ulric. Your own reason, with a moment's

Thought.

Gab. Must I bear this?

Ulric. Pshaw! we all must bear

The arrogance of something higher than

Ourselves—the highest cannot temper Satan,

Nor the lowest his vicerogents upon earth.

I've seen you brave the elements, and bear

Things which had made this silk-worm cast his skin—

And shrink you from a few sharp sneers and words?

Gab. Must I bear to be deem'd a thief? If 't were

A bandit of the woods, I could have borne it—

There's something daring in it;—but to steal

The moneys of a slumbering man!—

Ulric. It seems, then,

You are not guilty?

Gab. Do I hear aright?

You too!

Ulric. I merely ask'd a simple question.

Gab. If the judge ask'd me, I would answer

"No."

To you I answer thus. [He draws.]

Ulric (drawing). With all my heart!

Jos. Without there! Ho! help! help!—Oh, God!

here's murder!

[Exit Josephine, shrieking.]

Gabor and Ulric fight. Gabor is disarmed just as Stralenhelm, Josephine, Idenstein, etc., return.

Jos. Oh! glorious heaven! He's safe!

Stral. (to Josephine). Who's safe?

Jos. My—

Ulric (interrupting her with a stern look, and turning afterwards to Stralenhelm). Both!

How 't no great harm done.

Stral. What hath caused all this?

Ulric. You, baron, I believe; but as the effect is harmless, let it not disturb you—Gabor!

There is your sword; and when you bare it next,

Let it not be against your friends.

[Ulric pronounces the last words slowly and em- phatically in a low voice to Gabor.]

Gab. I thank you
Less for my life than for your counsel.

Stral. These

Brawls must end here.

Gab. (taking his sword). They shall. You have wrong'd me, Ulric,

More with your unkind thoughts than sword: I would

The last were in my bosom rather than

The first in yours. I could have borne you noble's

Absurd insinuations—ignorance

And dull suspicion are a part of his

Entail will last him longer than his lands.—

But I may fit him yet:—you have vanquish'd me.

I was the fool of passion to conceive

That I could cope with you, whom I had seen

Already proved by greater perils than

Rest in this arm. We may meet by and by,

However—but in friendship. [Exit Gabor.]

Stral. I will brook

No more! This outrage following up his insults,

Perhaps his guilt, has cancell'd all the little

I owed him heretofore for the so-vaunted

Aid which he added to your abler succor.

Ulric, you are not hurt?—

Ulric. Not even by a scratch.

Stral. (to Idenstein). Intendant! take your measures to secure

You fellow: I revoke my former lenity.

He shall be sent to Frankfort with an escort

The instant that the waters have abated.

Iden. Secure him! He hath got his sword again—

And seems to know the use un't; 't is his trade,

Beike;—I'm a civilian.

Stral. Fool are not

You score of vassals dogging at your heels

Enough to seize a dozen such? Hence! after him!

Ulric. Baron, I do beseech you!

Stral. I must be

Obed'y'd. No words!

Iden. Well, if it must be so—

March, vassals! I'm your leader, and will bring

The rear up: a wise general never should

Expose his precious life—on which all rests.

I like that article of war.

[Exit Idenstein and Attendants.]

Stral. Come hither.

Ulric; what does that woman here? Oh! now

I recognize her, 't is the stranger's wife

Whom they name "Werner."

Ulric. 'T is his name.

Stral. Indeed!

Is not your husband visible, fair dame?—

Jos. Who seeks him?

Stral. No one—for the present; but

I fain would parley, Ulric, with yourself

Alone.

Ulric. I will retire with you.

Jos. Not so:

You are the latest stranger, and command

All places here.

[Aside to Ulric, as she goes out.] Oh, Ulric! have a care—

Remember what depends on a rash word!

Ulric (to Josephine). Fear not!—

[Exit Josephine.]

Stral. Ulric, I think that I may trust you:

You saved my life—and acts like these beget

Unbounded confidence.

Ulric. Say on.

Stral. Mysterious

And long-engender'd circumstances

[To be now fully enter'd on] have made

This man obnoxious—perhaps fatal to me.

Ulric. Who? Gabor, the Hungarian?

Stral. No—this "Werner"—

With the false name and habit.

Ulr. How can this be?
He is the poorest of the poor—and yellow
Sickness sits cavern'd in his hollow eye:
The man is helpless.

Stral. He is—'t is no matter;—
But if he be the man I deem (and that
He is so, all around us here—and much
That is not here—confirms my apprehension),
He must be made secure ere twelve hours further.

Ulr. And what have I to do with this?
Stral. I have sent
To Frankfurt, to the governor, my friend
(I have the authority to do so by An order of the house of Brandenburg),
For a fit escort—but this cursed flood
Bars all access, and may do for some hours.

Ulr. It is abating.
Stral. That is well.
Ulr. But how
Am I concern'd?

Stral. As one who did so much
For me, you cannot be indifferent to
That which is of more import to me than
The life you rescued.—Keep your eye on him!
The man avoids me, knows that I now know him—
Watch him!—as you would watch the wild bear when

He makes against you in the hunter's gap—
Like him he must be spear'd.

Ulr. Why so?
Stral. He stands
Between me and a brave inheritance!
Oh! could you see it! But you shall.

Ulr. I hope so.
Stral. It is the richest of the rich Bohemia,
Unscathed by scorching war. It lies so near
The strongest city, Prague, that fire and sword
Have skinn'd it lightly: so that now, besides
Its own exuberance, it bears double value,
Confronted with whole realms far and near Made deserts.

Ulr. You describe it faithfully.
Stral. Ay, could you see it, you would say so—but,
As I have said, you shall.

Ulr. I accept the omen.
Stral. Then claim a recompense from it and me,
Such as both may make worthy your acceptance
And services to me and mine for ever.

Ulr. And this sole, sick, and miserable wretch—
This wayworn stranger—stands between you and This Paradise?—(As Adam did between The devil and his.)—[Aside.]

Stral. He doth.

Ulr. Hath he no right?
Stral. Right! none. A disinherited prodigal,
Who for these twenty years disgraced his lineage
In all his acts—but chiefly by his marriage,
And living amidst commerce-fetching burghers,
And dabbling merchants, in a mart of Jews.

Ulr. He has a wife, then?
Stral. You'd be sorry to Call such your mother. You have seen the wretch.
He calls his wife.

Ulr. Is she not so?
Stral. No more
Than he's your father—an Italian girl,
The daughter of a banish'd man, who lives
On love and poverty with this same Werner.

Ulr. They are childless, then?
Stral. There is or was a husband,
Whom the old man—the grandsire (an old age
Is ever dotting) took to warm his bosom,
As it went chilly downward to the grave:
But the imp stands not in my path—he has fled,
No one knows whither; and if he had not,
His claims alone were too contemptible
To stand.—Why do you smile?

Ulr. At your vain threat
A poor man almost in his grasp—a child
Of doubtful birth—can startle a grander!
Stral. All's to be fear'd, where all is to be gain'd.

Ulr. True; and ought done to save or to change
it.
Stral. You have harp'd the very string next to my heart.

I may depend upon you?
Ulr. 'T were too late

To do but it.
Stral. Let no foolish pity shake
Your bosom (for the appearance of the same
Is pitiful)—he is a wretch, as likely
To have robb'd me as the fellow more suspected,
Except that circumstance is less against him;
He being lodged far off, and in a chamber
Without approach to mine; and, to say truth,
I think too well of blood allied to mine,
To deem he would descend to such an act:
Besides, he was a soldier, and a brave one
Once—though too rash.

Ulr. And they, my lord, we have
By our experience, never plunder till
They knock the brains out first—which makes them heirs,
Not thieves. The dead, who feel nothing, can take nothing,
Nor e'er be robb'd: their spoils are a beggar's—
No more.

Stral. Go! you are a wag. But say
I may be sure you'll keep an eye on this man,
And let me know his slightest movement towards Concealment or escape?

Ulr. You may be sure
You yourself could not watch him more than I
Will be his sentinel.

Stral. By this you make me
Yours, and for ever.

Ulr. Such is my intention. [Exit Stral.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the same Palace, from whence the secret Passage leads.

Enter Werner and Gaber.

Gab. Sir, I have told my tale: if it so please you
To give me refuge for a few hours, well—
If not, I'll try my fortune elsewhere.

Wern. How
Can I, so wretched, give to Misery
A shelter?—wanting such myself as much
As e'er the hunted deer a covert—
Gab. Or

The wounded lion his cool cave. Methinks
You rather look like one would turn at bay,
And rip the hunter's entrails.

Wern. Ah! I want not

If it be so, being much disposed to do
The same myself. But will you shelter me?
I am oppress'd like you—and poor like you—
Disgraced—

Wern. (abruptly). Who told you that I was graced?

Gab. No one; nor did I say you were disgraced.
Your poverty my likeness ended; but

I said I was so—and would add, with truth,
As undeservedly as you.

Wer. Again!
As I?

Gab. Or any other honest man.
What the devil would you have? You don't believe
me
Guilty of this base theft?

Wer. No, no—I cannot.
Gab. Why that's my heart of honor! you young gallant—

Your miserly intendant and dense noble—
All—all suspected me; and why? because I am the worst clothed, and least named amongst
them;

Although, were Momus' lattice in your breasts,
My soul might brook to open it more widely
Than theirs; but thus it is—you poor and helpless—
Both still more than myself.

Wer. How knew you that?
Gab. You're right: I ask for shelter at the hand
Which I call helpless; if you now deny it,
I were well paid. But you, who seem to have proved
The wholesome bitterness of life, know well,

By sympathy, that all the outspread gold
Of the New World the Spaniard boasts about,
Could never tempt the man who knows its worth
Weigh'd at its proper value in the balance,
Save in such guise (and there I grant its power,
Because I feel it) as may leave no nightmare
Upon his heart o' nights.

Wer. What do you mean?
Gab. Just what I say; I thought my speech was plain:

You are no thief—nor I—and, as true men,
Should aid each other.

Wer. It is a damn'd world, sir.
Gab. So is the nearest of the two next, as The priests say (and no doubt they should know best),

Therefore I'll stick by this—as being loth
To suffer martyrdom, at least with such
An epitaph as larcomy upon my tomb.
It is but a night's lodging which I crave:
To-morrow I will try the waters, as
The dove did, trusting that they have abated.

Wer. Abated? Is there hope of that?
Gab. There was
At noon-tide.

Wer. Then we may be safe.
Gab. Are you
In peril?

Wer. Poverty is ever so.
Gab. That I know by long practice. Will you not Promise to make mine less?

Wer. Your poverty?
Gab. No—you don't look a leech for that disorder;
I meant my peril only: you've a roof,
And I have none; I merely seek a covert.

Wer. Rightly; for how should such a wretch as I
Have gold?

Gab. Scarce honestly, to say the truth on't,
Although I almost wish you had the baron's.
Wer. Dare you insinuate?

Gab. What?
Wer. Are you aware
To whom you speak?

Gab. No; and I am not used
Greatly to care. (A noise heard without.) But hark!
They come!

Wer. Who come?
Gab. The intendant and his man-hounds after me:
I'll lose them—but it were in vain to expect
Snuff at hands like theirs. Where shall I go?

Wer. I do assure you,
If thou be faith to man, I am most guiltless:
Think if it were your own case!

Wer. (aside). Oh, just God!
Thy hell is not hereafter! Am I dust still?

Gab. I see you're moved; and it shows well in
you:

I may live to requite it.
Wer. Are you not

A spy of Stralenheim's?
Gab. Not I! and if

I were, what is there to espy in you?
Although, I recollect, his frequent question
About you and your spouse might lead to some Suspicion; but you best know—what—and why.
I am his deadliest foe.

Wer. You?
Gab. After such

A treatment for the service which in part
I render'd him, I am his enemy:
If you are not his friend, you will assist me.

Wer. I will.
Gab. But how?

Wer. (showing the panel). There is a secret spring:
Remember, I discover'd it by chance,
And used it but for safety.

Gab. Open it,
And I will use it for the same.

Wer. I found it,
As I have said: it leads through winding walls
(So thick as to bear paths within their ribs,
Yet lose no jot of strength or stateliness),
And hollow cells, and obscure niches, to
I know not whither; you must not advance:
Give me your word.

Gab. It is unnecessary:
How should I make my way in darkness through
A Gothic labyrinth of unknown windings?

Wer. Yes, but who knows to what place it may lead?

I know not—(mark you!)—but who knows it might
not

Lead even into the chamber of your foe?
So strangely were contrived these galleries
By our Teutonic fathers in old days,
When man built less against the elements
Than his next neighbor. You must not advance
Beyond the two first windings: if you do
(Albeit I never pass'd them), I'll not answer
For what you may be led to.

Gab. But I will.
A thousand thanks!

Wer. You'll find the spring more obvious
On the other side; and, when you would return,
It yields to the least touch.

Gab. I'll in—farewell!
(Gabor goes in by the secret panel.)
Wer. (solus). What have I done? Alas! what had I done

Before to make this fearful? Let it be
Bull some atonement that I save the man,
Whose sacrifice had saved perhaps my own—
They come! to seek elsewhere what is before
them!

Enter Idenstein and Others.
Iden. Is he not here? He must have vanish'd then
Through the dim Gothic glass by pious aid
Of pictur'd saints upon the red and yellow
Cassements, through which the sunset streams like sunbeams

On long pearl-color'd beards and crimson crosses,
And gilded croziers, and cross'd arms, and cowls,
And helms, and twisted armor, and long swords,
All the fantastic furniture of windows
Dim with brave knights and holy hermits, whose Likeness and fame alike rest in some panes
Of crystal, which each rattling wind proclaims
As frail as any other life or glory.
He's gone, however.

Wer. Whom do you seek?
 Idm. A villain.
 Wer. Why need you come so far, then?
 Idm. In the search
 Of him who robb'd the baron.
 Wer. Are you sure
 You have divined the man?
 Idm. As sure as you
 Stand there: but where's he gone?
 Wer. Who?
 Idm. He we sought.
 Wer. You see he is not here.
 Idm. And yet we traced him
 Up to this hall. Are you accomplices?
 Or deal you in the black art?
 Wer. I deal plainly,
 To many men the blackest.
 Idm. It may be
 I have a question or two for yourself
 Hereafter; but we must continue now
 Our search for t'other.
 Wer. You had best begin
 Your inquiry now; I may not be
 So patient always.
 Idm. I should like to know,
 In good sooth, if you really are the man
 That Stralenheim's in quest of.
 Wer. Insolent!
 Said you not that he was not here?
 Idm. Yes, one;
 But there's another whom he tracks more keenly,
 And soon, it may be, with authority
 Both paramount to his and mine. But, come!
 Bustle, my boys! we are at fault.
 [Exit Idenstein and Attendants.]

Wer. In what
 A maze hath my dim destiny involved me!
 And one base sin hath done me less ill than
 The leaving undone one far greater. Down,
 Thou busy devil, rising in my heart!
 Thou art too late! I'll nought to do with blood.

Enter Ulric.

Ulric. I sought you, father.
 Wer. Is't not dangerous?
 Ulric. No; Stralenheim is ignorant of all
 Or any of the ties between us: more—
 He sends me here a spy upon your actions,
 Deeming me wholly his.
 Wer. I cannot think it;
 'Tis but a snare he winds about us both,
 To swoop the sire and son at once.
 Ulric. I cannot
 Pause in each petty fear, and stumble at
 The doubts that rise like briars in our path,
 But must break through them, as an unarm'd carle
 Would, though with naked limbs, were the wolf rustling
 In the same thicket where he hew'd for bread.
 Nets are for thrushes, eagles are not caught so:
 We'll overfly or rend them.
 Wer. Show me how?
 Ulric. Can you not guess?
 Wer. I cannot.
 Ulric. That is strange.
 Came the thought ne'er in your mind last night?
 Wer. I understand you not.
 Ulric. Then we shall never More understand each other. But to change
 The topic—
 Wer. You mean to pursue it, as
 'Tis of our safety.
 Ulric. Right; I stand corrected.
 I see the subject now more clearly, and
 Our general situation in its bearings.
 The waters are abating; a few hours

Will bring his summon'd myrmidons from Frankfort.

When you will be a prisoner, perhaps worse,
 And I an outcast, bastardized by practice
 Of this same baron to make way for him.

Wer. And now your remedy! I thought to escape
 By means of this accursed gold; but now
 I dare not use it, show it, scarce look on it.
 Methinks it wears upon its face my guilt
 For motto, not the mintage of the state;
 And, for the sovereign's head, my own begirt
 With hissing snakes, which curl around my temples,
 And cry to all beholders, Lo! a villain!

Ulric. You must not use it, at least now; but take

This ring. [He gives Werner a jewel.]

Ulric. A gem! It was my father's!

And
 As such is now your own. With this you must Bribe the intendant for his old caleche
 And horses to pursue your route at sunrise,
 Together with my mother.

Wer. And leave you,
 So lately found, in peril too?

Ulric. Fear nothing!
 The only fear were if we fled together,
 For that would make our ties beyond all doubt.
 The waters only lie in flood between
 This burgh and Frankfort; so far's in our favor.
 The route on to Bohemia, though encumber'd,
 Is not impassable; and when you gain
 A few hours' start, the difficulties will be
 The same to your pursuers. Once beyond
 The frontier, and you're safe.

Wer. My noble boy!
 Ulric. Hush! hush! no transports: we'll indulge in them

In Castle Siegendorf! Display no gold:
 Show Idenstein the gem (I know the man,
 And have look'd through him): it will answer thus
 A double purpose. Stralenheim lost gold—
 No jewel: therefore it could not be his;
 And then the man who was possess of this
 Can hardly be suspected of abstracting
 The baron's coin, when he could thus convert
 This ring to more than Stralenheim has lost
 By his last night's slumber. Be not over timid
 In your address, nor yet too arrogant,
 And Idenstein will serve you.

Wer. I will follow
 In all things your direction.

Ulric. I would have Spared you the trouble; but had I appear'd
 To take an interest in you, and still more
 By dabbling with a jewel in your favor,
 All had been known at once.

Wer. My guardian angel!
 This overpays the past. But how wilt thou
 Fare in our absence?

Ulric. Stralenheim knows nothing
 Of me as aught of kindred with yourself.
 I will but wait a day or two with him
 To lull all doubts, and then rejoin my father.

Wer. To part no more.
 Ulric. I know not that; but at
 The least we'll meet again once more.

Wer. My boy!
 My friend! my only child, and sole preserver!
 Oh, do not hate me!

Ulric. Hate my father!

Wer. Ay,
 My father hated me. Why not my son?

Ulric. Your father knew you not as I do.
 Wer. Scorpions
 Are in thy words! Thou know me? in this guise
 Thou canst not know me, I am not myself;
 Yet (hate me not) I will be soon.

Ulr. In the mean time be sure that all a son
Can do for parents shall be done for mine.
Wer. I see it, and I feel it; yet I feel
Further—that you despise me.
Ulr. Wherefore should I?
Wer. Must I repeat my humiliation?

Ulr. No!
I have fathorn'd it and you. But let us talk
Of this no more. Or if it must be ever,
Not now. Your error has redoubled all
The present difficulties of our house,
At secret war with that of Stralenheim:
All we have now to think of is to baffle
Him. I have shown one way.

Wer. The only one,
And I embrace it, as I did my son,
Who shov'd himself and father safety in
One day.

Ulr. You shall be safe; let that suffice.
Would Stralenheim's appearance in Bohemia
Disturb your right, or mine, if once we were Admitted to our lands?

Wer. Assuredly,
Situate as we are now, although the first
Possessor might, as usual, prove the strongest,
Especially the next in blood.

Ulr. Blood! 't is
A word of many meanings; in the veins,
And out of them, it is a different thing—
And so it should be, when the same in blood
(As it is call'd) are aliens to each other,
Like Theban brethren: when a part is bad,
A few split ounces purify the rest.
Wer. I do not apprehend you.

Ulr. That may be—
And should, perhaps—and yet—but get ye ready;
You and my mother must away to-night.
Here comes the intendant: sound him with the gun;

'T will sink into his venal soul like lead
Into the deep, and bring up slime and mud,
And ooze too, from the bottom, as the lead doth
With its greas'd understratum; but no less
Will serve to warn our vessels through these shoals.
The freight is rich, so heave the line in time!
Farewell! I scarce have time, but yet your Aowl,
My father!—

Wer. Let me embrace thee!
Ulr. We may be Observed: subdue your nature to the hour!
Keep off from me as from your foe!

Wer. Accurs'd
Be he who is the stiding cause which smothers
The best and sweetest feeling of our hearts;
At such an hour too!

Ulr. Yes, curse—it will ease you!
Here is the intendant.

Enter Idenstein.

Master Idenstein,
How fare you in your purpose? Have you caught
The rogue?

Iden. No, faith!
Ulr. Well, there are plenty more:
You may have better luck another chase.

Iden. Gons back to his chamber:
And, now I think on 't, asking after you
With nobly-born impatience.

Ulr. Your great men
Must be answer'd on the instant, as the bound
Of the stung steed replies unto the spur:
'T is well they have horses, too; for, if they had not,
I fear that men must draw their chariots, as
They say kings did Sesostris.

Iden. Who was he?

Ulr. An old Bohemian—an Imperial gipsy.
Iden. A gipsy or Bohemian, 't is the same,
For they pass by both names. And was he one?
Ulr. I've heard so; but I must take leave. Intendant.

Your servant!—Werner (to Werner slightly), if that be your name,

Iden. [Exit Ulr.]
A well-spoken, pretty-faced young man!
And prettily behaved! He knows his station,
You see, sir: how he gave to each his due Precedence!

Wer. I perceived it, and applaud
His just discernment and your own.

Iden. That's well—
That's very well. You also know your place, too;
And yet I don't know that I know your place.

Wer. (showing the ring). Would this assist your knowledge?

Iden. How!—What!—Eh!

A jewel!
Wer. 'T is your own on one condition.

Iden. Mine!—Name it!
Wer. That hereafter you permit me
At thrice its value to redeem it: 't is
A family ring.

Iden. A family!—yours!—a gem!
I'm breathless!

Wer. You must also furnish me
An hour ere daybreak, with all means to quit
This place.

Iden. But is it real? Let me look on it:
Diamond, by all that's glorious!

Wer. Come, I'll trust you:
You have guess'd, no doubt, that I was born above
My present seeming.

Iden. I can't say I did,
Though this looks like it: this is the true breeding
Of gentle blood!

Wer. I have important reasons
For wishing to continue privily

My journey hence.
Iden. So then you are the man
Whom Stralenheim's in quest of?

Wer. I am not;
But being taken for him might conduct
So much embarrassment to me just now,
And to the baron's self hereafter—'t is
To spare both that I would avoid all bustle.

Iden. Beyond the man or no, 't is not my business;
Beside, I never should obtain the half
From this proud, niggardly noble, who would raise
The country for some missing bits of coin,
And never offer a precise reward—
But this!—another look!

Wer. Gaze on it freely;
At day-dawn it is yours.

Iden. Oh, thou sweet sparkler!
Thou more than stone of the philosopher!
Thou touchstone of Philosophy herself!
Thou bright eye of the Mine! thou loadstar of
The soul! the true magnetic Pole to which
All hearts point duly north, like trembling needles!
Thou flaming Spirit of the Earth! which, sitting
High on the monarch's diadem, attractest
More worship than the majesty who sweats
Beneath the crown which makes his head ache, like
Millions of hearts which bleed to lend it lustre!
Shalt thou be mine? I am, methinks, already
A little king, a lucky alchemist!—
A wise magician, who has bound the devil
Without the forfeit of his soul. But come,
Werner, or what else?

Wer. Call me Werner still;
You may yet know me by a loftier title.

Iden. I do believe in thee! thou art the spirit
Of whom I long have dream'd in a low garb.—

But come, I'll serve thee: thou shalt be as free
As air, despite the waters: let us hence:
I'll show thee I am honest—(oh, thou jewel!)
Thou shalt be furnish'd, Werner, with such means
Of flight, that if thou wert a snail, not birds
Should overtake thee.—Let me gaze again!
I have a foster brother in the mart
Of Hamburg skill'd in precious stones. How Carats may it weigh?—Come, Werner, I will wing
thee.

SCENE II.—Stralenheim's Chamber.

Stralenheim and Frits.

Frits. All's ready, my good lord!

Stral. I am not sleepy,
And yet I must to bed; I fain would say
To rest, but something heavy on my spirit,
Too dull for wakefulness, too quick for slumber,
Sits on me as a cloud along the sky,
Which will not let the sunbeams through, nor yet
Descend in rain and end, but spreads itself
Twixt earth and heaven, like envy between man
And man, an everlasting mist:—I will Unto my pillow.

Frits. May you rest there well!

Stral. I feel, and fear, I shall.

Frits. And wherefore fear?
Stral. I know not why, and therefore do fear
more.

Because an undecipherable—but 'tis
All folly. Were the locks (as I desired)
Changed, to-day, of this chamber? for last night's Adventure makes it needful.

Frits. Certainly,
According to your order, and beneath
The inspection of myself and the young Saxon
Who saved your life. I think they call him "Ulric."

Stral. You think! you supercilious slave! what right
Have you to tax your memory, which should be
Quick, proud, and happy to retain the name
Of him who saved your master, as a litany
Whose daily repetition marks your duty?—
Get hence! "You think," indeed! you who stood still

Howling and dripping on the bank, whilst I
Lay dying, and the stranger dash'd aside
The roaring torrent, and restored me to Thank him—and despise you. "You think!" and scare

Can recollect his name! I will not waste
More words on you. Call me betimes.

Frits. Good night!
I trust to-morrow will restore your lordship
To renovated strength and temper.

[The scene closes.]

SCENE III.—The secret Passage.

Gabor (solus). Four—
Five—six hours have I counted, like the guard
Of outposts on the never-merry clock:
That hollow tongue of time, which, even when
It sounds for joy, takes something from enjoyment
With every clang. 'Tis a perpetual knell,
Though for a marriage feast it rings: each stroke
Peals for a hope the less: the funeral note
Of Love deep-buried without resurrection
In the grave of Possession; while the knoll
Of long-lived parents finds a jovial echo
To triple Time in the son's ear.

I'm cold—
I'm dark: I've blown my fingers—number'd o'er
And o'er my steps—and knock'd my head against
Some fifty buttresses—and roused the rats
And bats in general insurrection, till

Their cursed pattering feet and whirling wings
Leave me scarce hearing for another sound.
A light! It is at distance (if I can Measure in darkness distances): but it blinks
As through a crevice or a keyhole, in
The inhibited direction: I must on,
Nevertheless, from curiosity.
A distant lamp-light is an incident
In such a den as this. Pray Heaven it lead me
To nothing that may tempt me! Else—Heaven aid
me

To obtain or to escape it! Shining still!
Were it the star of Lucifer himself,
Or he himself girt with its beams, I could Contain no longer. Softly! mighty well!
That corner's turn'd—so—ah! no!—right! It dawns Nearer. Here is a darksome angle—so,
That's weather'd.—Let me pause.—Suppose it leads Into some greater danger than that which I have escaped—no matter, 'tis a new one;
And novel perils, like fresh mistresses,
Wear more magnetic aspects: I will on,
And be it where it may—I have my dagger,
Which may protect me at a pinch.—Burst open,
Thou little light! Thou art my typha fatens!
My stationary Will-o'-the-wisp!—So! so!
He hears my invocation, and fails not.

[The scene opens.]

SCENE IV.—A Garden.

Enter Werner.

Wer. I could not sleep—and now the hour has
hand;

All's ready. Idenstein has kept his word;
And station'd in the outskirts of the town,
Upon the forest's edge, the vehicle
Awaits us. Now the dwindling stars begin
To pale in heaven; and for the last time I Look on these horrible walls. Oh! never, never Shall I forget them. Here I came most poor,
But not dishonor'd; and I leave them with
A stain,—if not upon my name, yet in
My heart!—a never-dying canker-worm,
Which all the coming splendor of the lands,
And rights, and sovereignty of Siegenrodt
Can scarcely lull a moment. I must find
Some means of restitution, which would ease
My soul in part; but how without discovery?
It must be done, however; and I'll pause
Upon the method the first hour of safety.
The madness of my misery led to this
Base infamy; repentance must retrieve it:
I will have nought of Stralenheim's upon
My spirit, though he would grasp all of mine;
Lands, freedom, life,—and yet he sleeps as securely,
Perhaps, as infancy, with gorgeous curtains
Spread for his canopy, o'er silken pillows.
Such as when—Hark! what noise is that? Again!
The branches shake; and some loose stones have fallen
From yonder terrace.

[Ulric leaps down from the terrace.
Ulric! ever welcome!

Thrice welcome now! this dilid—

Ulric. Stop! Master

We approach, tell me—

Wer. Why look you so?

Ulric. Behold my father, or—

Wer. What?

Ulric. An assassin!

Wer. Insane or insolent!

Ulric. Truly, Sir,

You prize your life, or mine?

Wer. To what end?

Answer?

Ulr. Are you or are you not the assassin of Stralensheim?

Wer. I never was as yet.

The murderer of any man. What mean you?

Ulr. Did not you this night (as the night before)

Retrace the secret passage? Did you not Again revisit Stralensheim's chamber? and—

[Ulr. pauses.]

Wer. Proceed.

Ulr. Did he not by your hand?

Wer. Great God!

Ulr. You are innocent, then! my father's innocent!

Embrace me! Yes,—your tone—your look—yes, yes,—

Yet say so.

Wer. If I e'er, in heart or mind, Conceived deliberately such a thought, But rather strove to trample back to hell Such thoughts—if e'er they glared a moment through

The irritation of my oppress'd spirit— May heaven be shut for ever from my hopes As from mine eyes!

Ulr. But Stralensheim is dead.

Wer. 'T is horrible! 't is hideous, as 't is hateful!— But what have I to do with this?

Ulr. No bolt

In forced; no violence can be detected,

Save on his body. Part of his own household

Have been alarm'd; but as the intendant is

Absent, I took upon myself the care

Of mustering the police. His chamber has,

Fast doubt, been enter'd secretly. Excuse me,

By nature—

Wer. Oh, my boy! what unknown woes

Of dark fatality, like clouds, are gathering

Above our house!

Ulr. My father! I acquit you!

But will the world do so? will even the judge,

Er—But you must away this instant.

Wer. No!

I'll face it. Who shall dare suspect me? Yet

Ulr. You had no guests—no visitors—no life

Breathing around you, save my mother's? ALL

Wer. The Hungarian!

Ulr. He is gone! he disappear'd

Er—

Wer. No; I hid him in that very

Conceal'd and fatal gallery.

Ulr. There I'll find him.

[Ulr. is going.]

Wer. It is too late; he had left the palace ere

I quitted it. I found the secret panel

Open, and the doors which lead from that hall

Which marks it: I but thought he had snatch'd the silent

And unfavorable moment to escape

The myximodems of Idenstein, who were

Dogging him yester even.

Ulr. You reason'd

The panel?

Wer. Yes; and not without reproach

(And inner trembling for the avoided peril)

At his dull heedlessness, in leaving thus

His shelterer's asylum to the risk

Of a discovery.

Ulr. You are sure you closed it?

Wer. Certain.

Ulr. That's well; but had been better if

You ne'er had turn'd it to a den for—[He pauses.]

Wer. Thieves!

Then wouldst say: I must bear it and deserve it;

But not—

Ulr. No, father; do not speak of this:

This is no hour to think of petty crimes,

But to prevent the consequence of great ones.

Why would you shelter this man?

Wer. Could I shun it?

A man pursued by my chief foe; disgraced

For my own crime; a victim to my safety,

Imploping a few hours' concealment from

The very wretch who was the cause he needed

Such refuge. Had he been a wolf, I could not

Have in such circumstances thrust him forth.

Ulr. And like the wolf he hath repaid you. But

It is too late to ponder thus:—you must Set out ere dawn. I will remain here to Trace the murderer, if 't is possible.

Wer. But this my sudden flight will give the Moloch

Suspicion two new victims in the lieu

Of one, if I remain. The fled Hungarian,

Who seems the culprit, and—

Ulr. Who seems? Who else

Can be so?

Wer. Not I, though just now you doubted—

You, my son!—doubted—

Ulr. And do you doubt of him

The fugitive?

Wer. Boy! since I fell into

The abyss of crime (though not of such crime), I,

Having seen the innocent oppress'd for me,

May doubt even of the guilty's guilt. Your heart

Is free, and quick with virtuous wrath to accuse

Appearances; and views a criminal

In innocence's shadow, it may be,

Because 't is dusky.

Ulr. And if I do so,

What will mankind, who know you not, or knew

But to oppress? You must not stand the hazard.

Away!—I'll make all easy. Idenstein

Will for his own sake and his jewel's bold

His peace—he also is a partner in

Your fight—moreover—

Wer. Fly! and leave my name

Link'd with the Hungarian's, or prefer'd as poorest,

To bear the brand of bloodshed?

Ulr. Pshaw! leave anything

Except our father's sovereignty and castles,

For which you have so long panted, and in vain!

What name? You have no name, since that you bear

Is feign'd.

Wer. Most true; but still I would not have it

Engraved in crimson in men's memories,

Though in this most obscure abode of men—

Besides, the search—

Ulr. I will provide against Aught that can touch you. No one knows you

here

As heir of Siegendorf: if Idenstein

Suspects, 't is but suspicion, and he is

A fool: his folly shall have such employment,

Too, that the unknown Werner shall give way

To nearer thoughts of self. The laws (if e'er Laws reach'd this village) are all in abeyance

With the late general war of thirty years,

Or crush'd, or rising slowly from the dust,

To which the march of armies trampled them.

Stralensheim, although noble, is unheeded

Here, save as such—without lands, influence,

Save what hath perish'd with him. Few prolong

A week beyond their funeral rites their sway

O'er men, unless by relatives, whose interest

Is roused: such is not here the case; he died

Alone, unknown,—a solitary grave,

Obscure as his deserts, without a squire, or

In all he'll have, or wants. If I discover

The assassin, 't will be well—if not, believe me

None else; though all the full-fed train of manials

May howl above his ashes (as they did

Around him in his danger on the Oder),
Will no more stir a finger now than then.
Hence! hence! I must not hear your answer.—
Look!

The stars are almost faded, and the gray
Begins to grizzle the black hair of night.
You shall not answer:—Pardon me that I
Am peremptory; 't is your son that speaks,
Your long-lost, late-found son.—Let's call my mother!

Softly and swiftly step, and leave the rest
To me: I'll answer for the event as far

As regards you, and that is the chief point,
As my first duty, which shall be observed.
We'll meet in Castle Siegendorf—once more
Our banners shall be glorious! Think of that Alone, and leave all other thoughts to me,
Whose youth may better battle with them.—Hence!
And may your age be happy!—I will kiss
My mother once more, then Heaven's speed be with
you!

Wern. This counsel's safe—but is it honorable?

Ulric. To save a father is a child's chief honor.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Gothic Hall in the Castle of Siegendorf, near Prague.

Enter Ulric and Henrik, Retainers of the Count.

Eric. So, better times are come at last; to these Old walls new masters and high vassal—both
A long desideratum.

Hen. Yes, for masters,
It might be unto those who long for novelty,
Though made by a new grave: but as for vassal,
Methinks the old Count Siegendorf maintain'd
His feudal hospitality as high
As e'er another prince of the empire.

Eric. Why,
For the mere cup and trencher, we no doubt
Fared passing well; but as for merriment
And sport, without which salt and sauces season
The cheer but scantily, our sizings were Even of the narrowest.

Hen. The old count loved not
The roar of revel: are you sure that this does?

Eric. As yet he hath been courteous as he's bounteous.

And we all love him.

Hen. His reign is as yet
Hardly a year o'erpast its honeymoon,
And the first year of sovereigns is bridal:
Anon, we shall perceive his real sway
And moods of mind.

Eric. Pray Heaven he keep the present!
Then his brave son, Count Ulric—there's a knight!
Pity the wars are o'er!

Hen. Why so? Look on him!

Eric. And answer that yourself.

Hen. He's very youthful,
And strong and beautiful as a young tiger.

Eric. That's not a faithful vassal's likeness.

Hen. But
Perhaps a true one.

Eric. Pity, as I said,
The wars are over: in the hall, who like
Count Ulric for a well-supported pride,
Which awes, but yet offends not? in the field,
Who like him with his spear in hand, when, grasping

His truncheon, and ripping up from right to left
The howling hounds, the bear makes for the thicket?
Who backs a horse, or bears a hawk, or wears
A sword like him? Whose plume nods knightlier?

Hen. No one's, I grant you. Do not fear, if war
Be long in coming, he is of that kind
Will make it for himself, if he hath not Already done as much.

Eric. What do you mean?

Hen. You can't deny his train of followers
(But few our native fellow vassals born
On the domain) are such a sort of knaves
As—(Pussies.)

Eric. What?

Hen. The war (you love so much) leaves living.
Like other parents, she spoils her worst children.

Eric. Nonsense! they are all brave, iron-visaged fellows.
Such as old Tilly loved.

Hen. And who loved Tilly?

Eric. Ask that at Magdebourg—or for that matter Wallenstein either;—they are gone to—

Hen. Best;
But what beyond 't is not ours to pronounce.

Hen. I wish they had left us something of their rest.

The country (nominally now at peace)
Is overrun with—God knows who: they fly
By night, and disappear with sunrise; but Leave us no less desolation, nay, even more,
Than the most open warfare.

Eric. But Count Ulric—
What has all this to do with him?

Hen. With him!
He—might prevent it. As you say he's fond
Of war, why makes he it not on those marauders?

Eric. You'd better ask himself.

Hen. I would as soon
Ask the lion why he laps not milk.

Eric. And here he comes!

Hen. The devil! you'll hold your tongue?

Eric. Why do you turn so pale?

Hen. 'T is nothing—but
Be silent.

Eric. I will, upon what you have said.

Hen. I assure you I meant nothing,—a mere sport
Of words, no more; besides, had it been otherwise,
He is to espouse the gentle baroness
Ida of Stralenheim, the late baron's heiress;
And she, no doubt, will soften whatsoever
Of fierceness the late long intestine wars
Have given all natures, and most unto those Who were born in them, and bred up upon
The knees of Homicide; sprinkled, as it were,
With blood even at their baptism. Prithce, peace
On all that I have said!

Enter Ulric and Rodolph.

Ulric. Good morrow, worthy Henrik. Eric, is
All ready for the chase?

Eric. The dogs are order'd
Down to the forest, and the vassals out
To beat the bushes, and the day looks promising.

Shall I call forth your excellency's suite?
What courier will you please to mount?

Ulric. The dun,
Walstein.

Eric. I fear he scarcely has recover'd
The toils of Monday: 't was a noble chase:

You spear'd four with your own hand.

Ulric. True, good Eric:
I had forgotten—let it be the gray, then.
Old Ziaka: he has not been out this fortnight.

Eric. He shall be straight comparison'd. How many Of your immediate retainers shall Escort you?

Ulr. I leave that to Wallburg, our Master of the horse.

Rodolph!

My lord!

Ulr. The news
Is awkward from the—(Rodolph points to Henrick.)
How now, Henrick? why

Loiter you here?

Hen. For your commands, my lord.
Ulr. Go to my father, and present my duty,
And learn if he would fight with me before

I mount. (Exit Henrick.)
Rodolph, our friends have had a check

Upon the frontiers of Franconia, and
'Tis rumor'd that the column sent against them
Is to be strengthen'd. I must join them soon.

Rod. Best wait for further and more sure advices.

Ulr. I mean it—and indeed it could not well
Have fallen out at a time more opposite
To all my plans.

Rod. It will be difficult
To excuse your absence to the count your father.

Ulr. Yes, but the unsettled state of our domain
In high Silesia will permit and cover
My journey. In the mean time, when we are Engaged in the chase, draw off the eighty men
Whom Wolfe leads—keep the forests on your route:
You know it well?

Rod. As well as on that night

When we—
Ulr. We will not speak of that until

We can repeat the same with like success:
And when you have join'd, give Rosenberg this letter. (Gives a letter.)

Add further, that I have sent this slight addition
To our force with you and Wolfe, as herald of My coming, though I could but spare them ill
At this time, as my father loves to keep
Full numbers of retainers round the castle,
Until this marriage, and its feasts and fooleries,
Are rung out with its peal of nuptial nansene.

Rod. I thought you loved the lady Ida?

Ulr. Why,

I do so—but it follows not from that
I would bind in my youth and glorious years,
So brief and burning, with a lady's zone,
Although 't were that of Venus—but I love her,
As woman should be loved, fairly and solely.

Rod. And constantly?

Ulr. I think so; for I love
Nought else.—But I have not the time to pause
Upon these gewgaws of the heart. Great things
We have to do ere long. Speed! speed! good Rodolph!

Rod. On my return, however, I shall find

The baroness Ida lost in Countess Siegendorf?
Ulr. Perhaps: my father wishes it; and sooth
'T is no bad policy: this union with

The last bud of the rival branch at once

Unites the future and destroys the past.

Rod. Adieu.

Ulr. Yet hold—we had better keep together

Until the chase begins; then draw thou off,
And do as I have said.

Rod. I will. But to Return—'t was a most kind act in the count
Your father to send up to Königsberg
For this fair orphan of the baron, and
To had her as his daughter.

Ulr. Wondrous kind!

Especially as little kindness till

There grew between them.

Rod. The late baron died

Of a fever, did he not?

Ulr. How should I know?
Rod. I have heard it whispered there was something strange

About his death—and even the place of it
Is scarcely known.

Ulr. Some obscure village on
The Saxon or Silesian frontier.

Rod. He

Has left no testament—no farewell words.

Ulr. I am neither confessor nor notary,
So cannot say.

Rod. Ah! here 's the lady Ida.

Enter Ida Stralenheim.

Ulr. You are early, my sweet cousin!

Ida. Not too early,

Dear Ulrif, if I do not interrupt you.

Ulr. (smiling.) Are we not so?

Ida. Yes, but I do not like the name; methinks

It sounds so cold, as if you thought upon

Our pedigree, and only weigh'd our blood.

Ulr. (startling.) Blood!

Ida. Why does yours start from your cheeks?

Ulr. Ay! doth it?

Ida. It doth—but no! It rushes like a torrent

Even to your brow again.

Ulr. (recovering himself.) And if it fled,

It only was because your presence sent it

Back to my heart, which beats for you, sweet cousin!

Ida. "Cousin" again.

Ulr. Nay, then, I'll call you sister.

Ida. I like that name still worse.—Would we had ne'er

Been aught of kindred!

Ulr. (gloomily.) Would we never had!

Ida. Oh, heavens! and can you wish that?

Ulr. Dearest Ida!

Did I not echo your own wish?

Ida. Yes, Ulrif,

But then I wish'd it not with such a glance,

And scarce knew what I said; but let me be

Sister, or cousin, or what you will, so that

I still to you am something.

Ulr. You shall be

All—all—

Ida. And you to me are so already;

But I can wait.

Ulr. Dear Ida.

Ida. Call me Ida.

Your Ida, for I would be yours, none else's—

Indeed I have none else left, since my poor father—

(She pauses.)

Ulr. You have mine—you have me.

Ida. Dear Ulrif, how I wish

My father could but view my happiness,

Which wants but this!

Ulr. Indeed!

Ida. You would have loved him,

He you; for the brave ever love each other:

His manner was a little cold, his spirit

Proud (as is birth's prerogative); but under

This grave exterior—Would you had known each other!

Had such as you been near him on his journey,

He had not died without a friend to soothe

His last and lonely moments.

Ulr. Who says that?

Ida. What?

Ulr. That he died alone.

Ida. The general rumor,

And disappearance of his servants, who

Have ne'er return'd: that fever was most deadly

Which swept them all away.

Ulr. If they were near him

He could not die neglected or alone.

Ida. Alas! what is a mental to a death-bed,

When the dim eye rolls vainly round for what
It loves?—They say he died of a fever.

Ulr. Say!

It was so.

Ida. I sometimes dream otherwise.

Ulr. All dreams are false.

Ida. And yet I see him as

I see you.

Ulr. Where?

Ida. In sleep—I see him lie
Pale, bleeding, and a man with a raised knife
Beside him.

Ulr. But you do not see his face?

Ida (looking at him). No! Oh, my God! do you?

Ulr. Why do you ask?

Ida. Because you look as if you saw a murderer!

Ulr. (agitatedly). Ida, this is mere childlike-ness;

your weakness

Infects me, to my shame; but as all feelings

Of yours are common to me, it affects me.

Ida. Prithas, sweet child, change—

Ulr. Child, indeed! I have Full fifteen summers. [A bugle sounds.]

Rod. Hark, my lord, the bugle!

Ida (peevishly to Rodolph). Why need you tell him that? Can he not hear it

Without your echo?

Rod. Pardon me, fair baroness!

Ida. I will not pardon you, unless you earn it

By adding me in my discussion of Count Ulr. from the chase to-day.

Rod. You will not,

Lady, need aid of mine.

Ulr. I must not now

Forego it.

Ida. But you shall!

Ulr. Shall!

Ida. Yes, or be

No true knight.—Come, dear Ulr! yield to me

In this, for this one day: the day looks heavy,

And you are turn'd so pale and ill.

Ulr. You jest.

Ida. Indeed I do not:—ask of Rodolph.

Rod. Truly,

My lord, within this quarter of an hour

You have changed more than e'er I saw you change

In years.

Ulr. 'Tis nothing; but if 't were, the air

Would soon restore me. I'm the true chameleon,

And live but on the atmosphere; your feasts

In castle halls, and social banquets, nurse not

My spirit—I'm a forester and breather

Of the steep mountain-tops, where I love all

The eagle loves.

Ida. Except his prey, I hope.

Ulr. Sweet Ida, wish me a fair chase, and I

Will bring you six boars' heads for trophies home.

Ida. And will you not stay, then? You shall not go!

Come! I will sing to you.

Ulr. Ida, you scarcely

Will make a soldier's wife.

Ida. I do not wish

To be so; for I trust these wars are over,

And you will live in peace on your domains.

Enter Werner as Count Siegendorf.

Ulr. My father, I salute you, and it grieves me

With such brief greeting.—You have heard our bugle;

The vassals wait.

Sieg. So let them.—You forget

To-morrow is the appointed festival

In Prague for peace restored. You are apt to follow

The chase with such an ardor as will scarce

Permit you to return to-day, or if

Return'd, too much fatigued to join to-morrow
The nobles in our marshall'd ranks.

Ulr. You, count.

Will well supply the place of both—I am not

A lover of these pageantries.

Sieg. No, Ulr!:

It were not well that you alone of all

Our young nobility—

Ida. And far the noblest

In aspect and demeanor.

Sieg. (to Ida). True, dear child.

Though somewhat frankly said for a fair countess—

But, Ulr, recollect too our position.

So lately reinstated in our honors.

Believe me, 't would be mark'd in any house,

But most in ours, that ours should be found wanting

At such a time and place. Besides, the Heaven

Which gave us back our own, in the same moment

It spread its peace o'er all, hath double claims

On us for thanksgiving: first, for our country;

And next, that we are here to share its blessings.

Ulr. (aside). Devout, too! Well, sir, I obey at once.

(Then aloud to a Servant.) Ludwig, dismiss the train without! [Exit Ludwig.]

Ida. And so

You yield at once to him what I for hours

Might supplicate in vain.

Sieg. (smiling). You are not just

Of me, I trust, my pretty rebel! who

Would sanction disobedience against all

Except thyself? But fear not; thou shalt rule him

Hereafter with a fonder sway and firmer.

Ida. But I should like to govern now.

Sieg. You shall.

Your harp, which by the way awaits you with

The countess in her chamber. She complains

That you are a sad truant to your music:

She attends you.

Ida. Then good morrow, my kind husband!

Ulr, you 'll come and hear me?

Ulr. By and by.

Ida. Be sure 'll sound it better than your harp!

Then pray you be as punctual to its notes:

I 'll play you King Gustav's march.

Ulr. And why not

Old Tilly's!

Ida. Not that monster's! I should think

My harp-strings rang with groans, and not with music.

Could aught of his sound on it:—but some quick

Your mother will be eager to receive you.

Sieg. Ulr, I wish to speak with you alone.

Ulr. My time's your vassal.

(Aside to Rodolph.) Rodolph, haste! and do

As I directed: and by his best speed

And readiest means let Rosenberg reply.

Rod. Count Siegendorf, command yourself! I am bound

Upon a journey past the frontier.

Sieg. (starts). Att—

Where? on what frontier?

Rod. The Silesian, on

My way—(aside to Ulr.)—Where shall I stop?

Ulr. (aside to Rodolph). To Hamburg.

(Aside to himself.) That Word will, I think, put a firm padlock on

His further inquisition.

Rod. Count, to Hamburg!

Sieg. (agitated). Hamburg! No, I have much to do there, nor

Am aught connected with that city. Then

God speed you!

Rod. Fare ye well, Count Siegendorf.

Sieg. Ulr, this man, who has just

One of those strange companions whom

Would reason with you on.

Ulr. My lord, he is Noble by birth, of one of the first houses In Saxony.

Sieg. I talk not of his birth, But of his bearing. Men speak lightly of him.

Ulr. So they will do of most men. Even the monarch Is not fenced from his chamberlain's slander, or The sneer of the last courtier whom he has made Great and ungrateful.

Sieg. If I must be plain, The world speaks more than lightly of this Rodolph: They say he is leagued with the "black bands" who still Ravage the frontier.

Ulr. And will you believe

The world?

Sieg. In this case—yes. In any case,

Ulr. I thought you knew it better than to take An accusation for a sentence. Son!

Sieg. I understand you; you refer to—but My destiny has so involved about me Her spider web, that I can only flutter Like the poor fly, but break it not. Take heed, Ulr.; you have seen to what the passions led me: Twenty long years of misery and famine Quench'd them not—twenty thousand more, per- chance,

Hereafter (or even here in moments which Might date for years, did Anguish make the dial), May not obliterate or explete The madness and dishonor of an instant. Ulr., be warn'd by a father!—I was not By mine, and you behold me!

Ulr. I behold The prosperous and beloved Siegfried, Lord of a prince's appanage, and honor'd By those he rules and those he ranks with.

Sieg. Ah! Why wilt thou call me prosperous, while I fear For thee? Beloved, when thou lovest me not? All hearts but one may beat in kindness for me— But if my son's is cold!—

Ulr. Who dare say that? Sieg. None else but I, who see it—feel it—keenly Than would your adversary, who dared say so, Your sabre in his heart! But mine survives The wound.

Ulr. You err. My nature is not given To outward fondling: how should it be so, After twelve years' divorcement from my parents?

Sieg. And did not I too pass those twelve torn years

In a like absence? But 't is vain to urge you— Nature was never call'd back by remonstrance. Let's change the theme. I wish you to consider That these young violent nobles of high name, But dark deeds (ay, the darkest, if all Rumor Reports be true), with whom thou consortest, Will lead thee—

Ulr. (impatiently). I'll be led by no man.

Sieg. Be leader of such, I would hope: at once Nor To wean thee from the perils of thy youth And haughty spirit, I have thought it well That thou shouldst wed the lady Ida—more As thou appear'st to love her.

Ulr. I have said I will obey your orders, were they to Unite with Hecate—can a son say more?

Sieg. He says too much in saying this. It is not The nature of thine age, nor of thy blood, Nor of thy temperament, to talk so coolly, Or act so carelessly, in that which is The bloom or blight of all men's happiness

(For Glory's pillow is but restless if Love lay not down his cheek there): some strong bias,

Some master fiend is in thy service, to Misrule the mortal who believes him slave, And makes his every thought subservient; else Thou 'dst say at once—"I love young Ida, and Will wed her;" or, "I love her not, and all The powers of earth shall never make me."—So Would I have answer'd.

Ulr. Sir, you need for love.

Sieg. I did, and it has been my only refuge In many miseries.

Ulr. Which miseries Had never been but for this love-match.

Sieg. Still Against your age and nature! Who at twenty E'er answer'd thus till now?

Ulr. Did you not warn me Against your own example?

Sieg. Boyish sophist! In a word, do you love, or love not, Ida?

Ulr. What matters it, if I am ready to Obey you in espousing her?

Sieg. As far As you feel, nothing, but all life for her. She's young—all-beautiful—adores you—is Endow'd with qualities to give happiness, Such as rounds common life into a dream Of something which your poets cannot paint, And (if it were not wisdom to love virtue) For which Philosophy might barter Wisdom; And giving so much happiness, deserves A little in return. I would not have her Break her heart for a man who has none to break; Or wither on her stalk like some pale rose Deserted by the bird she thought a nightingale, According to the Orient tale. She is—

Ulr. The daughter of dead Stralenheim, your foe: I'll wed her, ne'ertheless; though, to say truth, Just now I am not violently transported In favor of such unions.

Sieg. But she loves you.

Ulr. And I love her, and therefore would think twice.

Sieg. Alas! Love never did so.

Ulr. Then 't is time He should begin, and take the bandage from His eyes, and look before he leaps; till now He hath ta'en a jump! 't the dark.

Sieg. But you consent?

Ulr. I did, and do.

Sieg. Then fix the day.

Ulr. 'T is usual, And certes courteous, to leave that to the lady.

Sieg. I will engage for her.

Ulr. So will not I

For any woman: and as what I fix, I fain would see unshaken, when she gives Her answer, I'll give mine.

Sieg. But 't is your office

To woo.

Ulr. Count, 't is a marriage of your making, So be it of your wooing; but to please you I will now pay my duty to my mother, With whom, you know, the lady Ida is.— What would you have? You have forbid my stir- ring

For manly sports beyond the castle walls, And I obey; you bid me turn a chamberer, To pick up gloves, and fans, and knitting needles, And list to songs and tunes, and watch for smiles, And smile at pretty prattle, and look into The eyes of feminine, as though they were The stars receding early to our wish Upon the dawn of a world-winning battle— What can a son or man do more? [Exit Ulr.]

Steg. (solus). Too much!—
Too much of duty, and too little love!
He pays me in the coin he owes me not:
For such hath been my wayward fate, I could not Fulfill a parent's duties by his side
Till now; but love he owes me, for my thoughts
Ne'er left him, nor my eyes long'd without tears
To see my child again, and now I have found him!
But how!—obedient, but with coldness; dutious
In my sight, but with carelessness; mysterious—
Abstracted—distant—much given to long absence,
And where—none know—in league with the most Helious

Of our young nobles; though, to do him justice,
He never stoops down to their vulgar pleasures;
Yet there's some tie between them which I cannot Unravel. They look up to him—consult him—
Throng round him as a leader: but with me
He hath no confidence! Ah! can I hope it
After—what! doth my father's curse descend
Even to my child? Or is the Hungarian near
To shed more blood? or—Oh! if it should be!
Spirit of Stralenheim, dost thou walk these walls
To wither him and his—who, though they slew not,
Unlatch'd the door of death for thee? 'T was not
Our fault, nor is our sin: thou wert our foe,
And yet I spared thee when my own destruction
Slept with thee, to awake with thine awakening!
And only took—Accursed gold! thou liest
Like poison in my hands; I dare not use thee,
Nor part from thee; thou camest in such a guise,
Methinks thou wouldst contaminate all hands
Like mine. Yet I have done, to atone for thee,
Thou villainous gold! and thy dead master's doom,
Though he died not by me or mine, as much
As if he were my brother! I have ta'en
His orphan Ida—cherish'd her as one
Who will be mine.

Enter an Attendant.

Atten. The abbot, if it please
Your excellency, whom you sent for, waits
Upon you. [Exit Attendant.]

Enter the Prior Albert.

Prior. Peace be with these walls, and all Within them!

Steg. Welcome, welcome, holy father!
And may thy prayer be heard!—all men have need
Of such, and I—

Prior. Have the first claim to all
The prayers of our community. Our convent, Erected by your ancestors, is still Protected by their children.

Steg. Yes, good father;
Continue daily orisons for us
In these dim days of heresies and blood,
Though the schismatic Swede, Gustavus, is Gone home.

Prior. To the endless home of unbelievers,
Where there is everlasting wail and woe,
Gnashing of teeth, and tears of blood, and fire
Eternal, and the worm which dieth not!

Steg. True, father: and to avert those pangs from one.

Who, though of our most faultless holy church,
Yet died without its last and dearest offices,
Which smooth the soul through purgatorial pains,
I have to offer humbly this donation
In masses for his spirit.

[Stegendorf offers the gold which he had taken from Stralenheim.]

Prior. Count, if I
Receive it, 't is because I know too well
Refusal would offend you. Be assured
The largess shall be only dealt in alms,
And every mass no less sung for the dead.

296

Our house needs no donations, thanks to yours,
Which has of old endow'd it; but from you
And yours in all meet things 't is fit we obey.
For whom shall mass be said?

Steg. (faltering). For—for—the dead.

Prior. His name?
Steg. 'T is from a soul, and not a name,
I would avert perdition.

Prior. I meant not
To pry into your secret. We will pray
For one unknown, the same as for the proudest.

Steg. Secret! I have none; but, father, he who's gone

Might have one; or, in short, he did bequeath—
No, not bequeath—but I bestow this sum
For pious purposes.

Prior. A proper deed
In the behalf of our departed friends.

Steg. But he who's gone was not my friend, but foe,
The deadliest and the staunchest.

Prior. Better still!
To employ our means to obtain heaven for the souls
Of our dead enemies is worthy those
Who can forgive them living.

Steg. But I did not
Forgive this man. I loathed him to the last,
As he did me. I do not love him now,
But—

Prior. Best of all! for this is pure religion!
You fain would rescue him you hate from hell—
An evangelical compassion—with Your own gold too!

Steg. Father, 't is not my gold.
Prior. Whose then? You said it was no legacy.

Steg. No matter whose—of this be sure, that he Who own'd it never more will need it, save
In that which it may purchase from your altars:
'T is yours, or theirs.

Prior. Is there no blood upon it?
Steg. No; but there's worse than blood—eternal shame!

Prior. Did he who own'd it die in his bed? Alas!
Steg. He did.

Prior. Son! you relapse into revenge,
If you regret your enemy's bloodless death.

Steg. His death was fathomlessly deep in blood.
Prior. You said he died in his bed, not battle.

Steg. He Died, I scarce know—but—he was stabb'd i' the dark,

And now you have it—perished on his pillow
By a cut-throat!—Ay!—you may look upon me!
I am not the man. I'll meet your eye on that point,
As I can one day God's.

Prior. Nor did he die
By means, or men, or instrument of yours?

Steg. No! by the God who sees and strikes!
Prior. Nor know you

Who slew him?
Steg. I could only guess at one,
And he to me a stranger, unconnected,
As unemployed. Except by one day's knowledge,
I never saw the man who was suspected.

Prior. Then you are free from guilt.
Steg. (severely). Oh! am I?—may I!

Prior. You have said so, and know best.
Steg. Father! I have spoken

The truth, and nought but truth, if not the whole:
Yet say I am not guilty! for the blood
Of this man weighs on me, as if I shed it,
Though, by the Power who abhorreth human blood,
I did not!—nay, once spared it, when I might
And could—ay, perhaps, should! (if our self-safety
Be e'er excusable in such defences
Against the attacks of over-potent foes):

But pray for him, for me, and all my house;
For, as I said, though I be innocent,
I know not why, a like remorse is on me,
As if he had fallen by me or mine. Pray for me,
Father! I have pray'd myself in vain.

Prior. I will.
Be comforted! You are innocent, and should Be calm as innocence.

Sieg. But calmness is not Always the attribute of innocence.
I feel it is not.

Prior. But it will be so,
When the mind gathers up its truth within it.
Remember the great festival to-morrow,
In which you rank amidst our chiefest nobles,
As well as your brave son; and smooth your aspect,
Nor in the general orison of thanks
For bloodshed stopt, let blood you shed not rise
A cloud upon your thoughts. This were to be Too sensitive. Take comfort, and forget
Such things, and leave remorse unto the guilty.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A large and magnificent Gothic Hall
in the Castle of Siegendorf, decorated with Trophies, Banners, and Arms of that Family.

Enter Arnheim and Maister, attendants of Count Siegendorf.

Arn. Be quick! the count will soon return: the ladies

Already are at the portal. Have you sent
The messengers in search of him he seeks for?

Ma. I have, in all directions, over Prague,
As far as the man's dress and figure could
By your description track him. The devil take These revels and processions! All the pleasure
(If such there be) must fall to the spectators.
I'm sure none doth to us who make the show.

Arn. Go to! my lady countess comes.

Ma. I'd rather
Ride a day's hunting on an outworn jade,
Than follow in the train of a great man
In these dull pageantries.

Arn. Begone! and rail
Within. [Exeunt.]

Enter the Countess Josephine Siegendorf and Ida Stralenheim.

Joe. Well, Heaven be praised, the show is over!
Ida. How can you say so? Never have I dreamt
Of aught so beautiful. The flowers, the boughs,
The banners, and the nobles, and the knights,
The gems, the robes, the plumes, the happy faces,
The couriers, and the incense, and the sun
Streaming through the stain'd windows, even the tombs,

Which look'd so calm, and the celestial hymns,
Which seem'd as if they rather came from heaven
Than mounted there. The bursting organ's peal
Rolling on high like an harmonious thunder;
The white robes and the lifted eyes; the world
At peace! and all at peace with one another!
Oh, my sweet mother! [Embracing Josephine.]

Joe. My beloved child!
For such, I trust, thou shalt be shortly.

Ida. Oh!
I am so already. Feel how my heart beats!
Joe. It does, my love; and never may it throb
With aught more bitter.

Ida. Never shall it do so!
How should it? What should make us grieve? I hate

To hear of sorrow: how can we be sad,
Who love each other so entirely? You,
The count, and Ulric, and your daughter Ida.

Joe. Poor child!

Ida. Do you pity me?
Joe. No: I but envy,
And that in sorrow, not in the world's sense
Of the universal vice, if one vice be
More general than another.

Ida. I'll not bear
A word against a world which still contains

You and my Ulric. Did you ever see Aught like him? How he tower'd amongst them
all!

How all eyes follow'd him! The flowers fell faster—
Rain'd from each lattice at his feet, methought,
Than before all the rest; and where he trod
I dare be sworn that they grow still, nor o'er
Will wither.

Joe. You will spoli him, little flatterer,
If he should hear you.

Ida. But he never will.
I dare not say so much to him—I fear him.

Joe. Why so? he loves you well.

Ida. But I can never
Shape my thoughts of him into words to him:
Besides, he sometimes frightens me.

Joe. How so?
Ida. A cloud comes o'er his blue eyes suddenly,
Yet he says nothing.

Joe. It is nothing: all men,
Especially in these dark troublous times,
Have much to think of.

Ida. But I cannot think
Of aught save him.

Joe. Yet there are other men,
In the world's eye, as goodly. There's, for instance,
The young Count Waldorf, who scarce once withdrew

His eyes from yours to-day.

Ida. I did not see him,
But Ulric. Did you not see at the moment
When all knelt, and I wept? and yet methought, Through my fast tears, though they were thick and warm,

I saw him smiling on me.

Joe. I could not
See aught save heaven, to which my eyes were raised
Together with the people's.

Ida. I thought too
Of heaven, although I look'd on Ulric.

Joe. Come,
Let us retire; they will be here anon
Expectant of the banquet. We will lay
Aside these nodding plumes and dragging trains.

Ida. And, above all, these stiff and heavy jewels,
Which make my head and heart ache, as both throb
Beneath their glitter o'er my brow and zone.
Dear mother, I am with you. [Exeunt.]

Enter Count Siegendorf, in full dress, from the solemnity, and Ludwig.

Sieg. Is he not found?
Lud. Strict search is making every where; and if
The man be in Prague, be sure he will be found.

Sieg. Where's Ulric?

Lud. He rode round the other way
With some young nobles; but he left them soon;
And, if I err not, not a minute since
I heard his excellency, with his train,
Gallop o'er the west drawbridge.

Enter Ulric, splendidly dressed.

Sieg. (to Ludwig). See they cease not Their quest of him I have described. [Exit Ludwig.]
Oh, Ulric!

How have I long'd for thee! Your wish is granted—

Behold me! I have seen the murderer.

Ulric. Whom? Where?

Sieg. The Hungarian, who slew Stralenheim.

Ulric. You dream.

Sieg. I live! and as I live, I saw him—
Heard him! he dared to utter even my name.

Ulric. What name?

Sieg. Werner! 't was mine.

Ulric. No more: forget it. It must be so

Sieg. Never! never! all
My destinies were woven in that name:
It will be not engraved upon my tomb,
But it may lead me there.

Ulric. To the point—the Hungarian?
Sieg. Listen!—The church was throng'd; the hymn was raised;

"Tu Deus" peal'd from nations, rather than
From choirs, in one great cry of "God be praised!"
For one day's peace, after thrice ten dread years,
Each bloodier than the former: I arose,
With all the nobles, and as I look'd down
Along the lines of lifted faces,—from
Our banner'd and escutcheon'd gallery, I Saw, like a flash of lightning (for I saw
A moment and no more), what struck me sightless
To all else—the Hungarian's face! I grew
Sick; and when I recover'd from the mist
Which curi'd about my senses, and again
Look'd down, I saw him not. The thanksgiving
Was over, and we march'd back in procession.

Ulric. Continue.

Sieg. When we reach'd the Muldan's bridge,
The joyous crowd above, the numberless
Barks mann'd with revellers in their best garb,
Which shot along the glancing tide below,
The decorated street, the long array,
The clashing music, and the thundering
Of far artillery, which seem'd to bid
A long and loud farewell to its great doings,
The standards o'er me, and the trappings round,
The roar of rushing thousands,—all—all could not Chase this man from my mind, although my senses
No longer held him palpable.

Ulric. You saw him
No more, then?

Sieg. I look'd, as a dying soldier
Looks at a draught of water, for this man:
But still I saw him not; but in his stead—

Ulric. What in his stead?

Sieg. My eye for ever fell
Upon your dancing crest: the loftiest
As on the loftiest and the loveliest head
It rose the highest of the stream of plumes,
Which overflow'd the glittering streets of Prague.

Ulric. What 's this to the Hungarian?

Sieg. Much; for I
Had almost then forgot him in my son;
When just as the artillery ceased, and paused
The music, and the crowd embraced in lieu
Of shouting, I heard in a deep, low voice,
Distinct and keener far upon my ear
Than the late cannon's volume, this word—

"Werner!"

Ulric. Uttered by—

Sieg. Hark! I turn'd—and saw—and fell.

Ulric. And wherefore? Were you seen?

Sieg. The officious care
Of those around me dragg'd me from the spot,

Seeing my faintness, ignorant of the cause:
You, too, were too remote in the passage
(The old nobles being divided from their children)
To aid me.

Ulric. But I'll aid you now.

Sieg. In what? In what?
Ulric. In searching for this man, or—When he's found

What shall we do with him? I know not that.

Sieg. Then wherefore seek?

Ulric. Because I cannot rest
Till he is found. His fate, and Stralenheim's,
And ours, seem interwisted; nor can be Unravell'd till—

Enter an Attendant.

Attendant. A stranger to wait on

Your excellency.

Sieg. Who?

Attendant. He gave no name.

Sieg. Admit him nevertheless.
[The Attendant introduces Gaber, and afterwards exit.]

Gaber. Ah!
Sieg. (angrily). 'Tis, then, Werner!

Gaber. The name you know, sir, by that name; and you!

Sieg. I have sought you, and have found you:
You are charged

(Your own heart may inform you why) with such A crime as—

Gaber. Give it utterance, and then
I'll meet the consequences.

Sieg. You shall do so—

Unless—

Gaber. First, who accuses me?

Sieg. All things,

If not all men: the universal rumour—
My own presence on the spot—the place—the time—

And every speak of circumstance unite
To fix the blot on you.

Gaber. And on me only?
Pause ere you answer: is no other name,
Save mine, stain'd in this business?

Sieg. Trying within!

Who play't with thine own guilt! Of all that breathe

Thou best dost know the innocence of him
'Gainst whom thy breath would blow thy bloody slander.

But I will talk no further with a wretch,
Further than justice asks. Answer at once,

And without quibbling, to my charge.

Gaber. 'Tis false!

Sieg. Who says so?

Gaber. I. And how disprove it?

Sieg. The presence of the murderer.

Gaber. Name him!

May have more names than one. Your knowledge had so

Once on a time.

Sieg. If you mean me, I deem
Your utmost.

Gaber. You may do so, and in safety.

I know the assassin.

Sieg. Where is he?

Gaber. (pointing to Ulric).
[Ulric rushes forward to attack Gaber, and doff interposes.]

Sieg. Liar and fend! but you shall not be slain;
These walls are mine, and you are safe within them.

[He turns to Ulric.]

Ulric, repel this calumny, as I
Will do. I avow it is a growth so monstrous,
I could not deem it earth-born: but be calm;
It will refute itself. But touch him not.

[Ulric endeavors to compose himself.]

Gab. Look at him, count, and then hear me.
Sieg. (first to Gabor, and then looking at Ulric.) I hear thee.

My God! you look—

Ulric. How?

Sieg. As on that dread night
When we met in the garden.

Ulric. (composes himself.) It is nothing.

Gab. Count, you are bound to hear me. I came hither

Not seeking you, but sought. When I knelt down
Amidst the people in the church, I dream'd not
To find the beggar'd Werner in the seat
Of senators and princes; but you have call'd me,
And we have met.

Sieg. Go on, sir.

Gab. Ere I do so,
Allow me to inquire who profited
By Stralenheim's death? Was't I—as poor as ever;
And poorer by suspicion on my name!
The baron lost in that last outrage neither
Jewels nor gold; his life alone was sought,—
A life which stood between the claims of others
To honors and estates scarce less than princely.

Sieg. These hints, as vague as vain, attach no less
To me than to my son.

Gab. I can't help that.
But let the consequence alight on him
Who feels himself the guilty one among us.
I speak of you, Count Siegendorf, because I know you innocent, and deem you just.
But ere I can proceed—dare you protect me?
Dare you command me?

[Siegendorf first looks at the Hungarian, and then at Ulric, who has unbuckled his sabre, and is drawing lines with it on the floor—still in his sheath.]

Ulric. (looks at his father and says)

Let the man go on!

Gab. I am unarm'd, count—bid your son lay down
His sabre.

Ulric. (offers it to him contemptuously.)

Take it.

Gab. No, sir, 't is enough
That we are both unarm'd—I would not choose
To wear a steel which may be stain'd with more
Blood than came there in battle.

Ulric. (casts the sabre from him in contempt.)

It—or some

Such other weapon, in my hands—spared yours
Once, when disarm'd and at my mercy.

Gab. True—

I have not forgotten it: you spared me for
Your own especial purpose—to sustain
An ignominy not my own.

Ulric. Proceed.

The tale is doubtless worthy the relator.

But is it of my father to hear further?

[To Siegendorf.]

Sieg. (takes his son by the hand.) My son, I know my own innocence, and doubt not
Of yours—but I have promised this man patience;
Let him continue.

Gab. I will not detain you

By speaking of myself much: I began
Life early—and am what the world has made me.
At Frankfort on the Oder, where I pass'd
A winter in obscurity, it was
My chance at several places of resort

(Which I frequented sometimes, but not often)
To hear related a strange circumstance
In February last. A martial force,
Sent by the state, had, after strong resistance,
Secured a band of desperate men, supposed
Marauders from the hostile camp.—They proved,
However, not to be so—but banditti,
Whom either accident or enterprise
Had carried from their usual haunt—the forests
Which skirt Bohemia—even into Lusatia.
Many amongst them were reported of High rank—and martial law slept for a time.
At last they were escorted o'er the frontiers,
And placed beneath the civil jurisdiction
Of the free town of Frankfort. Of their fate,
I know no more.

Sieg. And what is this to Ulric?

Gab. Amongst them there was said to be one
man

Of wonderful endowments:—birth and fortune,
Youth, strength, and beauty, almost superhuman,
And courage as unrival'd, were proclaim'd
His by the public rumor; and his sway,
Not only over his associates, but
His judges, was attributed to witchcraft,
Such was his influence:—I have no great faith
In any magic save that of the mine—
I therefore deem'd him wealthy.—But my soul
Was roused with various feelings to seek out
This prodigy, if only to behold him.

Sieg. And did you so?

Gab. You'll hear. Chance favor'd me:

A popular affray in the public square
Drew crowds together—it was one of those Occasions where men's souls look out of them,
And show them as they are—even in their faces:
The moment my eye met his, I exclaim'd,
"This is the man!" though he was then, as since,
With the nobles of the city. I felt sure
I had not err'd, and watch'd him long and nearly;
I noted down his form—his gesture—features,
Stature, and bearing—and amidst them all,
'Midst every natural and acquired distinction,
I could discern, methought, the assassin's eye
And gladiator's heart.

Ulric. (smiling.) The tale sounds well.

Gab. And may sound better.—He appear'd to me
One of those beings to whom Fortune bends
As she doth to the daring—and on whom
The fates of others oft depend; besides,
An indescribable sensation drew me
Near to this man, as if my point of fortune
Was to be fix'd by him.—There I was wrong.

Sieg. And may not be right now.

Gab. I follow'd him,
Solicited his notice—and obtain'd it—
Though not his friendship:—it was his intention
To leave the city privately—we left it
Together—and together we arrived
In the poor town where Werner was conceal'd,
And Stralenheim was succor'd.—Now we are on
The verge—dare you hear further?

Sieg. I must do so—
Or I have heard too much.

Gab. I saw in you
A man above his station—and if not
So high, as now I find you, in my then
Conceptions, 't was that I had rarely seen
Men such as you appear'd in height of mind
In the most high of worldly rank; you were Poor, even to all save rage: I would have shared
My purse, though slender, with you—you refused it.
Sieg. Doth my refusal make a debt to you,
That thus you urge it?

Gab. Still you owe me something,
Though not for that; and I owed you my safety,
At least my seeming safety, when the slaves

Of Stralenheim pursued me on the grounds
That I had robb'd him.

Sieg. I conceal'd you—I,
Whom and whose house you arraign, reviving viper!

Gab. I accuse no man—save in my defence.
You, count, have made yourself accuser—judge:
Your hall's my court, your heart is my tribunal.
Be just, and I'll be merciful!

Sieg. You merciful!—
You! Base calumniator!

Gab. I. 'T will rest
With me at last to be so. You conceal'd me

In secret passages known to yourself,
You said, and to none else. At dead of night,
Weary with watching in the dark, and dubious
Of tracing back my way, I saw a glimmer,
Through distant crannies, of a twinkling light:
I follow'd it, and reach'd a door—a secret
Portal—which open'd to the chamber, where,
With cautious hand and slow, having first undone
As much as made a crevice of the fastening,
I look'd through and beheld a purple bed,
And on it Stralenheim!

Sieg. A sleep! And yet
You slew him!—Wretch!

Gab. He was already slain,
And bleeding like a sacrifice. My own
Blood became too.

Sieg. But he was all alone!
You saw none else? You did not see the—

Gab. [He pauses from agitation.] No,
He, whom you dare not name, nor even I

Scarce dare to recollect, was not then in The chamber.

Sieg. (to Ulric). Then, my boy! thou art guiltless
still.

Thou had'st me say I was so once—Oh! now
Do thou as much!

Gab. Be patient! I can not
Recede now, though it shake the very walls
Which frown above us. You remember,—or
If not, your son does,—that the looks were changed
Beneath his chief inspection on the morn
Which led to this same night: how he had enter'd
He best knows—but within an antechamber,
The door of which was half ajar, I saw
A man who wash'd his bloody hands, and oft
With stern and anxious glance gazed back upon
The bleeding body—but it moved no more.

Sieg. Oh! God of fathers!

Gab. I beheld his features
As I see yours—but yours they were not, though Resembling them—behold them in Count Ulric's!
Distinct, as I beheld them, though the expression
Is not now what it then was;—but it was so
When I first charged him with the crime—so lately.

Sieg. This is so—

Gab. (interrupting him). Nay—but hear me to the end!

Now you must do so.—I conceived myself
Betray'd by you and him (for now I saw
There was some tie between you) into this Pretended den of refuge, to become
The victim of your guilt; and my first thought
Was vengeance: but, though arm'd with a short poniard

(Having left my sword without), I was no match
For him at any time, as had been proved
That morning—either in address or force.
I turn'd, and fled—! the dark: chance rather than Skill made me gain the secret door of the hall,
And thence the chamber where you slept: if I
Had found you waking, Heaven alone can tell What vengeance and suspicion might have prompted;

But ne'er slept guilt as Werner slept that night.

Sieg. And yet I had horrid dreams! and such brief sleep,

The stars had not gone down when I awoke.
Why didst thou spare me? I dreamt of my father—
And now my dream is out!

Gab. 'T is not my fault,
If I have read it.—Well! I sed and hid me—

Chance led me here after so many moons—
And show'd me Werner in Count Siegeudorf!
Werner, whom I had sought in huts in vain,
Inhabited the palace of a sovereign!
You sought me and have found me—now you know
My secret, and may weigh its worth.

Sieg. (after a pause). Indeed!

Gab. Is it revenge or justice which inspires
Your meditation?

Sieg. Neither—I was weighing
The value of your secret.

Gab. You shall know it
At once:—When you were poor, and I, though poor,
Rich enough to relieve such poverty
As might have envy'd mine, I offer'd you
My purse—you would not share it:—I'll be franker
With you: you are wealthy, noble, trusted by
The imperial powers—you understand me?

Sieg. Yes.
Gab. Not quite. You think me venal, and scarce true:

'T is no less true, however, that my fortunes
Have made me both at present. You shall aid me;
I would have aided you—and also have
Been somewhat damaged in my name to save Yours and your son's. Weigh well what I have said.

Sieg. Dare you await the event of a few minutes'
Deliberation?

Gab. (casts his eyes on Ulric, who is leaning against a pillar). If I should do so?

Sieg. I pledge my life for yours. Withdraw into
This tower.

Gab. (hesitatingly). This is the second safe asylum
You have offer'd me.

Sieg. And was not the first so?

Gab. I know not that even now—but will approve
The second. I have still a further shield.—
I did not enter Prague alone; and should I
Be put to rest with Stralenheim, there are
Some tongues without will wag in my behalf.
Be brief in your decision!

Sieg. I will be so.—

My word is sacred and irrevocable
Within these walls, but it extends no further.

Gab. I'll take it for so much.

Sieg. (points to Ulric's sabre still upon the ground).
Take also that—

I saw you eye it eagerly, and him
Distrustfully.

Gab. (takes up the sabre). I will; and so provide
To sell my life—not cheaply.

[Gabor goes into the turret, which Siegeudorf closes.

Sieg. (advances to Ulric). Now, Count Ulric!
For son I dare not call thee—What sayst thou?

Ulric. His tale is true.

Sieg. True, monster!

Ulric. Most true, father!

And you did well to listen to it: what We know, we can provide against. He must Be silenced.

Sieg. Ay, with half of my domains;
And with the other half, could he and thou
Unsay this villainy.

Ulric. It is no time
For trifling or dissembling. I have said

His story's true; and he too must be silenced.

Sieg. How so?

Ulric. As Stralenheim is. Are you so dull

a never to have hit on this before?
Then we met in the garden, what except discovery in the act could make me know his death? Or had the prince's household been then summon'd, would the cry for the police been left to such a stranger? Or should I have loiter'd on the way? Or could you, Werner,
The object of the baron's hate and fears,
I have fled, unless by many an hour before suspicion woke? I sought and fathom'd you,
Doubting if you were false or feeble: I
Perceived you were the latter: and yet so Confiding have I found you, that I doubted
At times your weakness.

Sieg. Parricide! no less Than common stabber! What deed of my life,
Or thought of mine, could make you deem me fit
For your accomplice?

Ulr. Father, do not raise
The devil you cannot lay between us. This Is time for union and for action, not
For family disputes. While you were tortured,
Could I be calm? Think you that I have heard
This fellow's tale without some feeling?—You
Have taught me feeling for you and myself;
For whom or what else did you ever teach it?
Sieg. Oh! my dead father's curse! 'tis working
now.

Ulr. Let it work on! the grave will keep it down!
Ashes are feeble foes: it is more easy
To baffle such, than countermine a mole,
Which winds its blind but living path beneath you.
Yet hear me still!—If you condemn me, yet
Remember who hath taught me once too often
To listen to him! Who proclaim'd to me
That there were crimes made venial by the occasion?
That passion was our nature? that the goods
Of Heaven waited on the goods of fortune?
Who show'd me his humanity secured
By his nerves only? Who deprived me of
All power to vindicate myself and race
In open day? By his disgrace which stamp'd
(It might be) bastardy on me, and on Himself—a felon's brand! The man who is
At once both warm and weak invites to deeds
He longs to do, but dare not. Is it strange
That I should act what you could think? We have done

With right and wrong; and now must only ponder
Upon effects, not causes. Stralenheim,
Whose life I saved from impulse, as, unknown,
I would have saved a peasant's or a dog's, I slew Known as our foe—but not from vengeance. He Was a rock in our way which I cut through,
As doth the bolt, because it stood between us
And our true destination—but not idly.
As stranger I preserved him, and he owed me
His life: when due, I but resumed the debt.
He, you, and I stood o'er a gulf wherein
I have plunged our enemy. You kindled first
The torch—you show'd the path; now trace me that
Of safety—or let me!

Sieg. I have done with life!
Ulr. Let us have done with that which cankers
life—

Familiar feuds and vain recriminations
Of things which cannot be undone. We have Nothing to learn or hide: I know no fear,
And have within these very walls men who (Although you know them not) dare venture all things.

You stand high with the state; what passes here
Will not excite her too great curiosity:
Keep your own secret, keep a steady eye,
Stir not, and speak not:—leave the rest to me;
We must have no third babblers thrust between us.
[Exit Ulr.]

Sieg. (solus). Am I awake? are these my fathers' halls?

And you—my son? My son! mine! who have ever
Abhor'd both mystery and blood, and yet
Am plunged into the deepest hell of both!
I must be speedy, or more will be shed—
The Hungarian's!—Ulric—he hath partisans,
It seems: I might have guess'd as much. Oh, fool!
Wolves prowl in company. He hath the key
(As I too) of the opposite door which leads Into the turret. Now then! or once more
To be the father of fresh crimes, no less Than of the criminal! Ho! Gabor! Gabor!
[Exit into the turret, closing the door after him.]

SCENE II.—The Interior of the Turret.

Gabor and Siegendorf.

Gab. Who calls?
Sieg. I—Siegendorf! Take these, and fly!
Loose not a moment!

[Throws off a diamond star and other jewels, and throws them into Gabor's hand.]

Gab. What am I to do
With these?

Sieg. Whate'er you will: sell them, or hoard,
And prosper; but delay not, or you are lost!
Gab. You pledged your honor for my safety!

Sieg. And
Must thus redeem it. Fly! I am not master,
It seems, of my own castle—of my own
Retainers—nay, even of these very walls,
Or I would bid them fall and crush me! Fly!
Or you will be slain by—

Gab. Is it even so?
Farewell, then! Recollect, however, count,
You sought this fatal interview!

Sieg. I did:
Let it not be more fatal still!—Begone!
Gab. By the same path I enter'd?

Sieg. Yes; that's safe still:
But loiter not in Prague;—you do not know
With whom you have to deal.

Gab. I know too well—
And knew it ere yourself, unhappy sire!
Farewell! [Exit Gabor.]

Sieg. (solus and listening). He hath clear'd the staircase. Ah! I hear
The door sound loud behind him! He is safe!
Safe!—Oh, my father's spirit!—I am faint—
[He leans down upon a stone seat, near the wall of the tower, in a drooping posture.]

Enter Ulr., with others armed, and with weapons drawn.

Ulr. Despatch!—he's there!
Lad. The count, my lord!

Ulr. (recognising Siegendorf). You here, sir!
Sieg. Yes: if you want another victim, strike!

Ulr. (seeing him strip of his jewels). Where is the ruffian who hath plunder'd you?

Vassals, despatch in search of him! You see
'Twas as I said—the wretch hath strip't my father
Of jewels which might form a prince's heirloom!
Away! I'll follow you forthwith.

[Exeunt all but Siegendorf and Ulr.]
What's this?

Where is the villain?
Sieg. There are two, sir: which

Are you in quest of?
Ulr. Let us hear no more

Of this: he must be found. You have not let him Escape?

Sieg. He's gone.
Ulr. With your connivance?

Sieg. With
My fullest, freest aid.

Ulr.

Then fare you well!

Sieg. Stop! I command—entreat—implore! Oh, Ulric!

Will you then leave me?

Ulr. What! remain to be denounced—dragg'd, it may be, in chains; and all by your inherent weakness, half-humanity, selfish remorse, and temporizing pity. That sacrifice your whole race to save A wretch to profit by our ruin! No, count, henceforth you have no son!

Sieg. I never had one; And would you ne'er had borne the useless name! Where will you go? I would not send you forth Without protection.

Ulr. Leave that unto me. I am not alone; nor merely the vain heir Of your domains; a thousand, ay, ten thousand Swords, hearts, and hands, are mine.

Sieg. The foresters! With whom the Hungarian found you first at Frankfort!

Ulr. Yes—men—who are worthy of the name! Go tell

Your senators that they look well to Prague; Their feast of peace was early for the times; There are more spirits abroad than have been laid With Wallenstein!

Enter Josephine and Ida.

Jos. What is't we hear? My Siegendorf! Thank Heaven, I see you safe!

Sieg. Safe! Yes, dear father!

Ida. No, no; I have no children: never more Call me by that worst name of parent.

Jos. What

Means my good lord! That you have given birth

To a demon! Ida (taking Ulric's hand). Who shall dare say this of Ulric?

Sieg. Ida, beware! there's blood upon that hand.

Ida (stopping to kiss it). I'd kiss it off, though it were mine.

Sieg. It is so!

Ulr. Away! It is your father's! [Exit Ulric.]

Ida. Oh, great God!

And I have loved this man! [Ida falls senseless—Josephine stands speechless with horror.]

Sieg. The wretch hath slain Them both!—My Josephine! we are now alone!

Would we had ever been so!—All is over For me!—Now open wide, my sire, thy grave;

Thy curse hath dug it deeper for thy son In mine!—The race of Siegendorf is past!

"While Franklin's quiet memory climbs to heaven,
Calming the lightning which but thence hath riven,
Or drawing from the no less kindred earth
Freedom and peace to that which boasts his birth."

Page 415, stanza v.

HOURS OF IDLENESS:

*A Series of Poems, Original and Translated.

Virgilibus parisque carnis.—HORACE, lib. III., Ode 1.
Mâle' de sa part' alone, s'élève et retour.—HOMER, Iliad, x. 284.
He whistled as he went, for want of thought.—DAYDEN.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE FREDERICK, EARL OF CARLISLE,

KNIGHT OF THE GARTER, &c., &c.,

THE SECOND EDITION OF THESE POEMS IS INSCRIBED,

BY HIS OBLIGED WARD AND AFFECTIONATE KINSMAN,†

THE AUTHOR.

PREFACE

IN submitting to the public eye the following collection, I have not only to combat the difficulties that writers of verse generally encounter, but may incur the charge of presumption for obtruding myself on the world, when, without doubt, I might be, at my age, more usefully employed.

These productions are the fruits of the lighter hours of a young man who has lately completed his nineteenth year. As they bear the internal evidence of a boyish mind, this is, perhaps, unnecessary information. Some few were written during the disadvantages of illness and depression of spirits: under the former influence, "CHILDREN RECOLLECTIONS," in particular, were composed. This consideration, though it cannot excite the voice of praise, may at least arrest the arm of censure. A considerable portion of these poems have been privately printed, at the request and for the perusal of my friends. I am sensible that the partial and frequently injudicious admiration of a social circle is not the criterion by which poetical genius is to be estimated, yet, "to do greatly," we must "dare greatly;" and I have hazarded my reputation and feelings in publishing this volume. "I have passed the Rubicon," and must stand or fall by the "cast of the die." In the latter event, I shall submit without a murmur; for, though not without solicitude for the fate of these effusions, my expectations are by no means sanguine. It is probable that I may have dared much and done little; for, in the words of Cowper, "it is one thing to write what may please our friends, who, because they are such, are apt to be a little biased in our favor, and another to write what may please every body; because they who have no connection, or even knowledge of the author, will be sure to find fault if they can." To the truth of this, however, I do not wholly subscribe: on the contrary, I feel convinced that these trifles will not be treated with injustice. Their merit, if they possess any, will be liberally allowed: their numerous faults, on the other hand, cannot expect that favor which has been denied to others of maturer years, decided character, and far greater ability.

I have not aimed at exclusive originality, still less have I studied any particular model for imitation: some translations are given, of which many are paraphrastic. In the original pieces there may appear a casual coincidence with authors whose works I have been accustomed to read; but I have not been guilty of intentional plagiarism. To produce any thing entirely new, in an age so fertile in rhyme, would be a Herculean task, as every subject has already been treated to its utmost extent. Poetry, however, is not my primary vocation; to divert the dull moments of indisposition, or the monotony of a vacant hour, urged me "to this sin:" little can be expected from so unpromising a muse. My wreath, scanty as it must be, is all I shall derive from these productions; and I shall never attempt to replace its fading leaves, or pluck a single additional sprig from groves where I am, at best, an intruder. Though accustomed, in my younger days, to rove a careless mountaineer on the Highlands of Scotland, I have not, of late years, had the benefit of such pure air, or so elevated a residence, as might enable me to enter the lists with genuine bards, who have enjoyed both these advantages. But they derive considerable fame, and a few not less profit, from their productions;

* First published in 1807. For the famous criticism of the Edinburgh Review upon "Hours of Idleness," and which provoked from Byron "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," see Appendix, Note 47.

† Isabella, the daughter of William, fourth Lord Byron (great-great uncle of the poet), became, in 1763, the wife of Henry, fourth earl of Carlisle, and was the mother of the fifth earl, to whom this dedication was addressed.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

while I shall expiate my rashness as an interloper, certainly without the latter, and in all probability with a very slight share of the former. I leave to others "virtum volitare per ora." I look to the few who will hear with patience "dulces desipere in loco." To the former worthies I resign, without repining, the hope of immortality, and content myself with the not very magnificent prospect of ranking amongst "the mob of gentlemen who write;"—my readers must determine whether I dare say "with ease," or the honor of a posthumous page in "The Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors,"—a work to which the Peerage is under infinite obligations, inasmuch as many names of considerable length, sound, and antiquity are thereby rescued from the obscurity which unluckily overshadows several voluminous productions of their illustrious bearers.

With slight hopes, and some fears, I publish this first and last attempt. To the dictates of young ambition may be ascribed many actions more criminal and equally absurd. To a few of my own age the contents may afford amusement: I trust they will, at least, be found harmless. It is highly improbable, from my situation and pursuits hereafter, that I should ever obtrude myself a second time on the public; nor, even, in the very doubtful event of present indulgence, shall I be tempted to commit a future trespass of the same nature. The opinion of Dr. Johnson on the Poems of a noble relation of mine,* "That when a man of rank appeared in the character of an author, he deserved to have his merit handsomely allowed,"† can have little weight with verbal, and still less with periodical, censors; but were it otherwise, I should be loth to avail myself of the privilege, and would rather incur the bitterest censure of anonymous criticism, than triumph in honors granted solely to a title.

Hours of Idleness.

ON THE DEATH OF A YOUNG LADY,

COUNSEL TO THE AUTHOR, AND VERY DEAR TO HIM.‡

Hush! 'n are the winds, and still the evening gloom,
Not e'en a zephyr wanders through the grove,
Whilst I return, to view my Margaret's tomb,
And scatter flowers on the dust I love.

Within this narrow cell reclines her clay,
That clay, where once such animation beam'd:
The King of Terrors seized her as his prey;
Not worth, nor beauty, have her life redeem'd.

Oh! could that King of Terrors pity feel,
Or Heaven reverse the dread decrees of fate,
Not here the mourner would his grief reveal,
Not here the muse her virtues would relate.

But wherefore weep? Her matchless spirit soars
Beyond where splend' shines the orb of day;
And weeping angels lead her to those bowers
Where endless pleasures virtue's deeds repay.

And shall presumptuous mortals Heaven arraign,
And, madly, godlike Providence accuse?
Ah! no, far fly from me attempts so vain;—
I'll ne'er submission to my God refuse.

Yet in remembrance of those virtues dear,
Yet fresh the memory of that beauteous face;
Still they call forth my warm affection's tear,
Still in my heart retain their wonted place.

[MSS. B.]

*The Earl of Carlisle.

†The passage referred to by Lord Byron occurs in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

‡The author claims the indulgence of the reader more for this piece than, perhaps, any other in the collection; but as it was written at an earlier period than the rest (being composed at the age of fourteen), and his first essay, he preferred submitting it to the indulgence of his friends in its present state, to making either addition or alteration.

§My first dash into poetry was as early as 1800. It was the ebullition of a passion for my first cousin, Margaret Parker (daughter and granddaughter of the two Admirals Parker),

TO E.—||

LET Folly smile, to view the names
Of thee and me in friendship twined;
Yet Virtue will have greater claims
To love, than rank with vice combined.

And though unequal is thy fate,
Since title deck'd my higher birth!
Yet envy not this gaudy state;
Thine is the pride of modest worth.

Our souls at least congenial meet,
Nor can thy lot my rank disgrace;
Our intercourse is not less sweet,
Since worth of rank supplies the place.

[MSS. B.]

TO D.—.

In thee, I fondly hoped to clasp
A friend, whom death alone could sever;
Till envy, with malignant grasp,
Detach'd thee from my breast for ever.

True, she has forced thee from my breast,
Yet, in my heart thou keep'st thy seat;
There, there thine image still must rest,
Until that heart shall cease to beat.

And, when the grave restores her dead,
When life again to dust is given,
On thy dear breast I'll lay my head—
Without thee, where would be my heaven?

[February, 1800.]

one of the most beautiful of evanescent beings. I have long forgotten the verse; but it would be difficult for me to forget her—her dark eyes—her long eye-lashes—her completely Greek cast of face and figure! I was then about twelve—she rather older, perhaps a year. She died about a year or two afterwards, in consequence of a fall, which injured her spine, and induced consumption.—Byron's Diary, 1801.

† This little poem, and some others in the collection, refer to a boy of Lord Byron's own age, son of one of his tenants at Newstead, for whom he had formed a romantic attachment, of earlier date than any of his school friendships.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

EPITAPH ON A FRIEND.

'Aethio epito pto thapton del Gouernon lino.—LAMBTON.

OH, Friend! for ever loved, for ever dear!
What fruitless tears have bathed thy honor'd bier,
What sighs re-echo'd to thy parting breath,
Whilst thou wast struggling in the pangs of death!
Could tears retard the tyrant in his course;
Could sighs avert his dart's relentless force;
Could youth and virtue claim a short delay,
Or beauty charm the spectre from his prey;
Thou still hadst lived to bless my aching sight,
Thy comrade's honor and thy friend's delight.
If yet thy gentle spirit hover nigh
The spot where now thy mouldering ashes lie,
Here wilt thou read, recorded on my heart,
A grief too deep to trust the sculptor's art.
No marble marks thy couch of lowly sleep,
But living statues there are seen to weep:
Affliction's semblance bends not o'er thy tomb,
Affliction's self deplores thy youthful doom.
What though thy sire lament his failing line,
A father's sorrows cannot equal mine!
Though none, like thee, his dying hour will cheer,
Yet other offspring soothe his anguish here:
But, who with me shall hold thy former place?
Thine image, what new friendship can efface?
Ah! none!—a father's tears will cease to flow,
Time will assuage an infant brother's woe;
To all, save one, is consolation known,
While solitary friendship sighs alone. [1899.]

A FRAGMENT.

WHEN, to their airy hall, my fathers' voice
Shall call my spirit, joyful in their choice:
When, poised upon the gale, my form shall ride,
Or, dark in mist, descend the mountain's side;
Oh! may my shade behold no sculptured urn,
To mark the spot where earth to earth returns!
No lengthen'd scroll, no praise-encumber'd stone;
My epitaph shall be my name alone:
If that with honor fail to crown my clay,
Oh! may no other fame my deeds repay!
That, only that, shall single out the spot;
By that remember'd, or with that forgot. [1899.]

ON LEAVING NEWSTEAD ABBEY.*

"Why dost thou build the hall, son of the winged days?
Thou lookest from thy tower to-day; yet a few years, and the blast of the desert comes, it howls in thy empty court."
—OWEN.

THROUGH thy battlements, Newstead, the hollow winds whistle;
Thou, the hall of my fathers, art gone to decay:
In thy once smiling garden, the hemlock and thistle
Have choked up the rose which late bloom'd in the way.

* The priory of Newstead, or de Novo Loco, in Sherwood, was founded about the year 1170, by Henry II., and dedicated to God and the Virgin. It was in the reign of Henry VIII., on the dissolution of the monasteries, that, by a royal grant, it was added, with the lands adjoining, to the other possessions of the Byron family. The favorite upon whom they were conferred, was the grand-nephew of the gallant soldier who fought by the side of Richmond at Bosworth, and is distinguished from the other knights of the same Christian name, in the family, by the title of "Sir John Byron the Little, with the great beard." A portrait of this personage was one of the few family pictures with which the walls of the abbey, while in the possession of the poet, were decorated. For an illustration of Newstead, see, ante, "Life of Byron."

Of the mail-cover'd barons, who proudly to battle Led their vassals from Europe to Palestine's plain, [rattle,
The escutcheon and shield, which with every blast
Are the only sad vestiges now that remain.

No more doth old Robert, with harp-stringing numbers,
Raise a flame in the breast for the war-laurel'd wreath;
Near Askalon's towers, John of Horistan slumbers,
Unnerv'd is the hand of his minstrel by death.

Paul and Hubert, too, sleep in the valley of Cressy;†
For the safety of Edward and England they fell:
My fathers! the tears of your country redress ye;
How you fought, how you died, still her annals can tell.

On Marston,‡ with Rupert§ 'gainst traitors contending,
Four brothers enrich'd with their blood the bleak
field;
For the rights of a monarch their country defend-
ing,
Till death their attachment to royalty seal'd.¶

Shades of heroes, farewell! your descendant, departing
From the seat of his ancestors, bids you adieu!
Abroad, or at home, your remembrance imparting
New courage, he'll think upon glory and you.

Though a tear dim his eye at this sad separation,
'Tis nature, not fear, that excites his regret;
Far distant he goes, with the same emulation,
The fame of his fathers he ne'er can forget.

That fame, and that memory, still will he cherish;
He vows that he ne'er will disgrace your renown:
Like you will he live, or like you will he perish:
When decay'd, may he mingle his dust with his own! [1899.]

LINES

WRITTEN IN "LETTERS TO AN ITALIAN HUN AND AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN: BY J. J. ROUSSEAU:
FOUNDED ON FACTS."

"AWAY, away, your flattering arts
May now betray some simple hearts;
And you will smile at their believing,
And they shall weep at your deceiving."

ANSWER TO THE FOREGOING, ADDRESSED TO MISS —.

Dear, simple girl, those flattering arts,
From which thou'dst guard frail female hearts,
Exist but in imagination,—
Mere phantoms of thine own creation;
For he who views that witching grace,
That perfect form, that lovely face,

† Two of the family of Byron are enumerated as serving with distinction in the siege of Calais, under Edward III., and as among the knights who fell on the glorious field of Cressy.

‡ The battle of Marston Moor, where the adherents of Charles I. were defeated.

§ Son of the elector palatine, and nephew to Charles I. He afterwards commanded the fleet in the reign of Charles II.

¶ Sir Nicholas Byron served with distinction in the Low Countries; and, in the Great Rebellion, he was one of the first to take up arms in the royal cause. After the battle of Edgehill, he was made colonel-general of Cheshire and Shropshire, and governor of Chester.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

With eyes admiring, oh! believe me,
He never wishes to deceive thee:
Once in thy polish'd mirror glance,
Thou'lt there decry that elegance,
Which from our sex demands such praises,
But envy in the other raises:
Then he who tells thee of thy beauty,
Believe me, only does his duty:
Ah! fly not from the candid youth;
It is not flattery,—'t is truth. [July, 1864.]

ADRIAN'S ADDRESS TO HIS SOUL WHEN DYING.

[Animula! vagula, blandula,
Hesperus semperque corporis,
Que nunc atibis in loca—
Pallidula, rigida, nudula,
Nec, ut soles, dabis jocos?]

Am! gentle, fleeting, way'ring sprite,
Friend and associate of this clay!
To what unknown region borne,
Wilt thou now wing thy distant flight?
No more with wonted humor gay,
But pallid, cheerless, and forlorn.

TRANSLATION FROM CATULLUS.

IN LEBELIAN.

EQUAL to Jove that youth must be—
Greater than Jove he seems to me—
Who, free from Jealousy's alarms,
Securely views thy matchless charms:
That cheek, which ever dimpling glows,
That mouth, from whence such music flows,
To him, alike, are always known,
Reserved for him, and him alone.
Ah, Lesbia! though 't is death to me,
I cannot choose but look on thee;
But, at the sight, my senses fly;
I needs must gaze, but, gazing, die;
Whilst trembling with a thousand fears,
Parch'd to the throat my tongue adheres,
My pulse beats quick, my breath heaves short,
My limbs deny their slight support.
Cold dews my pallid face o'erspread,
With deadly languor droops my head,
My ears with tingling echoes ring,
And life itself is on the wing;
My eyes refuse the cheering light,
Their orbs are veil'd in starless night:
Such pangs my nature sinks beneath,
And feels a temporary death.

TRANSLATION OF THE EPITAPH ON VIRGIL AND TIBULLUS.

BY DOMITIUS MARCUS.

HE who sublime in epic numbers roll'd,
And he who struck the softer lyre of love,
By Death's * unequal hand alike controll'd,
Fit comrades in Elysian regions move!

IMITATION OF TIBULLUS.

"Sulpicia ad Cerinthum."—Lb. 4.

CRAUEL Cerinthus! does the fell disease
Which racks my breast your sickle bosom please?

* The hand of Death is said to be unjust or unequal, as Virgil was considerably older than Tibullus at his decease.

Alas! I wish'd but to o'ercome the pain,
That I might live for love and you again;
But now I scarcely shall bewail my fate:
By death alone I can avoid your hate.

TRANSLATION FROM CATULLUS.

[Lugeta, Venerea, Cupidinesque, etc.]

YE Cupids, droop each little head,
Nor let your wings with joy be spread,
My Lesbia's favorite bird is dead,
Whom dearer than her eyes she loved;
For he was gentle, and so true,
Obedient to her call he flew,
No fear, no wild alarm he knew,
But lightly o'er her bosom moved:

And softly fluttering here and there,
He never sought to cleave the air,
But chirrup'd oft, and, free from care,
Tuned to her ear his grateful strain.
Now having pass'd the gloomy bourne
From whence he never can return,
His death and Lesbia's grief I mourn,
Who sighs, alas! but sighs in vain.

Oh! curst be thou, devouring grave!
Whose jaws eternal victims crave,
From whom no earthly power can save,
For thou hast ta'en the bird away:
From thee my Lesbia's eyes o'erflow,
Her swollen cheeks with weeping glow;
Thou art the cause of all her woe,
Receptacle of life's decay.

IMITATED FROM CATULLUS.

TO ELLEN.

Oh! might I kiss those eyes of fire,
A million scars would quench desire:
Still would I steep my lips in bliss,
And dwell an age on every kiss:
Nor then my soul should sated be;
Still would I kiss and cling to thee:
Nought should my kiss from thee disave;
Still would we kiss, and kiss for ever;
E'en though the numbers did exceed
The yellow harvest's countless seed.
To part would be a vain endeavor:
Could I desert?—ah! never—never!

TRANSLATION FROM HORACE.

[Justum et tenacem propositis virum, etc.]

THE man of firm and noble soul
No factious clamors can control;
No threat'ning tyrant's darkling brow
Can swerve him from his just intent:
Gales the warring waves which plough,
By Auster on the billows spent,
To curb the Adriatic main,
Would awe his fix'd, determined mind in vain.

Ay, and the red right arm of Jove,
Hurling his lightnings from above,
With all his terrors there unroll'd,
He would unmoved, unawed, behold.
The flames of an expiring world,
Again in crashing chaos roll'd,
In vast promiscuous ruin hurl'd,
Might light his glorious funeral pile:
Still dauntless 'midst the wreck of earth he'd smile.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

FROM ANACREON.

[Odus Anacris Anacreon, c. v. A.]

I wish to tune my quivering lyre
To deeds of fame and notes of fire;
To echo, from its rising swell,
How heroes fought and nations fell,
When Atreus' sons advanced to war,
Or Tyrian Cadmus roved afar;
But still, to martial strains unknown,
My lyre recurs to love alone.
Fired with the hope of future fame,
I seek some nobler hero's name;
The dying chords are strung anew,
To war, to war, my harp is due:
With glowing strings, the epic strain
To Jove's great son I raise again;
Alcides and his glorious deeds,
Beneath whose arm the Hydra bleeds.
All, all in vain; my wayward lyre
Wakes silver notes of soft desire.
Adieu, ye chiefs renown'd in arms!
Adieu the clang of war's alarms!
To other deeds my soul is strung,
And sweeter notes shall now be sung;
My harp shall all its powers reveal,
To tell the tale my heart must feel:
Love, love alone, my lyre shall claim,
In songs of bliss and sighs of flame.

FROM ANACREON.

[Maeonius Anacris Anacreon, c. v. A.]

'T WAS now the hour when Night had driven
Her car half round yon sable heaven;
Bootes, only, seemed to roll
His arctic charge around the pole;
While mortals, lost in gentle sleep,
Forgot to smile, or ceased to weep:
At this lone hour, the Paphian boy,
Descending from the realms of joy,
Quick to my gate directs his course,
And knocks with all his little force.
My visions fled, alarm'd I rose,—
"What stranger breaks my blest repose?"
"Alas!" replies the wily child,
In faltering accents sweetly mild,
"A hapless infant here I roam,
Far from my dear maternal home.
Oh! shield me from the wintry blast!
The nightly storm is pouring fast.
No prowling robber lingers here.
A wandering baby who can fear?"
I heard his seeming artless tale,
I heard his sighs upon the gale:
My breast was never pity's foe,
But felt for all the baby's woe.
I drew the bar, and by the light,
Young Love, the infant, met my sight;
His bow across his shoulders flung,
And thence his fatal quiver hung
(Ah! little did I think the dart
Would rankle soon within my heart).
With care I tend my weary guest,
His little fingers chill my breast;
His glossy curls, his azure wing,
Which droop with nightly showers, I wring:
His shivering limbs the embers warm;
And now reviving from the storm,
Scarce had he felt his wonted glow,
Than swift he seized his slender bow:—

"I fain would know, my gentle host,"
He cried, "if this its strength has lost;
I fear, relax'd with midnight dews,
The strings their former aid refuse."
With poison tippt, his arrow flies,
Deep in my tortured heart it lies;
Then loud the joyous urchin laugh'd:—
"My bow can still impel the shaft:
'T is firmly fix'd, thy sighs reveal it;
Say, courteous host, canst thou not feel it?"

FROM THE PROMETHEUS VINCTUS OF ÆSCHYLUS.

[Mædonius Anacris Anacreon, c. v. A.]

GREAT Jove, to whose almighty throne
Both gods and mortals homage pay,
Ne'er may my soul thy power disown,
Thy dread behests ne'er disobey.
Oft shall the sacred victim fall
In sea-girt Ocean's mossy hall;
My voice shall raise no impious strain
'Gainst him who rules the sky and azure main.

How different now thy joyless fate,
Since first Healons thy bride,
When placed aloft in godlike state,
The blushing beauty by thy side,
Thou sat'st, while reverend Ocean smiled,
And mirthful strains the hours beguiled,
The Nymphs and Tritons danced around,
Nor yet thy doom was fix'd, nor Jove relentless frown'd."

[Harrow, Dec. 1, 1864.]

TO EMMA.

SINCE now the hour is come at last,
When you must quit your anxious lover;
Since now our dream of bliss is past,
One pang, my girl, and all is over.

Alas! that pang will be severe,
Which bids us part to meet no more;
Which tears me far from one so dear,
Departing for a distant shore.

Well! we have pass'd some happy hours,
And joy will mingle with our tears;
When thinking on these ancient towers,
The shelter of our infant years;

Where from this Gothic casement's height,
We view'd the lake, the park, the delf;
And still, though tears obstruct our sight,
We lingering look a last farewell,

O'er fields through which we used to run,
And spend the hours in childish play;
O'er shades where, when our race was done,
Reposing on my breast you lay;

Whilst I, admiring, too remiss,
Forgot to scare the hovering flies,
Yet envied every fly the kiss
It dared to give your slumbering eyes:

See still the little painted bark,
In which I row'd you o'er the lake;
See there, high waving o'er the park,
The elm I clamber'd for your sake.

* My first Harrow verses (that is, English, as exercises), a translation of a chorus from the Prometheus of Æschylus, were received by Dr. Drury, my grand patron (our head master), but coolly. No one had, at that time, the least notion that I should subside into poetry."—Byron Diary.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

These times are past—our joys are gone,
You leave me, leave this happy vale;
These scenes I must retrace alone:
Without thee what will they avail?

Who can conceive, who has not proved,
The anguish of a last embrace?
When, torn from all you fondly loved,
You bid a long adieu to peace.

This is the deepest of our woes,
For this these tears our cheeks bedew;
This is of love the final close,
Oh, God! the fondest, last adieu!

TO M. S. G.

WHERE'ER I view those lips of thine,
Their hue invites my fervent kiss;
Yet I forego that bliss divine,
Alas! it were unhallow'd bliss.

Where'er I dream of that pure breast,
How could I dwell upon its snows!
Yet—in the daring wish repress,
For that—would banish its repose.

A glance from thy soul-searching eye
Can raise with hope, depress with fear;
Yet I conceal my love,—and why?
I would not force a painful tear.

I ne'er have told my love, yet thou
Hast seen my ardent flame too well;
And shall I plead my passion now,
To make thy bosom's heaven a hell?

No! for thou never canst be mine,
United by the priest's decree:
By any ties but those divine,
Mine, my beloved, thou ne'er shalt be.

Then let the secret fire consume,
Let it consume, thou shalt not know:
With joy I court a certain doom,
Rather than spread its guilty glow.

I will not ease my tortured heart,
By driving dove-eyed peace from thine;
Rather than such a sting impart,
Each thought presumptuous I resign.

Yes! yield those lips, for which I'd brave
More than I here shall dare to tell;
Thy innocence and mine to save,—
I bid thee now a last farewell.

Yes! yield that breast, to seek despair,
And hope no more thy soft embrace;
Which to obtain my soul would dare
All, all reproach—but thy disgrace.

At least from guilt shalt thou be free,
No matron shall thy shame reprove;
Though careless pangs may prey on me,
No martyr shalt thou be to love.

TO CAROLINE.

THINE'ER thou I saw thy beauteous eyes,
Suffused in tears, implore to stay;
And heard unmoved thy piteous sighs,
Which said far more than words can say!

1809

Though keen the grief thy tears express,
When love and hope lay both o'erthrown,
Yet still, my girl, this bleeding breast
Throb'd with deep sorrow as thine own.

But when our cheeks with anguish glow'd,
When thy sweet lips were joined to mine,
The tears that from my eyelids flow'd
Were lost in those which fell from thine.

Thou couldst not feel my burning cheek,
Thy gushing tears had quench'd its flame;
And as thy tongue essay'd to speak,
In sighs alone it breathed my name.

And yet, my girl, we weep in vain,
In vain our fate in sighs deplore;
Remembrance only can remain,—
But that will make us weep the more.

Again, thou best beloved, adieu!
Ah! if thou canst, o'come regret;
Nor let thy mind past joys review,
Our only hope is to forget!

TO CAROLINE.

WHEN I hear you express an affection so warm,
Ne'er think, my beloved, that I do not believe;
For your lip would the soul of suspicion disarm,
And your eye beams a ray which can never deceive.

Yet still this fond bosom regrets, while adoring,
That love, like the leaf, must fall into the air;
That age will come on, when remembrance, deplor-
ing,
Contemplates the scenes of her youth with a tear;

That the time must arrive, when, no longer retain-
ing
Their sunburn, those locks must wave thin to the breeze,
When a few silver hairs of those tresses remaining,
Prove nature a prey to decay and disease.

'Tis this, my beloved, which spreads gloom o'er my features,
Though I ne'er shall presume to arraign the decree
Which God has proclaim'd as the fate of his creatures,
In the death which one day will deprive you of me.

Mistake not, sweet skeptic, the cause of emotion,
No doubt can the mind of your lover invade;
He worships each look with such faithful devotion,
A smile can enchant, or a tear can disengage.

But as death, my beloved, soon or late shall o'er-take us,
And our breasts, which alive with such sympathy
glow,
Will sleep in the grave till the blast shall awake us,
When calling the dead, in earth's bosom laid
low,—

Oh! then let us drain, while we may, draughts of pleasure,
Which from passion like ours may incessantly
flow;
Let us pass round the cup of love's bliss to full measure,
And quaff the contents as our spirits

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

TO CAROLINE.

Oh! when shall the grave hide for ever my sorrows?

Oh! when shall my soul wing her flight from this clay?

The present is hell, and the coming to-morrow
But brings, with new torture, the curse of to-day.

From my eye flows no tear, from my lips flow no curses,

I blast not the fiends who have hur'd me from bliss:

For poor is the soul which bewailing rehearses
Its querulous grief, when in anguish like this.

Was my eye, 'stead of tears, with red fury flames
bright'ning,

Would my lips breathe a flame which no stream
could assuage,

On our foes should my glance launch in vengeance
its lightning,

With transport my tongue give a loose to its rage.

But now tears and curses, alike unavailing,
Would add to the souls of our tyrants delight;

Could they view us our sad separation bewailing,
Their merciless hearts would rejoice at the sight.

Yet still, though we bend with a feign'd resignation,
Life beams not for us with one ray that can cheer;

Love and hope upon earth bring no more consolation;
In the grave is our hope, for in life is our fear.

Oh! when, my adored, in the tomb will they place
me,

Since, in life, love and friendship for ever are fled?

If again in the mansion of death I embrace thee,
Perhaps they will leave unmolested the dead.

[1804.]

STANZAS TO A LADY,

WITH THE POEMS OF CAMOËNS.*

This votive pledge of fond esteem,
Perhaps, dear girl! for me thou 'lt prize;
It sings of Love's enchanting dream,
A theme we never can despise.

Who blames it but the envious fool,
The old and disappointed maid;
Or pupil of the prudish school,
In single sorrow doom'd to fade?

Then read, dear girl! with feeling read,
For thou wilt ne'er be one of those;
To thee in vain I shall not plead
In pity for the poet's woes.

He was in sooth a genuine bard;
His was no faint, fictitious flame;
Like his, may love be thy reward,
But not thy hapless fate the same.

THE FIRST KISS OF LOVE.

A BALLAD IN PROSE
"Before sunrise" &c.—ANACREON.

AWAY with your fictions of flimsy romance;
Those tissues of falsehood which folly has wove;
Give me the mild beam of the soul-breathing glance,
Or the rapture which dwells on the first kiss of love.

Ye rhymers, whose booms with fantasy glow,
Whose pastoral passions are made for the grove;
From what blest inspiration your sonnets would flow,
Could you ever have tasted the first kiss of love!

If Apollo should e'er his assistance refuse,
Or the Nine be disposed from your service to rove,
Invoke them no more, bid adieu to the muse,
And try the effect of the first kiss of love.

I hate you, ye cold compositions of art!
Though prudes may condemn me, and bigots reprove,
I court the effusions that spring from the heart;
Which throbs with delight to the first kiss of love.

Your shepherds, your flocks, those fantastical
thymes,
Perhaps may amuse, yet they never can move:
Arcadia displays but a region of dreams:
What are visions like these to the first kiss of love?

Oh! cease to affirm that man, since his birth,
From Adam till now, has with wretchedness strove;
Some portion of paradise still is on earth,
And Eden revives in the first kiss of love.

When age chills the blood, when our pleasures are past—
For years fleet away with the wings of the dove—
The dearest remembrance will still be the last,
Our sweetest memorial the first kiss of love.

ON A CHANGE OF MASTERS AT A GREAT PUBLIC SCHOOL.

WHERE are those honors, Ida! once your own,
When Probus fill'd your magisterial throne?
As ancient Rome, fast falling to disgrace,
Hail'd a barbarian in her Caesar's place,
So you, degenerate, share as hard a fate,
And seat Pomposus where your Probus sat.
Of narrow brain, yet of a narrower soul,
Pomposus holds you in his harsh control;
Pomposus, by no social virtue sway'd,
With florid jargon, and with vain parade;
With noisy nonsense, and new-fangled rules,
Such as were ne'er before enforced in schools.
Mistaking pedantry for learning's laws,
He governs, sanction'd but by self-applause;
With him the same dire fate attending Rome,
Ill-fated Ida! soon must stamp your doom;
Like her o'erthrown, for ever lost to fame,
No trace of science left you, but the name.

[July, 1804.]

* "The latter years of Camoëns present a mournful picture, not merely of individual calamity, but of national ingratitude. He whose best years had been devoted to the service of his country, he who had taught her literary fame to rival the proudest efforts of Italy itself, and who seemed born to revive the remembrance of ancient gentility and Lusitan heroism, was compelled to wander through the streets, a wretched dependent on casual contribution. Camoëns sank beneath the pressure of penury and disease, and died in an almshouse early in the year 1580."

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

TO THE DUKE OF DORSET.*

DORSET! † whose early steps with mine have stray'd,
Exploring every path of Ida's glade;
Whom still affection taught me to defend,
And made me less a tyrant than a friend,
Though the harsh custom of our youthful band
Made thee obey, and gave me to command: ‡
Thee, on whose head a few short years will shower
The gift of riches and the pride of power;
E'en now a name illustrious is thine own,
Renown'd in rank, not far beneath the throne.
Yet, Dorset, let not this seduce thy soul
To shun fair science, or evade control,
Though passive tutors, † fearful to dispraise
The titled child, whose future breath may raise,
View ducal errors with indulgent eyes,
And wink at faults they tremble to chastise.

When youthful parasites, who bend the knee
To wealth, their golden idol, not to thee,—
And even in simple boyhood's opening dawn
Some slaves are found to flatter and to fawn,—
When these declare, "that pomp alone should wait
On one by birth predestined to be great;
That books were only meant for drudging fools,
That gallant spirits scorn the common rules;"
Believe them not;—they point the path to shame,
And seek to blast the honors of thy name.
Turn to the few in Ida's early throng,
Whose souls disdain not to condemn the wrong;
Or if, amidst the comrades of thy youth,
None dare to raise the sterner voice of truth,
Ask thine own heart; † will bid thee, foarbear;
For well I know that virtue lingers there.

Yes! I have mark'd thee many a passing day,
But now new scenes invite me far away;
Yes! I have mark'd within that generous mind
A soul, if well matured, to bless mankind.
Ah! though myself by nature haughty, wild,
Whom Indiscretion hail'd her favorite child;
Though every error stamps me for her own,
And dooms my fall, I fain would fall alone;
Though my proud heart no precept none can tame,
I love the virtues which I cannot claim.

† Is not enough, with other sons of power,
To gleam the lambent meteor of an hour;
To swell some peerage page in feeble pride,
With long-drawn names that grace no page beside;
Then share with titled crowds the common lot—
In life just gazed at, in the grave forgot;
While nought divides thee from the vulgar dead,
Except the dull cold stone that hides thy head,
The mouldering 'scutcheon, or the herald's roll,
That well-embazon'd but neglected scroll,
Where lords, unhonor'd, in the tomb may find
One spot, to leave a worthless name behind.

* In looking over my papers to select a few additional poems for this second edition, I found the above lines, which I had totally forgotten, composed in the summer of 1806, a short time previous to my departure from Harrow. They were addressed to a young schoolfellow of high rank, who had been my frequent companion in some rambles through the neighboring country; however, he never saw the lines, and most probably never will. As, on a rehearsal, I found them not worse than some other pieces in the collection, I have now published them, for the first time, after a slight revision.

† George-John-Frederick, fourth duke of Dorset, born November 15, 1790. This amiable nobleman was killed by a fall from his horse, while hunting near Dublin, February 22, 1815, being on a visit at the time to his mother, the duchess-dowager, and her second husband, Charles Earl of Whitworth, then lord lieutenant of Ireland.

‡ At every public school the junior boys are completely subservient to the upper forms till they attain a seat in the higher classes. From this state of probation, very properly, no rank is exempt; but after a certain period, they command in turn, those who succeed.

There sleep, unnoticed as the gloomy vaults
That veil their dust, their follies, and their faults,
A race, with old annal lists o'erspread,
In records destined never to be read.
Fain would I view thee, with prophetic eyes,
Exalted more among the good and wise,
A glorious and a long career pursue,
As first in rank, the first in talent too:
Spurn every vice, each little meanness shun;
Not Fortune's minion, but her noblest son.

Turn to the annals of a former day;
Bright are the deeds thine earlier sires display.
One, though a courtier, lived a man of worth,
And call'd, proud boast! the British drama forth.
Another view, not less renown'd for wit;
Alike for courts, and camps, or senates fit;
Bold in the field, and favor'd by the Nine;
In every splendid part ordain'd to shine;
Far, far distinguish'd from the glittering throng,
The pride of princes, and the boast of song. †
Such were thy fathers; thus preserve their name;
Not heir to titles only, but to fame.
The hour draws nigh, a few brief days will close,
To me, this little scene of joys and woes;
Each knell of Time now warns me to resign Shades where Hope, Peace, and Friendship all were
mine:

Hope, that could vary like the rainbow's hue,
And gild their pinions as the moments flew;
Peace, that reflection never frown'd away,
By dreams of ill to cloud some future day;
Friendship, whose truth let childhood only tell;
Alas! they love not long, who love so well.
To these adieu! nor let me linger o'er
Scenes hail'd, as exiles hail their native shore,
Receding slowly through the dark-blue deep,
Beheld by eyes that mourn, yet cannot weep.

Dorset, farewell! I will not ask one part
Of sad remembrance in so young a heart;
The coming morrow from thy youthful mind
Will sweep my name, nor leave a trace behind.
And yet, perhaps, in some maturer year,
Since chance has thrown us in the self-same
sphere,

Since the same senate, nay, the same debate,
May one day claim our suffrage for the state,
We hence may meet, and pass each other by,
With faint regard, or cold and distant eye.
For me, in future, neither friend nor foe,
A stranger to thyself, thy weal or woe,
With thee no more again I hope to trace
The recollection of our early race;
No more, as once, in social hours rejoice,
Or hear, unless in crowds, thy well-known voice:
Still, if the wishes of a heart untought
To veil those feelings which perchance it ought,

† Allow me to disclaim any personal allusions, even the most distant: I merely mention generally what is too often the weakness of preceptor.

1 "Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst, was born in 1551. While a student of the Inner Temple, he wrote his tragedy of Gorboduc, which was played before Queen Elizabeth at Whitehall, in 1561. His tragedy, and his contribution to the Induction and Legend of the Duke of Buckingham to the 'Mirror for Magistrates,' compose the poetical history of Sackville. The rest of it was political. In 1604, he was created Earl of Dorset by James I. He died suddenly at the council table in consequence of a dropsey on the brain."

† Charles Sackville, Earl of Dorset, was born in 1587, and died in 1708. He was esteemed the most accomplished man of his day, and alike distinguished in the voluptuous court of Charles II. and the gloomy one of William III. He behaved with considerable gallantry in the sea-fight with the Dutch in 1666; on the day previous to which he is said to have composed his celebrated song, To all you Ladies now of Land. His character has been drawn in the highest colors by Dryden, Pope, Prior, and Congreve.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

If these,—but let me cease the lengthen'd strain,—
Oh! if these wishes are not breathed in vain,
The guardian seraph who directs thy fate
Will leave thee glorious, as he found thee great.

[MS.]

FRAGMENT.

WRITTEN SHORTLY AFTER THE MARRIAGE OF KIM CHAWORTH.

HILLS of Annesley! bleak and barren,
Where my thoughtless childhood stray'd,
How the northern tempests, warring,
How! above thy tufted shade!

Now no more, the hours beguiling,
Former favorite haunts I see;
Now no more my Mary smiling
Makes ye seem a heaven to me.*

[MS.]

GRANTA. A MEDLEY.

'Αγροποιὸς ἰδὺντος πρὸς τὴν καὶ πόλιν Κερκίρας.

Oh! could Le Sage's† demon's gift
Be realized at my desire,
This night my trembling form he'd lift
To place it on Saint Mary's spire.

Then would, unroof'd, old Granta's halls
Pedantic inmates full display;
Fellows who dream on lawn or stalls,
The price of venal votes to pay.

Then would I view each rival wight,
Petty and Palmerston survey;
Who canvass there with all their might,
Against the next elective day.‡

Lo! candidates and voters lie
All lull'd in sleep, a goodly number:
A race renown'd for piety,
Whose conscience won't disturb their slumber.

Lord H——, § indeed, may not demur;
Fellows are sage, reflecting men:
They know preferment can occur
But very seldom,—now and then.

They know the Chancellor has got
Some pretty livings in disposal:
Each hopes that one may be his lot,
And therefore smiles on his proposal.

Now from the soporific scene
I'll turn mine eye, as night grows later,
To view, unheeded and unseen,
The studious sons of Alma Mater.

There, in apartments small and damp,
The candidate for college prizes
Sits poring by the midnight lamp;
Goes late to bed, yet early rises.

He surely well deserves to gain them,
With all the honors of his college,
Who, striving hardily to obtain them,
Thus seeks unprofitable knowledge:

Who sacrifices hours of rest
To scan precisely metres Attic;
Or agitates his anxious breast
In solving problems mathematic:

Who reads false quantities in Seale, ¶
Or puzzles o'er the deep triangle;
Deprived of many a wholesome meal;
In barbarous Latin ¶ doom'd to wrangle:

Renouncing every pleasing page
From authors of historic use;
Preferring to the letter'd sage
The square of the hypothenuse.

Still, harmless are these occupations,
That hurt none but the hapless student,
Compared with other recreations,
Which bring together the imprudent;

Whose daring revels shock the sight,
When vice and infamy combine,
When drunkenness and dice invite,
As every sense is steep'd in wine.

Not so the methodistic crew,
Who plans of reformation lay:
In humble attitude they sue,
And for the sins of others pray:

Forgetting that their pride of spirit,
Their exultation in their trial,
Detracts most largely from the merit
Of all their boasted self-denial.

† It is morn:—from these I turn my sight.
What scene is this which meets the eye?
A numerous crowd, array'd in white,††
Across the green in numbers fly.

Loud rings in air the chapel bell;
‡ It is hush'd:—what sounds are these I hear?
The organ's soft celestial swell
Rolls deeply on the list'ning ear.

To this is join'd the sacred song,
The royal minstrel's hallow'd strain;
Though he who hears the mellow long
Will never wish to hear again.

* The circumstances which lent so peculiar an interest to Lord Byron's introduction to the family of Chaworth, are sufficiently explained in the sketch of his life. "The young lady herself combined," says Mr. Moore, "with the many worldly advantages that encircled her, much personal beauty, and a disposition the most amiable and attaching. Though already fully alive to her charms, it was at this period (1804) that the young poet seems to have drunk deepest of that fascination whose effects were to be so lasting; six short weeks which he passed in her company being sufficient to lay the foundation of a feeling for all life. With the summer holidays ended the dream of his youth. He saw Miss Chaworth once more in the succeeding year, and took his last farewell of her on that hill near Annesley, which, in his poem of 'The Dream,' he describes so happily as 'crowned with a peculiar diadem.'" In August, 1805, she was married to John Musters, Esq., and died at Wiverton Hall, in February, 1822, in consequence, it is believed, of the alarm and danger to which she had been exposed during the mob of Colwick Hall by a party of rioters from Nottingham. The unfortunate lady had been in a feeble state of health for several years, and she and her daughter were obliged to take shelter from the violence of the mob in a shrubbery, where, partly from cold, partly from terror, her constitution sustained a shock which it wanted vigor to resist.

† The Diabie Botteux of Le Sage, where Amodeus, the demon, places Don Quixote on an elevated situation, and unroofs the houses for inspection.

‡ On the death of Mr. Pitt. In January, 1806, Lord Henry Petty and Lord Palmerston were candidates to represent the University of Cambridge in parliament.

§ Edward-Harvey Hawke, third Lord Hawke. His lordship died in 1824.

¶ Seale's publication on Greek Metres displays considerable talent and ingenuity, but, as might be expected in so difficult a work, is not remarkable for accuracy.

† The Latin of the schools is of the corvina species, and not very intelligible.

 The discovery of Pythagoras, that of the square of the hypothenuse is equal to the squares of the other two sides of a right-angle triangle.

†† On a saint's day, the students wear surplices in chapel.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Our choir would scarcely be excused,
Even as a band of raw beginners;
All mercy now must be refused
To such a set of creaking sinners.

If David, when his toils were ended,
Had heard these blockheads sing before him,
To us his palms had ne'er descended,—
In furious mood he would have tore 'em.

The luckless Israelites, when taken
By some inhuman tyrant's order,
Were ask'd to sing, by joy forsaken,
On Babylonian river's border.

Oh! had they sung in notes like these,
Inspired by stratagem or fear,
They might have won their hearts at ease,
The devil a soul had stay'd to hear.

But if I scribble longer now,
The dunces a soul will stay to read:
My pen is blunt, my ink is low;
'Tis almost time to stop, indeed.

Therefore, farewell, old Granta's spices!
No more, like Cleofas, I fly;
No more thy theme may muse inspire:
The reader is tired, and so am I. [1832.]

ON A DISTANT VIEW OF THE VILLAGE AND SCHOOL OF HARROW ON THE HILL.

Oh! mild perfections refus'd at Jupiter's sandals.—VIRGIL.

Y^e scenes of my childhood, whose loved recollection
Emitters the present, compared with the past;
Where science first dawn'd on the powers of re-
fection,
And friendships were form'd, too romantic to
last;*

Where fancy yet joys to trace the resemblance
Of comrades, in friendship and mischief allied:
How welcome to me your ne'er-fading remembrance,
Which rests in the bosom, though hope is denied!

Again I revisit the hills where we sported,
The streams where we swam, and the fields where we fought;
The school where, loud warn'd by the bell, we resorted,
To pore o'er the precepts by pedagogues taught.

Again I behold where for hours I have ponder'd
As reclining, at eve, on yon tombstone I lay:
Or round the steep brow of the churchyard I wan-
der'd,
To catch the last gleam of the sun's setting ray.

I once more view the room, with spectators surrounded,
Where, as Zanga, I trod on Alonzo o'erthrown;
While, to swell my young pride, such applauses resounded,
I fancied that Moscop† himself was outshone:

Or, as Lear, I pour'd forth the deep imprecation,
By my daughters, of kingdom and reason deprived;

Till, fired by loud plaudits and self-adulation,
I regarded myself as a Garrick revived.

* "My school-friendships were with me poisonous (for I was always violent: but I do not know that there is one which has endured to be sure, none have been out short by death) till now. At Harrow I fought my way very

Ye dreams of my boyhood, how much I regret ye!
Unfaded your memory dwells in my breast;
Though and you deserted, I ne'er can forget you:
Your pleasures may still be in fancy possess'd.

To Ida roll off may remembrance restore me,
While fate shall the shades of the future unroll!
Since darkness o'er shadows the prospect before me,
More dear is the beam of the past to my soul.

But if, through the course of the years which swalt-
[1832.]
Some new scene of pleasure should open to view,
I will say, while with rapture the thought shall elude
me,
"Oh! such were the days which my infancy knew." [1832.]

TO M—.

On! did those eyes, instead of fire,
With bright but mild affection shine,
Though they might kindle less desire,
Love, more than mortal, would be thine.

For thou art form'd so heavenly fair,
Howe'er those orbs may wildly beam,
We must admire, but still despair;
That fatal glance forbids esteem.

When Nature stamp'd thy beauteous birth,
So much perfection in thee shone,
She fear'd that, too divine for earth,
The skies might claim thee for their own:

Therefore, to guard her dearest work,
Lest angels might dispute the prize,
She bade a secret lightning lurk
Within those once celestial eyes.

These might the boldest sylph appal,
When gleaming with meridian blaze;
Thy beauty must enrapture all:
But who can dare thine ardent gaze?

'T is said that Bernice's hair
In stars adorns the vault of heaven;
But they would ne'er permit thee there,
Thou wouldst so far outshine the seven.

For did those eyes as planets roll,
Thy sister lights would scarce appear;
E'en suns, which systems now control,
Would twinkle dimly through their sphere. [1832.]

TO WOMAN.

WOMAN! experience might have told me,
That all must love thee who behold thee:
Surely experience might have taught
Thy firmest promises are nought:
But, plac'd in all thy charms before me,
All I forget, but to adore thee.
Oh, memory! thou choicest blessing
When join'd with hope, when still possessing;
But how much cursed by every lover
When hope is fed and passion's over.
Woman, that fair and fond deceiver,
How prompt are striplings to believe her!
How throbs the pulse when first we view
The eye that rolls in glossy blue,
Or sparkles black, or mildly throws
A beam from under hazel brows!

fairly. I think I lost but one battle out of seven, &c. &c. Diary, 1831.

† Moscop, a contemporary of Garrick, famous for his performance of Zanga.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

How quick we credit every oath,
And hear her plight the willing troth!
Fondly we hope 't will last for aye,
When lo! she changes in a day.
This record will for ever stand,
"Woman, thy vows are traced in sand."^{*}

TO M. S. G.

WHEN I dream that you love me, you'll surely forgive;
Extend not your anger to sleep;
For in visions alone your affection can live,—
I rise, and it leaves me to weep.

Then, Morpheus! envelop my faculties fast,
Shed o'er me your languor benign;
Should the dream of to-night but resemble the last,
What rapture celestial is mine!

They tell us that slumber, the sister of death,
Mortality's emblem is given;
To fate how I long to resign my frail breath,
If this be a foretaste of heaven!

Ah! frown not, sweet lady, unbend your soft brow,
Nor deem me too happy in this;
If I sin in my dream, I atone for it now,
Thus doom'd but to gaze upon bliss.

Though in visions, sweet lady, perhaps you may smile,
Oh! think not my penance deficient!
When dreams of your presence my slumbers beguile,
To awake will be torture sufficient.

TO MARY,

ON RECEIVING HER PICTURE.†

THIS faint resemblance of thy charms,
Though strong as mortal art could give,
My constant heart of fear disarms,
Revives my hopes, and bids me live.

Here I can trace the locks of gold
Which round thy snowy forehead wave,
The cheeks which sprang from beauty's mould,
The lips which made me beauty's slave.

Here I can trace—ah, no! that eye,
Whose azure floats in liquid fire,
Must all the painter's art defy,
And bid him from the task retire.

Here I behold its beauteous hue;
But where's the beam so sweetly straying,
Which gave a lustre to its blue,
Like Luna o'er the ocean playing?

Sweet copy! far more dear to me,
Lifeless, unfeeling as thou art,
Than all the living forms could be,
Save her who placed thee next my heart.

She placed it, sad, with needless fear,
Lest time might shake my wavering soul,
Unconscious that her image there
Held every sense in fast control.

Through hours, through years, through time,
't will cheer;
My hope, in gloomy moments, raise;
In life's last conflict 't will appear,
And meet my fond expiring gaze.

TO LESBIA.

LESBIA! since far from you I've ranged,
Our souls with fond affection glow not;
You say 'tis I, not you, have changed,
I'd tell you why,—but yet I know not.

Your polish'd brow no cares have crost;
And, Lesbia! we are not much older
Since, trembling, first my heart I lost,
Or told my love, with hope grown bolder.

Sixteen was then our utmost age,
Two years have lingering pass'd away, love!
And now new thoughts our minds engage,
At least I feel disposed to stray, love!

'Tis I that am alone to blame,
I, that am guilty of love's treason;
Since your sweet breast is still the same,
Caprice must be my only reason.

I do not, love! suspect your truth,
With jealous doubt my bosom heaves not;
Warm was the passion of my youth,
One trace of dark deceit it leaves not.

No, no, my flame was not pretended;
For, oh! I loved you most sincerely:
And—though our dream at last is ended—
My bosom still esteems you dearly.

No more we meet in yonder bowers;
Absence has made me prone to roving;
But older, firmer hearts than ours
Have found monotony in loving.

Your cheek's soft bloom is unimpaired,
New beauties still are daily bright'ning,
Your eye for conquest beams prepared,
The forge of love's resistless lightning.

Arm'd thus, to make their bosoms bleed,
Many will throng to sigh like me, love!
More constant they may prove, indeed;
Fonder, alas! they ne'er can be, love!

LINES ADDRESSED TO A YOUNG LADY.

[As the author was discharging his pistols in a garden, two ladies passing near the spot were alarmed by the sound of a bullet hissing near them; to one of whom the following stanzas were addressed (the next morning.)]

DOUBTLESS, sweet girl! the hissing lead,
Wafting destruction o'er thy bright'ning,
And hurdling o'er thy lovely head,
Has fill'd that breast with fond alarms.

Surely some envious demon's force,
Vex'd to behold such beauty here,
Impell'd the bullet's viewless course,
Diverted from its first career.

coal station in life, and that she had long light golden hair, "of which," says Mr. Moore, "the poet used to show a lock, as well as her picture, among his friends."

† The occurrence took place at Southwell, and the beautiful lady to whom the lines were addressed was Miss Houson.

* The last line is almost a literal translation from a Spanish proverb.

† Of this "Mary" who is not to be confounded with the heiress of Annandley, or "Mary" of Aberdeen, all that has been ascertained is that she was of an humble, if not equiv-

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Yes! in that nearly fatal hour
The ball obey'd some hell-born guide;
But Heaven, with interposing power,
In pity turn'd the death aside.

Yet, as perchance one trembling tear
Upon that thrilling bosom fell;
Which I, th' unconscious cause of fear,
Extracted from its glistening cell:

Say, what dire penance can atone
For such an outrage done to thee?
Arraign'd before thy beauty's throne,
What punishment wilt thou decree?

Might I perform the judge's part,
The sentence I should scarce deplore;
It only would restore a heart
Which but belong'd to thee before.

The least atonement I can make
Is to become no longer free;
Henceforth I breathe but for thy sake,
Thou shalt be all in all to me.

But thou, perhaps, mayest now reject
Such expiation of my guilt:
Come then, some other mode elect;
Let it be death, or what thou wilt.

Choose then, relentless! and I swear
Nought shall thy dread decree prevent;
Yet hold—one little word forbear!
Let it be aught but banishment.

LOVE'S LAST ADIEU.

Δας ἑ αὐ το φερειν. — ΔΑΙΔΑΛΩΝ.

THE roses of love glad the garden of life,
Though nurtured 'mid weeds dropping pestilent
dew,

Till time crops the leaves with unmerciful knife,
Or prunes them for ever, in love's last adieu!

In vain with endearments we soothe the sad heart,
In vain do we vow for an age to be true;
The chance of an hour may command us to part,
Or death disunite us in love's last adieu!

Still Hope, breathing peace through the grief-swollen
breast,
Will whisper, "Our meeting we yet may renew:"
With this dream of deceit half our sorrow's repress,
Nor taste we the poison of love's last adieu!

Oh! mark you yon pair: in the sunshine of youth
Love twined round their childhood his flow'rs as they grew;

They flourish awhile in the season of truth,
Till chill'd by the winter of love's last adieu!

Sweet lady! why thus doth a tear steal its way
Down a cheek which outrivals thy bosom in hue?
Yet why do I ask?—to distraction a prey,
Thy reason has perished with love's last adieu!

Oh! who is yon misanthrope, shunning mankind?
From cities to caves of the forest he flew:
There, raving, he howls his complaint to the wind;
The mountains reverberate love's last adieu!

Now hate rules a heart which in love's easy chains
Once passion's tumultuous blandishments knew;
Despair now inflames the dark tide of his veins;
He ponders in frenzy on love's last adieu!

How he envies the wretch with a soul wrapt in steel!
His pleasures are scarce, yet his troubles are few,
Who laughs at the pang which he never can feel,
And dreads not the anguish of love's last adieu!

Youth flies, life decays, even hope is o'ercast;
No more with love's former devotion we sue:
He spreads his young wing, he retires with the blast;
The shroud of affection is love's last adieu!

In this life of probation for rapture divine,
Astrea declares that some penance is due;
From him who has worshipp'd at love's gentle
shrine,
The atonement is ample in love's last adieu!

Who kneels to the god, on his altar of light
Must myrtle and cypress alternately strew:
His myrtle, an emblem of purest delight;
His cypress, the garland of love's last adieu!

DANÆTAS.

In law an infant,* and in years a boy,
In mind a slave to every vicious joy;
From every sense of shame and virtue wean'd;
In lies an adept, in deceit a fiend;
Versed in hypocrisy, while yet a child;
Fickle as wind, of inclinations wild;
Woman his dupe, his heedless friend a tool;
Old in the world, though scarcely broke from school;
Danætas ran through all the maze of sin,
And found the goal when others just begin:
Even still conflicting passions shake his soul,
And bid him drain the dregs of pleasure's bowl;
But, pall'd with vice, he breaks his former chain,
And what was once his bliss appears his bane.

TO MARION.

MARION! why that pensive brow?
What disgust to life hast thou?
Change that discontented air;
Frowns become not one so fair.
'Tis not love disturbs thy rest,
Love's a stranger to thy breast;
He in dimpling smiles appears,
Or mourns in sweetly timid tears,
Or bends the languid eyelid down,
But shuns the cold forbidding frown.
Then resume thy former fire,
Some will love, and all admire;
While that icy aspect chills us,
Nought but cool indifference thrills us.
Wouldst thou wandering hearts beguile,
Smile at least, or seem to smile.
Eyes like thine were never meant
To hide their orbs in dark restraint.
Spite of all thou fain wouldst say,
Still in truant beams they play.
Thy lips—but here my modest Muse
Her impulse chaste must needs refuse:
She blushes, curtsies, frowns—in short she Dreads lest the subject should transport me;

* In law, every person is an infant who has not attained the age of twenty-one.

+ Moore says, "The sort of life which young Byron led at this period, between the dissipation of London and Cambridge, without a home to welcome or even the roof of a single relative to receive him, was but little calculated to render him satisfied either with himself or the world. Unrestrained as he was by deference to any will but his own, even the pleasures to which he was naturally most inclined prematurely palled upon him, for want of those best tastes of all enjoyment—rarity and restraint."

Oh! mark you pair: in the sunshine of youth
Love twined round their childhood his flow'rs as they grew;
They flourish awhile in the season of truth,
Till chill'd by the winter of love's last adieu!

HOURS OF IDLENESS.—Page 314.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

And flying off in search of reason,
Brings prudence back in proper season.
All I shall therefore say (what'er
I think, is neither here nor there)
Is, that such lips, of looks endearing,
Were form'd for better things than sneering:
Of smoothing compliments divested,
Advice at least 's disinterested:
Such is my artless song to thee,
From all the flow of flattery free;
Counsel like mine is like a brother's:
My heart is given to some others;
That is to say, unskill'd to cozen,
It shares itself among a dozen.

Marion, adieu! oh, prithee alight not
This warning, though it may delight not;
And, lest my precepts be displeasing
To those who think remonstrance teasing,
At once I'll tell thee our opinion
Concerning woman's soft dominion:
Howe'er we gaze with admiration
On eyes of blue or lips carnation,
Howe'er the flowing locks attract us,
Howe'er those beauties may distract us,
Still fickle, we are prone to rove,
These cannot fix our souls to love;
It is not too severe a stricture
To say they form a pretty picture;
But wouldst thou see the secret chain
Which binds us in your humble train,
To hail you queens of all creation,
Know, in a word, 'tis ANIMATION.

TO A LADY

WHO PRESENTED TO THE AUTHOR A LOCK OF
HAIR RADEWED WITH HIS OWN, AND APPOINTED A NIGHT IN DECEMBER TO MEET HIM IN THE GARDEN.

THINE locks, which fondly thus entwine,
In firmer chains our hearts confine,
Than all th' unmeaning protestations
Which swell with nonsense love orations.
Our love is fix'd, I think we've proved it:
Nor time, nor place, nor art have moved it;
Then wherefore should we sigh and whine,
With groundless jealousy repine,
With silly whims and fancies frantic,
Merely to make our love romantic?
Why should you weep like Lydia Languish,
And fret with self-created anguish?
Or doom the lover you have chosen,
On winter nights to sigh half frozen;
In leafless shades to sue for pardon,
Only because the scene's a garden?
For gardens seem, by one consent,
Since Shakspeare set the precedent,
Since Juliet first declared her passion,
To form the place of assignation.*
Oh! would some modern muse inspire,
And seat her by a sea-coal fire;

Or had the bard at Christmas written,
And laid the scene of love in Britain,
He surely, in commiseration,
Had changed the place of declaration.
In Italy I've no objection;
Warm nights are proper for reflection;
But here our climate is so rigid,
That love itself is rather frigid:
Think on our chilly situation,
And curb this rage for imitation:
Then let us meet, as oft we've done,
Beneath the influence of the sun,
Or, if at midnight I must meet you,
Within your mansion let me greet you:
There we can love for hours together,
Much better, in such snowy weather,
Than placed in all th' Arcadian groves
That ever witnesses'd rural loves;
Then, if my passion fail to please,
Next night I'll be content to freeze;
No more I'll give a loose to laughter,
But curse my fate for ever after.†

OSCAR OF ALVA:‡

A TALE.

How sweetly shines through azure skies,
The lamp of heaven on Lora's shore;
Where Alva's hoary turrets rise,
And hear the din of arms no more!

But often has yon rolling moon
On Alva's casques of silver play'd;
And view'd, at midnight's silent noon,
Her chiefs in gleaming mail array'd:

And on the crimson'd rocks beneath,
Which scowl o'er ocean's sullen flow,
Pale in the scatter'd ranks of death,
She saw the gasping warrior low;

While many an eye which ne'er again
Could mark the rising orb of day,
Turn'd feebly from the gory plain,
Beheld in death her fading ray.

Once to those eyes the lamp of Love,
They blest her dear propitious light;
But now she glimmer'd from above,
A sad, funereal torch of night.

Faded is Alva's noble race,
And gray her towers are seen afar;
No more her heroes urge the chase,
Or roll the crimson tide of war.

But who was last of Alva's clan?
Why grows the moss on Alva's stone?
Her towers resound no steps of man,
They echo to the gale alone.

And when that gale is fierce and high,
A sound is heard in yonder hall;

* In the above little piece the author has been accused by some candid readers of introducing the name of a lady from whom he was some hundred miles distant at the time this was written: and poor Juliet, who has slept so long in "the tomb of all the Capulets," has been converted, with a trifling alteration of her name, into an English damsel, walking in a garden of their own creation, during the month of December, in a village where the author never passed a winter. Such has been the candour of some ingenious critics. We would advise these liberal commentators on taste and arbiters of decorum to read Shakspeare.

† Having heard that a very severe and indelicate censure had been passed on the above poem, I beg leave to reply in a quotation from an admired work. "Carr's Stranger in France:"—"As we were contemplating a painting on a large scale, in which, among other figures, is the uncovered whole length of a warrior, a prudish-looking lady, who seemed to have touched the age of desperation, after having attentively surveyed it through her glass, observed to her party, that there was a great deal of indecorum in that picture. Madame B. shrewdly whispered in my ear, 'that the indecorum was in the remark.'"

‡ The catastrophe of this tale was suggested by the story of "Jeronymo and Lorenzo," in the first volume of Schiller's Armenian, or the Ghost-Seer.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

It rises hoarsely through the sky,
And vibrates o'er the mouldering wall.

Yes, when the eddying tempest alga,
It shakes the shield of Oscar brave;
But there no more his banners rise,
No more his plumes of sable wave.

Fair shone the sun on Oscar's birth,
When Angus hail'd his eldest born;
The vassals round their chieftain's hearth
Crowd to applaud the happy morn.

They feast upon the mountain deer,
The pibroch raised its piercing note;
To gladden more their highland cheer,
The strains in martial numbers float:

And they who heard the war-notes wild
Hoped that one day the pibroch's strain
Should play before the hero's child
While he should lead the tartan train.

Another year is quickly past,
And Angus hail's another son;
His natal day is like the last,
Nor soon the joyous feast was done.

Taught by their sire to bend the bow,
On Alva's dusky hills of wind,
The boys in childhood chased the roe,
And left their hounds in speed behind.

But ere their years of youth are o'er,
They mingle in the ranks of war;
They lightly wheel the bright claymore,
And send the whistling arrow far.

Dark was the flow of Oscar's hair,
Wildly it stream'd along the pale;
But Allan's locks were bright and fair,
And pensive seem'd his cheek, and pale.

But Oscar own'd a hero's soul,
His dark eye shone through beams of truth;
Allan had early learn'd control,
And smooth his words had been from youth.

Both, both were brave: the Saxon spear
Was shiver'd oft beneath their steel;
And Oscar's bosom scorn'd to fear,
But Oscar's bosom knew to feel;

While Allan's soul belied his form,
Unworthy with such charms to dwell:
Keen as the lightning of the storm,
On foes his deadly vengeance fell.

From high Southannon's distant tower
Arrived a young and noble dame;
With Kenneth's lands to form her dower,
Glenalvon's blue-eyed daughter came;

And Oscar claim'd the beauteous bride,
And Angus on his Oscar smiled:
It soothed the father's feudal pride
Thus to obtain Glenalvon's child.

Hark to the pibroch's pleasing note!
Hark to the swelling nuptial song!
In joyous strains the voices float,
And still the choral peal prolong.

See how the heroes' blood-red plumes
Assembled wave in Alva's hall;
Each youth his varied plaid assumes,
Attending on their chieftain's call.

It is not war their aid demands,
The pibroch plays the song of peace;

315

To Oscar's nuptials throng the bands,
Nor yet the sounds of pleasure cease.

But where is Oscar? sure 't is late:
Is this a bridegroom's ardent flame?
While thronging guests and ladies wait,
Nor Oscar nor his brother came.

At length young Allan join'd the bride:
"Why comes not Oscar?" Angus said:
"Is he not here?" the youth replied:
"With me he roved not o'er the glade."

"Perchance, forgetful of the day,
'T is his to chase the bounding roe;
Or ocean's waves prolong his stay;
Yet Oscar's bark is seldom slow."

"Oh, no!" the anguish'd sire rejoin'd,
"Nor chase nor wave my boy delay;
Would he to Mora seem unkind?
Would aught to her impede his way?"

"Oh, search, ye chiefs! oh, search around!
Allan, with these through Alva fly;
Till Oscar, till my son is found,
Haste, haste, nor dare attempt reply."

All is confusion—through the vale
The name of Oscar hoarsely rings,
It rises on the murmuring gale,
Till night expands her dusky wings;

It breaks the stillness of the night,
But echoes through her shades in vain,
It sounds through morning's misty light,
But Oscar comes not o'er the plain.

Three days, three sleepless nights, the chief
For Oscar search'd each mountain cave;
Then hope is lost; in boundless grief,
His locks in gray-torn ringlets wave.

"Oscar! my son!—thou God of Heaven,
Restore the prop of sinking age!
Or if that hope no more is given,
Yield his assassin to my rage."

"Yes, on some desert rocky shore
My Oscar's whiten'd bones must lie;
Then grant, thou God! I ask no more,
With him his frantic sire may die!"

"Yet he may live,—away, despair!
Be calm, my soul! he yet may live;
'T arraign my fate, my voice forbear!
Oh, God! my impious prayer forgive."

"What, if he live for me no more,
I sink forgotten in the dust,
The hope of Alva's age is o'er;
Alas! can pang like these be just?"

Thus did the hapless parent mourn,
Till Time, which sooths severest woes,
Had bade serenity return,
And made the tear-drop cease to flow.

For still some latent hope survived
That Oscar might once more appear;
His hope now droop'd and now revived,
Till Time had told a tedious year.

Days roll'd along, the orb of light
Again had run his destined race;
No Oscar bless'd his father's sight,
And sorrow left a fainter trace.

For youthful Allan still remain'd,
And now his father's only joy;

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

And Mora's heart was quickly gain'd,
For beauty crown'd the fair-hair'd boy.

She thought that Oscar low was laid,
And Allan's face was wondrous fair;
If Oscar lived, some other maid
Had claim'd his faithless bosom's care.

And Angus said, if one year more
In fruitless hope was pass'd away,
His fondest scruples should be o'er,
And he would name their nuptial day.

Slow roll'd the moons, but blest at last
Arrived the dearly destined morn;
The year of anxious trembling past,
What smiles the lovers' cheeks adorn!

Hark to the pibroch's pleasing note!
Hark to the swelling nuptial song!
In joyous strains the voices float.
And still the choral peal prolong.

Again the clan, in festive crowd,
Through through the gate of Alva's hall;
The sounds of mirth re-echo loud,
And all their former joy recall.

But who is he, whose darken'd brow
Glooms in the midst of general mirth?
Before his eyes' far fiercer glow
The blue flames curl'd o'er the hearth.

Dark is the robe which wraps his form,
And tall his plume of gory red;
His voice is like the rising storm,
But light and trackless is his tread.

'Tis noon of night, the pledge goes round,
The bridegroom's health is deeply quaff'd;
With shouts the vaulted roofs resound,
And all combine to hail the draught.

Sudden the stranger chief arose,
And all the clamorous crowd are hush'd;
And Angus' cheek with wonder glows,
And Mora's tender bosom blush'd.

"Old man!" he cried, "this pledge is done;
Thou saw'st 't was duly drunk by me:
It hail'd the nuptials of thy son:
Now will I claim a pledge from thee.

"While all around is mirth and joy,
To bless thy Allan's happy lot,
Say, hadst thou ne'er another boy?
Say, why should Oscar be forgot?"

"Alas!" the hapless sire replied,
The big tear starting as he spoke,
"When Oscar left my hall, or died,
This aged heart was almost broke.

"Thrice has the earth revolved her course
Since Oscar's form has bless'd my sight;
And Allan is my last resource,
Since martial Oscar's death or flight."

"'Tis well," replied the stranger stern,
And fiercely flash'd his rolling eye:
"Thy Oscar's fate I fain would learn;
Perhaps the hero did not die.

"Perchance, if those whom most he loved
Would call, thy Oscar might return;
Perchance the chief has only roved;
For him thy beltane yet may burn."

"Fill high the bowl the table round,
We will not claim the pledge by stealth;
With wine let every cup be crown'd;
Pledge me departed Oscar's health."

"With all my soul," old Angus said,
And fill'd his goblet to the brim;
"Here 's to my boy! alive or dead,
I ne'er shall find a son like him."

"Bravely, old man, this health has sped;
But why does Allan trembling stand?
Come, drink remembrance of the dead,
And raise thy cup with firmer hand."

The crimson glow of Allan's face
Was turn'd at once to ghastly hue;
The drops of death each other chase
Adown in agonizing dew.

Thrice did he raise the goblet high,
And thrice his lips refused to taste;
For thrice he caught the stranger's eye
On his with deadly fury plac'd.

"And is it thus a brother hails
A brother's fond remembrance here?
If thus affection's strength prevails,
What might we not expect from fear?"

Roused by the sneer, he raised the bowl,
"Would Oscar now could share our mirth!"
Internal fear appall'd his soul;
He said, and dash'd the cup to earth.

"'Tis he! I hear my murderer's voice!"
Loud shrieks a darkly gleaming form.
"A murderer's voice!" the roof replies,
And deeply swells the bursting storm.

The tapers wink, the chieftains shrink,
The stranger's gone,—amidst the crew
A form was seen in tartan green,
And tall the shade terrific grew.

His waist was bound with a broad belt round,
His plume of sable stream'd on high;
But his breast was bare, with the red wounds
there,
And fix'd was the glare of his glassy eye.

And thrice he smiled, with his eye so wild,
On Angus bending low the knee;
And thrice he frown'd on a chief on the ground,
Whom shivering crowds with horror see.

The bolts loud roll, from pole to pole,
The thunders through the welkin ring,
And the gleaming form, through the mist of the storm,
Was borne on high by the whirlwind's wing.

Cold was the feast, the revel ceased,
Who lies upon the stony floor?
Oblivion press'd old Angus' breast,
At length his life-pulse throbs once more.

"Away, away! let the leech essay
To pour the light on Allan's eyes:"
His sand is done,—his race is run;
Oh! never more shall Allan rise!

But Oscar's breast is cold as clay,
His locks are lifted by the gale:
And Allan's barbed arrow lay
With him in dark Gientanar's vale.

* Beltane Tree, a Highland festival on the first of May, held near a fire lighted for the occasion.—Belt-tain means the fire of Beal, and the name still preserves the primal origin of this Celtic superstition.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

And whence the dreadful stranger came,
Or who, no mortal might can tell;
But no one doubts the form of flame,
For Alva's sons knew Oscar well.

Ambition nerved young Allan's hand,
Exulting demons wing'd his dart;
While Envy waved her burning brand,
And pour'd her venom round his heart.

Swift is the shaft from Allan's bow;
Whose streaming life-blood stains his side?
Dark Oscar's sable crest is low,
The dart has drunk his vital tide.

And Mora's eye could Allan move,
She bade his wounded pride rebel;
Alas! that eyes which beam'd with love
Should urge the soul to deeds of hell.

Lo! seest thou not a lonely tomb
Which rises o'er a warrior dead?
It glimmers through the twilight gloom;
Oh! that is Allan's nuptial bed.

Far, distant far, the noble grave
Which held his clan's great ashes stood;
And o'er his corse no banners wave,
For they were stain'd with kindred blood.

What minstrel gray, what hoary bard,
Shall Allan's deeds on harp-strings raise?
The song is glory's chief reward,
But who can strike a murderer's praise?

Unstrung, untouched, the harp must stand,
No minstrel dare the theme awake;
Guilt would bemoan his palsied hand,
His harp in shuddering chords would break.

No lyre of fame, no hallow'd verse,
Shall sound his glories high in air:
A dying father's bitter curse,
A brother's death-groan echoes there.

THE EPISODE OF NISUS AND EURYALUS.

A PARAPHRASE FROM THE ÆNEID, LIB. IX.

NISUS, the guardian of the portal, stood,
Eager to gild his arms with hostile blood;
Well skill'd in fight the quivering lance to wield,
Or pour his arrows through th' embattled field:
From Ida torn, he left his sylvan cave,
And sought a foreign home, a distant grave.
To watch the movements of the Daunian host,
With him Euryalus sustains the post;
No lovelier men adorn'd the ranks of Troy,
And beardless bloom yet graced the gallant boy;
Though few the seasons of his youthful life,
As yet a novice in the martial strife,
"T was his, with beauty, valor's gifts to share—
A soul heroic, as his form was fair:
These burn with one pure flame of generous love;
In peace, in war, united still they move;
Friendship and glory form their joint reward;
And now combined they hold their nightly guard.

"What god," exclaim'd the first, "instills this fire?"

Or, in itself a god, what great desire?
My laboring soul, with anxious thought oppress'd,
Abhors this station of inglorious rest:
The love of fame with this can ill accord.
Be 't mine to seek for glory with my sword.
Seest thou yon camp, with torches twinkling dim,
Where drunken slumbers wrap each lazy limb?

Where confidence and ease the watch disdain,
And drowsy Silence holds her sable reign?
Then hear my thought:—In deep and sullen grief
Our troops and leaders mourn their absent chief:
Now could the gifts and promised prize be thine
(The deed, the danger, and the fame be mine),
Were this decreed, beneath yon rising mound,
Methinks, an easy path perchance were found;
Which past, I speed my way to Pallas' walls,
And lead Æneas from Evander's halls."

With equal ardor fired, and warlike joy,
His glowing friend address'd the Dardan boy:—
"These deeds, my Nisus, shalt thou dare alone?
Must all the fame, the peril, be thine own?
Am I by thee despised, and left afar,
As one unfit to share the toils of war?
Not thus his son the great Opheltus taught;
Not thus my sire in Argive combats fought;
Not thus, when Ilion fell by heavenly fate,
I track'd Æneas through the walks of fate:
Thou know'st my deeds, my breast devoid of fear.
And hostile life-drops dim my gory spear.
Here is a soul with hope immortal burns,
And life, ignoble life, for glory spurns.
Fame, fame is cheaply earn'd by fleeting breath:
The price of honor is the sleep of death."

Then Nisus:—"Calm thy bosom's fond alarms,
Thy heart beats fiercely to the din of arms.
More dear thy worth and valor than my own,
I swear by him who fills Olympus' throne!
So may I triumph, as I speak the truth,
And clasp again the comrade of my youth!
But should I fall,—and he who dares advance
Through hostile legions must abide by chance,—
If some Rutulian arm, with adverse blow,
Should lay the friend who ever loved thee low,
Live thou, such beauties I would fain preserve,
Thy budding years a lengthen'd term deserve.
When humbled in the dust, let some one be,
Whose gentle eyes will shed one tear for me;
Whose manly arm may snatch me back by force,
Or wealth redeem from foes my captive corse;
Or, if my destiny these last deny,
If in the spoiler's power my ashes lie,
Thy pious care may raise a simple tomb,
To mark thy love, and signalize my doom.
Why should thy doting wretched mother weep
Her only boy, reclined in endless sleep?
Who, for thy sake, the tempest's fury dared,
Who, for thy sake, war's deadly peril shared;
Who braved what woman never braved before,
And left her native for the Latian shore."
"In vain you damp the ardor of my soul,"
Replied Euryalus; "it scorns control!
Hence, let us haste!"—their brother guards arose,
Roused by their call, nor court again repose;
The pair, buoy'd up on Hope's exulting wing,
Their stations leave, and speed to seek the king.

Now o'er the earth a solemn stillness ran,
And lull'd alike the cares of brute and man;
Save where the Dardan leaders nightly hold
Alternate converse, and their plans unfold.
On one great point the council are agreed,
An instant message to their prince decreed;
Each lean'd upon the lance he well could wield,
And poised with easy arm his ancient shield;
When Nisus and his friend their leave request
To offer something to their high behest.
With anxious tremors, yet unawed by fear,
The faithful pair before the throne appear:
Iulus greets them; at his kind command,
The elder first address'd the hoary band.

"With patience" (thus Hyrtacides began)
"Attend, nor judge from youth our humble plan.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Where yonder beacons half expiring beam,
Our slumbering foes of future conquest dream,
Nor heed that we a secret path have traced,
Between the ocean and the portal placed,
Beneath the covert of the blackening smoke,
Whose shade securely our design will cloak;
If you, ye chiefs, and fortune will allow,—
We'll bend our course to yonder mountain's brow,
Where Pallas' walls at distance meet the sight,
Seen o'er the gulf, when not obscured by night:
Then shall Æneas in his pride return,
While hostile matrons raise their offspring's urn;
And Lætan spoils and purpled heaps of dead
Shall mark the havoc of our hero's tread.
Such is our purpose, not unknown the way;
Where yonder torrent's devils waters stray,
Oft have we seen, when hunting by the stream,
The distant spires above the valleys gleam."

Mature in years, for sober wisdom famed,
Moved by the speech, Ælethes here exclaim'd,—
"Ye parent gods! who rule the fate of Troy,
Still dwells the Dardan spirit in the boy;
When minds like these in striplings thus ye raise,
Yours is the godlike act, be yours the praise;
In gallant youth, my fainting hopes revive,
And Ilion's wonted glories still survive."
Then in his warm embrace the boys he press'd,
And, quivering, strain'd them to his aged breast;
With tears the burning cheek of each bedew'd,
And, sobbing, thus his first discourse renew'd:
"What gift, my countrymen, what martial prize
Can we bestow, which you may not despise?
Our deities the first best boon have given—
Internal virtues are the gift of Heaven.
What poor rewards can bless your deeds on earth,
Doubtless await such youth, exalted worth.
Æneas and Æscæus shall combine
To yield applause far, far surpassing mine."

Iulus then:—"By all the powers above!
By those Penates who my country love!
By hoary Vesta's sacred fane, I swear,
My hopes are all in you, ye generous pair!
Restore my father to my grateful sight,
And all my sorrows yield to one delight.
Nisus! two silver goblets are thine own,
Saved from Arisbe's stately domes o'erthrown!
My sire secured them on that fatal day,
Nor left such bowls an Argive robber's prey:
Two mazy tripods, also, shall be thine;
Two talents polish'd from the glittering mine;
An ancient cup, which Tyrian Dido gave,
While yet our vessels press'd the Punic wave:
But when the hostile chiefs at length bow down,
When great Æneas wears Hesperia's crown,
The casque, the buckler, and the fiery steed,
Which Turnus guides with more than mortal speed,
Are thine; no envious lot shall then be cast,
I pledge my word, irrevocably past:
Nay more, twelve slaves, and twice six captive dames,

To soothe thy softer hours with amorous flames,
And all the realms which now the Latins sway,
The labors of to-night shall well repay.
But thou, my generous youth, whose tender years
Are near my own, whose worth my heart reveres,
Henceforth affection, sweetly thus begun,
Shall join our bosoms and our souls in one;
Without thy aid, no glory shall be mine;
Without thy dear advice, no great design;
Alike through life esteem'd, thou godlike boy,
In war my bulwark, and in peace my joy."

To him Euryalus:—"No day shall claim
The rising glories which from this I claim.
Fortune may favor, or the skies may frown,
But valor, spite of fate, obtains renown.

Yet, ere from hence our eager steps depart,
One boon I beg, the nearest to my heart:
My mother, sprung from Priam's royal line,
Like thine ennobled, hardly less divine,
Nor Troy nor King Acastes' realms restrain
Her feeble age from dangers of the main;
Alone she came, all selfish fears above,
A bright example of maternal love.
Unknown the secret enterprise I brave,
Lest grief should bend my parent to the grave;
From this alone no fond adieu I seek,
No fainting mother's lips have press'd my cheek;
By gloomy night and thy right hand I vow
Her parting tears would shake my purpose now:
Do thou, my prince, her falling age sustain,
In thee her much-loved child may live again;
Her dying hours with pious conduct bless,
Assist her wants, relieve her fond distress:
So dear a hope must all my soul inflame,
To rise in glory, or to fall in fame."
Struck with a filial care so deeply felt,
In tears at once the Trojan warriors melt;
Faster than all, Iulus' eyes o'erflow;
Such love was his, and such had been his woe.
"All thou hast ask'd, receive," the prince replied;
"Nor this alone, but many a gift beside.
To cheer thy mother's years shall be my aim,
Creusa's* style but wanting to the dame.
Fortune an adverse wayward course may run,
But bless'd thy mother in so dear a son.
Now, by my life!—my sire's most sacred oath—
To thee I pledge my full, my firmest troth,
All the rewards which once to thee were vow'd,
If thou shouldst fall, on her shall be bestow'd."
Thus spoke the weeping prince, then forth to view
A gleaming falchion from the sheath he drew;
Lycaon's utmost skill had graced the steel,
For friends to envy and for foes to feel:
A tawny hide, the Moorish lion's spoil,
Slain 'midst the forest, in the hunter's toil,
Mnestheus to guard the elder youth bestows,
And old Ælethes' casque defends his brows.
Arm'd, thence they go, while all th' assembled train,
To aid their cause, implore the gods in vain.
More than a boy, in wisdom and in grace,
Iulus holds amidst the chiefs his place:
His prayer he sends; but what can prayers avail,
Lost in the murmurs of the sighing gale?

The trench is pass'd, and, favor'd by the night,
Through sleeping foes they wheel their wary flight.
When shall the sleep of many a foe be o'er?
Alas! some slumber who shall wake no more!
Chariots and bridles, mix'd with arms, are seen;
And flowing flags, and scattered troops between:
Beechus and Mars to rule the camp combine;
A mingled chase this of war and wine.
"Now," cries the first, "for deeds of blood prepare,
With me the conquest and the labor share:
Here lies our path; lest any hand arise
Watch thou, while many a dreaming chieftain dies:
I'll carve our passage through the heedless foe,
And clear thy road with many a deadly blow."
His whispering accents then the youth repress'd,
And pierced proud Rhamnes through his panting
breast:
Stretch'd at his ease, th' incautious king reposed;
Debauch, and not fatigue, his eyes had closed:
To Turnus dear, a prophet and a prince,
His omens more than augur's skill evince;
But he, who thus foretold the fate of all,
Could not avert his own untimely fall.
Next Remus' armor-bearer, hapless, fell,
And three unhappy slaves the carnage swell;

* The mother of Iulus, lost on the night when Troy was taken.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

The charioteer along his courser's sides
Expires, the steel his sever'd neck divides;
And, last, his lord is number'd with the dead:
Bounding convulsive, flies the gasping head;
From the swoll'n veins the blackening torrents
pour;
Stain'd is the couch and earth with clotting gore.
Young Lamyros and Lamus next expire,
And gay Serranus, fill'd with youthful fire;
Half the long night in childish games was pass'd;
Lull'd by the potent grape, he slept at last:
Ah! happier far had he the morn survey'd,
And till Aurora's dawn his skill displayed.

In slaughter'd fold, the keepers lost in sleep,
His hungry fangs a lion thus may steep:
'Mid the sad flock, at dead of night he prowls,
With murder glutted, and in carnage rolls:
Insatiate still, through teeming herds he roams;
In seas of gore the lordly tyrant foams.

Nor less the other's deadly vengeance came,
But falls on feeble crowds without a name;
His wound unconscious Fadus scarce can feel,
Yet wakeful Rhæsus sees the threatening steel;
His coward breast behind a jar he hides,
And vainly in the weak defence confides;
Full in his heart, the falchion searched his veins,
The reeking weapon bears alternate stains;
Through wine and blood, commingling as they flow,
One feeble spirit seeks the shades below.
Now where Messapus dwelt they bend their way,
Whose fires emit a faint and trembling ray:
There, unconfined, behold each grazing steed,
Unwatch'd, unheeded, on the herbage feed:
Brave Nisus here arrests his comrade's arm,
Too flush'd with carnage, and with conquest warm:
"Hence let us haste, the dangerous path is pass'd;
Full foes enough to-night have breathed their last:
Soon will the day those eastern clouds adorn;
Now let us speed, nor tempt the rising morn."

What silver arms, with various art emboss'd,
What bowls and mantles in confusion toss'd,
They leave regardless! yet one glittering prize
Attracts the younger hero's wandering eyes;
The gilded harness Rhæmus' coursers felt,
The gems which stud the monarch's golden belt.
This from the pallid corpse was quickly torn,
Once by a line of former chieftains worn.
Th' exulting boy the studded girdle wears,
Messapus' helm his head in triumph bears;
Then from the tents their cautious steps they bend,
To seek the vale where safer paths extend.

Just at this hour a band of Latian horse
To Turnus' camp pursue their destined course:
While the slow foot their tardy march delay,
The knights, impatient, spur along the way:
Three hundred mail-clad men, by Volscens led,
To Turnus with their master's promise sped:
Now they approach the trench, and view the walls,
When, on the left, a light reflection falls:
The plunder'd helmet, through the waning night,
Sheds forth a silver radiance, glancing bright.
Volscens with question loud the pair alarms:—
"Stand, stragglers! stand! why early thus in arms?
From whence? to whom?"—He meets with no reply;

Trusting the covert of the night, they fly:
The thicket's depth with hurried pace they tread,
While round the wood the hostile squadron spread.

With brakes entangled, scarce a path between,
Dreary and dark appears the sylvan scene:
Euryalus his heavy spoils impede,
The boughs and winding turns his steps mislead;

But Nisus scours along the forest's maze
To where Latinus' steeds in safety graze,
Then backward o'er the plain his eyes extend,
On every side they seek his absent friend.
"Oh, God! my boy," he cries, "of me bereft,
In what impending perils art thou left!"
Listening he runs—above the waving trees,
Tumultuous voices swell the passing breeze;
The war-cry rises, thundering hoofs around
Wake the dark echoes of the trembling ground.
Again he turns, of footsteps hears the noise;
The sound elates, the sight his horse destroys:
The hapless boy a rufian train surround;
While lengthening shades his weary way confound;
Him with loud shouts the furious knights pursue,
Struggling in vain, a captive to the crew.
What can his friend 'gainst thronging numbers
dare?

Ah! must he rush his comrade's fate to share?
What force, what aid, what stratagem essay,
Back to redeem the Latian spoiler's prey?
His life a votive ransom nobly give,
Or die with him for whom he wish'd to live?
Poising with strength his lifted lance on high,
On Luna's orb he cast his frenzied eye:—
"Goddess serene, transcending every star!
Queen of the sky, whose beams are seen afar!
By night heaven owns thy sway, by day the grove,
When, as chaste Dian, here thou deign'st to rove;
If e'er myself, or sire, have sought to grace
Thine altars with the produce of the chase,
Speed, speed my dart to pierce yon vaunting crowd,
To free my friend, and scatter far the proud."
Thus having said, the hissing dart he flung;
Through parted shades the hurtling weapon sung;
The thirsty point in Sulmo's entrails lay,
Transfix'd his heart, and stretch'd him on the clay:
He sobb, he dies,—the troop in wild amaze,
Unconscious whence the death, with horror gaze.
While pale they stare, through Tagus' temples riven,
A second shaft with equal force is driven:
Fierce Volscens rolls around his lowering eyes;
Burl'd by the night, secure the Trojan lies.
Vexing with wrath, he view'd his soldiers fall.
"Thou youth accurs'd, thy life shall pay for all!"
Quick from the sheath his flaming glaive he drew,
And, raging, on the boy defenceless flew.
Nisus no more the blackening shade conceals,
Forth, forth he starts, and all his love reveals;
Aghast, confused, his fears to madness rise,
And pour these accents, shrieking as he flies:
"Me, me,—your vengeance hurl on me alone;
Here sheathe the steel, my blood is all your own.
Yestarryspheres! thou conscious Heaven! attest!
He could not—durst not—lo! the guile confest!
All, all was mine,—his early fate suspend;
He only loved too well his hapless friend:
Spare, spare, ye chiefs! from him your rage remove;

His fault was friendship, all his crime was love."
He pray'd in vain; the dark assassin's sword
Pierced the fair side, the snowy bosom gor'd;
Lowly to earth inclines his plume-clad crest,
And sanguine torrents mantle o'er his breast:
As some young rose, whose blossom scents the air,
Languid in death, expires beneath the share;
Or crimson poppy, sinking with the shower,
Declining gently, falls a fading flower;
Thus, sweetly drooping, bends his lovely head,
And lingering beauty hovers round the dead.

But fiery Nisus stems the battle's tide,
Revenge his leader, and despair his guide;
Volscens he seeks amidst the gathering host,
Volscens must soon appease his comrade's ghost:
Steel, flashing, pours on steel, foe crowds on foe;
Rage nerves his arm, fate gleams in every blow;

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

In vain beneath unnumber'd wounds he bleeds,
Nor wounds, nor death, distracted Nisus heeds;
In viewless circles wheel'd, his falchion flies,
Nor quits the hero's grasp till Volscens dies;
Deep in his throat its end the weapon found,
The tyrant's soul fled groaning through the wound.
Thus Nisus all his fond affection proved—
Dying, revenged the fate of him he loved;
Then on his bosom sought his wonted place,
And death was heavenly in his friend's embrace.

Celestial pair! if aught my verse can claim,
Wafted on Time's broad pinion, yours is fame!
Ages on ages shall your fate admire,
No future day shall see your names expire,
While stands the Capitol, immortal dome!
And vanquish'd millions hail their empress, Rome!

TRANSLATION FROM THE MEDEA OF EURIPIDES.

[Ευρωπης μεταφρασις, α. τ. α.]

WHEN fierce conflicting passions urge
The breast where love is wont to glow,
What mind can stem the stormy surge,
Which rolls the tide of human woe?
The hope of praise, the dread of shame,
Can rouse the tortured breast no more;
The wild desire, the guilty flame,
Absorbs each wish it felt before.

But if affection gently thrills
The soul by purer dreams possess'd,
The pleasing balm of mortal ills
In love can soothe the aching breast:
If thus thou comest in disguise,
Fair Venus! from thy native heaven,
What heart unfeeling would despise
The sweetest boon the gods have given?

But never from thy golden bow
May I beneath the shaft expire!
Whose oreping venom, sure and slow,
Awakes an all-consuming fire:
Ye racking doubts! ye jealous fears!
With others wage internal wars!
Repentance, source of future tears,
From me be ever distant far!

May no distracting thoughts destroy
The holy calm of sacred love!
May all the hours be wing'd with joy,
Which hover faithful hearts above!
Fair Venus! on thy myrtle shrine
May I with some fond lover sigh,
Whose heart may mingle pure with mine—
With me to live, with me to die.

My native soil! beloved before,
Now dearer as my peaceful home,
Ne'er may I quit thy rocky shore,
A hapless banish'd wretch to roam!
This very day, this very hour,
May I resign this fleeting breath!
Nor quit my silent humble bower;
A doom to me far worse than death.

* Medea, who accompanied Jason to Corinth, was deserted by him for the daughter of Creon, king of that city. The chorus from which this is taken here addresses Medea; though a considerable liberty is taken with the original, by expanding the idea, as also in some other parts of the translation.

† The original is Καταλαβέτωμαι ελπίσιν ὁμοῖα, literally, "discussing the bright key of the mind."

‡ No reflection is here intended against the person men-

Have I not heard the exile's sigh,
And seen the exile's silent tear,
Through distant climes condemn'd to fly,
A pensive weary wanderer here?
Ah, hapless dame! no sire bewails,
No friend thy wretched fate deplores,
No kindred voice with rapture hails
Thy steps within a stranger's doors.

Perish the fiend whose iron heart,
To fair affection's truth unknown,
Bids her be fondly loved depart,
Unpitied, helpless, and alone;
Who ne'er unlocks with silver key†
The milder treasures of his soul,—
May such a friend be far from me,
And ocean's storms between us roll!

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY A COLLEGE EXAMINATION.

HIGH in the midst, surrounded by his peers,
MAGNUS† his ample front sublime uprears:
Placed on his chair of state, he seems a god,
While Sophs and Freshmen tremble at his nod.
As all around sit wrapt in speechless gloom,
His voice in thunder shakes the sounding dome;
Denouncing dire reproach to luckless fools,
Unskill'd to plod in mathematic rules.

Happy the youth in Euclid's axioms tried,
Though little versed in any art beside;
Who, scarcely skill'd an English line to pen,
Scan Attic metres with a critic's ken.
What, though he knows not how his fathers bled,
When civil discord piled the fields with dead,
When Edward bade his conquering bands advance,
Or Henry trampled on the crest of France:
Though marvelling at the name of Magna Charta,
Yet well he recollects the laws of Sparta;
Can tell what edicts sage Lycurgus made,
While Blackstone's on the shelf neglected laid;
Of Grecian dramas vaunts the deathless fame,
Of Avon's bard remembering scarce the name.

Such is the youth whose scientific pate
Class-honors, medals, fellowships, await;
Or even, perhaps, the declamation prize,
If to such glorious height he lifts his eyes.
But lo! no common orator can hope
The envied silver cup within his scope.
Not that our heads much eloquence require,
Th' ATHENIAN's‡ glowing style, or Tully's fire.
A manner clear or warm is useless, since
We do not try by speaking to convince.
Be other orators of pleasing proud:
We speak to please ourselves, not move the crowd:
Our gravity prefers the muttering tone,
A proper mixture of the squeak and groan:
No borrow'd grace of action must be seen;
The slightest motion would displease the Dean;||
Whilst every staring graduate would prate
Against what he could never imitate.

The man who hopes to obtain the promised cup
Must in one posture stand, and ne'er look up;

tioned under the name of Magnus. He is merely represented as performing an unavoidable function of his office. Indeed, such an attempt could only recoil upon myself; as that gentleman is now as much distinguished by his eloquence, and the dignified propriety with which he fills his situation, as he was in his younger days for wit and conviviality.

† Demosthenes.

‡ In most colleges, the fellow who superintends the chapel service is called dean.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Nor stop, but rattle over every word—
No matter what, so it can not be heard.
Thus let him hurry on, nor think to rest:
Who speaks the fastest 's sure to speak the best;
Who utters most within the shortest space
May safely hope to win the wordy race.

The sons of science these, who, thus repaid,
Linger in ease in Granta's sluggish shade;
Where on Cam's sedge banks supine they lie,
Unknown, unhonor'd live, unwept-for die:
Dull as the pictures which adorn their halls,
They think all learning fix'd within their walls:
In manners rude, in foolish forms precise,
All modern arts affecting to despise;
Yet prizing Bentley's, Brunk's, or Porson's * note,
More than the verse on which the critic wrote:
Vain as their honors, heavy as their tale,
Sad as their wit, and tedious as their tale;
To friendship dead, though not untaught to feel
When Self and Church demand a bigot zeal.
With eager haste they court the lord of power,
Whether 't is Pitt or Petty rules the hour; †
To him, with suppliant smiles, they bend the head,
While distant mires to their eyes are spread.
But should a storm o'erwhelm him with disgrace,
They'd fly to seek the next who fill'd his place.
Such are the men who learning's treasures guard!
Such is their practice, such is their reward!
This much, at least, we may presume to say—
The premium can't exceed the price they pay. (2000.)

TO A BEAUTIFUL QUAKER.

SWEET girl! though only once we met,
That meeting I shall ne'er forget;
And though we ne'er may meet again,
Remembrance will thy form retain.
I would not say, "I love," but still
My senses struggle with my will:
In vain, to drive thee from my breast,
My thoughts are more and more repress;
In vain I check the rising sighs,
Another to the last replies:
Perhaps this is not love, but yet
Our meeting I can ne'er forget.

What though we never silence broke,
Our eyes a sweeter language spoke;
The tongue in flattering falsehood deals,
And tells a tale it never feels:
Decit the guilty lips impart,
And hush the mandates of the heart;
But soul's interpreters, the eyes,
Spurn such restraint, and scorn disguise.
As thus our glances oft conversed,
And all our bosoms felt rehearsed,
No spirit, from within, reproved us,
Say rather, "t was the spirit moved us."
Though what they utter'd I repress,
Yet I conceive thou'lt partly guess;
For as on thee my memory ponders,
Perchance to me thine also wanders.
This for myself, at least, I'll say,
Thy form appears through night, through day:
Awake, with it my fancy teems;
In sleep, it smiles in fleeting dreams:
The vision charms the hours away,
And bids me curse Aurora's ray
For breaking numbers of delight
Which make me wish for endless night.

* The present Greek professor of Trinity College, Cambridge—a man whose powers of mind and writings may, perhaps, justify their preference.

† Since this was written, Lord Henry Petty has lost his place.

Since, oh! whate'er my future fate,
Shall joy or woe my steps await,
Tempted by love, by storms beset,
Thine image I can ne'er forget.
Alas! again no more we meet.
No more our former looks repeat;
Then let me breathe this parting prayer,
The dictate of my bosom's care:
"May Heaven so guard my lovely quaker,
That anguish never can o'ertake her;
That peace and virtue ne'er forsake her,
But bliss be aye her heart's partaker!
Oh! may the happy mortal, fated
To be, by dearest ties, related,
For her each hour new joys discover,
And lose the husband in the lover!
May that fair bosom never know
What 't is to feel the restless woe
Which stings the soul, with vain regret,
Of him who never can forget!"

THE CORNELIAN.

No specious splendor of this stone
Endears it to my memory ever;
With lustre only once it shone,
And blushes modest as the giver.

Some, who can sneer at friendship's time,
Have, for my weakness, oft reproved me;
Yet still the simple gift I prize,
For I am sure the giver loved me.

He offer'd it with downcast look,
As fearful that I might refuse it;
I told him, when the gift I took,
My only fear should be to lose it.

This pledge attentively I view'd,
And sparkling as I held it near,
Methought one drop the stone bedew'd,
And ever since I've loved a tear.

Still, to adorn his humble youth,
Nor wealth nor birth their treasures yield;
But he who seeks the flowers of truth,
Must quit the garden for the field.

'T is not the plant uprear'd in aloth,
Which beauty shows, and sheds perfume;
The flowers which yield the most of both
In Nature's wild luxuriance bloom.

Had Fortune aided Nature's care,
For ~~was~~ forgetting to be blind,
His would have been an ample share,
If well proportion'd to his mind.

But had the goddess clearly seen,
His form had fix'd her sickle breast;
Her countless hoards would his have been,
And none remain'd to give the rest.

AN OCCASIONAL PROLOGUE,

DELIVERED PREVIOUS TO THE PERFORMANCE
OF "THE WHEEL OF FORTUNE" AT A PRIVATE THEATRE.

SINCE the refinement of this polish'd age
Has swept immortal rallery from the stage;
Since taste has now expunged licentious wit,
Which stamp'd disgrace on all an author writ;

and subsequently (I had almost said consequently) the hour of representing the university. A fact so glaring requires no comment.

HOURS OF IDLENESS

Since now to please with purer scenes we seek,
 Nor dare to call the blush from Beauty's cheek;
 Oh! let the modest Muse some pity claim,
 And meet indulgence, though she find not fame.
 Still, not for her alone we wish respect:
 Others appear more conscious of defect:
 To-night no veteran Rosc! you behold,
 In all the arts of scenic action old;
 No Cook, no Kemble, can salute you here,
 No Siddons draw the sympathetic tear;
 To-night you throng to witness the début
 Of embryo actors, to the Drama new:
 Here, then, our almost unfledged wings we try;
 'Tis not our pinions ere the birds can fly:
 Falling in this our first attempt to soar,
 Drooping, alas! we fall to rise no more.
 Not one poor trembler only fear betrays,
 Who hopes, yet almost dreads, to meet your praise:
 But all our dramatic persons wait
 In fond suspense this crisis of their fate.
 No venal views our progress can retard,
 Your generous plaudits are our sole reward.
 For these, each Hero all his power displays,
 Each timid Heroine shrinks before your gaze.
 Surely the last will some protection find;
 None to the softer sex can prove unkind:
 While Youth and Beauty form the female shield,
 The sternest censor to the fair must yield.
 Yet, should our feeble efforts nought avail,
 Should, after all, our best endeavors fail,
 Still let some mercy in your bosoms live,
 And, if you can't applaud, at least forgive.

ON THE DEATH OF MR. FOX.

THE FOLLOWING ILLIBERAL IMPROMPTU AP-PEARED IN A MORNING PAPER.

"Our nation's foes lament on Fox's death,
 But bless the hour when Pitt resign'd his breath:
 These feelings wide, let sense and truth unclue,
 We give the palm where Justice points its due."

TO WHICH THE AUTHOR OF THESE LINES SENT THE FOLLOWING REPLY.

Oh, factious viper! whose envenom'd tooth
 Would mangle still the dead, perverting truth;
 What though our "nation's foes" lament the fate,
 With generous feeling, of the good and great,
 Shall dastard tongues essay to blast the name
 Of him whose meed exists in endless fame?
 When Pitt expired in plenitude of power,
 Though ill success obscured his dying hour,
 Pity her dewy wings before him spread,
 For noble spirits "war not with the dead":
 His friends, in tears, a last sad requiem gave,
 As all his errors slumber'd in the grave;
 He sunk, an Atlas bending 'neath the weight
 Of cares o'erwhelming our conflicting state:
 When, lo! a Hercules in Fox appear'd,
 Who for a time the ruin'd fabric rear'd:
 He, too, is fall'n, who Britain's loss supplied,
 With him our fast-reviving hopes have died;
 Not one great people only raise his urn,
 All Europe's far extended regions mourn.
 "These feelings wide, let sense and truth unclue,
 To give the palm where Justice points its due;"
 Yet let not canker'd Calumny assail,
 Or round our statesman wind her gloomy veil.
 Fox! o'er whose corse a mourning world must
 weep,
 Whose dear remains in honor'd marble sleep;
 For whom, at last, e'en hostile nations groan,
 While friends and foes alike his talents own;

Fox shall in Britain's future annals shine,
 Nor e'en to Pitt the patriot's palm resign;
 Which Envy, wearing Candor's sacred mask,
 For Pitt, and Pitt alone, has dared to ask.

THE TEAR.

"O lacrymarum fons, tenebro macros
 Duocentum ortus ex animo; quater
 Felix! in imo qui contentum
 Pectore ta, pia Nympha, sensit."—GRAY.

When Friendship or Love our sympathies move,
 When Truth in a glance should appear,
 The lips may beguile with a dimple or smile,
 But the test of affection's a Tear.

Too oft is a smile but the hypocrite's wile,
 To mask detestation or fear;
 Give me the soft sigh, whilst the soul-telling eye
 Is dimm'd for a time with a Tear.

Mild Charity's glow, to us mortals below,
 Shows the soul from barbarity clear;
 Compassion will melt where this virtue is felt,
 And its dew is diffused in a Tear.

The man doom'd to sail with the blast of the gale,
 Through billows Atlantic to steer,
 As he bends o'er the wave which may soon be his grave,
 The green sparkles bright with a Tear.

The soldier braves death for a fanciful wreath
 In Glory's romantic career;
 But he raises the foe when in battle laid low,
 And bathes every wound with a Tear.

If with high-bounding pride he return to his bride,
 Renouncing the gore-crimson'd spear,
 All his toils are repaid when, embracing the maid,
 From her eyelid he kisses the Tear.

Sweet scene of my youth! * seat of Friendship and Truth,
 Where love chased each fast-footing year,
 Loth to leave thee, I mourn'd, for a last look I turn'd,
 But thy spire was scarce seen through a Tear.

Though my vows I can pour to my Mary no more,
 My Mary to Love once so dear;
 In the shade of her bower I remember the hour
 She rewarded those vows with a Tear.

By another possess, may she live ever blest!
 Her name still my heart must revere:
 With a sigh I resign what I once thought was mine,
 And forgive her deceit with a Tear.

Ye friends of my heart, ere from you I depart,
 This hope to my breast is most near:
 If again we shall meet in this rural retreat,
 May we meet, as we part, with a Tear.

When my soul wings her flight to the regions of night,
 And my corse shall recline on its bier,
 As ye pass by the tomb where my ashes consume,
 Oh! moisten their dust with a Tear.

May no marble bestow the splendor of woe,
 Which the children of vanity rear;
 No fiction of fame shall blazon my name;
 And all I ask—all I wish—is a Tear.

[October 22, 1804.]

HOURS OF IDLENESS

REPLY TO SOME VERSES OF J. M. B. PIGOT, ESQ., ON THE CRUELTY OF HIS MISTRESS.

WHY, Pigot, complain of this damsel's disdain,
Why thus in despair do you fret?
For months you may try, yet, believe me, a sigh
Will never obtain a coquette.

Would you teach her to love? for a time seem to love.

At first she may frown in a pet;
But leave her awhile, she shortly will smile,
And then you may kiss your coquette.

For such are the airs of these fanciful fair,
They think all our homage a debt:
Yet a partial neglect soon takes an effect,
And humbles the proudest coquette.

Dissemble your pain, and lengthen your chain,
And seem her hauteur to regret;
If again you shall sigh, she no more will deny
That yours is the rosy coquette.

If still, from false pride, your pangs she deride,
This whimsical virgin forget;
Some other admire, who will melt with your fire,
And laugh at the little coquette.

For me, I adore some twenty or more,
And love them most dearly; but yet,
Though my heart they enthrall, I'd abandon them
all,
Did they act like your blooming coquette.

No longer repine, adopt this design,
And break through her slight-woven net;
Away with despair, no longer forbear
To fly from the captious coquette.

Then quit her, my friend! your bosom defend,
Ere quite with her snares you're beset:
Lest your deep-wounded heart, when incensed by the smart,
Should lead you to curse the coquette.

[October 27, 1806.]

TO THE SIGHING STREPHON.

YOUR pardon, my friend, if my rhymes did offend;
Your pardon, a thousand times o'er:
From friendship I strove your pangs to remove,
But I swear I will do so no more.

Since your beautiful maid your flame has repaid,
No more I your folly regret;
She's now most divine, and I bow at the shrine
Of this quickly reformed coquette.

Yet still, I must own, I should never have known
From your verses what else she deserved;
Your pain seem'd so great, I pitied your fate,
As your fair was so devilish reserved.

Since the balm-breathing kiss of this magical miss
Can such wonderful transports produce;
Since the "word you forget, when your lips once have met,"

My counsel will get but abuse.

* Miss Elizabeth Pigot, of Southwell, to whom several of Lord Byron's earliest letters were addressed. See, ante, sketch of his life.

† Lachin y Gair, or, as it is pronounced in the Erse, Loch na Garr, towers proudly pre-eminent in the Northern Highlands, near Invercauld. One of our modern tourists mentions it as the highest mountain, perhaps, in Great Britain. Be this as it may, it is certainly one of the most sublime and

You say, when "I rove, I know nothing of love;"
'Tis true, I am given to range;
If I rightly remember, I've loved a good number.
Yet there's pleasure, at least, in a change.

I will not advance, by the rules of romance,
To humor a whimsical fair;
Though a smile may delight, yet a frown won't affright,
Or drive me to dreadful despair.

While my blood is thus warm I ne'er shall reform.
To mix in the Platonists' school;
Of this I am sure, was my passion so pure,
Thy mistress would think me a fool.

And if I should shun every woman for one,
Whose image must fill my whole breast—
Whom I must prefer, and sigh but for her—
What an insult 't would be to the rest!

Now, Strephon, good-bye; I cannot deny
Your passion appears most absurd;
Such love as you plead is pure love indeed,
For it only consists in the word.

TO ELIZA.*

ELIZA, what fools are the Mussulman sect,
Who to woman deny the soul's future existence!
Could they see thee, Eliza, they'd own their defect,
And this doctrine would meet with a general resistance.

Had their prophet possess'd half an atom of sense,
He ne'er would have woken from paradise driven;
Instead of his hours, a flimsy pretence,
With women alone he had peopled his heaven.

Yet still, to increase your calamities more,
Not content with depriving your bodies of spirit,
He allots one poor husband to share amongst four!—
With souls you'd dispense; but this last who could bear it?

His religion to please neither party is made;
On husbands 't is hard, to the wives most uncivil:
Still I can't contradict, what so oft has been said.
"Though women are angels, yet wedlock 's the devil."

LACHIN Y GAIR.†

AWAY, ye gay landscapes, ye gardens of roses!

In you let the minions of luxury rove;
Restore me the rocks, where the snow-flake peepes,
Though still they are sacred to freedom and love:
Yet, Caledonia, beloved are thy mountains,
Round their white summits though elements war;
Though cataracts foam 'stead of smooth-flowing fountains,

I sigh for the valley of dark Loch na Garr.

Ah! there my young footsteps in infancy wander'd:
My cap was the bonnet, my cloak was the plaid;
On chieftains long perish'd my memory ponder'd.
As daily I strode through the pine-cover'd glade:

picturesque amongst our "Caledonian Alps." Its appearance is of a dusky hue, but the summit is the seat of eternal snows. Near Lachin y Gair I spent some of the early part of my life, the recollection of which has given birth to these stanzas.

† This word is erroneously pronounced plaid: the proper pronunciation (according to the Scotch) is shown by the orthography.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

I sought not my home till the day's dying glory
Gave place to the rays of the bright polar star;
For fancy was cheer'd by traditional story,
Disclosed by the natives of dark Loch na Garr.

"Shades of the dead! have I not heard your voices Rise on the night-rolling breath of the gale?"
Surely the soul of the hero rejoices,
And rides on the wind, o'er his own Highland vale.
Round Loch na Garr while the stormy mist gathers,
Winter presides in his cold icy car:
Clouds there enircle the forms of my fathers;
They dwell in the tempests of dark Loch na Garr.

"Ill-starr'd,* though brave, did no visions foreboding
Tell you that fate had forsaken your cause?"
Ah! were you destined to die at Culloden,†
Victory crown'd not your fall with applause:
Still were you happy in death's earthy slumber,
You rest with your clan in the caves of Braemar;‡
The pibroch resounds, to the piper's loud number,
Your deeds on the echoes of dark Loch na Garr.

Years have roll'd on, Loch na Garr, since I left you,
Years must elapse ere I tread you again:
Nature of verdure and flow'rs has bereft you,
Yet still are you dearer than Albion's plain.
England! thy beauties are tame and domestic
To one who has roved o'er the mountains afar:
Oh for the crags that are wild and majestic!
The steep frowning glories of dark Loch na Garr!

TO ROMANCE.

PARENT of golden dreams, Romance!
Auspicious queen of childish joys,
Who lead'st along, in airy dance,
Thy votive train of girls and boys;
At length, in spells no longer bound,
I break the fetters of my youth;
No more I tread thy mystic round,
But leave thy realms for those of Truth.

And yet 't is hard to quit the dreams
Which haunt the unsuspecting soul,
Where every nymph a goddess seems,
Whose eyes through rays immortal roll;
While Fancy holds her boundless reign,
And all assume a varied hue;
When virgins seem no longer vain,
And even woman's smiles are true.

And must we own thee but a name,
And from thy hall of clouds descend?
Nor find a sylph in every dame,
A Pylades§ in every friend?
But leave at once thy realms of air
To mingling bands of fairy elves;
Confess that woman's false as fair,
And friends have feeling for—themselves.

* I allude here to my maternal ancestors, "the Gordons," many of whom fought for the unfortunate Prince Charles, better known by the name of the Pretender. This branch was nearly allied by blood, as well as attachment, to the Stuarts. George, the second earl of Huntley, married the princess Annabella Stuart, daughter of James the First of Scotland. By her he left four sons: the third, Sir William Gordon, I have the honor to claim as one of my progenitors.

† Whether any perished in the battle of Culloden, I am not certain; but, as many fell in the insurrection, I have used the name of the principal action, "pors pro toto."

‡ A tract of the Highlands so called. There is also a Castle of Braemar.

§ It is hardly necessary to add, that Pylades was the companion of Orestes, and a partner in one of those friendships which, with those of Achilles and Patroclus, Nisus and Euri-

With shame I own I've felt thy sway,
Repentant, now thy reign is o'er:
No more thy precepts I obey,
No more on fancied pinions soar.
Fond fool! to love a sparkling eye,
And think that eye to truth was dear;
To trust a passing wanton's sigh,
And melt beneath a wanton's tear!

Romance! disgusted with deceit,
Far from thy motley court I fly,
Where Affection holds her seat,
And sickly Sensibility;
Whose silly tears can never flow
For any pangs excepting thine;
Who turns aside from real woe,
To steep in dew thy gaudy shrine.

Now join with sable Sympathy,
With cypress crown'd, array'd in woods,
Who heaves with thee her simple sigh,
Whose breast for every bosom bleeds;
And call thy sylvan female choir,
To mourn a swain for ever gone,
Who once could glow with equal fire,
But bends not now before thy throne.

Ye genial nymphs, whose ready tears
On all occasions swiftly flow;
Whose bosoms heave with fancied fears,
With fancied flames and frenzy glow;
Say, will you mourn my absent name,
Apostate from your gentle train?
An infant hard at least may claim
From you a sympathetic strain.

Adieu! fond race! a long adieu!
The hour of fate is hovering nigh;
E'en now the gulf appears in view.
Where unlamented you must lie:
Oblivion's blackening lake is seen,
Convulsed by gales you cannot weather;
Where you, and eke your gentle queen,
Alas! must perish altogether.

ANSWER TO SOME ELEGANT VERSES

SENT BY A FRIEND TO THE AUTHOR, COMPLAINING THAT ONE OF HIS DESCRIPTIONS WAS RATHER TOO WARMLY DRAWN.

"But if any old lady, knight, priest, or physician,
Should condemn me for printing a second edition;
If good Madam Squintum my work should abuse,
May I venture to give her a smack of my muse?"

NEW BASS GUIDE.

CANDOR compels me, BECHER!|| to commend
The verse which blends the censor with the friend.
Your strong yet just reproof extorts applause
From me, the heedless and imprudent cause.

rylus, Damon and Pythias, have been handed down to posterity as remarkable instances of attachments, which in all probability never existed beyond the imagination of the poet, or the page of an historian or modern novelist.

|| The Rev. John Becher, prebendary of Southwell, the well-known author of several philanthropic plans for the amelioration of the condition of the poor. In this gentleman the youthful poet found not only an honest and judicious critic, but a sincere friend. To his care the superintendence of the second edition of "Hours of Idleness," during its progress through a country press, was intrusted, and at his suggestion several corrections and omissions were made. "I must return you," says Lord Byron, in a letter written in February, 1808, "my best acknowledgments for the interest you have taken in me and my poetical bairnings, and I shall ever be proud to show how much I esteem the advice and the adviser."

HOURS OF IDLENESS

For this wild error which pervades my strain,
I sue for pardon,—must I sue in vain?
The wise sometimes from Wisdom's ways depart:
Can youth then hush the dictates of the heart?
Precepts of prudence curb, but can't control,
The fierce emotions of the frowning soul.
When Love's delirium haunts the glowing mind,
Limping Decorum lingers far behind:
Vainly the dotard mends her prudish pace,
Outstript and vanquish'd in the mental chase.
The young, the old, have worn the chains of love;
Let those they ne'er confined my lay reprove:
Let those whose souls condemn the pleasing power
Their censures on the hapless victim shower.
Oh! how I hate the nerveless, frigid song,
The ceaseless echo of the rhyming throng,
Whose labor'd lines in chilling numbers flow,
To paint a pang the author ne'er can know!
The artless Helicon I boast is youth;—
My lyre, the heart; my muse, the simple truth.
Far be 't from me the "virgin's mind" to "taint":
Seduction's dread is here no slight restraint.
The maid whose virgin breast is void of guile,
Whose wishes dimple in a modest smile,
Whose downcast eye disdains the wanton leer,
Firm in her virtue's strength, yet not averse—
She whom a conscious grace shall thus refine
Will ne'er be "tainted" by a strain of mine.
But for the nymph whose premature desires
Torment her bosom with unholy fires,
No net to snare her willing heart is spread;
She would have fallen, though she ne'er had read.
For me, I fain would please the chosen few,
Whose souls, to feeling and to nature true,
Will spare the childish verse, and not destroy
The light effusions of a heedless boy.
I seek not glory from the senseless crowd;
Of fancied laurels I shall ne'er be proud;
Their warmest plaudits I would scarcely prize,
Their sneers or censures I alike despise.

[November 22, 1838.]

ELEGY ON NEWSTEAD ABBEY.*

* It is the voice of years that are gone! they roll before me
With all their deeds."—OSMAN.

NEWSTEAD! fast-falling, once-resplendent dome!
Religion's shrine! repentant HENRY's † pride!
Of warriors, monks, and dames the cloister'd tomb,
Whose pensive shades around thy ruins glide,

Hail to thy pile! more honor'd in thy fall
Than modern mansions in their pillar'd state;
Proudly majestic frowns thy vaulted hall,
Scowling defiance on the blasts of fate.

No mail-clad serfs, obedient to their lord,
In grim array the crimson ‡ cross demand;
Or gay assemble round the festive board
Their chief's retainers, an immortal band:

Else might inspiring Fancy's magic eye
Retrace their progress through the lapse of time,
Marking each ardent youth, ordain'd to die,
A votive pilgrim in Judea's clime.

But not from thee, dark pile! departs the chief;
His feudal realm in other regions lay:

In thee the wounded conscience courts relief,
Retiring from the garish blaze of day.

Yes! in thy gloomy cells and shades profound
The monk adjured a world he ne'er could view,
Or blood-stain'd guilt repenting solace found,
Or innocence from stern oppression flew.

A monarch bade thee from that wild arise,
Where Sherwood's outlaws once were wont to prowl;
And Superstition's crimes, of various dyes,
Sought shelter in the priest's protecting folds.

Where now the grass exhales a murky dew,
The humid pall of life-extinguish'd clay,
In sainted fame the sacred fathers glow,
Nor raised their pious voices but to pray.

Where now the bats their wavering wings extend
Soon as the gloaming † spreads her waning shade,
The choir did oft their mingling vesper blend,
Or matin orisons to Mary ‡ paid.

Years roll on years; to ages, ages yield;
Abbots to abbots, in a line, succeed:
Religion's charter their protecting shield
Till royal sacrilege their doom decreed.

One holy HENRY rear'd the Gothic walls,
And bade the pious inmates rest in peace;
Another HENRY † the kind gift recalls,
And bids devotion's hallow'd echoes cease.

Vain is each threat or supplicating prayer;
He drives them exiles from their blest shade,
To roam a dreary world in deep despair—
No friend, no home, no refuge, but their God.

Hark how the hall, resounding to the strain,
Shakes with the martial music's novel din!
The heralds of a warrior's haughty reign,
High-crested banners wave thy walls within.

Of changing sentinels the distant hum,
The mirth of feasts, the clang of barab's † drum,
The braying trumpet, and the hoarse drum,
Unite in concert with increased alarm.

An abbey once, a regal fortress  now,
Encircled by insulting rebel powers,
War's dread machines o'erhang thy threatening
brow,
And dart destruction in sulphurous shower.

Ah, vain defence! the hostile traitor's sloop,
Though oft repulsed, by guile o'ercomes the levee;
His thronging foes oppress the faithful Hoge,
Rebellion's reeking standards o'er him wave.

Not unavenged the raging baron yields;
The blood of traitors smears the purple plain;
Unconquer'd still, his faction there he wields,
And days of glory yet for him remain.

Still in that hour the warrior wished to stow
Self-gather'd † laurels on a self-sought grave;
But Charles' ‡ protecting genius hither flew,
The monarch's friend, the monarch's hope, his foe.

* As one poem on this subject is already printed, the author had, originally, no intention of inserting the following. It is now added at the particular request of some friends.

† Henry II. founded Newstead soon after the murder of Thomas à Becket.

‡ The red cross was the badge of the crusaders.

§ As "gloaming," the Scottish word for twilight, is far more poetical, and has been recommended by many eminent literary men, particularly by Dr. Moore in his Lectures on Burns, I have ventured to use it on account of its beauty.

¶ The priory was dedicated to the Virgin.

¶ At the dissolution of the monasteries, Henry VIII. stored Newstead Abbey on Sir John Byron.

 Newstead sustained a considerable siege in the contest between Charles I. and his parliament.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Trampling, she snatch'd him* from th' unequal
strife,
In other fields the torrent to repel;
For nobler combats, here, reserved his life,
To lead the band where godlike FALKLAND†
fell.

From thee, poor pile! to lawless plunder given,
While dying groans their painful requiem sound,
Far different incense now ascends to heaven,
Such victims wallow on the gory ground.

There many a pale and ruthless robber's corse,
Noisome and ghast, defiles thy sacred sod;
O'er mingling man, and horse commix'd with horse,
Corruption's heap, the savage spoilers trod.

Graves, long with rank and sighing weeds o'er-
spread,
Ransack'd, resign perforce their mortal mould:
From ruffian fangs escape not e'en the dead,
Baked from repose in search of buried gold.

Hush'd is the harp, unstrung the warlike lyre
The minstrel's palsied hand reclines in death;
No more he strikes the quivering chords with fire,
Or sings the glories of the martial wreath.

At length the satiated murderers, gorged with prey,
Retire; the clamor of the fight is o'er;
Silence again resumes her awful sway,
And sable Horror guards the massy door.

Here Desolation holds her dreary court:
What satellites declare her diabolical reign!
Shrieking their dirge, ill-omen'd birds resort,
To flit their vigils in the hoary fane.

Soon a new morn's restoring beams dispel
The clouds of anarchy from Britain's skies;
The fierce usurper seeks his native hell,
And Nature triumphs as the tyrant dies.

With storms she welcomes his expiring groans;
Whirlwinds, responsive, greet his laboring breath;
Earth shudders as her caves receive his bones,
Loathing the offering of so dark a death.

The legal ruler‡ now resumes the helm,
He guides through gentle seas the prow of state;
Hope cheers, with wonted smiles, the peaceful realm,
And heals the bleeding wounds of wearied hate.

The gloomy tenants, Newstead! of thy cells,
Howling, resign their violated nest;
Again the master on his tenure dwells,
Enjoy'd, from absence, with enraptured zest.

Vassals, within thy hospitable pale,
Loudly carousing, bless their lord's return;
Culture again adorns the gladdening vale,
And matrons, once lamenting, cease to mourn.

A thousand songs on tuneful echo float,
Unwonted foliage mantles o'er the trees;
And hark! the horns proclaim a mellow note,
The hunters' cry hangs lengthening on the breeze.

Beneath their coursers' hoofs the valleys shake:
What fears, what anxious hopes, attend the chase!
The dying stag seeks refuge in the lake;||
Exulting shouts announce the finish'd race.

Ah, happy days! too happy to endure!
Such simple sports our plain forefathers knew:
No splendid vices glitter'd to allure;
Their joys were many, as their cares were few.

From these descending, sons to sires succeed;
Time steals along, and Death uprears his dart;
Another chief impels the foaming steed,
Another crowd pursues the panting hart.

Newstead! what saddening change of scene is thine!
Thy yawning arch betokens slow decay!
The last and youngest of a noble line
Now holds thy mouldering turrets in his sway.

Deserted now, he scans thy gray worn towers;
Thy vaults, where dead of feudal ages sleep;
Thy cloisters, papyrus to the wintry showers;
These, these he views, and views them but to weep.

Yet are his tears no emblem of regret:
Cherish'd affection only bids them flow.
Pride, hope, and love forbid him to forget,
But warm his bosom with impassion'd glow.

Yet he prefers thee to the gilded domes
Or gawgaw grottoes of the vainly great;
Yet lingers 'mid thy damp and mossy tombs,
Nor breathes a murmur 'gainst the will of fate.

Haply thy sun, emerging, yet may shine,
Thee to irradiate with meridian ray;
Hours splendid as the past may still be thine,
And bless thy future as thy former day.

CHILDISH RECOLLECTIONS.¶

"I cannot but remember such things were,
And were most dear to me."

WHEN slow Disease, with all her host of pains,
Chills the warm tide which flows along the veins;
When Health, affrighted, spreads her rosy wing,
And flies with every changing gale of spring;
Not to the aching frame alone confined,
Unyielding pangs assail the drooping mind:
What grisly forms, the spectre-train of woe,
Bid shuddering Nature shrink beneath the blow,
With Resignation wage relentless strife,
While Hope retires appell'd, and clings to life!
Yet less the pang when, through the tedious hour,
Remembrance sheds around her genial power,

¶ Charles II.

¶ During the lifetime of the fifth Lord Byron, there was found in this lake—where it is supposed to have been thrown for concealment by the monks—a large brass eagle, in the body of which, on its being sent to be cleaned, was discovered a secret aperture, concealing within it a number of ancient documents connected with the rights and privileges of the foundation. At the sale of the old lord's effects, in 1778, this eagle was purchased by a watchmaker of Nottingham; and it now forms, through the liberality of Sir Richard Kaye, an appropriate ornament of the fine old church of Southwell.

¶ These verses were composed while Lord Byron was suffering under severe illness and depression of spirits. "I was laid," he says, "on my back, when that school-boy thing was written, or rather dictated—expecting to rise no more, my physician having taken his sixteenth fee."

* Lord Byron, and his brother Sir William, held high commands in the royal army. The former was general-in-chief in Ireland, lieutenant of the Tower, and governor to James, Duke of York, afterwards the unhappy James II.; the latter had a principal share in many actions.

† Lucius Cary, Lord Viscount Falkland, the most accomplished man of his age, was killed at the battle of Newbury, charging in the ranks of Lord Byron's regiment of cavalry.

‡ This is an historical fact. A violent tempest occurred immediately subsequent to the death or interment of Cromwell, which occasioned many disputes between his partisans and the cavaliers: both interpreted the circumstance into divine interposition; but whether as approbation or condemnation, we leave for the consultants of that age to decide. I have made such use of the occurrence as suited the subject of my poem.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Calls back the vanished days to rapture given,
When love was bliss, and Beauty form'd our heaven;
Or, dear to youth, portrays each childish scene,
Those fairy bowers, where all in turn have been.
As when through clouds that pour the summer storm
The orb of day unveils his distant form,
Glides with faint beams the crystal dews of rain,
And dimly twinkles o'er the watery plain;
Thus, while the future dark and cheerless gleams,
The sun of memory, glowing through my dreams,
Though sunk the radiance of his former blaze,
To scenes far distant points his paler rays;
Still rules my senses with unbounded sway,
The past confounding with the present day.

Oh! does my heart indulge the rising thought,
Which still recurs, unlook'd for and unought;
My soul to Fancy's fond suggestion yields,
And roams romantic o'er her airy fields.
Scenes of my youth, developed, crowd to view,
To which I long have bade a last adieu!
Seats of delight, inspiring youthful themes;
Friends lost to me for aye, except in dreams;
Some who in marble prematurely sleep,
Whose forms I now remember but to weep;
Some who yet urge the same scholastic course
Of early science, future fame the source;
Who, still contending in the studious race,
In quick rotation fill the senior place.
These with a thousand visions now unite,
To dazzle, though they please, my aching sight.
Ida! blest spot, where Science holds her reign,
How joyous once I join'd thy youthful train!
Bright in idea gleams thy lofty spire,
Again I mingle with thy playful choir;
Our tricks of mischief, every childish game,
Unchanged by time or distance, seem the same;
Through winding paths along the glade, I trace
The social smile of every welcome face;
My wonted haunts, my scenes of joy and woe,
Each early boyish friend, or youthful foe,
Our feuds dissolved, but not my friendship past,—
I bless the former, and forgive the last.
Hours of my youth I when, nurtured in my breast,
To love a stranger, friendship made me blest;
Friendship, the dear peculiar bond of youth,
When every artless bosom throbs with truth;
Untaught by worldly wisdom how to feign,
And check each impulse with prudential rein;
When all we feel, our honest souls disclose—
In love to friends, in open hate to foes;
No varnish'd tales the lips of youth repeat,
No dear-bought knowledge purchased by deceit.
Hypocrisy, the gift of lengthen'd years,
Matured by age, the garb of prudence wears.
When now the boy is ripen'd into man,
His careful sire chalks forth some wary plan;
Instructs his son from candor's path to shrink,
Smoothly to speak, and cautiously to think;
Still to assent, and never to deny—
A patron's praise can well reward the lie!
And who, when Fortune's warning voice is heard,
Would lose his opening prospects for a word?
Although against that word his heart rebel,
And truth indignant all his bosom swell.

Away with themes like this! not mine the task
From flattering flatters to tear the hateful mask;
Let keener bards delight in satire's sting;
My fancy soars not on Detraction's wing:
Once, and but once, she aim'd a deadly blow,
To hurl defiance on a secret foe;
But when that foe, from feeling or from shame,
The cause unknown, yet still to me the same,
Warn'd by some friendly hint, perchance, retired,
With this submission all her rage expired.
From dreaded pangs that feeble foe to save,
She hush'd her young resentment, and forgave;
Or, if my muse a pedant's portrait drew,
Fomposus' virtues are but known to few:
I never fear'd the young usurper's nod,
And he who yields must sometimes feel the rod.
If since on Granta's failings, known to all
Who share the converse of a college hall,
She sometimes trifled in a lighter strain,
'Tis past, and thus she will not sin again,
Soon must her early song for ever cease,
And all may rail when I shall rest in peace.

Here first remember'd be the joyous band,
Who hail'd me chief, † obedient to command;
Who join'd with me in every boyish sport—
Their first adviser, and their last resort;
Nor shrunk beneath the upstart pedant's frown,
Or all the sable glories of his gown; ‡
Who, thus transplanted from his father's school—
Unfit to govern, ignorant of rule—
Succeeded him, whom all unite to praise,
The dear preceptor of my early days!
PROBUS, § the pride of science, and the boast,
To Ida now, alas! for ever lost.
With him, for years, we search'd the classic page,
And fear'd the master, though we loved the sage:
Retired at last, his small yet peaceful seat,
From learning's labor is the blest retreat.
Fomposus fills his magisterial chair;
Fomposus governs,—but, my muse, forbear:
Content, in silence, be the pedant's lot;
His name and precepts he alike forgot;
No more his mention shall my verses degrade,—
To him my tribute is already paid.

High, through those elms, with hoary branches
crown'd,
Fair Ida's bower adorns the landscape round;
There Science, from her favor'd seat, surveys
The vale where rural Nature claims her praise,
To her awhile resigns her youthful train,
Who move in joy, and dance along the plain;
In scatter'd groups each favor'd haunt pursue,
Repeat old pastimes, and discover new;
Flush'd with his rays, beneath the noontide sun,
In rival bands, between the wickets run,
Drive o'er the sward the ball with active force,
Or chase with nimble feet its rapid course.
But these with slower steps direct their way,
Where Brent's cool waves in limpid currents stray;
While yonder few search out some green retreat,
And arbors shade them from the summer heat:
Others again, a pert and lively crew,
Some rough and thoughtless stranger placed in view,

* Dr. Butler, then head-master of Harrow school.

† When Dr. Drury retired, in 1803, three candidates presented themselves for the vacant chair. Messrs. Drury, Evans, and Butler. "On the first movement to which this contest gave rise in the school, young Wildman," says Moore, "was at the head of the party for Mark Drury, while Byron held himself aloof from any. Anxious, however, to have him as an ally, one of the Drury faction said to Wildman—'Byron, I know, will not join, because he does not choose to act second to any one; but, by giving up the leadership to him, you may at once secure him.'" This Wildman accordingly did, and Byron took the command.

§ Instead of this couplet, the private volume has the following four lines:—

"Careless to soothe the pedant's furious frown,
Scarcely respecting his majestic gown;
By which, in vain, he gain'd a borrow'd grace,
Adding new terror to his sneering face."

§ Dr. Drury. This most able and excellent man retired from his situation in March, 1805, after having resided thirty-five years at Harrow; the last twenty as head-master, an office he held with equal honor to himself and advantage to the very extensive school over which he presided.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

With frolic quaint their antic jests expose,
And tease the grumbling rustic as he goes;
Nor rest with this, but many a passing fray
Tradition treasures for a future day;
"T was here the gather'd swains for vengeance fought,

And here we earn'd the conquest dearly bought;
Here have we fled before superior might,
And here renew'd the wild tumultuous fight."
While thus our souls with early passions swell,
In lingering tones resounds the distant bell;
Th' allotted hour of daily sport is o'er,
And Learning beckons from her temple's door.
No splendid tablets grace her simple hall,
But ruder records fill the dusky wall;
There, deeply carved, behold! each tyro's name
Secures its owner's academic fame;
Here mingling view the names of sire and son—
The one long grav'd, the other just begun:
These shall survive alike when son and sire
Beneath one common stroke of fate expire;*
Perhaps their last memorial these alone,
Denied in death a monumental stone,
Whilst to the gale in mournful cadence wave
The sighing weeds that hide their nameless grave.
And here my name, and many an early friend's,
Along the wall in lengthen'd line extends.
Though still our deeds amuse the youthful race,
Who tread our steps, and fill our former place,
Who young obey'd their lords in silent awe,
Whose nod commanded, and whose voice was law;
And now, in turn, possess the reins of power,
To rule the little tyrants of an hour;
Though sometimes, with the tales of ancient day,
They pass the dreary winter's eve away—
"And thus our former rulers stemm'd the tide,
And thus they dealt the combat side by side;
Just in this place the mouldering walls they scaled,
Nor bolts nor bars against their strength avail'd;
Here Prometheus came, the rising fray to quell,
And here he falter'd forth his last farewell;
And here one night abroad they dared to roam,
While bold Prometheus bravely stay'd at home;"
While thus they speak, the hour must soon arrive,
When names of these, like ours, alone survive:
Yet a few years, one general wreck will whelm
The faint remembrance of our fairy realm.

Dear honest race! though now we meet no more,
One last long look on what we were before—
Our first kind greetings, and our last adieu—
Drew tears from eyes unused to weep with you.
Through splendid circles, fashion's gaudy world,
Where folly's glaring standard waves unfur'd,
I plunged to drown in noise my fond regret,
And all I sought or hoped was to forget.
Vain wish! if chance some well-remember'd face,
Some old companion of my early race,
Advanced to claim his friend with honest joy,
My eyes, my heart, proclaim'd me still a boy;
The glittering scene, the flustering groups around,
Were quite forgotten when my friend was found;
The smiles of beauty—(for, alas! I've known
What 'tis to bend before Love's mighty throne)—
The smiles of beauty, though those smiles were dear,
Could hardly charm me, when that friend was near:
My thoughts the bewilder'd in the fond surprise,
The woods of Ida danced before my eyes;
I saw the sprightly wand'rers pour along,
I saw the glad again the joyous throng;
Panting, again I traced her lofty grove,
And friendship's feelings triumph'd o'er love.

Yet why should I alone with such delight
Retrace the circuit of my former flight?
Is there no cause beyond the common claim
Endear'd to all in childhood's very name?
Ah! sure some stronger impulse vibrates here,
Which whispers friendship will be doubly dear,
To one who thus for kindred hearts must roam,
And seek abroad the love denied at home.
Those hearts, dear Ida, have I found in thee—
A home, a world, a paradise to me.
Stern Death forbade my orphan youth to share
The tender guidance of a father's care.
Can rank, or e'en a guardian's name, supply
The love which glistens in a father's eye?
For this can wealth or title's sound atone,
Made, by a parent's early loss, my own?
What brother springs a brother's love to seek?
What alster's gentle kiss has prest my cheek?
For me how dull the vacant moments rise,
To no fond bosom link'd by kindred ties!
Oft in the progress of some fleeting dream
Fraternal smiles collected round me seem;
While still the visions to my heart are prest,
The voice of love will murmur in my rest:
I hear—I wake—and in the sound rejoice;
I hear again,—but, ah! no brother's voice.
A hermit, midst of crowds, I fain must stray
Alone, though thousand pilgrims fill the way;
While these a thousand kindred wreaths entwine,
I cannot call one single blossom mine:
What then remains? in solitude to groan,
To mix in friendship, or to sigh alone,
Thus must I cling to some endearing hand,
And none more dear than Ida's social band.

ALONZO! † best and dearest of my friends,
Thy name ennobles him who thus commends;
From this fond tribute thou canst gain no praise;
The praise is his who now that tribute pays.
Oh! in the promise of thy early youth,
If hope anticipate the words of truth,
Some loftier bard shall sing thy glorious name,
To build his own upon thy deathless fame.
Friend of my heart, and foremost of the list
Of those with whom I lived supremely blest,
Oft have we drain'd the font of ancient lore;
Though drinking deeply, thirsting still the more.
Yet, when confinement's lingering hour was done,
Our sports, our studies, and our souls were one:
Together we impell'd the flying ball;
Together waited in our tutor's hall;
Together join'd in cricket's manly toll,
Or shared the produce of the river's spoil;
Or, plunging from the green declining shore,
Our pliant limbs the buoyant billows bore;
In every element, unchanged, the same,
All, all that brothers should be, but the name.

Nor yet are you forgot, my jocond boy!
DAVUS, the harbinger of childish joy;
For ever foremost in the ranks of fun,
The laughing herald of the harmless pun;
Yet with a breast of such materials made—
Anxious to please, of pleasing half afraid;
Candid and liberal, with a heart of steel
In danger's path, though not untaught to feel.
Still I remember, in the factious strife,
The rustic's musket aim'd against my life:
High poised in air the massy weapon hung,
A cry of horror burst from every tongue;
Whilst I, in combat with another foe,
Fought on, unconscious of th' impending blow;

* During a rebellion at Harrow, the poet prevented the school-room from being burnt down, by pointing out to the boys the names of their fathers and grandfathers on the walls.

† The Hon. John Wingfield, of the Coldstream Guards, brother to Richard, fourth Viscount Powerscourt. He died of a fever, in his twentieth year, at Coimbra, May 14, 1811.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Your arm, brave boy, arrested his career—
Forward you sprung, insensible to fear;
Disarm'd and baffled by your conquering hand,
The grovelling savage roll'd upon the sand:
An act like this, can simple thanks repay?
Or all the labors of a grateful lay?
Oh no! when'er my breast forgets the deed,
That instant, DAVUS, it deserves to bleed.

LYCUS!* on me thy claims are justly great:
Thy milder virtues could my muse relate,
To thee alone, unrivall'd, would belong
The feeble efforts of my lengthen'd song.
Well canst thou boast, to lead in senates fit,
A Spartan firmness with Athenian wit:
Though yet in embryo these perfections shine,
LYCUS! thy father's fame will soon be thine.
Where learning nurtures the superior mind,
What may we hope from genius thus refined!
When time at length matures thy growing years,
How wilt thou tower above thy fellow peers!
Prudence and sense, a spirit bold and free,
With honor's soul, united beam in thee.

Shall fair EURYALUS† pass by unsung?
From ancient lineage, not unworthy sprung:
What though one sad dissension bade us part?
That name is yet embalm'd within my heart;
Yet at the mention does that heart rebound,
And palpitate, responsive to the sound.
Envy dissolved our ties, and not our will:
We once were friends—I'll think we are so still.
A form unmatch'd in nature's partial mould,
A heart untainted, we in thee behold:
Yet not the senate's thunder thou shalt wield,
Nor seek for glory in the tented field;
To minds of ruder texture these are given—
Thy soul shall nearer soar its native heaven.
Haply, in polish'd courts might be thy seat,
But that thy tongue could never forge deceit:
The courtier's supple bow and sneering smile,
The flow of compliment, the slippery wile,
Would make that breast with indignation burn,
And all the glittering snares to tempt thee spurn.
Domestic happiness will stamp thy fate;
Sacred to love, unclouded e'er by hate;
The world admire thee, and thy friends adore;—
Ambition's alave alone would toil for more.

* John Fitzgibbon, second earl of Clare, born June 2, 1768. His father, whom he succeeded Jan. 23, 1803, was for nearly twelve years lord chancellor of Ireland. "I never," says Lord Byron, in 1801, "hear the word 'Clare,' without a beating of the heart even now; and I write it with feelings of 1800-4-5, ad infinitum."

† George John, fifth Earl Delaware, born Oct. 23, 1791; succeeded his father, John-Richard, July 23, 1795. This ancient family have been barons by the male line from 1348; their ancestor, Sir Thomas West, having been summoned to parliament as Lord West, the 16th Edw. II. We find the following notices in some hitherto unpublished letters of Lord Byron:—"Harrow, Oct. 25, 1804.—I am happy enough and comfortable here. My friends are not numerous, but select. Among the principal I rank Lord Delaware, who is very amiable, and my particular friend." "Nov. 2, 1804.—Lord Delaware is considerably younger than me, but the most good-tempered, amiable, clever fellow in the universe. To all which he adds the quality (a good one in the eyes of women) of being remarkably handsome. Delaware and myself are, in a manner, connected; for one of my forefathers, in Charles the First's time, married into their family."

To Americans, the family of Delaware has a peculiar interest. Thomas West, third earl, and the Governor of Virginia, giving name to the State, and to the noble river flowing by the city of Philadelphia, which washes in its course the soil of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware. On January 17, 1803, the new portrait of Thomas West, third Lord Delaware, was presented to the city of Philadelphia by Hon. L. S. Backville West, the British Minister at Washington; his brother, the present Earl Delaware, and his sisters, the Duchess of Bedford, and the Countess of Derby, descendants of Thomas West. Minister Backville West, while in Philadelphia in November, 1801, noticed a picture of Thomas West in Independence Hall, and, considering the portrait a very poor one, wrote to his family in reference to obtaining a faithful picture of their illustrious ancestor. The Countess of Derby thereupon had a copy taken from an original painting. The new picture is life-size, handsomely framed, and bears in the upper corner the motto of the Delaware, "Jour de ma vie." British Consul Clipperton made the presentation, which took place in the Mayor's office in the presence of a number of prominent citizens. A letter was read from Mr. L. S. Backville West, in which he said the present was designed as a memento of the cordial and hospitable reception given him upon his arrival as British Minister by the citizens of Philadelphia. A letter from Mary C. West, the Countess of Derby, was also read. The Countess says: "In making the presentation, may I be allowed to say that my brother, Lord Delaware, and my sister, the Duchess of Bedford, join in expressing the satisfaction felt by us all that, after a lapse of two hundred years, a direct descendant of Thomas West should have landed once more on the banks of the great river to which he gave his name." Mayor King accepted the gift on behalf of the city, and the portrait has been placed in Independence Hall, where it has since attracted great interest and attention.

Now last, but nearest, of the social band,
See honest, open, generous CLYON‡ stand;
With scarce one speck to cloud the pleasing scene,
No vice degrades that purest soul serene.
On the same day our studious race begun,
On the same day our studious race was run;
Thus side by side we pass'd our first career,
Thus side by side we strove for many a year;
At last concluded our scholastic life,
We neither conquer'd in the classic strife:
As speakers each supports an equal name,
And crowds allow to both a partial fame:
To soothe a youthful rival's early pride,
Though CLYON's candor would the palm divide,
Yet candor's self compels me now to own
Justice awards it to my friend alone.

Oh! friends regretted, scenes for ever dear,
Remembrance hails you with her warmest tear!
Drooping, she bends o'er pensive Fancy's urn,
To trace the hours which never can return;
Yet with the retrospection loves to dwell,
And soothe the sorrows of her last farewell!
Yet greets the triumph of my boyish mind,
As infant laurels round my head were twined,
When PROBUS' praise repaid my lyric song,
Or placed me higher in the studious throng;
Or when my first harangue received applause,
His sage instruction the primeval cause,
What gratitude to him my soul possess,
While hope of dawning honors fill'd my breast!
For all my humble fame, to him alone
The praise is due, who made that fame my own.
Oh! could I soar above these feeble lays,
These young effusions of my early days,
To him my muse her noblest strain would give:
The song might perish, but the theme might live.
Yet why for him the needless verse essay?
His honor'd name requires no vain display:
By every son of grateful IDA blest,
It finds an echo in each youthful breast;
A fame beyond the glories of the proud,
Or all the plaudits of the venal crowd.

IDA! not yet exhausted is the theme,
Nor closed the progress of my youthful dream.
How many a friend deserves the grateful strain!
What scenes of childhood still unsung remain!

‡ Edward Noel Long, Esq.—to whom a subsequent poem is addressed. See p. 305.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Yet let me hush this echo of the past,
This parting song, the dearest and the last;
And brood in secret o'er those hours of joy,
To me a silent and a sweet employ,
While, future hope and fear alike unknown,
I think with pleasure on the past alone;
Yes, to the past alone my heart confine,
And chase the phantom of what once was mine.

IDA! still o'er thy hills in joy preside,
And proudly steer through time's eventful tide;
Still may thy blooming sons thy name revere,
Smile in thy bower, but quit thee with a tear;—
That tear, perhaps, the fondest which will flow,
O'er their last scene of happiness below.
Tell me, ye hoary few, who glide along,
The feeble veterans of some former throng,
Whose friends, like autumn leaves by tempests
whirl'd,
Are swept for ever from this busy world;
Revolue the fleeting moments of your youth,
While Care as yet withheld her venom'd tooth;
Say if remembrance days like these endears
Beyond the rapture of succeeding years?
Say, can ambition's fever'd dream bestow
So sweet a balm to soothe your hours of woe?
Can treasures, hoarded for some thankless son,
Can royal smiles, or wreaths by slaughter won,
Can stars or ermine, man's maturer toys
(For glittering baubles are not left to boys),
Recall one scene so much beloved to view,
As those where Youth her garland twined for you?
Ah, no! amidst the gloomy calm of age
You turn with faltering hand life's varied page;
Peruse the record of your days on earth,
Unaltered only where it marks your birth;
Still lingering pause above each checker'd leaf,
And blot with tears the sable lines of grief;
Where Passion o'er the theme her mantle threw,
Or weeping Virtue sigh'd a faint adieu;
But bless the scroll which fairer words adorn,
Traced by the rosy finger of the morn;
When Friendship bow'd before the shrine of Truth,
And Love, without his pinion,* smiled on Youth.

ANSWER TO A BEAUTIFUL POEM, ENTITLED "THE COMMON LOT."

MONTGOMERY! true, the common lot
Of mortals lies in Lethe's wave;
Yet some shall never be forgot—
Some shall exist beyond the grave.

"Unknown the region of his birth,"
The hero rolls the tide of war;
Yet not unknown his martial worth,
Which glares a meteor from afar.

His joy or grief, his weal or woe,
Perchance may 'scape the page of fame;
Yet nations now unborn will know
The record of his deathless name.

The patriot's and the poet's frame
Must share the common tomb of all;
Their glory will not sleep the same;
That will arise, though empires fall.

The lustre of a beauty's eye
Assumes the ghastly stare of death;

The fair, the brave, the good must die,
And sink the yawning grave beneath.

Once more the speaking eye revives,
Still beaming through the lover's strain;
For Petrarch's Laura still survives:
She died, but ne'er will die again.

The rolling seasons pass away,
And Time, untiring, waves his wing;
Whilst honor's laurels ne'er decay,
But bloom in fresh, unfading spring.

All, all must sleep in grim repose,
Collected in the silent tomb;
The old and young, with friends and foes,
Fast'ring alike in shrouds, consume.

The mouldering marble lasts its day,
Yet falls at length an useless fane;
To ruin's ruthless fangs a prey,
The wrecks of pillar'd pride remain.

What, though the sculpture be destroy'd,
From dark oblivion meant to guard;
A bright renown shall be enjoy'd
By those whose virtues claim reward.

Then do not say the common lot
Of all lies deep in Lethe's wave;
Some few who ne'er will be forgot
Shall burst the bondage of the grave. [1800.]

REMEMBRANCE.

'Tis done!—I saw it in my dreams:
No more with Hope the future beams;
My days of happiness are few:
Chill'd by misfortune's wintry blast,
My dawn of life is overcast,
Love, Hope, and Joy, alike adieu!
Would I could aid Remembrance too!
[1808. First published, 1800.]

TO A LADY

WHO PRESENTED THE AUTHOR WITH THE VELVET
BAND WHICH BOUND HER TREASUR.

This band, which bound thy yellow hair,
Is mine, sweet girl! thy pledge of love;
It claims my warmest, dearest care,
Like relics left of saints above.

Oh! I will wear it next my heart;
'T will bind my soul in bonds to thee:
From me again 't will ne'er depart,
But mingle in the grave with me.

The dew I gather from thy lip
Is not so dear to me as this;
That I but for a moment slip,
And banquet on a transient bliss:

This will recall each youthful scene,
E'en when our lives are on the wane;
The leaves of Love will still be green
When Memory bids them bud again.

Oh! little lock of golden hue,
In gently waving ringlet curl'd,

* "L'Amitié est l'Amour sans ailes," is a French proverb. See a subsequent poem, under this title.

† Written by James Montgomery, author of "The Wanderer of Switzerland," &c.

‡ No particular hero is here alluded to. The exploits of Bayard, Nemours, Edward the Black Prince, and in more modern times the fame of Marlborough, Frederick the Great, Count Baze, Charles of Sweden, &c., are familiar to every historical reader, but the exact places of their birth are known to a very small proportion of their admirers.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

By the dear head on which you grew,
I would not lose you for a world.

Not though a thousand more adorn
The polish'd brow where once you shone,
Like rays which gild a cloudless morn,
Beneath Columbia's fervid zone.

[1808. First published, 1808.]

LINES

ADDRESSED TO THE REV. J. T. BECHER, ON HIS ADVISING THE AUTHOR TO MIX MORE WITH SOCIETY.

DEAR Becher, you tell me to mix with mankind;
I cannot deny such a precept is wise;
But retirement accords with the tone of my mind:
I will not descend to a world I despise.

Did the senate or camp my exertions require,
Ambition might prompt me, at once, to go forth;
When infancy's years of probation expire,
Perchance I may strive to distinguish my birth.

The fire in the cavern of Etna conceal'd,
Still mantles unseen in its secret recess;
At length, in a volume terrific reveal'd,
No torrent can quench it, no bounds can repress.*

Oh! thus, the desire in my bosom for fame
Bids me live but to hope for posterity's praise.
Could I soar with the phoenix on pinions of flame,
With him I would wish to expire in the blaze.

For the life of a Fox, of a Chatham the death,
What censure, what danger, what woe would I brave!

Their lives did not end when they yielded their breath;
Their glory illumines the gloom of their grave.

Yet why should I mingle in Fashion's full herd?
Why crouch to her leaders, or cringe to her rules?
Why bend to the proud, or applaud the absurd?
Why search for delight in the friendship of fools?

I have tasted the sweets and the bitters of love;
In friendship I early was taught to believe;
My passion the matrons of prudence reprove;
I have found that a friend may profess, yet deceive.

To me what is wealth?—it may pass in an hour,
If tyrants prevail, or if Fortune should frown:
To me what is title?—the phantom of power;
To me what is fashion?—I seek but renown.

Deceit is a stranger as yet to my soul:
I still am unpracticed to varnish the truth:
Then why should I live in a hateful control?
Why waste upon folly the days of my youth?

[L.]

THE DEATH OF CALMAR AND ORLA.

AN IMITATION OF MACPHERSON'S OSSIAN.†

DEAR are the days of youth! Age dwells on their remembrance through the mist of time. In the twilight he recalls the sunny hours of morn. He lifts

* The true reason of the haughty distance at which Byron, both at this period and afterwards, stood apart from his more opulent neighbors, is to be found (says Mr. Moore) "in his mortifying consciousness of the inadequacy of his own means to his rank, and the proud dread of being made to feel his own inferiority by persons to whom, in every other respect, he knew himself superior." Mr. Becher frequently expostulated with him on this unsociableness; and one of his his spear with trembling hand. "Not thus feebly did I raise the steel before my fathers!" Past is the race of heroes! But their fame rises on the harp; their souls ride on the wings of the wind; they bear the sound through the sighs of the storm, and rejoice in their hall of clouds! Such is Calmar. The gray stone marks his narrow house. He looks down from eddying tempests: he rolls his form in the whirlwind, and hovers on the blast of the mountain.

In Morven dwelt the chief; a beam of war to Fingal. His steps in the field were marked in blood. Lochlin's sons had died before his angry spear; but mild was the eye of Calmar; soft was the flow of his yellow locks: they streamed like the meteor of the night. No maid was the sigh of his soul: his thoughts were given to friendship,—to dark-haired Orla, destroyer of heroes! Equal were their swords in battle; but fierce was the pride of Orla:—gentle alone to Calmar. Together they dwelt in the cave of Oithona.

From Lochlin, Swaran bounded o'er the blue waves. Erin's sons fell beneath his might. Fingal roused his chiefs to combat. Their ships cover the ocean. Their hosts throng on the green hills. They come to the aid of Erin.

Night rose in clouds. Darkness veils the armies: but the blazing oaks gleam through the valley. The sons of Lochlin slept: their dreams were of blood. They lift the spear in thought, and Fingal flies. Not so the host of Morven. To watch was the post of Orla. Calmar stood by his side. Their spears were in their hands. Fingal called his chiefs: they stood around. The king was in the midst. Gray were his locks, but strong was the arm of the king. Age withered not his powers. "Sons of Morven," said the hero, "to-morrow we meet the foe. But where is Cuthullin, the shield of Erin? He rests in the halls of Tura; he knows not of our coming. Who will speed through Lochlin to the hero, and call the chief to arms? The path is by the swords of foes; but many are my heroes. They are thunderbolts of war. Speak, ye chiefs! Who will arise?"

"Son of Trenmor! mine be the deed," said dark-haired Orla, "and mine alone. There is death to me? I love the sleep of the mighty, but little is the danger. The sons of Lochlin dream. I will seek car-borne Cuthullin. If I fail, raise the song of bards; and lay me by the stream of Lubar." "And shalt thou fall alone?" said fair-haired Calmar. "Wilt thou leave thy friend afar? Chief of Oithona! not feeble is my arm in fight. Could I see thee die, and not lift the spear? No, Orla! ours has been the chase of the roebuck, and the feast of shells; ours be the path of danger: ours has been the cave of Oithona; ours be the narrow dwelling on the banks of Lubar." "Calmar," said the chief of Oithona, "why should thy yellow locks be darkened friendly remonstrances drew forth these lines, so remarkably prefiguring the splendid burst with which Lord Byron's volcanic genius was ere long to open upon the world.

† It may be necessary to observe, that the story, though considerably varied in the catastrophe, is taken from "Niue and Euryalus," of which episode a translation is already given in the present volume.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

in the dust of Erin? Let me fall alone. My father dwells in his hall of air: he will rejoice in his boy; but the blue-eyed Mora spreads the feast for her son in Morven. She listens to the steps of the hunter on the heath, and thinks it is the tread of Calmar. Let her not say, 'Calmar has fallen by the steel of Lochlin: he died with gloomy Orla, the chief of the dark brow.' Why should tears dim the azure eye of Mora? Why should her voice curse Orla, the destroyer of Calmar? Live, Calmar! Live to raise my stone of moss; live to revenge me in the blood of Lochlin. Join the song of bards above my grave. Sweet will be the song of death to Orla, from the voice of Calmar. My ghost shall smile on the notes of praise." "Orla," said the son of Mora, "could I raise the song of death to my friend? Could I give his fame to the winds? No, my heart would speak in sighs: faint and broken are the sounds of sorrow. Orla! our souls shall hear the song together. One cloud shall be ours on high: the bards will mingle the names of Orla and Calmar."

They quit the circle of the chiefs. Their steps are to the host of Lochlin. The dying blaze of oak dim twinkles through the night. The northern star points the path to Tura. Swaran, the king, rests on his lonely hill. Here the troops are mixed: they frown in sleep; their shields beneath their heads. Their swords gleam at distance in heaps. The fires are faint; their embers fall in smoke. All is hushed; but the gale sighs on the rocks above. Lightly wheel the heroes through the slumbering band. Half the journey is past, when Mathon, resting on his shield, meets the eye of Orla. It rolls in flame, and glitters through the shade. His spear is raised on high. "Why dost thou bend thy brow, chief of Oithona?" said fair-haired Calmar: "we are in the midst of foes. Is this a time for delay?" "It is a time for vengeance," said Orla of the gloomy brow. "Mathon of Lochlin sleeps: seest thou his spear? Its point is dim with the gore of my father. The blood of Mathon shall reek on mine; but shall I slay him sleeping, son of Mora? No! he shall feel his wound: my fame shall not soar on the blood of slumber. Rise, Mathon, rise! The son of Conna calls; thy life is his; rise to combat." Mathon starts from sleep; but did he rise alone? No: the gathering chiefs bound on the plain. "Fly! Calmar, fly!" said dark-haired Orla. "Mathon is mine. I shall die in joy: but Lochlin crowds around. Fly through the shade of night." Orla turns. The helm of Mathon is cleft: his shield falls from his arm: he shudders in his blood. He rolls by the side of the blazing oak. Strumon sees him fall: his wrath rises: his weapon glitters on the head of Orla: but a spear pierced his eye. His brain gushes through the wound, and foams on the spear of Calmar. As roll the waves of the Ocean on two mighty barks of the north, so pour the men of Lochlin on the chiefs. As, breaking the surge in foam, proudly steer the barks of the north, so rise the chiefs of Morven on the scattered crests of Lochlin. The din of arms came to the ear of Fingal. He strikes his shield; his sons throng around; the people pour along the heath. Ryno bounds in joy. Ossian stalks in his arms. Oscar shakes the spear. The eagle wing of Fillan floats on the wind. Dreadful is the clang of death! many are the widows of Lochlin! Morven prevails in its strength.

Morn glimmers on the hills: no living foe is seen; but the sleepers are many; grim they lie on Erin. The breeze of ocean lifts their locks; yet they do not awake. The hawks scream above their prey.

Whose yellow locks wave o'er the breast of a chief? Bright as the gold of the stranger, they mingle with the dark hair of his friend. 'Tis Calmar: he lies on the bosom of Orla. Theirs is one stream of blood. Fierce is the look of the gloomy Orla. He breathes not; but his eye is still a flame. It glares in death unclosed. His hand is grasped in Calmar's; but Calmar lives! he lives, though low. "Rise," said the king, "rise, son of Mora: 'tis mine to heal the wounds of heroes. Calmar may yet bound on the hills of Morven."

"Never more shall Calmar chase the deer of Morven with Orla," said the hero. "What were the chase to me alone? Who should share the spoils of battle with Calmar? Orla is at rest! Rough was thy soul, Orla! yet soft to me as the dew of morn. It glared on others in lightning: to me a silver beam of night. Bear my sword to blue-eyed Mora; let it hang in my empty hall. It is not pure from blood: but it could not save Orla. Lay me with my friend. Raise the song when I am dark!"

They are laid by the stream of Lubar. Four gray stones mark the dwelling of Orla and Calmar. When Swaran was bound, our sails rose on the blue waves. The winds gave our barks to Morven:—the bards raised the song.

"What form rises on the roar of clouds? Whose dark ghost gleams on the red streams of tempests? His voice rolls on the thunder. 'Tis Orla, the brown chief of Oithona. He was unmatched in war. Peace to thy soul, Orla! thy fame will not perish. Nor thine, Calmar! Lovely wast thou, son of blue-eyed Mora; but not harmless was thy sword. It hangs in thy cave. The ghosts of Lochlin shriek around its steel. Hear thy praise, Calmar! It dwells on the voice of the mighty. Thy name shakes on the echoes of Morven. Then raise thy fair locks, son of Mora. Spread them on the arch of the rainbow; and smile through the tears of the storm."^a

L'AMITIÉ EST L'AMOUR SANS AILES.

WHY should my anxious breast repine,
Because my youth is fled?
Days of delight may still be mine;
Affection is not dead.

In tracing back the years of youth,
One firm record, one lasting truth

^a I fear Laing's late edition has completely overthrown every hope that Macpherson's Ossian might prove the translation of a series of poems complete in themselves; but while the imposture is discovered, the merit of the work remains undiminished, though not without faults—particularly, in some parts, turgid and bombastic diction. The present humble imitation will be pardoned by the admirers of the original as an attempt, however inferior, which evinces an attachment to their favorite author.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Celestial consolation brings;
Bear it, ye breezes, to the seat,
Where first my heart responsive beat,—
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

Through few, but deeply checker'd years,
What moments have been mine!
Now half obscured by clouds of tears,
Now bright in rays divine;
Howe'er my future doom be cast,
My soul, enraptured with the past,
To one idea fondly clings;
Friendship! that thought is all thine own,
Warm worlds of bliss, that thought alone—
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

Where yonder yew-trees lightly wave
Their branches on the gale,
Unheeded heaves a simple grave,
Which tells the common tale;
Round this unconscious school-boys stray,
Till the dull knell of childish play
From yonder studious mansion rings.
But here where'er my footsteps move,
My silent tears too plainly prove,
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

Oh, Love! before thy glowing shrine
My early vows were paid;
My hopes, my dreams, my heart was thine,
But these are now decay'd;
For thine are pinions like the wind,
No trace of thee remains behind,
Except, alas! thy jealous stings.
Away, away! delusive power,
Thou shalt not haunt my coming hour;
Unless, indeed, without thy wings.

Seat of my youth! * thy distant spire
Recalls each scene of joy;
My bosom glows with former fire,—
In mind again a boy.
Thy grove of elms, thy verdant hill,
Thy every path delights me still,
Each flower a double fragrance flings;
Again, as once, in converse gay,
Each dear associate seems to say,
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

My Lycous! † wherefore dost thou weep?
Thy falling tears restrain;
Affection for a time may sleep,
But, oh, 't will wake again!
Think, think, my friend, when next we meet,
Our long-wish'd interview, how sweet!
From this my hope of rapture springs;
While youthful hearts thus fondly swell,
Absence, my friend, can only tell,
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

In one, and one alone deceived,
Did I my error mourn?
No—from oppressive bonds relieved,
I left the wretch to scorn.
I turn'd to those my childhood knew,
With feelings warm, with bosoms true,
Twined with my heart's according strings;
And till those vital chords shall break,
For none but these my breast shall wake
Friendship, the power deprived of wings!

Ye few! my soul, my life is yours,
My memory and my hope;
Your worth a lasting love insures,
Unfetter'd in its scope;
From smooth deceit and terror sprung,
With aspect fair and honey'd tongue,

Let Adulation wait on kings;
With joy elate, by snares beset,
We, we, my friends, can ne'er forget,
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

Fictions and dreams inspire the bard
Who rolls the epic song;
Friendship and Truth be my reward—
To me no bays belong;
If laurel'd Fame but dwells with lies,
Me the enchantress ever flies,
Whose heart and not whose fancy sings;
Simple and young, I dare not feign;
Mine be the rude yet heartfelt strain,
"Friendship is Love without his wings!"

[Dec. 20, 1838. First published, 1839.]

THE PRAYER OF NATURE.

FATHER of Light! great God of Heaven!
Hear'st thou the accents of despair?
Can guilt like man's be e'er forgiven?
Can vice atone for crimes by prayer?

Father of Light, on thee I call!
Thou seest my soul is dark within;
Thou who canst mark the sparrow's fall,
Avert from me the death of sin.

No shrine I seek, to sects unknown;
Oh, point to me the path of truth!
They dread omnipotence I own;
Spare, yet amend, the faults of youth.

Let bigots rear a gloomy fane,
Let superstition hail the pile,
Let priests, to spread their sable reign,
With tales of mystic rites beguile.

Shall man confine his Maker's sway
To Gothic domes of mouldering stone?
Thy temple is the face of day;
Earth, ocean, heaven, thy boundless throne.

Shall man condemn his race to hell,
Unless they bend in pompous form?
Tell us that all, for one who fell,
Must perish in the mingling storm?

Shall each pretend to reach the skies,
Yet doom his brother to expire,
Whose soul a different hope supplies,
Or doctrines less severe inspire?

Shall these, by creeds they can't expound,
Prepare a fancied bliss or woe?
Shall reptiles, grovelling on the ground,
Their great Creator's purpose know?

Shall those who live for self alone,
Whose years float on in daily crime—
Shall they by Faith for guilt atone,
And live beyond the bounds of Time?

Father! no prophet's laws I seek,— Thy laws in Nature's works appear;—
I own myself corrupt and weak,
Yet will I pray, for thou wilt hear!

Thou who canst guide the wandering star
Through trackless realms of ether's space;
Who calm'st the elemental war,
Whose hand from pole to pole I trace:

Thou, who in wisdom placed me here,
Who, when thou wilt, canst take me hence,
Ah! whilst I tread this earthly sphere,
Extend to me thy wide defence.

* Harrow.

† The Earl of Clare.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

To thee, my God, to thee I call!
Whatever weal or woe betide,
By thy command I rise or fall,
In thy protection I confide.

If, when this dust to dust 's restored,
My soul shall float on airy wing,
How shall thy glorious name adored
Inspire her feeble voice to sing!

But, if this fleeting spirit share
With clay the grave's eternal bed,
While life yet throbs, I raise my prayer,
Though doom'd no more to quit the dead.

To thee I breathe my humble strain,
Grateful for all thy mercies past,
And hope, my God, to thee again
This erring life may fly at last.

[Dec. 29, 1868. First published, 1868.]

TO EDWARD NOEL LONG, ESQ.*

Nili ego contulerim jocundo sanus amico.—HOM.

DEAR LONG, in this sequester'd scene,
While all around in slumber lie,
The joyous days which ours have been
Come rolling fresh on Fancy's eye;
Thus if amidst the gathering storm,
While clouds the darken'd noon deform,
Yon heaven assumes a varied glow,
I hail the sky's celestial bow,
Which spreads the sign of future peace,
And bids the war of tempests cease.
Ah! though the present brings but pain,
I think those days may come again;
Or if, in melancholy mood,
Some lurking envious fear intrude,
To check my bosom's fondest thought,
And interrupt the golden dream,
I crush the fiend with malice fraught,
And still indulge my wonted theme.
Although we ne'er again can trace,
In Granta's vale, the pedant's lore;
Nor through the groves of Ida chase
Our raptur'd visions as before,
Though Youth has flown on rosy pinion,
And Manhood claims his stern dominion,
Age will not every hope destroy,
But yield some hours of sober joy.

Yes, I will hope that Time's broad wing
Will shed around some dews of spring:
But if his scythe must sweep the flowers
Which bloom among the fairy bowers,
Where smiling Youth delights to dwell,
And hearts with early rapture swell;
If frowning Age, with cold control,
Confines the current of the soul,
Congeals the tear of Pity's eye,
Or checks the sympathetic sigh,
Or hears unmoved misfortune's groan,
And bids me feel for self alone;
Oh! may my bosom never learn
To soothe its wonted heedless flow;
Still, still despise the censor stern,
But ne'er forget another's weal.

Yes, as you know me in the days
O'er which Remembrance yet delays,
Still may I rove, untutor'd, wild,
And even in age at heart a child.

Though now on airy visions borne,
To you my soul is still the same,
Of has it been my fate to mourn,
And all my former joys are tame.
But, hence! ye hours of sable hue!
Your frowns are gone, my sorrows o'er:
By every bliss my childhood knew,
I'll think upon your shade no more.
Thus, when the whirlwind's rage is past,
And caves their sullen roar enclose,
We heed no more the wintry blast,
When lull'd by zephyr to repose.

Full often has my infant Muse
Attuned to love her languid lyre;
But now without a theme to choose,
The strains in stolen sighs expire.
My youthful nymphs, alas! are flown;
E— is a wife, and C— a mother,
And Carolina sighs alone,
And Mary 's given to another;
And Cora's eye, which roll'd on me,
Can now no more my love recall:
In truth, dear LONG, 't was time to see;
For Cora's eye will shine on all.
And though the sun, with genial rays,
His beams alike to all displays,
And every lady's eye 's a sun,
These last should be confined to one.
The soul's meridian don't become her,
Whose sun displays a general summer!
Thus faint is every former flame,
And passion's self is now a name.
As, when the ebbing flames are low,
The aid which once improved their light,
And bade them burn with fiercer glow,
Now quenches all their sparks in night;
Thus has it been with passion's fires,
As many a boy and girl remembers,
While all the force of love expires,
Extinguish'd with the dying embers.

But now, dear LONG, 't is midnight's noon,
And clouds obscure the watery moon,
Whose beauties I shall not rehearse,
Described in every stripling's verse;
For why should I the path go o'er,
Which every bard has trod before?
Yet ere yon silver lamp of night
Has thrice perform'd her stated round,
Has thrice retraced her path of light,
And chased away the gloom profound,
I trust that we, my gentle friend,
Shall see her rolling orbit wend
Above the dear-loved peaceful seat
Which once contain'd our youth's retreat;†
And then with those our childhood knew,
We'll mingle in the festive crew;
While many a tale of former day
Shall wing the laughing hours away,
And all the flow of souls shall pour
The sacred intellectual shower,
Nor cease till Luna's waning horn
Scarce glimmers through the mist of morn.

* This young gentleman, who was with Lord Byron both at Harrow and Cambridge, afterwards entered the Guards, and served with distinction in the expedition to Copenhagen. He was drowned early in 1808, when on his way to join the army in the Peninsula; the transport in which he sailed being run foul of in the night by another of the convoy. "Long's father," says Lord Byron, "wrote to me to write his son's epitaph. I promised—but I had not the heart to complete it. He was such a good, amiable being as rarely remains long in this world; with talent and accomplishments, too, to make him the more regretted."—Byron's Diary, 1811. † The two friends were both passionately attached to Harrow; and sometimes made excursions thither together, to revive their school-boy recollections.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

TO A LADY.*

OH! had my fate been join'd with thine,
As once this pledge appear'd a token,
These follies had not then been mine,
For then my peace had not been broken.†

To thee these early faults I owe,
To thee, the wise and old reproving:
They know my sins, but do not know
'T was thine to break the bonds of loving.

For once my soul, like thine, was pure,
And all its rising fires could smother;
But now thy vows no more endure,
Bestow'd by thee upon another.

Perhaps his peace I could destroy,
And spoil the blisses that await him;
Yet let my rival smile in joy,
For thy dear sake I cannot hate him.

Ah! since thy angel form is gone,
My heart no more can rest with any;
But what it sought in thee alone,
Attempts, alas! to find in many.

Then fare thee well, deceitful maid!
'T were vain and fruitless to regret thee;
Nor Hope nor Memory yield their aid,
But Pride may teach me to forget thee.

Yet all this giddy waste of years,
This tiresome round of palling pleasures;
These varied loves, these matron's fears,
These thoughtless strains to passion's measures—

If thou wert mine, had all been hush'd:—
This cheek, now pale from early riot,
With passion's hectic ne'er had flush'd,
But bloom'd in calm domestic quiet.

Yes, once the rural scene was sweet,
For Nature seem'd to smile before thee; ‡
And once my breast abhor'd deceit,—
For then it beat but to adore thee.

But now I seek for other joys:
To think would drive my soul to madness;
In thoughtless throngs and empty noise,
I conquer half my bosom's sadness.

Yet even in these a thought will steal,
In spite of every vain endeavor,—
And fends might pity what I feel,—
To know that thou art lost forever.

I WOULD I WERE A CARELESS CHILD.

I WOULD I were a careless child,
Still dwelling in my Highland cave,
Or roaming through the dusky wild,
Or bounding o'er the dark-blue wave;
The cumbrous pomp of Saxon pride
Accords not with the freeborn soul,

* Mrs. Musters. See onks, p. 311.

† "Our union would have healed feuds in which blood had been shed by our fathers—it would have joined lands broad and rich—it would have joined at least one heart, and two persons not ill matched in years (she is two years my elder), and—and—what has been the result?"—Byron Diary, 1801.

‡ "Our meetings," says Lord Byron, in 1800, "were stolen ones, and a gate leading from Mr. Chaworth's grounds to those of my mother was the place of our interviews. But the ardor was all on my side. I was serious; she was volatile: she liked me as a younger brother, and treated and laughed

Which loves the mountain's craggy side,
And seeks the rocks where billows roll.

Fortune! take back these cultured lands,
Take back this name of splendid sound!
I hate the touch of servile hands,
I hate the slaves that cringe around.
Place me along the rocks I love,
Which sound to Ocean's wildest roar;
I ask but this—again to rove
Through scenes my youth hath known before.

Few are my years, and yet I feel
The world was ne'er design'd for me:
Ah! why do dark'ning shades conceal
The hour when man must cease to be?
Once I beheld a splendid dream,
A visionary scene of bliss:
Truth!—wherefore did thy hated beam
Awake me to a world like this?

I loved—but those I loved are gone;
Had friends—my early friends are fled:
How cheerless feels the heart alone,
When all its former hopes are dead!
Though gay companions o'er the bowl
Dispel awhile the sense of ill;
Though pleasure stirs the maddening soul,
The heart—the heart—is lonely still.

How dull! to hear the voice of those Whom rank or chance, whom wealth or power,
Have made, though neither friends nor foes,
Associates of the festive hour.
Give me again a faithful few,
In years and feelings still the same,
And I will fly the midnight crew,
Where boisterous joy is but a name.

And woman, lovely woman! thou,
My hope, my comfort, my all!
How cold must be my bosom now,
When e'en thy smiles begin to pall!
Without a sigh would I resign
This busy scene of splendid woe,
To make that calm contentment mine,
Which virtue knows, or seems to know.

Fain would I fly the haunts of men—
I seek to shun, not hate mankind;
My breast requires the sullen glen,
Whose gloom may suit a darken'd mind.
Oh! that to me the wings were given
Which bear the turtle to her nest!
Then would I cleave the vault of heaven,
To see away, and be at rest.‡

WHEN I ROVED A YOUNG HIGH- LANDER.

WHEN I roved a young Highlander o'er the dark heath
And climb'd thy steep summit, oh, Morven of snow!§

at me as a boy; she, however, gave me her picture, and that was something to make verses upon. Had I married her, perhaps the whole tenor of my life would have been different."

§ Sasennach, or Saxon, a Gaelic word, signifying either Lowland or English.

|| "And I said, Oh! that I had wings like a dove: for then would I fly away, and be at rest."—Psalms lv. 6. This verse also constitutes a part of the most beautiful anthem in our language.

¶ Morven, a lofty mountain in Aberdeenshire. "Gormal of snow," is an expression frequently to be found in Gaelic.

HOURS OF IDLENESS

To gaze on the torrent that thunder'd beneath,
Or the mist of the tempest that gather'd below,
Untutor'd by science, a stranger to fear,
And rude as the rocks where my infancy grew,
No feeling, save one, to my bosom was dear:
Need I say, my sweet Mary, 'twas centred in
you?

Yet it could not be love, for I knew not the name,—
What passion can dwell in the heart of a child?
But still I perceive an emotion the same
As I felt, when a boy, on the crag-cover'd wild:
One image alone on my bosom impress'd,
I loved my bleak regions, nor panted for new;
And few were my wants, for my wishes were bless'd;
And pure were my thoughts, for my soul was
with you.

I arose with the dawn; with my dog as my guide,
From mountain to mountain I bounded along:
I breasted the billows of Dee's* rushing tide,
And heard at a distance the Highlander's song:
At eve, on my heath-cover'd couch of repose,
No dreams, save of Mary, were spread to my view;
And warm to the skies my devotions arose,
For the first of my prayers was a blessing on you.

I left my bleak home, and my visions are gone;
The mountains are vanish'd, my youth is no more;
As the last of my race, I must wither alone,
And delight but in days I have witness'd before:
Ah! splendor has raised but embitter'd my lot;
More dear were the scenes which my infancy
knew:
Though my hopes may have fall'd, yet they are not forgot;
Though cold is my heart, still it lingers with you.

When I see some dark hill point its crest to the sky,
I think of the rocks that o'ershadow Colbreen;†
When I see the soft blue of a love-speaking eye,
I think of those eyes that endear'd the rude scene;
When, haply, some light-waving locks I behold,
That faintly resemble my Mary's in hue,
I think on the long flowing ringlets of gold,
The locks that were sacred to beauty, and you.

Yet the day may arrive when the mountains once
more
Shall rise to my sight in their mantles of snow;‡
But while these soar above me, unchanged as before,
Will Mary be there to receive me?—ah, no!
Adieu, then, ye hills, where my childhood was bred!
Thou sweet flowing Dee, to thy waters adieu!
No home in the forest shall shelter my head,— Ah! Mary, what home could be mine but with
you?

TO GEORGE, EARL DELAWARE.‡

Oh! yes, I will own we were dear to each other;
The friendships of childhood, though fleeting, are true;
The love which you felt was the love of a brother,
Nor less the affection I cherish'd for you.

But Friendship can vary her gentle dominion;
The attachment of years in a moment expires:
Like Love, too, she moves on a swift-waving pinion,
But glows not, like Love, with unquenchable fire.

Full oft have we wander'd through Ida together,
And blest were the scenes of our youth, I allow:
In the spring of our life, how serene is the weather!
But winter's rude tempests are gathering now.

No more with affection shall memory blending,
The wonted delights of our childhood retrace:
When pride steals the bosom, the heart is unbending,
And what would be justice appears a di grace.

However, dear George, for I still must esteem you—
The few whom I love I can never upbraid—
The chance which has lost may in future redeem you,
Repentance will cancel the vow you have made.

I will not complain, and though chill'd is affection,
With me no corroding resentment shall live:
My bosom is calm'd by the simple reflection,
That both may be wrong, and that both should forgive.

You knew that my soul, that my heart, my existence,
If danger demanded, were wholly your own;
You knew me unalter'd by years or by distance,
Devoted to love and to friendship alone.

You knew,—but away with the vain retrospection!
The bond of affection no longer endures:
Too late you may droop o'er the fond recollection,
And sigh for the friend who was formerly yours.

For the present, we part,—I will hope not for ever;
For time and regret will restore you at last:
To forget our dissension we both should endeavor,
I ask no atonement, but days like the past.

TO THE EARL OF CLARE.‡

"To temper amoris
His mentor, et carli comitis ne abscedat imago."—VAL. FLAC.

FRIEND of my youth! when young we roved
Like striplings, mutually beloved,
With friendship's purest glow,
The bliss which wing'd those rosy hours
Was such as pleasure seldom showers
On mortals here below.

The recollection seems alone
Dearer than all the joys I've known,
When distant far from you:
Though pain, 'tis still a pleasing pain,
To trace those days and hours again,
And sigh again, adieu!

My pensive memory lingers o'er
Those scenes to be enjoy'd no more,
Those scenes regretted ever;
The measure of our youth is full,
Life's evening dream is dark and dull,
And we may meet—ah, never!

As when one parent spring supplies
Two streams which from one fountain rise,
Together join'd in vain;
How soon, diverging from their source,
Each, murmuring, seeks another course,
Till mingled in the main!

Our vital streams of weal or woe,
Though near, alas! distinctly flow,
Nor mingle as before:

* "Breasting the lofty surge."—SHAKESPEARE. The Dee is a beautiful river, which rises near Mar Lodge, and falls into the sea at New Aberdeen.

† Colbreen is a mountain near the verge of the Highlands, not far from the ruins of Dee Castle.

‡ In the spring of 1807, on recovering from a severe illness, Lord Byron had projected a visit to Scotland. The plan was not put into execution.

§ See p. 250.

¶ See ante, portrait, Life of Byron.

HOURS OF IDLENESS.

Now swift or slow, now black or clear,
Till death's unfathom'd gulf appear,
And both shall quit the shore.

Our souls, my friend! which once supplied
One wish, nor breathed a thought beside,
Now flow in different channels:
Disdaining humbler rural sports,
'T is yours to mix in polish'd courts,
And shine in fashion's annals;

'T is mine to waste on love my time,
Or vent my reveries in rhyme,
Without the aid of reason;
For sense and reason (critics know it)
Have quitted every amorous poet,
Nor left a thought to seize on.

Poor LITTLE! sweet, melodious bard!
Of late esteem'd it monstrous hard
That he, who sang before all,—
He who the lore of love expanded,—
By dire reviewers should be branded,
As void of wit and moral.

And yet, while Beauty's praise is thine,
Harmonious favorite of the Nine!
Bepine not at thy lot.
Thy soothing lays may still be read,
When Persecution's arm is dead,
And critics are forgot.

Still I must yield those worthless merit,
Who chasten, with unsparing spirit,
Bad rhymes, and those who write them;
And though myself may be the next,
By critic sarcasm to be vex'd,
I really will not fight them.

Perhaps they would do quite as well
To break the rudely sounding shell
Of such a young beginner:
He who offends at pert nineteen,
Ere thirty may become, I ween,
A very harden'd sinner.

Now, Clare, I must return to you;
And, sure, apologies are due:
Accept, then, my concession.
In truth, dear Clare, in fancy's flight
I soar along from left to right;
My muse admires digression.

I think I said 't would be your fate
To add one star to royal state;—
May regal smiles attend you!
And should a noble monarch reign,
You will not seek his smiles in vain,
If worth can recommend you.

Yet since in danger courts abound,
Where specious rivals glitter round,
From snares may saints preserve you;
And grant your love or friendship ne'er
From any claim a kindred care,
But those who best deserve you!

Not for a moment may you stray
From truth's secure, unerring way!
May no delights decoy!
O'er roses may your footsteps move,
Your smiles be ever smiles of love,
Your tears be tears of joy!

Oh! if you wish that happiness
Your coming days and years may bless,
And virtues crown your brow;
Be still as you were wont to be,
Spotless as you've been known to me,—
Be still as you are now.

And though some trifling share of praises,
To cheer my last declining days,
To me were doubly dear,
Whilst blessing your beloved name,
I'd waive at once a poet's fame,
To prove a prophet here.

LINES WRITTEN BENEATH AN ELM IN THE CHURCH-YARD OF HARROW.*

Spor of my youth! whose hoary branches sigh,
Swept by the breeze that fans thy cloudless sky;
Where now alone I muse, who oft have trod,
With those I loved, thy soft and verdant sod;
With those who, scatter'd far, perchance deplore,
Like me, the happy scenes they knew before:
Oh! as I trace again thy winding hill,
Mine eyes admire, my heart adores thee still,
Thou drooping Elm! beneath whose boughs I lay,
And frequent mused the twilight hours away:
Where, as they once were wont, my limbs recline,
But, ah! without the thoughts which then were
mine:

How do thy branches, moaning to the blast,
Invite the bosom to recall the past,
And seem to whisper, as they gently swell,
"Take, while thou canst, a lingering, last farewell!"

When fate shall chill, at length, this fever'd breast,
And calm its cares and passions into rest,
Oft have I thought, 't would soothe my dying hour,—
If aught may soothe when life resigns her power,—
To know some humbler grave, some narrow cell,
Would hide my bosom where it loved to dwell;
With this fond dream, methinks, 't were sweet to die—

And here it linger'd, here my heart might lie;
Here might I sleep where all my hopes arose,
Scene of my youth, and couch of my repose;
For ever stretch'd beneath this mantling shade,
Press'd by the turf where once my childhood play'd;
Wrapt by the soil that veils the spot I loved,
Mix'd with the earth o'er which my footsteps
moved;
Blest by the tongues that charmed my youthful ear.
Mourn'd by the few my soul acknowledged here;
Deplored by those in early days allied,
And unremember'd by the world beside.†

[September 2, 1807.]

* On losing his natural daughter, Allegra, in April, 1838, Lord Byron sent her remains to be buried at Harrow, "where," he says, in a letter to Mr. Murray, "I once hoped to have laid my own." "There is," he adds, "a spot in the church-yard, near the footpath, on the brow of the hill looking towards Windsor, and a tomb under a large tree (bearing the name of Peschile, or Peschey), where I used to sit for hours and hours when a boy. This was my favorite spot; but as I wish to erect a tablet to her memory, the body had better be deposited in the church." See ante, Life of Byron.

† The "Lines written beneath an Elm at Harrow" were the last in the little volume printed at Newark in 1807. The reader is referred to Mr. Moore's Notices, for various interesting particulars respecting the impression produced on Lord Byron's mind by the celebrated critique of his juvenile performance put forth in the Edinburgh Review (see Appendix, Note 61, a Journal which at that time possessed nearly undivided influence and authority. The poet's diaries and letters afford evidence that, in his latter days, he considered this piece as the work of Mr. (afterwards Lord) Brougham; but on what grounds he had come to that conclusion he nowhere mentions. It forms, however, from whatever pen it may have proceeded, an important link in Lord Byron's literary history.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

A Satire.*

"I had rather be a kitten, and cry mew!
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers."—SHAKESPEARE.

"Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad, abandoned critics too."—FOSTER.

PREFACE.†

ALL my friends, learned and unlearned, have urged me not to publish this satire with my name. If I were to be "turned from the career of my humor by quibbles quick, and paper bullets of the brain," I should have complied with their counsel. But I am not to be terrified by abuse, or bullied by reviewers, with or without arms. I can safely say that I have attacked none personally, who did not commence on the offensive. An author's works are public property: he who purchases may judge, and publish his opinion if he pleases; and the authors I have endeavored to commemorate may do by me as I have done by them. I dare say they will succeed better in condemning my scribbings, than in mending their own. But my object is not to prove that I can write well, but, if possible, to make others write better.

As the poem has met with far more success than I expected, I have endeavored in this edition to make some additions and alterations, to render it more worthy of public perusal.

In the first edition of this satire, published anonymously, fourteen lines on the subject of Bowles's Pope were written by, and inserted at the request of, an ingenious friend of mine,‡ who has now in the press a volume of poetry. In the present edition they are erased, and some of my own substituted in their stead; my only reason for this being that which I conceive would operate with any other person in the same manner,—a determination not to publish with my name any production which was not entirely and exclusively my own composition.

With regard to the real talents of many of the poetical persons whose performances are mentioned or alluded to in the following pages, it is presumed by the author that there can be little difference of opinion in the public at large; though, like other sectaries, each has his separate tabernacle of proselytes, by whom his abilities are overrated, his faults overlooked, and his metrical canons received without scruple and without consideration. But the unquestionable possession of considerable genius by several of the writers here censured renders their mental prostitution more to be regretted. Imbecility may be pitied, or, at worst, laughed at and forgotten: perverted powers demand the most decided reprehension. No one can wish more than the author that some known and able writer had undertaken their exposure; but Mr. Gifford has devoted himself to Massinger, and, in the absence of the regular physician, a country practitioner may, in cases of absolute necessity, be allowed to prescribe his nostrum to prevent the extension of so deplorable an epidemic, provided there be no quackery in his treatment of the malady. A caustic is here offered; as it is to be feared nothing short of actual cautery can recover the numerous patients afflicted with the present prevalent and distressing rabies for rhyming.—As to the Edinburgh Reviewers,§ it would indeed require an Hercules to crush the Hydra; but if the author succeeds in merely "bruising one of the heads of the serpent," though his own hand should suffer in the encounter, he will be amply satisfied.||

* The first edition of this satire, which then began with what is now the ninety-seventh line ("Time was, ere yet," etc.), appeared in March, 1809. A second, to which the author prefixed his name, followed in October of that year; and a third and fourth were called for during his first pilgrimage, in 1810 and 1811. On his return to England a fifth edition was prepared for the press by himself, with considerable care, but suppressed, and, except one copy, destroyed, when on the eve of publication. The text is now printed from the seamy that escaped; on a casually meeting with which, in 1814, he repressed the whole, and wrote on the margin some annotations, which also we shall preserve,—distinguishing them, by the insertion of their dates, from those affixed to the prior editions. The first of these MS. notes of 1810 appears on the 6th leaf, and runs thus:—"The binding of this volume is considerably too valuable for the contents: and nothing but the consideration of its being the property of another prevents me from consigning this miserable record of misplaced anger and indiscriminate acrimony to the flames."

† This preface was written for the second edition, and printed with it. The noble author had left this country previous to the publication of that edition, and is not yet returned.—Notes to the fourth edition, 1811.—"He is, and gone again."—Lord B., 1816.

‡ Mr. Hobhouse.

§ "I well recollect," said Lord Byron, in 1811, "the effect which the critique of the Edinburgh Reviewers on my first poem had upon me—it was rage and resistance, and redress; but not despondency nor despair. A savage review is hemlock to a smacking author, and the one on me (which produced the English Bards, etc.) knocked me down—but I got up again." (See Appendix, Note 47, for the critique on "Hours of Idleness," which led to the writing of "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.")

|| "The severity of the criticism," as Sir Herbert Brydges has well observed, "touched Lord Byron in the point where his original strength lay: it wounded his pride, and roused his bitter indignation. He published 'English Bards and'

English Bards, &c.

STILL must I hear?—shall hoarse Fitzgerald* bawl
His creaking couplets in a tavern hall?
And I not sing, lest, haply, Scotch reviews
Should dub me scribbler, and denounce my muse?
Prepare for rhyme—I'll publish, right or wrong:
Fools are my theme, let satire be my song.

Oh! nature's noblest gift—my gray goose-quill!
Slave of my thoughts, obedient to my will,
Torn from thy parent bird to form a pen,
That mighty instrument of little men!
The pen! foredoom'd to aid the mental throes
Of brains that labor, big with verse or prose,
Though nymphs forsake, and critics may deride,
The lover's solace, and the author's pride.
What wits, what poets dost thou daily raise!
How frequent is thy use, how small thy praise!
Condemn'd at length to be forgotten quite,
With all the pages which 'twas thine to write.
But thou, at least, mine own especial pen!
Once laid aside, but now assumed again,
Our task complete, like Hamlet's; I shall be free;
Though spurn'd by others, yet beloved by me:
Then let us soar to-day; no common theme,
No eastern vision, no distemper'd dream!
Inspires—our path, though full of thorns, is plain;
Smooth be the verse, and easy be the strain.

When Vice triumphant holds her sov'reign sway,
Obey'd by all who nought beside obey;
When Folly, frequent harbinger of crime,
Bedecks her cap with bells of every clime;
When knaves and fools combined o'er all prevail,
And weigh their justice in a golden scale;
E'en then the boldest start from public sneers,
Afrail of shame, unknown to other fears,
More darkly sin, by satire kept in awe,
And shrink from ridicule, though not from law.

Such is the force of wit! but not belong
To me the arrows of satiric song;
The royal voices of our age demand
A keener weapon, and a mightier hand.
Still there are follies, e'en for me to chase,
And yield at least amusement in the race;
Laugh when I laugh, I seek no other fame;
The cry is up, and scribbles are my game.
Speed, Pegasus!—ye strains of great and small,
Ode, epic, elegy, have at you all!
I too can scrawl, and once upon a time
I pour'd along the town a flood of rhyme,
A school-boy freak, unworthy praise or blame;
I printed—older children do the same.
'Tis pleasant, sure, to see one's name in print;
A book's a book, although there's nothing in 't.

Scotch Reviewers, and bowed down those who had hitherto held a despotic victory over the public mind. From that day he engaged the public notice as a writer of undoubted talent and energy both of intellect and temper."

* Horace Fitzgerald.—"Right enough; but why notice such a mountebank?"—Byron, 1818.

† Mr. Fitzgerald, facetiously termed by Cobbett the "Small Beer Poet," indicates his annual tribute of verse on the Literary Fund: not content with writing, he spouts in person, after the company have imbibed a reasonable quantity of bad port, to enable them to sustain the operation.—For the long period of thirty-two years, this harmless postmaster was an attendant at the anniversary dinners of the Literary Fund, and constantly honoured the occasion with an ode, which he himself recited with most comical dignity of emphasis.

‡ Old Hamet Benengell promises repose to his pen, in the

Not that a title's sounding charm can save
Or scrawl or scribbler from an equal grave:
This Lambe must own, since his patrician name
Fail'd to preserve the spurious farce from shame.
No matter, George continues still to write.
Though now the name is veil'd from public sight.
Moved by the great example, I pursue
The self-same road, but make my own review;
Not seek great Jeffrey's, yet, like him, will be Self-constituted judge of poetry.

A man must serve his time to ev'ry trade
Save censure—critics all are ready made.
Take hackney'd jokes from Miller, got by rote,
With just enough of learning to misquote;
A mind well skill'd to find or forge a fault;
A turn for punning, call it Attic salt;
To Jeffrey go, be silent and discreet,
His pay is just ten sterling pounds per sheet:
Fear not to lie, 't will seem a sharper hit;
Shrink not from blasphemy, 't will pass for wit;
Care not for feeling—pass your proper jest,
And stand a critic, hated yet careen'd.

And shall we own such judgment? no—as soon
These roses in December—ice in June;
Hope constancy in wind, or oorn in chaff;
Believe a woman or an epitaph,
Or any other thing that's false, before
You trust in critics, who themselves are sore;
Or yield one single thought to be mislead
By Jeffrey's heart, or Lambe's Boeotian head.
To these young tyrants, by themselves misplaced,
Combined usurpers on the throne of taste;
To these, when authors bend in humble awe,
And hail their voice as truth, their word as law—
While these are censors, 't would be sin to spare;
While such are critics, why should I forbear?
But yet, so near all modern worthies run,
'T is doubtful whom to seek, or whom to shun;
Nor know we when to spare, or where to strike,
Our bards and censors are so much alike.

Then should you ask me, why I venture o'er
The path which Pope and Gifford trod before;
If not yet sicken'd, you can still proceed:
Go on; my rhyme will tell you as you read.
"But hold!" exclaims a friend,—"here's some neglect:

This—that—and t'other line seem incorrect."
What then? the self-same blunder Pope has got,
And careless Dryden—"Ay, but Eye has not: "
Indeed!—'t is granted, faith!—but what care I?
Better to err with Pope, than shine with Eye.

Time was, ere yet in these degenerate days ††
Ignoble themes obtain'd mistaken praise,
When sense and wit with poetry allied,
No fabled graces flourish'd side by side;
From the same fount their inspiration drew,
And, rear'd by taste, bloom'd fairer as they grew.

last chapter of Don Quixote. Oh! that our voluminous gentry would follow the example of Old Hamet Benengell.

* "This must have been written in the spirit of prophecy."
—B. 1818.

† This ingenious youth is mentioned more particularly with his production, in another place.

‡ In the Edinburgh Review.—"He's a very good fellow; and, except his mother and sister, the best of the set, to my mind."—B. 1818.

§ Messrs. Jeffrey and Lambe are the alpha and omega, the first and the last, of the Edinburgh Review; the others are mentioned hereafter.—["This was not just. Neither the heart nor the head of these gentlemen are at all what they are here represented. At the time this was written, I was personally unacquainted with either."—B. 1818.]

†† The first edition of the satire opened with this line.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Then, in this happy isle, a Pope's* pure strain
Sought the rapt soul to charm, nor sought in vain;
A polish'd nation's praise aspired to claim,
And raised the people's, as the poet's fame.
Like him great Dryden pour'd the tide of song,
In stream less smooth, indeed, yet doubly strong.
Then Congreve's scenes could cheer, or Otway's melt—

For nature then an English audience felt.
But why these names, or greater still, retrace,
When all to feeble bards resign their place?
Yet to such times our lingering looks are cast,
When taste and reason with those times are past.
Now look around, and turn each trifling page,
Survey the precious works that please the age;
This truth at least let satire's self allow,
No dearth of bards can be complain'd of now.
The loaded press beneath her labor groans,
And printers' devils shake their weary bones;
While Southey's epics cram the creaking shelves,
And Little's lyrics shine in hot-press'd twelves.
Thus saith the preacher: "Nought beneath the sun
Is new;" yet still from change to change we run:
What varied wonders tempt us as they pass!
The cow-pox, tractors, galvanism, and gas,
In turns appear, to make the vulgar stare,
Till the swollen bubble bursts—and all is air!
Nor less new schools of Poetry arise,
Where dull pretenders grapple for the prize:
O'er taste awhile these pseudo-bards prevail;
Each country book-club bows the knee to Baal,
And, hurling lawful genius from the throne,
Erects a shrine and idol of its own;
Some leaden calf—but whom it matters not,
From scaring Southey down to grovelling Stott.†

Behold! in various throngs the scribbling crew,
For notice eager, pass in long review:
Each spurs his faded Pegasus apace,
And rhyme and blank maintain an equal race;
Sonnets on sonnets crowd, and ode on ode;
And tales of terror jostle on the road;
Immeasurable measures move along;
For simpering folly loves a varied song,
To strange mysterious dullness still the friend,
Admires the strain she cannot comprehend.
Thus Lays of Minstrels—may they be the last!—
On half-strung harps wail mournful to the blast.
While mountain spirits prize to river sprites,
That dames may listen to the sound at nights;

And goblin brats, of Gilpin Horner's brood,
Decoy young border-nobles through the wood,
And skip at every step, Lord knows how high,
And frighten foolish babes, the Lord knows why;
While high-born ladies in their magic cell,
Forbidding knights to read who cannot spell,
Despatch a courier to a wizard's grave,
And fight with honest men to shield a knave.

Next view in state, proud prancing on his roan,
The golden-crested haughty Marmion,
Now forging scrolls, now foremost in the fight,
Not quite a felon, yet but half a knight,
The gibbet or the field prepared to grace;
A mighty mixture of the great and base.
And think'st thou, Scott!‡ by vain conceit perchance,

On public taste to foist thy stale romance,
Though Murray with his Miller may combine
To yield thy muse just half-a-crown per line?
No! when the sons of song descend to trade,
Their bays are sere, their former laurels fade.
Let such forego the poet's sacred name,
Who rack their brains for lucre,|| not for fame:
Still for stern Mammon may they toil in vain!
And sadly gaze on gold they cannot gain!
Such be their meed, such still the just reward
Of prostituted muse and hireling bard!
For this we spurn Apollo's venal son,
And bid a long "good-night to Marmion." ¶

These are the themes that claim our plaudits
NOW;
These are the bards to whom the muse must bow;
While Milton, Dryden, Pope, alike forgot,
Reign their hallow'd bays to Walter Scott.

The time has been, when yet the muse was young,
When Homer swept the lyre, and Maro sung,
An epic scarce ten centuries could claim,
While awe-struck nations hail'd the magic name:
The work of each immortal bard appears
The single wonder of a thousand years.
Empires have moulder'd from the face of earth,
Tongues have expired with those who gave them
birth,

Without the glory such a strain can give,
As even in ruin bids the language live.
Not so with us, though minor bards, content,
On one great work a life of labor spent:

* When Lord Byron, in the autumn of 1803, was occupied upon this satire, he devoted a considerable portion of his time to a deep study of the writings of Pope; and from that period may be dated his enthusiastic admiration of this great poet.

† Stott, better known in the "Morning Post" by the name of Halls. This personage is at present the most profound sceptic of the nation.

‡ See the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," passim. Never was any plan so incongruous and absurd as the groundwork of this production.

§ When Lord Byron wrote his famous satire, I had my share of flagellation among my betters. My crime was having written a poem for a thousand pounds; which was no otherwise true, than that I sold the copyright for that sum. I was, however, so far from having any thing to do with the offensive criticism in the Edinburgh, that I remonstrated against it with the editor, because I thought the "Hours of Idleness" treated with undue severity. They were written like all juvenile poetry, rather from the recollection of what had pleased the author in others, than what had been suggested by his own imagination; but, nevertheless, I thought they contained passages of noble promise."—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

|| Lord Byron, as is well known, set out with the determination never to receive money for his writings. For the liberty to republish this satire, he refused four hundred guineas; and the money paid for the copyright of the first and second cantos of Childe Harold, and of the Corsair, he presented to Mr. Dallas. In 1814, to a letter enclosing a draft of 1000 guineas, offered by Mr. Murray for the Siege of Corinth and Parisina, the noble poet sent this answer:—"Your offer is liberal in the extreme, and much more than the two poems can possibly be worth—but I cannot accept it, nor will not. You are most welcome to them, as additions to the collected volumes, without any demand or expectation on my part whatever. I have enclosed your draft torn, for fear of accidents by the way. I wish you would not throw temptation in mine; it is not from a disdain of the universal idol—nor from a present superiority of his treasures—I can assure you, that I refuse to worship him; but what is right, is right, and must not yield to circumstances." The poet was afterwards induced, at Mr. Murray's earnest persuasion, to accept the thousand guineas. See Appendix, Note B, for sums paid Lord Byron upon the copyrights of his works.

¶ "Good-night to Marmion!"—the pathetic and also prophetic exclamation of Henry Elmont, Esquire, on the death of honest Marmion.

 As the Odyssey is so closely connected with the story of the Iliad, they may be almost classed as one grand historical poem. In alluding to Milton and Tasso, we consider the "Paradise Lost," and "Jerusalem Liberata," as their standard efforts; since neither the "Jerusalem Conquered" of the Italian, nor the "Paradise Regained" of the English bard, obtained a proportionate celebrity to their former poems. Query: Which of Mr. Southey's will survive?

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

With eagle pinion soaring to the skies,
Behold the ballad-monger Southey rise!
To him let Camoëns, Milton, Tasso yield,
Whose annual strains, like armies, take the field.
First in the ranks see Joan of Arc advance,
The scourge of England and the boast of France!
Though burnt by wicked Bedford for a witch,
Behold her statue placed in glory's niche;
Her fetters burst, and just released from prison,
A virgin phoenix from her ashes risen.
Next see tremendous Thalaba come on,*
Arabia's monstrous, wild, and wondrous son; †
Domdaniel's dread destroyer, who o'erthrew
More mad magicians than the world e'er knew.
Immortal hero! all thy foes o'ercome,
For ever reign—the rival of Tom Thumb!
Since started metre died before thy face,
Well wert thou doom'd the last of all thy race!
Well might triumphant geni bear thee hence,
Illustrious conqueror of common sense!
Now, last and greatest, Madoc spreads his sails,
Cæcque in Mexico, and prince in Wales;
Tells us strange tales, as other travellers do,
More old than Mandeville's, and not so true.
Oh, Southey! Southey! cease thy varied song!
A bard may chant too often and too long:
As thou art strong in verse, in mercy, spare!
A fourth, alas! were more than we could bear.
But if, in spite of all the world can say,
Thou still wilt verseward plod thy weary way;
If still in Berkley ballads most uncivil,
Thou wilt devote old women to the devil, ‡
The babe unborn thy dread intent may rue:
"God help thee," Southey, and thy readers too. ¶

* "Thalaba," Mr. Southey's second poem, is written in open defiance of precedent and poetry. Mr. S. wished to produce something novel, and succeeded to a miracle. "Joan of Arc" was marvellous enough, but "Thalaba" was one of those poems "which," in the words of Porson, "will be read when Homer and Virgil are forgotten, but—not tell them."

† "Of Thalaba, the wild and wondrous song,"—Madoc.

‡ We beg Mr. Southey's pardon: "Madoc disdains the degrading title of epic." See his preface. Why is epic degraded? and by whom? Certainly the late romancers of Masters Cottle, Laureate Fye, Ogilvy, Hole, and gentle Mistress Cowley, have not exalted the epic muse; but as Mr. Southey's poem "disdains the appellation," allow us to ask—has he substituted anything better in its stead? or must he be content to rival Sir Richard Blackmore in the quantity as well as quality of his verse?

§ See "The Old Woman of Berkley," a ballad, by Mr. Southey, wherein an aged gentlewoman is carried away by Beelzebub, on a "high-trotting horse."

¶ The last line, "God help thee," is an evident plagiarism from the Antijacobin to Mr. Southey, on his Dactylic—Lord Byron here alludes to Mr. Gifford's parody on Mr. Southey's Dactylic, which ends thus:—

"Ne'er talk of ears again! look at thy spelling-book;
Dilworth and Dyebe are both mad at thy quantities—
Dactylic, call't thou 'em?—'God help thee, silly one.'"

¶ Lord Byron, on being introduced to Mr. Southey in 1813, at Holland House, describes him "as the best-looking bard he had seen for a long time."—"To have that poet's head and shoulders, I would," he says, "almost have written his sapphics. He is certainly a prepossessing person to look on, and a man of talent, and all that, and there is his eulogy." In his Journal of the same year, he says—"Southey I have not seen much of. His appearance is epic, and he is the only existing entire man of letters. All the others have some pursuit annexed to their authorship. His manners are mild, but not those of a man of the world, and his talents of the first order. His prose is perfect. Of his poetry there are various opinions: there is, perhaps, too much of it for the present generation—posterity will probably select. He has passages equal to any thing. At present, he has a party, but no public—except for his prose writings. His Life of Nelson is beautiful." Elsewhere, and later, Lord Byron pronounces Southey's Don Roderick "the first poem of our time."

¶ "Ugubug," B. 1215.

¶ Lyricall Ballads, p. 4.—"The Tables Turned." Stanza 1.

Next comes the dull disciple of thy school,
That mild apostate from poetic rule,
The simple Wordsworth, framer of a lay
As soft as evening in his favorite May,
Who warns his friend "to shake off toil and trouble.
And quit his books, for fear of growing double;" ¶
Who, both by precept and example, shows
That prose is verse, and verse is merely prose;
Convincing all, by demonstration plain,
Poetic souls delight in prose insane;
And Christmas stories tortured into rhyme
Contain the essence of the true sublime.
The idiot mother of "an idiot boy;"
A moon-struck, silly lad, who lost his way,
And, like his bard, confounded night with day; ¶
So close on each pathetic part he dwells,
And each adventure so sublimely tells,
That all who view the "idiot in his glory,"
Conceive the bard the hero of the story.

Shall gentle Coleridge pass unnoticed here,
To turbid ode and tumid stanza dear?
Though themes of innocence amuse him best,
Yet still obscurity's a welcome guest.
If inspiration should her aid refuse
To him who takes a piny for a muse, ¶
Yet none in lofty numbers can surpass
The bard who soars to elegiac an ass.
So well the subject suits his noble mind,
He brays, ¶ the laureate of the long-eared kind. ¶

Oh, wonder-working Lewis!  monk, or bard,
Who fain wouldst make Parnassus a church-yard!

¶ "Up, up, my friend, and clear your looks;

Why all this toil and trouble?

Up, up, my friend, and quit your books,

Or surely you'll grow double."

¶ Mr. W. in his preface labors hard to prove, that prose and verse are much the same; and certainly his precepts and practice are strictly conformable:—

"And thus to Betty's questions he Made answer, like a traveller bold,

The cook did grow, to-whoo, to-whoo,

And the sun did shine so cold," etc., etc., p. 11.

¶ Coleridge's Poems, p. 11, Songs of the Pizarra, &c. Devonshire fairies, p. 48 we have, "Lines to a young Lady;" and, p. 48, "Lines to a young Ass."

¶ (Thus altered by Lord Byron, in his last revision of the satire. In all former editions the line stood.)

"A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind."

¶ "Ugubug."—B. 1215. In a letter to Mr. Coleridge, written in 1813, Lord Byron says,—"You mention my 'satire,' lampoon, or whatever you or others please to call it. I can only say, that it was written when I was very young and very angry, and has been a thorn in my side ever since: more particularly as almost all the persons whom I directed upon became subsequently my acquaintances, and some of them my friends; which is 'heaping fire upon an enemy's head,' and forgiving me too readily to permit me to forgive myself. The part applied to you is pert, and petulant, and shallow enough; but, although I have long done every thing in my power to suppress the circulation of the whole thing, I shall always regret the wantonness or generality of many of its attempted attacks."

 Matthew Gregory Lewis, M.P. for Hindon, never distinguished himself in Parliament, but, mainly in consequence of the clever use he made of his knowledge of the German language, then a rare accomplishment, attracted much notice in the literary world, at a very early period of his life. His Tales of Terror; the drama of the Castle Spectre; and the romance called the Bravo of Venice (which is, however, little more than a version from the Swiss Zschokke); but above all the libidinous and impious novel of The Monk, invested the name of Lewis with an extraordinary degree of celebrity, during the poor period which intervened between the obscurity of Cowper, and the full display of Sir Walter Scott's talents in the "Lay of the Last Minstrel,"—a period which is sufficiently characterized by the fact, that Hayley then passed for a poet.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Lo! wreaths of yew, not laurel, bind thy brow,
Thy muse a sprite, Apollo's saxon thou!
Whether on ancient tombs thou tak'st thy stand,
By gibb'ring spectres haill'd, thy kindred band;
Or tracest chaste descriptions on thy page,
To please the females of our modest age;
All hail, M. P.!* from whose infernal brain
Thin-sheeted phantoms glide, a grisly train,
At whose command "grim women" throng in crowds,
And kings of fire, of water, and of clouds,
With "small gray men," "wild yagers," and what
not,
To crown with honor thee and Walter Scott;
Again all hail! if tales like thine may please,
Saint Luke alone can vanquish the disease:
Even Satan's self with thee might dread to dwell,
And in thy skull discern a deeper hell.

Who in soft guise, surrounded by a choir
Of virgins melting, not to Vesta's fire,
With sparkling eyes, and cheek by passion flush'd, Strikes his wild lyre, whilst listening dames are hush'd?
'Tis Little! young Catullus of his day,
As sweet, but as immoral, in his lay!
Grieved to condemn, † the muse must still be just,
Nor spare melodious advocates of lust.
Pure is the flame which o'er her altar burns;
From grosser incense with disgust she turns:
Yet kind to youth, this expiation o'er,
She bids thee "mend thy line, and sin no more." ‡

For thee, translator of the tinsel song,
To whom such glittering ornaments belong,
Hibernian Strangford! with thine eyes of blue, §
And boasted locks of red or auburn hue,
Whose plaintive strain each love-sick miss admires,
And o'er harmonious fustian half expires,
Learn, if thou canst, to yield thine author's sense,
Nor vend thy sonnets on a false pretence.
Think! thou to gain thy verse a higher place,
By dressing Camoens || in a suit of lace!
Mend, Strangford! mend thy morals and thy taste;
Be warm, but pure; be amorous, but be chaste:
Cease to deceive; thy piler'd harp restore,
Nor teach the Lusian bard to copy Moore.

Behold!—ye tartar! one moment spare the text—
Hayley's last work, and worst—until his next:
Whether he spin poor couplets into plays,
Or damn the dead with purgatorial praise,

His style in youth or age is still the same,
For ever feeble and for ever tame.
Triumphant first see "Temper's Triumphs" shine!
At least I'm sure thy triumph'd over mine.
Of "Music's Triumphs," all who read may swear
That luckless music never triumph'd there. ¶

Moravians, rise! bestow some meet reward
On dull devotion—Lo! the Sabbath bard,
Sepulchral Grahame, pours his notes sublime
In mangled prose, nor e'en aspires to rhyme;
Breaks into blank the Gospel of St. Luke,
And boldly pilfers from the Pentateuch;
And, undisturb'd by conscientious qualms,
Perverts the Prophets, and purloins the Psalms.

Hail, Sympathy! thy soft idea bring!††
A thousand visions of a thousand things,
And shows, still whimpering through threescore of
years,

The maudlin prince of mournful sonneteers.
And art thou not their prince, harmonious Bowles!
Thou first, great oracle of tender souls?
Whether thou sing'st with equal ease, and grief,
The fall of empires, or a yellow leaf;
Whether thy muse most lamentably tells
What merry sounds proceed from Oxford bells, ‡‡
Or, still in bells delighting, finds a friend
In every chime that jingled from Ostend;
Ah! how much juster were thy muse's hap,
If to thy bells thou wouldst but add a cap!
Delightful Bowles! still blessing and still blest,
All love thy strain, but children like it best.
'Tis thine, with gentle Little's moral song,
To soothe the mania of the amorous throng!
With thee our nursery damsels shed their tears,
Ere miss as yet completes her infant years.
But in her teens thy whining powers are vain;
She quits poor Bowles for Little's purer strain. §§
Now to soft themes thou comest to confine
The lofty numbers of a harp like thine;
"Awake a louder and a loftier strain!"
Such as none heard before, or will again!
Where all Discoveries jumbled from the flood,
Since first the leaky ark repos'd in mud,
By more or less, are sung in every book,
From Captain Noah down to Captain Cook.
Nor this alone; but, pausing on the road,
The bard sighs forth a gentle episode; ||||
And gravely tells—attend, each beauteous miss!—
When first Madeira trembled to a kiss.
Bowles! in thy memory let this precept dwell,
Stick to thy sonnets, man!—at least they sell. ¶¶

* "For every one knows little Matt's an M. P."—See a poem to Mr. Lewis, in "The Statesman," supposed to be written by Mr. Jekyl.

† In very early life, "Little's Poems" were Lord Byron's favorite study. "Helpho" he exclaims, in 1800, in a letter to Moore, "I believe all the mischief I have ever done, or sung, has been owing to that confounded book of yours."

‡ Originally, "mend thy life, and sin no more."
§ The reader who may wish for an explanation of this, may refer to "Strangford's Camoens," p. 157, note to p. 56, or to the last page of the Edinburgh Review of Strangford's Camoens.

|| It is also to be remarked, that the things given to the public as poems of Camoens are no more to be found in the original Portuguese, than in the Song of Solomon.

¶ Hayley's two most notorious verse productions are "Triumph of Temper" and "The Triumph of Music." He has also written much comedy in rhyme, epistles, etc., etc. As he is rather an elegant writer of notes and biography, let us recommend Pope's advice to Wycherley to Mr. H.'s consideration, viz., "to convert his poetry into prose," which may be easily done by taking away the final syllable of each couplet.

 Mr. Grahame has poured forth two volumes of cant, under the name of "Sabbath Walks" and "Biblical Pictures."

†† Mr. Pratt, once a Bath bookseller, now a London author, has written as much, to as little purpose, as any of his scribbling contemporaries. Mr. P.'s "Sympathy" is in rhyme; but his prose productions are the most voluminous. The more popular of these last were entitled "Gleanings."

‡ See Bowles's "Sonnet to Oxford," and "Stanzas on hearing the Bells of Ostend."

§ "Awake a louder," etc., is the first line in Bowles's "Spirit of Discovery"; a very spirited and pretty dwarf-epic. Among other exquisite lines we have the following:—
"A kiss

Stole on the list'ning silence, never yet
Here heard; they trembled even as if the power," etc., etc. That is, the woods of Madeira trembled to a kiss; very much astonished, as well they might be, at such a phenomenon.—"Misquoted and misunderstood by me; but not intentionally. It was not the 'woods,' but the people in them who trembled—why, Heaven only knows—unless they were overheard making the prodigious smack."—R. 1816.

¶ The episode above alluded to is the story of "Robert & Machin" and "Anna d'Arfet," a pair of constant lovers, who performed the kiss above mentioned, that startled the woods of Madeira.

¶¶ Although, says Lord Byron, in 1801, "I regret having published 'English Bards and Scotch Reviewers,' the part

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS

But if some new-born whim, or larger bribe,
Prompt thy crude brain, and claim thee for a scribe;
If chance some bard, though once by dunces fear'd,
Now, prone in dust, can only be revered;
If Pope, whose fame and genius, from the first,
Have foll'd the best of critics, needs the worst,
Do thou essay: each fault, each falling scan;
The first of poets was, alas! but man.
Rake from each ancient dunghill ev'ry pearl,
Consult Lord Fanny, and confide in Curll;⁶
Let all the scandals of a former age
Perch on thy pen, and flutter o'er thy page;
Affect a candor which thou canst not feel,
Clothe envy in the garb of honest zeal;
Write, as if Saint John's soul could still inspire,
And do from hate what Mallet † did for hire.
Oh! hadst thou lived in that congenial time,
To rave with Dennis, and with Ralph to rhyme;[‡]
Throng'd with the rest around his living head,
Not raised thy hoof against the lion dead;
A meet reward had crown'd thy glorious gains,
And link'd thee to the Dunciad for thy pains.]]

Another epic! Who inflicts again
More books of blank upon the sons of man?
Bosnian Cottle, rich Bristol's boast,
Imports old stories from the Cambrian coast,
And sends his goods to market—all alive!
Lines forty thousand, cantos twenty-five!
Fresh fish from Helicon! † who'll buy? who'll buy?
The precious bargain's cheap—in faith, not I.
Your turtle-feeder's varse must needs be flat,
Though Bristol bloat him with the verdant fat;
If commerce fills the purse, she clogs the brain,
And Amos Cottle strikes the lyre in vain.
In him an author's luckless lot behold,
Condemn'd to make the books which once he sold.
Oh, Amos Cottle!—Phœbus! what a name,
To fill the speaking trump of future fame!—
Oh, Amos Cottle! for a moment think
What meagre profits spring from pen and ink!
When thus devoted to poetic dreams,
Who will peruse thy prostituted reams?

which I regret the least is that which regards Mr. Bowles, with reference to Pope. Whilst I was writing that publication, in 1807 and 1808, Mr. Hobbouse was desirous that I should express our mutual opinion of Pope, and of Mr. Bowles's edition of his works. As I had completed my outline, and felt lax, I requested that he would do so. He did it. His fourteen lines on Bowles's Pope are in the first edition of 'English Bards,' and are quite as severe, and much more poetical, than my own in the second. On reprinting the work, as I put my name to it, I omitted Mr. Hobbouse's lines, by which the work gained less than Mr. Bowles's.—The following were the opening lines written by Mr. Hobbouse:—

Stick to thy sonnets, man!—at least they sell.

Or take the only path that open lies."

* Curll is one of the heroes of the Dunciad, and was a bookseller. Lord Fanny is the poetical name of Lord Hervey, author of "Lines to the Imitator of Horace."

† Lord Bolingbroke hired Mallet to traduce Pope after his decease, because the poet had retained some copies of a work by Lord Bolingbroke—"The Patriot King,"—which that splendid but malignant genius had ordered to be destroyed.

‡ Dennis the critic, and Ralph the rhymester:—

"Silence, ye wolves! while Ralph to Cynthia howls, Making night hideous: answer him, ye owls!"—

Dunciad.

§ See Bowles's late edition of Pope's Works, for which he received three hundred pounds. Thus Mr. B. has experienced how much easier it is to profit by the reputation of another than to elate his own.

† Lord Byron's MS. note of 1816 on this passage is,—"Too savage all this on Bowles."

‡ "Fresh fish from Helicon!"—"Helicon" is a mountain, and not a fish-pond. It should have been "Hippocrene."—B. 1816.

66 Mr. Cottle, Amos, Joseph. I don't know which, but one

Oh, pen perverted! paper misapplied!
Had Cottle* still adorn'd the counter's side,
Bent o'er the desk, or, born to useful toils,
Been taught to make the paper which he soils,
Plough'd, delved, or piled the ear with lusty limb,
He had not sung of Wales, nor I of him.††

As Sisyphus against the infernal steep
Rolls the huge rock whose motions ne'er may sleep,
So up thy hill, ambrosial Richmond, heaves
Dull Maurice; †† all his granite weight of leaves:
Smooth, solid monuments of mental pain;
The petrifications of a plodding brain,
That, ere they reach the top, fall lumbering back
again.

With broken lyre, and cheek serenely pale,
Lo! sad Alcæus wanders down the vale;
Though fair they rose, and might have bloom'd at last,

His hopes have perish'd by the northern blast:
Nipp'd in the bud by Caledonian gales,
His blossoms wither as the blast prevails!
O'er his lost works let classic Sheffield weep;
May no rude hand disturb their early sleep!]]

Yet say! why should the bard at once resign
His claim to favor from the sacred Nine?
For ever startled by the mingled howl
Of northern wolves, that still in darkness prowl;
A coward brood, which mangle as they prey,
By hellish instinct, all that cross their way;
Aged or young, the living or the dead,
No mercy find—these harpies must be fed.
Why do the injured unrelenting yield
The calm possession of their native field?
Why tamely thus before their fangs retreat,
Nor hunt the blood-bounds back to Arthur's Seat?]]

Health to immortal Jeffrey! †† once, in name,
England could boast a judge almost the same;
In soul so like, so merciful, yet just.
Some think that Satan has resign'd his trust, or both, once sellers of books they did not write, and now writers of books they do not sell, have published a pair of epics. "Alfred."—(poor Alfred! Pye has been at him too!)—"Alfred," and the "Fall of Cambria."

†† Here Lord B. notes in 1816:—"All right. I saw some letters of this fellow (Joseph Cottle) to an unfortunate poetess, whose productions, which the poor woman by no means thought vainly of, he attacked so roughly and bitterly, that I could hardly resist assailing him, even were it unjust, which it is not—for verily he is an ass."—B. 1816.—The same person has had the honor to be recorded in the Antijacobin, probably by Canning:—

"And Cottle, not he who that Alfred made famous,

But Joseph, of Bristol, the brother of Amos."

†† Mr. Maurice hath manufactured the component parts of a ponderous quarto, upon the beauties of "Richmond Hill," and the like:—it also takes in a charming view of Turnham Green, Hammer-smith, Brentford, Old and New, and the parts adjacent.—The Rev. Thomas Maurice also wrote "Westminster Abbey," and other poems, the "History of Ancient and Modern Hindostan," &c., and his own "Memoirs; comprehending Anecdotes of Literary Characters, during a period of thirty years"—a very amusing piece of autobiography. He died in 1824, at his apartments in the British Museum, where he had been for some years assistant keeper of MSS.

§§ Four Montgomery, though praised by every English Review, has been bitterly reviled by the Edinburgh. After all the bard of Sheffield is a man of considerable genius. His "Wanderer of Switzerland" is worth a thousand "Lyric Ballads," and at least fifty "degraded epics."

N Arthur's Seat, the hill which overhangs Edinburgh.

†† Mr. Jeffrey, who, after the first number or two, succeeded the Rev. Sydney Smith in the editorship of the Edinburgh Review, retired from his critical post some little time before he was appointed lord advocate for Scotland.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS

And given the spirit to the world again,
To sentence letters, as he sentenced men.
With hand less mighty, but with heart as black,
With voice as willing to decree the rack;
Bred in the courts betimes, though all that law
As yet hath taught him is to find a flaw;
Since well instructed in the patriot school
To rally at party, though a party tool,
Who knows, if chance his patrons should restore
Back to the sway they forfeited before,
His scribbling tolls some recompense may meet,
And raise this Daniel to the judgment-seat? *
Let Jeffreys' shade indulge the pious hope,
And greeting thus, present him with a rope:
"Heir to my virtues! man of equal mind!
Skill'd to condemn as to reduce mankind,
This cord receive, for thee reserved with care,
To wield in judgment, and at length to wear."

Health to great Jeffery! Heaven preserve his life
To flourish on the fertile shores of Fife,
And guard it sacred in its future wars.
Since authors sometimes seek the field of Mars!
Can none remember that eventful day,†
That ever glorious, almost fatal fray,
When Little's leaden pistol met his eye,
And Bow Street myrmidons stood laughing by?‡
Oh, day disastrous! on her firm-set rock,
Dunedin's castle felt a secret shock;
Dark roll'd the sympathetic waves of Forth,
Low groan'd the startled whirlwinds of the north;
Tweed ruffled half his waves to form a tear,
The other half pursued its calm career; §
Arthur's steep summit nodded to its base,
The surly Tolbooth scarcely kept her place.
The Tolbooth felt—for marble sometimes can,
On such occasions, feel as much as man—
The Tolbooth felt defrauded of his charms,
If Jeffery died, except within her arms,
If Jeffery died, except within her arms,
Nay last, not least, on that portentous morn,
The sixteenth story, where himself was born,
His patrimonial garret, fell to ground,
And pale Edina shudder'd at the sound:

* "Too ferocious—this is mere insanity."—B. 1816.

† "All this is bad, because personal."—B. 1816.

‡ In 1803, Messrs. Jeffery and Moore met at Chalk-Farm. The duel was prevented by the interference of the magistracy; and, on examination, the balls of the pistols were found to have evaporated. This incident gave occasion to much waggonery in the daily press.—The above note was struck out of the fifth edition, and the following, after being submitted to Mr. Moore, substituted in its place: "I am informed that Mr. Moore published at the time a disavowal of the statements in the newspapers, as far as regarded himself; and, in justice to him, I mention this circumstance. As I never heard of it before, I cannot state the particulars, and was only made acquainted with the fact very lately."—November 4, 1811.

§ The Tweed here behaved with proper decorum; it would have been highly reprehensible in the English half of the river to have shown the smallest symptom of apprehension.

¶ This display of sympathy on the part of the Tolbooth (the principal prison in Edinburgh), which truly seems to have been most affected on this occasion, is much to be commended. It was to be apprehended, that the many unhappy criminals executed in the front might have rendered the edifice more callous. She is said to be of the softer sex, because her deliquency of feeling on this day was truly feminine, though, like most feminine impulses, perhaps a little selfish.

¶ His lordship has been much abroad, is a member of the Athenian Society and reviewer of "Gall's Topography of Troy,"—George Hamilton Gordon, fourth earl of Aberdeen, K.T., F.R.S., and F.R.A. In 1808, his lordship published an "Inquiry into the Principles of Beauty in Grecian Architecture."

* Mr. Herbert is a translator of Icelandic and other poetry. One of the principal pieces is a "Song on the Recovery of Thor's Hammer;" the translation is a pleasant chant in the vulgar tongue, and endeth thus:—

Strew'd were the streets around with milk-white reams,
Flow'd all the Canongate with inky streams;
This of his candor seem'd the sable dew,
That of his valor show'd the bloodless hue;
And all with justice deem'd the two combined
The mingled emblems of his mighty mind.
But Caledonia's goddess hover'd o'er
The field, and saved him from the wrath of Moore;
From either pistol snatch'd the vengeful lead,
And straight restored it to her favorite's head;
That head, with greater than magnetic pow'r,
Caught it, as Danaë caught the golden show'r,
And, though the thickening dross will scarce refine,

Arguments its ore, and is itself a mine.

"My son," she cried, "ne'er thirst for gore again,
Resign the pistol and resume the pen;
O'er politics and poetry preside,

Boast of thy country, and Britannia's guide!
For long as Albion's heedless sons submit,
Or Scottish taste decides on English wit,
So long shall last thine unmolested reign,
Nor any dare to take thy name in vain.
Behold, a chosen band shall aid thy plan,
And own thee chieftain of the critic clan.
First in the cat-foot phalanx shall be seen
The travell'dthane, Athenian Aberdeen.¶
Herbert shall wield Thor's hammer, and sometimes,

In gratitude, thou 'lt praise his rugged rhymes.

Smug Sydney† too thy bitter page shall seek,
And classic Hallam,‡ much renown'd for Greek;
Scott may perchance his name and influence lend,
And paltry Pillans§ shall traduce his friend;
While gay Thalia's luckless votary, Lambe,||
Damn'd like the devil, devil-like will damn.
Known be thy name, unbounded be thy sway!
Thy Holland's banquets shall each toll repay;
While grateful Britain yields the praise she owes
To Holland's hirelings and to learning's foes.
Yet mark one caution ere thy next Review
Spread its light wings of saffron and of blue,

"Instead of money and rings, I wot,
The hammer's bruises were her lot,
Thus Odin's son his hammer got."

The Hon. William Herbert, brother to the Earl of Carnarvon.

He also published, in 1811, "Helga," a poem in seven cantos.
¶ The Rev. Sydney Smith, the reputed author of Peter Plymley's Letters. Sundry criticisms, and many other pieces published anonymously or pseudonymously, are generally ascribed to this eminently witty person, who has put forth nothing, it is believed, in his own name, except a volume of sermons.

‡ Mr. Hallam reviewed Payne Knight's "Taste," and was exceedingly severe on some Greek verses therein. It was not discovered that the lines were Pindar's till the press rendered it impossible to cancel the critique, which still stands an ever-living monument of Hallam's inequity. —Nods added to second edition. The said Hallam is incensed because he is falsely accused, seeing that he never dined at Holland House. If this be true, I am sorry—not for having said so, but on his account, as I understand his lordship's feasts are preferable to his compositions. Hallam, thus attacked, was the great author of "The Middle Ages," &c.

§ Pillans, a tutor at Eton.—Mr. Pillans became afterwards rector of the High School of Edinburgh, and finally Professor of Humanity in that University. There was not, it is believed, the slightest foundation for the charge in the text.

|| The Hon. George Lamb reviewed "Barnesford's Miscellanies," and is moreover author of a farce enacted with great applause at the priory, Beaumont; and damned with great expedition at the late Theatre, Covent Garden. It was entitled "Whistle for it."—Mr. Lamb was, in 1815, the successful candidate for the representation of Westminster, in opposition to Mr. Hobhouse; who, however, defeated him in the following year. He died in 1833.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Beware lest blundering Brougham* destroy the sale,
Turn beef to bannocks, cauliflowers to kale." Thus having said, the kilted goddess kias'd Her son, and vanish'd in a Scottish mist.†

Then prosper, Jeffrey! pertest of the train Whom Scotland pampers with her fiery grain! Whatever blessing waits a genuine Scot, In double portion swells thy glorious lot; For thee Edina culls her evening sweets, And showers their odors on thy candid sheets, Whose hue and fragrance to thy work adhere— This scents its pages, and that gilds its rear.‡ Lo! blushing Ithi, coy nymph, enamor'd grown, Forsakes the rest, and cleaves to thee alone And, too unjust to other Pictish men, Enjoys thy person, and inspires thy pen! Illustrious Holland! hard would be his lot, His hirelings mention'd, and himself forgot!§ Holland, with Henry Petty|| at his back, The whipper-in and huntsman of the pack. Blest be the banquets spread at Holland House,¶ Where Scotchmen feed, and critics may carouse! Long, long beneath that hospitable roof Shall Grub Street dine, while duns are kept aloof. See honest Hallam lay aside his fork, Resume his pen, review his lordship's work, And, grateful for the dainties on his plate, Declare his landlord can at least translate, Dunedin! view thy children with delight, They write for food—and feed because they write: And lest, when heated with the unusual grape, Some glowing thoughts should to the press escape,

And tinge with red the female reader's cheek,
My lady skims the cream of each critique;
Breathes o'er the page her purity of soul,
Reforms each error, and refines the whole.††

Now to the Drama turn—Oh, motley sight!
What precious scenes the wondering eyes invite!
Puns, and a prince within a barrel pen,‡‡
And Dibdin's nonsense yield complete content.
Though now, thank Heaven! the Esciomania's
o'er,

And full-grown actors are endured once more;
Yet what avail their vain attempts to please,
While British critics suffer scenes like these;
While Reynolds vents his "dammes!" "poohs!"
and "sounds!"§§

And commonplace and common sense confounds?
While Kenney's "World"—ah! where is Kenney's|| wit?

Tires the sad gallery, lulls the listless pit;
And Beaumont's pifer'd Caratch affords
A tragedy complete in all but words?¶¶
Who but must mourn, while these are all the rage,
The degradation of our vaunted stage!
Heavens! is all sense of shame and talent gone?
Have we no living bard of merit?—none!
Awake, George Colman! Cumberland,†† awake!
Ring the alarm-bell! let folly quake!
Oh, Sheridan! if aught can move thy pen,
Let Comedy assume her throne again;
Abjure the mummery of the German schools;
Leave new Pizarros to translating fools;
Give, as thy last memorial to the age,
One classic drama, and reform the stage.

* Mr. Brougham, in No. XXV. of the Edinburgh Review, throughout the article concerning Don Pedro de Cevallos, has displayed more politics than policy; many of the worthy bourgeois of Edinburgh being so incensed at the infamous principles it evinces, as to have withdrawn their subscriptions.—Here followed in the first edition,—"The name of this personage is pronounced Broom in the south, but the truly northern and musical pronunciation is BROUGHAM, in two syllables;" but for this Lord B. substituted in the second edition—"It seems that Mr. Brougham is not a Pict, as I supposed, but a Borderer, and his name is pronounced Broom, from Trent to Tay;—so be it." [Lord Brougham died May 8,

† I ought to apologise to the worthy deities for introducing a new goddess with short petitions to their notice: but, alas! what was to be done? I could not say Caledonia's genius, it being well known there is no such genius to be found from Clackmannan to Caithness; yet, without supernatural agency, how was Jeffrey to be saved? The national "kelpies" are too unpoetical, and the "brownies" and "gude neighbors" (spirits of a good disposition) refused to extricate him. A goddess, therefore, has been called for the purpose; and great ought to be the gratitude of Jeffrey, seeing it is the only communication he ever held, or is likely to hold, with any thing heavenly.

§ See the color of the back binding of the Edinburgh Review.

|| "Bad enough, and on mistaken grounds too."—R. 1814.

¶ Lord Henry Petty;—afterwards Marquis of Lansdowne.

¶ In 1813, Lord Byron dedicated the Bride of Abydos to Lord Holland; and we find in his Journal (Nov. 17) this passage:—"I have had a most kind letter from Lord Holland on the Bride of Abydos, which he likes, and so does Lady H. This is very good-natured in both, from whom I don't deserve any quarter. Yet I did think at the time, that my cause of enmity proceeded from Holland House, and am glad I was wrong, and wish I had not been in such a hurry with that confounded satire, of which I would suppress even the memory; but people, now they can't get it, make a fuss. I verily believe out of contradiction."

 Lord Holland has translated some specimens of Lope de Vega, inserted in his life of the author. Both are depreised by his disinterested guests.

 Certain it is, her ladyship is suspected of having displayed her matchless wit in the Edinburgh Review. However that may be, we know, from good authority, that the manuscripts are submitted to her personal—no doubt, for correction.

‡‡ In the melodrama of Tekeli, that heroic prince is clapt into a barrel on the stage; a new asylum for distressed heroes.—In the original MS. the note stands thus:—"In the melodrama of Tekeli, that heroic prince is clapt into a barrel on the stage, and Count Eyraud in the 'Fortress' hides himself in a green-house built expressly for the occasion. 'Tis a pity that Theodore Hook, who is really a man of talent, should confine his genius to such paltry productions as the 'Fortress,' 'Musio Mad,' etc. etc."—This extraordinary humorist, who was a mere boy at the date of Lord Byron's satire, afterwards distinguished himself by works more worthy of his abilities—nine volumes of highly popular novels, entitled "Sayings and Doings"—"Gilbert Gurney"—a world of political jeux d'esprit, etc. etc.

¶ All these are favorite expressions of Mr. Reynolds, and prominent in his comedies, living and defunct.—The reader is referred to Mr. Reynolds's Autobiography, published in 1828, for a full account of his voluminous writings for the stage.

§ Mr. Kenney has since written many successful dramas.

|| Mr. Thomas Sheridan, the new manager of Drury Lane theatre, stripped the tragedy of Bonduca of the dialogue, and exhibited the scenes as the spectacle of Caractacus. Was this worthy of his sire? or of himself?—Thomas Sheridan, who united much of the convivial wit of his parent to many amiable qualities, received, after the termination of his theatrical management, the appointment of colonial paymaster at the Cape of Good Hope, where he died in September, 1817, leaving a widow, whose novel of "Carwail" has obtained much approbation, and several children; among others, the Honorable Mrs. Norton, the accomplished authoress of "Rosalie" and other poems, "Lost and Saved," etc.

 Lord Byron entertained a high opinion of George Colman's convivial powers.—"If I had," he says, "to choose, and could not have both at a time, I should say, 'Let me begin the evening with Sheridan, and finish it with Colman.' Sheridan for dinner, and Colman for supper; Sheridan for claret or port, but Colman for every thing. Sheridan was a grenadier company of life-guards, but Colman a whole regiment of light infantry, to be sure, but still a regiment." Mr. Colman died in October, 1808.

†† Richard Cumberland, the well-known author of the "West Indian," the "Observer," and one of the most interesting of autobiographies, died in 1811.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Gods! o'er those boards shall Folly rear her head,
Where Garrick trod, and Siddons lives to tread?^a
On those shall Farce display Buffoonry's mask,
And Hook conceal his heroes in a cask?
Shall sapient managers new scenes produce
From Cherry, Skeffington, and Mother Goose,
While Shakspeare, Otway, Massinger, forgot,
On stalls must moulder, or in closets rot?
Lo! with what pomp the daily prints proclaim
The rival candidates for Attic fame!
In grim array though Lewis' spectres rise,
Still Skeffington and Goose divide the prize.†
And sure great Skeffington must claim our praise,
For skitless coats and skeletons of plays
Renown'd alike; whose genius ne'er confines
Her flight to garnish Greenwood's gay designs; ‡
Nor sleeps with "Sleeping Beauties," but awakes
In five facetious acts comes thundering on, §
While poor John Bull, bewilder'd with the scene,
Stares, wondering what the devil it can mean;
But as some hands applaud, a venal few!
Rather than sleep, why John applauds it too.

Such are we now. Ah! wherefore should we turn
To what our fathers were, unless to mourn?
Degenerate Britons! are ye dead to shame,
Or, kind to dullness, do you fear to blame?
Well may the nobles of our present race
Watch each distortion of a Naldi's face;
Well may they smile on Italy's buffoons,
And worship Catalan's pantaloons, ||
Since their own drama yields no fairer trace
Of wit than puns, of humor than grimace. ¶

Then let Ansonia, skill'd in every art
To soften manners, but corrupt the heart,
Pour her exotic follies o'er the town,
To sanction Vice, and hunt Decorum down:
Let wedded strumpets languish o'er Deshayes,
And bless the promise which his form displays;
While Gayton bounds before th' enraptured looks
Of hoary marquesses and stripling dukes:
Let high-born lechers eye the lively Præle
Twirl her light limbs, that spurn the needless veil;
Let Angiolini bare her breast of snow,
Wave the white arm, and point the pilant toe;
Collini trill her love-inspiring song,
Strain her fair neck, and charm the listening throng!
What not your scythes, suppressors of our vice!
Reforming saints! too delicately nice!
By whose decrees, our sinful souls to save,
No Sunday tankards foam, no barbers shave;
And beer undrawn, and beards unshorn, display
Your holy reverence for the Sabbath-day.

^a In all editions previous to the fifth, it was, "Kemble lives to tread." Lord Byron used to say, that, "of actors, Cooke was the most natural, Kemble the most supernatural. Kean the medium between the two; but that Mrs. Siddons was worth them all put together." Such effect, however, had Kean's acting on his mind, that once, on seeing him play Sir Giles Overreach, he was seized with a sort of convulsive fit. John Kemble died in 1833—his illustrious sister in 1835.

^b Didini's pantomime of Mother Goose had a run of nearly a hundred nights, and brought more than twenty thousand pounds to the treasury of Covent Garden theatre.

^c Mr. Greenwood is, we believe, some-painter to Drury Lane theatre—as such, Mr. Skeffington is much indebted to him.

^d Mr. (afterwards Sir Lumley) Skeffington is the illustrious author of the "Sleeping Beauty;" and some comedies, particularly "Maids and Bachelors;" Bacchusauri baculo magis quam lauro signi.

^e Naldi and Catalani require little notice; for the visage of the one and the miary of the other will enable us long to recollect these amusing vagabonds. Besides, we are still black and blue from the squeeze on the first night of the lady's appearance in Truancy.

^f The following twenty lines were struck off one night

Or hail at once the patron and the pile
Of vice and folly, Greville and Argyle!^g
Where yon proud palace, Fashion's hallow'd fane,
Spreads wide her portals for the motley train,
Behold the new Petronius †† of the day,
Our arbiter of pleasure and of play!
There the hired sunnuch, the Hesperian choir,
The melting lute, the soft lascivious lyre,
The song from Italy, the step from France,
The midnight orgy, and the mazy dance,
The smile of beauty, and the flush of wine,
For fops, fools, gamesters, knaves, and lords combine:

Each to his humor—Comus all allows;
Champagne, dice, music, or your neighbor's spouse.
Talk not to us, ye starving sons of trade!
Of piteous ruin, which ourselves have made;
In Plenty's sunshine Fortune's minions bask,
Nor think of poverty, except "en masque,"
When for the night some lately titled ass
Appears the beggar which his grandaïre was.
The curtain dropp'd, the gay burletta o'er,
The audience take their turn upon the floor;
Now round the floor the circling dow'gers sweep,
Now in loose waltz the thin-clad daughters leap;
The first in lengthen'd line majestic swim,
The last display the free unfetter'd limb!
Those for Hibernia's lusty sons repair
With art the charms which nature could not spare;

These after husbands wing their eager flight,
Nor leave much mystery for the nuptial night.

Oh! blest retreats of infamy and ease,
Where, all forgotten but the power to please,
Each maid may give a loose to genial thought,
Each swain may teach new systems, or be taught;
There the blithe youngster, just return'd from Spain,

Cuts the light pack, or calls the rattling main;
The jovial casker's set, and seven's the nick,
Or—done—a thousand on the coming trick!
If, mad with loss, existence 'gins to fire,
And all your hope or wish is to expire,
Here's Powell's pistol ready for your life,
And, kinder still, two Pagets for your wife; ‡‡
Fit consummation of an earthly race,
Begun in folly, ended in disgrace;
While none but menials, o'er the bed of death,
Wash thy red wounds, or watch thy wav'ring breath;

Traduced by liars, and forgot by all,
The mangled victim of a drunken brawl,
To live like Clodius, and like Falkland fall. §§

after Lord Byron's return from the opera, and sent the next morning to the printer, with a request to have them placed where they now appear.

^g To prevent any blunder, such as mistaking a street for a man, I beg leave to state, that it is the institution, and not the duke of that name, which is here alluded to. A gentleman, with whom I am slightly acquainted, lost in the Argyle Rooms several thousand pounds at bolognanno.

^h Petronius "arbiter elegantiarum" to Nero, "and a very pretty fellow in his day," as Mr. Congreve's "Old Bachelor" saith of Hannibal.

ⁱ The original reading was, "a Paget for your wife."

^j I knew the late Lord Falkland well. On Sunday night I beheld him presiding at his own table, in all the honest pride of hospitality, on Wednesday morning, at three o'clock, I saw stretched before me all that remained of courage, feeling, and a host of passions. He was a gallant and successful officer; his faults were the faults of a sailor (those of dissipation)—as such, Britons will forgive them. He died like a brave man in a better cause: for had he fallen in like manner

^k True. It was Billy Way who lost the money. I knew him, and was a subscriber to the Argyle at the time of the event.—R. 1816.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SOOTCH REVIEWERS.

Truth! rouse some genuine bard, and guide his hand

To drive this pestilence from out the land.
E'en I—least thinking of a thoughtless throng,
Just skill'd to know the right and choose the wrong,
Freed at that age when reason's shield is lost,
To fight my course through passion's countless host."

Whom every path of pleasure's flow'ry way
Has lured in turn, and all have led astray—
E'en I must raise my voice, e'en I must feel
Such scenes, such men, destroy the public weal:
Although some kind, censorious friend will say,
"What art thou better, meddling fool, than they?"
And every brother rake will smile to see
That miracle—a moralist in me.
No matter—when some bard in virtue strong,
Gifford perchance, shall raise the chastening song,
Then sleep my pen for ever! and my voice
Be only heard to hail him, and rejoice;
Rejoice, and yield my feeble praise, though I
May feel the lash that Virtue must apply.

As for the smaller fry, who swarm in shoals,
From silly Hafiz up to simple Bowles,
Why should we call them from their dark abode,
In broad Saint Giles's or in Tottenham road?
Or (since some men of fashion nobly dare
To scrawl in verse) from Bond Street or the Square?
If things of ton their harmless lays indite,
Most wisely don't 'd to shun the public sight,
What harm? In spite of every critic elf,
Sir T. may read his stanzas to himself;
Miles Andrews I still his strength in couplets try,
And live in prologues, though his dramas die.
Lords too are bards, such things at times befall,
And 't is some praise in peers to write at all.
Yet, did or taste or reason sway the times,
Ah! who would take their titles with their rhymes?
Roscommon! Sheffield! with your spirits fled,
No future laurels deck a noble head;
No muse will cheer, with renovating smile,
The paralytic puling of Carlisle.
The puny school-boy and his early lay
Men pardon, if his follies pass away;

on the deck of the frigate to which he was just appointed, his last moments would have been held up by his countrymen as an example to succeeding heroes.—Lord Falkland was killed in a duel by Mr. Powell, in 1800. It was not by words only that Lord Byron gave proof of sympathy on the melancholy occasion. Though his own difficulties pressed on him at the time, he contrived to administer relief to the widow and children of his friend.

* "Yes; and a precious chase they led me."—B. 1816.

† "Fool enough, certainly, then, and no wiser since."—B. 1816.

‡ What would be the sentiments of the Persian Anacreon, Hafiz, could he rise from his splendid sepulchre at Sheeras (where he reposes with Ferdousi and Sadi, the Oriental Homer and Catullus), and behold his name assumed by one Stott of Dromore, the most impudent and execrable of literary posers for the daily prints?

§ Miles Peter Andrews, many years M.P. for Bewdley, colonel of the Prince of Wales's Volunteers, proprietor of a gunpowder manufactory at Dartford, author of numerous prologues, epilogues, and farces, and one of the heroes of the Baviad. He died in 1816.

|| On being told that it was believed he alluded to Lord Carlisle's nervous disorder in this line, Lord Byron exclaimed,—"I thank heaven I did not know it; and would not, could not, if I had. I must naturally be the last person to be pointed on defects or maladies."

¶ The Earl of Carlisle has lately published an eighteen-penny pamphlet on the state of the stage, and offers his plan for building a new theatre. It is to be hoped his lordship will be permitted to bring forward any thing for the stage—except his own tragedies.

 "Doff that lion's hide,
And hang a calf-skin on those recreant limbs."

SHAK.: King John.

But who forgives the senior's ceaseless verse,
Whose hairs grow hoary as his rhymes grow worse?
What heterogeneous honors deck the peer!
Lord, rhymester, petit-maitre, and pamphleteer; †
So dull in youth, so drivelling in his age,
His scenes alone had damn'd our sinking stage;
But managers for once cried, "Hold, enough!"
Nor drugg'd their audience with the tragic stuff.
Yet at their judgment let his lordship laugh,
And case his volumes in congenial calf:
Yee! doff that covering, where morocco shines,
And hang a calf-skin on those recreant lines.††

With you, ye Druids! rich in native lead,
Who daily scribble for your daily bread;
With you I war not: Gifford's heavy hand
Has crush'd, without remorse, your numerous band.
On "all the talents" vent your venal spleen;
Want is your plea, let pity be your screen.
Let monodies on Fox regale your crew,
And Melville's Mantle ‡ if prove a blanket too!
One common Lethe waits each hapless bard,
And, peace be with you! 't is your best reward.
Such damning fame as Dunclade only give
Could bid your lines beyond a morning live;
But now at once your feebling labors close,
With names of greater note in blest repose.
Far be 't from me unkindly to upbraid
The lovely Rosa's prose in masquerade,
Whose strains, the faithful echoes of her mind,
Leave wondering comprehension far behind. §
Though Crueso's bards no more our journals fill,
Some stragglers skirrnish round the columns still;
Last of the howling host which once was Bell's,
Matilda snivels yet, and Hafiz yells;
And Merry's metaphors appear anew,
Chain'd to the signature of O. P. Q. ||

When some brisk youth, the tenant of a stall, ¶
Employs a pen less pointed than hisawl,
Leaves his mug shop, forsakes his store of shoes,
Saint Crispin quita, and cobbles for the muse,
Heavens! how the vulgar stare! how crowds applaud!
How ladies read, and literati laud! ***

Lord Carlisle's works, most resplendently bound, form a conspicuous ornament to his book-shelves:—

"The rest is all but leather and prunella."

†† "Wrong also—the provocation was not sufficient to justify the asseverity."—B. 1816.—Lord Byron greatly regretted the anagrams he had published against his noble relation, under the mistaken impression that Lord Carlisle had intemperately alighted him. In a letter to Mr. Rogers, written in 1816, he asks,—"Is there any chance or possibility of making it up with Lord Carlisle, as I feel disposed to do any thing reasonable or unreasonable to effect it." And in stanza ~~xxxiii.~~ third canto of Childe Harold, he feelingly adverts to the case of the Hon. Frederick Howard, Lord Carlisle's youngest son, one of those who fell gloriously at Waterloo.

‡ "Melville's Mantle," a parody on "Hijah's Mantle," a ~~poem.~~

§ This lovely little Jessica, the daughter of the noted Jew King, seems to be a follower of the Della Crueso school, and has published two volumes of very respectable absurdities in rhyme, as times go; besides sundry novels in the style of the first edition of the Monk.—"She once married the Morning Post—an exceeding good match; and is now dead—which is better."—B. 1816.

|| These are the signatures of various worthies who figure in the poetical departments of the newspapers.

¶ Joseph Blackett, the shoemaker. He died at Seaham, in 1810. His poems were afterwards collected by Pratt; and, oddly enough, his principal patroness was Miss Milbank, then a perfect stranger to Lord Byron.

 ("This was meant for poor Blackett, who was then patronized by A. J. B." (Lady Byron); "but that I did not know, or this would not have been written, at least I think not."—B. 1816.)

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

If chance some wicked wag should pass his jest,
 'T is sheer ill-nature—don't the world know best?
 Genius must guide when wits admire the rhyme,
 And Capel Loft* declares 'tis quite sublime.
 Hear, then, ye happy sons of needless trade!
 Swains! quit the plough, resign the useless spade!
 Lo! Burns† and Bloomfield, nay, a greater far,
 Gifford was born beneath an adverse star,
 Forsook the labors of a servile state,
 Stamm'd the rude storm, and triumph'd over fate:
 Then why no more? if Phœbus smiled on you,
 Bloomfield? why not on brother Nathan too?‡
 Him too the mania, not the muse, has seized;
 Not inspiration, but a mind diseased:
 And now no boor can seek his last abode,
 No common be enclosed without an ode.
 Oh! since increased refinement deigns to smile
 On Britain's sons, and bless our genial isle,
 Let poesy go forth, pervade the whole,
 Alike the rustic, and mechanic soul!
 Ye tuneful cobblers! still your notes prolong,
 Compose at once a slipper and a song;
 So shall the fair your handywork peruse,
 Your sonnets sure shall please—perhaps your shoes.
 May Moorland weavers (boast Pindaric skill,
 And tailors' lays be longer than their bill!
 While punctual beaux reward the grateful notes,
 And pay for poems—when they pay for coats.

To the famed throng now paid the tribute due,
 Neglected genius! let me turn to you.
 Come forth, oh, Campbell! give thy talents scope;
 Who dares aspire if thou must cease to hope?
 And thou, melodious Rogers! rise at last,
 Recall the pleasing memory of the past;
 Arise! let bliss remembrance still inspire,
 And—strike to wonted tones thy hallow'd lyre;
 Restore Apollo to his vacant throne,
 Assert thy country's honor and thine own.
 What! must deserted Poesy still weep
 Where her last hopes with pious Cowper sleep?
 Unless, perchance, from his cold bier she turns,

* Capel Loft, Esq., the Macenas of shoemakers, and preface-writer-general to distressed versemen; a kind of gratis accoucheur to those who wish to be delivered of rhyme, but do not know how to bring forth.—The poet Bloomfield owed his first celebrity to the notice of Capel Loft and Thomas Hill, Esquires, who read his "Farmer's Boy," in manuscript, recommended it to a publisher, and by their influence in society and literature, soon drew general attention to its merits. It is distressing to remember that, after all that had been done by the seal of a few friends, the public sympathy did not rest permanently on the amiable Bloomfield, who died in extreme poverty in 1834.

† Read Burns to-day. What would he have been if a patrician? We should have had more poliah—less force—just as much verse, but no immortality—a divorce and a duel or two, the which had he survived, as his potations must have been less spirituous, he might have lived as long as Sheridan, and outlived as much as poor Brinsley.—Byron Journal, 1818.

‡ See Nathaniel Bloomfield's ode, elegy, or whatever he or any one else chooses to call it, on the enclosure of "Honington Green."

 Vide "Recollections of a Weaver in the Moorlands of Staffordshire."

† It would be superfluous to recall to the mind of the reader the authors of "The Pleasures of Memory" and "The Pleasures of Hope," the most beautiful didactic poems in our language, if we except Pope's "Essay on Man;" but so many poetsasters have started up, that even the names of Campbell and Rogers are become strange.—Beneath this note Lord Byron scribbled, in 1816—

"Pretty Miss Jacqueline
 Had a nose aquiline,
 And would assert rude
 Things of Miss Gertrude;
 While Mr. Marmon
 Led a great army on,

To deck the turf that wraps her minstrel, Burns!
 No! though contempt hath mark'd the spurious brood.

The race who rhyme from Folly, or for food,
 Yet still some genuine sons 't is hers to boast,
 Who, least affecting, still affect the most:
 Feel as they write, and write but as they feel—
 Bear witness Gifford,†† Sotheby,‡‡ Macneil.§§

"Why slumbers Gifford?" once was asked in vain;|||

Why slumbers Gifford? let us ask again.
 Are there no follies for his pen to purge? ||
 Are there no fools whose backs demand the scourge?

Are there no sins for satire's bard to greet?
 Stalks not gigantic Vice in every street?
 Shall peers or princes tread pollution's path,
 And 'scape alike the law's and muse's wrath?
 Nor blaze with guilty glare through future time,
 Eternal beacons of consummate crime?
 Arouse thee, Gifford! be thy promise claim'd,
 Make bad men better, or at least ashamed.

Unhappy White! while life was in its spring,
 And thy young muse just waved her joyous wing,
 The spoiler swept that soaring lyre away,
 Which else had sounded an immortal lay.
 Oh! what a noble heart was here undone,
 When Science's self destroy'd her favorite son!
 Yes, she too much indulged thy fond pursuit,
 She sow'd the seeds, but death has reap'd the fruit.

'T was thine own genius gave the final blow,
 And help'd to plant the wound that laid thee low:

So the struck eagle, stretch'd upon the plain,
 No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
 View'd his own feather on the fatal dart,
 And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart;
 Keen were his pangs, but keener far to feel,
 He nursed the pinion which impell'd the steel;

Making Kehama look

Like a fierce Mameluke."

* "I have been reading," says Lord Byron, in 1818, "Mennory again, and Hope together, and retain all my preference of the former. His elegance is really wonderful—there is no such thing as a vulgar line in his book."

 Rogers has not fulfilled the promise of his first poems, but has still very great merit.—B. 1814.

†† Gifford, author of the David and Merviad, the first satires of the day, and translator of Juvénal.—The opinion of Mr. Gifford had always great weight with Lord Byron.

‡‡ Sotheby, translator of Wieland's Oberon and Virgil's Georgics, and author of "Saul," an epic poem.—Mr. Sotheby afterwards essentially raised his reputation by various original poems and a translation of the Iliad. He died in 1834.

§§ Macneil, whose poems are deservedly popular, particularly "Scotland's South" and the "Wass of War," of which ten thousand copies were sold in one month.—Eccart Macneil died in 1818.

|| Lord Byron here alludes to the masterly poem of "New Morality" (the joint production of Mr. Canning and Mr. Fraser) in the Anti-Jacobin, in which Gifford is apostrophised.

||| Mr. Gifford promised publicly that the David and Merviad should not be his last original works; let him remember, "Mox in reluctant dracoenes."—[Mr. Gifford became the editor of the Quarterly Review—which thenceforth occupied most of his time—a few months after the first appearance of this satire, in 1820.] See ante, portrait, Life of Byron.

 Henry Kirke White died at Cambridge, in October, 1808, in consequence of too much exertion in the pursuit of studies that would have matured a mind which disease and poverty could not impair, and which death itself destroyed rather than subdued. His poems abound in such beauties as must impress the reader with the liveliest regret that so short a period was allotted to talents which would have dignified even the more distant functions he was destined to assume.

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

While the same plumage that had warm'd his nest
Drank the last life-drop of his bleeding breast.*

There be, who say, in these enlighten'd days,
That splendid lies are all the poet's praise;
That strain'd invention, ever on the wing,
Alone impels the modern bard to sing:
'T is true, that all who rhyme—nay, all who write,
Shrink from that fatal word to genius—trite;
Yet Truth sometimes will lend her noblest fires,
And decorate the verse herself inspires:
This fact in Virtue's name let Crabbe † attest;
Though nature's sternest painter, yet the best. ‡

And here let Shée § and Genius find a place,
Whose pen and pencil yield an equal grace;
To guide whose hand the sister arts combine,
And trace the poet's or the painter's line;
Whose magic touch can bid the canvas glow,
Or pour the easy rhyme's harmonious flow;
While honors, doubly merited, attend
The poet's rival, but the painter's friend.

Blest is the man who dares approach the bower
Where dwell the muses at their natal hour;
Whose steps have press'd, whose eye has mark'd afar,

The clime that nursed the sons of song and war,
The scenes which Glory still must hover o'er,
Her place of birth, her own Achaian shore.
But doubly blest is he whose heart expands
With hallow'd feelings for those classic lands;
Who rends the veil of ages long gone by,
And views their remnants with a poet's eye!
Wright! ‖ 'twas thy happy lot at once to view
Those shores of glory, and to sing them too;
And sure no common muse inspired thy pen
To hail the land of gods and godlike men.

And you, associate bards! ¶ who snatch'd to light
Those gems too long withheld from modern sight;
Whose mingling taste combined to cull the wreath
Where Attic flowers Aonian odors breathe,
And all their renovated fragrance flung
To grace the beauties of your native tongue;

* Mr. Southey's delightful Life of Kirke White is in every one's hands.

† "I consider Crabbe and Coleridge as the first of these times, in point of power and genius."—B. 1818.

‡ This eminent poet and excellent man died at his rectory of Trowbridge, in February, 1822, aged seventy-eight. With the exception of the late Lord Stowell, he was the last surviving celebrated man mentioned by Boswell in connection with Johnson, who revised his poem of the "Villager."

§ Mr. Shée, author of "Rhymes on Art" and "Elements of Art"—Afterwards Sir Martin Shée, and president of the Royal Academy.

|| Walter Bodwell Wright, late consul-general for the Seven Islands, is author of a very beautiful poem, just published: it is entitled "Horns Ionica," and is descriptive of the isles and the adjacent coast of Greece.—To the third edition, which came out in 1814, was added an excellent translation of the "Oreste," of Alferi. After his return to England, Mr. Wright was chosen recorder of Bury St. Edmunds.

¶ The translators of the Anthology, Bland and Merivale, have since published separate poems, which evince genius that only requires opportunity to attain eminence.—The late Rev. Robert Bland published, in conjunction with Mr. Merivale, "Collections from the Greek Anthology." He also wrote "Edwy and Elgiva," the "Four Slaves of Cythera," etc. In 1814, Mr. Merivale published "Orlando in Roncesvalles;" and in the following year, "An Ode on the Delivery of Europe." He became a commissioner of the Bankruptcy Court.

 The neglect of the "Botanic Garden" is some proof of returning taste. The scenery is its sole recommendation.

†† Messrs. Lamb and Lloyd, the most ignoble followers of Southey and Co.—In 1788, Charles Lamb and Charles Lloyd

Now let those minds, that nobly could transform
The glorious spirit of the Grecian muse,
Though soft the echo, scorn a borrow'd tone:
Resign Achaia's lyre, and strike your own.

Let these, or such as these, with just applause,
Restore the muse's violated laws;
But not in flimsy Darwin's pompous chime,
That mighty master of unmeaning rhyme,
Whose gilded cymbals, more adorn'd than clear,
The eye delighted, but fatigued the ear;
In show the simple lyre could once surpass,
But now, worn down, appear in native brass;
While all his train of hovering sylphs around
Evaporate in similes and sound:
Him let them shun, with him let thine die:
False glare attracts, but more offends the eye.

Yet let them not to vulgar Wordsworth stoop,
The meanest object of the lowly group,
Whose verse, of all but childish prattle void,
Seems blessed harmony to Lamb and Lloyd: ‡
Let them—but bold, my muse, nor dare to teach
A strain far, far beyond thy humble reach:
The native genius with their being given
Will point the path, and peel their notes to heaven.

And thou, too, Scott! †† resign to minstrels rude
The wilder allegan of a border feud:
Let others spin their measure lines for hire;
Enough for genius, if itself inspire!
Let Southey sing, although his teeming muse,
Prolific every spring, be too profuse;
Let simple Wordsworth ‡‡ chime his childish verse,
And brother Coleridge lull the babe at nurse;
Let spectre-mongering Lewis aim, at most,
To rouse the galleries, or to raise a ghost;
Let Moore still sigh; let Strangford steal from Moore,

And swear that Camoëns sang such notes of yore;
Let Hayley hobble on, Montgomery rave,
And godly Grahame chant a stupid stave;
Let sonneteering Bowles his strains refine,
And whine and whimper to the fourteenth line;
Let Stott, Carlisle, ‖ Matilda, and the rest
Of Grub Street, and of Grosvener Place the best, published in conjunction a volume entitled "Poems in Blank Verse." Mr. Lamb was also the author of "John Woodville," "Tales from Shakespeare," the "Memories of Elia," etc. He died in 1835. Mr. Lloyd has since published "Edward Oliver," a novel, "Nugae Canonicae," and a translation of Alferi's tragedies.

‡ By the bye, I hope that in Mr. Scott's next poem his hero or heroine will be less addicted to "grammars," and more to grammar, than the Lady of the Lay and her brave, William of Deloraine.

†† "Unjust."—B. 1816.

‡‡ It may be asked why I have censured the Earl of Carlisle, my guardian and relative, to whom I dedicated a volume of puerile poems a few years ago. The guardianship was nominal, at least as far as I have been able to discover; the relationship I cannot help, and am very sorry for it; but, as his lordship seemed to forget it on a very essential occasion to me, I shall not burden my memory with the recollection. I do not think that personal differences sanction the unjust condemnation of a brother scribbler; but I see no reason why they should act as a preventive, when the author, noble or ignoble, has, for a series of years, beguiled a "discerning public" (as the advertisements have it) with diverse reams of most orthodox, imperial nonsense. Besides, I do not stop aside to vituperate the earl: no—his works come fairly in review with those of other patriotic literati. If, before I escaped from my teens, I said anything in favor of his lordship's paper books, it was in the way of dutiful dedication, and more from the advice of others than my own judgment, and I seize the first opportunity of pronouncing my sincere recantation. I have heard that some persons conceive me to be under obligations to Lord Carlisle; if so, I shall be most particularly happy to learn what they are, and when con-

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

crawl on, till death release us from the strain,
 r Common Sense assert her rights again.
 ut thou, with powers that mock the aid of praise, wouldst leave to humbler bards ignoble lays:
 hy country's voice, the voice of all the nine,
 emand a hallow'd harp—that harp is thine.
 ay! will not Caledonia's annals yield
 he glorious record of some nobler clan,
 Than the wild foray of a plundering clan,
 Those proudest deeds disgrace the name of man?
 r Marmion's acts of darkness, after food
 'or Sherwood's outlaw tales of Robin Hood?
 cotland! still proudly claim thy native bard,
 and be thy praise his first, his best reward!
 [et not with thee alone his name should live, but own the vast renown a world can give:
 be known, perchance, when Albion is no more,
 And tell the tale of what she was before;
 To future times her faded fame recall,
 And save her glory, though his country fall.

Yet what avails the sanguine poet's hope,
 To conquer ages, and with time to cope?
 New eras spread their wings, new nations rise,
 And other victors fill the applauding skies;
 A few brief generations fleet along,
 Whose sons forget the poet and his song: [claim
 E'en now, what once-loved minstrels scarce may
 The transient mention of a dubious name!
 When fame's loud trump hath blown its noblest blast,
 Though long the sound, the echo sleeps at last;
 And glory, like the phoenix * 'midst her fires,
 Exhales her odors, blazes, and expires.

Shall hoary Granta call her sable sons,
 Expert in science, more expert at puns?
 Shall these approach the muse? ah, no! she flies,
 Even from the tempting ore of Seaton's prize;
 Though printers condescend the press to soil
 With rhyme by Hoare,† and epic blank by Hoyle:‡
 Not him whose page, if still upheld by whist,
 Requires no sacred theme to bid us list.§
 Yel' who in Granta's honors would surpass,
 Must mount her Pegasus, a full-grown ass;
 A foal well worthy of her ancient dam,
 Whose Helicon is duller than her Cam.

There Clarke, still striving piteously "to please," Forgetting dogs' rel leads not to degrees, fered, that they may be duly appreciated and publicly acknowledged. What I have humbly advanced as an opinion on his printed things, I am prepared to support, if necessary, by quotations from elegies, eulogies, odes, epodes, and certain facetious and dainty tragedies bearing his name and mark—

* What can ennoble knaves, or fools, or cowards?

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards."

So says Pope. Amen!—"Much too savage, whatever the foundation might be."—B. 1814.

† "The devil take that phoenix! How came it there?"—
 B. 1816.

‡ The Rev. Charles James Hoare published, in 1808, the "Shipwreck of St. Paul," a Seatonian prize poem.

§ The Rev. Charles Hoyle, author of "Æneidus," an epic in thirteen books, and several other Seatonian prize poems.

¶ The "Games of Hoyle," well known to the votaries of whist, chess, etc., are not to be superseded by the variegates of his poetical namesake, whose poems comprised, as expressly stated in the advertisement, all the "plagues of Egypt."

† "Right enough; this was well deserved, and well laid on."—B. 1818.

¶ This person, who has lately betrayed the most rabid symptoms of confirmed authorship, is writer of a poem denominated the "Art of Fleecing," as Howe's non lucendo, containing little pleasantry and less poetry. He also acts as a monthly stipendiary and collector of columns for the "Satirist." If this unfortunate young man would exchange the

A would-be satirist, a hired buffoon,
 A monthly scribbler of some low lampoon, ||
 Condemn'd to drudge, the meanest of the mean,
 And furnish falsehoods for a magazine,
 Devotes to scandal his congenial mind;
 Himself a living libel on mankind. ||

Oh! dark asylum of a Vandal race! **
 At once the boast of learning, and disgrace!
 So lost to Phœbus, that nor Hodgson's †† verse
 Can make thee better, nor poor Hewson's ‡‡ worse. §§
 But where fair Isis rolls her purer wave,
 The partial muse delighted loves to lave;
 On her green banks a greener wreath she wove,
 To crown the bards that haunt her classic grove;
 Where Richards wakes a genuine poet's fires,
 And modern Britons glory in their sires. |||

For me, who, thus unask'd, have dared to tell
 My country what her sons should know too well,
 Zeal for her honor bade me here engage
 The host of idiots that infest her age;
 No less applause her honor'd name shall lose,
 As first in freedom, dearest to the muse.
 Oh! would thy bards but emulate thy fame,
 And rise more worthy, Albion, of thy name!
 What Athens was in science, Rome in power,
 What Tyre appear'd in her meridian hour,
 'T is thine at once, fair Albion! to have been—
 Earth's chief dictatress, ocean's lovely queen:
 But Rome decay'd, and Athens strew'd the plain,
 And Tyre's proud piers lie shatter'd in the main;
 Like these, thy strength may sink, in ruin hurl'd,
 And Britain fall, the bulwark of the world.
 But let me cease, and dread Cassandra's fate,
 With warning ever scold'd at, till too late;
 To themes less lofty still my lay confine,
 And urge thy bards to gain a name like thine. ¶¶

Then, hapless Britain! be thy rulers blest,
 The senate's oracles, the people's jest!
 Still hear thy rhetoric orators dispense
 The flowers of rhetoric, though not of sense,
 While Canning's colleagues hate him for his wit,
 And old dame Portland  fills the place of Pitt.

Yet once again, adieu! ere this the sail
 That wafts me hence is shivering in the gale;
 And Afric's coast and Calpe's adverse height,
 And Stamboul's minarets must greet my sight:

magazines for the mathematic, and endeavor to take a decent degree in his university. It might eventually prove more serviceable than his present salary.—(Mr. Hewson Clarke was also the author of "The Sauterter" and a "History of the Campaign in Russia.")

 Into Cambridgeshire the emperor Probus transported a considerable body of Vandals.—(Gibbon's Decline and Fall, vol. ii. p. 55. There is no reason to doubt the truth of this assertion; the breed is still in high perfection.

†† This gentleman's name requires no praise: the man who in translation displays unquestionable genius may be well expected to excel in original composition, of which it is to be hoped we shall soon see a splendid specimen.—Besides a translation of Juvenal, Mr. Hodgson published "Lady Jane Grey," "Sir Edgar," and "The Friends," a poem in four books. He also translated, in conjunction with Dr. Butler, Lucien Bonaparte's unreadable epic of "Charlemagne."

‡‡ Hewson Clarke, eq., as it is written.

§§ Originally—

"So sunk in dullness, and so lost in shame,

That Smythe and Hodgson scarce redeem thy name."

|| The "Aboriginal Britons," an excellent poem by Richards.—The Rev. George Richards, D.D., who also sent from the press "Songs of the Aboriginal Bards of Britain," "Modern France," two volumes of Miscellaneous Poems, and Hampton lectures "On the Divine Origin of Prophecy."

¶¶ With this verse the satire originally ended.

 A friend of mine being asked why his Grace of Portland

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Thence shall I stray through beauty's native clime,*
Where Kaft[†] is clad in rocks, and crown'd with snows sublime.

But should I back return, no tempting press;
Shall drag my journal from the desk's recess:
Let corcombs, printing as they come from far,
Snatch his own wreath of ridicule from Carr; §
Let Aberdeen and Elgin || still pursue
The shade of fame through regions of virtue;
Waste useless thousands on their Phidian freaks,
Misshapen monuments and maim'd antiques;
And make their grand saloons a general mart
For all the mutilated blocks of art.
Of Dardan tours let diletanti tell,
I leave topography to rapid § Gell; **
And, quite content, no more shall interpose
To stun the public ear—at least with prose.

Thus far I've held my undisturb'd career,
Prepared for rancor, steel'd 'gainst selfish fear:
This thing of rhyme I ne'er disdain'd to own—
Though not obtrusive, yet not quite unknown:
My voice was heard again, though not so loud,
My page, though nameless, never disavow'd;
And now at once I tear the veil away:—
Cheer on the pack! the quarry stands at bay, was likened to an old woman, replied, "he supposed it was because he was past bearing." His grace is now gathered to his grandmother, where he sleeps as sound as ever; but even his sleep was better than his colleagues' waking. 1811.

* Georgia.

† Mount Caucasus.

§ These four lines originally stood,—

"But should I back return, no letter'd sage
Shall drag my commonplace book on the stage;
Let vain Valencia rival luckless Carr,
And equal him whose work he sought to mar."

§ In a letter written from Gibraltar to his friend Hodgson, Lord Byron says,—"I have seen Sir John Carr at Seville and Cadix, and, like Swift's barber, have been down on my knees to beg he would not put me into black and white."

|| Lord Elgin would vainly persuade us that all the figures, with and without noses, in his stone-shop, are the work of Phidias! "Credat Judæus!"

Unscared by all the din of Melbourne house,
By Lambe's resentment, or by Holland's spouse,
By Jeffrey's harmless pistol, Hallam's rage,
Edina's brawny sons and brimstone page,
Our men in buckram shall have blows enough,
And feel they too are "penetrable stuff." ¶
And though I hope not hence unscathed to go,
Who conquers me shall find a stubborn foe.
The time hath been, when no harsh sound would fall
From lips that now may seem imbued with gall;
Nor fools nor follies tempt me to despise
The meanest thing that crawl'd beneath my eyes:
But now, so calms grown, so changed since youth,
I've learn'd to think, and sternly speak the truth;
Learn'd to deride the critic's starchy decree,
And break him on the wheel he meant for me;
To spurn the rod a scribbler bide me kiss,
Nor care if courts and crowds applaud or hiss:
Nay more, though all my rival rhymesters frown,
I too can hunt a poetaster down;
And, arm'd in proof, the gauntlet cast at once
To Scotch marauder, and to southern dunce.
Thus much I've dared: if my incoindite lay
Hath wrong'd these righteous times, let others say:
This, let the world, which knows not how to spare,
Yet rarely blames unjustly, now declare. ¶¶

¶ The original epithet was "classic." Lord Byron altered it in the fifth edition, and added this note:—"Rapid, indeed! He topographical and typographical King Priam's dominions in three days! I called him 'classic' before I saw the Troad, but since have learned better than to task to his name what don't belong to it."

¶ Mr. Gell's Topography of Troy and Ithaca cannot fail to ensure the approbation of every man possessed of classical taste, as well for the information Mr. Gell conveys to the mind of the reader, as for the ability and research the respective works display.—"Since seeing the plain of Troy, my opinions are somewhat changed as to the above note. Gell's survey was hasty and superficial."—R. 1816.

¶¶ "The greater part of this satire I must sincerely wish had never been written,—not only on account of the injudicious-ness of the criticism, and some of the personal part of it—but the tone and temper are such as I cannot approve."—BYRON.
July 14, 1816. Diodati, Geneva.

POSTSCRIPT TO THE SECOND EDITION.

I HAVE been informed, since the present edition went to the press, that my trusty and well-beloved cousin, the Edinburgh Reviewer, are preparing a most vehement critique on my poor, gentle, unresisting Muse, whom they have already so bedevilled with their ungodly ribaldry:

"Tactless satire condemns him!"

I suppose I must say of Jeffrey as Sir Andrew Agnew saith, "An I had known he was so cunning of fence, I had seen him damned ere I had fought him." What a pity it is that I shall be beyond the Bosphorus before the next number has passed the Tweed! But I yet hope to light my pipe with it in Persia.

My northern friends have accused me, with justice, of personality towards their great literary anthropophagus, Jeffrey; but what else was to be done with him and his dirty pack, who feed by "lying and slandering," and make their thirst by "evil speaking"? I have adduced facts already well known, and of Jeffrey's mind I have stated my free opinion, nor has he thence sustained any injury—what savage was ever soiled by being pelted with mud? It may be said that I quit England because I have censured there "persons of honor and wit about town;" but I am coming back again, and their vengeance will keep hot till my return. Those who know me can testify that my motives for leaving England are very different from fears, literary or personal; those who do not, may one day be convinced. Since the publication of this thing, my name has not been concealed; I have been mostly in London, ready to answer for my transgressions, and in daily expectation of sundry articles; but, alas! "the age of criticism is over," or, in the vulgar tongue, there is no spirit nowadays.

There is a youth yeelpet Hewson Clarke (subaudi caput), a skur of Emanuel College, and, I believe, a denizen of Berwick-upon-Tweed, whom I have introduced in these pages to much bettered company than he has been accustomed to meet; he is, notwithstanding, a very bad dog, and for no reason that I can discover, except a personal quarrel with a bear, kept by me at Cambridge to sit for a fellowship, and whom the jealousy of his Trinity contemporaries prevented from success, has been abusing me, and, what is worse, the defenseless innocent above mentioned, in the "Satirist," for one year and some months. I am utterly unconscious of having given him any provocation; indeed, I am guiltless of having heard his name till coupled with the "Satirist." He has therefore no reason to complain, and I dare say that like Sir Fretful Plagiary, he is rather pleased than otherwise.
I have now mentioned all who have done me the honor to notice me and mine, that is, my bear and my book, except the editor of the "Satirist," who, it seems, is a gentleman—God wot! I wish he could impart a little of his gentility to his subordinate scribblers. I hear that Mr. Jennings is about to take up the cudgels for his Masconia, Lord Carmichael.
I hope not; he was one of the few, who, in the very short intercourse I had with him, treated me with kindness more a boy; and whatever he may say or do, "pour in, I will measure." I have nothing further to add, save a general note of thanksgiving to readers, purchasers, and publishers; and, in the words of Scott, I wish

"To all and each a fair good-night,
And rosy dreams and slumbers light."

HINTS FROM HORACE:

BEING AN ALLUSION IN ENGLISH VERSE TO THE EPISTLE "AD PISONEM, DE ARTE POETICA," AND INTENDED AS A SEQUEL TO "ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS."*

—Ergo finger vite oris, scutum
Reddere quæ ferum valet, excute ipse secundi."

HOPE, Dr. Act. Poet.

"Rhymes are difficult things—they are stubborn things, sir."
FIELDING'S Amelia.

ATHENS. Capuchin Convent, March 12, 1811.

Who would not laugh, if Lawrence, hired to grace
His costly canvases with each flatter'd face,
Abused his art, till Nature, with a blush,
Saw cits grow centaurs underneath his brush?
Or, should some limner join, for show or sale,
A maid of honor to a mermaid's tail?
Or low Dubost—as once the world has seen—
Degrade God's creatures in his graphic spleen?
Not all that forced politeness, which defends
Fools in their faults, could gag his grinning friends.†
Believe me, Mœchus,‡ like that picture seems
The book which, sillier than a sick man's dreams,
Displays a crowd of figures incomplete,
Poetic nightmares, without head or feet.‡

Poets and painters, as all artists know,
May shoot a little with a lengthen'd bow;
We claim this mutual mercy for our task;
And grant in turn the pardon which we ask;
But make not monsters spring from gentle dams—
Birds breed not vipers, tigers nurse not lambs.

A labor'd, long exordium, sometimes tends (Like patriot speeches) but to paltry ends;
And nonsense in a lofty note goes down
As pertness passes with a legal gown:
Thus many a bard describes in pompous strain
The clear brook babbling through the goodly plain:
The groves of Granta, and her Gothic halls, King's Coll., Cam's stream, stain'd windows, and old walls:

* "Hints from Horace" was first published in 1861, seven years after the poet's death, he feeling during life that its publication would be a mere continuation of his bitterness as manifested in "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers." Authors are apt, it is said, to estimate their performances more according to the trouble they have cost themselves, than the pleasure they afford to the public; and it is only in this way that we can pretend to account for the extraordinary value which Lord Byron attached, even many long years after they were written, to these "Hints from Horace." The bustiness of translating Horace has hitherto been a hopeless one; and notwithstanding the brilliant cleverness of some passages, in both Pope's and Swift's imitations of him, there had been, on the whole, very little to encourage any one to meddle seriously even with that less difficult department.

† In an English newspaper, which finds its way abroad wherever there are Englishmen, I read an account of this dirty dabber's caricature of Mr. H— as a "beast" and the consequent action, &c. The circumstance is, probably, too well known to require further comment.—The gentleman here alluded to was Thomas Hope, Esq., the author of "Anastasis," and one of the most magnificent patrons of art this

Or, in adventurous numbers, neatly aims
To paint a rainbow, or—the river Thames.‡

You sketch a tree, and so perhaps may shine—
But daub a shipwreck like an alehouse sign;
You plan a vase—it dwindles to a pot;
Then glide down Grub Street—fasting and forgot;
Laugh'd into Lethe by some quaint Review,
Whose wit is never troublesome till—true.

In fine, to whatsoever you aspire,
Let it at least be simple and entire.

The greater portion of the rhyming tribe
(Give ear, my friend, for thou hast been a scribe)
Are led astray by some peculiar lure.
I labor to be brief—become obscure;
One falls while following elegance too fast;
Another soars, inflated with bombast;
Too low a third crawls on, afraid to fly,
He spins his subject to satiety;
Aburdly varying, he at last engraves
Fish in the woods, and boars beneath the waves!

Unless your care's exact, your judgment nice,
The flight from folly leads but into vice;
None are complete, all wanting in some part,
Like certain tailors, limited in art.
For gallygaskins Slowhears is your man;
But coats must claim another artisan.†† country ever possessed. Having, somehow, offended an unprincipled French painter, by name Dubost, that adventurer revenged himself by a picture called "Beauty and the Beast," in which Mr. Hope and his lady were represented according to the well-known fairy story. The picture had too much malice not to succeed; and to the disgrace of John Bull, the exhibition of it is said to have fetched thirty pounds in a day. A brother of Mrs. Hope thrust his sword through the canvases; and Mr. Dubost had the consolation to get five pounds damages. The affair made much noise at the time; though Mr. Hope had not then placed himself on that seat of literary eminence, which he afterwards attained. Probably, indeed, no man's reputation in the world was ever so suddenly and completely altered, as his was by the appearance of his magnificent romance. He died in 1833.

‡ Mœchus.—In the original MS., "Hobhouse."

§ ("The opening of the poem is, with reference to the original, ingenious."—MOORE.)

||—"all artists."—Originally, "we scribblers."

¶ "Where pure description held the place of sense."—POPE.

 "This is pointed, and felicitously expressed."—MOORE.

†† Mere common mortals were commonly content with one

HINTS FROM HORACE

Now this to me, I own, seems much the same
As Vulcan's feet to bear Apollo's frame;
Or, with a fair complexion, to expose
Black eyes, black ringlets, but—a bottle nose!

Dear authors! suit your topics to your strength,
And ponder well your subject, and its length;
Nor lift your load, before you're quite aware
What weight your shoulders will, or will not, bear.
But lucid Order, and Wit's siren voice,
Await the poet, skillful in his choice;
With native eloquence be sure along,
Grace in his thoughts, and music in his song.

Let judgment teach him wisely to combine
With future parts the now omitted line:
This shall the author choose, or that reject,
Precise in style, and cautious to select;
Nor slight applause will candid pens afford
To him who furnishes a wanting word.
Then fear not, if 'tis needful, to produce
Some term unknown, or obsolete in use
(As Pitt* has furnish'd us a word or two,
Which lexicographers declined to do);
So you indeed, with care—but be content
To take this license rarely—may invent.
New words find credit in these latter days
If neatly grafted on a Gallic phrase.

What Chaucer, Spenser did, we scarce refuse
To Dryden's or to Pope's master muse.
If you can add a little, say why not,
As well as William Pitt, and Walter Scott?
Since they, by force of rhyme and force of lungs,
Enrich'd our island's ill-united tongues;
'Tis then—and shall be—lawful to present
Reform in writing, as in parliament.

As forests shed their foliage by degrees,
So fade expressions which in season please;
And we and ours, alas! are due to fate,
And works and words but dwindle to a date.
Though as a monarch nods, and commerce calls,
Impetuous rivers stagnate in canals;
Though swamps subdued, and marshes drain'd, sustain

The heavy ploughshare and the yellow grain,
And rising ports along the busy shore
Protect the vessel from old Ocean's roar,
All, all must perish; but, surviving last,
The love of letters half preserves the past.
True, some decay, yet not a few revive;†
Though those shall sink, which now appear to thrive,
As custom arbitrates, whose shifting sway
Our life and language must alike obey.

The immortal were which gods and angels wage,
Are they not shown in Milton's sacred page?
His strain will teach what numbers best belong
To themes celestial told in epic song.

The slow, and stanza will correctly paint
The lover's anguish, or the friend's complaint.
But which deserves the laurel—rhyme or blank?
Which holds on Helicon the higher rank?

tallor and with one bill, but the more particular gentlemen found it impossible to confide their lower garments to the makers of their body clothes. I speak of the beginning of 1800: what reform may have since taken place, I neither know, nor desire to know.

* Mr. Pitt was liberal in his additions to our parliamentary tongue; as may be seen in many publications, particularly the Edinburgh Review.

† Old ballads, old plays, and old women's stories are at present in as much request as old wine or new speeches. In fact, this is the millennium of black letter: thanks to our Hebers, Webers, and Scotts!—[There was considerable malice in thus putting Weber, a poor German back, a mere

Let squabbling critics by themselves dispute
This point, as puzzling as a Chaucery note.

Satiric rhyme first sprung from Milton's pen,
You doubt—see Dryden, Pope, Beattie, and Dean.

Blank verse is now, with one consent, assigned
To Tragedy, and rarely quits her side.
Though mad Almanzor rhymed in Dryden's time,
No sing-song hero rants in modern plays;
While modest Comedy her verse surrenders
For jest and pun, in very middling measures.
Not that our Bens or Beaumonts show the least
Or lose one point, because they wrote in verse.
But so Thalia pleases to appear,
Poor virgin! damn'd some twenty times a year!

Whatever the scene, let this advice never waver:
Adapt your language to your hero's station.
At times Meipomene forgets to grieve,
And brisk Thalia takes a serious tone;
Nor unregarded will the poet pass by high.
Where angry Towryl lifts his voice on high.
Again, our Shakespeare limits verse to kings,
When common prose will serve for common things.
And lively Hal resigns heroic tra,
To "hollowing Hotspur"† and the accepted ode.

'Tis not enough, ye bards, with all your skill,
To polish poems;—they must touch the heart.
Where'er the scene be laid, whatever the power,
Still let it bear the hearer's soul along;
Command your audience or to smile or weep,
Whichever may please you—anything but sleep.
The poet claims our tears; but, by his leave,
Before I shed them, let me see him grieve.

If banish'd Romeo feign'd nor sigh nor tear,
Lull'd by his languor, I should sleep or weep.
Sad words, no doubt, become a serious task,
And men look angry in the proper place.
At double meanings folks seem wondrous wise,
And sentiment prescribes a pensive eye;
For nature form'd at first the inward man,
And actors copy nature—when they can.
She bids the beating heart with rapture bound,
Raised to the stars, or levell'd with the ground;
And for expression's aid, 'tis said, or song,
She gave our mind's interpreter—the tongue.
Who, worn with use, of late would fain be dumb,
(At least in theatres) with common sense;
O'erwhelm with sound the boxes, galleries, and
And raise a laugh with anything—but wit.

To skillful writers it will much import,
Whence spring their scenes, from common or court;

Whether they seek applause by smile or tear,
To draw a "Lying Valet," or a "Lear,"
A sage, or rakish youngster wild from school,
A wandering "Peregrine," or plain "John Bull,"
All persons please when nature's voice is true,
Scottish or Irish, born in Witte or Wode.

anecdotes of Sir Walter Scott, between the names.]

‡ "Mac Flecknoe," the "Dissolud," and an unpoetical ballad. Whatever each other writers originated in personal feelings, and angry rivalry; and though the ability of these writers, the poetical, their polemical detests from the character of the writers.

§ With all the vulgar applause and critical success, they have Aristotle on their side; who, as critics, and gives them consensu by a golden rule.

¶ In Vanbrugh's comedy of the "Provoked Wife." And in his ear I'll holla Macbride!

HINTS FROM HORACE.

Or follow common fame, or forge a plot;
Who cares if mimic heroes lived or not?
The precept serves to regulate the scene:—
Make it appear as if it might have been.

If some Drawcanair* you aspire to draw,
Present him raving, and above all law:
If female furies in your scheme are plann'd,
Isabel's fierce dame is ready to your hand;
For tears and treachery, for good and evil,
Constance, King Richard, Hamlet, and the Devil!
But if a new design you dare essay,
And freely wander from the beaten way,
True to your characters, till all be past,
Reserve consistency from first to last.

'T is hard to venture where our betters fall,
To lend fresh interest to a twice-told tale;
And yet, perchance, 't is wiser to prefer
A hackney'd plot, than choose a new, and err;
Let copy not too closely, but record,
For justly, thought for thought than word for word,
For trace your prototype through narrow ways,
But only follow where he merits praise.

For you, young bard! whom luckless fate may lead
To tremble on the nod of all who read,
To your first score of odes time unrolls,
Beware—for God's sake, don't begin like Bowles!—
Awake a louder and a loftier strain."
And pray, what follows from his boiling brain?—
He sinks to Southey's level in a trice,
Whose epic mountains never fall in mice!
Not so of yore awoke your mighty sire
The temper'd warblings of his master-lyre;
Loft as the gentler breathing of the lute,
"Of man's first disobedience and the fruit"
He speaks, but, as his subject swells along,
Earth, heaven, and hades echo with the song.
Till to the midst of things he hastens on,
As if we witness'd all already done;
Leaves on his path whatever seems too mean
To raise the subject, or adorn the scene;

* "Johnson. Pray, Mr. Bayes, who is that Drawcanair?
None. Why, sir, a great hero, that frights his mistress, subdues up kings, baffles armies, and does what he will, without regard to numbers, good sense, or justice."—Rehearsal.

* About two years ago a young man, named Townsend, was announced by Mr. Cumberland (in a review since deceased) as being engaged on an epic poem to be entitled 'Armageddon.' The plan and specimen promise much; but how neither to offend Mr. Townsend, nor his friends, by commenting to his attention the lines of Horace to which these rhymes allude. If Mr. Townsend succeeds in his undertaking, as there is reason to hope, how much will the world be indebted to Mr. Cumberland for bringing him before the public! But, till that eventful day arrives, it may be doubted whether the premature display of his plan (subtitled as the ideas confessedly are) has not, by raising expectation too high, or diminishing curiosity, by developing his argument,—rather incurred the hazard of injuring Mr.
Townsend's future prospects. Mr. Cumberland (whose allies I shall not depreciate by the humble tribute of my praise) and Mr. Townsend must not suppose me actuated by sordid motives in this suggestion. I wish the author all the success he can wish himself, and shall be truly happy to see epic poetry weighed up from the bathos where it lies unkenned with Southey, Cottle, Cowley (Mrs. or Abraham), Milly, Wilkie, Pye, and all the "dull of past and present days." Even if he is not a Milton, he may be better than Blackmore; if not a Homar, an Antimachus. I should deem myself presumptuous, as a young man, in offering advice were it not addressed to one still younger. Mr. Townsend has the greatest difficulties to encounter: but in conquering them he will find employment; in having conquered them, his reward. I know too well "the scribbler's scoff, the Gibes, as each page improves upon the sight,

Not smoke from brightness, but from darkness—
light;

And truth and fiction with such art compounds,
We know not where to fix their several bounds.
If you would please the public, deign to hear
What soothes the many-headed monster's ear;
If your heart triumph when the hands of all
Applaud in thunder at the curtain's fall,
Deserve those plaudits—study nature's page,
And sketch the striking traits of every age;
While varying man and varying years unfold
Life's little tale, so oft, so vainly told:
Observe his simple childhood's dawning days,
His pranks, his prate, his playmates, and his plays;
Till time at length the mannish tyro weans,
And prurient vice outstrips his tardy teens!

Behold him Freshman! forced no more to groan
O'er Virgil's† devilish verses and his own;
Prayers are too tedious, lectures too abstruse,
He flies from Tavell's frown to "Fordham's Mews;"
(Unlucky Tavell! doom'd to daily cares
By pugilistic pupils, and by bears,†)
Fines, tutors, tasks, conventions threat in vain,
Before bounds, hunters, and Newmarket plain.
Rough with his elders, with his equals rash,
Civil to sharpers, prodigal of cash;
Constant to nought—save hazard and a whore,
Yet cursing both—for both have made him sore;
Unread (unless, since books beguile disease,
The p—x becomes his passage to degrees);
Fool'd, pillaged, dunn'd, he wastes his term away,
And, unexpell'd, perhaps, retires M. A.;
Master of arts! as hells and *clubs proclaim,
Where scarce a blackleg bears a brighter name!

Launch'd into life, extinct his early fire,
He apes the selfish prudence of his sire;
Marries for money, chooses friends for rank,
Buys land, and shrewdly trusts not to the Bank;
Sits in the Senate; gets a son and heir;
Sends him to Harrow, for himself was there.
Mute, though he votes, unless when call'd to cheer,
His son's so sharp—he'll see the dog a peer!

critic's contumacy;" and I am afraid time will teach Mr.
Townsend to know them better. Those who succeed, and those who do not, must bear this alike, and it is hard to say which have the most of it. I trust that Mr. Townsend's share will be from away,—he will soon know mankind well enough not to attribute this expression to malice.—Tale was penned at Athens.

† "There is more of poetry in these verses upon Milton than in any other passage throughout the paraphrase."—Moore.

‡ Harvey, the circulator of the circulation of the blood used to fling away Virgil in his ecstacy of admiration, and say, "the book had a devil." Now, such a character as I am copying would probably fling it away also, but rather wish that the devil had the book; not from dislike to the poet, but a well-founded horror of hexameters. Indeed, the public-school penance of "Long and Short" is enough to beget an antipathy to poetry for the residue of a man's life, and, perhaps, as far may be an advantage.

§ "Infandum, regina, jussu renouare dolorem." I dare say
Mr. Tavell (to whom I mean no affront) will understand me; and it is no matter whether any one else does or no.—To the above events, "quesque ipse miserrima vidi, et quorum pars magna fui," "all times and terms bear testimony."

¶ The Rev. G. F. Tavell was a fellow and tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, during Lord Byron's residence, and owed this notice to the seal with which he had protested against some juvenile vagaries, sufficiently explained in Mr. Moore's Notice.

 "Hell," a gaming-house so called, where you risk little,
and are cheated a good deal. "Club," a pleasant purgatory, where you lose more, and are not supposed to be cheated at
all.

HINTS FROM HORACE

Manhood declines—age palsies every limb;
He quits the scene—or else the scene quits him;
Scorpea wealth, o'er each departing penny grieves,
And avarice seizes all ambition leaves;
Counts cent. per cent., and smiles, or vainly frets,
O'er hoards diminish'd by young Hopeful's debts;
Weighs well and wisely what to sell or buy,
Complete in all life's lessons—hard to die;
Peevish and spiteful, doting, bent to please,
Commending every time, save times like these;
Crazed, querulous, forsaken, half forgot,
Expires unwept—is buried—let him rot!

But from the Drama let me not digress,
Nor spare my precepts, though they please you less.
Though woman weep, and hardest hearts are stirr'd.

When what is done is rather seen than heard,
Yet many deeds preserved in history's page
Are better told than acted on the stage;
The ear sustains what shocks the timid eye,
And horror thus subsides to sympathy.
True Briton all beside, I here am French—
Bloodshed 'tis surely better to retrench;
The gladiatorial gore we teach to flow
In tragic scene disgusting, though but in show:
We hate the carnage while we see the trick,
And find small sympathy in being sick.
Not on the stage the regicide Macbeth
Appeals an audience with a monarch's death;
To gaze when sable Hubert threatens to sear
Young Arthur's eyes, can ours or nature bear?
A halter'd heroine? Johnson sought to slay—
We saved Irene, but half damn'd the play,
And (Heaven be praised!) our tolerating times
Stint metamorphoses to pantomimes;
And Lewis' self, with all his sprites, would quake
To change Earl Osmond's negro to a snake!
Because, in scenes exciting joy or grief,
We loathe the action which exceeds belief:
And yet, God knows! what may not authors do,
Whose postscripts prate of dyeing "heroines blue"?

Above all things, Don Post, if you can,
Eke out your acts, I pray, with mortal man,
Nor call a ghost, unless some cursed sorape
Must open ten trap-doors for your escape.
Of all the monstrous things I'd fain forbid,
I loathe an opera worse than Dennis did;
Where good and evil persons, right or wrong,
Rage, love, and aught but moralize, in song.
Hail, last memorial of our foreign friends,
Which Gaul allows, and still Hesperia lends!
Napoleon's edicts no embargo lay
On whines, spies, singers, wisely shipp'd away.
Our giant capital, whose squares are spread Where rustics earn'd, and now may beg, their bread.

In all iniquity is grown so nice,
It seems amusements which are not of price.
Hence the part shopkeeper, whose throbbing ear
Aches with orchestras which he pays to hear,
Whom shame, not sympathy, forbids to snore,
His anguish doubling by his own "encore,"

* Irene had to speak two lines with the bowstring round her neck: but the audience cried out "Murder!" and she was obliged to go off the stage alive!—Benedict's Johnson.

† In the postscript to the "Castle Specter," Mr. Lewis tells us, that though blacks were unknown in England at the period of his action, yet he has made the anachronism to set off the scene; and if he could have produced the effect "by making his heroine blue,"—I quote him,—"blue he would have made her!"

‡ The first theatrical representations, entitled "Mysteries and Marcellines," were generally executed at Christmas, by monks (as the only persons who could read), and latterly by the clergy and students of the universities. The dramas squeezed in "Pop's Alley," jostled by the band.

Teased with his hat, and trembling for his bones,
Scarce wrestles through the night, nor tastes repose,
Till the dropp'd curtain gives glad welcome to the
Why this, and more, he suffers—can ye guess?
Because it costs him dear, and makes him dumb!

So prosper sunnys from Etruscan schools;
Give us but fiddlers, and they're sure of fools!
Ere scenes were played by many a reverend clerk
(What harm, if David danced before the ark?)
In Christmas revels, simple country folks
Were pleased with morrice-mumm'ry, and coarse jokes.

Improving years, with things no longer known,
Produced blithe Punch and merry Madame Joan,
Who still frisk on with feats so lowly low,
'Tis strange Benvolio! suffers such a show;
Suppressing peer! to whom each vice gives place,
Oaths, boxing, begging,—all, save rout and race.

Fares follow'd Comedy, and reach'd her prime,
In ever-laughing Foote's fantastic time:
Mad wag! who pardon'd none, nor spared the best,
And turn'd some very serious things to jest.
Nor church nor state escaped his public sneers,
Arms nor the gown, priests, lawyers, volunteers:
"Alas, poor Yorick!" now for ever mute!
Whoever loves a laugh must sigh for Foote.

We smile, perforce, when histrionic scenes
Are the swola dialogue of kings and queens,
When "Chrononhotologos must die,"
And Arthur strut in mimic majesty.

Mochnus! with whom once more I hope to sit,
And smile at folly, if we can't at wit;
Yes, friend! for thee I'll quit my cynic call,
And bear Swift's motto, "Vive la bagatelle!"
Which charm'd our days in each Egyptian clime,
As oft at home, with revelry and rhyme.
Then may Euphrosyne, who sped the past,
Soothe thy life's scenes, nor leave thee in the last;
But find in thine, like pagan Plato's bed,
Some merry manuscript of mines, when dead.

Now to the Drama let us bend our eyes,
Where fetter'd by whig Walpole low she lies;
Corruption froll'd her, for she fear'd her glance;
Decorum left her for an opera dance!
Yet Chesterfield, whose polished pen inveighs
'Gainst laughter, fought for freedom to our plays;
Uncheck'd by megrims of patrician drakes,
And damning dullness of lord chamberlains.
Repeat that act! again let Humor roam
Wild o'er the stage—we've time for tears at home.
Let "Archer" plant the horns on "Bullen's" brow,
And "Estifania" gull her "Copper" f spouse;
The moral's scant—but that may be amended,
Men go not to be lectured, but amused.
He whom our plays dispose to good or ill
Must wear a head in want of Willis' skill;
Ay, but Macbeth's example—what!—no more
It form'd no thieves—the thief was forc'd to borrow;

persons were usually Adam, Peter Cantrelle, Smith, Vane," &c.

§ Benvolio does not bet; but every man who makes such race-courses is a promoter of all the accommodations of the turf. Avoiding to bet is a little pharisaical. But an occupation? I think not.

¶ Under Plato's pillow a volume of the Life of Socrates was found the day he died.—Vide Bartholomew, Life of Socrates, by Diogenes Laertius, if agreeable. Dr. Parr calls it a pocket-book. Cumberland, in his Observer, turns it into the life sayings of Publius Syrus.

‡ Michael Form, the "Copper Captain," in the Spectator and have a Wife."

HINTS FROM HORACE.

And, spite of puritans and Collier's curse,*
Plays make mankind no better, and no worse.
Then spare our stage, ye methodistic men!
Nor burn damn'd Drury if it rise again.
But why to brain-scorch'd bigots thus appeal?
Can heavenly mercy dwell with earthly zeal?
For times of fire and fagot let them hope!
Times dear alike to puritan or pope.
As pious Calvin saw Servetus blaze,
So would new sects on newer victims gaze.
E'en now the songs of Solyma begin;
Faith cants, perplex'd apologist of sin!
While the Lord's servant chastens whom he loves,
And Simeon † ticks, where Baxter only "shoves." ‡

Whom nature guides, so writes that every dunce,
Enraptured, thinks to do the same at once;
But after inky thumbs and bitten nails,
And twenty scatter'd quires, the cockcomb falls.

Let Pastoral be dumb; for who can hope
To match the youthful eclogues of our Pope?
Yet his and Phillips' faults, of different kind,
For art too rude, for nature too refined,
Instruct how hard the medium 't is to hit
Twixt too much polish and too coarse a wit.

A vulgar scribbler, certes, stands disgraced
In this nice age, when all aspire to taste;
The dirty language, and the noisome jest,
Which pleas'd in Swift of yore, we now detest;
Proscribed not only in the world polite,
But even too nasty for a city knight!

Peace to Swift's faults! his wit hath made them
pass,
Unmatch'd by all, save matchless Hudibras!
Whose author is perhaps the first we meet,
Who from our couplet lopp'd two final feet;
Nor less in merit than the longer line,
This measure moves a favorite of the Nine.
Though at first view eight feet may seem in vain
Form'd, save in ode, to bear a serious strain,
Yet Scott has shown our wondering Isle of late
This measure shrinks not from a theme of weight,
And, varied skillfully, surpasses far
Heroic rhyme, but most in love and war,
Whose fluctuations, tender or sublime,
Are curb'd too much by long-recurring rhyme.

But many a skillful judge abhors to see,
What few admire—irregularly.
This some vouchsafe to pardon; but 't is hard
When such a word contents a British bard.

And must the bard his glowing thoughts confine,
Lest censure hover o'er some faulty line?
Remove what'er a critic may suspect,
To gain the paltry suffrage of "correct"?

* Jerry Collier's controversy with Congreve, etc., on the subject of the drama, is too well known to require further comment.

† Mr. Simeon is the very bully of beliefs, and castigator of "good works." He is ably supported by John Stickle, a laborer in the same vineyard:—but I say no more, for, according to Johnny in full congregation, "no hopes for them as laughs."—The Rev. Charles Simeon, fellow of King's College, Cambridge,—a zealous Calvinist, who, in consequence of his zeal, had been engaged in sundry warm disputations with other divines of the university. Besides many single sermons, he also published "Helps to Composition, or five hundred Skeleton Sermons," in five volumes; and "Home Homiletics, or Discourses (in the form of skeletons) upon the whole Scripture," in eleven volumes.

‡ Richard Baxter is described by Granger as "a man famous for weakness of body and strength of mind; for

Or prune the spirit of each daring phrase,
To fly from error, not to merit praise?

Ye, who seek finish'd models, never cease,
By day and night, to read the works of Greece.
But our good fathers never bent their brains
To heathen Greek, content with native strains.
The few who read a page, or used a pen,
Were satisfied with Chaucer and old Ben;
The jokes and numbers suited to their taste
Were quaint and careless, anything but chaste;
Yet whether right or wrong the ancient rules,
It will not do to call our fathers fools!
Though you and I, who eruditely know
To separate the elegant and low,
Can also, when a hobbling line appears,
Detect with fingers, in default of ears.

In sooth, I do not know, or greatly care
To learn, who our first English strollers were;
Or if, till roofs received the vagrant art,
Our Muse, like that of Theopis, kept a cart;
But this is certain, since our Shakespeare's days,
There's pomp enough, if little else, in plays;
Nor will Melpomene ascend her throne
Without high heels, white plume, and Bristol stone.

Old comedies still meet with much applause,
Though too licentious for dramatic laws:
At least, we moderns, wisely, 't is confess,
Curtaill, or silence, the lascivious jest.

What'er their follies, and their faults beside,
Our enterprising bards pass nought untried;
Nor do they merit slight applause who choose
An English subject for an English muse,
And leave to minds which never dare invent
French flippancy and German sentiment.
Where is that living language which could claim
Poetic more, as philosophic, fame,
If all our bards, more patient of delay,
Would stop, like Pope, † to polish by the way?

Lords of the quill, whose critical assaults
O'erthrow whole quartets with their quires of faults,
Who soon detect, and mark where'er we fail,
And prove our marble with too nice a nail!
Democritus himself was not so bad;
He only thought, but you would make, us mad!

But truth to say, most rhymers rarely guard
Against that ridicule they deem so hard;
In person negligent, they wear, from sloth,
Beards of a week, and nails of annual growth;
Reside in garrets, fly from those they meet,
And walk in alleys, rather than the street.

With little rhyme, less reason, if you please,
The name of poet may be got with ease, having the strongest sense of religion himself, and exciting a sense of it in the thoughtless and profligate; for preaching more sermons, engaging in more controversies, and writing more books, than any other non-conformist of his age." Dr. Barrow says, that "his practical writings were never mended, his controversial seldom confuted." On Barrow's asking Johnson which of them he should read, the doctor replied, "Any of them; they are all good."

† "Neither time, nor distance, nor grief, nor age, can ever diminish my veneration for him who is the great moral poet of all times, of all climes, of all feelings, and of all stages of existence. The delight of my boyhood, the study of my manhood, perhaps (if allowed to me to attain it) he may be the consolation of my age. His poetry is the book of life. Without ceasing, and yet without neglecting religion, he has assembled all that a good and great man can gather together of moral wisdom clothed in consummate beauty."—Byron's Letters, 1821.

HINTS FROM HORACE.

So that not tuns of balneario jules
Shall ever turn your head to any use;
Write but like Wordsworth, live beside a Lake,
And keep your bushy locks a year from Blake;*
Then print your book, once more return to town,
And boys shall hunt your hardihip up and down.

Am I not wise, if such some poets' plight,
To purge in spring—like Bayes†—before I write?
If this precaution softens'd not my bile,
I know no scribbler with a madder style:
But since (perhaps my feelings are too nice)
I cannot purchase fame at such a price,
I'll labor gratis as a grinder's wheel,
And, blunt myself, give edge to others' steel,
Nor write at all, unless to teach the art
To those rehearsing for the poet's part;
From Horace show the pleasing paths of song,
And from my own example—what is wrong.

Though modern practice sometimes differs quite,
'Tis just as well to think before you write;
Let every book that suits your theme be read,
So shall you trace it to the fountain-head.

He who has learn'd the duty which he owes
To friends and country, and to pardon foes;
Who models his deportment as may best
Accord with brother, sire, or stranger guest;
Who takes our laws and worship as they are,
Nor roars reform for senate, church, and bar;
In practice, rather than loud precept, wise,
Bids not his tongue, but heart, philosophize:
Such is the man the poet should rehearse,
As joint exemplar of his life and verse.

Sometimes a sprightly wit, and tale well told,
Without much grace, or weight, or art, will hold
A longer empire o'er the public mind
Than sounding trifles, empty, though refined.

Unhappy Greece! thy sons of ancient days
The muse may celebrate with perfect praise,
Whose generous children narrow'd not their hearts
With commerce, given alone to arms and arts.
Our boys (save those whom public schools compel
To "long and short" before they're taught to spell)
From frugal fathers soon imbibe by rote,
"A penny saved, my lad, 's a penny got."
Have of a city birth! from sixpence take
The third, how much will the remainder make?—
"A groat."—"Ah, bravo! Dick hath done the sum!
He'll swell my fifty thousand to a plum."

* As famous a tinner as Lichius himself, and better paid, and may, like him, be one day a senator, having a better qualification than one-half of the heads he crops, viz.—industry.

† Bayes. Pray, sir, how do you do when you write? Smith. Faith, sir, for the most part I'm in pretty good health. Bayes. I mean, what do you do when you write? Smith. I take pen, ink, and paper, and sit down. Bayes. Now I write standing—that's one thing; and then another thing is, with what do you prepare yourself? Smith. Prepare myself! what the devil does the fool mean? Bayes. Why, I'll tell you what I do. If I am to write familiar things, as sonnets to Arinda, and the like, I make use of stewed prunes only: but when I have a grand design in hand, I ever take physic and let blood: for when you would have a pure swiftness of thought, and fiery flights of fancy, you must have a case of the pensive part. In fine, you must purge.

‡ I have not the original by me, but the Italian translation runs as follows:—"E una cosa a mio credere molto stravagante, che un padre desidero, o permetta, che suo figliuolo coltivi e perfezioni questo talento." A little further on: "Si trovano di rado nei Parnassi le miniere d'oro e d'argento."

§ I've pauperized: "this is the same beggar who boxed with Thymus for a pound of kid's rye, which he lost, and half a dozen teeth besides. See Odyssey, l. 15.

They whose young souls native raptures
times,
'Tis clear, are fit for anything but reason;
And Locke will tell you, that the father's reason
Who hides all verses from his children's sight:
For poets (says this sage, and many more)
Make and mechanics with their lyre lose;
And Delphi now, however rich of old,
Discovers little silver, and less gold,
Because Parnassus, though a mortal divine,
Is poor as Irus,† or an Irish mine.‡

Two objects always should the poet move,
Or one or both,—to please or to improve.
Whate'er you teach, be brief, if you design
For our remembrance your didactic line;
Redundance places memory on the rack.
For brains may be o'rloaded, like the back.

Fiction does best when taught to look like truth;
And fairy fables bubble none but youth:
Expect no credit for too wondrous tales,
Since Jonas only springs alive from whales!

Young men with aught but elegance disguised;
Maturer years require a little sense.
To end at once—that hard for all is fit
Who mingles hell instruction with his wit;
For him reviews shall smile, for him e'erflow
The patronage of Paternoster row;
His book, with Longman's liberal aid, shall pass
(Who ne'er despises books that bring him cash)
Through three long weeks the taste of Lanes-
lead,
And cross St. George's Channel and the Tweed.

But everything has faults, nor is 't unknown
That harp and fiddle often lose their tone,
And wayward voices, at their owner's call,
With all his best endeavors, only squall;
Dogs blink their covey, flints withhold the spark,
And double-barrels (damn them!) miss their mark.

Where frequent beauties strike the reader's vision,
We must not quarrel for a blot or two;
But pardon equally to books or men,
The slips of human nature, and the pen.

Yet if an author, spite of foe or friend,
Despises all advice too much to mend,
But ever twangs the same discordant string,
Give him no quarter, however he sing.
Let Havard's fate o'ertake him, who, far above,
Produced a play too dashing for a dunce:

† The Irish gold mine of Wicklow, which yields just enough to swell by, or gild a bad genius.

‡ As Mr. Pope took the liberty of damning Bayes, to whom he was under great obligations,—and Bayes (being him) calls "it may be presumed that my body or my thing may be damned in verse by poetical license; and, in case of accident, I beg leave to plead so illustrious a precedent."

 For the story of Billy Havard's tragedy, see Charles's Life of Garrick. "I believe it is 'Baruch,' or 'Charles's First.' The moment it was known to be his, the Chronicle thinned, and the bookseller refused to give the customary sum for the copyright.—'Havard,' says Davies, 'was reduced to great straits, and in order to retrieve his sinking story of Charles the First was proposed to him as a proper subject to engage the public attention. Havard's dramatic case was known to be superior to his talent for comic money; and Garrick, the manager, flattered upon the prospect of looking him up till the work was finished, and with his consent; and Garrick actually turned the key upon him, and let him out at his pleasure, till the play was written. It was acted with great emolument to the manager, and a large degree of reputation, as well as gain, to the author. A large crowd to the theatre; curiosity was excited; and the report to the author: that was a secret to be kept close."

HINTS FROM HORACE.

At first none deem'd it his; but when his name
Announced the fact—what then?—it lost its fame.
Though all deplore when Milton deigns to doze,
In a long work 'tis fair to steal repose.

As pictures, so shall poems be; some stand
The critic eye, and please when near at hand;
But others at a distance strike the sight;
This seeks the shade, but that demands the light,
Nor dreads the connoisseur's fastidious view,
But, ten times scrutinized, is ten times new.

Parnassian pilgrims! ye whom chance or choice
Hath led to listen to the Muse's voice,
Receive this counsel, and be timely wise:
Few reach the summit which before you lies.
Our church and state, our courts and camps, concede
Reward to very moderate heads indeed!
In these plain common sense will travel far;
All are not Enkinnes who mislead the bar;
But poetry between the best and worst
No medium knows; you must be last or first;
For middling poets' miserable volumes
Are damn'd alike by gods, and men, and columns.

Again, my Jeffrey!—as that sound inspires,
How wakes my bosom to its wonted fires!
Fires, such as gentle Caledonians feel
When Southrons writhe upon their critic wheel,
Or mild Eclectics,* when some, worse than Turks,
Would rob poor Faith to decorate "good works."
Such are the genial feelings thou canst claim—
My falcon flies not at ignoble game.
Mightiest of all Dunedin's boasts of chase!
For thee my Pegasus would mend his pace.
Arise, my Jeffrey! or my inkless pen
Shall never blunt its edge on meaner men;
Till thee or thine mine evil eye discerns,
Alas! "I cannot strike at wretched kernes."[†]
Inhuman Saxon! wilt thou then resign
A muse and heart by choice so wholly thine?
Dear, d—d contemner of my school-boy songs,
Hast thou no vengeance for my manhood's wrongs?
If unprovoked thou once couldst bid me bleed,
Hast thou no weapon for my daring deed?
What! not a word!—and am I then so low?
Wilt thou forbear, who never spared a foe?
Hast thou no wrath, or wish to give it vent?
No wit for nobles, dunces by descent?
No jest on "minors," quibbles on a name,[‡]
Nor one facetious paragraph of blame?

[†]Mr. Havard's love of fame would not suffer it to be concealed longer than the tenth or twelfth night of acting the play. The moment Havard put on the sword and tie-wig, the general dress of the times, and professed himself to be the writer of 'Charles the First,' the audience were thinned, and the bookseller refused to give the usual sum of a hundred pounds for the copyright.

[‡]The following is the charitable passage in the Eclectic Review to which Lord Byron alludes:—"If the noble lord and his numerous adherents have the courage requisite to sustain their mutual insults, we shall probably soon hear the explosions of another kind of paper-war, after the fashion of the ever-memorable duel which the latter is said to have fought, or seemed to fight, with 'Little Moore.' We confess there is sufficient provocation, if not in the critique, at least in the satire, to urge a 'man of honor' to defy his assailant to mortal combat. Of this we shall no doubt hear more in due time."

[†]"I cannot strike at wretched kernes."—Macbeth, act v., sc. 7.

[‡]See the memorable critique of the Edinburgh Review on "Hours of Idleness." Appendix, Note 4.

[†]Ironies alium, si te hic fastidit Alena.

[†]Lord Byron's taste for boxing brought him acquainted, at an early period, with this distinguished, and, it is not too much to say, respected, professor of the art; for whom, throughout life, he continued to entertain a sincere regard.

Is it for this on Ilion I have stood,
And thought of Homer less than Holyrood?
On shore of Euxine or Egean sea
My hate, untravell'd, fondly turn'd to thee.
Ah! let me cease; in vain my bosom burns,
From Corydon unkind Alexis turns;
Thy rhymes are vain; thy Jeffrey then forego,
Nor woo that anger which he will not show.
What then?—Edina starves some lanker son,
To write an article thou canst not shun;
Some less fastidious Scotchman shall be found,
As bold in Billingsgate, though less renown'd.

As if at table some discordant dish
Should shock our optics, such as frogs for fish;
As oil in lieu of butter men decry,
And popples please not in a modern pie;
If all such mixtures then be half a crime,
We must have excellence to relish rhyme.
Mere roast and boil'd no epicure invites;
Thus poetry disgusts, or else delights.

Who shoot not flying rarely touch a gun:
Will he who swims not to the river run?
And men unpractised in exchanging knocks
Must go to Jackson ere they dare to box.
Whate'er the weapon, cudgel, fist, or foil,
None reach expertness without years of toil;
But fifty dunces can, with perfect ease,
Tag twenty thousand couplets, when they please.
Why not?—shall I, thus qualified to sit
For rotten boroughs, never show my wit?
Shall I, whose fathers with the quorum sate,
And lived in freedom on a fair estate;
Who left me heir, with stables, kennels, packs,
To all their income, and to twice its tax;
Whose form and pedigree have scarce a fault,
Shall I, I say, suppress my Attic salt?

Thus think "the mob of gentlemen;" but you,
Besides all this, must have some genius too.
Be this your sober judgment, and a rule,
And print not piping hot from Southey's school,
Who (ere another Thalaba appears),
I trust, will spare us for at least nine years.
And hark ye, Southey! pray—but don't be vex'd—
Burn all your last three works—and half the next.
But why this vain advice? once published, books
Can never be recall'd—from pastry-cooks!
Though "Madoc," with "Pucelle,"[†] instead of punk,
May travel back to Quito—on a trunk!††

[†]Mr. Southey has lately tied another canister to his tail in the "Curse of Kehama," mauling the neglect of Madoc, etc., and has in one instance had a wonderful effect. A literary friend of mine, walking out one lovely evening last summer, on the eleventh bridge of the Paddington canal, was alarmed by the cry of "one in jeopardy;" he rushed along, collected a body of Irish haymakers (sipping on butter-milk in an adjacent paddock), procured three rakes, one cast-net, and a landing-net, and at last (horresco referens) pulled out—his own publisher. The unfortunate man was gone for ever, and so was a large quarto wherewith he had taken the leap, which proved, on inquiry, to have been Mr. Southey's last work. Its "sloridity of sinking" was so great, that it has never since been heard of; though some maintain that it is at this moment concealed at Alderman Birch's pastry premises, Cornhill.

[†]Voltaire's "Pucelle" is not quite so immaculate as Mr. Southey's "Joan of Arc," and yet I am afraid the Frenchman has both more truth and poetry too on his side (they rarely go together) than our patriotic minstrel, whose first essay was in praise of a fanatical French strumpet, whose title of witch would be correct with the change of the first letter.

^{††}Like Sir Eland Burgess's "Richard," the tenth book of which I read at Malta, on a trunk of Eyre's, 19, Cookspur-street. If this be doubted, I shall buy a portmanteau to quote from.

HINTS FROM HORACE.

Orpheus, we learn from Ovid and Lempriere,
Led all wild beasts but women by the ear;
And had he fiddled at the present hour,
We'd seen the lions waltzing in the Tower;
And old Amphion, such were minstrels then,
Had built Saint Paul's without the aid of Wren.
Verse too was justice, and the bards of Greece
Did more than constables to keep the peace;
A bolsh'd cuckoldom with much applause,
Call'd county meetings, and enforced the laws,
Cut down crown influence with reforming scythes,
And served the church—without demanding tithes;
And hence, throughout all Hellas and the East,
Each poet was a prophet and a priest,
Whose old-establish'd board of joint controls
Included kingdoms in the cure of souls.

Next rose the martial Homer, Epic's prince,
And fighting's been in fashion ever since,
And old Tyrtæus, when the Spartans war'd
(A limping leader, but a lofty bard),
Though wall'd Ithome had resisted long,
Reduced the fortress by the force of song.

When oracles prevail'd, in times of old,
In song alone Apollo's will was told:
Then if your verse is what all verse should be,
And gods were not ashamed of 't, why should we?

The Muse, like mortal females, may be woo'd;
In turns she'll seem a Paphian, or a prude;
Pierce as a bride when first she feels afright,
Mild as the same upon the second night;
Wild as the wife of alderman or peer,
Now for his grace, and now a grenadier!
Her eyes besom, her heart bellies, her zone,
Ice in a crowd, and lava when alone.

If verse be studied with some show of art,
Kind Nature always will perform her part;
Though without genius, and a native vein
Of wit, we loathe an artificial strain—
Yet art and nature join'd will win the prize,
Unless they act like us and our allies.

The youth who trains to ride, or run a race,
Must bear privations with unruddied face,
Be call'd to labor when he thinks to dine,
And, harder still, leave wenching and his wine,
Ladies who sing, at least who sing at sight,
Have follow'd Music through her farthest flight;

* The red hand of Ulster, introduced generally in a canton, marks the shield of a baronet of the United Kingdom.

† "Folio."—In the original MS. "Fopery."

‡ I beg Nathaniel's pardon: he is not a cobbler: it is a tutor, but begged Capel Loft to sink the profession in his preface to two pairs of pants—panta—of canton, which he wished the public to try on: but the slave of a patron let it out, and so far saved the expense of an advertisement to his country customers—Merry's "Moorfields wine" was nothing to all this. The "Della Crucians" were people of some education, and no profession; but these Arcadians ("Arcades ambo"—bumpkins both) send out their native nonsense without the smallest alloy, and leave all the shoes and small-clothes in the parish unrepaired, to patch up
Elegies on Enclosures and Poems to Gunpowder.

§ This well-meaning gentleman has spoiled some excellent shoemakers, and been accessory to the poetical undoing of many of the industrious poor. Nathaniel Bloomfield and his brother Bobby have set all Somersetshire singing, nor has the maledy confined itself to one county. Pratt too (who once was wiser) has caught the contagion of patronage, and decoyed a poor fellow named Blackett into poetry; but he died during the operation, leaving one child and two volumes of "Romances" utterly destitute. The girl, if she don't take a poetical twist, and come forth as a shoemaking Papho, may do well; but the "tragedies" are as risky as if they had been the offspring of an earl or a Stationary price poet.

But rhymers tell you neither more nor less,
"I've got a pretty poem for the press;
And that's enough; then write and print as fast;
If Satan take the hindmost, who'd to last?"
They storm the types, they publish, one and all,
They leap the counter, and they leave the stall.
Provincial maidens, men of high connexions,
Yes, baronets have ink'd the bloody lions;
Cash cannot quell them; Pollio! play'd this game,
(Then Phœbus first found credit in a haunt);
Not all the living only, but the dead,
Fool on, as sicut an Orpheus' head;
Damn'd all their days, they posthumously thrive—
Dug up from dust, though buried when alive!
Reviews record this epidemic crime,
Those Books of Martyrs to the rage for rhyme.
Alas! we worth the scribbler! often seen
In Morning Post, or Monthly Magazine.
There lurk his earlier lays; but soon, hot-press'd,
Behold a quarto!—Tarts must tell the rest.
Then leave, ye wise, the lyre's precarious chords
To muse-mad baronets, or madder lords,
Or country Crispins, now grown somewhat staid;
Twin Doric minstrels, drunk with Doric ale!
Hark to those notes, narcotically soft,
The cobbler-laureates sing to Capel Loft!
Till, lo! that modern Midas, as he beams,
Adds an all growth to his egregious sne!

There lives one draid, who prepares in time,
'Gainst future feuds, his poor revenge of rhyme;
Racks his dull memory, and his duller muse,
To publish faults which friendship should excuse.
If friendship's nothing, self-regard might teach
More polsh'd usage of his parts of speech.
But what is shame, or what is ought to him?
He vents his spleen, or gratifies his whim.
Some fancied slight has roused his lurking hate,
Some folly cross'd him, some jest, or some debate;
Up to his den Sir Scribbler hies, and soon
The gather'd gail is voided in lampoon.
Perhaps at some poet speech you've dared to frown,
Perhaps your poem may have pleased the town;
If so, alas! 't is nature in the man—
May Heaven forgive you, for he never can!
Then be it so; and may his withering bays
Bloom fresh in satire, though they fade in praise!
While his lost songs no more shall steep and stink,
The dullest, fattest weeds on Lethe's brink.

The patrons of this poor had are certainly answerable for his end; and it ought to be an indelible offence. But this is the least they have done: for by a reluctance of humanity, they have made the (late) man posthumously ridiculous, by pointing what he would have had some enough never to print himself. Certain these rakers of "Remains" come under the statute against "resurrection men." What does it signify whether a poor dear dead duncie is to be stuck up in the Museum or in Stationers' Hall? Is it so bad to unearth his trash as his blunders? Is it not better to gibbet his body on a bush, than be sent in an ass? "We know what we are, but we know not what we may be;" and it is so to be hoped we never shall know, if a man who has passed through the whole gamut of folly, is to find himself a mountebank on the other side of Styx, and made like poor Joe Blackwell, the laughing-stock of purgatory. The plea of publication is to provide for the child: now, might not some of these "fatherless Orphans" friends and seducers have done a decent action without revealing Pratt into biography? And then his trashy split into so many modicums!—"To the Doctors of Divinity, the Right Hon. 80-and-80, and Mrs. and Miss Somebody, these volumes are, etc., etc."—why, this is doing up the "soft milk of dedication" in gills—there is but a quare, and he divides it among a dozen. Why, Pratt, hadst thou not a puff left? Dost thou think six families of distinction can share this in quiet? There is a child, a book, and a desperate sedition the girl to her grave, the volumes to the ground, and the dedication to the devil.

HINTS FROM HORACE.

But springing upwards from the sluggish mould,
Be (what they never were before)—be sold!
Should some rich bard (but such a monster now,
In modern physics, we can scarce allow),
Should some pretending scribbler of the court,
Some rhyming peer*—there's plenty of the sort!—
All but one poor dependent priest withdrawn
(Ah! too regardless of his chaplain's yawn!),
Condemn the unlucky curate to recite
Their last dramatic work by candlelight,
How would the preacher turn each rusful leaf,
Dull as his sermons, but not half so brief!
Yet, since 'tis promised at the rector's death,
He'll risk no living for a little breath.
Then spouts and foams, and cries at every line
(The Lord forgive him!), "Bravo! grand! divine!"
Hoarse with those praises (which, by flattery fed, Dependence barters for her bitter bread),
He strides and stamps along with creaking boot,
Till the floor echoes his emphatic foot;
Then sits again, then rolls his pious eye,
As when the dying vicar will not die!
Nor feels, forsooth, emotion at his heart;—
But all dissemblers overact their part.

Ye, who aspire to "build the lofty rhyme,"
Believe not all who laud your false "sublime;"
But if some friend shall hear your work, and say,
"Expunge that stanza, lop that line away,"
And, after fruitless efforts, you return
Without amendment, and he answers, "Burn!"
That instant throw your paper in the fire,
Ask not his thoughts, or follow his desire;
But if (true bard!) you scorn to condescend,
And will not alter what you can't defend,
If you will breed this bastard of your brains,†—
We'll have no words—I've only lost my pains.

Yet, if you only prize your favorite thought,
As critics kindly do, and authors ought;
If your cool friend annoy you now and then,
And crosses whole pages with his plaguy pen;
No matter, throw your ornaments aside,—
Better let him than all the world deride.
Give light to passages too much in shade,
Nor let a doubt obscure one verse you've made;

* In the original MS.—

"Some rhyming peer—Carlisle or Carysfort."

To which is subjoined this note:—"Of 'John Joshua, Earl of Carysfort,' I know nothing at present, but from an advertisement in an old newspaper of certain Poems and Tragedies by his lordship, which I saw by accident in the Morae. Being a rhymist himself, he will forgive the liberty I take with his name, seeing, as he must, how very commodious it is at the close of that couplet; and as for what follows and goes before, let him place it to the account of the other Thane; since I cannot, under these circumstances, sugar-pro or con the contents of his 'foolscap crown octaves.'"—John Joshua Proby, first earl of Carysfort, was joint postmaster-general in 1805, envoy to Berlin in 1806, and ambassador to Petersburg in 1807. Besides his poems, he published two pamphlets, to show the necessity of universal suffrage and short parliaments. He died in 1808.

† Here will Mr. Gifford allow me to introduce once more to his notice the sole survivor, the "ultima Romanorum," the last of the Cruscanti!—"Edwin" the "profound," by our Lady of Punishment! here he is, as lively as in the days of "well said Baviad the Correct." I thought Fitzgerald had been the tail of poetry; but, alas! he is only the penultimate.

* FUGIANTES SPERNO TO THE DEPTHS OF THE MORNING OROBOLIA.

"What resume of paper, floods of ink,"
Do some men spoil, who never think!
And so perhaps you'll say of me,
In which your readers may agree.

Your friend's "a Johnson," not to leave one word,
However trifling, which may seem absurd;
Such erring trides lead to serious ills,
And furnish food for critics, or their quills.

As the Scotch fiddle, with its touching tune,
Or the sad influence of the angry moon,
All men avoid bad writers' ready tongues,
As yawning waiters fly Fitzscribble's lungs;
Yet on he mouths—ten minutes—tedious each
As pralate's homily, or placeman's speech;
Long as the last years of a lingering lease,
When riot pauses until rents increase.
While such a minstrel, muttering fustian, strays
O'er hedge and ditch, through unfrequented ways,
If by some chance he walks into a well,
And shouts for succor with stentorian yell,
"A rope! help, Christians, as ye hope for grace!"
Nor woman, man, nor child will stir a pace;
For there his carcass he might freely fling,
From frenzy, or the humor of the thing.
Though this has happen'd to more bards than one;
I'll tell you Budgell's story,—and have done.

Budgell, a rogue and rhymester, for no good
(Unless his case be much misunderstood),
Whim teased with creditors' continual claims,
"To dis like Cato," leapt into the Thames!
And therefore be it lawful through the town
For any bard to poison, hang, or drown.
Who saves the intended suicide receives
Small thanks from him who loathes the life he leaves;
And, sooth to say, mad poets must not lose
The glory of that death they freely choose.

Nor is it certain that some sorts of verse
Prick not the poet's conscience as a curse;
Dosed with vile drams on Sunday he was found,
Or got a child on consecrated ground!
And hence is haunted with a rhyming rage—
Fear'd like a bear just bursting from his cage.
If free, all fly his versifying fit,
Fatal at once to simpleton or wit:
But hém, unhappy! whom he seizes,—hém
He flays with recitation limb by limb;
Probes to the quick where'er he makes his breach,
And gorges like a lawyer—or a leech.

Still I write on, and tell you why;
Nothing 's so bad, you can't deny,
But may instruct or entertain
Without the risk of giving pain, etc., etc.

IN SUCH MINDS QUACKS AND RHEUMATISM.

In trading of the human mind
Through all its various courses,
Though strange, 'tis true, we often find
It knows not its resources!

And men through life assume a part
For which no talents they possess,
Yet wonder that, with all their art,
They meet no better with success, etc., etc.

‡ See Milton's Lycidas.

§ "Bastard of your brains."—Minerva being the first by Jupiter's headpiece, and a variety of equally unaccountable parturitions upon earth, such as Madoc, etc., etc., etc.

¶ "A crust for the critics."—Bayes, in the "Rehearsal."

¶ "We talked (says Boswell) of a man's drowning himself. —JOHNSON. 'I should never think it time to make away with myself.' I put the case of Burton Budgell, who was accused of forging a will, and sunk himself in the Thames, before the trial of its authenticity came on. 'Suppose, sir,' said I, 'that a man is absolutely sure that, if he lives a few days longer, he shall be detected in a fraud, the consequence of which will be utter disgrace, and expulsion from society.' JOHNSON. 'Then, sir, let him go abroad to a distant country; let him go to some place where he is not known. Don't let him go to the devil, where he is known.'" See Boswell vol. iv., p. 90, ed. 1808.

THE CURSE OF MINERVA.*

—“Pallas to her ruinere, Pallas Immolat, et pomam moderato ex sanguine sumit.”

Æschyl. Æg. xii.

ATHENS. Capuchin Convent, March 17, 1811.

SLOW sinks, more lovely ere his race be run,
Along Morea's hills the setting sun;
Not, as in northern climes, obscurely bright,
But one unclouded blaze of living light;
O'er the hush'd deep the yellow beam he throws,
Gilds the green wave that trembles as it glows;
On old Ægina's rock and Hydra's tale
The god of gladness sheds his parting smile;
O'er his own regions lingering loves to shine,
Though there his altars are no more divine.
Descending fast, the mountain shadows kiss
Thy glorious gulf, unconquer'd Salamis!
Their azure arches through the long expanse,
More deeply purpled, meet his mellowing glance,
And tenderest tints, along their summits driven,
Mark his gay course, and own the hues of heaven;
Till, darkly shaded from the land and deep,
Behind his Delphian rock he sinks to sleep.

On such an eve his palest beam he cast
When, Athens! here thy wisest look'd his last.
How watch'd thy better sons his farewell ray,
That clos'd their murder'd sage's † latest day!
Not yet—not yet—Sol pauses on the hill,
The precious hour of parting lingers still;
But sad his light to agonizing eyes,
And dark the mountain's once delightful dyes;
Gloom o'er the lovely land he seem'd to pour,
The land where Phœbus never frown'd before;
But ere he sunk below Cithæron's head,
The cup of woe was quaff'd—the spirit fled;
The soul of him that scorn'd to fear or fly,
Who lived and died as none can live or die.

But, lo! from high Hymettus to the plain
The queen of night asserts her silent reign; ‡

No murky vapor, herald of the storm,
Hides her fair face, or girds her glowing form.
With cornice glistening as the moonbeams play,
There the white column greets her grateful ray,
And bright around, with quivering beams beamed,
Her emblem sparkles o'er the minaret:
The groves of olive scatter'd dark and wide,
Where meek Cephissus sheds his scanty tide,
The cypresses saddening by the sacred mosque,
The gleaming turret of the gay kloak, §
And sad and sombre 'mid the holy calm,
Near Theseus' fane, yon solitary palm;
All, tinged with varied hues, arrest the eye;
And dull were his that pass'd them heedless by. ||

Again the Ægean, heard no more afar,
Lulls his chafed breast from elemental war;
Again his waves in milder tints unfold
Their long expanse of sapphire and of gold,
Mix'd with the shades of many a distant isle,
That frown, where gentler ocean delves to smile.

As thus, within the walls of Pallas' fane,
I mark'd the beauties of the land and main,
Alone, and friendless, on the magic scene,
Whose arts and arms but live in poets' lore;
Oft as the matchless dome I turn'd to scan,
Sacred to gods, but not secure from man,
T'at past return'd, the present seem'd to cease,
And Glory knew no clime beyond her Greece! ¶

Hours roll'd along, and Dian's orb on high
Had gain'd the centre of her softest sky;
And yet unwearied still my footsteps trod
O'er the vain shrine of many a vanish'd god:
But chiefly, Pallas! thine; when Ecate's ghost,
Check'd by thy columns, fell more sadly lost.

* This fierce philippic on Lord Elgin, whose collection of Athenian marbles was ultimately purchased for the nation, in 1816, was written at Athens, in March, 1811, and prepared for publication along with the “Hints from Morea:” but, like that satire, suppressed by Lord Byron, from motives which the reader will easily understand. It was first given to the world in 1828. Few can wonder that Lord Byron's feelings should have been powerfully excited by the spectacle of the despoiled Parthenon; but it is only due to Lord Elgin to keep in mind, that, had those precious marbles remained, they must, in all likelihood, have perished for ever amidst the miserable scenes of violence which Athens afterwards witnessed; and that their presence in England has already, by universal admission, been of the most essential advantage to the fine arts.

† Socrates drank the hemlock a short time before sunset (the hour of execution), notwithstanding the entreaties of his disciples to wait till the sun went down.

‡ The twilight in Greece is much shorter than in our own country; the days in winter are longer, but in summer of less duration.

§ The kloak is a Turkish summer-house; the palm is without the present walls of Athens, not far from the temple of Thesus, between which and the tree the wall intervenes. Cephissus' stream is indeed scanty, and Theseus has no grave at all.

¶ During our residence of ten weeks at Athens, there did not, I believe, a day of which we did not devote a part to the contemplation of the noble monuments of Grecian genius, that have outlived the ravages of time, and the outrages of barbarous and antiquarian despoilers. The Temple of Theseus, which was within five minutes' walk of our lodgings, is the most perfect ancient edifice in the world. In this temple, the most enduring stability, and a simplicity of design peculiarly striking, are united with the highest elegance and harmony of workmanship; the characteristics of the Doric style, whose chaste beauty is not, in the opinion of the best artists, to be equalled by the grace of any of the other orders. A gentleman of Athens, of great taste and skill, conversed with me a continued contemplation of this temple, and the remains of the Parthenon, he could never again look with his accustomed satisfaction upon the Ionic and Corinthian ruins of Athens, much less upon the splendours of the most modern species of architecture to be seen in Italy.

THE CURSE OF MINERVA.

O'er the chill marble, where the startling tread
Thrills the lone heart like echoes from the dead.
Long had I mused, and treasured every trace
The wreck of Greece recorded of her race,
When, lo! a giant form before me strode,
And Pallas hail'd me in her own abode!

Yes, 'twas Minerva's self; but, ah! how changed
Since o'er the Dardan field in arms she ranged!
Not such as erst, by her divine command,
Her form appear'd from Phidias' plastic hand.
Gone were the terrors of her awful brow,
Her idle ægis bore no Gorgon now;
Her helm was dinted, and the broken lance
Seem'd weak and shaftless e'en to mortal glance;
The olive branch, which still she deign'd to clasp,
Shrunk from her touch, and wither'd in her grasp;
And, ah! though still the brightest of the sky,
Celestial tears bedimm'd her large blue eye:
Round the rent casque her owl circled slow,
And mourn'd his mistress with a shriek of woe!

"Mortal!"—'twas thus she spake—"that blush of shame

Proclaims thee Briton, once a noble name;
First of the mighty, foremost of the free,
Now honor'd less by all, and least by me:
Chief of thy foes shall Pallas still be found.
Seek'st thou the cause of loathing?—look around.
Lo! here, despite of war and wasting fire,
I saw successive tyrannies expire.
Scaped from the ravage of the Turk and Goth,
Thy country sends a spoiler worse than both.*
Survey this vacant, violated fane;
Recount the relics torn that yet remain:
These Cecrops placed, this Pericles adorn'd,
That Adrian rear'd when drooping Science mourn'd.
What more I owe let gratitude attest—
Know, Alaric and Elgin did the rest.
That all may learn from whence the plunderer came,
The insulted wall sustains his hated name: †
For Elgin's fame thus grateful Pallas pleads,
Below, his name—above, behold his deeds! ‡
Be ever hail'd with equal honor here
The Gothic monarch and the Pictish peer:
Arms gave the first his right, the last had none,
But basely stole what less barbarians won.
So when the Ron quits his fell repast,
Next prowls the wolf, the filthy jackal last:
Fish, fume, and blood the former make their own,
The last poor brute securely gnaws the bone.
Yet still the gods are just, and crimes are cross'd:
See here what Elgin won, and what he lost!
Another name with his pollutes my shrine:
Behold where Dian's beams disdain to shine!
Some retribution still might Pallas claim,
When Venus half avenged Minerva's shame." §

She ceased awhile, and thus I dared reply,
To soothe the vengeance kindling in her eye:
"Daughter of Jove! in Britain's injured name,
A true-born Briton may the deed disclaim.
Frown not on England; England owns him not:
Athena, no! thy plunderer was a Scot."

* In the original MS.—

"Ah, Athenal scarce escaped from Turk and Goth:
Hail sends a paltry Scotchman worse than both."

† On the original MS. is written—

"Aspie quæ Pallas Scoto concedit honores, Infra stat nomen—facta supraque vide."

‡ For Lord Byron's detailed remarks on Lord Elgin's dealing with the Parthenon, see Appendix, Note B.

§ His lordship's name, and that of one who no longer bears it, are carved conspicuously on the Parthenon; above, in a

Ask'st thou the difference? From fair Phylæ's towers

Survey Bocotia;—Caledonia's ours.
And well I know within that bastard land!
Hath Wisdom's goddess never held command;
A barren soil, where Nature's germs, confined
To stern sterility, can stint the mind;
Whose thistle weed betrays the niggard earth,
Emblem of all to whom the land gives birth;
Each genial influence nurtured to resist;
A land of meanness, soplistry, and mist.
Each breeze from foggy mount and marshy plain
Drives with drivell every drizzly brain,
Till, burst at length, each watery head o'erflows,
Foul as their soil, and frigid as their snows.
Then thousand schemes of petulance and pride
Despatch her scheming children far and wide:
Some east, some west, some everywhere but north,
In quest of lawless gain, they issue forth.
And thus—accursed be the day and year!—
She sent a Pict to play the felon here.
Yet Caledonia claims some native worth,
As dull Bocotia gave a Pindar birth;
So may her few, the letter'd and the brave,
Bound to no clime, and victors of the grave,
Shake off the sordid dust of such a land,
And shine like children of a happier strand;
As once, of yore, in some obnoxious place,
Ten names (if found) had saved a wretched race."

"Mortal!" the blue-eyed maid resumed, "once
more

Bear back my mandate to thy native shore.
Though fallen, alas! this vengeance yet is mine,
To turn my counsels far from lands like thine.
Hear then in silence Pallas' stern behest;
Hear and believe, for Time will tell the rest.

"First on the head of him who did this deed
My curse shall light,—on him and all his seed:
Without one spark of intellectual fire,
He all the sons as senseless as the sire:
If one with wit the parent brood disgrace,
Believe him bastard of a brighter race:
Still with his hireling artists let him prate,
And Folly's praise repay for Wisdom's hate;
Long of their patron's gusto let them tell,
Whose noblest, native gusto is—to sell:
To sell, and make—may Shame record the day!—
The state receiver of his pilfer'd prey.
Meantime, the flattering, feeble dotard, West,
Europe's worst dauber, and poor Britain's best,
With palsied hand shall turn each model o'er,
And own himself an infant of fourscore.
Be all the bruisers cull'd from all Saint Giles',
That art and nature may compare their styles;
While brawny brutes in stupid wonder stare,
And marvel at his lordship's 'stone-shop' †† there.
Round the throng'd gate shall snarling coxcombs

snore,
To lounge and incubrate, to prate and peep;
While many a languid maid, with longing sigh,
On giant statues casts the curious eye;
The room with transient glance appears to skim,
Yet marks the mighty back and length of limb;

part not far distant, are the torn remnants of the baso-relievo, destroyed in a vain attempt to remove them.

* "Irish bastards," according to Sir Callaghan O'Brallaghan.

† In 1816, thirty-five thousand pounds were voted by Parliament for the purchase of the Elgin marbles.

 Mr. West, on seeing the "Elgin Collection" (I suppose we shall hear of the "Aberhaw" and "Jack Shephard" collection), declares himself "a mere tyro" in art.

†† For Orrib was sadly puzzled when the marbles were first exhibited at Elgin House: he asked if it was not "a stone-shop."—He was right; it is a shop.

THE CURSE OF MINERVA

Mourns o'er the difference of now and then;
Exclaims, "These Greeks indeed were proper men!"
Draws aly comparisons of these with those,
And envies Lais all her Attic beaux.
When shall a modern maid have swains like these!
Alas! Sir Harry is no Hercules!
And last of all, amidst the gaping crew,
Some calm spectator, as he takes his view,
In silent indignation mix'd with grief,
Admires the plunder, but abhors the thief.
Oh, leashed in life, nor pardon'd in the dust,
May hate pursue his sacrilegious lust!
Link'd with the fool that fired the Ephesian dome,
Shall vengeance follow far beyond the tomb,
And Erastostatus and Elgin shine
In many a branding page and burning line;
Alike reserved for aye to stand accursed,
Perchance the second blacker than the first.

"So let him stand, through ages yet unborn,
Fix'd statue on the pedestal of Scorn;
Though not for him alone revenge shall wait,
But fits thy country for her coming fate:
Here were the deeds that taught her lawless son
To do what oft Britannia's self had done.
Look to the Baltic—blazing from afar,
Your old ally yet mourns perfidious war.*
Not to such deeds did Pallas lend her aid,
Or break the compact which herself had made;
Far from such councils, from the faithless field
She fled—but left behind her Gorgon shield:
A fatal gift, that turn'd thy friends to stone,
And left low Albion hated and alone.

"Look to the East, where Ganges' swarthy race
Shall shake your tyrant empire to its base;
Lo! there Hobellon rears her ghastly head,
And glares the Nemesis of native dead;
Till Indus rolls a deep purpureal flood,
And clatters his long array of northern blood.
So may ye perish! Pallas, when she gave
Your free-born rights, forbade ye to enslave.

"Look on your Spain!—she clasps the hand she hates,
But boldly clasps, and thrusts you from her gates.
Bear witness, bright Barossa! thou canst tell
Whose were the sons that bravely fought and fell.
But Lusitania, kind and dear ally,
Can spare a few to fight, and sometimes fly.
Oh, glorious field! by Famine fiercely won,
The Gaul retires for once, and all is done!
But when did Pallas teach, that one retreat
Retrieved three long olympiads of defeat?"

"Look last at home—ye love not to look there;
On the grim smile of comfortless despair:
Your city saddens: loud though Revel howls,
Here Famine faints, and yonder Rapine prowls.
See all alike of more or less bereft;
No misers tremble when there's nothing left.
'Blest paper credit!† who shall dare to sing?
It clogs like lead Corruption's weary wing.
Yet Pallas pluck'd each premier by the ear,
Who gods and men alike disdain'd to hear;
But one, repentant o'er a bankrupt state,
On Pallas calls,—but calls, alas! too late:

Then raves for  to that Master hand,
Though he and Pallas never yet were friends.
Him senators hear, whom never yet they heard,
Contemptuous once, and now no less regard.
So, once of yore, each reasonable frog
Swore faith and fealty to his sovereign 'log.'
Thus hail'd your rulers their patrisia elod,
As Egypt chose an onlon for a god.

"Now fare ye well! enjoy your little hour;
Go, grasp the shadow of your vanish'd power;
Gloss o'er the failure of each fondest scheme;
Your strength a name, your bloated wealth a dream.
Gone is that gold, the marvel of mankind,
And pirates barter all that's left behind.
No more the hirelings, purchased near and far,
Crowd to the ranks of mercenary war.
The idle merchant on the useless quay
Droops o'er the bales no bark may bear away;
Or, back returning, sees rejected stores
Rot piecemeal on his own encumber'd shores:
The starved mechanic breaks his rusting looms,
And desperate mans him 'gainst the coming doom.
Then in the senate of your sinking state
Show me the man whose counsels may have weight.
Vain is each voice where tones could once command;
E'en factions cease to charm a factious land:
Yet jarring sects convulse a sister isle,
And light with maddening hands the mutual pile.

"'Tis done, 'tis past, since Pallas warns in vain;
The Furies seize her abdicated reign:
Wide o'er the realm they wave their kindling
brands,
And wring her vitals with their fiery hands.
But one convulsive struggle still remains,
And Gaul shall weep ere Albion wear her chains.
The banner'd pomp of war, the glittering files,
O'er whose gay trappings stern Bellona smiles;
The brazen trump, the spirit-stirring drum,
That bid the foe defiance ere they come;
The war-bounding at his country's call,
The glorious death that consecrates his fall,
Swell the young heart with visionary dreams,
And bid it antedate the joys of arms.
But know, a lesson you may yet be taught,
With death alone are laurels cheaply bought:
Not in the conflict Havoc seeks delight,
His day of mercy is the day of fight.
But when the field is fought, the battle won,
Though drench'd with gore, his woes are but to gun:
His deeper deeds as yet ye know by name;
The slaughter'd peasant and the ravish'd dame,
The rifled mansion and the foe-reap'd field,
Ill suit with souls at home, untaught to yield.
Say, with what eye along the distant down?
Would flying burghers mark the blazing town?
How view the column of ascending flames?
Shake his red shadow o'er the startled Thames?
Nay, frown not, Albion! for the torch was thine
That lit such pyres from Tagus to the Rhine:
Now should they burst on thy devoted coast,
Go, ask thy bosom who deserves them most.
The law of heaven and earth is life for life,
And she who raised, in vain regrets, the strife."

* The affair of Copenhagen.

† "Blest paper credit! last and best supply,
That leads Corruption lighter wings to fly!"—Pope.

‡ The Deal and Dover traffickers in slaves.

THE WALTZ: In Apostrophic Bgmn.*

"Qualis in Eurotas ripis, aut per juga Cynthia, Exeret Diana choros." N. M.

"Such on Eurotas' banks, or Cynthia's height,
Diana seems: and so she charms the sight,
When in the dances the graceful goddess leads
The quire of nymphs, and overtops their heads."

DAYTON'S Virgil.

TO THE PUBLISHER.

SIR,
I AM a country gentleman of a midland county. I might have been a parliament-man for a certain borough; having had the offer of as many votes as General T. at the general election in 1812.† But I was all for domestic happiness; as, fifteen years ago, on a visit to London, I married a middle-aged maid of honor. We lived happily at Hornem Hall till last season, when my wife and I were invited by the Countess of Walsaway (a distant relation of my spouse) to pass the winter in town. Thinking no harm, and our girls being come to a marriageable (or, as they call it, marriageable) age, and having besides a Chancery suit inveterately entailed upon the family estate, we came up in our old chariot,—of which, by the bye, my wife grew so much ashamed in less than a week, that I was obliged to buy a second-hand barouche, of which I might mount the box, Mrs. H. says, if I could drive, but never see the inside—that place being reserved for the Honorable Augustus Tiptoe, her partner-general and opera-knight. Hearing great praises of Mrs. H.'s dancing (she was famous for birthnight minuets in the latter end of the last century), I unbooted, and went to a ball at the Countess's, expecting to see a country dance, or, at most, cotillions, reels, and all the old paces to the newest tunes. But, judge of my surprise, on arriving, to see poor dear Mrs. Hornem with her arms half round the loins of a huge humor-looking gentleman I never set eyes on before; and his, to say truth, rather more than half round her waist, turning round, and round, and round, to a d—d see-saw up-and-down sort of tune, that reminded me of the "Black Joke," only more "affettuoso," till it made me quite giddy with wondering they were not so. By-and-by they stopped a bit, and I thought they would sit or fall down;—but no; with Mrs. H.'s hand on his shoulder, "quasi familiariter" ‡ (as Terence said, when I was at school), they walked about a minute, and then at it again, like two cock-chafers spitted on the same bodkin. I asked what all this meant, when, with a loud laugh, a child no older than our Wilhelmina (a name I never heard but in the Vicar of Wakefield, though her mother would call her after the Princess of Swappenbach), said, "Lord! Mr. Hornem, can't you see they are waltzing?" or waltzing (I forget which); and then up she got, and her mother and sister, and away they went, and round-abouted it till supper time. Now, that I know what it is, I like it of all things, and so does Mrs. H. (though I have broken my shin, and four times overturned Mrs. Hornem's maid, in practicing the preliminary steps in a morning). Indeed, so much do I like it, that having a turn for rhyme, tastily displayed in some election ballads, and songs in honor of all the victories (but till lately I have had little practice in that way), I sat down, and with the aid of William Fitzgerald, Esq., and a few hints from Dr. Busby § (whose recitations I attend, and am monstrous fond of Master Busby's manner of delivering his father's late successful "Drury Lane Address"), I composed the following hymn, wherewithal to make my sentiments known to the public; whom, nevertheless, I heartily despise, as well as the critics.

I am, sir, yours, etc., etc.,
HORACE HORNEM.

* This trifle was written at Cheltenham in the autumn of 1833, and published anonymously in the spring of the following year. It was not very well received at the time by the public; and the author was by no means anxious that it should be considered as his handiwork. "I hear," he says, in a letter to a friend, "that a certain malicious publication on waltzing is attributed to me. This report, I suppose, you will take care to contradict; as the author, I am sure, will not like that I should wear his cap and bells."

† State of the poll (last day), 6.

‡ My Latin is all forgotten, if a man can be said to have forgotten what he never remembered; but I bought my title-page motto of a Catholic priest for a three-shilling bank token, after much haggling for the quasi experience. I grudged the money to a papist, being all for the memory of Perceval and "No popery," and quite regretting the downfall of the pope, because we can't burn him any more.

§ See "Rejected Addresses."

THE WALTZ.

The Waltz.

MUSE of the many-twinkling feet! whose charms
Are now extended up from legs to arms;
Tarsipshore!—too long misdeem'd a maid—
Reproachful term—bestow'd but to upraid—
Henceforth in all the bronze of brightness shine,
The least a vestal of the virgin Nine.
Far be from thee and thine the name of prude;
Mock'd, yet triumphant; sneer'd at, unsubdued;
Thy legs must move to conquer as they fly,
If but thy coils are reasonably high;
Thy breast—if bare enough—requires no shield;
Dance forth—sans armor thou shalt take the field,
And own—impregnable to most assaults,
Thy not too lawfully begotten "Waltz."

Hail, nimble nymph! to whom the young hussar,
The whicker'd votary of waltz and war,
His night devotes, despite of spur and boots;
A sight unmatched since Orpheus and his brutes:
Hail, spirit-stirring Waltz!—beneath whose banners
A modern hero fought for modish manners;
On Hounslow's heath to rival Wellesley's † fame,
Cook'd—fired!—and miss'd his man—but gain'd his aim:

Hail, moving Muse! to whom the fair one's breast
Gives all it can, and bids us take the rest.
Oh! for the flow of Busby, or of Fitz,
The latter's loyalty, the former's wits,
To "energize the object I pursue,"
And give both Belial and his dance their due!

Imperial Waltz! imported from the Rhine
(Famed for the growth of pedigrees and wine),
Long be thine import from all duty free,
And hock itself be less esteem'd than thee:
In some few qualities alike—for hock
Improves our cellar—thou our living stock.
The head to hock belongs—the subtle art
Intoxicates alone the heedless heart:
Through the full veins thy gentler poison swims,
And wakes to wantonness the willing limbs.

Oh, Germany! how much to thee we owe,
As heaven-born Pitt can testify below,

* "Glimce their many-twinkling feet."—GRAY.

† To rival Lord Wellesley's, or his nephew's, as the reader please:—the one gained a pretty woman, whom he deserved by fighting for; and the other has been fighting in the Peninsula many a long day. "By Shewsbury clock," without gaining anything in that country but the title of "the Great Lord," and "the Lord," which savors of profanation, having been hitherto applied only to that Being to whom "Te Deum" for carnage are the rankest blasphemy.—It is to be presumed the general will one day return to his Sabine farm; there "To tame the genius of the stubborn plain,
About as quickly as he conquer'd Spain!"

The Lord Peterborough conquered continents in a summer; we do more—we contrive both to conquer and lose them in a shorter season. If the "Great Lord's" Cincinnati progress in agriculture be no speedier than the proportional average of time in Pope's couplet, it will, according to the farmers' proverb, be "ploughing with the dogs."

By the bye—one of this illustrious person's new titles is forgotten—it is, however, worth remembering—"Sahaderai mundo!" credit poster! If this be the appellation annexed by the inhabitants of the Peninsula to the name of a wench who has not yet saved them—query—are they worth saving, even in this world? for, according to the mildest modifications of any Christian creed, those three words make the odds much against them in the next—"Saviors of the world," quotha!—it were to be wished that he, or any one else, could save a corner of this country. Yet this stupid misnomer, although it shows the near connection between superstition and impiety, so far has its use, that it proves

Ere cursed confederation made thee Pagan,
And only left us thy d—d debts and damp;
Of subsidies and Hanover breath,
We bless thee still—for George the Third is best
Of kings the best—and last, not least in worth,
For graciously begetting George the Fourth.
To Germany, and highnesses ereas,
Who owe us millions—don't we owe thee quotha?
To Germany, what owe we not besides?
So oft bestowing Brunswickers and brides;
Who paid for vulgar, with her royal blood,
Drawn from the stem of each Teutonic stud:
Who sent us—so be pardon'd all her faults—
A dozen dukes, some kings, a queen—and Waltz.

But peace to her—her emperor and diet,
Though now transfer'd to Buonaparte's "diet!"
Back to my theme. Oh, Muse of motion! say,
How first to Albion found thy Waltz her way?

Borne on the breath of hypocritical gales,
From Hamburg's port (while Hamburg yet had raffle).

Ere yet unlucky Fame—compell'd to creep
To snowy Gottsburg—was chill'd to sleep;
Or, starting from her slumbers, design'd arise,
Hellgoland! to stock thy mart with lies;
While unburnt Moscow! yet had news to send,
Nor owed her fiery exit to a friend.
She came—Waltz came—and with her certain sets
Of true despatches, and as true gossies:
Then flamed of Austerlitz the best despatch,
Which Monitor nor Morning Post can match;
And—almost crush'd beneath the glorious news—
Ten plays, and forty tales of Kotzebue's;
One envoy's letters, six composers' aims,
And loads from Frankfurt and from Leipzig fair;
Meline's four volumes upon womankind,
Like Lapland witches to insure a wind;
Brunck's heaviest tome for ballast, and, to break it,
Of Heynd's, such as should not risk the packet.

Fraught with this cargo—and her fastest freight,
Delightful Waltz, on tiptoe for a mate.
The welcome vessel reach'd the genial strand,
And round her flock'd the daughters of the land.
Not decent David, when, before the ark,
His grand pas-soul excited some remark;

there can be little to dread from those Catholics (Anglican Catholics too) who can confer such an appellation on a Protestant. I suppose next year he will be entitled the "Virgin Mary;" if so, Lord George Gordon himself would have nothing to object to such liberal bestows of our Lady of Babylon.

‡ Among the addresses sent in to the Denny Lane Committee was one by Dr. Busby, which began by adverting—
"When emerging objects men pursue,
What are the prodigies they cannot do?"

§ The patriotic armen of our amiable allies cannot be sufficiently commended—for subscribed £st. Amount with details omitted in the various despatches of our illustrious ambassador, he did not state (being too much occupied with the exploits of Colonel O—) in swimming river-fishes, and galloping over roads impassable that one could possibly perished by famine in the most calamitous manner, as follows:—In General Rotopoff's communique communication the consumption of tallow and train oil was so great, that the market was inadequate to the demand; and three or four hundred and thirty-three thousand persons were starved to death, by being reduced to wholesome diet! The inhabitants of London have since subscribed a pile of oil candles, and the tallow-chandlers have unanimously voted a quantity of best moulds (four to the pound), to the relief of the suffering Boythians—the scarcity will soon be such that the proper attention to the quality rather than the quantity of provision, be totally alleviated. It is said, in response to the untouch'd Ukraine has subscribed sixty thousand roubles a day's meal to our suffering manufacturers.

THE WALTZ.

Not love-lorn Quixote, when his Sanecho thought
The knight's fandango friekier than it ought;
Not soft Herodias, when, with winning tread,
Her nimble feet danced off another's head;
Not Cleopatra on her galley's deck,
Display'd so much of leg, or more of neck,
Than thou, ambrosial Waltz, when first the moon
Beheld thee twirling to a Saxon tune!

To you, ye husbands of ten years! whose brows
Ache with the annual tributes of a spouse;
To you of nine years less, who only bear
The budding sprouts of those that you shall wear,
With added ornaments around them roll'd
Of native brass, or law-awarded gold;
To you, ye matrons, ever on the watch
To mar a son's, or make a daughter's match;
To you, ye children of whom chance accords—
Always the ladies, and sometimes their lords;
To you, ye single gentlemen, who seek
Torments for life, or pleasures for a week;
As Love or Hymen your endeavors guide,
To gain your own, or match another's bride;—
To one and all the lovely stranger came,
And every ball-room echoes with her name.

Endearing Waltz!—to thy more melting tune
Bow Irish jig, and ancient rigadoun.
Scotch reels, avaunt! and country-dance, forego
Your future claims to each fantastic toe!
Waltz—Waltz alone—both legs and arms demands,
Liberal of feet, and lavish of her hands;
Hands which may freely range in public sight
Where ne'er before—but—pray—"put out the light."
Methinks the glare of yonder chandelier
Shines much too far—or I am much too near;
And true, though strange—Waltz whispers this remark,
"My slippery steps are safest in the dark!"
But here the Muse with due decorum halts,
And lends her longest petticoat to Waltz.

Observant travellers of every time!
Ye quartos publish'd upon every clime!
Oh say, shall dull Romalika's heavy round,
Fandango's wriggle, or Bolero's bound;
Can Egypt's Almas"—tantalizing group—
Columbia's capers to the warlike whoop—
Can aught from cold Kamachika to Cape Horn
With Waltz compare, or after Waltz be borne?
Ah, no! from Morier's pages down to Galt's,
Each tourist pens a paragraph for "Waltz."

* Dancing girls—who do for hire what Waltz doth gratis.

† It cannot be complained now, as in the Lady Baunière's time, of the "Sieur de la Croix," that there be "no whiskers;" but how far these are indications of valor in the field, or elsewhere, may still be questionable. Much may be, and hath been, avouched on both sides. In the olden time philosophers had whiskers, and soldiers none—Solipo himself was shaven—Hannibal thought his one eye handsome enough without a beard; but Adrian, the emperor, wore a beard (having warts on his chin, which neither the empress Sabina nor even the courtiers could abide)—Turenne had whiskers, Marlborough none—Bonaparte is unwhiskered, the regent whiskered: "ordeal," greatness of mind and whiskers may or may not go together; but certainly the different occurrences, since the close of the last mentioned, go further in behalf of whiskers than the anathema of Anselm did against long hair in the reign of Henry I.—Formerly, red was a favorite color. See Lodowick Barry's comedy of Ram Alley, 1681; act I. scene I—

"Tufeta. Now for a wager—What colored beard comes next by the window?"

"Adriana. A black man's, I think."

"Tufeta. I think not so; I think a red, for that is most in fashion."

There is "nothing new under the sun;" but red, then a favorite, has now subsided into a securite's color.

Shades of those belles whose reign began of yore,
With George the Third's—and ended long before!—
Though in your daughters' daughters yet you thrive,

Burst from your lead, and be yourselves alive!
Back to the ball-room speed your spectred host,
Fool's Paradise is dull to that you lost.
No treacherous powder bids conjecture quake;
(Transferr'd to those ambiguous things that ape Goats in their visage,† women in their shape);
No damsel faints when rather closely press'd;
But more caressing seems when most caress'd;
Superfuous hartshorn, and reviving salts,
Both banish'd by the sovereign cordial "Waltz."

Seductive Waltz! though on thy native shore
Even Werter's self proclaim'd thee half a whore;
Werter—to decent vice though much inclined,
Yet warm, not wanton; dazzled, but not blind—
Though gentle Genie, in her strife with Steel,
Would even prescribe thee from a Paris ball;
The fashion hails,—from countesses to queens,
And maids and valets waltz behind the scenes;
Wide and more wide thy witching circle spreads,
And turns—if nothing else—at least our heads;
With these even clumsy odes attempt to bounce,
And cockneys practice what they can't pronounce.
Gods! how the glorious theme my strain exalts,
And rhyme finds partner rhyme in praise of
"Waltz!"

Blest was the time Waltz chose for her debut;
The court, the Regent, like herself were new; †
New face for friends, for foes some new rewards;
New ornaments for black and royal guards;
New laws to hang the rogues that roard for bread;
New coins (most new) ‡ to follow those that fled;
New victories—nor can we prize them less,
Though Jenky wonders at his own success;
New wars, because the old succeed so well,
That most survivors envy those who fell;
New mistresses—no, old—and yet 't is true,
Though they be old, the thing is something new;
Each new, quite new—(except some ancient tricks),||
New white-sticks, gold-sticks, broom-sticks, all new sticks!

With vests or ribbons—deck'd alike in hue,
New troopers strut, new turncoats blush in blue;
So saith the muse: my —, ¶ what say you?
Such was the time when Waltz might best maintain
Her new preferments in this novel reign;

§ An anachronism—Walm and the battle of Austerlitz are before said to have opened the ball together: the bard means (if he means anything), Waltz was not so much in vogue till the regent attained the somé of his popularity. Walm, the comet, whiskers, and the new government, illuminated heaven and earth, in all their glory, much about the same time: of these the comet only has disappeared; the other three continue to astonish us still.—Printer's Devil.

|| Amongst others a new ninespence—a creditable coin now forthcoming, worth a pound, in paper, at the fairest calculation.

¶ "Oh that right should thus overcome might!" Who does not remember the "delicate investigation" in the "Merry Wives of Windsor?"—

"Ford. Pray you, come near: if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now? whither bear you this?"

"Mrs. Ford. What have you to do whether they bear it?—you were best meddle with buck-washing."

† The gentle, or ferocious, reader may fill up the blank as he pleases—there are several dissyllabic names at his service (being already in the regent's list: it would not be fair to back any peculiar initial against the alphabet, as every month will add to the list now entered for the sweepstakes)—a distinguished consonant is said to be the favorite, much against the wishes of the knowing ones.

ODE TO NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.

Such was the time, nor ever yet was such;
Hoops are no more, and petticoats not much;
Morals and minuets, virtue and her stays,
And tell-tale powder—all have had their days.
The ball begins—the honors of the house
First duly done by daughter or by spouse,
Some potentate—or royal or serene—
With Kent's gay grace, or sapient Gloucester's mien,
Leads forth the ready dame, whose rising flush
Might once have been mistaken for a blush.
From where the garb just leaves the bosom free,
That spot where hearts* were once supposed to be;
Round all the confines of the yielded waist;
The strangest hand may wander undisplaced;
The lady's in return may grasp as much
As princely paunches offer to her touch.
Pleased round the chalky floor bow well they trip,
One hand reposing on the royal hip;
The other to the shoulder no less royal
Ascending with affection truly loyal!
Thus front to front the partners move or stand,
The foot may rest, but none withdraw the hand;
And all in turn may follow in their rank,
The Earl of—Asterisk—and Lady—Blank;
Sir—Such-a-one—with those of fashion's host,
For whose blest surnames—vide "Morning Post"
(Or if for that impartial print too late,
Search Doctors' Commons six months from my date)—

Thus all and each, in movement swift or slow,
The genial contact gently undergo;
Till some might marvel, with this modest Turk,
If "nothing follows all this palming work?"
True, honest Mirza!—you may trust my rhyme—
Something does follow at a fitter time;
The breast thus publicly resign'd to man,
In private may resist him—if it can.

Oh ye who loved our grandmothers of yore,
Fitzpatrick, Sheridan, and many more!
And thou, my prince! whose sovereign taste and
It is to love the lovely beldames still! [will

Thou ghost of Queensberry! whose judging spirit
Satan may spare to peep a single night,
Pronounce—if ever in your days of bliss
Amodeus struck so bright a stroke as this?
To teach the young ideas how to rise,
Flush in the cheek, and languish in the eyes;
With half-told wish and ill-dissembled flame:
For purer nature still will storm the breast—
Who, tempted thus, can answer for the rest?

But ye—who never felt a single thought
For what our morals are to be, or ought;
Who wisely wish the charms you view to reap,
Say—would you make those beauties quite as cheap?
Hot from the hands promiscuously applied,
Round the slight waist, or down the glowing side,

Where were the rapture then to clasp the form
From this lewd grasp and lawless contact warm?
At once love's most endearing thought resign,
To press the hand so press'd by none but thine;
To gaze upon that eye which never met
Another's ardent look without regret;
Approach the lip which all, without restraint,
Come near enough—if not to touch—to taste;
If such thou lovest—love her then no more,
Or give—like her—caresses to a score;
Her mind with these is gone, and with it go
The little left behind it to bestow.

Voluptuous Wals! and dare I thus blaspheme?
Thy bard forgot thy praises were his theme.
Terpsichore, forgive—at every ball
My wife now waltzes—and my daughters shall;
My son—or stop—'tis needless to inquire—
These little accidents should ne'er transpire;
Some ages hence our genealogic tree
Will wear as green a bough for him as me—
Waltzing shall rear, to make our name abroad,
Grandsons for me—in heirs to all his friends.

ODE TO NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.*

"Expende Annibalem:—quot libras in Once summas Invenies?" JOURNAL, Oct. 2.

*The emperor Nepos was acknowledged by the Senate, by the Italians, and by the Provincials of Gaul; his moral virtues, and military talents, were loudly celebrated; and those who derived any private benefit from his government announced in prophetic strains the restoration of public felicity.

By this shameful abdication, he protracted his life a few years, in a very ambiguous state, between an emperor and an exile, till———"Gibbon's Decline and Fall, vol. vi., p. 220.

'T is done—but yesterday a King!
And arm'd with Kings to strive—
And now thou art a nameless thing:
So subject—yet alive!
Is this the man of thousand thrones,

Who strew'd our earth with hostile bones,
And can he thus survive?
Since he, miscall'd the Morning Star,
Nor man nor fiend hath fallen so far.

"We have changed all that," says the Mook Doctor—"is all gone—Amodeus knows where. After all, it is of no great importance how women's hearts are disposed of; they have nature's privilege to distribute them as absurdly as possible. But there are also some men with hearts so thoroughly bad, as to remind us of those phenomena often mentioned in natural history; viz., a mass of solid stone—only to be opened by force—and when divided, you discover a food in the centre, lively, and with the reputation of being venomous.

†In Turkey a pertinent, here an impertinent and superfluous question—literally put, as in the text, by a French Morier, on seeing a waltz in Paris. Vide Morier's Turkey. ‡Lord Byron, when publishing "The Corsair" in January, 1814, announced an apparently quite serious resolution to withdraw, for some years at least, from poetry. His labors of the February and March following abated in reputation of the same determination. On the morning of the 14th of April, he writes,—"No more rhyme for—"

SHE WALES IN BEAUTY.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had he impair'd the namess grace
Which weeps in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face;
Where thoughts serenely sweet express,
How pure, how dear their dwelling place.

HEBREW MELODIES.—Page 370.

ODE TO NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.

Ill-minded man! why scourge thy kind
Who bow'd so low the knee?
By gazing on thyself grown blind,
Thou taught'st the rest to see.
With might unquestion'd,—power to save,—
Thine only gift hath been the grave,
To those that worshipp'd thee;
Nor till thy fall could mortals guess
Ambition's less than littleness!

Thanks for that lesson—it will teach
To after-warriors more,
Than high Philosophy can preach,
And vainly preach'd before.
That spell upon the minds of men
Breaks never to unite again,
That led them to adore
Those pagod things of sable away,
With fronts of brass, and feet of clay.

The triumph, and the vanity,
The rapture of the strife—
The earthquake voice of Victory,
To thee the breath of life;
The sword, the sceptre, and that sway
Which man seem'd made but to obey,
Wherewith renown was rife—
All quell'd!—Dark spirit! what must be
The madness of thy memory!

The Desolator desolate!
The Victor overthrown!
The Arbitrator of others' fate
A Suppliant for his own!
Is it some yet imperial hope,
That with such change can calmly cope?
Or dread of death alone?
To die a prince—or live a slave—
Thy choice is most ignobly brave!

He who of old would rend the oak,†
Dream'd not of the rebound:
Chain'd by the trunk he vainly broke—
Alone—how look'd he round?
Thou, in the sternness of thy strength,
An equal deed hast done at length,
And darker fate hast found:
He fell, the forest prowler's prey;
But thou must cut thy heart away!

The Roman,‡ when his burning heart
Was slaked with blood of Rome,
Threw down the dagger—dared depart,
In savage grandeur, home—
He dared depart in utter scorn
Of men that such a yoke had borne,
Yet left him such a doom!
His only glory was that hour
Of self-upheld abandon'd power.

I have taken my leave of that stage, and henceforth will maintain it no longer." In the evening, a Gazette Extraordinary announced the abdication of Fontainebleau, and the poet violated his vows next morning, by composing this ode, which he immediately published, though without his name. His Diary says, "April 10. To-day I have boxed one hour—written an ode to Napoleon Buonaparte—copied it—eaten six biscuits—drunk four bottles of soda water, and read away the rest of my time."

* "Certaminis grœdæ"—the expression of Attila in his harangue to his army, previous to the battle of Chalons, given in Cæcilius.

† "Out of town six days. On my return, find my poor little parrot, Napoleon, pushed off his pedestal. It is his own fault. Like Milo, he would rend the oak; but it closed again, wedged his hands, and now the beast—lion, bear, down to the dirtiest jackal—may all tear him. That Muscovite winter seceded his arms:—ever since, he has fought with his feet and teeth.

The Spaniard, when the lust of sway
Had lost its quickening spell,
Cast crowns for rosaries away,
An empire for a cell;
A strict accountant of his beads,
A subtle disputant on creeds,
His dotage trifled well:
Yet better had he neither known
A bigot's shrine, nor despot's throne.

But thou—from thy reluctant hand
The thunderbolt is wrung—
Too late thou leav'st the high command
To which thy weakness clung;
All Evil Spirit as thou art,
It is enough to grieve the heart
To see thine own unstrung:
To think that God's fair world hath been
The footstool of a thing so mean;

And Earth hath spilt her blood for him,
Who thus can hoard his own!
And Monarchs bow'd the trembling limb,
And thank'd him for a throne!
Fair Freedom! we may hold thee dear,
When thus thy mightiest foes their fear
In humblest guise have shown.
Oh! ne'er may tyrant leave behind
A brighter name to lure mankind!

Thine evil deeds are writ in gore,
Nor written thus in vain—
Thy triumphs tell of fame no more,
Or deepen every stain:
If thou hadst died as honor dies,
Some new Napoleon might arise,
To shame the world again—
But who would soar the solar height,
To set in such a starless night?

Weigh'd in the balance, hero dust
Is vile as vulgar clay;
Thy scales, Mortality! are just
To all that pass away:
But yet methought the living great
Some higher sparks should animate,
To dazzle and dismay:
Nor deem'd Contempt could thus make mirth
Of these, the Conquerors of the earth.

And she, proud Austria's mournful sower,
Thy still imperial bride;
How bears her breast the torturing hour?
Still clings she to thy side?
Must she too bend, must she too share
Thy late repentance, long despair,
Thou throneless Homicide?
If still she loves thee, hoard that gem;
'Tis worth thy vanish'd diadem!

The last may still leave their marks; and 'I guess now' (as the Yankees say), that he will yet play them a pass.—Byron Diary, April 8.

§ Sylla.—We find the germ of this stanza in the Diary of the evening before it was written:—"Methinks Sylla did better: for he revenged, and resigned in the height of his sway, red with the slaughter of his foes—the finest instance of glorious contempt of the rascals upon record. Diocletian did well too—Amurath not amiss, had he become sought except a dervise—Charles the Fifth but so so: but Napoleon worst of all."—Byron Diary, April 9.

¶ It is well known that Count Neipperg, a gentleman in the suite of the emperor of Austria, who was first presented to Maria Louisa within a few days after Napoleon's abdication, became, in the sequel, her chamberlain, and then her husband. He is said to have been a man of remarkably plain appearance. The count died in 1831.

HEBREW MELODIES.

Then haste thee to thy sullen Isle,
And gaze upon the sea:
That element may meet thy smile—
It ne'er was ruled by thee!
Or trace with thine all idle hand,
In loitering mood upon the sand,
That Earth is now as free!
That Corinth's pedagogue * hath now
Transferr'd his byword to thy brow.

Thou Timour! in his captive's cage†
What thoughts will there be thine,
While brooding in thy prison'd rage?
But one—"The world was mine!"
Unless, like he of Babylon,
All sense is with thy sceptre gone,
Life will not long confine
That spirit pour'd so widely forth—
So long obey'd—so little worth!

Or, like the thief of fire from heaven,‡
Wilt thou withstand the shock?
And share with him, the unforgiven,
His vulture and his rock!
Foredoom'd by God—by man accurst,
And that last act, though not thy worst,
The very Fiend's arch mock: §
He in his fall preserved his pride,
And, if a mortal, had as proudly died!

There was a day—there was an hour,
While earth was Gaul's—Gaul thine—
When that immeasurable power
Unseated to resign
Had been an act of purer fame,
Than gathers round Macsengo's name,
And gilded thy decline,
Through the long twilight of all time,
Despite some passing clouds of crime.

But thou forsooth must be a king,
And don the purple vest,
As if that foolish robe could wring
Remembrance from thy breast.
Where is that faded garment? where
The gewgaws thou wert fond to wear,
The star—the string—the crest?
Vain froward child of empire! say,
Are all thy playthings snatch'd away?

Where may the wearied eye repose,
When gazing on the Great;
Where neither guilty glory glows,
Nor despicable state?
Yes—one—the first—the last—the best—
The Cincinnatus of the West,
Whom envy dared not hate,
Bequeath the name of Washington,
To make man blush there was but one!

HEBREW MELODIES.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE subsequent poems were written at the request of my friend, the Hon. Douglas Kinnaird, for a Selection of Hebrew Melodies, and have been published with the music, arranged by Mr. Braham and Mr. Nathan.

January, 1813.

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY.‡

SHE walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies;
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meet in her aspect and her eyes:
Thus mellow'd to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impair'd the nameless grace,
Which waves in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face;
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear their dwelling-place.

And on that cheek, and o'er that brow,
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,

The smiles that win, the tints that glow,
But tell of days in goodness spent,
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent!

THE HARP THE MONARCH MINSTREL SWEPT.

THE harp the monarch minstrel swept,
The King of men, the loved of Heaven,
Which Music hallow'd while she wept
O'er tones her heart of hearts had given,
Redoubled be her tears, its chords are riven!
It soften'd men of iron mould,
It gave them virtues not their own;
No ear so dull, no soul so cold,
That felt not, fired not to the tone,
Till David's lyre grew mightier than his throne!

* Dionysius the Younger, esteemed a greater tyrant than his father, on being for the second time banished from Syracuse, retired to Corinth, where he was obliged to turn school-master for a subsistence.

† The case of Bajazet, by order of Tamerlane.

‡ Prometheus.

§ — "The very Fiend's arch mock—
To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste."

SHAKESPEARE.

—We believe there is no doubt of the truth of the anecdote here alluded to—of Napoleon's having found leisure for an unworthy amour, the very evening of his arrival at Fontenbleau.

! These stanzas were written by Lord Byron, on returning from a ball-room, where he had seen Mrs. (afterwards Lady) Wilmot Horton, the wife of his relation. On this occasion Mrs. Wilmot Horton had appeared in mourning, with numerous spangles on her dress.

HEBREW MELODIES.

It told the triumphs of our King,
It wafted glory to our God;
It made our gladden'd valleys ring,
The cedars bow, the mountains nod;
Its sound aspir'd to heaven and there abode!
Since then, though heard on earth no more,
Devotion and her daughter Love
Still bid the bursting spirit soar
To sounds that seem as from above,
In dreams that day's broad light cannot remove.

IF THAT HIGH WORLD.

If that high world, which lies beyond
Our own, surviving Love endears;
If there the cherish'd heart be fond,
The eye the same, except in tears—
How welcome those untrodden spheres!
How sweet this very hour to die!
To soar from earth, and find all fears
Lost in thy light—Eternity!

It must be so: 'tis not for self
That we so tremble on the brink;
And striving to o'erleap the gulf,
Yet cling to Being's severing link.
Oh! in that future let us think
To hold each heart the heart that shares:
With them the immortal waters drink,
And soul in soul grow deathless theirs!

THE WILD GAZELLE.

The wild gazelle on Judah's hills
Exulting yet may bound,
And drink from all the living rills
That gush on holy ground:
Its airy step and glorious eye
May glance in tameless transport by:—

A step as fleet, an eye more bright,
Hath Judah witness'd there;
And o'er her scenes of lost delight
Inhabitants more fair.
The cedars wave on Lebanon,
But Judah's statelier maids are gone!

More blest each palm that shades those plains
Than Israel's scatter'd race;
For, taking root, it there remains
In solitary grace:
It cannot quit its place of birth,
It will not live in other earth.

But we must wander witheringly,
In other lands to die;
And where our fathers' ashes be,
Our own may never lie:
Our temple hath not left a stone,
And Mockery sits on Salem's throne.

OH! WEEP FOR THOSE.

Oh! weep for those that wept by Babel's stream,
Whose shrines are desolate, whose land a dream;
Weep for the harp of Judah's broken shell;
Mourn—where their God hath dwelt, the godless dwell!

And where shall Israel lave her bleeding feet?
And when shall Zion's songs again seem sweet?
And Judah's melody once more rejoice
The hearts that leap'd before its heavenly voice?

Tribes of the wandering foot and weary breast,
How shall ye flee away and be at rest!
The wild dove hath her nest, the fox his cave,
Mankind their country—Israel but the grave!

ON JORDAN'S BANKS.

On Jordan's banks the Arab's camels stray,
On Zion's hill the False One's votaries pray,
The Baal-adorer bows on Sinai's steep—
Yet there—even there—oh, God—thy thunders sleep!

There—where thy finger scorch'd the tablet stone!
There—where thy shadow to thy people shone!
Thy glory shrouded in its garb of fire:
Thyself—none living see and not expire!

Oh! in the lightning let thy glance appear;
Sweep from his shiver'd hand the oppressor's spear!
How long by tyrants shall thy land be trod?
How long thy temple worshipless, oh, God?

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER.

SINCE our Country, our God—oh, my Sire!
Demand that thy Daughter expire!
Since thy triumph was bought by thy vow—
Strike the bosom that's bared for thee now!

And the voice of my mourning is o'er,
And the mountains behold me no more:
If the hand that I love lay me low,
There cannot be pain in the blow!

And of this, oh, my Father! be sure—
That the blood of thy child is as pure
As the blessing I beg ere it flow,
And the last thought that soothes me below.

Though the virgins of Salem lament,
Be the judge and the hero unbent!
I have won the great battle for thee,
And my Father and Country are free!

When this blood of thy giving hath gush'd,
When the voice that thou lovest is hush'd,
Let my memory still be thy pride,
And forget not I smiled as I died!

OH! SNATCH'D AWAY IN BEAUTY'S BLOOM.

Oh! snatch'd away in beauty's bloom,
On thee shall press no ponderous tomb;
But on thy turf shall roses rear
Their leaves, the earliest of the year;
And the wild cypress wave in tender gloom:

And oft by yon blue gushing stream
Shall Sorrow lean her drooping head,
And feed deep thought with many a dream,
And lingering pause, and lightly tread;
Fond wretch! as if her step disturb'd the dead!

Away! we know that tears are vain,
That death nor heeds nor hears distress:
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou—who tell'st me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

HEBREW MELODIES.

MY SOUL IS DARK.

✓ My soul is dark—oh! quickly string
The harp I yet can brook to hear;
And let thy gentle fingers fling
Its melting murmurs o'er mine ear.
If in this heart a hope be dear,
That sound shall charm it forth again:
If in these eyes there lurk a tear,
'T will flow, and cease to burn my brain.
But bid the strain be wild and deep,
Nor let thy notes of joy be first:
I tell thee, minstrel, I must weep,
Or else this heavy heart will burst;
For it hath been by sorrow nursed,
And ached in sleepless silence long;
And now 't is doom'd to know the worst,
And break at once—or yield to song.*

I SAW THEE WEEP.

✓ I saw thee weep—the big bright tear
Came o'er that eye of blue;
And then methought it did appear
A violet dropping dew:
I saw thee smile—the sapphire's blaze
Beside thee ceased to shine;
It could not match the living rays
That fill'd that glance of thine.

As clouds from yonder sun receive
A deep and mellow dye,
Which scarce the shade of coming eve
Can banish from the sky,
Those smiles unto the moodiest mind
Their own pure joy impart;
Their sunshine leaves a glow behind
That lightens o'er the heart.

THY DAYS ARE DONE.

Thy days are done, thy fame begun:
Thy country's strains record
The triumphs of her chosen Son,
The slaughters of his sword!
The deeds he did, the fields he won,
The freedom he restored!

Though thou art fall'n, while we are free
Thou shalt not taste of death!
The generous blood that flow'd from thee
Disdain'd to sink beneath:
Within our veins its currents be,
Thy spirit on our breath!

Thy name, our charging hosts along,
Shall be the battle-word!
Thy fall, the theme of choral song
From virgin voices pour'd!
To weep would do thy glory wrong;
Thou shalt not be deplored.

SONG OF SAUL BEFORE HIS LAST BATTLE.

✓ WARRIORS and chiefs! should the shaft or the sword
Pierce me in leading the host of the Lord,

* "It was generally conceived that Lord Byron's reported singularities approached on some occasions to derangement; and at one period, indeed, it was very currently asserted that his intellects were actually impaired. The report only served to amuse his lordship. He referred to the circumstance, and

Heed not the come, though a king's, in your path;
Bury your steel in the bosoms of death!

Thou who art bearing my buckler and bow,
Should the soldiers of Saul look away from thee,
Stretch me that moment in blood as thy feet!
Mine be the doom which they dared not to meet.

Farewell to others, but never we part,
Heir to my royalty, son of my heart!
Bright is the diadem, boundless the sway,
Or kingly the death, which awaits us to-day!

SAUL.

Thou whose spell can raise the dead,
Bid the prophet's form appear,
"Samuel, raise thy buried head!"

King, behold the phantom rear!"
Earth yawn'd; he stood the centre of a cloud:
Light changed its hue, retiring from his shroud.
Death stood all glassy in his fixed eye:
His hand was wither'd, and his voice was dry;
His foot, in bony whiteness, glitter'd bare,
Shrunk and shiv'ring, and ghastly bare:
From lips that mov'd not and unheaving came,
Like cavern'd winds, the hollow accents came.
Saul saw, and fell to earth, as falls the oak,
At once, and blasted by the thunder-bolt.

"Why is my sleep disturbed?
Who is he that calls the dead?
Is it thou, O King? Behold,
Bloodless are these limbs, and cold:
Such are mine; and such shall be
Thine to-morrow, when with dawn
Ere the coming day is done,
Such shalt thou be, such thy fate:
Fare thee well, but for a day,
Then we mix our mould'ring bones.
Thou, thy race, lie pale and cold,
Pierced by shafts of many a hero,
And the falchion by thy side
To thy heart thy hand shall guide:
Crownless, breathless, headless thou,
Son and sire, the house of Saul!"

"ALL IS VANITY, SAITH THE PREACHER."

FAME, wisdom, love, and power, you vain,
And health and youth possess'd in vain,
My goblets bluish'd from every day,
And lovely forms career'd away,
I sunn'd my heart in beauty's eyes,
And felt my soul grow tedious;
All earth can give, or mortal hand,
Was mine of regal splendour.

I strive to number o'er what days
Remembrance can discover,
Which all that life or earth displays
Would lure me to live over.
There rose no day, there roll'd no night
Of pleasure unambitter'd;
And not a trapping deck'd my power,
That gall'd not while it glitter'd.

The serpent of the field, by art
And spells, is won from harm.

declared that he would try how a man would bear the pen with elegance, he few a few majestic wildpans on vanity; which was done, without exciting a single word of result."

HEBREW MELODIES

But that which coils around the heart,
Oh! who hath power of charming?
It will not list to wisdom's lore,
Nor music's voice can lure it;
But there it stings for evermore
The soul that must endure it.

WHEN COLDNESS WRAPS THIS SUFFERING CLAY.

When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
Ah! whither strays the immortal mind?
It cannot die, it cannot stay,
But leaves its darken'd dust behind.
Then, unembodied, doth it trace
By steps each planet's heavenly way?
Or fill at once the realms of space,
A thing of eyes, that all survey?

Eternal, boundless, undecay'd,
A thought unseen, but seeing all,
All, all in earth, or skies display'd,
Shall it survey, shall it recall:
Each fainter trace that memory holds
So darkly of departed years,
In one broad glance the soul beholds,
And all, that was, at once appears.

Before Creation peopled earth,
Its eye shall roll through chaos back;
And where the furthest heaven had birth,
The spirit trace its rising track.
And where the future morn or makes,
Its glance dilate o'er all to be,
While sun is quench'd or system breaks,
Fix'd in its own eternity.

Above or Love, Hope, Hate, or Fear,
It lives all passionless and pure;
An age shall fleet like earthly year;
Its years as moments shall endure.
Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, through all, its thought shall fly;
A nameless and eternal thing,
Forgetting what it was to die.

VISION OF BELSHAZZAR.

The King was on his throne,
The Satraps through'd the hall;
A thousand bright lamps shone
O'er that high festival.
A thousand cups of gold,
In Judah deem'd divine—
Jehovah's vessels hold
The godless Heathen's wine.

In that same hour and hall,
The fingers of a hand
Came forth against the wall,
And wrote as if on sand:
The fingers of a man:—
A solitary hand
Along the letters ran,
And traced them like a wand.

The monarch saw, and shook,
And bade no more rejoice;
All bloodless wax'd his look,
And tremulous his voice.

"Let the men of lore appear,
The wisest of the earth,
And expound the words of fear,
Which mar our royal mirth."

Chaldees' seers are good,
But here they have no skill;
And the unknown letters stood
Untold and awful still.
And Babel's men of age
Are wise and deep in lore;
But now they were not sage,
They saw—but knew no more.

A captive in the land,
A stranger and a youth,
He heard the king's command,
He saw that writing's truth.
The lamps around were bright,
The prophecy in view;
He read it on that night,—
The morrow proved it true.

"Belshazzar's grave is made.
His kingdom pass'd away,
He, in the balance weigh'd,
Is light and worthless clay,
The shroud his robe of state,
His canopy the stone!
The Mede is at his gate!
The Persian on his throne!"

SUN OF THE SLEEPLESS!

Sun of the sleepless! melancholy star!
Whose tearful beam glows tremulously far,
That show'st the darkness thou canst not dispel,
How like art thou to joy remember'd well!
So gleams the past, the light of other days,
Which shines, but warms not with its powerless rays;
A night-beam Sorrow watcheth to behold,
Distinct, but distant—clear—but oh, how cold!

WERE MY BOSOM AS FALSE AS THOU DEEM'ST IT TO BE.

WERE my bosom as false as thou deem'st it to be,
I need not have wander'd from far Galilee;
It was but abjuring my creed to efface
The curse which, thou sayst, is the crime of my race.

If the bad never triumph, then God is with thee!
If the slave only sin, thou art spotless and free!
If the Exile on earth is an Outcast on high,
Live on in thy faith, but in mine I will die.

I have lost for that faith more than thou canst bestow;
As the God who permits thee to prosper doth know;
In his hand is my heart and my hope—and in thine
The land and the life which for him I resign.

HEROD'S LAMENT FOR MARIAMNE.*

O! Mariamne! now for thee
The heart for which thou bled'st is bleeding;
Revenge is lost in agony,
And wild remorse to rage succeeding.

* Mariamne, the wife of Herod the Great, falling under the suspicion of infidelity, was put to death by his order. She was a woman of unrivalled beauty, and a haughty spirit; unhappy in being the object of passionate attachment, which bordered on frenzy, to a man who had more or less concern in the murder of her grandfather, father, brother, and uncle, and who had twice commanded her death, in case of his own. Ever after, Herod was haunted by the image of the murdered Mariamne, until disorder of the mind brought on disorder of body, which led to temporary derangement."

—MILMAN.

HEBREW MELODIES.

Oh, Marianne! where art thou?
Thou canst not hear my bitter pleading:
Ah! I couldst thou—thou wouldest pardon now,
Though Heaven were to my prayer unheeding.

And is she dead?—and did they dare
Obey my frenzy's jealous raving?
My wrath but doom'd my own despair:
The sword that smote her's o'er me waving.—
But thou art cold, my murder'd love!
And this dark heart is vainly craving
For her who soars alone above,
And leaves my soul unworthy saving.

She's gone, who shared my diadem;
She sunk, with her my joys entombing;
I swept that flower from Judah's stem,
Whose leaves for me alone were blooming;
And mine's the guilt, and mine the hell,
This women's desolation dooming;
And I have earn'd those tortures well,
Which unconsumed are still consuming!

BY THE RIVERS OF BABYLON WE SAT DOWN AND WEPT.

We sat down and wept by the waters
Of Babel, and thought of the day
When our foe, in the hue of his slaughters,
Made Salem's high places his prey;
And ye, oh, her desolate daughters!
Were scatter'd all weeping away.

While sadly we gazed on the river
Which roll'd on in freedom below,
They demanded the song: but, oh never
That triumph the stranger shall know!
May this right hand be wither'd for ever,
Ere it string our high harp for the foe!

On the willow that harp is suspended,
Oh, Salem! its sound should be free;
And the hour when thy glories were ended
But left me that token of thee:
And ne'er shall its soft tones be blended
With the voice of the spoiler by me!

TEN DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB.

THE Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when Summer is green,
That host with their banners at sunset were seen:
Like the leaves of the forest when Autumn hath blown,

That host on the morrow lay wither'd and strown.

For the Angel of Death spread his wings on the blast,
And breathed in the face of the foe as he pass'd;
And the eyes of the sleepers wax'd deadly and chill,
And their hearts but once heaved, and for ever grew still!

And there lay the steed with his nostril all wide,
But through it there roll'd not the breath of his
pride;
And the foam of his gaping lay white on the turf,
And told as the spray of the rock-busting surf.

And there lay the rider distorted and pale,
With the dew on his brow and the rust on his mail;
And the tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances unlifted, the trumpet unblown.

And the widows of Ashur are loud in their wail,
And the idols are broke in the temple of Babel;
And the might of the Gentile, unsmote by the sword,

Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord!

A SPIRIT PASS'D BEFORE ME. FROM JOB.

A SPIRIT pass'd before me: I beheld.
The face of immortality unveil'd—
Deep sleep came down on every eye save mine—
And there it stood,—all formless,—all divine:
Along my bones the creeping flesh did quake;
And as my damp hair stiffen'd, thus it spake:

"Is man more just than God? Is man more pure
Than he who deems even Seraphs insecure?
Creatures of clay—vain dwellers in the dust!
The moth survives you, and are ye more just?
Things of a day! you wither ere the night,
Headless and blind to Wisdom's wasted light!"

ON THE DAY OF THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM BY TITUS.

FROM the last hill that looks on thy city's holy dome
I beheld thee, oh, Sion! when render'd to Rome:
'T was thy last sun went down, and the flames of thy fall
Flash'd back on the last glance I gave to thy wall.

I look'd for thy temple, I look'd for thy home,
And forgot for a moment my bondage to come:
I beheld but the death-fire that fed on thy fame,
And the fast-fetter'd hands that made vengeance
in vain.

On many an eve, the high spot whence I gazed
Had reflected the last beam of day as it faded;
While I stood on the height, and beheld the decline
Of the rays from the mountain that shone on thy shrine.

And now on that mountain I stood on that day,
But I mark'd not the twilight beam melting away:
Oh! would that the lightning had glared in its stead,
And the thunderbolt burst on the conqueror's head!

But the gods of the Pagan shall never atone
The shrine where Jehovah disdain'd not to reign;
And scatter'd and scorn'd as thy people may be,
Our worship, oh, Father! is only for thee.

The reverse of the small silver coin of the famous Jewish leader, Bar-cochab, who led the last great Jewish revolt against the Romans (A. D. 132-136), here the inscription, Barcochab Jerusalem. "The reverse" is around two trumpets, which were doubtless a reminder of the command of Moses that they should sound the signal for the departure of the camp. (Numbers x. 1; 1 Macc. xvi. 5.) A specimen of this coin is here.

DOMESTIC PIECES.

1816.

FARE THEE WELL.*

"Alas! they have been friends in youth;
But whispering tongues can poison truth;
And constancy lives in realms above;
And life is thorny; and youth is vain;
And to be wroth with one we love,
Doth work like madness in the brain;
• • •
But never either found another
To free the hollow heart from paining—
They stood aloof, the scars remaining,
Like cliffs which had been rent asunder;
A dreary sea now flows between,
But neither heat, nor frost, nor thunder,
Shall wholly do away, I ween,
The marks of that which once hath been."
COLERIDGE'S Christabel.

FARE thee well! and if forever,
Still forever, fare thee well:
Even though unforgiving, never
Gainst thee shall my heart rebel.

Would that breast were bared before thee
Where thy head so oft hath lain,
While that placid sleep came o'er thee
Which thou ne'er canst know again:

Would that breast, by thee glanced over,
Every inmost thought could show!
Then thou wouldst at last discover
'T was not well to spurn it so.

Though the world for this commend thee—
Though it smile upon the blow,
Even its praises must offend thee,
Founded on another's woe:

Though my many faults defaced me,
Could no other arm be found,
Than the one which once embraced me,
To inflict a cureless wound?

Yet, oh yet, thyself deceive not;
Love may sink by slow decay,
But by sudden wrench, believe not
Hearts can thus be torn away:

Still thine own life its life retaineth—
Still must mine, though bleeding, beat;
And the undying thought which paineth
Is—that we no more may meet.

These are words of deeper sorrow
Than the wail above the dead;
Both shall live, but every morrow
Wake us from a widow's bed.

And when thou wouldst solace gather,
When our child's first accents flow,
Wilt thou teach her to say "Father!"
Though his care she must forego?

When her little hands shall press thee,
When her lip to thine is press'd,
Think of him whose prayer shall bless thee,
Think of him thy love had bless'd!

Should her lineaments resemble
Those thou never more mayst see,
Then thy heart will softly tremble
With a pulse yet true to me.

All my faults perchance thou knowest,
All my madness none can know;
All my hopes, where'er thou goest,
Wither, yet with thee they go.

Every feeling hath been shaken;
Pride, which not a world could bow,
Bows to thee—by thee forsaken,
Even my soul forsakes me now:

But 't is done—all words are idle—
Words from me are vainlier still;
But the thoughts we cannot bridle
Force their way without the will.

Fare thee well!—thus disunited,
Torn from every nearer tie,
Sear'd in heart, and lone, and blighted,
More than this I scarce can die.

[March 17, 1818.]

A SKETCH.†

"Honest—honest Iago!
If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee."
SHAKESPEARE.

BORN in the garret, in the kitchen bred,
Promoted thence to deck her mistress' head;
Next—for some gracious service unexpress'd,
And from its wages only to be guess'd—

* "It was about the middle of April, 1816, that his two celebrated copies of verses, 'Fare thee well,' and 'A Sketch,' made their appearance in the newspapers. Byron in his 'Memoranda' described, and in a manner whose sincerity there was no doubting, the swell of tender recollections under the influence of which, as he sat one night musing in his study, these stanzas were produced,—the tears, as he said, falling fast over the paper as he wrote them. Neither did it appear, from that account, to have been from any wish or intention of his own, but through the injudicious zeal of a friend whom he had suffered to take a copy, that the verses met the public eye."—MOORE. The appearance of the MR. confirms this account of the circumstances under which it was written. It is blotted all over with the marks of tears. † "I send you my last night's dream, and request to have fifty copies struck off, for private distribution. I wish Mr. Gifford to look at them. They are from life."—Lord Byron to Mr. Murray, March 20, 1818. The person alluded to in "A Sketch" was Mrs. Clermont, Lady Byron's companion.

DOMESTIC PIECES.

Raised from the toilette to the table,—where
 Her wondering betters wait behind her chair.
 With eye unmov'd, and forehead unabash'd,
 She dines from off the plate she lately wash'd.
 Quick with the tale, and ready with the lie—
 The genial confidante, and general spy—
 Who could, ye gods! her next employment guess—
 An only infant's earliest governess!
 She taught the child to read, and taught so well,
 That she herself, by teaching, learn'd to spell.
 An adept next in penmanship she grows,
 As many a nameless slander deftly shows:
 What she had made the pupil of her art,
 None know—but that high Soul secured the heart,
 And panted for the truth it could not hear,
 With longing breast and undeluded ear.
 Fool'd was perversion by that youthful mind,
 Which Flattery fool'd not—Baseness could not blind,
 Deceit infect not—near Contagion soil—
 Indulgence weaken—nor Example spoil—
 Nor master'd Science tempt her to look down
 On humbler talents with a pitying frown—
 Nor Genius swell—nor Beauty render vain—
 Nor Envy ruffle to retaliate pain—
 Nor Fortune change—Pride raise—nor Passion bow,
 Nor Virtue teach austerity—till now.
 Serenely purest of her sex that live,
 But wanting one sweet weakness—to forgive,
 Too shock'd at faults her soul can never know,
 She deems that all could be like her below:
 Foe to all vice, yet hardly Virtue's friend,
 For Virtue pardons those she would amend.

But to the theme:—now laid aside too long,
 The baleful burthen of this honest song—
 Though all her former functions are no more,
 She rules the circle which she served before.
 If mothers—none know why—before her quake;
 If daughters dread her for the mother's sake;
 If early habits—those false links which bind
 At times the loftiest to the meanest mind—
 Have given her power too deeply to instill
 The angry essence of her deadly will;
 If like a snake she steal within your walls,
 Till the black slime betray her as she crawls;
 If like a viper to the heart she wind,
 And leave the venom there she did not find;
 What marvel that this bog of hatred works
 Eternal evil latent as she lurks,
 To make a Pandemonium where she dwells,
 And reign the Hecate of domestic hells?
 Skill'd by a touch to deepen scandal's tints
 With all the kind mendacity of hints,
 While mingling truth with falsehood—sneers with smiles—
 A thread of candor with a web of wiles;
 A plain blunt show of briefly-spoken seeming,
 To hide her bloodless heart's soul-harden'd schem-
 ing;
 A lip of lies; a face form'd to conceal,
 And, without feeling, mock at all who feel:
 With a vile mask the Gorgon would disown;
 A cheek of parchment—and an eye of stone.
 Mark, how the channels of her yellow blood
 Coze to her skin, and stagnate there to mud,
 Creased like the centipede in saffron mail,
 Or darker greenness of the scorpion's scale—
 (For drawn from reptiles only may we trace Congenial colors in that soul or face)—

Look on her features! and behold her mind
 As in a mirror of itself defined:
 Look on the picture! deem it not o'ercharged—
 There is no trait which might not be enlarged:
 Yet true to "Nature's journeyman," who made
 This monster when their mistress left off trade—
 This female dog-star of her little sky,
 Whence all beneath her influence droop or die.

Oh! wretch without a tear—without a thought,
 Save joy above the ruin thou hast wrought—
 The time shall come, nor long remote, when thou
 Shalt feel far more than thou inflictest now;
 And turn thee howling in unpitied pain.
 May the strong curse of crush'd affections light
 Back on thy bosom with reflected blight!
 And make thee in thy leprosy of mind
 As loathsome to thyself as to mankind!
 Till all thy self-thoughts curdle into hate,
 Black—as thy will for others would create:
 Till thy hard heart be calcined into dust,
 And thy soul water in its hideous crust.
 Oh, may thy grave be sleepless as the bed,
 The widow'd couch of fire, that then hast spread!
 Then, when thou fain wouldst weary Heaven with prayer,
 Look on thine earthly victims—and despair!
 Down to the dust!—and, as thou rot'st away,
 Even worms shall perish on thy poisonous alay.
 But for the love I bore, and still must bear,
 To her thy malice from all thee would tear—
 Thy name—thy human name—to every eye
 The climax of all scorn should hang on high,
 Exalted o'er thy less abhor'd compeers—
 And festering in the infamy of years.

[March 20, 1831.]

STANZAS TO AUGUSTA.*

When all around grew drear and dark,
 And reason half withheld her ray—
 And hope but shed a dying spark
 Which more misled my lonely way;
 In that deep midnight of the mind,
 And that internal strife of heart,
 When, dreading to be deem'd too kind,
 The weak despair—the cold depart;
 When fortune changed—and love fled far,
 And hatred's shafts flew thick and fast,
 Thou wert the solitary star
 Which rose and set not to the last.
 Oh! blest be thine unbroken light!
 That watch'd me as a scorpion's eye,
 And stood between me and the night,
 For ever shining sweetly nigh.

And when the cloud upon us came,
 Which strove to blacken o'er thy ray—
 Then purer spread its gentle flame,
 And dash'd the darkness all away.
 Still may thy spirit dwell on mine,
 And teach it what to brave or brook—
 There's more in one soft word of thine
 Than in the world's defied rebuke.

* The poet's sister, the Honorable Mrs. Leigh.—These stanzas—the parting tribute to her, whose unshaken tenderness had been the author's sole consolation during the crisis of domestic misery—were, we believe, the last verses written by Lord Byron in England. In a note to Mr. Rogers, dated April 18, he says,—"My sister is now with me, and leaves town to-morrow: we shall not meet again for some time at all events.—I ever; and under these circumstances, I trust to stand excused to you and Mr. Sheridan, for being unable to wait upon him this evening." On the 18th, the poet took a last leave of his native country.

DOMESTIC PIECES.

Thou stood'st, as stands a lovely tree,
That still unbroke, though gently bent,
Still waves with fond fidelity
Its boughs above a monument.

The winds might rend—the skies might pour,
But there thou wert—and still wouldst be Devoted in the stormiest hour
To shed thy weeping leaves o'er me.

But thou and thine shall know no blight,
Whatever fate on me may fall;
For Heaven in sunshine will requite
The kind—and thee the most of all.

Then let the ties of baffled love
Be broken—thine will never break;
Thy heart can feel—but will not move;
Thy soul, though soft, will never shake.

And these, when all was lost beside,
Were found and still are fir'd in thee;—
And bearing still a breast so tried,
Earth is no desert—ev'n to me.

STANZAS TO AUGUSTA.*

THOUGH the day of my destiny's over,
And the star of my fate hath declined,
Thy soft heart refused to discover
The faults which so many could find;
Though thy soul with my grief was acquainted,
It shrunk not to share it with me,
And the love which my spirit hath painted
It never hath found but in thee.

Then when nature around me is smiling,
The last smile which answers to mine,
I do not believe it beguiling,
Because it reminds me of thine;
And when winds are at war with the ocean,
As the breasts I beloved in with me,
If their billows excite an emotion,
It is that they bear me from thee.

Though the rock of my last hope is shiver'd,
And its fragments are sunk in the wave,
Though I feel that my soul is deliver'd
To pain—it shall not be its slave.
There is many a pang to pursue me:
They may crush, but they shall not condemn—
They may torture, but shall not subdue me—
'T is of thee that I think—not of them.

Though human, thou didst not deceive me,
Though woman, thou didst not forsake,
Though loved, thou fororest to grieve me,
Though slander'd, thou never couldst shake;
Though trusted, thou didst not disclaim me,
Though parted, it was not to fly,
Though watchful, 't was not to defame me,
Nor, mute, that the world might belie.

Yet I blame not the world, nor despise it,
Nor the war of the many with one;
If my soul was not fitted to prize it,
'T was folly not sooner to shun:
And if dearly that error hath cost me,
And more than I once could foresee,
I have found that, whatever it lost me,
It could not deprive me of thee.

From the wreck of the past, which hath perish'd,
Thus much I at least may recall,

It hath taught me that what I most cherish'd
Deserved to be dearest of all:
In the desert a fountain is springing,
In the wide waste there still is a tree,
And a bird in the solitude singing,
Which speaks to my spirit of thee.

[July 25, 1818.]

EPISTLE TO AUGUSTA.

MY sister! my sweet sister! if a name
Dearer and purer were, it should be thine;
Mountains and seas divide us, but I claim
No tears, but tenderness to answer mine:
Go where I will, to me thou art the same—
A loved regret which I would not resign.
There yet are two things in my destiny,—
A world to roam through, and a home with thee.

The first were nothing—had I still the last,
It were the haven of my happiness;
But other claims and other ties thou hast,
And mine is not the wish to make them less.
A strange doom is thy father's son's, and past
Recalling, as it lies beyond redress;
Reversed for him our grandsire's† fate of yore,—
He had no rest at sea, nor I on shore.

If my inheritance of storms hath been
In other elements, and on the rocks
Of perils, overlook'd or unforeseen,
I have sustain'd my share of worldly shocks,
The fault was mine: nor do I seek to screen
My errors with defensive paradox;
I have been cunning in mine overthrow,
The careful pilot of my proper woe.

Mine were my faults, and mine be their reward,
My whole life was a contest, since the day
That gave me being, gave me that which marr'd
The gift,—a fate, or will, that walk'd astray;
And I at times have found the struggle hard,
And thought of shaking off my bonds of clay:
But now I fain would for a time survive,
If but to see what next can well arrive.

Kingdoms and empires in my little day
I have outlived, and yet I am not old;
And when I look on this, the petty spray
Of my own years of trouble, which have roll'd
Like a wild bay of breakers, melts away:
Something—I know not what—does still uphold
A spirit of alight patience:—not in vain,
Even for its own sake, do we purchase pain.

Perhaps the workings of defiance stir
Within me,—or perhaps a cold despair,
Brought on when ills habitually recur,—
Perhaps a kinder clime, or purer air
(For even to this may change of soul refer,
And with light armor we may learn to bear),
Have taught me a strange quiet, which was not
The chief companion of a calmer lot.

I feel almost at times as I have felt
In happy childhood; trees, and flowers, and brooks,
Which do remember me of where I dwell:
Ere my young mind was sacrificed to books,
Come as of yore upon me, and can melt
My heart with recognition of their looks;
And even at moments I could think I see
Some living thing to love—but none like thee.

Here are the Alpine landscapes which create
A fund for contemplation;—to admire

* These beautiful verses, so expressive of the writer's wounded feelings at the moment, were written in July, 1818, at the Campagna Diocesi, near Geneva, and transmitted to England for publication, with some other pieces.

† Admiral Byron was remarkable for never making a voyage without a tempest. He was known to the sailors by the sea-sickness name of "Foul-weather Jack."

DOMESTIC PIECES.

Is a brief feeling of a trivial date;
But something worthier do such scenes inspire:
Here to be lonely is not desolate,
For much I view which I could most desire,
And, above all, a lake I can behold
Loveller, not dearer, than our own of old.

Oh that thou wert but with me!—but I grow
The fool of my own wishes, and forget
The solitude which I have vaunted so
Has lost its praise in this but one regret;
There may be others which I less may show;—
I am not of the plaintive mood, and yet
I feel an ebb in my philosophy,
And the tide rising in my alter'd eye.

I did remind thee of our own dear Lake,*
By the old Hall which may be mine no more.
Leman's is fair: but think not I forsake
The sweet remembrance of a dearer shore:
Sad havoc Time must with my memory make,
Ere that or thou can fade these eyes before:
Though, like all things which I have loved, they are Design'd for ever, or divided far.

The world is all before me; I but ask
Of Nature that with which she will comply—
It is but in her summer's sun to bask,
To mingle with the quiet of her sky,
To see her gentle face without a mask,
And never gaze on it with apathy.
She was my early friend, and now shall be
My sister—till I look again on thee.

I can reduce all feelings but this one;
And that I would not!—for at length I see
Such scenes as those wherein my life begun.
The earliest—even the only paths for me—
Had I but sooner learnt the crowd to shun,
I had been better than I now can be;
The passions which have torn me would have slept;
I had not suffer'd, and thou hadst not wept.

With false Ambition what had I to do?
Little with Love, and least of all with Fame;
And yet they came unsought, and with me grew,
And made me all which they can make—a name.
Yet this was not the end I did pursue;
Surely I once beheld a nobler aim.
But all is over—I am one the more
To baffled millions which have gone before.

And for the future, this world's future may
From me demand but little of my care;
I have outlived myself by many a day;
Having survived so many things that were;
My years have been no slumber, but the prey
Of ceaseless vigils; for I had the share
Of life which might have fill'd a century,
Before its fourth in time had pass'd me by.

And for the remnant which may be to come
I am content; and for the past I feel
Not thankful,—for within the crowded sum
Of struggles, happiness at times would steal,
And for the present, I would not benumb
My feelings further.—Nor shall I conceal
That with all this I still can look around,
And worship Nature with a thought profound.

For thee, my own sweet sister, in thy heart
I know myself secure, as thou in mine;
We were and are—I am, even as thou art—
Beings who ne'er each other can resign;

It is the same, together or apart,
From life's commencement to its slow decline
We are entwined—let death come slow or fast,
The tie which bound the first endures the last!

LINES

ON HEARING THAT LADY STYON WAS ILL.†

AND thou wert sad—yet I was not with thee;
And thou wert sick, and yet I was not near;
Methought that joy and health alone could be
Where I was not—and pain and sorrow here!
And is it thus?—it is as I foretold,
And shall be more so; for the mind recoils
Upon itself, and the wreck'd heart lies cold,
While heaviness collects the shatter'd spoils.
It is not in the storm nor in the strife
We feel benumb'd, and wish to be no more,
But in the after-silence on the shore,
When all is lost, except a little life.

I am too well avenged!—but 'twas my right;
Whatever my sins might be, thou wert not meet
To be the Nemesis who should requite—
Nor did Heaven choose so near an instrument.
Mercy is for the merciful!—if thou
Hast been of such, 't will be accorded now.
Thy nights are banish'd from the realms of sleep!—
Yes! they may flatter thee, but thou shalt feel
A hollow agony which will not heal.
For thou art pillow'd on a curse too deep;
Thou hast down in thy sorrow, and must reap
The bitter harvest in a woe as real!
I have had many foes, but none like thee;
For 'gainst the rest myself I could defend,
And be avenged, or turn them into friend;
But thou in safe implacability
Hast nought to dread—in thy own weakness shielded,
And in my love, which hath but too much yielded,
And spared, for thy sake, some I should not spare;
And thus upon the world—trust in thy truth,
And the wild fame of my ungentle youth—
On things that were not, and on things that are—
Even upon such a basis hast thou built
A monument, whose cement hath been guilt!
The moral Clytemnestra of thy land,
And hew'd down, with an unsuspected sword;
Fame, peace, and hope—and all the better life
Which, but for this cold treason of thy heart,
Might still have risen from out the grave of death,
And found a nobler duty than to part.
But of thy virtues didst thou make a vice,
Trafficking with them in a purpose cold,
For present anger, and for future gold—
And buying other's grief at any price.
And thus once enter'd into crooked ways,
The early truth, which was thy proper guide,
Did not still walk beside thee—but at times,
And with a breast unknowing its own crimes,
Deceit, avertments incompatible,
Equivocations, and the thoughts which dwell
In Janus-spirits—the signposts which dwell
Which learn to lie with silence—the protest
Of prudence, with advantage annex'd—
The acquiescence in all things which tempt,
No matter how, to the desired end—
All found a place in thy philosophy.
The means were worthy, and the end is won—
I would not do by thee as thou hast done!

(Continued, 2nd)

* The Lake of Newstead Abbey.

† These verses were written immediately after the failure of the negotiation for a reconciliation between Lord Byron and Switzerland for Italy, but were not intended for publication: as, however, they have recently found their way into circulation, we insert them in this collection.

MONODY

On the Death of the Right Hon. E. B. Sheridan.*

SPOKEN AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

When the last sunshine of expiring day
In summer's twilight weeps itself away,
Who hath not felt the softness of the hour
Sink on the heart, as dew along the flower?
With a pure feeling which absorbs and awes
While Nature makes that melancholy pause,
Her breathing moment on the bridge where Time
Of light and darkness forms an arch sublime;
Who hath not shared that calm, so still and deep,
The voiceless thought which would not speak but
weep,

A holy concord—and a bright regret,
A glorious sympathy with suns that set?
'T is not harsh sorrow—but a tenderer woe,
Nameless, but dear to gentle hearts below,
Felt without bitterness—but full and clear,
A sweet dejection—a transparent tear,
Unmix'd with worldly grief or selfish stain,
Shed without shame—and secret without pain.

Even as the tenderness that hour instills
When Summer's day declines along the hills,
So feels the fullness of our heart and eyes
When all of Genius which can perish dies.
A mighty Spirit is eclipsed—a Power
Hath pass'd from day to darkness—to whose hour
Of light no likeness is bequeath'd—no name,
Focus at once of all the rays of Fame!
The flash of Wit—the bright Intelligence,
The beam of Song—the blaze of Eloquence,
Set with their Sun—but still have left behind
The enduring produce of immortal Mind;
Fruits of a genial morn, and glorious noon,
A deathless part of him who died too soon.
But small that portion of the wondrous whole,
These sparkling segments of that circling soul,
Which all embraced—and lighten'd over all,
To cheer—to please—to please—or to appal.
From the charm'd council to the festive board,
Of human feelings the unbounded lord;
In whose acclaim the loftiest voices vied,
The praised—the proud—who made his praise their pride.
When the loud cry of trampled Hindoostan
Arose to Heaven in her appeal from man,
His was the thunder—his the avenging rod,
The wrath—the delegated voice of God!
Which shook the nations through his lips—and blazed
Till vanquish'd senates trembled as they praised.

And here, oh! here, where yet all young and warm,
The gay creations of his spirit charm,

* Mr. Sheridan died the 7th of July, 1816, and this monody was written at Diodati on the 17th, at the request of Mr. Douglas Kinnaird.

The matchless dialogue—the deathless wit,
Which knew not what it was to intermit;
The glowing portraits, fresh from life, that bring Home to our heart the truth from which they spring;

These wondrous beings of his fancy, wrought
To fullness by the fiat of his thought,
Here in their first abode you still may meet,
Bright with the hues of his Promethean heat;
A halo of the light of other days,
Which still the splendor of its orb betrays.

But should there be to whom the fatal blight
Of falling Wisdom yields a base delight,
Men who exult when minds of heavenly tone
Jar in the music which was born their own,
Still let them pause—ah! little do they know
That what to them seem'd Vice might be but Woe.
Hard is his fate on whom the public gaze
Is fix'd for ever to detract or praise;
Repose denies her requiem to his name,
And Folly loves the martyrdom of Fame.
The secret enemy whose sleepless eye
Stands sentinel—accuser—judge—and spy,
The foe—the fool—the jealous—and the vain,
The envious who but breathe in others' pain,
Behold the host! delighting to deprave,
Who track the steps of Glory to the grave,
Watch every fault that daring Genius owes
Half to the ardor which its birth bestows,
Distort the truth, accumulate the lies,
And pile the pyramid of Calumny!
These are his portion—but if join'd to these Gaunt Poverty should league with deep Disease,
If the high Spirit must forget to soar,
And stoop to strive with Misery at the door,
To soothe the indignity—and face to face
Meet sordid Rage—and wrestle with Disgrace,
To find in Hope but the renew'd caress,
The serpent-fold of further Faithlessness:—
If such may be the ills which men assail,
What marvel if at last the mightiest fall?
Breasts to whom all the strength of feeling given
Bear hearts electric—charged with fire from Heaven,
Black with the rude collision, inly torn,
By clouds surrounded, and on whirlwinds borne,
Driven o'er the lowering atmosphere that nurst
Thoughts which have turn'd to thunder—scoreb,
and burst.

But far from us and from our mimic scene
Such things should be—if such have ever been;
Ours be the gentler wish, the kinder task,
To give the tribute Glory need not ask,
To mourn the vanish'd beam, and add our mite
Of praise in payment of a long delight.
Ye Orators! whom yet our councils yield,
Mourn for the veteran Hero of your field!

THE DREAM.

The worthy rival of the wondrous Three!*
Whose words were sparks of Immortality!
Ye Bards! to whom the Drama's Muse is dear,
He was your Master—emulate him here!
Ye men of wit and social eloquence!
He was your brother—bear him ance!
While Powers of mind almost of boundless range,
Complete in kind—as various in their change,
While Eloquence—Wit—Poetry—and Mirth,

That bumber Harmonist of care on Earth,
Survive within our souls—while lives our sense
Of pride in Merit's proud pre-eminence,
Long shall we seek his likeness—long in vain,
And turn to all of him which may remain,
Sighing that Nature form'd but one such man,
And broke the die—in moulding Sheridan.

[Diodati, July 27, 1833.]

THE DREAM.

I.

Our life is twofold: Sleep hath its own world,
A boundary between the things misnamed
Death and existence: Sleep hath its own world,
And a wide realm of wild reality.
And dreams in their development have breath,
And tears, and tortures, and the touch of joy;
They leave a weight upon our waking thoughts,
They take a weight from off our waking toils,
They do divide our being: they become
A portion of ourselves as of our time,
And look like heralds of eternity;
They pass like spirits of the past,—they speak
Like sibyls of the future: they have power—
The tyranny of pleasure and of pain:
They make us what we were not—what they will,
And shake us with the vision that's gone by,
The dread of vanish'd shadows—Are they so?
Is not the past all shadow? What are they?
Creations of the mind?—The mind can make
Substance, and people planets of its own
With beings brighter than have been, and give
A breath to forms which can outlive all flesh.
I would recall a vision which I dream'd
Perchance in sleep—for in itself a thought,
A slumbering thought, is capable of years,
And curdles a long life into one hour.

II.

I saw two beings in the hues of youth
Standing upon a hill, a gentle hill,
Green and of mild declivity, the last
As 'twere the cape of a long ridge of such,
Save that there was no sea to lave its base,
But a most living landscape, and the wave
Of woods and cornfields, and the abodes of men
Scatter'd at intervals, and wreathing smoke
Arisen from such rustic roofs;—the hill
Was crown'd with a peculiar disdem
Of trees, in circular array, so fix'd,
Not by the sport of nature, but of man:
These two, a maiden and a youth, were there
Gazing—the one on all that was beneath
Fair as herself—but the boy gazed on her;
And both were young, and one was beautiful:

And both were young—yet not alike in years.
As the sweet moon on the horizon's verge,
The maid was on the eve of womanhood;
The boy had fewer summers, but his heart
Had far outgrown his years, and to his eye
There was but one beloved face on earth,
And that was shining on him; he had look'd
Upon it till it could not pass away;
He had no breath, no being, but in hers;
She was his voice; he did not speak to her,
But trembled on her words: she was his sight,
For his eye follow'd hers, and saw with hers,
Which color'd all his objects: he had ceased
To live within himself; she was his life,
The ocean to the river of his thoughts,
Which terminated all: upon a tale
A touch of hers, his blood would ebb and flow,
And his cheek change tempestuously—his heart
Unknowing of its cause of agony.
But she in these fond feelings had no share:
Her sighs were not for him; to her he was Even as a brother—but no more: 'twas manhood,
For brotherless she was, save in the name.
Her infant friendship had bestow'd on him;
Herself the solitary action left
Of a time-honor'd race.—It was a name
Which pleased him, and yet pleased him not—and
why?

Time taught him a deep answer—when she loved
Another: even now she loved another,
And on the summit of that hill she stood
Looking afar if yet her lover's stood,
Kept pace with her expectancy, and flew.

III.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
There was an ancient mansion, and before
Its walls there was a steep cagliarion'd:
Within an antique Oratory stood
The Boy of whom I spake;—he was alone,
And pale, and pacing to and fro: anon
He sat him down, and seized a pen, and traced
Words which I could not guess of; then he lean'd
His bow'd head on his hands, and shook as 'twere
With a convulsion—then arose again,

* Fox—Pitt—Burke.

† In society I have met Sheridan frequently. He was superb! I have seen him cut up Whitbread, quia Madam de Staël, annihilate Colman, and do little less by some others of good fame and ability. I have met him at all places and parties—at Whitehall with the Melbournes, at the Marquis of Tavistock's, at Robinson's the auctioneers, at Sir Humphry Davy's, at Sam Rogers's—in short, in most kinds of company, and always found him convivial and delightful.—Byron Diary, 1831.

‡ In the first draught of this poem, Lord Byron had entitled it "The Destiny." Mr. Moore says, "It cost him much a tear in writing," and justly characterizes it as "the most mournful as well as picturesque story of a wretched life that ever came from the pen and heart of man." It was composed at Diodati, in July, 1833.

§ "Our union," said Lord Byron to Miss, "would have been a feud in which blood had been shed by our fathers—it could have joined hands, bred and rich—it would have joined at least one heart and two persons not fit to be joined in two years any older—and—and—and—what was the result!"

These two, a maiden and a youth, were there
Gazing—the one on all that was beneath
Fair as herself—but the boy gazed on her;
And both were young, and one was beautiful:

THE DREAM.—Page 380.

THE DREAM.

And with his teeth and quivering hands did tear
What he had written, but he shed no tears.
And he did calm himself, and fix his brow
Into a kind of quiet : as he paused,
The Lady of his love re-enter'd there ;
She was serene and smiling then, and yet
She knew she was by him beloved,—she knew,
For quickly comes such knowledge, that his heart
Was darken'd with her shadow, and she saw
That he was wretched, but she saw not all.*
He rose, and with a cold and gentle grasp
He took her hand ; a moment o'er his face
A tablet of unutterable thoughts
Was traced, and then it faded, as it came,
He dropp'd the hand he held, and with slow steps
Retired, but not as bidding her adieu,
For they did part with mutual smiles ; he pass'd
From out the massy gate of that old Hall,
And mounting on his steed he went his way ;
And ne'er repass'd that hoary threshold more.

IV.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The Boy was sprung to manhood : in the wilds
Of fiery climes he made himself a home,
And his soul drank their sunbeams : he was girt
With strange and dusky aspects ; he was not Himself like what he had been ; on the sea
And on the shore he was a wanderer ;
There was a mass of many images
Crowded like waves upon me, but he was
A part of all ; and in the last he lay
Reposing from the noontide sultriness,
Couch'd among fallen columns, in the shade
Of ruined walls that had survived the names
Of those who rear'd them : by his sleeping side
Stood camels grazing, and some goodly steeds
Were fasten'd near a fountain ; and a man
Clad in a flowing garb did watch the while,
While many of his tribe slumber'd around :
And they were canopied by the blue sky,
So cloudless, clear, and purely beautiful,
That God alone was to be seen in Heaven.

V.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The Lady of his love was wed with One
Who did not love her better :—in her home,
A thousand leagues from his,—her native home,
She dwelt, begirt with growing Infancy,
Daughters and sons of Beauty,—but behold !
Upon her face there was the tint of grief,
The settled shadow of an inward strife,
And an unquiet drooping of the eye,
As if its lids were charged with unshed tears.
What could her grief be ?—she had all she loved,
And he who had so loved her was not there
To trouble with bad hopes, or evil wish,
Or ill-repress'd affliction, her pure thoughts.
What could her grief be ?—she had loved him not,
Nor given him cause to deem himself beloved,
Nor could he be a part of that which prey'd
Upon her mind—a spectre of the past.

VI.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The Wanderer was return'd.—I saw him stand
Before an Altar—with a gentle bride ;

Her face was fair, but was not that which made
The Starlight of his Boyhood :—as he stood
Even at the altar, o'er his brow there came
The selfsame aspect, and the quivering shock
That in the antique Oratory shook
His bosom in its solitude ; and then—
As in that hour—a moment o'er his face
The tablet of unutterable thoughts
Was traced—and then it faded as it came,
And he stood calm and quiet, and he spoke
The fitting vows, but heard not his own words,
And all things reel'd around him ; he could see
Not that which was, nor that which should have been—
But the old mansion, and the accustomed hall,
And the remember'd chambers, and the place,
The day, the hour, the sunshine, and the shade,
All things pertaining to that place and hour,
And her who was his destiny, came back
And thrust themselves between him and the light :
What business had they there at such a time ? †

VII.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The Lady of his love ;—Oh ! she was changed,
As by the sickness of the soul ; her mind
Had wander'd from its dwelling, and her eyes,
They had not their own lustre, but the look
Which is not of the earth ; she was become
The queen of a fantastic realm ; her thoughts
Were combinations of disjointed things ;
And forms impalpable and unperceived
Of others' sight familiar were to hers.
And this the world calls frenzy ; but the wise
Have a far deeper madness, and the glance
Of melancholy is a fearful gift ;
What is it but the telescope of truth ?
Which strips the distance of its fantasies,
And brings life near in utter nakedness,
Making the cold reality too real !

VIII.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The Wanderer was alone as heretofore,
The beings which surrounded him were gone,
Or were at war with him ; he was a mark
For blight and desolation, compass'd round
With Hatred and Contention ; Pain was mix'd
In all which was served up to him, until,
Like to the Pontic monarch of old days,
He fed on poisons, and they had no power,
But were a kind of nutriment ; he lived
Through that which had been death to many men,
And made him friends of mountains : with the stars
And the quick Spirit of the Universe
He held his dialogues ! and they did teach
To him the magic of their mysteries ;
To him the book of Night was open'd wide,
And voices from the deep abyss reveal'd
A marvel and a secret—Be it so.

IX.

My dream was past ; it had no further change.
It was of a strange order, that the doom
Of these two creatures should be thus traced out
Almost like a reality—the one
To end in madness—both in misery. [July, 1836.]

* "I had long been in love with M. A. C., and never told it, though she had discovered it without. I recollect my sensations, but cannot describe them, and it is as well."—Byron Diary, 1822.

† This touching picture agrees closely, in many of its circumstances, with Lord Byron's own prose account of the wedding in his Memoranda : in which he describes himself as waking, on the morning of his marriage, with the most melancholy reflections, on seeing his wedding-suit spread out before him. In the same mood he wandered about the grounds alone, till he was summoned for the ceremony, and joined, for the first time, on that day, his bride and her family. He knelt down—he repeated the words after the clergyman ; but a mist was before his eyes—his thoughts were elsewhere ; and he was but awakened by the congratulations of the bystanders to find that he was—married.—MOORE.

THE LAMENT OF TASSO.

ADVERTISEMENT.

AT Ferrara, in the Library, are preserved the original MSS. of Tasso's Gerusalemme and of Guarini's Pastor Fido, with letters of Tasso, one from Tician to Ariosto, and the inkstand and chair, the tomb and the house of the latter. But, as misfortune has a greater interest for posterity, and little or none for the contemporary, the cell where Tasso was confined in the hospital of St. Anna attracts a more fixed attention than the residence or the monument of Ariosto—at least it had this effect on me. There are two inscriptions, one on the outer gate, the second over the cell itself, inviting, unnecessarily, the wonder and the indignation of the spectator. Ferrara is much decayed and depopulated: the castle still exists entire; and I saw the court where Parisina and Hugo were beheaded, according to the annal of Gibbon.*

The Lament of Tasso.

I.

Lower years!—It tries the thrilling frame to bear
And eagle spirit of a child of Song—
Long years of outrage, calumny, and wrong;
Imputed madness, prison'd solitude,
And the mind's canker in its savage mood,
When the impatient thirst of light and air
Parches the heart; and the abhorred grate,
Marring the sunbeams with its hideous shade,
Works through the throbbing eyeball to the brain,
With a hot sense of heaviness and pain;
And bars, at once, Captivity display'd
Stands scoffing through the never-open'd gate,
Which nothing through its bars admits, save day,
And tasteless food, which I have eat alone
Till its unsocial bitterness is gone;
And I can banquet like a beast of prey,
Sullen and lonely, couching in the cave
Which is my lair, and—it may be—my grave.
All this hath somewhat worn me, and may wear,
But must be borne. I stoop not to despair;
For I have battled with mine agony,
And made me wings wherewith to overfly
The narrow circus of my dungeon wall,
And freed the Holy Sepulchre from thrall;
And revell'd among men and things divine,
And pour'd my spirit over Palestine,
In honor of the sacred war for him,
The God who was on earth and is in heaven,
For he has strengthen'd me in heart and limb.
That through this sufferance I might be forgiven,

I have employ'd my penance to record
How Salem's shrine was won, and how adored,

II.

But this is o'er—my pleasant task is done!—
My long-sustaining friend of many years!
If I do blot thy final page with tears,
Know, that my sorrows have wrung from me pain.
But thou, my young creation! my soul's child!
Which ever playing round me came and smiled,
And wou'd me from myself with thy sweet sight,
Thou too art gone—and so is my delight:
And therefore do I weep and lily bleed.
With this last bruise upon a broken reed.
Thou too art ended—what is left me now?
For I have anguish yet to bear—and how?
I know not that—but in the innate force
Of my own spirit shall be found resource.
I have not sunk, for I had no resource.
Nor cause for such: they call'd me mad—and why?
Oh, Leonora! wilt not thou reply?
I was indeed delicious in my heart
To lift my love as lofty as thou art;
But still my frenzy was not of the mind;
I knew my fault, and feel my punishment
Not less because I suffer it unbest.
That thou wert beautiful, and I not blind,
Hath been the sin which shuts me from mankind;
But let them go, or torture as they will,
My heart can multiply thine image still;
Successful love may save itself away;
The wretched are the faithful; 't is their fate
To have all feeling, save the one, decay,
And every passion into one dilate,
As rapid rivers into ocean pour;
But ours is fathomless, and hath no shore.

* The original MS. of this poem is dated, "The Apennines, April 30, 1577." It was written in consequence of Lord Byron having visited Ferrara, for a single day, on his way to Florence. In a letter from Rome, he says—"The 'Lament of Tasso,' which I sent from Florence, has, I trust, arrived. I look upon it as a 'These be good rhymes!' as Pope's page said to him when he was a boy."

* Tasso's biographer, the Abate Serassi, has left it without doubt, that the first cause of the poet's punishment was his desire to be occasionally, or altogether, free from his servitude at the court of Alfonso. In 1575, Tasso resolved to visit Rome, and enjoy the indulgence of the jubilee; "and this error," says the Abate, "increasing the suspicion already entertained, that he was in search of another service, was the origin of his misfortune. On his return to Ferrara, Tasso, being treated with contempt, denounced the duke and the house of Este. For this offence he was arrested, conducted to the hospital of Saint Anna, and confined in a solitary cell as a madman. This dungeon is below the ground floor of the hospital, and the light penetrates through its grated window from a small yard, which seems to have been excavated in other cells. It is nine paces long, between five and six feet wide, and about seven feet high."—Annals, Vol. 48, p. 100.

THE LAMENT OF TASSO.

III.

Above me, hark! the long and maniac cry
Of minds and bodies in captivity.
And hark! the lash and the increasing howl,
And the half-inarticulate blasphemy!
There be some here with worse than frenzy foul,
Some who do still goad on the o'er-labor'd mind,
And dim the little light that's left behind
With needless torture, as their tyrant will
Is wound up to the lust of doing ill:
With these and with their victims am I class'd,
'Mid sounds and sights like these long years have pass'd;
'Mid sights and sounds like these my life may close:
So let it be—for then I shall repose.

IV.

I have been patient, let me be so yet;
I had forgotten half I would forget.
But it revives—Oh! would it were my lot
To be forgetful as I am forgot!—
Feel I not wroth with those who bade me dwell
In this vast lazar-house of many woes?
Where laughter is not mirth, nor thought the mind,
Nor words a language, nor e'en men mankind;
Where cries reply to curses, shrieks to blows,
And each is tortured in his separate hell—
For we are crowded in our solitudes—
Many, but each divided by the wall.
Which echoes Madness in her babbling moods;
While all can hear, none heed his neighbor's call—
None! save that One, the veriest wretch of all,
Who was not made to be the mate of these,
Nor bound between Distraction and Disease.
Feel I not wroth with those who placed me here?
Who have debased me in the minds of men;
Debarring me the usage of my own,
Blighting my life in best of its career,
Branding my thoughts as things to shun and fear?
Would I not pay them back these pangs again,
And teach them inward Sorrow's stifled groan?
The struggle to be calm, and cold distress,
Which undermines our Stoical success?
No!—still too proud to be vindictive—I
Have pardon'd princes' insults, and would die.
Yes, Sister of my Sovereign! for thy sake
I weed all bitterness from out my breast,
It hath no business where thou art a guest;
Thy brother hates—but I cannot detest;
Thou pitiest not—but I cannot forsake.

V.

Look on a love which knows not to despair,[†]
But all unquench'd is still my better part,
Dwelling deep in my shut and silent heart,
As dwells the gather'd lightning in its cloud,
Encompass'd with its dark and rolling shroud,
Till struck,—forth flies the all-ethereal dart!
And thus at the collision of thy name
The vivid thought still flashes through my frame,
And for a moment all things as they were
Flit by me;—they are gone—I am the same.
And yet my love without ambition grew;
I knew thy state, my station, and I knew
A princess was no love-mate for a bard;
I told it not, I breathed it not, it was Sufficient to itself, its own reward;
And if my eyes reveal'd it, they, alas!
Were punish'd by the silliness of thine,
And yet I did not venture to repine.
Thou wert to me a crystal-gridded shrine,

Worshipp'd at holy distance, and around
Hallow'd and meekly kiss'd the saintly ground;
Not for thou wert a princess, but that Love
Had robed thee with a glory, and array'd
Thy lineaments in beauty that dismay'd—
Oh! not dismay'd—but awed, like One above!
And in that sweet severity there was
A something which all softness did surpass—
I know not how—thy genius master'd mine—
My star stood still before thee:—if it were Presumptuous thus to love without design,
That sad fatality hath cost me dear;
But thou art dearest still, and I should be Fit for this cell, which wrongs me—but for thee.
The very love which lock'd me to my chain
Hath lighten'd half its weight; and for the rest,
Though heavy, lent me vigor to sustain,
And look to thee with undivided breast,
And foll the ingenuity of Pain.

VI.

It is no marvel—from my very birth
My soul was drunk with love,—which did pervade
And mingle with whate'er I saw on earth:
Of objects all inanimate I made
Idols, and out of wild and lonely flowers,
And rocks, whereby they grew, a paradise,
Where I did lay me down within the shade
Of waving trees, and dream'd uncounted hours,
Though I was child for wandering; and the wise
Shook their white aged heads o'er me, and said
Of such materials wretched men were made;
And such a truant boy would end in woe,
And that the only lesson was a blow;
And then they smote me, and I did not weep,
But cursed them in my heart, and to my haunt
Return'd and wept alone, and dream'd again
The visions which arise without a sleep.
And with my years my soul began to pant
With feelings of strange tumult and soft pain;
And the whole heart exhaled into One Want,
But undefined and wandering, till the day
I found the thing I sought—and that was thee;
And then I lost my being, all to be
Absorb'd in thine; the world was past away;
Thou didst annihilate the earth to me!

VII.

I loved all Solitude—but little thought
To spend I know not what of life, remote
From all communion with existence, save
The maniac and his tyrant;—had I been
Their fellow, many years ere this had seen
My mind like theirs corrupted to its grave.
But who hath seen me writhe, or heard me rave?
Perchance in such a cell we suffer more
Than the wreck'd sailor on his desert shore;
The world is all before him—mine is here,
Scarce twice the space they must accord my bier.
What though he perish, he may lift his eye,
And with a dying glance upbraid the sky;
I will not raise my own in such reproof,
Although 'tis clouded by my dungeon roof.

VIII.

Yet do I feel at times my mind decline,
But with a sense of its decay: I see
Unwonted lights along my prison shine,
And a strange demon, who is vexing me
With pilfering pranks and petty pains, below
The feeling of the healthful and the free;

[†]Not long after his imprisonment, Tasso appealed to the mercy of Alfonso, in a canzone of great beauty, couched in terms so respectful and pathetic, as must have moved. It might be thought, the severest bosom to relent. The heart of Alfonso was, however, impregnable to the appeal.

[‡]Was not the princess anxious to avoid her own ruin? In taking too warm an interest for the poet, did she not risk destroying herself, without saving him?"—FOSCOLO.

ODE ON VENICE

But much to One, who long hath suffer'd so,
Sickness of heart, and narrowness of place,
And all that may be borne, or can debate.
I thought mine enemies had been but Man,
But Spirits—Heaven forgave me—in the dearth
Of such defence the Powers of Evil can,
It may be, tempt me further,—and prevail
Against the outworn creature they assail.
Why in this furnace is my spirit proved,
Like steel in tempering fire? because I loved?
Because I loved what not to love, and see,
Was more or less than mortal, and than me.

IX.

I once was quick in feeling—that is o'er;
My scars are callous, or I should have dash'd
My brain against these bars, as the sun dash'd
In mockery through them;—If I bear and bore
The much I have recounted, and the more
Which hath no words,—'t is that I would not die
And sanction with self-slaughter the dull lie
Which snared me here, and with the brand of shame
Stamp Madness deep into my memory,
And woo Compassion to a blighted name,
Sealing the sentence which my foes proclaim.
No—it shall be immortal!—and I make
A future temple of my present cell,

Which nations yet shall visit for my sake.
While thou, Ferrara! when no longer dwell
The ducal chiefs within thee, shalt fall down,
And crumbling piecemeal view thy heartless hall,
A poet's wreath shall be thine only crown,—
A poet's dungeon thy most far renown,
While strangers wonder o'er thy unpeopled walls!
And thou, Leonora!—thou—who wert ashamed
That such as I could love—who blush'd to hear
To less than monarchs that thou couldst be dear,
Go! tell thy brother, that my heart, untamed
By grief, years, weariness—and it may be
A taint of that he would impute to me—
From long infection of a den like this,
Where the mind rots congenial with the abyss,— Adores thee still; and add—that when the towers
And battlements which guard his joyous hours
Of banquet, dance, and revel, are forgot,
Or left untended in a dull repose,
This—this—shall be a consecrated spot!
But Thou—when all that Birth and Beauty throws
Of magic round thee is extinct—shalt have
One half the laurel which overshades my grave.
No power in death can tear our names apart,
As none in life could rend thee from my heart.
Yes, Leonora! it shall be our fate
To be entwined for ever—but too late!

ODE ON VENICE:

I.

Oh, Venice! Venice! when thy marble walls
Are level with the waters, there shall be
A cry of nations o'er thy sunken halls,
A loud lament along the sweeping sea!
If I, a northern wanderer, weep for thee,
What should thy sons do?—anything but weep;
And yet they only murmur in their sleep.
In contrast with their fathers—as the alme,
The dull green ooze of the receding deep,
Is with the dashing of the spring-tide foam
That drives the sailor shipless to his home,
Are they to those that were; and thus they creep,
Crouching and crab-like, through their sapping streets.
Oh! agony—that centuries should reap
No mellow harvest! Thirteen hundred years
Of wealth and glory turn'd to dust and tears;
And every monument the stranger meets,
Church, palace, pillar, as a mourner greets;
And even the Lion all subdued appears,
And the harsh sound of the barbarian drum,
With dull and daily dissonance, repeats
The echo of thy tyrant's voice along
The soft waves, once all musical to song,
That heaved beneath the moonlight with the throng
Of gondolas—and to the busy hum

Of cheerful creatures, whose most sinful deeds
Were but the overbeating of the heart,
And flow of too much happiness, which needs
The aid of age to turn its course apart
From the luxuriant and voluptuous flood
Of sweet sensations, battling with the blood.
But these are better than the gloomy errors,
The weeds of nations in their last decay,
When Vice walks forth with her unsoften'd terrors,
And Mirth is madness, and but smiles to slay;
And Hope is nothing but a false delay,
The sick man's lightning half an hour ere death,
When Faintness, the last mortal birth of Pain,
And apathy of limb, the dull beginning
Of the cold staggering race which Death is winning,
Steals vein by vein and pulse by pulse away;
Yet so relieving the o'er-tortured clay,
To him appears renewal of his breath,
And freedom the mere numbness of his chain;
And then he talks of life, and how again
He feels his spirits soaring—albeit weak,
And of the fresher air, which he would seek;
And as he whispers knows not that he gasps,
That his thin finger feels not what it clasps,
And so the film comes o'er him—and the dizzy
Chamber swims round and round—and shadows busy,

* "Those who indulge in the dreams of earthly retribution will observe, that the cruelty of Alfonso was not left without its recompense, even in his own person. He survived the affection of his subjects and of his dependants, who deserted him at his death; and suffered his body to be interred without princely or decent honors. His last wishes were neglected; his testament cancelled. His kinsman, Don Caesar, shrunk from the excommunication of the Vatican, and, after a short struggle, or rather suspense, Ferrara passed away for ever from the dominion of the house of Este."—ROMANOUS.
† In July, 1666, after a confinement of more than seven years, Tasso was released from his dungeon. In the hope of receiving his mother's dowry, and of again beholding his sister Cornelia, he shortly after visited Naples, where his presence was welcomed with every demonstration of esteem and admiration. Being on a visit at Mola di Gaeta, he received the following remarkable tribute of respect: Marco di Solara, the notorious captain of a numerous troop of banditti, hearing where the great poet was, sent to compliment him, and offered him not only a free passage, but protection by the way, and assured him that he and his followers would be proud to execute his orders. See Monaco, Vita del Tasso, p. 128.

‡ This ode was transmitted from Venice, in 1813, along with "Maseppa."

ODE ON VENICE.

At which he vainly catches, flit and gleam,
Till the last rattle chokes the strangled scream,
And all is ice and blackness,—and the earth
That which it was the moment ere our birth.

II.

There is no hope for nations!—Search the page
Of many thousand years—the daily scene,
The flow and ebb of each recurring age,
The everlasting to be which hath been,
Hath taught us nought or little: still we lean
On things that rot beneath our weight, and wear
Our strength away in wrestling with the air;
For 'tis our nature strikes us down: the beasts
Slaughter'd in hourly hecatombs for feasts
Are of as high an order—they must go Even where their driver goads them, though to slaughter.

Ye men, who pour your blood for kings as water,
What have they given your children in return?
A heritage of servitude and woes,
A blindfold bondage, where your hire is blows.
What! do not yet the red-hot ploughshares burn,
O'er which you stumble in a false ordeal,
And deem this proof of loyalty the real;
Kissing the hand that guides you to your scars,
And glorying as you tread the glowing bars?
All that your sires have left you, all that Time
Bequeaths of free, and History of sublime,
Spring from a different theme!—Ye see and read,
Admire and sigh, and then succumb and bleed!
Save the few spirits who, despite of all,
And worse than all, the sudden crimes engender'd
By the down-thundering of the prison wall,
And thirst to swallow the sweet waters tender'd, Gushing from Freedom's fountains—when the crowd,

Madden'd with centuries of drought, are loud,
And trample on each other to obtain
The cup which brings oblivion of a chain
Heavy and sore,—in which long yoked they plough'd
The sand,—or if there spring the yellow grain,
'T was not for them, their necks were too much bow'd,

And their dead palates chew'd the cud of pain:—
Yes! the few spirits—who, despite of deeds
Which they abhor, confound not with the cause
Those momentary starts from Nature's laws,
Which, like the pestilence and earthquake, smite
But for a term, then pass, and leave the earth
With all her seasons to repair the blight
With a few summers, and again put forth
Cities and generations—fair, when free—
For, Tyranny, there blooms no bud for thee!

III.

Glory and Empire! once upon these towers
With Freedom—godlike Triad! how ye sate!
The league of mightiest nations, in those hours
When Venice was an envy, might abate,

But did not quench, her spirit; in her fate
All were enwrapp'd: the feasted monarchs knew
And loved their hostess, nor could learn to hate,
Although they humbled—with the kingly few
The many felt, for from all days and climes
She was the voyager's worship;—even her crimes
Were of the softer order—born of Love,
She drank no blood, nor fatten'd on the dead,
But gladden'd where her harmless conquests spread;
For these restored the Cross, that from above
Hallow'd her sheltering banners, which incessant
Flew between earth and the unholy Crescent,
Which, if it waned and dwindled, Earth may thank

The city it has clothed in chains, which clank
Now, creaking in the ears of those who owe
The name of Freedom to her glorious struggles;
Yet she but shares with them a common woe,
And call'd the "kingdom" of a conquering foe,—
But knows what all—and, most of all, we know—
With what set gilded terms a tyrant juggles!

IV.

The name of Commonwealth is past and gone
O'er the three fractions of the groaning globe;
Venice is crush'd, and Holland deigns to own
A sceptre, and endures the purple robe;
If the free Switzer yet bestrides alone
His chainless mountains, 'tis but for a time,
For tyranny of late is cunning grown,
And in its own good season tramples down
The sparkles of our ashes. One great clime,
Whose vigorous offsprings by dividing ocean
Are kept apart and nursed in the devotion
Of Freedom, which their fathers fought for, and Bequeath'd—a heritage of heart and hand,
And proud distinction from each other land,
Whose sons must bow them at a monarch's motion,
As if his senseless sceptre were a wand
Full of the magic of exploded science—
Still one great clime, in full and free defiance,
Yet rears her crest, unconquer'd and sublime,
Above the far Atlantic!—She has taught
Her Esau-brethren that the haughty flag,
The floating fence of Albion's feeblest crag,
May strike to those whose red right hands have bought

Rights cheaply earn'd with blood.—Still, still, for ever
Better, though each man's life-blood were a river,
That it should flow, and overflow, than creep
Through thousand lazy channels in our veins,
Damm'd like the dull canal with locks and chains,
And moving, as a sick man in his sleep,
Three paces, and then faltering:—better be
Where the extinguish'd Spartans still are free,
In their proud charnel of Thermopylae,
Than stagnate in our marsh,—or o'er the deep
Fly, and one current to the ocean add,
One spirit to the souls our fathers had,
One freeman more, America, to thee!

THE MORGANTE MAGGIORE OF PULCI.*

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Morgante Maggiore, of the first canto of which this translation is offered, divides with the Orlando Innamorato the honor of having formed and suggested the style and story of Ariosto. The great defects of Boiardo were his treating too seriously the narratives of chivalry, and his harsh style. Ariosto, in his continuation, by a judicious mixture of the gayety of Pulci, has avoided the one; and Berni, in his reformation of Boiardo's poem, has corrected the other. Pulci may be considered as the precursor and model of Berni altogether, as he has partly been to Ariosto, however inferior to both his copyists. He is no less the founder of a new style of poetry very lately sprung up in England. I allude to that of the ingenious Whistlercraft. The serious poems on Bononcini in the same language, and more particularly the excellent one of Mr. Merivale, are to be traced to the same source.

It has never yet been decided entirely whether Pulci's intention was or was not to deride the religion which is one of his favorite topics. It appears to me, that such an intention would have been no less hazardous to the poet than to the priest, particularly in that age and country; and the permission to publish the poem, and its reception among the classics of Italy, prove that it neither was nor is so interpreted. That he intended to ridicule the monastic life, and suffered his imagination to play with the simple dullness of his converted giant, seems evident enough; but surely it were as unjust to accuse him of irreligion on this account, as to denounce Fielding for his Pamson Adams, Barnabas Retchum, Supple, and the Ordinary in Jonathan Wild,—or Scott, for the exquisite use of his Covenanters in the "Tales of my Landlord."

In the following translation I have used the liberty of the original with the proper names; as Pulci uses Gas, Ganellon, or Ganellone; Carlo, Carlomagno, or Carlo-mano; Rondel, or Rondello, etc., as it suits his convenience; so has the translator. In other respects the version is faithful to the best of the translator's ability in combining his interpretation of the one language with the not very easy task of reducing it to the same verification in the other. The reader, on comparing it with the original, is requested to remember that the antiquated language of Pulci, however pure, is not easy to the generality of Italians themselves, from its great mixture of Tuscan proverbs; and he may therefore be more indulgent to the present attempt. How far the translator has succeeded, and whether or no he shall continue the work, are questions which the public will decide. He was induced to make the experiment partly by his love for, and partial intercourse with, the Italian language, of which it is so easy to acquire a slight knowledge, and with which it is so nearly impossible for a foreigner to become accurately conversant. The Italian language is like a capricious beauty, who accords her smiles to all, her favors to few, and sometimes least to those who have courted her longest. The translator wished also to present in an English dress a part at least of a poem never yet rendered into a northern language; at the same time that it has been the original of some of the most celebrated productions on this side of the Alps, as well as of those recent experiments in poetry in England which have been already mentioned.

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

In the beginning was the Word next God;
God was the Word, the Word no less was he:
This was in the beginning, to my mode
Of thinking, and without him nought could be:
Therefore, just Lord! from out thy high abode,
Benign and pious, bid an angel flee,

One only, to be my companion, who Shall help my famous, worthy, old song through.

II.

And thou, oh, Virgin! daughter, mother, bride
Of the same Lord, who gave to you each key
Of heaven, and hell, and everything beside,
The day thy Gabriel said "All hail!" to thee,
Since to thy servants pity's ne'er denied,
With flowing rhymes, a pleasant style and free,
Be to my verses then benignly kind,
And to the end illuminate my mind.

III.

'T was in the season when sad Philomel
Weeps with her sister, who remembers and

* The following translation was executed at Ravenna, in February, 1880, and first saw the light in the pages of the unfortunate journal called "The Liberal."

MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

explores the ancient woes which both befell,
And makes the nymphs enamor'd, to the hand
Of Phaeton by Phoebus loved so well
His car (but temper'd by his sire's command)
As given, and on the horizon's verge just now
Appear'd, so that Tithonus scratch'd his brow :

IV.

When I prepared my bark first to obey,
As it should still obey, the helm, my mind,
And carry prose or rhyme, and this my lay
Of Charles the Emperor, whom you will find
By several pens already praised ; but they
Who to diffuse his glory were inclined,
For all that I can see in prose or verse,
Have understood Charles badly, and wrote worse.

V.

Leonardo Aretino said already,
That if, like Pepin, Charles had had a writer
Of genius quick, and diligently steady,
No hero would in history look brighter ;
He in the cabinet being always ready,
And in the field a most victorious fighter,
Who for the church and Christian faith had Wrought,
Certain, far more than yet is said or thought.

VI.

You still may see at Saint Liberatore
The abbey, no great way from Manopell,
Erected in the Abruzzi to his glory,
Because of the great battle in which fell
A pagan king, according to the story,
And felon people whom Charles sent to hell :
And there are bones so many, and so many,
Near them Giustaf's would seem few, if any.

VII.

But the world, blind and ignorant, don't prize
His virtues as I wish to see them : thou,
Florence, by his great bounty don't arise,
And hast, and may have, if thou wilt allow,
All proper customs and true courtesies :
Whatever thou hast acquired from them till now,
With knightly courage, treasure, or the lance,
Is sprung from out the noble blood of France.

VIII.

Twelve paladins had Charles in court, of whom
The wisest and most famous was Orlando ;
Him traitor Gan conducted to the tomb
In Roncesvalles, as the villain plann'd to,
While the horn rang so loud, and knell'd the doom
Of their sad rout, though he did all knight can do ;
And Dante in his comedy has given
To him a happy seat with Charles in heaven.

IX.

'Twas Christmas-day ; in Paris all his court
Charles held ; the chief, I say, Orlando was,
The Dane ; Astolfo there too did resort,
Also Ansuigi, the gay time to pass
In festival and in triumphal sport.
The much-renown'd St. Dennis being the cause ;
Angiolin of Bayonne, and Oliver,
And gentle Bellinghieri too came there.

X.

Avolio, and Arino, and Othone
Of Normandy, and Richard Paladin,
Wise Hamo, and the ancient Salamone,
Walter of Lion's Mount, and Baldwin,
Who was the son of the sad Ganellone,
Were there, exerting too much gladness in
The son of Pepin :—when his knights came hither,
He groan'd with joy to see them all together.

XI.

But watchful Fortune, lurking, takes good heed
Ever some bar 'gainst our intents to bring :
While Charles reposed him thus, in word and deed,
Orlando ruled court, Charles, and everything ;
Curst Gan, with envy bursting, had such need
To vent his spite, that thus with Charles the king
One day he openly began to say,
" Orlando must we always then obey ?

XII.

" A thousand times I've been about to say,
Orlando too presumptuously goes on ;
Here are we, counts, kings, dukes, to own thy sway,
Hamo, and Otho, Ogier, Solomon,
Each have to honor thee and to obey ;
But he has too much credit near the throne,
Which we won't suffer, but are quite decided
By such a boy to be no longer guided.

XIII.

" And even at Aspramont thou didst begin
To let him know he was a gallant knight,
And by the fount did much the day to win ;
But I know who that day had won the fight
If it had not for good Gherardo been ;
The victory was Almonte's else ; his right
He kept upon the standard, and the laurels
In fact and fairness are his earning, Charles.

XIV.

" If thou rememberest being in Gascony,
When there advanced the nations out of Spain,
The Christian cause had suffer'd shamefully,
Had not his valor driven them back again.
Best speak the truth when there's a reason why :
Know then, oh, Emperor ! that all complain :
As for myself, I shall repeat the mounts
O'er which I cross'd with two and sixty counts.

XV.

" 'Tis fit thy grandeur should dispense relief,
So that each here may have his proper part ;
For the whole court is more or less in grief :
Perhaps thou deem'st this lad a Mars in heart ?"
Orlando one day heard this speech in brief,
As by himself it chanced he sat apart :
Displeased he was with Gan because he said it,
But much more still that Charles should give him credit.

XVI.

And with the sword he would have murder'd Gan,
But Oliver thrust in between the pair,
And from his hand extracted Durlindan,
And thus at length they separated were.
Orlando, angry too with Carloman,
Wanted but little to have slain him there ;
Then forth alone from Paris went the chief,
And burst and madden'd with disdain and grief.

XVII.

From Ermellina, consort of the Dane,
He took Cortana, and then took Rondell,
And on towards Brara prick'd him o'er the plain ;
And when she saw him coming, Aldabella
Stretch'd forth her arms to clasp her lord again :
Orlando, in whose brain all was not well,
As " Welcome, my Orlando, home," she said,
Raised up his sword to smite her on the head.

XVIII.

Like him a fury counsels ; his revenge
On Gan in that rash act he seem'd to take,
Which Aldabella thought extremely strange ;
But soon Orlando found himself awake ;

MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

And his spouse took his bridle on this change,
And he dismounted from his horse, and spake
Of everything which pass'd without demur,
And then repos'd himself some days with her.

XIX.

Then full of wrath departed from the place,
As far as pagan countries roam'd astray,
And while he rode, yet still at every pace
The traitor Gan remember'd by the way;
And wandering on in error a long space,
An abbey which in a lone desert lay,
'Midst glens obscure, and distant lands, he found,
Which form'd the Christian's and the pagan's bound.

XX.

The abbot was called Clermont, and by blood
Descended from Angliante: under cover
Of a great mountain's brow the abbey stood,
But certain savage giants look'd him over;
One Passamont was foremost of the brood,
And Alabaster and Morgante hover
Second and third, with certain slings, and throw
In daily jeopardy the place below.

XXI.

The monks could pass the convent gate no more,
Nor leave their cells for water or for wood;
Orlando knock'd, but none would ope, before
Unto the prior it at length seem'd good:
Enter'd, he said that he was taught to adore
Him who was born of Mary's holiest blood,
And was baptized a Christian; and then show'd
How to the abbey he had found his road.

XXII.

Said the abbot, "You are welcome; what is mine
We give you freely, since that you believe
With us in Mary Mother's Son divine;
And that you may not, cavalier, conceive
The cause of our delay to let you in
To be rusticity, you shall receive
The reason why our gate was barr'd to you:
Thus those who in suspicion live must do.

XXIII.

"When hither to inhabit first we came
These mountains, albeit that they are obscure,
As you perceive, yet without fear or blame
They seem'd to promise an asylum sure:
From savage brutes alone, too fierce to tame,
'T was fit our quiet dwelling to secure;
But now, if here we'd stay, we needs must guard
Against domestic beasts with watch and ward.

XXIV.

"These make us stand, in fact, upon the watch;
For late there have appear'd three giants rough;
What nation or what kingdom bore the batch
I know not, but they are all of savage stuff;
When force and malice with some genius match,
You know, they can do all—we are not enough:
And these so much our orisons derange,
I know not what to do, till matters change.

XXV.

"Our ancient fathers living the desert in,
For just and holy works were duly fed;
Think not they lived on locusts sole, 't is certain That manna was rain'd down from heaven instead;
But here 't is fit we keep on the alert in Our bounds, or taste the stones shower'd down for bread,
From off yon mountain daily raining faster,
And flung by Passamont and Alabaster.

XXVI.

"The third, Morgante, 's savagest by far; he Plucks up pines, beeches, poplar trees, and oaks.
And flings them, our community to bury;
And all that I can do but more provokes."
While thus they parley in the cemetery,
A stone from one of their gigantic strokes,
Which nearly crush'd Rondell, came tumbling over,
So that he took a long leap under cover.

XXVII.

"For God-sake, cavalier, come in with speed;
The manna 's falling now," the abbot cried.
"This fellow does not wish my horse should feed,
Dear abbot," Roland unto him replied.
"Of restiveness he'd cure him had he need;
That stone seems with good will and aim applied."
The holy father said, "I don't deceive;
They'll one day fling the mountain, I believe."

XXVIII.

Orlando bade them take care of Rondello,
And also made a breakfast of his own:
"Abbot," he said, "I want to find that fellow
Who hung at my good horse yon corner-stone."
Said the abbot, "Let not my advice seem shallow;
As to a brother dear I speak alone;
I would dissuade you, baron, from this strife,
As knowing sure that you will lose your life.

XXIX.

"That Passamont has in his hand three darts—
Such slings, clubs, ballast-stones, that yield you must;
You know that giants have much stouter hearts
Than us, with reason, in proportion just:
If go you will, guard well against their arts,
For these are very barbarous and robust."
Orlando answer'd, "This I'll see, be sure,
And walk the wild on foot to be secure."

XXX.

The abbot sign'd the great cross on his front,
"Then go you with God's benison and mine:"
Orlando, after he had scaled the mount,
As the abbot had directed, kept the line
Right to the usual haunt of Passamont;
Who, seeing him alone in this design,
Survey'd him fore and aft with eyes observant,
Then ask'd him, "If he wish'd to stay as servant?"

XXXI.

And promised him an office of great ease.
But, said Orlando, "Saracen insane!
I come to kill you, if it shall so please
God, not to serve as footboy in your train;
You with his monks so oft have broke the peace—
Vile dog! 't is past his patience to sustain."
The giant ran to fetch his arms, quite furious,
When he received an answer so injurious,

XXXII.

And being return'd to where Orlando stood,
Who had not moved him from the spot, and swinging
The cord, he hurl'd a stone with strength so rude,
As show'd a sample of his skill in slinging;
It roll'd on Count Orlando's helmet good
And head, and set both head and helmet ringing,
So that he swoon'd with pain as if he died,
But more than dead, he seem'd so stupefied.

XXXIII.

Then Passamont, who thought him slain outright,
Said, "I will go, and while he lies along,

MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

Disarm me: why such craven did I fight?"

But Christ his servants ne'er abandons long,
Especially Orlando, such a knight,
As to desert would almost be a wrong.
While the giant goes to put off his defences,
Orlando has recall'd his force and senses:

XXXIV.

And loud he shouted, "Giant, where dost go?"

Thou thought'st me doubtless for the bier out-

laid:

To the right about—without wings thou 'rt too slow

To fly my vengeance—surlish renegade!

'T was but by treachery thou laid'st me low."

The giant his astonishment betray'd,
And turn'd about, and stopp'd his journey on,
And then he stoop'd to pick up a great stone.

XXXV.

Orlando had Cortana bare in hand:

To split the head in twain was what he schemed:

Cortana clave the skull like a true brand,

And pagan Passamont died unredeem'd,

Yet barsh and haughty, as he lay he bann'd,

And most devoutly Macon still blasphemed;

But while his crude, rude blasphemies he heard,

Orlando thank'd the Father and the Word,—

XXXVI.

Saying, "What graces to me thou 'st this day given!

And I to thee, oh, Lord! am ever bound.

I know my life was saved by thee from heaven,

Since by the giant I was fairly down'd.

All things by thee are measured just and even;

Our power without thine aid would nought be found:

I pray thee take heed of me, till I can

At least return once more to Carloman."

XXXVII.

And having said thus much, he went his way;

And Alabaster he found out below,

Doing the very best that in him lay

To root from out a bank a rock or two.

Orlando, when he reach'd him, loud 'gan say,

"How think'st thou, glutton, such a stone to throw?"

When Alabaster heard his deep voice ring,

He suddenly betook him to his sling,

XXXVIII.

And hurl'd a fragment of a size so large,

That if it had in fact fulfill'd its mission,

And Roland not avail'd him of his target,

There would have been no need of a physician.

Orlando set himself in turn to charge,

And in his bulky bosom made incision

Withall his sword. The lout fell; but o'erthrown, he

However by no means forgot Macone.

XXXIX.

Morgante had a palace in his mode,

Composed of branches, logs of wood, and earth,

And stretch'd himself at ease in this abode,

And shut himself at night within his berth.

Orlando knock'd, and knock'd again, to goad

The giant from his sleep; and he came forth

The door to open, like a crazy thing,

For a rough dream had shook him slumbering.

XL.

He thought that a fierce serpent had attack'd him;

And Mahomet he call'd; but Mahomet

Is nothing worth, and not an instant back'd him;

But praying blessed Jesu, he was set

At liberty from all the fears which rack'd him;

And to the gate he came with great regret—

"Who knocks here?" grumbling all the while, said

"That," said Orlando, "you will quickly see. [he

XLI.

"I come to preach to you, as to your brothers,

Sent by the miserable monks—repentance;

For Providence divine, in you and others,

Condemns the evil done my new acquaintance.

'T is writ on high your wrong must pay another's;

From heaven itself is issued out this sentence.

Know then, that colder now than a pilaster

I left your Passamont and Alabaster."

XLII.

Morgante said, "Oh, gentle cavalier!

Now by thy God say me no villainy:

The favor of your name I fain would hear,

And if a Christian, speak for courtesy,"

Replied Orlando, "So much to your ear

I by my faith disclose contentedly;

Christ I adore, who is the genuine Lord,

And, if you please, by you may be adored."

XLIII.

The Saracen rejoic'd in humble tone,

"I have had an extraordinary vision;

A savage serpent fell on me alone,

And Macon would not pity my condition;

Hence to thy God, who for ye did atone

Upon the cross, preferr'd I my petition;

His timely succor set me safe and free,

And I a Christian am disposed to be."

XLIV.

Orlando answer'd, "Baron just and pious,

If this good wish your heart can really move

To the true God, you will not then deny us

Eternal honor, you will go above,

And, if you please, as friends we will ally us,

And I will love you with a perfect love.

Your idols are vain liars, full of fraud:

The only true God is the Christian's God.

XLV.

"The Lord descended to the virgin breast

Of Mary Mother, sinless and divine;

If you acknowledge the Redeemer blest,

Without whom neither sun nor star can shine,

Abjure bad Macon's false and felon test,

Your renegade god, and worship mine,

Baptize yourself with zeal, since you repent,"

To which Morgante answer'd, "I'm content."

XLVI.

And then Orlando to embrace him flew,

And made much of his convert, as he cried,

"To the abbey I will gladly marshal you."

To whom Morgante, "Let us go," replied;

"I to the friars have for peace to sue."

Which thing Orlando heard with inward pride,

Saying, "My brother, so devout and good,

Ask the abbot pardon, as I wish you would:

XLVII.

"Since God has granted your illumination,

Accepting you in mercy for his own,

Humility should be your first oblation."

Morgante said, "For goodness' sake, make known—

Since that your God is to be mine—your station,

And let your name in verity be shown;

Then will I everything at your command do."

On which the other said, he was Orlando.

XLVIII.

"Then," quoth the giant, "blessed be Jesu

A thousand times with gratitude and praise!

MORGANTE MAGGIORE

Off, perfect baron! have I heard of you
Through all the different periods of my days:
And, as I said, to be your vassal too
I wish, for your great gallantry always."
Thus reasoning, they continued much to say,
And onwards to the abbey went their way.

XLIII.

And by the way about the giants dead
Orlando with Morgante reason'd: "Be,
For their decease, I pray you, comforted;
And, since it is God's pleasure, pardon me;
A thousand wrongs unto the monks they bred,
And our true Scripture soundeth openly,
Good is rewarded, and chastised the ill,
Which the Lord never faileth to fulfill:

L.

"Because his love of justice unto all
Is such, he wills his judgment should devour
All who have sin, however great or small;
But good he well remembers to restore.
Nor without justice holy could we call
Him, whom I now require you to adore.
All men must make his will their wishes sway,
And quickly and spontaneously obey.

LI.

"And here our doctors are of one accord,
Coming on this point to the same conclusion,
That in their thoughts who praise in heaven the Lord
If pity e'er was guilty of intrusion
For their unfortunate relations stored
In hell below, and damn'd in great confusion,
Their happiness would be reduced to nought,
And thus unjust the Almighty's self be thought.

LII.

"But they in Christ have firmest hope, and all
Which seems to him, to them too must appear
Well done; nor could it otherwise befall:
He never can in any purpose err.
If sire or mother suffer endless thrall,
They don't disturb themselves for him or her;
What pleases God to them must joy inspire;
Such is the observance of the eternal choir."

LIII.

"A word unto the wise," Morgante said,
"Is wont to be enough, and you shall see
How much I grieve about my brethren dead;
And if the will of God seem good to me,
Just, as you tell me, 'tis in heaven obey'd—
Aches to aches,—merry let us be!
I will cut off the hands from both their trunks,
And carry them unto the holy monks,

LIV.

"So that all persons may be sure and certain
That they are dead, and have no further fear
To wander solitary this desert in,
And that they may perceive my spirit clear
By the Lord's grace, who hath withdrawn the curtain
Of darkness, making his bright realm appear."
He cut his brethren's hands off at these words,
And left them to the savage beasts and birds.

LV.

Then to the abbey they went on together,
Where waited them the abbot in great doubt.
The monks, who knew not yet the fact, ran thither,
To their superior, all in breathless rout,
Saying with tremor, "Please to tell us whether
You wish to have this person in or out?"
The abbot, looking through upon the giant,
Too greatly fear'd, at first, to be compliant.

LVI.

Orlando, seeing him thus agitated,
Said quickly, "Abbot, be thou of good cheer;
He Christ believes, as Christian must be rated;
And hath renounced his Macon faith;" which hear
Morgante with the hands corroborated,
A proof of both the giants' fate quite clear:
Thence, with due thanks, the abbot God adored,
Saying, "Thou hast contented me, oh, Lord!"

LVII.

He gazed; Morgante's height he calculated,
And more than once contemplated his size;
And then he said, "Oh, giant celebrated!
Know, that no more my wonder will arise,
How you could tear and fling the trees you late did,
When I behold your form with my own eyes.
You now a true and perfect friend will show
Yourself to Christ, as once you were a foe.

LVIII.

"And one of our apostles, Paul once named,
Long persecuted sore the faith of Christ,
Till, one day, by the Spirit being inspired,
"Why dost thou persecute me thus?" said Christ;
And then from his offense he was reclaim'd,
And went forever after preaching Christ.
And of the faith became a trump, whose sounding
O'er the whole earth is echoing and rebounding.

LIX.

"So, my Morgante, you may do likewise:
He who repents—thus writes the Evangelist—
Occasions more rejoicing in the skies
Than ninety-nine of the celestial list.
You may be sure, should each desire arise
With just zeal for the Lord, that you'll exist
Among the happy saints for evermore;
But you were lost and damn'd to hell before!"

LX.

And thus great honor to Morgante paid
The abbot: many days they did repose.
One day, as with Orlando they both stray'd,
And saunter'd here and there, where'er they stray'd,
The abbot show'd a chamber, where array'd
Much armor was, and hung up certain bows;
And one of these Morgante for a whim
Girt on, though useless, he believed, to him.

LXI.

There being a want of water in the place,
Orlando, like a worthy brother, said,
"Morgante, I could wish you in this case
To go for water." "You shall be obey'd
In all commands," was the reply, "straightway."
Upon his shoulder a great tub he laid,
And went out on his way unto a fountain,
Where he was wont to drink, below the mountain.

LXII.

Arrived there, a prodigious noise he hears,
Which suddenly along the forest spreads,
Whereat from out his quiver he prepares
An arrow for his bow, and lifts his head;
And lo! a monstrous herd of swine appears,
And onward rushes with tempestuous tread,
And to the fountain's brink precisely goes;
So that the giant's join'd by all the boars,

LXIII.

Morgante at a venture shot an arrow,
Which pierced a pig precisely in the ear,
And pass'd unto the other side quite through;
So that the boar, defunct, lay trampled there.
Another, to avenge his fellow's sorrow,
Against the giant rush'd in fierce array.

MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

And reach'd the passage with so swift a foot,
Morgante was not now in time to shoot.

LXIV.

Perceiving that the pig was on him close,
He gave him such a punch upon the head,
As floor'd him so that he no more arose,
Smashing the very bone; and he fell dead
Next to the other. Having seen such blows,
The other pigs along the valley fled;
Morgante on his neck the bucket took,
Full from the spring, which neither swerved nor shook.

LXV.

The tan was on one shoulder, and there were
The hogs on t' other, and he brush'd apace
On to the abbey, though by no means near,
Nor split one drop of water in his race.
Orlando, seeing him so soon appear
With the dead boars, and with that brimful vase,
Marvell'd to see his strength so very great;
So did the abbot, and set wide the gate.

LXVI.

The monks, who saw the water fresh and good,
Rejoiced, but much more to perceive the pork;
All animals are glad at sight of food:
They lay their breviaries to sleep, and work
With greedy pleasure, and in such a mood,
That the flesh needs no salt beneath their fork.
Of rankness and of rot there is no fear,
For all the fests are now left in arrear.

LXVII.

As though they wish'd to burst at once, they ate;
And gorged so that, as if the bones had been
In water, sorely grieved the dog and cat,
Perceiving that they all were pick'd too clean.
The abbot, who to all did honor great,
A few days after this convivial scene,
Gave to Morgante a fine horse, well train'd,
Which he long time had for himself maintain'd.

LXVIII.

The horse Morgante to a meadow led,
To gallop, and to put him to the proof,
Thinking that he a back of iron had,
Or to skim eggs unbroke was light enough;
But the horse, sinking with the pain, fell dead,
And burst, while cold on earth lay head and hoof,
Morgante said, "Get up, thou sulky cur!"
And still continued pricking with the spur.

LXIX.

But finally he thought fit to dismount,
And said, "I am as light as any feather,
And he has burst;—to this what say you, count?"
Orlando answer'd, "Like a ship's mast rather
You seem to me, and with the truck for front:
Let him go; Fortune wills that we together
Should march, but you on foot Morgante still."
To which the giant answer'd, "So I will.

LXX.

"When there shall be occasion, you will see How I approve my courage in the fight."
Orlando said, "I really think you'll be,
If it should prove God's will, a goodly knight;
Nor will you napping there discover me.
But never mind your horse, though out of sight
I were best to carry him into some wood,
If but the means or way I understood."

LXXI.

The giant said, "Then carry him I will,
Since that to carry me he was so slack—

To render, as the gods do, good for ill;
But lend a hand to place him on my back."
Orlando answer'd, "If my counsel still
May weigh, Morgante, do not undertake
To lift or carry this dead courser, who
As you have done to him, will do to you.

LXXII.

"Take care he don't revenge himself, though dead,
As Nessus did of old beyond all cure.
I don't know if the fact you've heard or read;
But he will make you burst, you may be sure."
"But help him on my back," Morgante said,
"And you shall see what weight I can endure.
In place, my gentle Roland, of this palfrey,
With all the bells, I'll carry yonder belfry."

LXXIII.

The abbot said, "The steeple may do well,
But, for the bells, you've broken them, I wot."
Morgante answer'd, "Let them pay in bell
The penalty who lie dead in yon grot;"
And hoisting up the horse from where he fell,
He said, "Now look if I the gout have got,
Orlando, in the legs—or if I have force;"
And then he made two gambols with the horse.

LXXIV.

Morgante was like any mountain framed;
So if he did this, 't is no prodigy;
But secretly himself Orlando blamed,
Because he was one of his family;
And fearing that he might be hurt or maim'd,
Once more he bade him lay his burden by."
"Put down, nor bear him further the desert in."
Morgante said, "I'll carry him for certain."

LXXV.

He did; and stow'd him in some nook away,
And to the abbey then return'd with speed.
Orlando said, "Why longer do we stay?"
Morgante, here is nought to do indeed."
The abbot by the hand he took one day,
And said, with great respect, he had agreed
To leave his reverence; but for this decision
He wish'd to have his pardon and permission.

LXXVI.

The honors they continued to receive
Perhaps exceeded what his merits claim'd:
He said, "I mean, and quickly, to retrieve
The lost days of time past, which may be blamed;
Some days ago I should have ask'd your leave,
Kind father, but I really was ashamed,
And know not how to show my sentiment,
So much I see you with our stay content.

LXXVII.

"But in my heart I bear through every clime
The abbot, abbey, and this solitude—
So much I love you in so short a time;
For me, from heaven reward you with all good
The God so true, the eternal Lord sublime!
Whose kingdom at the last bath open stood.
Meantime we stand expectant of your blessing,
And recommend us to your prayers with pressing."

LXXVIII.

Now when the abbot Count Orlando heard,
His heart grew soft with inner tenderness,
Such fervor in his bosom bred each word;
And, "Cavalier," he said, "if I have less
Courteous and kind to your great worth appear'd,
Than fits me for such gentle blood to express,
I know I have done too little in this case;
But blame our ignorance, and this poor place.

MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

LXXXIX.

"We can indeed but honor you with masses,
And sermons, thankgivings, and paternosters,
Hot suppers, dinners (fitting other places
In verity much rather than the cloisters)
But such a love for you my heart embraces,
For thousand virtues which your bosom fosters,
That whereoe'er you go I too shall be,
And, on the other part, you rest with me.

LXXX.

"This may involve a seeming contradiction;
But you I know are sage, and feel, and taste,
And understand my speech, with full conviction.
For your just pious deeds may you be graced
With the Lord's great reward and benediction,
By whom you were directed to this waste:
To his high mercy is our freedom due,
For which we render thanks to him and you.

LXXXI.

"You saved at once our life and soul: such fear
The giants caused us, that the way was lost
By which we could pursue a fit career
In search of Jesus and the saintly host;
And your departure breeds such sorrow here,
That comfortless we all are to our cost;
But months and years you would not stay in sloth,
Nor are you form'd to wear our sober cloth;

LXXXII.

"But to bear arms, and wield the lance: indeed,
With these as much is done as with this cowl;
In proof of which the Scriptures you may read.
This giant up to heaven may bear his soul
By your compassion: now in peace proceed.
Your state and name I seek not to unroll;
But, if I'm ask'd, this answer shall be given,
That here an angel was sent down from heaven.

LXXXIII.

"If you want armor or aught else, go in,
Look o'er the wardrobe, and take what you choose.
And cover with it o'er this giant's skin."
Orlando answer'd, "If there should lie loose
Some armor, ere our journey we begin,
Which might be turn'd to my companion's use,
The gift would be acceptable to me."
The abbot said to him, "Come in and see."

LXXXIV.

And in a certain closet, where the wall
Was cover'd with old armor like a crust,
The abbot said to them, "I give you all."
Morgante rummaged piecemeal from the dust
The whole, which, save one cuirass, was too small,
And that too had the mail inlaid with rust.
They wonder'd how it fitted him exactly,
Which ne'er has suited others so compactly.

LXXXV.

"T was an immeasurable giant's, who
By the great Milo of Agrante fell
Before the abbey many years ago.
The story on the wall was figured well;
In the last moment of the abbey's foe,
Who long had waged a war implacable:
Precisely as the war occur'd they drew him,
And there was Milo as he overthrew him.

LXXXVI.

Seeing this history, Count Orlando said
In his own heart, "Oh, God, who in the sky
Know'st all things! how was Milo hither led?
Who caused the giant in this place to die?"
And certain letters, weeping, then he read,
So that he could not keep his visage dry,—
As I will tell in the ensuing story.
From evil keep you the high King of glory!

THE TEMPLE OF THESEUS, ATHENS.

"And sad and sombre, 'mid the holy calm,
Near Theseus' fane."—Page 388.

THE PROPHECY OF DANTE.*

"'T is the sunset of life gives no mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before."

CAMPBELL.

DEDICATION.

LADY ! If for the cold and cloudy clime
Where I was born, but where I would not die,
Of the great Poet-Sire of Italy
I dare to build the imitative rhyme,
Hark ! Runic copy of the South's sublime,
THOU art the cause ; and howsoever I
Fall short of his immortal harmony,
Thy gentle heart will pardon me the crime.

Thou, in the pride of Beauty and of Youth,
Spakest ; and for thee to speak and be obey'd
Are one ; but only in the sunny South
Such sounds are utter'd, and such charms display'd,
So sweet a language from so fair a mouth—
Ah ! to what effort would it not persuade ?

RAVENNA, JUNE, 21, 1830.

PREFACE.

IN the course of a visit to the city of Ravenna in the summer of 1819, it was suggested to the author that having composed something on the subject of Tasso's confinement, he should do the same on Dante's exile,—the tomb of the poet forming one of the principal objects of interest in that city, both to the native and to the stranger.

"On this hint I spoke," and the result has been the following four cantos, in terza rima, now offered to the reader. If they are understood and approved, it is my purpose to continue the poem in various other cantos, to its natural conclusion in the present age. The reader is requested to suppose that Dante addresses him in the interval between the conclusion of the Divina Commedia and his death, and shortly before the latter event, foretelling the fortunes of Italy in general in the ensuing centuries. In adopting this plan I have had in my mind the Camandra of Lycophron, and the prophecy of Nereus by Horace, as well as the prophecies of Holy Writ. The measure adopted is the terza rima of Dante, which I am not aware to have seen hitherto tried in our language, except it may be by Mr. Hayley, of whose translation I never saw but one extract, quoted in the notes of Caliph

Vathek ; so that—if I do not err—this poem may be considered as a metrical experiment. The cantos are short, and about the same length of those of the poet, whose name I have borrowed, and most probably taken in vain.

Amongst the inconveniences of authors in the present day, it is difficult for any who have a name, good or bad, to escape translation. I have had the fortune to see the fourth canto of Childe Harold translated into Italian versi sciolti,—that is, a poem written in the Spenserian stanza into blank verse, without regard to the natural divisions of the stanza or of the scene. If the present poem, being on a national topic, should chance to undergo the same fate, I would request the Italian reader to remember that when I have failed in the imitation of his great "Padre Allighier," I have failed in imitating that which all study and few understand, since to this very day it is not yet settled what was the meaning of the allegory in the first canto of the Inferno, unless Count Marchetti's ingenious and probable conjecture may be considered as having decided the question.

He may also pardon my failure the more, as I am not

* This poem, which Lord Byron, in sending it to Mr. Murray, called "the best thing he had ever done, if not unimpeachable," was written, in the summer of 1819, at Ravenna. The Prophecy, however, was first published in May, 1821. It is dedicated to the Countess Guicciotti, who thus describes the origin of its composition :—"On my departure from Venice, Lord Byron had promised to come and see me at Ravenna. Dante's tomb, the classical pine wood, the relics of antiquity which are to be found in that place, afforded a sufficient pretext for me to invite him to come, and for him to accept my invitation. He came in the month of June, 1819, arriving at Ravenna on the day of the festival of the Corpus Domini. Being deprived at this time of his books, his horses, and all that occupied him at Venice, I begged him to gratify me by writing something on the subject of Dante ; and, with his usual facility and rapidity, he composed his Prophecy."

Dante Alighieri was born in Florence in May, 1265, of an ancient and honorable family. In the early part of his life he gained some credit in a military character, and distinguished himself by his bravery in an action where the Florentines obtained a signal victory over the citizens of Arezzo. He became still more eminent by the acquisition of court honors ; and at the age of thirty-five he rose to be one of the chief magistrates of Florence, when that dignity was conferred by the suffrages of the people. From this exaltation the poet himself dated his principal misfortunes. Italy was at that time distracted by the contending factions of the Ghibellines and Guelphs,—among the latter Dante took an active part. In one of the proscriptions he was banished, his possessions confiscated, and he died in exile in 1321.

quite sure that he would be pleased with my success, since the Italians, with a pardonable nationality, are particularly jealous of all that is left them as a nation—their literature; and, in the present bitterness of the classic and romantic war, are but ill disposed to permit a foreigner even to approve or imitate them, without finding some fault with his ultramontane presumption. I can easily enter into all this, knowing what would be thought in England of an Italian imitator of Milton, or if a translation of Monst, or Pindemonte, or Ariel, should be held up to the rising generation as a model for their future poetical essay. But I perceive that I am deviating into an address to the Italian reader, when my business is with the English one; and be they few or many, I must take my leave of both.

CANTO THE FIRST.

Once more in man's frail world! which I had left
So long that 't was forgotten; and I feel
The weight of clay again—too soon bereft
Of the immortal vision which could heal
My earthly sorrows, and to God's own skies
Lift me from that deep gulf without repeal,
Where late my ears rung with the damned cries
Of souls in hopeless bale; and from that place
Of lesser torment, whence men may arise
Pure from the fire to join the angelic race;
'Midst whom my own bright Beatrice^o base'd
My spirit with her light; and to the base
Of the eternal Triad! first, last, best,
Mysterious, three, sole, infinite, great God!
Soul universal! led the mortal guest,
Unblasted by the glory, though he trod
From star to star to reach the almighty throne.
Oh, Beatrice! whose sweet limbs the sod
So long hath press'd, and the cold marble stone,
Thou sole pure seraph of my earliest love,
Love so ineffable, and so alone,
That nought on earth could more my bosom
move,
And meeting thee in heaven was but to meet
That without which my soul, like the arkless dove,
Had wander'd still in search of, nor her feet
Believed her wing till found: without thy light
My paradise had still been incomplete.
Since my tenth sun gave summer to my sight,
Thou wert my life, the essence of my thought,
Loved ere I knew the name of love, and bright
Still in these dim old eyes, now overwrought
With the world's war, and years, and banishment,
And tears for thee, by other woes untaught;
For mine is not a nature to be bent
By tyrannous faction, and the brawling crowd,
And though the long, long conflict hath been spent
In vain, and never more, save when the cloud
Which overhangs the Apennine my mind's eye
Pierces to fancy Florence, once so proud
Of me, can I return, though but to die,
Unto my native soil, they have not yet
Quench'd the old exile's spirit, stern and high.
But the sun, though not overcast, must set,
And the night cometh; I am old in days,
And deeds, and contemplation, and have met
Destruction face to face in all his ways.
The world hath left me, what it found me, pure,
And if I have not gather'd yet its praise,
I sought it not by any baser lure;
Man wrongs, and Time avenges, and my name
May form a monument not all obscure,

Though such was not my ambition's end or aim,
To add to the vainglorious list of those
Who dabble in the pettiness of fame,
And make men's fickle breath the wind that blows
Their sail, and deem it glory to be class'd
With conquerors, and virtue's other foes,
In bloody chronicles of ages past.
I would have had my Florence great and free;
Oh, Florence! Florence! unto me thou wast
Like that Jerusalem which the Almighty He Wept over, "but thou wouldst not;" as the bird
Gathers its young, I would have gather'd thee
Beneath a parent pinion, hadst thou heard
My voice; but as the adder, deaf and fierce,
Against the breast that cherish'd thee was stirr'd
Thy venom, and my state thou didst amerce,
And doom this body forfeit to the fire.
Alas! how bitter is his country's curse
To him who for that country would expire,
But did not merit to expire by her,
And loves her, loves her even in her fire!
The day may come when she will cease to err,
The day may come she would be proud to have
The dust she dooms to scatter, and transfer t'
Of him, whom she denied a home, the grave.
But this shall not be granted; let my dust
Lie where it falls; nor shall the soil which gave Me breath, but in her sudden fury thrust
Me forth to breathe elsewhere, so reassume
My indignant bones, because her angry gust
Foresooth is over, and repeal'd her doom;
No,—she denied me what was mine—my roof,
And shall not have what is not here—my tomb.
Too long her armed wrath hath kept aloof
The breast which would have bled for her, the heart
That beat, the mind that was temptation proof,
The man who fought, toil'd, travell'd, and each part
Of a true citizen fulfill'd, and saw
For his reward the Guelph's ascendant art
Pass his destruction even into a law.
These things are not made for forgetfulness,
Florence shall be forgotten first; too raw
The wound, too deep the wrong, and the distress
Of such endurance too prolong'd to make
My pardon greater, her injustice less,
Though late repented; yet—yet for her sake
I feel some fonder yearnings, and for thine,
My own Beatrice, I would hardly take
Vengeance upon the land which once was mine,
And still is hallow'd by thy dust's return,
Which would protect the murderer like a shrine,
And save ten thousand foes by thy sole urn.
Though, like old Marius from Minturnæ's marsh
And Carthage ruins, my lone breast may burn
At times with evil feelings hot and harsh,

^o The reader is requested to adopt the Italian pronunciation of Beatrice, sounding all the syllables.

† "Ut si quis predictorum ullo tempore in fortiam dicti communis pervenerit, talis personæ igne comburatur, etc. quod mortificetur." Second sentence of Florence against Dante, and the fourteen accused with him. The Latin is worthy of the sentence.—On the 27th of January, 1302, Dante was mulcted eight thousand lire, and condemned to two years' banishment; and in case the fine was not paid, his goods were to be confiscated. On the 11th of March, the same year, he was sentenced to a punishment due only to the most desperate of malefactors. The decree, that he and his associates in exile should be burned, if they fell into the hands of their enemies, was first discovered in 1773, by the Count Lodovico Seyffold. See Trabacchi, where the sentence is given at length.

And sometimes the last pangs of a vile foe
 Writhe in a dream before me, and o'erarch
 My brow with hopes of triumph,—let them go!
 Such are the last infirmities of those
 Who long have suffer'd more than mortal woe,
 And yet, being mortal still, have no repose
 But on the pillow of Revenge—Revenge,
 Who sleeps to dream of blood, and waking glows
 With the oft baffled, slakeless thirst of change,
 When we shall mount again, and they that trod
 Be trampled on, while Death and Ate range
 O'er humbled heads and sever'd necks—Great
 God!

Take these thoughts from me—to thy hands I yield
 My many wrongs, and thine almighty rod
 Will fall on those who smote me,—be my shield!
 As thou hast been in peril, and in pain,
 In turbulent cities, and the tented field—
 In toil, and many troubles borne in vain
 For Florence,*—I appeal from her to Thee!
 Thee whom I late saw in thy loftiest reign,
 Even in that glorious vision, which to see
 And live was never granted until now,
 And yet thou hast permitted this to me.
 Alas! with what a weight upon my brow
 The sense of earth and earthly things come back,
 Corrosive passions, feelings dull and low,
 The heart's quick throb upon the mental rack,
 Long day, and dreary night; the retrospect
 Of half a century bloody and black,
 And the frail few years I may yet expect
 Hoary and hopeless, but less hard to bear.
 For I have been too long and deeply wreck'd
 On the lone rock of desolate Despair,
 To lift my eyes more to the passing sail
 Which shuns that reef so horrible and bare;
 Nor raise my voice—for who would heed my wail?
 I am not of this people, nor this age,
 And yet my harpings will unfold a tale
 Which shall preserve these times when not a page
 Of their perturbed annals could attract
 An eye to gaze upon their civil rage,
 Did not my verse enchain full many an act
 Worthless as they who wrought it: 'tis the doom
 Of spirits of my order to be rack'd
 In life, to wear their hearts out, and consume
 Their days in endless strife, and die alone;
 Then future thousands crowd around their tomb,
 And pilgrims come from climes where they have known
 The name of him—whose now is but a name,
 And wasting homage o'er the sullen stone,
 Spread his—by him unheard, unheeded—fame;
 And mine at least hath cost me dear: to die is nothing; but to wither thus—to tame
 My mind down from its own infinity—
 To live in narrow ways with little men,
 A common sight to every common eye,
 A wanderer, while even wolves can find a den,
 Ripp'd from all kindred, from all home, all things
 That make communion sweet, and soften pain—
 To feel me in the solitude of kings
 Without the power that makes them bear a crown—
 To envy every dove his nest and wings
 Which wait him where the Apennine looks down
 On Arno, till he perches, it may be,
 Within my all-inexorable town,

Where yet my boys are, and that fatal she,[†]
 Their mother, the cold partner who hath brought Destruction for a dowry!—this to see
 And feel, and know without repair, hath taught
 A bitter lesson; but it leaves me free:
 I have not vilely found, nor basely sought,
 They made an Exile—not a slave of me.

CANTO THE SECOND.

THE Spirit of the fervent days of Old,
 When words were things that came to pass, and
 thought
 Flash'd o'er the future, bidding men behold
 Their children's children's doom already brought Forth from the abyss of time which is to be,
 The chaos of events, where his half-wrought
 Shapes that must undergo mortality;
 What the great Seers of Israel wore within,
 That spirit was on them, and is on me,
 And if, Cassandra-like, amidst the din
 Of conflict none will hear, or hearing heed
 This voice from out the Wilderness, the sin
 Be theirs, and my own feelings be my meed,
 The only gerdon I have ever known.
 Hast thou not bled? and hast thou still to bleed,
 Italia? Ah! to me such things, foreknown
 With dim sepulchral light, bid me forget
 In thine irreparable wrongs my own;
 We can have but one country, and even yet Thou'rt mine—my bones shall be within thy breast.
 My soul within thy language, which once set
 With our old Roman sway in the wide West;
 But I will make another tongue arise
 As lofty and more sweet, in which express'd
 The hero's ardor, or the lover's sighs,
 Shall find alike such sounds for every theme
 That every word, as brilliant as thy skies,
 Shall realize a poet's proudest dream.
 And make thee Europe's nightingale of song;
 So that all present speech to thine shall seem
 The note of meaner birds, and every tongue
 Confess its barbarism when compared with thine.
 This shalt thou owe to him thou didst so wrong,
 Thy Tuscan Bard, the banish'd Ghibeline.
 Woe! woe! the veil of coming centuries
 Is rent,—a thousand years which yet supine
 Lie like the ocean waves ere winds arise,
 Heaving in dark and sullen undulation,
 Float from eternity into these eyes;
 The storms yet sleep, the clouds still keep their station,
 The unborn earthquake yet is in the womb,
 The bloody chaos yet expects creation,
 But all things are disposing for thy doom;
 The elements await but for the word,
 "Let there be darkness!" and thou grow'st a
 tomb!
 Yee! thou, so beautiful, shalt feel the sword,

* "In one so highly endowed by nature, and as communed
 by instruction, we may well sympathize with a resentment which exile and poverty rendered perpetually fresh. But the heart of Dante was naturally sensitive, and even tender: his poetry is full of comparisons from rural life; and the sincerity of his early passion for Beatrice pierces through the veil of allegory that surrounds her. But the memory of his injuries pursued him into the immensity of eternal light;

 and in the company of saints and angels, his unforgiving spirit darkness at the name of Florence."—HALLAM.

† This lady, whose name was Gemma, sprung from one of the most powerful Guelph families, named Donati.

* "The violence of Gemma's temper proved a source of the bitterest suffering to Dante."

Thou, Italy! so fair that Paradise,
 Revived in thee, blooms forth to man restored:
 Ah! must the sons of Adam lose it twice?
 Thou, Italy! whose ever-golden fields,
 Plough'd by the sunbeams solely, would suffice
 For the world's granary; thou, whose sky heaven gilds
 With brighter stars, and robes with deeper blue;
 Thou, in whose pleasant places Summer builds
 Her palace, in whose cradle Empire grew,
 And form'd the Eternal City's ornaments
 From spoils of kings whom freemen overthrew;
 Birthplace of heroes, sanctuary of saints,
 Where earthly first, then heavenly glory made
 Her home; thou, all which fondest fancy paints,
 And finds her prior vision but portray'd
 In feeble colors, when the eye—from the Alp
 Of horrid snow, and rock, and shaggy shade
 Of desert-loving pine, whose emerald scalp
 Nods to the storm—dilates and dotes o'er thee,
 And wistfully implores, as 't were for help,
 To see thy sunny fields, my Italy,
 Nearer and nearer yet, and dearer still
 The more approach'd, and dearest were they free,
 Thou—thou must wither to each tyrant's will:
 The Goth hath been,—the German, Frank, and Hun
 Are yet to come,—and on the imperial hill
 Ruin, already proud of the deeds done
 By the old barbarians, there awaits the new,
 Throned on the Palatine, while lost and won
 Rome at her feet lies bleeding; and the line
 Of human sacrifice and Roman slaughter
 Troubles the clotted air, of late so blue,
 And deepens into red the saffron water
 Of Tiber, thick with dead; the helpless priest,
 And still more helpless nor less holy daughter,
 Vow'd to their God, have shrieking fled, and ceased
 Their ministry: the nations take their prey,
 Iberian, Almain, Lombard, and the beast
 And bird, wolf, vulture, more humane than they Are; these but gorge the flesh and lap the gore
 Of the departed, and then go their way;
 But those, the human savages, explore
 All paths of torture, and insatiate yet,
 With Ugolino hunger prowls for more,
 Nine moons shall rise o'er scenes like this and set;
 The chiefless army of the dead, which late
 Beneath the traitor Prince's banner met,
 Hath left its leader's ashes at the gate;
 Had but the royal Rebel lived, perchance
 Thou hadst been spared, but his involved thy fate.
 Oh, Rome! the spoiler of the spoil of France,
 From Brennus to the Bourbon, never, never Shall foreign standard to thy walls advance,
 But Tiber shall become a mournful river.
 Oh! when the strangers pass the Alps and Po, Crush them, ye rocks! doods, whelm them, and for ever!
 Why sleep the idle avalanches so,
 To topple on the lonely pilgrim's head?
 Why doth Eridanus but overflow
 The peasant's harvest from his turbid bed?
 Were not each barbarous horde a nobler prey?
 Over Cambræ's host the desert spread
 Her sandy ocean, and the sea waves' sway
 Roll'd over Pharaoh and his thousands,—why,
 Mountains and waters, do ye not as they?
 And you, ye men! Romans, who dare not die,
 Sons of the conquerors who overthrew
 Those who o'erthrew proud Xerxes, where yet lie
 The dead whose tomb Oblivion never knew,
 Are the Alps weaker than Thermopylæ?
 Their passes more alluring to the view
 Of an invader? is it they, or ye,
 That to each host the mountain-gate unbar,
 And leave the march in peace, the passage free?

Why, Nature's self detains the victor's car,
 And makes your land impregnable, if earth
 Could be so; but alone she will not war,
 Yet aids the warrior worthy of his birth
 In a soil where the mothers bring forth men;
 Not so with those whose souls are little worth;
 For them no fortress can avail,—the den
 Of the poor reptile which preserves its sting
 Is more secure than walls of adamant, when
 The hearts of those within are quivering.
 Are ye not brave? Yes, yet the Ausonian soil Hath hearts, and hands, and arms, and hosts to bring
 Against Oppression; but how vain the toil,
 While still Division sows the seeds of woe
 And weakness, till the stranger reaps the spoil!
 Oh, my own beautiful land! so long laid low,
 So long the grave of thy own children's hopes,
 When there is but required a single blow
 To break the chain, yet—yet the Avenger stops,
 And Doubt and Discord step 'twixt thine and
 thee,
 And join their strength to that which with thee
 copes;
 What is there wanting then to set thee free,
 And show thy beauty in its fullest light?
 To make the Alps impassable; and we,
 Her sons, may do this with one deed—Unite.

CANTO THE THIRD.

FROM out the mass of never-dying ill,
 The Plague, the Prince, the Stranger, and the Sword,
 Vials of wrath but emptied to refill
 And flow again, I cannot all record
 That crowds on my prophetic eye: the earth
 And ocean written o'er would not afford
 Space for the annal, yet it shall go forth;
 Yes, all, though not by human pen, is graven,
 There where the farthest suns and stars have
 birth,
 Spread like a banner at the gate of heaven,
 The bloody scroll of our millennial wrongs
 Waves, and the echo of our groans is driven
 Athwart the sound of archangelic songs,
 And Italy, the martyr'd nation's gore,
 Will not in vain arise to where belongs
 Omnipotence and mercy evermore:
 Like to a harpstring stricken by the wind,
 The sound of her lament shall, rising o'er
 The seraph voices, touch the Almighty Mind.
 Meantime I, humblest of thy sons, and of Earth's dust by immortality refined
 To sense and suffering, though the vain may scoff,
 And tyrants threaten, and meeker victims bow
 Before the storm because its breath is rough,
 To thee, my country! whom before, as now,
 I loved and love, devote the mournful lyre
 And melancholy gift high powers allow
 To read the future; and if now my fire
 Is not as once it shone o'er thee, forgive!
 I but foretell thy fortunes—then expire!
 Think not that I would look on them and live.
 A spirit forces me to see and speak,
 And for my guerdon grants not to survive;

My heart shall be pour'd over thee and break :
 Yet for a moment, ere I must resume
 Thy sable web of sorrow, let me take Over the gleams that flash athwart thy gloom
 A softer glimpse; some stars shine through thy night,
 And many meteors, and above thy tomb
 Leans sculptured Beauty, which Death cannot blight :
 And from thine ashes boundless spirits rise
 To give thee honor, and the earth delight ;
 Thy soil shall still be pregnant with the wise,
 The gay, the learn'd, the generous, and the brave,
 Native to thee as summer to thy skies,
 Conquerors on foreign shores, and the far wave,*
 Discoverers of new worlds, which take their
 name : †
 For thee alone they have no arm to save,
 And all thy recompense is in their fame,
 A noble one to them, but not to thee—
 Shall they be glorious, and thou still the same ?
 Oh ! more than these illustrious far shall be
 The being—and even yet he may be born—
 The mortal saviour who shall set thee free,
 And see thy diadem, so changed and worn
 By fresh barbarians, on thy brow replaced ;
 And the sweet sun replenishing thy morn,
 Thy moral morn, too long with clouds defaced,
 And noxious vapors from Avernus risen,
 Such as all they must breathe who are debased
 By servitude, and have the mind in prison.
 Yet through this centuried eclipse of woe
 Some voices shall be heard, and earth shall listen ;
 Poets shall follow in the path I show,
 And make it broader : the same brilliant sky
 Which cheers the birds to song shall bid them glow,
 And raise their notes as natural and high ;
 Tuneless shall be their numbers ; they shall sing
 Many of love, and some of liberty,
 But few shall soar upon that eagle's wing,
 And look in the sun's face with eagle's gaze,
 All free and fearless as the feather'd king,
 But fly more near the earth ; how many a phrase
 Sublime shall lavish'd be on some small prince
 In all the prodigality of praise !
 And language, eloquently false, evince
 The harlotry of genius, which, like beauty,
 Too oft forgets its own self-reverence,
 And looks on prostitution as a duty.
 He who once enters in a tyrant's hall ‡
 As guest is slave, his thoughts become a booty,
 And the first day which sees the chain enthral
 A captive, sees his half of manhood gone §—
 The soul's emasculation saddens all
 His spirit ; thus the Bard too near the throne
 Quails from his inspiration, bound to please,—
 How servile is the task to please alone !
 To smooth the verse to suit his sovereign's ease
 And royal leisure, nor too much prolong
 Aught save his eulogy, and find, and seize,
 Or force, or forge fit argument of song !
 Thus trammell'd, thus condemn'd to Flattery's troubles,
 He tells through all, still trembling to be wrong :
 For fear some noble thoughts, like heavenly rebels,
 Should rise up in high treason to his brain.
 He sings, as the Athenian spoke, with pebbles In's mouth, lest truth should stammer thro' his strain.
 But out of the long file of sonneteers
 There shall be some who will not sing in vain,
 And he, their prince, shall rank among my peers, ||

And love shall be his torment ; but his grief
 Shall make an immortality of tears,
 And Italy shall hail him as the Chief
 Of Poet-lovers, and his higher song
 Of Freedom wreath him with as green a leaf.
 But in a farther age shall rise along
 The banks of Po two greater still than he ;
 The world which smiled on him shall do them
 wrong
 Till they are ashes, and repose with me.
 The first will make an epoch with his lyre,
 And fill the earth with feats of chivalry :
 His fancy like a rainbow, and his fire,
 Like that of Heaven, immortal, and his thought
 Borne onward with a wing that cannot tire ;
 Pleasure shall, like a butterfly new caught,
 Flutter her lovely pinions o'er his theme,
 And Art itself seem into Nature wrought
 By the transparency of his bright dream.—
 The second, of a tenderer, sadder mood,
 Shall pour his soul out o'er Jerusalem ;
 He, too, shall sing of arms, and Christian blood Shed where Christ bled for man ; and his high harp
 Shall, by the willow over Jordan's flood,
 Revive a song of Sion, and the sharp
 Conflict, and final triumph of the brave
 And pious, and the strife of hell to warp
 Their hearts from their great purpose, until wave
 The red-cross banners where the first red Cross
 Was crimson'd from his veins who died to save,
 Shall be his sacred argument ; the loss
 Of years, of favor, freedom, even of fame
 Contested for a time, while the smooth gloss
 Of courts would slide o'er his forgotten name,
 And call captivity a kindness, meant
 To shield him from insanity or shame,
 Such shall be his meet guerdon ! who was sent
 To be Christ's Laureate—they reward him well !
 Florence dooms me but death or banishment,
 Ferrara him a pittance and a cell,
 Harder to bear and less deserved, for I
 Had stung the factions which I strove to quell ;
 But this meek man, who with a lover's eye
 Will look on earth and heaven, and who will deign
 To embalm with his celestial flattery
 As poor a thing as e'er was spawn'd to reign,
 What will he do to merit such a doom ?
 Perhaps he'll love,—and is not love in vain
 Torture enough without a living tomb ?
 Yet it will be so—he and his compeer,
 The Bard of Chivalry, will both consume
 In penury and pain too many a year,
 And, dying in despondency, bequeath
 To the kind world, which scarce will yield a tear,
 A heritage enriching all who breathe
 With the wealth of a genuine poet's soul,
 And to their country a redoubled wreath,
 Unmatch'd by time ; not Hellas can unroll
 Through her olympiads two such names, though
 one
 Of hers be mighty ;—and is this the whole
 Of such men's destiny beneath the sun ?
 Must all the finer thoughts, the thrilling sense,
 The electric blood with which their arteries run,
 Their body's self-tuned soul with the intense
 Feeling of that which is, and fancy of
 That which should be, to such a recompense
 Conduct ? shall their bright plumage on the rough Storm be still scatter'd ? Yes, and it must be ;
 For, form'd of far too penetrable stuff,
 These birds of Paradise but long to flee

* Alexander Farnese, Spinola, Pescara, Eugene of Savoy, Montecuccoli.

† Columbus, Amerigo Vesputcci, Sebastian Cabot.

‡ A verse from the Greek tragedians, with which Pompey took leave of Cornelia on entering the boat in which he was slain.

§ The verse and sentiment are taken from Homer.

|| Petrarach.

Back to their native mansion, soon they find
Earth's mist with their pure pinions not agree,
And die or are degraded; for the mind
Succumbs to long infection, and despair,
And vulture passions flying close behind,
Await the moment to assail and tear;
And when at length the winged wanderers stoop,
Then is the prey-birds' triumph, then they share
The spoil, o'erpower'd at length by one fell swoop.
Yet some have been untouch'd who learn'd to bear,
Some whom no power could ever force to droop,
Who could resist themselves even, hardest care!
And task most hopeless; but some such have been,
And if my name amongst the number were,
That destiny austere, and yet serene,
Were prouder than more dazzling fame unblest'd;
The Alp's snow summit nearer heaven is seen
Than the volcano's fierce eruptive crest,
Whose splendor from the black abyss is flung,
While the scorch'd mountain, from whose burning breast
A temporary torturing flame is wrung,
Shines for a night of terror, then repels
Its fire back to the hell from whence it sprung,
The hell which in its entrails ever dwells.

CANTO THE FOURTH

MANY poets who have never penn'd
Their inspiration, and perchance the best:
They felt, and loved, and died, but would not lend
Their thoughts to meaner beings; they compress'd
The god within them, and rejoind'd the stars
Unlaurell'd upon earth, but far more blest'd
Than those who are degraded by the jars
Of passion, and their frailties link'd to fame,
Conquerors of high renown, but full of scars.
Many are poets, but without the name,
For what is poetry but to create
From overfeeling good or ill; and aim
At an external life beyond our fate,
And be the new Prometheus of new men,
Bestowing fire from heaven, and then, too late,
Finding the pleasure given repaid with pain,
And vultures to the heart of the bestower,
Who, having lavish'd his high gift in vain,
Lies chain'd to his lone rock by the sea-shore?
So be it: we can bear.—But thus all they Whose intellect is an o'ermastering power
Which still recoils from its encumbering clay
Or lightens it to spirit, whatso'er
The form which their creations may essay,
Are bards; the kindled marble's bust may wear
More poetry upon its speaking brow
Than aught less than the Homeric page may bear;
One noble stroke with a whole life may glow,
Or defy the canvas till it shine
With beauty so surpassing all below,
That they who kneel to idols as divine
Break no commandment, for high heaven is there
Transfused, transfigured:—and the line
Of poetry, which peoples but the air

With thought and beings of our thought reflected
Can do no more: then let the artist share
The palm, he shares the peril, and dejected
Faints o'er the labor unapproved—Alas!
Despair and Genius are too oft connected.
Within the ages which before me pass
Art shall resume and equal even the sway
Which with Apelles and old Phidias
She held in Hellas' unforgotten day.
Ye shall be taught by Ruin to revive
The Grecian forms at least from their decay,
And Roman souls at last again shall live
In Roman works wrought by Italian hands,
And temples, loftier than the old temples, give
New wonders to the world; and while still stands
The austere Pantheon, into heaven shall soar
A dome,* its image, while the base expands
Into a fane surpassing all before,
Such as all flesh shall flock to kneel in: ne'er
Such sight hath been unfolded by a door
As this, to which all nations shall repair
And lay their sins at this huge gate of heaven.
And the bold Architect unto whose care
The daring charge to raise it shall be given,
Whom all arts shall acknowledge as their lord,
Whether into the marble chaos driven
His chisel bid the Hebrew, at whose word
Israel left Egypt, stop the waves in stone,
Or hues of Hell be by his pencil pour'd
Over the damn'd before the Judgment-throne,†
Such as I saw them, such as all shall see,
Or fanes be built of grandeur yet unknown,
The stream of his great thoughts shall spring from
me.‡

The Ghibeline, who traversed the three realms
Which form the empire of eternity.
Amidst the clash of swords, and clang of helms,
The age which I anticipate, no less
Shall be the Age of Beauty, and while whelms
Calamity the nations with distress,
The genius of my country shall arise,
A Cedar towering o'er the Wilderness,
Lovely in all its branches to all eyes,
Fragrant as fair, and recognized afar,
Wafting its native incense through the skies.
Sovereigns shall pause amidst their sport of war,
Wean'd for an hour from blood, to turn and gaze
On canvas or on stone; and they who mar
All beauty upon earth, compell'd to praise,
Shall feel the power of that which they destroy;
And Art's mistaken gratitude shall raise
To tyrants who but take her for a toy
Emblems and monuments, and prostitute
Her charms to pontiffs proud,‡ who but employ
The man of genius as the meanest brute
To bear a burthen, and to serve a need,
To sell his labors, and his soul to boot.
Who toils for nations may be poor indeed,
But free: who sweats for monarchs is no more Than the gilt chamberlain, who, clothed and fe'd,
Stands sleek and slavish, bowing at his door.
Oh, Power that rulest and inspir'st! how
Is it that they on earth, whose earthly power
Is likeliest in heaven in outward show,
Least like to thee in attributes divine,
Tread on the universal necks that bow,
And then assure us that their rights are thine?
And how is it that they, the sons of fame,
Whose inspiration seems to them to shine
From high, they whom the nations oft name,

* The cupola of Saint Peter's.

† The Last Judgment, in the Sistine Chapel.

‡ I have read somewhere (if I do not err, for I cannot recollect where) that Dante was so great a favorite of Michael

Angelo's, that he had designed the whole of the Divine Commedia; but that the volume containing these studies was lost by sea.

§ See the treatment of Michael Angelo by Julius II., and his neglect by Leo X.

FRANCESCA OF RIMINI

Must pass their days in penury or pain,
Or step to grandeur through the paths of shame,
And wear a deeper brand and gaudier chain?
Or if their destiny be born aloof
From lowliness, or tempted thence in vain,
In their own souls sustain a harder proof,
The inner war of passions deep and fierce?
Florence! when thy harsh sentence razed my roof,
I loved thee; but the vengeance of my verse,
The hate of injuries which every year
Makes greater, and accumulates my curse,
Shall live, outliving all thou holdest dear,
Thy pride, thy wealth, thy freedom, and even that,
The most infernal of all evils here.
The sway of petty tyrants in a state;
For such way is not limited to kings,
And demagogues yield to them but in date,
As swept off sooner; in all deadly things,
Which make ~~men~~ hate themselves, and one another,
In discord, cowardice, cruelty, all that springs
From Death the Sin-born's incest with his mother,
In rank oppression in its rudest shape,
The faction Chief is but the Sultan's brother,
And the worst despot's far less human ape:
Florence! when this lone spirit, which so long
Years'd, as the captive tolling at escape,

To fly back to thee in despite of wrong,
An exile, sadder of all prisoners,
Who has the whole world for a dungeon strong,
Seas, mountains, and the horizon's verge for bars,
Which shut him from the sole small spot of earth
Where—whatsoever his fate—he still were here,
His country's, and might die where he had birth—
Florence! when this lone spirit shall return
To kindred spirits, thou wilt feel my worth,
And seek to honor with an empty urn
The ashes thou shalt ne'er obtain—Alas!
“What have I done to thee, my people?” Stern
Are all thy dealings, but in this they pass
The limits of man's common malice, for
All that a citizen could be I was;
Raised by thy will, all thine in peace or war,
And for this thou hast warr'd with me.—’Tis
done:
I may not overleap the eternal bar
Built up between us, and will die alone,
Beholding with the dark eye of a seer
The evil days to gifted souls foreshown,
Foretelling them to those who will not hear,
As in the old time, till the hour be come
When Truth shall strike their eyes through many a tear.
And make them own the Prophet in his tomb.

FRANCESCA OF RIMINI.*

FROM THE INFERNO OF DANTE.

CANTO V.

“THE land where I was born sits by the seas,
Upon that shore to which the Po descends,
With all his followers, in search of peace.
Love, which the gentle heart soon apprehends,
Selsed him for the fair person which was ta'en
From me, and me even yet the mode offends.
Love, who to none beloved to love again
Remits, seized me with wish to please, so strong,
That, as thou seest, yet it doth remain.
Love to one death conducted us along,
But Caina waits for him our life who ended:”
These were the accents utter'd by her tongue.—
Since I first listen'd to these souls offended,
I bow'd my visage, and so kept it till—“What think'st thou?” said the bard; when I unsmiled,
And recommenced: “Alas! unto such ill
How many sweet thoughts, what strong ecstasies,
Led these their evil fortune to fulfill!”
And then I turn'd unto their side my eyes,
And said, “Francesca, thy sad destinies
Have made me sorrow till the tears arise.

But tell me, in the season of sweet sighs,
By what and how thy love to passion rose,
So as his dim desires to recognize?”
Then she to me: “The greatest of all woes
Is to remind us of our happy days
In misery, and that thy teacher knows.
But if to learn our passion's first root preys
Upon thy spirit with such sympathy,
I will do even as he who weeps and says.—
We read one day for pastime, seated nigh,
Of Lancelot, how love enchain'd him too.
We were alone, quite unsuspectingly.
But oft our eyes met, and our cheeks in hue
All o'er discolor'd by that reading were;
But one point only wholly us o'erthrew:
When we read the long-sigh'd-for smile of her,
To be thus kiss'd by such devoted lover,
He who from me can be divided ne'er
Kiss'd my mouth, trembling in the act all over.
Accursed was the book and he who wrote!
That day no further love we did uncover.”
While thus one spirit told us of their lot,
The other wept, so that with pity's thralls
I swoon'd as if by death I had been smote,
And fell down even as a dead body falls.

* This translation, of what is generally considered the most exquisitely pathetic episode in the Divina Commedia, was recited in March, 1880, at Ravenna, where, just five centuries before, and in the very house in which the unfortunate lady was born, Dante's poem had been composed.

In mitigation of the crime of Francesca, Boccaccio relates, that “Guido engaged to give his daughter in marriage to Lancelotto, the eldest son of his enemy, the master of Rimini. Lancelotto, who was hideously deformed in countenance and figure, forewent that, if he presented himself in person, he should be rejected by the lady. He therefore resolved to marry her by proxy, and sent as his representative his younger brother, Paolo, the handsomest and the most accomplished man in all Italy. Francesca saw Paolo and imagined she beheld her future husband. That mistake was the commencement of her passion. The friends of Guido addressed him in strong remonstrances, and mournful predictions of the dangers to which he exposed a daughter, whose high spirit would never brook to be sacrificed with impunity. But Guido was no longer in a condition to make war; and the necessities of the politician overcame the feelings of the father.” Afterwards Francesca and Paolo being taken in adultery, were both put to death by the enraged Lancelotto. The interest of this pathetic narrative is much increased, when it is recollected that the father of this unfortunate lady was the beloved friend and generous protector of Dante during his latter days.

THE BLUES:

A Literary Eclogue.*

"Nimium ne crede colori."—VIRGIL.
O trust not, ye beautiful creatures, to hue,
Though your hair were as red as your stockings are blue.

ECLOGUE FIRST.†

London—Before the Door of a Lecture Room.

Enter Tracy, meeting Ink.

Ink. You're too late.

Tracy.

Is it over?

Ink.

Nor will be this hour.

But the benches are cramm'd like a garden in flower,

With the pride of our belles, who have made it the fashion;

So, instead of "beaux arts," we may say "la belle passion."

For learning, which lately has taken the lead in the world, and set all the fine gentlemen reading.

Tracy. I know it too well, and have worn out my patience

With studying to study your new publications.

There's Vamp, Scamp, and Mouthy, and Words-words and Co.‡

With their damnable—

Ink. Hold, my good friend, do you know whom you speak to?

Tracy. Right well, boy, and so does "the Row:"§

You're an author—a poet—

Ink.

And think you that I

Can stand tamely in silence to hear you decry The Muses?

Tracy.

Excuse me: I meant no offence To the Nine; though the number who make some pretence

To their favors is such—but the subject to drop, I am just piping hot from a publisher's shop

(Next door to the pastry-cook's; so that when I Cannot find the new volume I wanted to buy

On the bibliopole's shelves, it is only two paces, As one finds every author in one of those places):

Where I just had been skimming a charming critique,

So studded with wit, and so sprinkled with Greek! Where your friend—you know who—has just got such a threshing,

That it is, as the phrase goes, extremely "refreshing."¹

What a beautiful word!

Ink.

Very true; 'tis so soft And so cooling—they use it a little too oft;

And the papers have got it at last—but no matter. So they've cut up our friend then?

Tracy.

Not left him a tatter—Not a rag of his present or past reputation,

Which they call a disgrace to the age and the nation.

Ink. I'm sorry to hear this! for friendship, you know—

Our poor friend I—but I thought it would terminate so.

Our friendship is such, I'll read nothing to shock it. You don't happen to have the Review in your pocket?

Tracy. No; I left a round dozen of authors and others

(Very sorry, no doubt, since the cause is a brother's) All scrambling and jostling, like so many imps,

And on fire with impatience to get the next glimpse.

Ink. Let us join them.

Tracy.

What, won't you return to the lecture?

Ink. Why the place is so cramm'd, there's not room for a spectre.

Besides, our friend Scamp is to-day so absurd—

Tracy. How can you know that till you hear him?

Ink. I heard Quite enough; and, to tell you the truth, my re- treat

Was from his vile nonsense, no less than the best.

Tracy. I have had no great loss then?

Ink. Loss!—such a palaver! I'd inoculate sooner my wife with the alaver

Of a dog when gone rabid, than listen two hours To the torrent of trash which around him he pours,

Pump'd up with such effort, disgorged with such labor,

That—come—do not make me speak ill of one's neighbor.

Tracy. I make you!

* This trifle, which Lord Byron has himself designated as a "mere buffoonery, never meant for publication," was written in 1833, and first appeared in "The Liberal." The personal allusions in which it abounds are, for the most part, sufficiently intelligible; and, with a few exceptions, so good-humored, that the parties concerned may be expected to join in the laugh.

† "About the year 1781, it was much the fashion for several ladies to have evening assemblies, where the fair sex might participate in conversation with literary and ingenious men, animated by a desire to please. These societies were denominated Blue-stocking Clubs.

‡ See the stanzas on Messrs. Wordsworth and Southey in Don Juan, canto iii.

§ Paternoster row—long and still celebrated as a very bazaar of booksellers.

THE BLUES.

Ink. Yes, you! I said nothing until
You compell'd me, by speaking the truth—

Tra. To speak all!
Is that your deduction?

Ink. When speaking of Scamp ill,
I certainly follow, not set an example.

Tra. The fellow's a fool, an impostor, a rany.
And the crowd of to-day shows that one fool makes many.

But we two will be wise.
Ink. Pray, then, let us retire.

Tra. I would, but—
Ink. There must be attraction much higher Than Scamp, or the Jew's harp he nicknames his lyre,

To call you to this hotbed.
Tra. I own it—'t is true—

A fair lady—
Ink. A spinster?

Tra. Miss Lilac!
Ink. The Blue!

The heiress!
Tra. The angel!

Ink. The devil! why, man,
Pray get out of this hobble as fast as you can.

You wed with Miss Lilac! 't would be your perdition!

Mrs. a poet, a chemist, a mathematician.
Tra. I say she's an angel.

Ink. Say rather an angle.
If you and she marry, you'll certainly wrangle.

I say she's a Blue, man, as blue as the ether.
Tra. And is that any cause for not coming together?

Ink. Humph! I can't say I know any happy alliance

Which has lately sprung up from a wedlock with science.

She's so learned in all things, and fond of concern-
ing

Herself in all matters connected with learning,
That—

Tra. What?
Ink. I perhaps may as well hold my tongue;

But there's five hundred people can tell you you're wrong.

Tra. You forget Lady Lilac's as rich as a Jew.
Ink. Is it miss or the cash of mamma you pursue?

Tra. Why, Jack, I'll be frank with you—something of both.

The girl's a fine girl.
Ink. And you feel nothing loth

To her good lady-mother's reversion; and yet
Her life is as good as your own, I will bet.

Tra. Let her live, and as long as she likes: I demand

Nothing more than the heart of her daughter and
hand.

Ink. Why that heart's in the inkstand—that hand on the pen.

Tra. A propos—Will you write me a song now and then?

Ink. To what purpose?
Tra. You know, my dear friend, that in prose
My talent is decent, as far as it goes;

But in rhyme—
Ink. You're a terrible stick, to be sure.

Tra. I own it: and yet, in these times, there's no lure

For the heart of the fair like a stanza or two;
And so, as I can't, will you furnish a few?

Ink. In your name?
Tra. In my name. I will copy them out,
To slip into her hand at the very next rout.

Ink. Are you so far advanced as to hazard this?
Tra. Why,

Do you think me subdued by a Blue-stocking's eye,
So far as to tremble to tell her in rhyme

What I've told her in prose, at the least, as sublimes?

Ink. As sublime! If it be so, no need of my Muse.
Tra. But consider, dear Ink! she's one of the "Blues."

Ink. As sublime!—Mr. Tracy—I've nothing to say.

Stick to prose—As sublime!—but I wish you good day.

Tra. Nay, stay, my dear fellow—consider—I'm wrong;

I own it; but, prithee, compose me the song.
Ink. As sublime!

Tra. I but used the expression in haste.
Ink. That may be, Mr. Tracy, but shows damn'd bad taste.

Tra. I own it—I know it—acknowledge it—what can I say to you more?

Ink. I see what you'd be at:
You disparage my parts with insidious abuse,

Till you think you can turn them best to your own use.

Tra. And is that not a sign I respect them?
Ink. Why that

To be sure makes a difference.
Tra. I know what is what:

And you, who're a man of the gay world, no less
Than a poet of t'other, may easily guess

That I never could mean, by a word, to offend
A genius like you, and, moreover, my friend.

Ink. No doubt; you by this time should know what is due

To a man of—but come—let us shake hands.
Tra. You knew,

And you know, my dear fellow, how heartily I,
Whatever you publish, am ready to buy.

Ink. That's my bookseller's business; I care not for sale;

Indeed the best poems at first rather fail.
There were Ranegade's epics, and Botherby's plays,⁺

And my own grand romance—
Tra. Had its full share of praise.

I myself saw it puff'd in the "Old Girl's Review."⁺
Ink. What Review?

Tra. 'T is the English "Journal de Trevoux:"
A clerical work of our Jesuits at home.

Have you never yet seen it?
Ink. That pleasure's to come.

Tra. Make haste then.
Ink. Why so?

Tra. I have heard people say
That it threaten'd to give up the ghost t'other day.

Ink. Well, that is a sign of some spirit.
Tra. No doubt.

Shall you be at the Countess of Fiddlecome's rout?

Ink. I've a card, and shall go: but at present, as soon

As friend Scamp shall be pleased to step down from the moon

(Where he seems to be soaring in search of his wits),
And an interval grants from his lecturing fits,

I'm engaged to the Lady Bluebottle's collation,
To partake of a luncheon and learn'd conversation:

'T is a sort of reunion for Scamp, on the days
Of his lecture, to treat him with cold tongue and praise.

And I own, for my own part, that 't is not unpleasant.

* Messrs. Southey and Botherby.

+ "My Grandmother's Review, the British." This heavy journal has since been gathered to its grandmothers.

THE BLUES.

Will you go? There's Miss Lilac will also be present.

Trs. That "metal's attractive."

Ink. No doubt—to the pocket.
Trs. You should rather encourage my passion than shock it.

But let us proceed; for I think, by the hum—

Ink. Very true; let us go, then, before they can come.

Or else we'll be kept here an hour at their levy,
On the rack of cross questions, by all the blue berry.
Hark! Zounds, they'll be on us; I know by the Brons
Of old Botherby's spouting ex-cathedra tone.

Ay! there he is at it. Poor Scamp! better join.
Your friends, as he'll pay you back in your own coin.
Trs. All fair; 't is but lecture for lecture.

Ink. That's what I think.
But for God's sake let's go, or the Bore will be here.
Come, come: nay, I'm off.

Trs. You are right, and I'll follow.
'T is high time for a "Sto me served well Apollo."
And yet we shall have the whole crew on our heels.
Blues, dandies, and dowagers, and second-hand scribes,
All flocking to moisten their exquisite throats
With a glass of Madeira at Lady Bluestottle's.

[Exit Trs.]
[Exit Ink.]

ECOLOGUE SECOND.

*An Apartment in the House of Lady Bluestottle
—A Table prepared.*

Sir Richard Bluestottle enters.

Was there ever a man who was married so sorry?
Like a fool, I must needs do the thing in a hurry.
My life is reversed, and my quiet destroy'd;
My days, which once pass'd in so gentle a void,
Must now, every hour of the twelve, be employ'd:
The twelve, do I say?—of the whole twenty-four,
Is there one which I dare call my own any more?
What with driving and visiting, dancing and dining,
What with learning, and teaching, and scribbling, and shining

In science and art, I'll be curs'd if I know Myself from my wife; for although we are two,
Yet she somehow contrives that all things shall be done

In a style which proclaims us eternally one.
But the thing of all things which distresses me more Than the bills of the week (though they trouble me sore)

Is the numerous, humorous, backbiting crew
Of scribblers, wits, lecturers, white, black, and blue,
Who are brought to my house as an inn, to my cost—
For the bill here, it seems, is defray'd by the host—
No pleasure! no leisure! no thought for my pains,
But to hear a vile jargon which addles my brains:
A smatter and chatter, glean'd out of reviews,
By the rag, tag, and bobtail, of those they call
 "Blues!"

A rabble who know not—But soft, here they come!
Would to God I were deaf! as I'm not, I'll be dumb.

Enter Lady Bluestottle, Miss Lilac, Lady Bluestottle, Mr. Botherby, Ink, Tracy, Miss Mazarine, and others, with Scamp the Lecturer, etc., etc.

Lady Blueb. Ah! Sir Richard, good-morning:
I've brought you some friends.

Sir Rich. (bores, and afterwards aside.) If friends, they're the first.

Lady Blueb. But the luncheon attends.
I pray ye be seated, "sans cérémonie."
Mr. Scamp, you're fatigued; take your chair there, next me. [They all sit.]

Sir Rich. (aside.) If he does, his fatigue is to come.

Lady Blueb. Mr. Tracy—Lady Bluestottle—Miss Lilac—be pleased, pray, to place ye:

And you, Mr. Botherby—
Both. Oh, my dear lady,
I obey.

Lady Blueb. Mr. Ink, I ought to upbraid ye:
You were not at the lecture!

Ink. Excuse me, I was.
But the heat forced me out in the best part—ah!
And when—

Lady Blueb. To be sure it was scolding; but then
You have lost such a lecture!

Both. The best of the best.
Trs. How can you know that? there are two more.

Both. I defy him to beat this day's wondrous appeal.
The very walls shook.

Ink. Oh, if that be the best,
I allow our friend Scamp has this day done his best.
Miss Lilac, permit me to help you—a wing?

Miss Lil. No more, sir, I thank you. Who lectures next spring?

Both. Dick Dunder.

Ink. That is, if he lives.

Miss Lil. And why not?

Ink. No reason whatever, save that he's a cat.
Lady Bluestottle! a glass of Madeira!

Lady Bluest. With pleasure.
Ink. How does your friend Wordsworth, that Widernere treasure?

Does he stick to his lakes, like the leeches he sings,
And their gatherers, as Homer sung warriors and kings?

Lady Bluest. He has just got a place.

Ink. As a footman?

Lady Bluest. For shame!
Nor profane with your sneers so poetic a man.
Ink. Nay, I meant him no evil, but gild his master;

For the poet of peddlers 't were, sure, no disaster
To wear a new livery: the more, as 't is not
The first time he has turn'd both his creed and his coat.

Lady Bluest. For shame! I repeat. If Sir George could but hear—

Lady Blueb. Never mind our friend Ink; we all know, my dear,

'T is his way.

Sir Rich. But this place—
Ink. Is perhaps like friend Scamp's.

A lecturer's.

Lady Bluest. Excuse me—'t is one in "the Stamps."

He is made a collector.

Trs. Collector! How?

Sir Rich. What?

Miss Lil. I shall think of him oft when I buy a new hat:

There his works will appear—
Lady Bluest. Sir, they reach to the Ganges.

* Wordsworth was collector of stamps for Cumberland and Westmoreland.

THE BLUES.

Ink. I sha'n't go so far—I can have them at Grange's.*

Lady Blueb. Oh fie!

Miss Lil.

And for shame!

Lady Bluen.

You're too bad!

Both.

Very good!

Lady Bluen. How good?

Lady Blueb. He means nought—it is his phrase.

Lady Bluen. He means nothing; nay, ask him.

Lady Blueb. Pray, sir! did you mean

What you say?

Ink. Never mind if he did: 't will be seen That whatever he means won't alloy what he says.

Both. Sir?

Ink. Pray be content with your portion of praise; 'T was in your defence.

Both. If you please, with submission, I can make out my own.

Ink. It would be your perdition.

While you live, my dear Botherby, never defend yourself or your works; but leave both to a friend.

A propos—Is your play then accepted at last?

Ink. At last?

Both. Why I thought—that 's to say—there had pass'd

A few green-room whispers, which hinted—you

know

That the taste of the actors at best is so-so.

Both. Sir, the green-room 's in rapture, and so 's the Committee.

Ink. Ay—you are the plays for exciting our "pity

And fear," as the Greek says: for "purging the mind."

I doubt if you 'll leave us an equal behind.

Both. I have written the prologue, and meant to have pray'd

For a spice of your wit in an epilogue's aid.

Ink. Well, time enough yet, when the play 's to be play'd.

Is it cast yet?

Both. The actors are fighting for parts,

As is usual in that most litigious of arts.

Lady Blueb. We 'll all make a party, and go the first night.

Tra. And you promised the epilogue, Ink.

Ink. Not quite.

However, to save my friend Botherby trouble,

I 'll do what I can, though my pains must be double.

Tra. Why so?

Ink. To do justice to what goes before.

Both. Sir, I 'm happy to say, I have no fears on that score.

Your parts, Mr. Ink., are—

Ink. Never mind mine;

Stick to those of your play, which is quite your own line.

Lady Bluen. You're a fugitive writer, I think,

sir, of rhymes?

Ink. Yes, ma'am; and a fugitive reader sometimes.

On Wordswords, for instance, I seldom alight,

Or on Mouthey, his friend, without taking to flight.

Lady Bluen. Sir, your taste is too common: but time and posterity

Will right these great men, and this age's severity

Become its reproach.

Ink. I've no sort of objection,

So I 'm not of the party to take the infection.

Lady Blueb. Perhaps you have doubts that they ever will take?

Ink. Not at all; on the contrary, those of the lake

Have taken already, and still will continue

To take—what they can, from a groat to a guinea,

Of pension or place;—but the subject 's a bore.

Lady Bluen. Well, sir, the time 's coming.

Ink. Scamp! don't you feel sore?

What say you to this?

They have merit, I own;

Though their system's absurdity keeps it unknown.

Ink. Then why not unearth it in one of your lectures?

Scamp. It is only time past which comes under my strictures.

Lady Blueb. Come, a truce with all tartness;—

the joy of my heart

Is to see Nature's triumph o'er all that is art.

Wild Nature!—Grand Shakespeare!

Both. And down Aristotle!

Lady Bluen. Sir George† thinks exactly with

Lady Bluebottle;

And my Lord Seventy-four,‡ who protects our dear

Hard,

And who gave him his place, has the greatest regard

For the poet, who, singing of peddlers and asses,

Has found out the way to dispense with Parnassus.

Tra. And you, Scamp!—

Scamp. I needs must confess I 'm embarrass'd.

Ink. Don't call upon Scamp, who's already so harrass'd

With old schools, and new schools, and no schools, and all schools.

Tra. Well, one thing is certain, that some must be fools.

I should like to know who.

Ink. And I should not be sorry

To know who are not:—it would save us some worry.

Lady Blueb. A truce with remark, and let nothing control

This "feast of our reason, and flow of the soul."

Oh! my dear Mr. Botherby! sympathize!—I

Now feel such a rapture, I 'm ready to fly,

I feel so elastic—"so buoyant!—so buoyant!"§

Ink. Tracy! open the window.

Tra. I wish her much joy on 't.

Both. For God's sake, my Lady Bluebottle, check

not

This gentle emotion, so seldom our lot

Upon earth. Give it way; 't is an impulse which lifts

Our spirits from earth: 's the sublimest of gifts;

For which poor Prometheus was chain'd to his mountain:

'T is the source of all sentiment—feeling's true

fountain;

'T is the Vision of Heaven upon Earth: 't is the gas

Of the soul: 't is the seizing of shades as they pass,

And making them substance—'t is something divine:—

Ink. Shall I help you, my friend, to a little more wine?

Both. I thank you; not any more, sir, till I dine.

Ink. A propos—Do you dine with Sir Humphry?

to-day?

Tra. I should think with Duke Humphry was more in your way.

* Grange is or was a famous pastry-cook and fruiterer in Piccadilly.

† Sir George Beaumont—a constant friend of Mr. Wordsworth.

‡ It was not the present earl of Lonsdale, but James, the first earl, who offered to build, and completely furnish and man, a ship of seventy-four guns, towards the close of the American war, for the service of his country, at his own expense;—hence the soubriquet in the text.

§ Fact from life, with the words.

! The late Sir Humphry Davy, president of the Royal Society.

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

Ink. It might be of yore; but we authors now look
To the Knight, as a landlord, much more than the Duke.
The truth is, each writer now quite at his ease is,
And (except with his publisher) dines where he pleases.
But 't is now nearly five, and I must to the Park.
Tra. And I'll take a turn with you there till 't is dark.
And you, Scamp—
Scamp. Excuse me! I must to my notes
For my lecture next week.
Ink. He must mind whom he quotes
Out of "Elegant Extracts."
Lady Blueb. Well, now we break up;
But remember Miss Diddle* invites us to sup.

Ink. Then at two hours past midnight we all meet again,
For the sciences, sandwiches, hock, and champagne!
Tra. And the sweet lobster salad!
Both. I honor that meal;
For 't is then that our feelings most genuinely—feel.
Ink. True; feeling is truest then, far beyond question;
I wish to the gods 't was the same with digestion!
Lady Blueb. Pahaw!—never mind that; for one moment of feeling
Is worth—God knows what.
Ink. 'T is at least worth concealing
For itself, or what follows—But here comes your carriage.
Sir Rich. (aside). I wish all these people were d—d with my marriage! [Exeunt.]

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

BY QUEVEDO REDIVIVUS.†

SUGGESTED BY THE COMPOSITION SO ENTITLED BY THE AUTHOR OF "WAT TYLER."

"A Daniel come to judgment! yea, a Daniel!
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word."

PREFACE.

IT hath been wisely said, that "One fool makes many;"
and it hath been poetically observed,

"That fools rush in where angels fear to tread."—Pope.

If Mr. Southey had not rushed in where he had no business, and where he never was before, and never will be again, the following poem would not have been written. It is not impossible that it may be as good as his own, seeing that it cannot, by any species of stupidity, natural or acquired, be worse. The gross flattery, the dull impudence, the renegade intolerance and impious cant, of the poem by the author of "Wat Tyler," are something so stupendous as to form the sublime of himself—containing the quintessence of his own attributes.

So much for his poem—a word on his preface. In this preface it has pleased the magnanimous laureate to draw the picture of a supposed "Satanic school," the which he doth recommend to the notice of the legislature; thereby adding to his other laurels the ambition of those of an informer. If there exists anywhere, excepting in his imagination, such a school, is he not sufficiently armed against it by his own intense vanity? The truth is, that there are certain writers whom Mr. S. imagines, like Scrub, to have "talked of him; for they laughed consumedly."

I think I know enough of most of the writers to whom he is supposed to allude, to assert, that they, in their individual capacities, have done more good, in the charities of life, to their fellow-creatures, in any one year, than Mr. Southey has done harm to himself by his absurdities in his whole life; and this is saying a great deal. But I have a few questions to ask.

1stly, Is Mr. Southey the author of "Wat Tyler"?

2dly, Was he not refused a remedy at law by the highest judge of his beloved England, because it was a blasphemous and seditious publication?

3dly, Was he not entitled by William Smith, in full parliament, "a rancorous renegade"?

4thly, Is he not post-laureate, with his own lines on Martin the regicide staring him in the face?

And, 5thly, Putting the four preceding items together, with what conscience dare he call the attention of the laws to the publications of others, be they what they may?

I say nothing of the cowardice of such a proceeding; its meanness speaks for itself; but I wish to touch upon the motive, which is neither more nor less than that Mr. S. has been laughed at a little in some recent publications, as he was of yore in the "Anti-jacobin" by his present patrons. Hence all this "skimble-scamble stuff" about "Satanic," and so forth. However, it is worthy of him—"qualis ab incepto."

If there is anything obnoxious to the political opinions of a portion of the public in the following poem, they may thank Mr. Southey. He might have written hex-

* The late Miss Lydia White, whose hospitable functions have not yet been supplied to the circle of London artists and literati—an accomplished, clever, and truly amiable, but very eccentric lady. The name in the text could only have been suggested by the jingling resemblance it bears to Lydia.

† In 1821, Mr. Southey published a piece, in English hexameters, entitled "A Vision of Judgment;" and which Lord Byron, in criticising it, laughed at as "the Apotheosis of George the Third." In 1823 Byron's "Vision of Judgment" was issued in the pages of "The Liberal."

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

ameters, as he has written everything else, for aught that the writer cared—had they been upon another subject. But to attempt to canonise a monarch, who, whatever were his household virtues, was neither a successful nor a patriot king,—inasmuch as several years of his reign passed in war with America and Ireland, to say nothing of the aggression upon France,—like all other exaggeration, necessarily begets opposition. In whatever manner he may be spoken of in this new "Vision," his public career will not be more favorably transmitted by history. Of his private virtues (although a little expensive to the nation) there can be no doubt.

With regard to the supernatural personages treated of, I can only say that I know as much about them, and (as an honest man) have a better right to talk of them, than Robert Southey. I have also treated them more tolerantly. The way in which that poor insane creature, the laureate, deals about his judgments in the next world, is like his own judgment in this. If it was not completely ludicrous, it would be something worse. I don't think that there is much more to say at present.

QUEVEDO REDIVIVUS.

P. S.—It is possible that some readers may object, in these objectionable times, to the freedom with which saints, angels, and spiritual persons discourse in this "Vision." But, for precedents upon such points, I must refer him to Fielding's "Journey from this World to the next," and to the Visions of myself, the said Quevedo, in Spanish or translated. The reader is also requested to observe, that no doctrinal tenets are insisted upon or discussed; that the person of the Deity is carefully withheld from sight, which is more than can be said for the laureate, who hath thought proper to make him talk, not "like a school divine," but like the unschoolerlike Mr. Southey. The whole action passes on the outside of heaven; and Chaucer's Wife of Bath, Pulci's Morgante Maggiore, Swift's Tale of a Tub, and the other works above referred to, are cases in point of the freedom with which saints, etc., may be permitted to converse in works not intended to be serious.

Q. R.

The Vision of Judgment.

I.

SAINT PETER sat by the celestial gate:

His keys were rusty, and the lock was dull,
So little trouble had been given of late;

Not that the place by any means was full,
But since the Gallic era "eighty-eight"

The devils had ta'en a longer, stronger pull,
And "a pull altogether" as they say
At sea—which drew most souls another way.

II.

The angels all were singing out of tune,

And hoarse with having little else to do,

Excepting to wind up the sun and moon,

Or curb a runaway young star or two,

*. * Mr. Southey being, as he says, a good Christian and vindictive, threatens, I understand, a reply to this our answer. It is to be hoped that his visionary faculties will in the mean time have acquired a little more judgment, properly so called: otherwise he will get himself into new dilemmas. These apostate jacobins furnish rich rejoinders. Let him take a specimen. Mr. Southey laudeth grievously "one Mr. Landor," who cultivates much private renown in the shape of Latin verses; and not long ago, the post-laureate dedicated to him, it appeareth, one of his fugitive lyrics, upon the strength of a poem called Gebir. Who could suppose, that in this same Gebir the aforesaid Savage Landor* (for such is his grim cognomen) putteth into the infernal regions no less a person than the hero of his friend Mr. Southey's heaven,—yes, even George the Third! See also how personal Savage becometh, when he hath a mind. The following is his portrait of our late gracious sovereign:—

(Prince Gebir having descended into the infernal regions, the shades of his royal ancestors are, at his request, called up to his view; and he exclaims to his ghostly guide—)

"Arise, what wretch that dearest us? what wretch
Is that with eyebrows white and slanting brow?
Listen! him yonder, who, bound down supine,
Shrinks yelling from that sword there, engine-hung.
He too amongst my ancestors! I hate
The despot, but the dastard I despise.
Was he our countryman?"

"Alas, O king!

Perla bore him, but the breed account
Inclement winds blew blighting from northeast."

"He was a warrior then, nor fear'd the gods?"

"Gebir, he fear'd the demons, not the gods,
Though them indeed his daily face adored;
And was no warrior, yet the thousand lives
Squander'd, as stones to exercise a sling,
And the tame cruelty and cold caprice—
Oh madness of mankind! address'd, adored!"

Gebir, p. 22.

I omit noticing some edifying Ithyphallics of Savagius, wishing to keep the proper veil over them, if his grave but somewhat indiscreet worshipper will suffer it; but certainly these teachers of "great moral lessons" are apt to be found in strange company.

Or wild colt of a comet, which too soon
Broke out of bounds o'er the ethereal blue,
Splitting some planet with its playful tail,
As boats are sometimes by a wanton whale.

III.

The guardian seraphs had retired on high,
Finding their charges past all care below;
Terrestrial business fill'd nought in the sky
Save the recording angel's black bureau;
Who found, indeed, the facts to multiply
With such rapidity of vice and woe,
That he had stripp'd off both his wings in quills,
And yet was in arrears of human ill.

IV.

His business so augmented of late years,
That he was forced, against his will no doubt
(Just like those cherubs, earthly ministers),
For some resource to turn himself about,

* Walter Savage Landor, Esq., author of "Count Julian, a tragedy"—"Imaginary Conversations," in three series—and various other works, was an early friend of Mr. Southey, and difference of politics had never disturbed their personal feeling towards each other. Mr. Landor had long resided in Italy.

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

And claim the help of his celestial peers,
To aid him ere he should be quite worn out,
By the increased demand for his remarks:
Six angels and twelve saints were named his clerks.

V.

This was a handsome board—at least for heaven;
And yet he had even then enough to do,
So many conquerors' cars were daily driven,
So many kingdoms fitted up anew:
Each day too slew its thousands six or seven,
Till at the crowning carnage, Waterloo,
They threw their pens down in divine disgust—
The page was so besmeared with blood and dust.

VI.

This by the way; 't is not mine to record
Which peopled earth no better, hell as wont,
On this occasion his own work abhor'd,
So surfeited with the infernal revel:
Though he himself had sharpen'd every sword,
It almost quench'd his innate thirst of evil.
(Here Satan's sole good work deserves insertion—
'T is, that he has both generals in reversion.)

VII.

Let's skip a few short years of hollow peace,
Which peopled earth no better, hell as wont,
And heaven none—they form the tyrant's lease,
With nothing but new names subscribed upon't:
'T will one day finish: meantime they increase,
"With seven heads and ten horns," and all in front,
Like Saint John's foretold beast; but ours are born
Less formidable in the head than horn.

VIII.

In the first year of freedom's second dawn*
Died George the Third: although no tyrant, one
Who shielded tyrants, till each sense withdrawn
Left him nor mental nor external sun:
A better farmer ne'er brush'd dew from lawn,
A worse king never left a realm undone!
He died—but left his subjects still behind,
One-half as mad—and t'other no less blind.

IX.

He died!—his death made no great stir on earth;
His burial made some pomp; there was profusion
Of velvet, gilding, brass, and no great dearth
Of ought but tears—save those shed by collusion.
For these things may be bought at their true worth:
Of elegy there was the due infusion—
Bought also; and the torches, cloaks, and banners,
Heralds, and relics of old Gothic manners,

X.

Form'd a sepulchral melodrama. Of all
The fools who flock'd to swell or see the show,
Who cared about the corpse? The funeral
Made the attraction, and the black the woe.
There thrubb'd not there a thought which pierced the pall:
And when the gorgeous coffin was laid low,
It seem'd the mockery of hell to fold
The rottenness of eighty years in gold.

XI.

So mix his body with the dust! It might Return to what it must far sooner, were
The natural compound left alone to fight
Its way back into earth, and fire, and air;

* George III. died the 29th of January, 1820,—a year in which the revolutionary spirit broke out all over the south of Europe.

But the unnatural balsams scarcely slight
What nature made him at his birth, as time
As the mere million's base uncommenced clay—
Yet all his spices but prolong decay.

XII.

He's dead—and upper earth with him has done;
He's buried; save the undertaker's bill,
Or lapidary scrawl, the world is gone
For him, unless he left a German will:
But where's the proctor who will ask his son?
In whom his qualities are reigning still,
Except that household virtue, most unsex'd,
Of constancy to a bad, ugly woman.

XIII.

"God save the king!" 'T is a large economy
In God to save the like; but if he will
Be saving, all the better; for not one am I
Of those who think damnation better still:
I hardly know too if not quite alone am I
In this small hope of bettering things in
By circumscripting, with some slight restriction,
The eternity of hell's hot jurisdiction.

XIV.

I know this is unpopular; I know
'T is blasphemous; I know one may be damn'd
For hoping no one else may e'er be so;
I know my osteoblasts; I know we are corrupt;
With the best doctrines till we quite o'erflow;
I know that all save England's church have damn'd
And that the other twice two hundred churches
And synagogues have made a damn'd bad purchase.

XV.

God help us all! God help me too! I am,
God knows, as helpless as the devil can wish,
And a whit more difficult to damn.
Than is to bring to land a late-book'd shark,
Or to the butcher to purvey the lamb;
Not that I'm fit for such a noble task,
As one day will be that immortal fry
Of almost every body born to die.

XVI.

Saint Peter sat by the celestial gate,
And nodded o'er his keys; when, lo! there came
A wondrous noise he had not heard of late—
A rushing sound of wind, and stream, and flame;
In short, a roar of things extremely gross,
Which would have made saint Peter's seat ex-
claim;
But he, with first a start and then a wink,
Said, "There's another star gone out, I think!"

XVII.

But ere he could return to his repose,
A cherub dapp'd his right wing o'er his nose—
At which Saint Peter yawn'd, and rubb'd his nose;
"Saint porter," said the angel, "prithies rise!"
Waving a goodly wing, which glow'd, as glow'd
An earthly peacock's tail, with heavenly dye;
To which the saint replied, "Well, what's the matter?"
Is Lucifer come back with all this clatter?"

XVIII.

"No," quoth the cherub; "George the Third is dead."
"And who is George the Third?" quoth the apostle:
"What George? what Third?" "The King of England," said
The angel. "Well! he won't be long at it."

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

Him on his way; but does he wear his head?
Because the last we saw here had a tustle,
And ne'er would have got into heaven's good graces,
Had he not flung his head in all our faces.

XX.

"He was, if I remember, king of France;"
That head of his, which could not keep a crown
On earth, yet ventured in my face to advance
A claim to those of martyrs—like my own:
If I had had my sword, as I had once
When I cut ears off, I had cut him down;
But having but my keys, and not my brand,
I only knock'd his head from out his hand.

XXI.

"And then he set up such a headless howl,
That all the saints came out and took him in;
And there he sits by Saint Paul, cheek by jowl;
That fellow Paul—the parvenu! The skin
Of Saint Bartholomew, which makes his cowl
In heaven, and upon earth redeem'd his sin,
So as to make a martyr, never sped
Better than did this weak and wooden head.

XXII.

"But had it come up here upon its shoulders,
There would have been a different tale to tell:
The fellow-feeling in the saints beholders
Seems to have acted on them like a spell;
And so this very foolish head heaven solders
Back on its trunk: it may be very well,
And seems the custom here to overthrow
Whatever has been wisely done below."

XXIII.

The angel answer'd, "Peter! do not pout:
The king who comes has head and all entire,
And never knew much what it was about—
He did as doth the puppet—by its wire,
And will be judged like all the rest, no doubt:
My business and your own is not to inquire
Into such matters, but to mind our cue—
Which is to act as we are bid to do."

XXIV.

While thus they spake, the angelic caravan,
Arriving like a rush of mighty wind,
Cleaving the fields of space, as doth the swan
Some silver stream (say Ganges, Nile, or Indu,
Or Thames, or Tweed), and 'midst them an old man
With an old soul, and both extremely blind,
Halted before the gate, and in his shroud
Seated their fellow traveller on a cloud.

XXV.

But bringing up the rear of this bright host
A Spirit of a different aspect waved
His wings, like thunder-clouds above some coast Whose barren beach with frequent wrecks is paved;
His brow was like the deep when tempest-toss'd;
Fierce and unfathomable thoughts engraved
Eternal wrath on his immortal face,
And where he gazed a gloom pervaded space.

XXVI.

As he drew near, he gazed upon the gate
Ne'er to be enter'd more by him or Sin,

With such a glance of supernatural hate,
As made Saint Peter wish himself within;
He patter'd with his keys at a great rate,
And sweated through his apostolic skin:
Of course his perspiration was but ichor,
Or some such other spiritual liquor.

XXVII.

The very cherubs huddled all together,
Like birds when soars the falcon; and they felt
A tingling to the tip of every feather,
And form'd a circle like Orion's belt
Around their poor old charge; who scarce knew whither

His guards had led him, though they gently dealt
With royal manes (for by many stories,
And true, we learn the angels all are Tories).

XXVIII.

As things were in this posture, the gate flew
Asunder, and the flashing of its hinges
Flung over space an universal hue
Of many-color'd flame, until its tinges
Reach'd even our speck of earth, and made a new Aurora borealis spread its fringes
O'er the North Pole; the same seen, when ice-
bound,

By Captain Parry's crew, in "Melville's Sound."†

XXIX.

And from the gate thrown open issued beaming
A beautiful and mighty Thing of Light,
Radiant with glory, like a banner streaming
Victorious from some world-o'erthrowing fight:
My poor comparisons must needs be teeming
With earthly likenesses, for here the night
Of clay obscures our best conceptions, saving
Johanna Southcote,‡ or Bob Southey raving.

XXX.

"T was the archangel Michael: all men know
The make of angels and archangels, since
There's scarce a scribbler has not one to show,
From the fiends' leader to the angels' prince;
There also are some altar-pieces, though
I really can't say that they much evince
One's inner notions of immortal spirits;
But let the connoisseurs explain their merits.

XXXI.

Michael flew forth in glory and in good;
A goodly work of him from whom all glory
And good arise; the portal past—he stood;
Before him the young cherubs and saints hoary—
I say young, begging to be understood
By looks, not years; and should be very sorry
To state, they were not older than Saint Peter,
But merely that they seem'd a little sweeter).

XXXII.

The cherubs and the saints bow'd down before
That arch-angelic hierarchy, the first
Of essences angelical, who wore
The aspect of a god; but this ne'er nursed
Pride in his heavenly bosom, in whose core
No thought, save for his Master's service, durst
Intrude, however glorified and high;
He knew him but the viceroy of the sky.

* Louis XVI., guillotined in January, 1793.

† See Captain Sir Edward Parry's Voyage, in 1819-20, for the Discovery of a Northwest passage.—"I believe it is almost impossible for words to give an idea of the beauty and variety which this magnificent phenomenon displayed. The luminous arch had broken into irregular masses, streaming with much rapidity in different directions, varying continually in shape and interest, and extending themselves from north, by the east to north."

‡ Johanna Southcote, the aged lunatic, who fancied herself, and was believed by many thousand followers, to be with child of a new Messiah, died in 1815. There was a full account of her in the Quarterly Review.

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

XXXII.

He and the sombre, silent Spirit met—
They knew each other both for good and ill;
Such was their power, that neither could forget
His former friend and future foe; but still
There was a high, immortal, proud regret
In either's eye, as if 't were less their will
Than destiny to make the eternal years
Their date of war, and their "champ clos" the spheres.

XXXIII.

But here they were in neutral space: we know
From Job, that Satan hath the power to pay
A heavenly visit thrice a year or so;
And that "the sons of God," like those of clay,
Must keep him company; and we might show
From the same book, in how polite a way
The dialogue is held between the Powers
Of Good and Evil—but 't would take up hours.

XXXIV.

And this is not a theologic tract,
To prove with Hebrew and with Arabic,
If Job be allegory or a fact.
But a true narrative; and thus I pick
From out the whole but such and such an act
As sets aside the slightest thought of trick.
'T is every tittle true, beyond suspicion,
And accurate as any other vision.

XXXV.

The spirits were in neutral space, before
The gate of heaven; like eastern thresholds is
The place where Death's grand cause is argued o'er,
And souls despatch'd to that world or to this;
And therefore Michael and the other wore
A civil aspect: though they did not kiss,
Yet still between his Darkness and his Brightness
There pass'd a mutual glance of great politeness.

XXXVI.

The archangel bow'd, not like a modern beau,
But with a graceful oriental bend,
Pressing one radiant arm just where below
The heart in good men is supposed to tend;
He turn'd as to an equal, not too low,
But kindly; Satan met his ancient friend
With more hauteur, as might an old Castilian
Poor noble meet a mushroom rich civilian.

XXXVII.

He merely bent his diabolic brow
An instant; and then raising it, he stood
In act to assert his right or wrong, and show Cause why King George by no means could or should
Make out a case to be exempt from woe
Eternal, more than other kings, endued
With better sense and hearts, whom history mentions.
Who long have "paved hell with their good intentions."*

XXXVIII.

Michael began: "What wouldst thou with this man,
Now dead, and brought before the Lord? What ill
Hath he wrought since his mortal race began,
That thou canst claim him? Speak! and do thy will,
If it be just; if in this earthly span
He hath been greatly failing to fulfill
His duties as a king and mortal, say,
And he is thine; if not, let him have way."

XXXIX.

"Michael!" replied the Prince of Air, "even he,
Before the gate of him thou servest, must
I claim my subject: and will make appear
That as he was my worshipper in dust,
So shall he be in spirit, although dear
To thee and thine, because nor wine nor lust
Were of his weaknesses; yet on the throne
He reign'd o'er millions to serve me alone.

XL.

"Look to our earth, or rather mine; it was,
Once, more thy Master's: but I triumph not
In this poor planet's conquest; nor, alas!
Need he thou servest envy me my lot:
With all the myriads of bright worlds which pass
In worship round him, he may have forgot
Yon weak creation of such paltry things:
I think few worth damnation save their kings,—

XLI.

"And these but as a kind of quit-rent, to Assert my right as lord; and even had
I such an inclination, 't were (as you
Well know) superfluous; they are grown so bad,
That hell has nothing better left to do
Than leave them to themselves: so much more mad
And evil by their own internal curse,
Heaven cannot make them better, nor I worse.

XLII.

"Look to the earth, I said, and say again:
When this old, blind, mad, helpless, weak, poor worm
Began in youth's first bloom and flush to reign,
The world and he both wore a different form,
And much of earth and all the watery plain
Of ocean call'd him king: through many a storm
His isles had floated on the abyss of time;
For the rough virtues chose them for their clime.

XLIII.

"He came to his sceptre young; he leaves it old:
Look to the state in which he found his realm,
And left it; and his annals too behold.
How to a minion first he gave the helm;
How grew upon his heart a thirst for gold,
The beggar's vice, which can but overwhelm
The meanest hearts: and for the rest, but glance
Thine eye along America and France.

XLIV.

"'T is true, he was a tool from first to last
(I have the workmen safe); but as a tool
So let him be consumed. From out the past
Of ages, since mankind have known the rule
Of monarchs—from the bloody rolls amass'd
Of sin and slaughter—from the Cæsars' school,
Take the worst pupil; and produce a reign
More drench'd with gore, more cumber'd with the sain.

XLV.

"He ever warr'd with freedom and the free:
Nations as men, home subjects, foreign foes,
So that they utter'd the word 'Liberty!'
Found George the Third their first opponent.
Whose
History was ever stain'd as his will be
With national and individual woe?
I grant his household abstinence; I grant
His neutral virtues, which most monarchs want;

* "No mint in the course of his religious warfare was more sensible of the unhappy failure of pious resolves than Dr.

Johnson: he said one day, talking to an acquaintance on this subject, 'Sir, hell is paved with good intentions.'—Boswell.

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

XLVI.

"I know he was a constant consort; own
He was a decent sire, and middling lord.
All this is much, and most upon a throne;
As temperance, if at Apicius' board,
Is more than at an anchorite's supper shown.
I grant him all the kindest can accord;
And this was well for him, but not for those Millions who found him what oppression chose.

XLVII.

"The New World shook him off; the Old yet groans
Beneath what he and his prepared, if not Completed: he leaves heirs on many thrones
To all his vices, without what begot
Compassion for him—his tame virtues; drones
Who sleep, or despots who have now forgot
A lesson which shall be retaught them, wake
Upon the thrones of earth; but let them quake!

XLVIII.

"Five millions of the primitive, who hold
The faith which makes ye great on earth, implored
A part of that vast all they held of old,—
Freedom to worship—not alone your Lord,
Michael, but you, and you, Saint Peter! Cold
Must be your souls, if you have not abhorrd
The foe to Catholic participation
In all the license of a Christian nation.

XLIX.

"True! he allow'd them to pray God: but as
A consequence of prayer, refused the law
Which would have placed them upon the same base
With those who did not hold the saints in awe."
But here Saint Peter started from his place,
And cried, "You may the prisoner withdraw:
Ere heaven shall open her portals to this Gueph,
While I am guard, may I be damn'd myself!

L.

"Sooner will I with Cerberus exchange
My office (and his is no sinecure)
Than see this royal Bedlam bigot range
The azure fields of heaven, of that be sure!"
"Saint!" replied Satan, "you do well to avenge
The wrongs he made your satellites endure;
And if to this exchange you should be given,
I'll try to coax our Cerberus up to heaven."

LL.

Here Michael interposed: "Good saint! and devil!
Pray, not so fast: you both outrun discretion.
Saint Peter! you were wont to be more civil:
Satan! excuse this warmth of his expression,
And condescension to the vulgar's level:
Even saints sometimes forget themselves in session.
Have you got more to say?"—"No."—"If you
please,
I'll trouble you to call your witnesses."

LII.

Then Satan turn'd and waved his swarthy hand,
Which stirr'd with its electric qualities
Clouds farther off than we can understand,
Although we find him sometimes in our skies;
Infernal thunder shook both sea and land
In all the planets, and hell's batteries
Let off the artillery, which Milton mentions
As one of Satan's most sublime inventions.

LIII.

This was a signal unto such damn'd souls
As have the privilege of their damnation
Extended far beyond the mere controls
Of worlds past, present, or to come; no station
Is theirs particularly in the rolls
Of hell assign'd; but where their inclination
Or business carries them in search of game,
They may range freely—being damn'd the same.

LIV.

They are proud of this—as very well they may,
It being a sort of knighthood, or gilt key
Stuck in their loins; or like to an "entrée"
Up the back stairs, or such free-masonry.
I borrow my comparisons from clay,
Being clay myself. Let not those spirits be Offended with such base low likenesses;
We know their posts are nobler far than these.

LV.

When the great signal ran from heaven to hell—
About ten million times the distance reckon'd
From our sun to its earth, as we can tell
How much time it takes up, even to a second,
For every ray that travels to dispel
The fogs of London, through which, dimly beacon'd,
The weathercocks are gilt some thrice a year,
If that the summer is not too severe:—

LVI.

I say that I can tell—'t was half a minute:
I know the solar beams take up more time
Ere, pack'd up for their journey, they begin it;
But then their telegraph is less sublime,
And if they ran a race, they would not win it
Gainst Satan's couriers bound for their own clime.
The sun takes up some years for every ray
To reach its goal—the devil not half a day.

LVII.

Upon the verge of space, about the size
Of half a crown, a little speck appear'd
(I've seen a something like it in the skies
In the Ægean, ere a squall); it near'd,
And, growing bigger, took another guise;
Like an aerial ship, it tack'd, and steer'd,
Or was steer'd (I am doubtful of the grammar
Of the last phrase, which makes the stanza stammer;—

LVIII.

But take your choice); and then it grew a cloud;
And so it was—a cloud of witnesses.
But such a cloud! No land e'er saw a crowd
Of locusts numerous as the heavens saw these;
They shadow'd with their myriads space; their loud
And varied cries were like those of wild geese
(If nations may be likened to a goose),
And realized the phrase of "hell broke loose."

LIX.

Here crash'd a sturdy oath of stout John Bull,
Who damn'd away his eyes as heretofore:
There Paddy brogued "By Jasus!"—"What's your wull?"

The temperate Scot exclaim'd: the French ghost swore

In certain terms I sha'n't translate in full,
As the first coachman will; and 'midst the war,
The voice of Jonathan was heard to express,
"Our president is going to war, I guess."

* George III.'s determination against the Catholic claims.
† A gold or gilt key, peeping from below the skirts of the coat, marks a lord chamberlain.

‡ An allusion to Horace Walpole's expression in a letter—
"The summer has set in with its usual severity."

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

LX.

Besides there were the Spaniard, Dutch, and Dane:
In short, an universal shoal of shades,
From Otaheite's isle to Salisbury Plain,
Of all climates and professions, years and trades,
Ready to swear against the good king's reign,
Bitter as clubs in cards are against spades:
All summon'd by this grand "subpoena," to Try if kings may n't be damn'd like me or you.

LXI.

When Michael saw this host, he first grew pale,
As angels can; next, like Italian twilight,
He turn'd all colors—as a peacock's tail,
Or sunset streaming through a Gothic skylight
In some old abbey, or a trout not stale,
Or distant lightning on the horizon by night,
Or a fresh rainbow, or a grand review
Of thirty regiments in red, green, and blue.

LXII.

Then he address'd himself to Satan: "Why—
My good old friend, for such I deem you, though
Our different parties make us fight so shy,
I ne'er mistake you for a personal foe;
Our difference is political, and I
Trust that, whatever may occur below,
You know my great respect for you: and this Makes me regret whate'er you do amiss—

LXIII.

"Why, my dear Lucifer, would you abuse
My call for witnesses? I did not mean
That you should half of earth and hell produce;
'Tis even superfluous, since two honest, clean,
True testimonies are enough: we lose
Our time, nay, our eternity, between
The accusation and defence: if we Hear both, 't will stretch our immortality."

LXIV.

Satan replied, "To me the matter is Indifferent, in a personal point of view:
I can have fifty better souls than this
With far less trouble than we have gone through Already; and I merely argued his Late majesty of Britain's case with you
Upon a point of form: you may dispose
Of him; I've kings enough below, God knows!"

LXV.

Thus spoke the Demon (late call'd "multifaced"
By multo-scribbling Southey). "Then we'll call
One or two persons of the myriads placed
Around our congress, and dispense with all
The rest," quoth Michael: "Who may be so graced
As to speak first? there's choice enough—who shall
It be?" Then Satan answer'd, "There are many;
But you may choose Jack Wilkes as well as any."

LXVI.

A merry, cock-eyed, curious-looking sprite
Upon the instant started from the throng,
Dress'd in a fashion now forgotten quite:
For all the fashions of the flesh stick long
By people in the next world; where unite
All the costumes since Adam's, right or wrong,
From Eve's fig-leaf down to the petticoat,
Almost as scanty, of days less remote.

LXVII.

The spirit look'd around upon the assembly
Assembled, and exclaim'd, "My friends of old
The spheres, we shall catch cold amongst the clouds:
So let's to business: why this general call?
If these are freeholders I see in clouds,
And 't is for an election that they bawl,
Behold a candidate with unsav'd soul!
Saint Peter, may I count upon your vote?"

LXVIII.

"Sir," replied Michael, "you mistake; these things
Are of a former life, and what we do
Above is more august; to judge of kings
Is the tribunal met: so now you know."
"Then I presume those gentlemen with wings,"
Said Wilkes, "are cherubs; and that soul below
Looks much like George the Third, but to my mind
A good deal older—Bless me! is he blind?"

LXIX.

"He is what you behold him, and his doom Depends upon his deeds," the Angel said.
"If you have aught to arraign in him, the tomb
Gives license to the humblest beggar's hand
To lift itself against the loftiest."—"Some,"
Said Wilkes, "don't wait to see them laid in lead;
For such a liberty—and I, for one,
Have told them what I thought beneath the sun."

LXX.

"Above the sun repeat, then, what thou hast
To urge against him," said the Archangel.
"Why,"
Replied the spirit, "since old scores are past,
Must I turn evidence? In faith, not I.
Besides, I beat him hollow at the last,
With all his Lords and Commons: in the sky
I don't like ripping up old stories, since
His conduct was but natural in a prince."

LXXI.

"Foolish, no doubt, and wicked, to oppress
A poor unlucky devil without a shilling;
But then I blame the man himself much less
Than Bute and Grafton, and shall be unwilling
To see him punish'd here for their enorm,
Since they were both damn'd long ago, and still in Their place below: for me, I have forgiven,
And vote his 'habens corpus' into heaven."

LXXII.

"Wilkes," said the devil, "I understood all this;
You turn'd to half a courtier ere you died,
And seem to think it would not be amiss
To grow a whole one on the other side
Of Charon's ferry: you forget that his Reign is concluded; whatso'er betide,
He won't be sovereign more; you've lost your labor,
For at the best he will but be your neighbor."

LXXIII.

"However, I knew what to think of it,
When I beheld you, in your josting way,
Flitting and whispering round about the spot
Where Belial, upon duty for the day,
With Fox's lard was dastling William Pitt,
His pupil; I knew what to think, I say;
That fellow even in hell breeds farther than I'll have him gagg'd—'t was one of his own kin."

* For the political history of John Wilkes, who died chamberlain of the city of London, we must refer to any history of the reign of George III. His prodigal personal character is abundantly displayed in the collection of the poems published by his daughter; since his death.

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

LXXIV.

"Call Junius!" From the crowd a shadow stalk'd,
And at the name there was a general squeeze,
So that the very ghosts no longer walk'd
In comfort, at their own aerial ease,
But were all ramm'd, and jamm'd (but to be balk'd,
As we shall see), and jostled hands and knees,
Like wind compress'd and pent within a bladder,
Or like a human colic, which is sadder.

LXXV.

The shadow came—a tall, thin, gray-hair'd figure,
That look'd as it had been a shade on earth;
Quick in its motions, with an air of vigor,
But nought to mark its breeding or its birth:
Now it wax'd little, then again grew bigger,
With now an air of gloom, or savage mirth;
But as you gazed upon its features, they Changed every instant—to what, none could say.

LXXVI.

The more intently the ghosts gazed, the less
Could they distinguish whose the features were;
The devil himself seem'd puzzled even to guess;
They varied like a dream—now here, now there;
And several people swore from out the press,
They knew him perfectly; and one could swear
He was his father; upon which another
Was sure he was his mother's cousin's brother:

LXXVII.

Another, that he was a duke, or knight,
An orator, a lawyer, or a priest,
A nabob, a man-midwife;* but the wight
Mysterious changed his countenance at least
As oft as they their minds: though in full sight
He stood, the puzzle only was increased;
The man was a phantasmagoria in Himself—he was so volatile and thin.†

LXXVIII.

The moment that you had pronounced him one,
Presto! his face changed, and he was another;
And when that change was hardly well put on,
It varied, till I don't think his own mother
(If that he had a mother) would her son
Have known, he shifted so from one to t'other;
Till guessing from a pleasure grew a task,
At this epistolary "Iron Mask."‡

LXXIX.

For sometimes he like Cerberus would seem—
"Three gentlemen at once" (as eagerly says Good Mrs. Malaprop); then you might deem
That he was not even one; now many rays
Were flashing round him; and now a thick steam
Hid him from sight—like fogs on London days:
Now Burke, now Tooke, he grew to people's fancies,
And certes often like Sir Philip Francis.‡

* Among the various persons to whom the letters of Junius have been attributed we find the Duke of Portland, Lord George Sackville, Sir Philip Francis, Mr. Burke, Mr. Dunning, the Rev. John Horne Tooke, Mr. Hugh Boyd, Dr. Willcot, etc.

† I don't know what to think. Why should Junius be dead? If suddenly appoxxed, would he rest in his grave without sending his ~~adieu~~ to shout in the ears of posterity. Junius was X. Y. Z., Esq., buried in the parish of Repair his monument, ye churchwardens! Print a new edition of his Letters, ye booksellers! Impossible—the man must be alive, and will never die without the disclosure. I like him; he was a good hater."—Byron Diary, Nov. 23, 1812. Sir Philip Francis died in December, 1812.

‡ The mystery of "l'homme au masque de fer," the ever-lasting puzzle of the last century, has at length, in general

LXXX.

I've an hypothesis—it is quite my own;
I never let it out till now, for fear
Of doing people harm about the throne,
And injuring some minister or peer,
On whom the stigma might perhaps be blown;
It is—my gentle public, lend thine ear!
'Tis, that what Junius we are wont to call
Was really, truly, nobody at all.

LXXXI.

I don't see wherefore letters should not be Written without hands, since we daily view
Them written without heads; and books, we see,
Are fill'd as well without the letter too:
And really till we fix on somebody
For certain sure to claim them as his due,
Their author, like the Niger's mouth, will bother
The world to say if there be mouth or author.

LXXXII.

"And who and what art thou?" the Archangel said.
"For that you may consult my title-page,"
Replied this mighty shadow of a shade:
"If I have kept my secret half an age,
I scarce shall tell it now."—"Canst thou upbraid," Continued Michael, "George Rex, or allege Aught further?" Junius answer'd, "You had better
First ask him for his answer to my letter:

LXXXIII.

"My charges upon record will outlast
The brass of both his epitaph and tomb."
"Repent'st thou not," said Michael, "of some past
Exaggeration? something which may doom
Thyself if false, as him if true? Thou wast
Too bitter—is it not so?—in thy gloom
Of passion?"—"Passion!" cried the phantom dim,
"I loved my country, and I hated him.

LXXXIV.

"What I have written, I have written: let
The rest be on his head or mine!" So spoke
Old "Nominis Umbra;" and while speaking yet,
A way he melted in celestial smoke.
Then Satan said to Michael, "Don't forget
To call George Washington, and John Horne
Tooke,
And Franklin;"—but at this time there was heard
A cry for room, though not a phantom stirr'd.

LXXXV.

At length, with jostling, elbowing, and the aid
Of cherubim appointed to that post,
The devil Asmodeus to the circle made
His way, and look'd as if his journey cost
Some trouble. When his burden down he laid,
"What's this?" cried Michael; "why, 'tis not a ghost?"

opinion, been cleared up, by a French work published in 1826, and which formed the basis of an entertaining one in English by Lord Dover. See Quarterly Review, vol. xxxiv., p. 19.

§ "That the work entitled 'The Identity of Junius with a Distinguished Living Character established' proves Sir Philip Francis to be Junius, we will not affirm; but this we can safely assert: that it accumulates such a mass of circumstantial evidence as renders it extremely difficult to believe he is not, and that, if so many coincidences shall be found to have ruled us in this case, our faith in all conclusions drawn from proofs of a similar kind may henceforth be shaken."—MACKINTOSH.

|| The well-known motto of Junius is, "Sed nominis umbra."

THE VISION OF JUDGMENT.

"I know it," quoth the incubus; "but he Shall be one, if you leave the affair to me.

LXXXVI.

"Confound the renegade! I have sprain'd
My left wing, he's so heavy; one would think
Some of his works about his neck were chain'd.
But to the point; while hovering o'er the brink
Of Skiddaw" (where as usual it still rain'd),
I saw a taper, far below me, wink,
And stooping, caught this fellow at a libel—
No less on history than the Holy Bible.

LXXXVII.

"The former is the devil's scripture, and
The latter yours, good Michael: so the affair
Belongs to all of us, you understand.
I snatch'd him up just as you see him there,
And brought him off for sentence out of hand:
I've scarcely been ten minutes in the air—
At least a quarter it can hardly be:
I dare say that his wife is still at tea."

LXXXVIII.

Here Satan said, "I know this man of old,
And have expected him for some time here;
A sillier fellow you will scarce behold,
Or more conceited in his petty sphere:
But surely it was not worth while to fold
Such trash below your wing, Asmodeus dear:
We had the poor wretch safe (without being bored
With carriage) coming of his own accord.

LXXXIX.

"But since he's here, let's see what he has done."
"Done!" cried Asmodeus, "he anticipates
The very business you are now upon.
And scribbles as if head clerk to the Fates.
Who knows to what his ribaldry may run,
When such an ass as this, like Balaam's, prates?"
"Let's hear," quoth Michael; "what he has to say;
You know we're bound to that in every way."

XC.

Now the bard, glad to get an audience, which
By no means often was his case below,
Began to cough, and hawk, and hem, and pitch
His voice into that awful note of woe
To all unhappy hearers within reach
Of poets when the tide of rhyme's in flow,
But stuck fast with his first hexameter,
Not one of all whose gouty feet would stir.

XCI.

But ere the spavin'd dactyls could be spurrd
Into recitative, in great dismay,
Both cherubim and seraphim were heard
To murmur loudly through their long array:
And Michael rose ere he could get a word
Of all his founder'd verses under way,
And cried, "For God's sake, stop, my friend! 't were best—
Non Di, non homines—you know the rest."

XCII.

A general bustle spread throughout the throng,
Which seem'd to hold all verse in detestation;
The angels had of course enough of song
When upon service; and the generation

Of ghosts had heard too much in life, not long
Before, to profit by a new occasion:
The monarch, mute till then, exclaim'd, "What what!?"

Py; come again? No more—no more of that!"

XCIII.

The tumult grew; an universal cough
Convulsed the skies, as during a debate,
When Castlereagh has been up long enough
(Before he was first minister of state,
I mean—the claves hear now); some cried "Off, off!"
As at a farce; till, grown quite desperate,
The bard Saint Peter pray'd to interpose
(Himself an author) only for his prose.

XCIV.

The varlet was not an ill-favour'd knave;
A good deal like a vulture in the face,
With a hook nose and a hawk's eye, which gave
A smart and sharper-looking sort of grace
To his whole aspect, which, though rather grave,
Was by no means so ugly as his case;
But that, indeed, was hopeless as can be,
Quite a poetic felony "de se."

XCV.

Then Michael blew his trump, and still'd the noise
With one still greater, as is yet the mode
On earth besides; except some grumbling voice,
Which now and then will make a slight innuendo
Upon decorous silence, few will twice
Lift up their lungs when fairly overcrow'd;
And now the bard could plead his own bad cause.
With all the attitudes of self-applause.

XCVI.

He said—(I only give the heads)—he said,
He meant no harm in scribbling; 't was his way
Upon all topics; 't was, besides, his bread.
Of which he butter'd both sides; 't would delay
Too long the assembly (he was pleas'd to dread),
And take up rather more time than a day,
To name his works—he would but cite a few—
"Wat Tyler"—"Rhymes on Blenheim"—"Waterloo."

XCVII.

He had written praises of a regicide;
He had written praises of all kings whatever;
He had written for republics far and wide,
And then against them bitterer than ever;
For Pantisocracy he once had cried
Aloud, a scheme less moral than 't was clever;
Then grew a hearty anti-jacobin—
Had turn'd his coat—and would have turn'd his skia.

XCVIII.

He had sung against all battles, and again
In their high praise and glory; he had call'd
Reviewing; "the ungentle craft," and then
Become as base a critic as e'er crawl'd—
Fed, paid, and pamper'd by the very men
By whom his muse and morals had been maul'd:
He had written much blank verse, and blank prose,
And more of both than anybody knows.

XCIX.

He had written Wealey's life:—here turning round
To Satan, "Sir, I'm ready to write yours,

* Mr. Southey's residence is on the shore of Derwentwater, near the mountain Skiddaw.

† The king's trick of repeating his words in this way was a fertile source of ridicule to Peter Pindar (Dr. Walcott).

‡ Henry James Fyfe, the predecessor of Mr. Southey in the post-laureateship, died in 1812. He was the author of many works, besides his official Odes, among others "Alfred," an epic poem—all of which have been long since defunct. Fyfe was a man of good family in Berkshire, sat some time in parliament, and was eminently respectable in every thing but his poetry.

§ See "Life of Henry Kirke White."

THE AGE OF BRONZE.

In two octavo volumes, nicely bound,
With notes and preface, all that most allures
The pious purchaser; and there 's no ground
For fear, for I can choose my own reviewers:
So let me have the proper documents,
That I may add you to my other saints."

C.

Satan bow'd, and was silent. "Well, if you,
With amiable modesty, decline
My offer, what says Michael? There are few Whose memoirs could be render'd more divine.
Mine is a pen of all work; not so new
As it was once, but I would make you shine
Like your own trumpet. By the way, my own
Has more of brass in it, and is as well blown.

CI.

"But talking about trumpets, here 's my Vision!
Now you shall judge, all people; yes, you shall Judge with my judgment, and by my decision
Be guided who shall enter heaven or fall.
I settle all these things by intuition,
Times present, past, to come, heaven, hell, and all,
Like King Alfonso. When I thus see double,
I save the Deity some wounds of trouble."

CII.

He ceased, and drew forth an MS.; and no
Persuasion on the part of devils, or saints,
Or angels, now could stop the torrent; so
He read the first three lines of the contents;
But at the fourth, the whole spiritual show
Had vanish'd, with variety of scents,
Ambrosial and sulphureous, as they sprang,
Like lightning, off from his "melodious twang."

CIII.

Those grand heroics acted as a spell:
The angels stopp'd their ears and piled their pinions;

The devils ran howling, deafen'd, down to hell;
The ghosts fled, gibbering, for their own dominions—

(For 't is not yet decided where they dwell,
And I leave every man to his opinions);
Michael took refuge in his trump—but, lo!
His teeth were set on edge, he could not blow!

CIV.

Saint Peter, who has hitherto been known
For an impetuous saint, upraised his keys,
And at the fifth line knock'd the poet down;
Who fell like Phaeton, but more at ease,
Into his lake, for there he did not drown;
A different web being by the Destinies
Woven for the Laureate's final wreath, whence'er
Reform shall happen either here or there.

CV.

He first sank to the bottom—like his works,
But soon rose to the surface—like himself;
For all corrupted things are buoy'd like corks,
By their own rottenness, light as an elf,
Or wisp that flits o'er a morass: he lurks,
It may be, still, like dull books on a shelf,
In his own den, to scrawl some "Life" or "Vision,"
As Welborn says—"the devil turn'd precisian."

CVI.

As for the rest, to come to the conclusion
Of this true dream, the telescope is gone
Which kept my optics free from all delusion,
And show'd me what I in my turn have shown;
All I saw further, in the last confusion,
Was, that King George slipp'd into heaven for
one;
And when the tumult dwindled to a calm,
I left him practicing the hundredth psalm.

THE AGE OF BRONZE;

OR,

Carmen Seculare et Innus Baud Mirabilis.*

"Imper Congressus Achillii."

I.

THE "good old times"—all times when old are good—
Are gone; the present might be if they would;
Great things have been, and are, and greater still Want little of mere mortals but their will:
A wider space, a greener field, is given
To those who play their "tricks before high heaven."
I know not if the angels weep, but men
Have wept enough—for what?—to weep again!

II.

All is exploded—be it good or bad.
Reader! remember when thou wert a lad,

Then Pitt was all; or, if not all, so much,
His very rival almost deem'd him such.
We, we have seen the intellectual race
Of giants stand, like Titans, face to face—
Athos and Ida, with a dashing sea
Of eloquence between, which flow'd all free,
As the deep billows of the Ægean roar
Betwixt the Hellenic and the Phrygian shore.
But where are they—the rivals! a few feet
Of sullen earth divide each winding sheet.
How peaceful and how powerful is the grave,
Which hushes all! a calm, unstormy wave,
Which oversweeps the world. The theme is old
Of "dust to dust;" but half its tale untold:

*This poem was written by Lord Byron at Genoa, in the early part of the year 1822; and published in London, by Mr. John Hunt. Its authenticity was much disputed at the time.

THE AGE OF BRONZE

Time tempers not its terrors—still the worm
Winds its cold folds, the tomb preserves its form,
Varied above, but still alike below:
The urn may shine, the ashes will not glow,
Though Cleopatra's mummy crows the sea,
O'er which from empire she lured Anthony;
Though Alexander's urn a show be grown
On shores he wept to conquer, though unknown—
How vain, how worse than vain, at length appear
The madman's wish, the Macedonian's tear!
He wept for worlds to conquer—half the earth
Knows not his name, or but his death, and birth,
And desolation; while his native Greece
Hath all of desolation, save its peace.
He "wept for worlds to conquer!" he who ne'er
Conceived the globe, he panted not to spare!
With even the busy Northern Isle unknown,
Which holds his urn, and never knew his throne.*

III.

But where is he, the modern, mightier far,
Who, born no king, made monarchs draw his ear;
The new Sesostris, whose unharnessed kings,
Freed from the bit, believe themselves with wings,
And spurn the dust o'er which they crawl'd of late,
Chain'd to the chariot of the chieftain's state?
Yes! where is he, the champion and the child
Of all that's great or little, wise or wild;
Whose game was empire, and whose stakes were thrones;
Whose table earth—whose dice were human bones?
Behold the grand result in yon lone Isle,
And, as thy nature urges, weep or smile.
Sigh to behold the eagle's lofty rage;
Reduced to nibble at his narrow cage;
Smile to survey the queller of the nations
Now daily squabbling o'er disputed rations;
Weep to perceive him mourning, as he dines,
O'er curtail'd dishes and o'er stinted wines;
O'er petty quarrels upon petty things.
Is this the king who scourged or feasted kings?
Behold the scales in which his fortune hangs,
A surgeon's† statement, and an earl's‡ harangue.
A bust delay'd,¶ a book refused, can shake
The sleep of him who kept the world awake.
Is this indeed the tamer of the great,
Now slave of all could tease or irritate—
The paltry gawler and the prying spy,
The staring stranger with his note-book nigh?††
Plunged in a dungeon, he had still been great;
How low, how little was this middle state,
Between a prison and a palace, where
How few could feel for what he had to bear!
Vain his complaint,—my lord presents his bill,
His food and wine were doled out duly still;
Vain was his sickness, never was a clime
So free from homicide to doubt 's a crime;
And the stiff surgeon, who maintain'd his cause,
Hath lost his place, and gain'd the world's applause.
But smile—though all the pangs of brain and heart
Disdain, defy, the tardy aid of art;
Though, save the few fond friends and imaged face
Of that fair boy his sire shall ne'er embrace,
None stand by his low bed—though even the mind
Be wavering, which long awed and awee mankind;

Smile—for the fetter'd eagle breeds its own
And higher worlds than this are his sphere.

IV.

How, if that soaring spirit still retain
A conscious twilight of his blazing reign,
How must he smile, on looking down, to see
The little that he was and sought to be!
What though his name a wider empire covers,
Than his ambition, though with scores a bed of
Though first in glory, deepest in revenge,
He tasted empire's blessings and its curse;
Though kings, rejoicing in their late escape
From chains, would gladly be their tyrant's slave,
How must he smile, and turn to yon lone grave,
The proudest sea-mark that o'ertops the wave!
What though his gaudier, dautous to the last,
Scarce deem'd this coffin's lead could keep him
fast,

Refusing one poor line along the lid,
To date the birth and death of all it hid;
That name shall hallow the ignoble shore,
A tell-tale to all save him who bore;
The feels that sweep before the eastern blast
Shall hear their sea-boys hail it from the east;
When Victory's Gallic column shall but rise,
Like Pompey's pillar, in a desert's skies,
The rocky isle that holds or held his dust,
Shall crown the Atlantic like the hero's bust,
And mighty nature o'er his obsequies
Do more than niggard envy still denies.
But what are these to him? Can glory's heat
Touch the freed spirit or the fetter'd dust?
Small care hath he of what his tomb contains,
Nought if he sleeps—not more if he awakes
Alike the better-seeing shade will smile
On the rude cavern of the rocky isle,
As if his ashes found their latest home
In Rome's Pantheon or Gaul's marble dome.
He wants not this; but France shall feel the weight
Of this last consolation, though no saint's
Her honor, fame, and faith demand his bones,
To rear above a pyramid of thrones;
Or carried onward in the battle's van,
To form, like Guesclin's‡‡ dust, her talisman.
But be it as it is—the time may come
His name shall beat the alarm, like Ziska's drum.‡‡

V.

Oh, heaven! of which he was in power a feature;
Oh, earth! of which he was a noble creature;
Thou Isle! to be remember'd long and well,
That saw't the unfedged eaglet ship his shell!
Ye Alps, which view'd him in his dawning flight
Hover the victor of a hundred fights!
Thou Rome, who saw't thy Caesar's deeds outshine!
Alas! why pass'd he too the Rubicon—
The Rubicon of man's awaken'd rights,
To herd with vulgar kings and parasites?
Egypt! from whose all dateless tombs arose
Forgotten Pharaohs from their long repose,
And shook within their pyramids to see
A new Cambyzes thundering in their ear;
While the dark shades of forty ages stood
Like startled giants by Nile's famous flood;‡‡

* A sarcophagus, of breccia, supposed to have contained the dust of Alexander, which came into the possession of the English army, in consequence of the capitulation of Alexandria, in February, 1802, was presented by George III. to the British Museum.

† Sesostris is said, by Diodorus, to have had his chariot drawn by eight vanquished sovereigns.

‡ Saint Helena.

¶ Mr. Barry O'Meara.

‡ Earl Bathurst.

¶ The bust of Napoleon's son.

‡ Sir Hudson Lowe.

‡‡ Captain Basil Hall's interesting account of his interview with the ex-emperor occurs in his "Voyage to Loo-choo."

‡‡ Buonaparte died the 6th of May, 1802.

‡‡ Guesclin, constable of France, died in the midst of his triumphs, before Châteaufort de Bandon, in 1356. The English garrison, which had conditioned to surrender at a certain time, marched out the day after his death; and the commander respectfully laid the keys of the fortress on the bier, so that it might appear to have surrendered to his hands.

‡ John Ziska, a distinguished leader of the Hussites. It is recorded of him, that, in dying, he ordered his arms to be made the covering of a drum. The Bohemians held this story in superstitious veneration.

‡‡ At the battle of the pyramids, in July, 1798, Buonaparte

THE AGE OF BRONZE.

From the pyramid's tall pinnacle
Beheld the desert peopled, as from hell,
With clashing hosts, who strew'd the barren sand
To remanure the uncultivated land!
Gaius! which, a moment mindless of the Cid,
Beheld his banner flouting thy Madrid!
Austria! which saw thy twice-taken capital
Twice spared to be the traitress of his fall!
O'er race of Frederic!—Frederic but in name
And falsehood—heirs to all except his fame:
Who, crush'd at Jena, crouch'd at Berlin, fell
First, and but rose to follow! Ye who dwell
Where Kosciusko dwelt, remembering yet
The unpaid amount of Catherine's bloody debt!
Poland! o'er which the avenging angel pass'd,
But left thee as he found thee, still a waste,
Forgetting all thy still-enduring claim,
Thy lotted people and extinguish'd name,
Thy sigh for freedom, thy long-flowing tear,
That sound that crashes in the tyrant's ear—
Kosciusko! On—on—on—the thirst of war
Japs for the gore of serfs and of their czar.
The half-barbaric Moscow's minarets
Gleam in the sun, but 'tis a sun that sets!
Moscow! thou limit of his long career,
For which rude Charles had wept his frozen tear
To see in vain—he saw thee—how? with spire
And palace fuel to one common fire.
To this the soldier lent his kindling match,
To this the peasant gave his cottage thatch,
To this the merchant flung his boarded store,
The prince his hall—and Moscow was no more!
Sublimest of volcanses! Etna's fame
Fades before thine, and quenchless Hecla's fame;
Vesuvius shows his blaze, an usual sight
For gaping tourists, from his hackney'd height:
Thou stand'st alone unrival'd, till the fire
To come, in which all empires shall expire!

Thou other element! as strong and stern,
To teach a lesson conquerors will not learn!—
Whose icy wing flapp'd o'er the faltering foe,
Till fell a hero with each flake of snow:
How did thy numbing beak and silent fang
Pierce, till hosts perish'd with a single pang!
In vain shall Seine look up along his banks
For the gay thousands of his dashing ranks!
In vain shall France recall beneath her vines
Her youth—her blood flows faster than her wines;
Or stagnant in their human ice remains
In frozen mummies on the Polar plains.
In vain will Italy's broad sun awaken
Her offspring chill'd; its beams are now forsaken.
Of all the trophies gather'd from the war,
What shall return?—the conqueror's broken car!
The conqueror's yet unbroken heart! Again
The horn of Roland sounds, and not in vain.
Lützen, where fell the Swede of victory,
Beholds him conquer, but, alas! not die:
Dresden surveys three despots fly once more
Before their sovereign,—sovereign as before;
But there exhausted Fortune quits the field,
And Leipzig's treason bids the unvanquish'd yield;
The Saxon jackal leaves the lion's side
To turn the bear's, and wolf's, and fox's guide;
And backward to the den of his despair
The forest monarch shrinks, but finds no lair!

said—"Soldiers! from the summit of yonder pyramids forty ages behold you."

* Gustavus Adolphus fell at the great battle of Lützen, in November, 1632.

† The tale of Miba.

‡ The well-known motto on a French medal of Benjamin Franklin was—

"Eripuit onus fulmen, accepitrumque tyrannus."

§ "To be the first man (not the Dictator), not the Sylla, but

Oh, ye! and each, and all! Oh, France! who found
Thy long fair fields, plough'd up as hostile ground,
Disputed foot by foot, till treason, still
His only victor, from Montmartre's hill
Look'd down o'er trampled Paris! and thou Isle,
Which seest Etruria from thy ramparts smile,
Thou momentary shelter of his pride,
Till wood'd by danger, his yet weeping bride!
Oh, France! retaken by a single march,
Whose path was through one long triumphal arch!
Oh, bloody and most bootless Waterloo!
Which proves how fools may have their fortune too,
Won half by blunder, half by treachery:
Oh, dull Saint Helen! with thy gloom nigh—
Hear! hear Prometheus from his rock appeal
To earth, air, ocean, all that felt or feel
His power and glory, all who yet shall hear
A name eternal as the rolling year:
He teaches them the lesson taught so long,
So oft, so vainly—learn to do no wrong!
A single step into the right had made
This man the Washington of worlds betray'd:
A single step into the wrong has given
His name a doubt to all the winds of heaven;
The reed of Fortune, and of thrones the rod,
Of Fame the Moloch or the demigod;
His country's Caesar, Europe's Hannibal,
Without their decent dignity of fall.
Yet Vanity herself had better taught
A surer path even to the fame he sought,
By pointing out on history's fruitless page
Ten thousand conquerors for a single sage.
While Franklin's quiet memory climbs to heaven,
Calming the lightning which he thence hath riven,
Or drawing from the no less kindled earth
Freedom and peace to that which boasts his birth; †
While Washington's a watchword, such as ne'er
Shall sink while there's an echo left to air; ‡
While even the Spaniard's thirst of gold and war
Forgets Pizarro to shout Bolivar! ||
Alas! why must the same Atlantic wave
Which wafted freedom gird a tyrant's grave—
The king of kings, and yet of slaves the slave,
Who bursts the chains of millions to renew
The very fetters which his arm broke through,
And crush'd the rights of Europe and his own,
To fit between a dungeon and a throne?

VI.

But 'twill not be—the spark's awaken'd—lo!
The swarthy Spaniard feels his former glow;
The same high spirit which beat back the Moor
Through eight long ages of alternate gloom
Revives—and where? in that avenging clime
Where Spain was once synonymous with crime,
Where Cortes' and Pizarro's banner flew,
The infant world redeems her name of "New."
'T is the old aspiration breathed afresh,
To kindle souls within degraded flesh,
Such as repulsed the Persian from the shore
Where Greece was—No! she still is Greece no more.
One common cause makes myriads of one breast,
Slaves of the east, or helots of the west;
On Andes' and on Athos' peaks unfur'd,
The self-same standard streams o'er either world:
The Athenian wears again Harmodius' sword; ¶
The Chili chief abjures his foreign lord;

the Washington, or Aristides, the leader in talent and truth, is to be next to the Divinity."—Byron Diary.

† Simon Bolivar, the liberator of Colombia and Peru, died at San Pedro, December, 1830, of an illness brought on by excessive fatigue and exertion.

‡ The famous hymn, ascribed to Callistratus:—

"Cover'd with myrtle-wreaths, I'll wear my sword

Like brave Harmodius, and his patriot friend

Aristogiton, who the laws restored,
The tyrant slew, and bade oppression end," etc., etc.

THE AGE OF BRONZE.

The Spartan knows himself once more a Greek,
Young Freedom plumes the crest of each cacique;
Debating despots, hemm'd on either shore,
Shrink vainly from the roused Atlantic's roar;
Through Calpe's strait the rolling tides advance,
Sweep slightly by the half-tamed land of France,
Dash o'er the old Spaniard's cradle, and would fain
Unite Asonia to the mighty main:
But driven from thence awhile, yet not for aye,
Break o'er th' Ægean, mindful of the day
Of Salamis!—there, there the waves arise,
Not to be lull'd by tyrant victories.
Lone, lost, abandon'd in their utmost need
By Christians, unto whom they gave their creed,
The desolated lands, the ravaged isle,
The foster'd feud encouraged to beguile,
The aid evaded, and the cold delay,
Prolong'd but in the hope to make a prey:—
These, these shall tell the tale, and Greece can show

The false friend worse than the infuriate foe.
But this is well: Greeks only should free Greece,
Not the barbarian, with his mask of peace.
How should the autocrat of bondage be
The king of serfs, and set the nations free?
Better still serve the haughty Musulman,
Than swell the Cossack's prowling caravan;
Better still toil for masters, than await
The slave of slaves, before a Russian gate,—
Number'd by hordes, a human capital,
A live estate, existing but for thrall,
Lotted by thousands, as a meet reward
For the first courtier in the Czar's regard;
While their immediate owner never tastes
His sleep, saw dreaming of Siberia's wastes:
Better succumb even to their own despair,
And drive the camel than purvey the bear.

VII.

But not alone within the hoariest clime
Where Freedom dates her birth with that of Time,
And not alone where, plunged in night, a crowd
Of Incas darken to a dubious cloud,
The dawn revives, unknown, romantic Spain
Holds back the invader from her soil again.
Not now the Roman tribe nor Punic horde
Demand her fields as lists to prove the sword;
Not now the Vandal or the Visigoth
Pollute the plains, alike abhorring both;
Nor old Pelayo on his mountain rears
The warlike fathers of a thousand years.
That seed is sown and reap'd, as oft the Moor
Sighs to remember on his dusky shore.
Long in the peasant's song or poet's page
Has dwelt the memory of Abencerrage;
The Zegri, and the captive victors, flung Back to the barbarous realm from whence they sprang.

But these are gone—their faith, their swords, their sway,
Yet left more anti-Christian foes than they;
The bigot monarch and the butcher priest,
The Inquisition, with her burning feast,
The faith's red "auto," fed with human fuel,
While sate the catholic Moloch, calmly cruel,
Enjoying, with inexorable eye,
That fiery festival of agony!
The stern or feeble sovereign, one or both
By turns; the haughtiness whose pride was sloth;

The long degenerate noble; the debased
Hidalgo, and the peasant less disgraced,
But more degraded; the unpeopled realm;
The once proud navy which forgot the helm;
The once impervious phalanx disarray'd;
The idle forge that form'd Toledo's blade;
The foreign wealth that flow'd on every shore,
Save hers who earn'd it with the natives' gore;
The very language which might vie with Rome's,
And once was known to nations like their homes,
Neglected or forgotten—such was Spain;
But such she is not, nor shall be again.
These worst, these home invaders, felt and feel
The new Numantine soul of old Castile.
Up! up again! undaunted Tauridor!
The bull of Phalaris renews his roar;
Mount, chivalrous Hidalgo! not in vain
Revive the cry—"Iago! and close Spain!"
Yes, close her with your armed bosoms round,
And form the barrier which Napoleon found,—
The exterminating war, the desert plain,
The streets without a tenant, save the alain;
The wild sierra, with its wilder troop
Of vulture-plumed guerrillas, on the stoop
For their incessant prey; the desperate wall
Of Saragossa, mightiest in her fall;
The man nerved to a spirit, and the maid
Waving her more than Amazonian blade;
The knife of Arragon, Toledo's steel;
The famous lance of chivalrous Castile;
The unerring rifle of the Catalan;
The Andalusian courser in the van;
The torch to make a Moscow of Madrid;
And in each heart the spirit of the Cid:—
Such have been, such shall be, such are. Advance,
And win—not Spain, but thine own freedom,
France!

VIII.

But lo! a Congress!‡ What! that hallow'd name
Which freed the Atlantic? May we hope the same
For our own Europe? With the sound arise,
Like Samuel's shade to Saul's monarchic eyes,
The prophets of young Freedom, summon'd far
From climes of Washington and Bolivar;
Henry, the forest-born Demosthenes,
Whose thunder shook the Philip of the seas; §
And stoic Franklin's energetic shade,
Robed in the lightnings which his hand allay'd;
And Washington, the tyrant-tamer, wake,
To bid us blush for these old chains, or break.
But who compose this senate of the few
That should redeem the many? Who renew
This consecrated name, till now assign'd
To councils held to benefit mankind?
Who now assemble at the holy call?
The blest Alliance, which says three are all!
An earthly trinity! which wears the shape
Of heaven's, as man is mimic'd by the ape.
A pious unity! in purpose one—
To melt three fools to a Napoleon.
Why, Egypt's gods were rational to these;
Their dogs and oxen knew their own degrees,
And, quiet in their kennel or their shed,
Cared little, so that they were duly fed;
But these, more hungry, must have something
more,
The power to bark and bite, to toss and gore.
Ah! how much happier were good Asop's frogs
Than he! for ours are animated logs,

* "Santiago yerra España!" the old Spanish war-cry.

† The Arragonians are peculiarly dexterous in the use of this weapon, and displayed it particularly in former French wars.

‡ The Congress of the sovereigns of Russia, Austria, Prussia, etc., etc., which assembled at Verona, in the autumn of 1859.

§ Patrick Henry, of Virginia, a leading member of the American Congress, died in June, 1797. Lord Byron alludes to his famous speech in 1765, in which, on saying, "Cæsar had his Brutus—Charles the First his Cromwell—and George the Third—" Henry was interrupted with shouts of "Treason! treason!!"—but coolly finished the sentence with—"George the Third may profit by their example; if this be treason, make the most of it."

THE AGE OF BRONZE.

With ponderous malice awaying to and fro,
And crushing nations with a stupid blow;
All duly anxious to leave little work
Into the revolutionary stork.

III.

Thrice blest Verona! since the holy three
With their imperial presence shine on thee;
Honour'd by them, thy treacherous site forgets
The vaulted tomb of "all the Capulets."¹
Thy Scaligers—for what was "Dog the Great,"
Can Grande"² (which I venture to translate),
To these sublimer pugs? Thy poet too,
Statius, whose old laurels yield to new;
Thine amphitheatre, where Romans sat;
And Dante's exile shelter'd by thy gate;
Thy good old man, whose world was all within Thy wall, nor knew the country held him in:
Would that the royal guests it girds about
Were so far like, as never to get out!
Ay, about! inscribe! rear monuments of shame,
To tell Oppression that the world is tame!
Trow to the theatre with loyal rage,
The comedy is not upon the stage;
The show is rich in ribbonry and stars,
Then gaze upon it through thy dungeon bars;
Nap thy permitted palms, kind Italy,
For thus much still thy fetter'd hands are free!

X.

Resplendent sight! Behold the cockcomb Czar,³
The autocrat of waiters and of war!
Is eager for a plaudit as a realm,
And just as fit for flirting as the helm;
A Calmuck beauty with a Cossack wit,
And generous spirit, when 't is not frost-bit;
Now half dissolving to a liberal thaw,
But harden'd back whene'er the morning 's raw;
With no objection to true liberty,
Except that it would make the nations free.
Now well the imperial dandy prates of peace!
Now fain, if Greeks would be his slaves, free Greece!
Now nobly gave he back the Poles their Diet,
Then told pugnacious Poland to be quiet!
Now kindly would he send the mild Ukraine,
With all her pleasant pulks, to lecture Spain!
Now royally show off in proud Madrid
His goodly person, from the South long hid!
A blessing cheaply purchased, the world knows,
By having Muscovites for friends or foes.
Proceed, thou namesake of great Philip's son!
A Harpe, thine Aristotle, beckons on;
And that which Scythia was to him of yore
And with thy Scythians on Iberia's shore,
Let think upon, thou somewhat aged youth,
Thy predecessor on the banks of Fruth;
Thou hast to aid thee, should his lot be thine,
Many an old woman, but no Catherine.⁴
Spain, too, hath rocks, and rivers, and defiles—
The bear may rush into the lion's toils.
Fatal to Goths are Xeres' sunny fields;
Think'st thou to thee Napoleon's victor yields?
Better reclaim thy deserts, turn thy swarms
To ploughshares, shave and wash thy Bashkir hordes,

Redeem thy realms from slavery and the knout,
Than follow headlong in the fatal rout,
To infest the clime whose skies and laws are pure
With thy foul legions. Spain wants no manure:
Her soil is fertile, but she feeds no foe;
Her vultures, too, were gorged not long ago;
And wouldst thou furnish them with fresher prey?
Alas! thou wilt not conquer, but purvey.
I am Diogenes, though Russ and Hun
Stand between mine and many a myriad's sun;
But were I not Diogenes, I'd wander
Rather a worm than such an Alexander!
Be slaves who will, the cynic shall be free;
His tub hath tougher walls than Sinopé;
Still will he hold his lantern up to scan
The face of monarchs for an "honest man."

XI.

And what doth Gaul, the all-prolific land
Of us plus ultra and their band
Of mercenaries? and her noisy chambers
And tribune, which each orator first clammers
Before he finds a voice, and when 't is found,
Hears "the lie" echo for his answer round?
Our British Commons sometimes deign to "hear!"
A Gallic senate hath more tongue than ear;
Even Constant, their sole master of debate,
Must fight next day his speech to vindicate.
But this costs little to true Franks, who'd rather Combat than listen, were it to their father.
What is the simple standing of a shot,
To listening long, and interrupting not?
Though this was not the method of old Rome,
When Tully fulmin'd o'er each vocal dome,
Demosthenes has sanction'd the transaction,
In saying eloquence meant "Action, action!"

XII.

But where 's the monarch? hath he dined? or yet
Groans beneath indigestion's heavy debt?
Have revolutionary patés risen,
And turn'd the royal entrails to a prison?
Have discontented movements stirr'd the troops?
Or have no movements follow'd traitorous soups?
Have Carbonaro cooks not carbonadoed
Each course enough? or doctors dire dissuaded
Repletion? Ah! in thy dejected looks
I read all France's treason in her cooks!
Good classic Louis! is it, canst thou say,
Desirable to be the "Desiré"?
Why wouldst thou leave calm Hartwell's green abode,⁵
Apician table, and Horatian ode,
To rule a people who will not be ruled,
And love much rather to be scourged than school'd?
Ah! thine was not the temper or the taste
For thrones; the table sees thee better placed;
A mild Epicurean, form'd, at best,
To be a kind host and as good a guest,
To talk of letters, and to know by heart
One-half the poet's, all the gourmand's art:
A scholar always, now and then a wit,
And gentle when digestion may permit;—
But not to govern lands enslav'd or free;
The gout was martyrdom enough for thee.

* "I have been over Verona. The amphitheatre is wonderful—beats even Greece. Of the truth of Juliet's story, they are tenacious to a degree, insisting on the fact—giving a late (1830), and showing a tomb. It is a plain, open, and partly decayed sarcophagus, with withered leaves in it, in a wild and desolate conventual garden, once a cemetery, now united to the very graves. The situation struck me as very appropriate to the legend, being blighted as their love."—From Letters, November, 1816.

¹ Canse I. Della Scala, surnamed the Great, died in 1329: he was the protector of Dante, who celebrated him as "il Gran Marchese."

² The emperor Alexander; who died in 1825.

³ The dexterity of Catherine articulated Peter (called the Great by courtesy), when surrounded by the Mussulmans on the banks of the river Fruth.

⁴ According to Botta, the Neapolitan republicans who, during the reign of King Joachim, fled to the recesses of the Abruzzi, and there formed a secret confederacy, were the first that assumed the designation, since familiar all over Italy, of "Carbonari" (coaliers).

⁵ Hartwell, in Buckinghamshire—the residence of Louis XVIII. during the latter years of the Emigration.

THE AGE OF BRONZE

XIII.

Shall noble Albion pass without a phrase
From a bold Briton in her wonted praise?
"Arms—arms—arms—George—and glory—and the sales—
And happy Britain—wealth—and Freedom's
 smile—
White cliffs, that held invasion far aloof—
Contented subjects, all alike tax-proof—
Froud Wellington, with eagle beak so cur'd,
That nose, the hook where he suspends the world!
And Waterloo—and trade—and—(hush! not yet
A syllable of imports or of debt)—
And ne'er (enough) lamented Castlereagh,
Whose penknife slit a goose-quill t'other day—
And 'pilots who have weather'd every storm'—
(But, no, not even for rhyme's sake, name Reform)."

These are the themes thus sung so oft before,
Methinks we need not sing them any more;
Found in so many volumes far and near,
There's no occasion you should find them here.
Yet something may remain perchance to chime
With reason, and, what's stranger still, with rhyme.
Even this thy genius, Canning! may permit.
Who, bred a statesman, still wast born a wit,
And never, even in that dull House, couldst tame
To unlearn'd prose thine own poetic flame:
Our last, our best, our only orator,
Even I can praise thee—Tories do no more:
Nay, not so much;—they hate thee, man, because
Thy spirit less upholds them than it awes.
The hounds will gather to their huntman's hollo,
And where he leads the duteous pack will follow;
But not for love mistake their yelling cry;
Their yelp for game is not an eulogy;
Less faithful far than the four-footed pack,
A dubious scent would lure the bipeds back.
Thy saddle-girths are not yet quite secure,
Nor royal stallions' feet extremely sure;
The unwieldy old white horse is apt at last
To stumble, kick, and now and then stick fast
With his great self and rider in the mud;
But what of that? the animal shows blood.

XIV.

Ails, the country! how shall tongue or pen
Bewail her now uncountry gentlemen?
The last to bid the cry of warfare cease,
The first to make a melody of peace.
For what were all these country patriots born?
To hunt, and vote, and raise the price of corn?
But corn, like every mortal thing, must fall,
Kings, conquerors, and markets most of all,
And must ye fall with every ear of grain?
Why would you trouble Buonaparte's reign?
He was your great Triptolemus; his vices Destroy'd but realms, and still maintain'd your prices;
He amplified to every lord's content
The grand agrarian alchemy, high rent.
Why did the tyrant stumble on the Tartars,
And lower wheat to such desponding quarters?
Why did you chain him on yon isle so lone?
The man was worth much more upon his throne.
True, blood and treasure boundlessly were spilt,
But what of that? the Gaul may bear the guilt;
But bread was high, the farmer paid his way,
And acres told upon the appointed day.

* "The Pilot that weather'd the storm" is the burden of a song, in honor of Pitt, by Mr. Canning.
† On the suicide of Lord Londonderry, in August, 1803, Mr. Canning, who had prepared to sail for India as governor-general, was made Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;—not much, it was alleged, to the personal satisfaction of

But where is now the goodly and the old?
The purse-proud tenant, never known to hold
The farm which never yet was left on hand?
The marsh reclaim'd to most improving land?
The impatient hope of the expiring lease?
The doubting rental? What an evil's peace!
In vain the prize excites the ploughman's zeal,
In vain the Commons pass their patriot bill;
The landed interest—(you may understand)
The phrase much better leaving out the land!
The land self-interest groans from shore to shore
For fear that plenty should attain the poor.
Up, up again, ye rents! exalt your notes,
Or else the ministry will lose their votes,
And patriotism, so delicately nice,
Her leaves will lower to the market price;
For ah! "the leaves and fishes," once so high,
Are gone—their oven closed, their ovens dry,
And nought remains of all the millstone sweat,
Excepting to grow moderate and content.
They who are not so, and their turn—and then
About still flows from Fortune's equal pen;
Now let their virtue be its own reward,
And share the blessings which themselves have pared.

See these inglorious Cincinnati swarms,
Farmers of war, dictators of the farms;
Their ploughshare was the sword in blinding times,
Their fields manured by gore of other lands;
Safe in their barns, these Sabine tillers sent
Their brethren out to battle—why? for rent!
Year after year they voted cent. per cent.,
Blood, sweat, and tear-wrung millions—why? for rent!
They roar'd, they dined, they drank, they meant they meant
To die for England—why then live?—die stand!
The peace has made one general malcontent
Of these high-market patriots; war was rent!
Their love of country, millions all mispent,
How reconcile? by reconciling rent!
And will they not repay the treasure lent?
No: down with everything, and up with rent!
Their good, ill, health, wealth, joy, or discontent,
Being, end, aim, religion—rent, rent, rent!
Thou sold'st thy birthright, Sean! for a mess of pottage;
Now thou hast swill'd thy pottage, thy descendants
Are idle; Israel says the bargain stands.
Such, landlords! was your appetite for war,
And, gorged with blood, you grumble at a scar!
What! would they spread their earthquakes even o'er cash?

And when land crumbles, bid firm paper crash?
So rent may rise, bid bank and nation fall,
And found on "Change a Fading Hopewell?
Lo! Mother Church, while all religion withers,
Like Niobe, weeps o'er her offspring, Tithes;
The prelates go to—where the saints have gone,
And proud pluralities subside to one;
Church, state, and faction, wrastle in the dark,
Toss'd by the deluge in their common ark.
Shorn of bar bishops, banks, and dividends,
Another Babel scowls—but Britain scowls.
And why? to pamper the self-cooking wretch,
And prop the hill of these agrarian swells,
"Go to these ants, thou almsgiver, and be wise;
Admire their patience through each summer's
Till taught to feel the lesson of their pride,
The price of taxes and of homicide;

George the Fourth, or of the high Tories in that parliament lived to verify some of the predictions of the poets, and the foreign policy of his predecessor—of the Tory party by a coalition with the Whigs—was the way for Reform in Parliament.

THE AGE OF BRONZE.

admire their justice, which would fain deny
The debt of nations:—pray, who made it high?

XV.

It turn to sail between those shifting rocks,
The new Symplegades—the crushing Stocks,
There Midas might again his wish behold
A real paper or imagined gold.
That magic palace of Alcina shows
More wealth than Britain ever had to lose,
Were all her atoms of unheaven'd ore,
And all her pebbles from Pactolus' shore.
Here Fortune plays, while Rumor holds the stake,
And the world trembles to bid brokers break.
How rich is Britain! not indeed in mines,
For peace or plenty, corn or oil, or wines;
To land of Canaan, full of milk and honey,
For (save in paper shekels) ready money;
But let us not to own the truth refuse,
Was ever Christian land so rich in Jews?
Those parted with their teeth to good King John,
And now, ye kings! they kindly draw your own;
All states, all things, all sovereigns they control,
And wait a loan "from Indus to the pole."
The banker—broker—baron—brethren, speed
To aid these bankrupt tyrants in their need.
For these alone; Columbia feels no less
Fresh speculations follow each success;
And philanthropic Israel deigns to drain
Her mild percentage from exhausted Spain.
Not without Abraham's seed can Russia march;
It is gold, not steel, that rears the conqueror's arch.
Two Jews, a chosen people, can command
In every realm their scripture-promised land:—
Two Jews keep down the Romans, and uphold
The accursed Hun, more brutal than of old:
Two Jews—but not Samaritans—direct
The world, with all the spirit of their sect.
What is the happiness of earth to them?
A congress forms their "New Jerusalem,"
Where baronies and orders both invite—
Oh, holy Abraham! dost thou see the sight?
Thy followers mingling with these royal swine,
Who spit not "on their Jewish gaberdine,"
But honor them as portion of the show—
Where now, oh, Pope! is thy forsaken toe?
Could it not favor Judah with some kicks?
It has it ceased to "kick against the pricks"?
In Shylock's shore behold them stand afresh,
To cut from nations' hearts their "pound of flesh."

XVI.

Strange sight this congress! destined to unite
All that's incongruous, all that's opposite.
Speak not of the sovereigns—they're alike,
A common coin as ever mint could strike;
But those who sway the puppets, pull the strings,
Have more of motley than their heavy kings.
Laws, authors, generals, charlatans, combine,
While Europe wonders at the vast design:
There Metternich, power's foremost parasite,
Who lets the Wellington forget to fight;
There Chateaubriand forms new books of martyrs;
And subtle Greeks! intrigue for stupid Tartars;
There Montmorenci, the sworn foe to charters,
Turns a diplomatist of great élat,
To furnish articles for the "Débats;"

* The head of the illustrious house of Montmorenci has usually been designated "le premier baron Chrétien;" his ancestor having, it is supposed, been the first noble convert to Christianity in France. Lord Byron perhaps alludes to the well-known joke of Talleyrand, who, meeting the Duke of Montmorenci at the same party with M. Rothschild, soon after the latter had been ennobled by the emperor of Austria, said to him he hoped leave to present M. le premier baron 'till to M. le premier baron Chrétien.

† Monsieur Chateaubriand, who has not forgotten the au-

Of war so certain—yet not quite so sure
As his dismissal in the "Moniteur."
Alas! how could his cabinet thus err?
Can peace be worth an ultra-minister?
He falls indeed, perhaps to rise again,
"Almost as quickly as he conquer'd Spain."

XVII.

Enough of this—a sight more mournful woos
The averted eye of the reluctant muse.
The imperial daughter, the imperial bride,
The imperial victim—sacrifice to pride;
The mother of the hero's hope, the boy,
The young Asytanax of modern Troy;
The still pale shadow of the loftiest queen
That earth has yet to see, or e'er hath seen;
She flits amidst the phantoms of the hour,
The theme of pity, and the wreck of power.
Oh, cruel mockery! Could not Austria spare
A daughter? What did France's widow there?
Her sister place was by Saint Helen's wave,
Her only throne is in Napoleon's grave.
But, no—she still must hold a petty reign,
Flank'd by her formidable chamberlain;
The martial Argus, whose not hundred eyes
Must watch her through these paltry pageantries.
What though she share no more, and shared in vain,
A sway surpassing that of Charlemagne,
Which swept from Moscow to the southern seas!
Yet still she rules the pastoral realm of cheese,
Where Parma views the traveller resort,
To note the trappings of her mimic court.
But she appears! Verona sees her shorn
Of all her beams—while nations gaze and mourn—
Ere yet her husband's ashes have had time
To chill in their inhospitable clime;
(If e'er those awful ashes can grow cold:—
But no,—their embers soon will burst the mould;)
She comes!—the Andromache (but not Racine's, Nor Homer's.)—Lo! on Pyrrhus' arm she leans!
Yes! the right arm, yet red from Waterloo,
Which cut her lord's half-shatter'd sceptre through,
Is offer'd and accepted! Could a slave
Do more? or less?—and he in his new grave!
Her eye, her cheek, betray no inward strife,
And the empress grows as ez a wife!
So much for human ties in royal breasts!
Why spare men's feelings, when their own are jests?

XVIII.

But, tired of foreign follies, I turn home,
And sketch the group—the picture's yet to come.
My muse 'gan weep, but, ere a tear was split,
She caught Sir William Curtis in a kilt!
While throng'd the chiefs of every Highland clan
To hail their brother, Vich Ian Alderman!
Gulldhall grows Gael, and echoes with Erse roar,
While all the Common Council cry "Claymore!"
To see proud Albion's tartans as a bait
Gird the gross sirlon of a city Celt,
She burst into a laughter so extreme,
That I awoke—and lo! it was no dream!

Here, reader, will we pause:—if there's no harm in This first—you'll have, perhaps, a second "Car-

men."

thor in the minister, received a handsome compliment at Verona from a literary sovereign: "Ah! Monsieur C., are you related to that Chateaubriand who—who—who has written something?" (écrit quelque chose?) It is said that the author of Atala repented him for a moment of his legitimacy.

‡ Count Capo d'Istria, afterwards president of Greece.

The count was murdered in September, 1831, by the brothers and son of a Malino chief whom he had imprisoned.

§ The Duke de Montmorenci-Laval.

|| [From Pope's verses on Lord Peterborough.]

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

1807-1824.

THE ADIEU.

WRITTEN UNDER THE IMPRESSION THAT THE AUTHOR WOULD SOON DIE.

ADIEU, thou Hill!^{*} where early joy
Spread roses o'er my brow;
Where Science seeks each loitering boy
With knowledge to endow.
Adieu, my youthful friends or foes,
Partners of former bliss or woes;
No more through Ida's paths we stray;
Soon must I share the gloomy cell,
Whose ever-slumbering inmates dwell
Unconscious of the day.

Adieu, ye hoary Regal Fanes,
Ye spires of Granta's vale,
Where Learning robed in sable reigns,
And Melancholy pale.
Ye comrades of the jovial hour,
Ye tenants of the classic bower,
On Cama's verdant margin placed,
Adieu! while memory still is mine,
For, offerings on Oblivion's shrine,
These scenes must be effaced.

Adieu, ye mountains of the clime
Where grew my youthful years;
Where Loch na Garr in snows sublime
His giant summit rears.
Why did my childhood wander forth
From you, ye regions of the North,
With sons of pride to roam?
Why did I quit my Highland cave,
Marr's dusky heath, and Dee's clear wave,
To seek a Southern home?

Hall of my Sires! a long farewell—
Yet why to thee adieu?
Thy vaults will echo back my knell,
Thy towers my tomb will view:
The faltering tongue which sung thy fall,
And former glories of thy Hall,[†]
Forgets its wonted simple note—
But yet the Lyre retains the strings,
And sometimes, on Æolian wings,
In dying strains may float.

Fields, which surround yon rustic cot,
While yet I linger here,
Adieu! you are not now forgot,
To retrospection dear.
Streamlet! if along whose rippling surge
My youthful limbs were wont to urge

At noontide heat their piliat course;
Plunging with ardor from the shore,
Thy springs will lave these limbs no more,
Deprived of active force.

And shall I here forget the scene,
Still nearest to my breast?
Rocks rise and rivers roll between
The spot which passion blest;
Yet, Mary,[‡] all thy beauties seem
Fresh as in Love's bewitching dream,
To me in smiles display'd:
Till slow disease resigns his prey
To Death, the parent of decay,
Thine image cannot fade.

And thou, my Friend!! whose gentle love
Yet thrills my bosom's chords,
How much thy friendship was above
Description's power of words!
Still near my breast thy gift I wear
Which sparkled once with Feeling's tear,
Of Love the pure, the sacred gem;
Our souls were equal, and our lot
In that dear moment quite forgot;
Let Pride alone condemn!

All, all is dark and cheerless now!
No smile of Love's deceit
Can warm my veins with wonted glow,
Can bid Life's pulses beat:
Not e'en the hope of future fame
Can wake my faint, exhausted frame,
Or crown with fancied wreaths my head.
Mine is a short inglorious race,—
To humble in the dust my face,
And mingle with the dead.

Oh, Fame! thou goddess of my heart;
On him who gains thy praise,
Pointless must fall the Spectre's dart,
Consumed in Glory's blaze;
But me she beckons from the earth,
My name obscure, unmark'd my birth,
My life a short and vulgar dream:
Lost in the dull, ignoble crowd,
My hopes recline within a shroud,
My fate is Lethe's stream.

When I repose beneath the sod,
Unheeded in the clay,
Where once my playful footsteps trod.
Where now my head must lay,
The meed of Pity will be shed
In dew-drops o'er my narrow bed,

^{*} Harrow.

[†] The River Grete, at Southwell.

[‡] See ante, pp. 205, 222.

[§] Mary Duff. See ante, p. 237, note.

[¶] Eddlestone, the Cambridge chorister.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

By nightly skies, and storms alone;
No mortal eye will deign to steep
With tears the dark sepulchral deep
Which hides a name unknown.

Forget this world, my restless sprite,
Turn, turn thy thoughts to Heaven:
There must thou soon direct thy flight,
If errors are forgiven.
To bigots and to sects unknown,
Bow down beneath the Almighty's Throne;
To him address thy trembling prayer:
He, who is merciful and just,
Will not reject a child of dust,
Although his meanest care.

Father of Light! to thee I call;
My soul is dark within:
Thou, who canst mark the sparrow's fall,
Avert the death of sin.
Thou, who canst guide the wandering star,
Who calm'st the elemental war,
Whose mantle is yon boundless sky,
My thoughts, my words, my crimes forgive;
And, since I soon must cease to live,
Instruct me how to die.

[1807. First published, 1800.]

TO A VAIN LADY.

Ah, heedless girl! why thus disclose
What ne'er was meant for other ears?
Why thus destroy thine own repose,
And dig the source of future tears?

Oh, thou wilt weep, imprudent maid,
While lurking envious foes will smile,
For all the follies thou hast said
Of those who spoke but to beguile.

Vain girl! thy ling'ring woes are nigh,
If thou believ'st what striplings say:
Oh, from the deep temptation fly,
Nor fall the specious spoiler's prey.

Dost thou repeat, in childish boast,
The words man utters to deceive?
Thy peace, thy hope, thy all is lost,
If thou canst venture to believe.

While now amongst thy female peers
Thou tell'st again the soothing tale,
Canst thou not mark the rising sneers
Duplicitv in vain would veil?

These tales in secret silence hush,
Nor make thyself the public gaze:
What modest maid without a blush
Accounts a flattering coxcomb's praise?

Will not the laughing boy despise
Her who relates each fond conceit—
Who, thinking heaven is in her eyes,
Yet cannot see the slight deceit?

For she who takes a soft delight
These amorous nothings in revealing,
Must credit all we say or write,
While vanity prevents concealing.

Cease, if you prize your beauty's reign!
No jealousy bids me reprove:
One, who is thus from nature vain,
I pity, but I cannot love.

[January 16, 1807. First published, 1800.]

TO ANNE.

OH, Anne! your offences to me have been grievous:
I thought from my wrath no atonement could save you;
But woman is made to command and deceive us—
I look'd in your face, and I almost forgave you.

I vow'd I could ne'er for a moment respect you,
Yet thought that a day's separation was long:
When we met, I determin'd again to suspect you—
Your smile soon convinced me suspicion was wrong.

I swore, in a transport of young indignation,
With fervent contempt evermore to disdain you:
I saw you—my anger became admiration;
And now all my wish, all my hope, 's to regain
you.

With beauty like yours, oh, how vain the contention!
Thus lowly I sue for forgiveness before you;
At once to conclude such a fruitless dissension,
Be false, my sweet Anne, when I cease to adore
you!

[January 18, 1807. First published, 1800.]

TO THE SAME.

OH, say not, sweet Anne, that the Fates have decreed
The heart which adores you should wish to dis-sever;
Such Fates were to me most unkind ones indeed,—
To bear me from love and from beauty for ever.

Your frowns, lovely girl, are the Fates which alone
Could bid me from fond admiration refrain;
By these, every hope, every wish were o'erthrown,
Till smiles should restore me to rapture again.

As the ivy and oak, in the forest entwined,
The rage of the tempest united must weather;
My love and my life were by nature design'd
To flourish alike, or to perish together.

Then say not, sweet Anne, that the Fates have decreed
Your lover should bid you a lasting adieu;
Till Fate can ordain that his bosom shall bleed,
His soul, his existence, are centred in you.

[1807. First published, 1800.]

TO THE AUTHOR OF A SONNET BEGINNING,

"'SAD IS MY VERSE,' YOU SAY, 'AND YET NO TEAR.'"

THY verse is "sad" enough, no doubt:
A devilish deal more sad than witty!
Why we should weep I can't find out,
Unless for these we weep in pity.

Yet there is one I pity more;
And much, alas! I think he needs it;
For he, I'm sure, will suffer sore,
Who, to his own misfortune, reads it.

Thy rhymes, without the aid of magic,
May once be read—but never after:
Yet their effect 's by no means tragic,
Although by far too dull for laughter.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

But would you make our bosoms bleed,
And of no common pang complain—
If you would make us weep indeed,
Tell us, you'll read them o'er again.

[March 6, 1837. First published, 1838.]

ON FINDING A FAN.

In one who felt as once he felt,
This might, perhaps, have fann'd the flame;
But now his heart no more will melt,
Because that heart is not the same.

As when the ebbing flames are low,
The aid which once improved their light,
And bade them burn with fiercer glow,
Now quenches all their blaze in night.

Thus has it been with passion's fires—
As many a boy and girl remembers—
While every hope of love expires,
Extinguish'd with the dying embers.

The first, though not a spark survive,
Some careful hand may teach to burn;
The last, alas! can ne'er survive;
No touch can bid its warmth return.

Or, if it chance to wake again,
Not always doom'd its heat to smother,
It sheds (so wayward Fates ordain)
Its former warmth around another.

[1837. First published, 1838.]

FAREWELL TO THE MUSE.

THOU Power! who hast ruled me through Infancy's
days,
Young offspring of Fancy, 'tis time we should part;

Then rise on the gale this the last of my lays,
The coldest effusion which springs from my heart.

This bosom, responsive to rapture no more,
Shall hush thy wild notes, nor implore thee to sing;

The feelings of childhood, which taught thee to sorrow,
Are wafted far distant on Apathy's wing.

Though simple the themes of my rude-flowing Lyre,
Yet even these themes are departed for ever;
No more beam the eyes which my dream could inspire,

My visions are flown, to return,—alas! never.

When drain'd is the nectar which gladdens the bowl,
How vain is the effort delight to prolong!

When cold is the beauty which dwelt in my soul,
What magic of Fancy can lengthen my song?

Can the lips sing of Love in the desert alone,
Of kisses and smiles which they now must resign?
Or dwell with delight on the hours that are flown?
Ah, no! for those hours can no longer be mine.

* Lord Byron, on his first arrival at Newstead, in 1796, planted an oak in the garden, and nourished the fancy, that as the tree flourished so should he. On revisiting the abbey, during Lord Grey de Rutland's residence there, he found the oak choked up by weeds, and almost destroyed—hence these lines. Shortly after Colonel Widman (the proprietor) took possession, he one day noticed it, and said to the servant who was with him, "Here is a fine young oak; but it must be cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

Can they speak of the friends that I loved
love?
Ah, surely affection canobol the flames
But how can my numbers in sympathy
When I scarcely can hope to behold them again

Can I sing of the dead which my numbers
done,
And raise my loud harp to the fane of my
For glories like theirs, oh, how faint is my
For Heroes' exploits how unequal my story!

Untouch'd, then, my Lyre shall reply to the Muse
'T is hush'd; and my feeble notes
And those who have heard it will pardon the
When they know that its murmurs shall
no more.

And soon shall its wild erring notes be forgot,
Since early affection and love are o'ercast:
Oh! blest had my fate been, and happy my lot,
Had the first strain of love been the dearest, the last.

Farewell, my young Muse! since we now can ne'er
meet;
If our songs have been languid, they surely are true,
Let us hope that the present at least will be sweet—
The present—which seals our eternal Adieu.

[1837. First published, 1838.]

TO AN OAK AT NEWSTEAD.*

YOUNG Oak! when I planted thee deep in the ground,
I hoped that thy days would be longer than
mine;

That thy dark-waving branches would flourish
around,
And ivy thy trunk with its mantle entwine.

Such, such was my hope, when, in Infancy's year,
On the land of my fathers I rear'd thee with
pride:

They are past, and I water thy stem with my tears—
Thy decay not the weeds that surround thee can hide.

I left thee, my Oak, and, since that fatal hour,
A stranger has dwelt in the hall of my sire;
Till manhood shall crown me, not mine is the power,
But his, whose neglect may have bade thee expire.

Oh! hardy thou wert—even now little care
Might revive thy young head, and thy wounds gently heal:

But thou wert not fated affection to share—
For who could suppose that a stranger would feel?

Ah, droop not, my Oak! lift thy head for a while;
Ere twice round yon Glory this planet shall run,
The hand of thy Master will teach thee to smile,
When Infancy's years of probation are done.

Oh, live then, my Oak! tow'rd life from the weeds,
That clog thy young growth, and assist the dew,
For still in thy bosom are life's early seeds,
And still may thy branches their beauty display.

cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not
said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in
after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not
said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in
after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not
said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in
after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not
said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in
after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

cut down, as it grows in an improper place." "I have not
said," replied the man; "for it's the one that my lord would fond of, because he set it himself." The Colonel, at length, took over possible care of it. It is frequently called by strangers, as "THE BYRON OAK," and promises to stand in after times, the celebrity of Shakespeare's willow.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Oh! yet, if maturity's years may be thine,
Though I shall lie low in the cavern of death,
In thy leaves yet the day-beam of ages may shine,
Uninjured by time, or the rude winter's breath.

For centuries still may thy boughs lightly wave
O'er the corse of thy lord in thy canopy laid;
While the branches thus gratefully shelter his grave,
The chief who survives may recline in thy shade.

And as he, with his boys, shall revisit this spot,
He will tell them in whispers more softly to tread.
Oh! surely, by these I shall ne'er be forgot:
Remembrance still hallows the dust of the dead.

And here, will they say, when in life's glowing prime,
Perhaps he has pour'd forth his young simple lay,
And here must he sleep, till the moments of time
Are lost in the hours of Eternity's day.

[1897. First published, 1892.]

ON REVISITING HARROW.*

HERE once engaged the stranger's view
Young Friendship's record simply traced;
Few were her words,—but yet, though few,
Resentment's hand the line defaced.

Deeply she cut—but not erased.
The characters were still so plain,
That Friendship once return'd, and gazed,—
Till Memory hail'd the words again.

Repentance placed them as before;
Forgiveness join'd her gentle name;
So fair the inscription seem'd once more,
That Friendship thought it still the same.

Thus might the Record now have been;
But, ah, in spite of Hope's endeavor,
Or Friendship's tears, Pride rush'd between,
And blotted out the line for ever!

[September, 1897.]

EPITAPH ON JOHN ADAMS, OF SOUTHWELL, WELL,

A CARRIER, WHO DIED OF DRUNKENNESS.

JOHN ADAMS lies here, of the parish of Southwell,
A Carrier who carried his can to his mouth well;
He carried so much, and he carried so fast,
He could carry no more—so was carried at last;
For, the liquor he drank, being too much for one,
He could not carry off, so he's now carri-on.

[September, 1897.]

TO MY SON.†

Those flaxen locks, those eyes of blue,
Bright as thy mother's in their hue;
Those rosy lips, whose dimples play
And smile to steal the heart away,
Recall a scene of former joy,
And touch thy father's heart, my Boy!

* Some years ago, when at Harrow, a friend of the author engraved on a particular spot the names of both, with a few additional words, as a memorial. Afterwards, on receiving some real or imagined injury, the author destroyed the frail record before he left Harrow. On revisiting the place in 1897, he wrote under it these stanzas.

† Whether these verses are, in any degree, founded on fact, I have no accurate means of determining. Fond as Lord Byron was of recording every particular of his youth, such an event, or rather era, as is here commemorated,

And thou canst lip a father's name—
Ah, William, were thine own the same,—
No self-reproach—but, let me cease—
My care for thee shall purchase peace;
Thy mother's shade shall smile in joy,
And pardon all the past, my Boy!

Her lowly grave the turf has prest,
And thou hast known a stranger's breast.
Derision sneers upon thy birth,
And yields thee scarce a name on earth;
Yet shall not these one hope destroy,—
A Father's heart is thine, my Boy!

Why, let the world unfeeling frown,
Must I fond Nature's claim disown?
Ah, no—though moralists reprove,
I hail thee, dearest child of love,
Fair cherub, pledge of youth and joy—
A Father guards thy birth, my Boy!

Oh, 't will be sweet in thee to trace,
Ere age has wrinkled o'er my face,
Ere half my glass of life is run,
At once a brother and a son;
And all my wane of years employ
In justice done to thee, my Boy!

Although so young thy heedless sire,
Youth will not damp parental fire;
And, wert thou still less dear to me,
While Helen's form revives in thee,
The breast, which beat to former joy,
Will ne'er desert its pledge, my Boy!

[1897. First published, 1892.]

FAREWELL! IF EVER FONDEST PRAYER.

FAREWELL! if ever fondest prayer
For other's weal avail'd on high,
Mine will not all be lost in air,
But wait thy name beyond the sky.
'T were vain to speak, to weep, to sigh:
Oh! more than tears of blood can tell,
When wrung from guilt's expiring eye,
Are in that word—Farewell!—Farewell!

These lips are mute, these eyes are dry;
But in my breast and in my brain,
Awake the pangs that pass not by,
The thought that ne'er shall sleep again.
My soul nor deigns nor dares complain,
Though grief and passion there rebel:
I only know we loved in vain—
I only feel—Farewell!—Farewell!

[1892.]

BRIGHT BE THE PLACE OF THY SOUL.

BRIGHT be the place of thy soul!
No lovelier spirit than thine
E'er burst from its mortal control
In the orbs of the blessed to shine.

would have been, of all others, the least likely to pass unmentioned by him; and yet neither in conversation nor in any of his writings do I remember even an allusion to it. On the other hand, so entirely was all that he wrote, making allowance for the embellishments of fancy,—the transcript of his actual life and feelings, that it is not easy to suppose a poem, so full of natural tenderness, to have been indebted for its origin to imagination alone."—MOORE. But see post, Don Juan, canto xvi., stanza 121.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

On earth thou wert all but divine,
As thy soul shall immortally be;
And our sorrow may cease to repine,
When we know that thy God is with thee.

Light be the turf of thy tomb!
May its verdure like emeralds be:
There should not be the shadow of gloom
In aught that reminds us of thee.

Young flowers and an evergreen tree
May spring from the spot of thy rest:
But nor cypress nor yew let us see;
For why should we mourn for the blest?
[AMM.]

WHEN WE TWO PARTED.

WHEN we two parted
In silence and tears,
Half broken-hearted
To sever for years,
Pale grew thy cheek and cold,
Colder thy kiss;
Truly that hour foretold
Sorrow to this.

The dew of the morning
Sank chill on my brow—
It felt like the warning
Of what I feel now.
The vows are all broken,
And light is thy flame;
I hear thy name spoken,
And share in its shame.

They name thee before me,
A knell to mine ear;
A shudder comes o'er me—
Why wert thou so dear?
They know not I know thee,
Who knew thee too well—
Long, long shall I rue thee,
Too deeply to tell.

In secret we met—
In silence I grieve,
That thy heart could forget,
Thy spirit deceive.
If I should meet thee
After long years,
How should I greet thee?—
With silence and tears.

[AMM.]

TO A YOUTHFUL FRIEND.

Few years have pass'd since thou and I
Were firmest friends, at least in name,
And childhood's gay sincerity
Preserved our feelings long the same.

But now, like me, too well thou know'st
What trifles oft the heart recall;
And those who once have loved the most
Too soon forget they loved at all.

And such the change the heart displays,
So frail is early friendship's reign,
A month's brief lapse, perhaps a day's,
Will view thy mind estranged again.

If so, it never shall be mine
To mourn the loss of such a heart;

484

The fault was Nature's fault, not thine,
Which made thee fickle as these art.

As rolls the ocean's changing tide,
So human feelings ebb and flow;
And who would in a breast confide,
Where stormy passions ever glow?

It boots not that, together bred,
Our childish days were days of joy—
My spring of life has quickly fled;
Thou, too, hast ceased to be a boy.

And when we bid adieu to youth,
Slaves to the specious world's control,
We sigh a long farewell to truth;
That world corrupts the noblest soul.

Ay, joyous season! when the mind
Dares all things boldly but to lie;
When thought ere spoke is unconfin'd,
And sparkles in the placid eye.

Not so in Man's maturer years,
When Man himself is but a tool;
When interest aways our hopes and fears,
And all must love and hate by rule.

With fools in kindred vice the same,
We learn at length our faults to blame;
And those, and those alone, may claim
The prostituted name of friend.

Such is the common lot of man;
Can we then 'scape from folly free?
Can we reverse the general plan,
Nor be what all in turn must be?

No; for myself, so dark my fate
Through every turn of life hath been;
Man and the world so much I hate,
I care not when I quit the scene.

But thou, with spirit frail and light,
Wilt shine awhile, and pass away;
As glow-worms sparkle through the night,
But dare not stand the test of day.

Alas! whenever folly calls
Where parasites and princes meet
(For cherish'd first in royal halls
The welcome voices kindly greet),

Ev'n now thou 'rt nightly seen to add
One insect to the fluttering crowd;
And still thy trifling heart is glad
To join the vain, and court the proud.

There dost thou glide from fair to fair,
Still simpering on with eager haste,
As flies along the gay parterre,
That taint the flowers they scarcely taste.

But say, what nymph will prize the flame
Which seems, as marish vapors move,
To sit along from dame to dame,
An ignis-fatuus gleam of love?

What friend for thee, how'er inclined,
Will deign to own a kindred care?
Who will debase his manly mind,
For friendship every fool may share?

In time forbear; amidst the throng
No more so base a thing be seen;
No more so idly pass along;
Be something, anything, but—

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

LINES INSCRIBED UPON A CUP FORMED FROM A SKULL.*

START not—nor deem my spirit fled;
In me behold the only skull,
From which, unlike a living head,
Whatever flows is never dull.

I lived, I loved, I quaff'd, like thee:
I died: let earth my bones resign:
Fill up—thou canst not injure me;
The worm hath fouler lips than thine.

Better to hold the sparkling grape,
Than nurse the earth-worm's slimy brood;
And circle in the goblet's shape
The drink of gods, than reptile's food.

Where once my wit, perchance, hath shone,
In aid of others' let me shine;
And when, alas! our brains are gone,
What nobler substitute than wine?

Quaff while thou canst: another race,
When thou and thine, like me, are sped,
May rescue thee from earth's embrace,
And rhyme and revel with the dead.

Why not? since through life's little day
Our heads such sad effects produce?
Redeem'd from worms and wasting clay,
This chance is theirs, to be of use.

[Newstead Abbey, 1800.]

WELL! THOU ART HAPPY.†

WELL! thou art happy, and I feel
That I should thus be happy too;
For still my heart regards thy weal
Warmly, as it was wont to do.

Thy husband's blest—and 't will impart
Some pang to view his happier lot;
But let them pass—Oh! how my heart
Would hate him, if he loved thee not!

When late I saw thy favorite child,
I thought my jealous heart would break;
But when the unconscious infant smiled,
I kiss'd it for its mother's sake.

I kiss'd it,—and repress'd my sighs,
Its father in its face to see;
But then it had its mother's eyes,
And they were all to love and me.

Mary, adieu! I must away:
While thou art blest I'll not repine;
But near thee I can never stay;
My heart would soon again be thine.

* Lord Byron gives the following account of this cup:—"the gardener, in digging, discovered a skull that had probably belonged to some jolly friar or monk of the abbey, about the time it was demolished. Observing it to be of giant size, and in a perfect state of preservation, a strange fancy seized me of having it set and mounted as a drinking cup. I accordingly sent it to town, and it returned with a very high polish, and of a mottled color like tortoise-shell."

† A few days before these lines were written, the poet had been invited to dine at Annesley. On the infant daughter of Mrs. Musters (formerly Miss Chaworth) being brought into the room, he started involuntarily, and with the utmost difficulty suppressed his emotion. To the sensations of that moment we are indebted for these beautiful stanzas.

‡ This monument is still a conspicuous ornament in the garden of Newstead. The following is the inscription by which the verses are preceded:—

I deem'd that time, I deem'd that pride
Had quench'd at length my boyish flame;
Nor knew, till seated by thy side,
My heart in all,—save hope,—the same.

Yet was I calm: I knew the time
My breast would thrill before thy look:
But now to tremble were a crime—
We met,—and not a nerve was shook.

I saw thee gaze upon my face,
Yet meet with no confusion there:
One only feeling couldst thou trace;
The sullen calmness of despair.

Away! away! my early dream
Remembrance never must awake:
Oh! where is Lethe's fabled stream?
My foolish heart, be still, or break.

[November 8, 1800.]

INSCRIPTION ON THE MONUMENT OF A NEWFOUNDLAND DOG.‡

WHEN some proud son of man returns to earth,
Unknown to glory, but upheld by birth,
The sculptor's art exhausts the pomp of woe,
And storied urns record who rest below;
When all is done, upon the tomb is seen,
Not what he was, but what he should have been:
But the poor dog, in life the firmest friend,
The first to welcome, foremost to defend,
Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
Who labors, fights, lives, breathes for him alone,
Unhonor'd falls, unnoticed all his worth,
Denied in heaven the soul he held on earth:
While man, vain insect! hopes to be forgiven,
And claims himself a sole exclusive heaven.
Oh, man! thou feeble tenant of an hour,
Debased by slavery, or corrupt by power,
Who knows thee well must quit thee with disgust,
Degraded mass of animated dust!
Thy love is lust, thy friendship all a cheat,
Thy smiles hypocrisy, thy words deceit!
By nature vile, ennobled but by name,
Each kindred brute might bid thee blush for shame.
Ye! who perchance behold this simple urn,
Pass on—it honors none you wish to mourn:
To mark a friend's remains these stones arise;
I never knew but one,—and here he lies.

[Newstead Abbey, November 20, 1800.]

TO A LADY,§

ON BEING ASKED MY REASON FOR QUITTING
ENGLAND IN THE SPRING.

WHEN Man, expell'd from Eden's bowers,
A moment linger'd near the gate,

"Near this spot
Are deposited the Remains of one
Who possessed Beauty without Vanity,
Strength without Insolence,
Courage without Ferocity,
And all the Virtues of Man without his Vices.
This Praise, which would be unmeaning Flattery
If I ascribed over human ashes,
Is but a just tribute to the Memory of BOATSWAIN, a Dog,
Who was born at Newfoundland, May, 1800,
And died at Newstead Abbey, November 18, 1803."

§ In the original MS. "To Mrs. Musters," the following is an extract from an unpublished letter of Lord Byron, written in 1803, only three days previous to his leaving Italy for Greece:—"Miss Chaworth was two years older than myself. She married a man of an ancient and respectable family, but

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Each scene recall'd the vanish'd hours,
And bade him curse his future fate.

But, wandering on through distant climes,
He learnt to bear his load of grief;
Just gave a sigh to other times,
And found in busier scenes relief.

Thus, lady! will it be with me,
And I must view thy charms no more;
For, while I linger near to thee,
I sigh for all I knew before.

In flight I shall be surely wise,
Escaping from temptation's snare;
I cannot view my paradise
Without the wish of dwelling there.

[December 8, 1860.]

REMIND ME NOT, REMIND ME NOT.

REMIND me not, remind me not,
Of those beloved, those vanish'd hours,
When all my soul was given to thee;
Hours that may never be forgot,
Till time unnerves our vital powers,
And thou and I shall cease to be.

Can I forget—canst thou forget,
When playing with thy golden hair,
How quick thy fluttering heart did move?
Oh! by my soul, I see thee yet,
With eyes so languid, breast so fair,
And lips, though silent, breathing love.

When thus reclining on my breast,
Those eyes threw back a glance so sweet,
As half reproach'd yet rais'd desire,
And still we near and nearer press'd,
And still our glowing lips would meet,
As if in kisses to expire.

And then those pensive eyes would close,
And bid their lids each other seek,
Veiling the azure orbs below;
While their long lashes' darken'd gloms
Seem'd stealing o'er thy brilliant cheek,
Like raven's plumage smooth'd on snow.

I dreamt last night our love return'd,
And, sooth to say, that very dream
Was sweeter in its fantasy,
Than if for other hearts I burn'd,
For eyes that ne'er like thine could beam
In rapture's wild reality.

Then tell me not, remind me not,
Of hours which, though for ever gone,
Can still a pleasing dream restore,
Till thou and I shall be forgot,
And senseless as the mouldering stone
Which tells that we shall be no more.

THERE WAS A TIME, I NEED NOT NAME.

THERE was a time, I need not name,
Since it will ne'er forgotten be,
When all our feelings were the same
As still my soul hath been to thee.

her marriage was not a happier one than my own. Her conduct, however, was irreproachable; but there was not sympathy between their characters. I had not seen her for many years, when an occasion offered. I was upon the point, with her consent, of paying her a visit, when my sister, who has always had more influence over me than any one else,

And from that hour when first thy tongue
Confess'd a love which equally I knew,
Though many a grief my heart hath known,
Unknown and thus unmet by thee,

None, none hath sunk so deep as this—
To think how all that love hath flown;
Transient as every faithless tie,
But transient in thy breast alone.

And yet my heart some solace knew,
When late I heard thy lips declare,
In accents once imagined true,
Remembrance of the days that were.

Yes; my adored, yet most unkind!
Though thou wilt never love again,
To me 'tis doubly sweet to find
Remembrance of that love remain.

Yes! 'tis a glorious thought to me,
Nor longer shall my soul repine,
Whate'er thou art or e'er shalt be,
Thou hast been dearly, solely mine.

AND WILT THOU WEEP WHEN I AM LOW?

And wilt thou weep when I am low?
Sweet lady! speak those words against
Yet if they grieve thee, may not so—
I would not give that bosom pain.

My heart is sad, my hopes are gone,
My blood runs coldly through my veins;
And when I perish, thou alone
Wilt sigh above my place of rest.

And yet, methinks, a gleam of peace
Doth through my cloud of anguish shine;
And for a while my sorrows cease,
To know thy heart hath felt for mine.

Oh, lady! blessed be that tear—
It falls for one who cannot weep;
Such precious drops are doubly dear
To those whose eyes no tear may steep.

Sweet lady! sure my heart was warm
With every feeling soft as thine;
But beauty's self hath ceased to charm
A wretch crestled to repine.

Yet wilt thou weep when I am low?
Sweet lady! speak those words against
Yet if they grieve thee, may not so—
I would not give that bosom pain.

FILL THE GOBLET AGAIN.

A SONG.

FILL the goblet again! for I never before Felt the glow which now gladdens my heart in care;
Let us drink!—who would not?—
Life's varied round,
In the goblet alone no deception is found.

persuaded me not to do it. "You" said she "will fall in love again, and then these words will lead to another, at least you will be by those reasons, and shortly after married, as it is useless to say." A portrait of the poet, in the life of the poet.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

I have tried in its turn all that life can supply;
I have bask'd in the beam of a dark rolling eye;
I have loved!—who has not?—but what heart can declare,
That pleasure existed while passion was there?

In the days of my youth, when the heart's in its spring,
And dreams that affection can never take wing,
I had friends!—who has not?—but what tongue
will avow,
That friends, rosy wine! are so faithful as thou?

The heart of a mistress some boy may estrange,
Friendship shifts with the sunbeam—thou never canst change:

Thou grow'st old—who does not?—but on earth
what appears,
Whose virtues, like thine, still increase with its years?

Yet if blest to the utmost that love can bestow,
Should a rival bow down to our idol below,
We are jealous!—who's not?—thou hast no such alloy;

For the more that enjoy thee, the more we enjoy.

Then, the season of youth and its vanities past,
For refuge we fly to the goblet at last;
There we find—do we not?—in the flow of the soul,
That truth, as of yore, is confined to the bowl.

When the box of Pandora was open'd on earth,
And Misery's triumph commenced over Mirth, Hope was left—was she not?—but the goblet we kiss,

And care not for Hope, who are certain of bliss.

Long life to the grape! for when summer is down,
The age of our nectar shall gladden our own:
We must die—who shall not?—may our sins be forgiven,

And Hebe shall never be idle in heaven.

STANZAS TO A LADY* ON LEAVING ENGLAND.

'T is done—and shivering in the gale
The bark unfurls her snowy sail;
And whistling o'er the bending mast,
Loud sings on high the fresh'ning blast;
And I must from this land be gone,
Because I cannot love but one.

But could I be what I have been,
And could I see what I have seen—
Could I repose upon the breast
Which once my warmest wishes blest—
I should not seek another zone
Because I cannot love but one.

'T is long since I beheld that eye
Which gave me bliss or misery;
And I have striven, but in vain,
Never to think of it again:
For though I fly from Albion,
I still can only love but one.

As some lone bird, without a mate,
My weary heart is desolate;
I look around, and cannot trace
One friendly smile or welcome face,
And ev'n in crowds am still alone,
Because I cannot love but one.

And I will cross the whitening foam,
And I will seek a foreign home;
Till I forget a false fair face,
I ne'er shall find a resting-place;
My own dark thoughts I cannot shun,
But ever love, and love but one.

The poorest, veriest wretch on earth
Still finds some hospitable hearth,
Where friendship's or love's softer glow
May smile in joy or soothe in woe;
But friend or lover I have none,
Because I cannot love but one.

I go—but wheresoe'er I flee,
There's not an eye will weep for me;
There's not a kind congenial heart,
Where I can claim the meanest part;
Nor thou, who hast my hopes undone,
Wilt sigh, although I love but one.

To think of every early scene,
Of what we are, and what we've been,
Would whelm some softer hearts with woe—
But mine, alas! has stood the blow;
Yet still beats on as it began,
And never truly loves but one.

And who that dear loved one may be
Is not for vulgar eyes to see,
And why that early love was cross'd,
Thou know'st the best, I feel the most:
But few that dwell beneath the sun
Have loved so long, and loved but one.

I've tried another's fetters too,
With charms perchance as fair to view;
And I would fain have loved as well,
But some unconquerable spell
Forbade my bleeding breast to own
A kindred care for aught but one.

'T would soothe to take one lingering view,
And bless thee in my last adieu;
Yet wish I not those eyes to weep
For him that wanders o'er the deep;
His home, his hope, his youth are gone,
Yet still he loves, and loves but one.

[1809.]

LINES TO MR. HODGSON.

WRITTEN ON BOARD THE LISBON PACKET.

HURRA! Hodgson, we are going,
Our embargo's off at last;
Favorable breezes blowing
Bend the canvas o'er the mast.
From aloft the signal's streaming,
Hark! the farewell gun is fired;
Women screeching, tars blaspheming,
Tell us that our time's expired.
Here's a rascal
Come to task all,
Frying from the custom-house;
Trunks unpacking,
Cases cracking,
Not a corner for a mouse
'Scapes unsearch'd amid the racket,
Ere we sail on board the Packet.

Now our boatmen quit their mooring,
And all hands must ply the oar;
Baggage from the quay is lowering,
We're impatient, push from shore.
"Have a care! that case holds liquor—
Stop the boat—I'm sick—oh, Lord!"

* In the original, "To Mrs. Musters."

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

"Sick, ma'am, damme, you'll be sicker,
Ere you've been an hour on board."
Thus are screaming
Men and women,
Germans, ladies, servants, Jacks;
Here entangling,
All are wrangling,
Stuck together close as wax.—
Such the general noise and racket,
Ere we reach the Lisbon Packet.

Now we've reach'd her, lo! the captain,
Gallant Kidd, commands the crew;
Passengers their berths are clapt in,
Some to grumble, some to spew.
"Heyday! call you that a cabin?"
Why 't is hardly three feet square:
Not enough to stow Queen Mab in—
Why the deuce can harbor there?"
"Who, sir? plenty—
Nobles twenty
Did at once my vessel fill."
"Did they? Jesus,
How you squeeze us!
Would to God they did so still:
Then I'd 'scape the heat and racket
Of the good ship, Lisbon Packet."

Fletcher! Murray! Bob! "where are you?
Stretch'd along the deck like logs—
Bear a hand, you jolly tar, you!
Here's a rope's end for the dogs.
Hobhouse muttering fearful curses,
As the hatchway down he rolls,
Now his breakfast, now his verses,
Vomits forth—and damns our souls.
"Here's a stanza
On Braganza—
Help!"—"A couplet?"—"No, a cup
Of warm water!"
"What's the matter?"
"Zounds! my liver's coming up;
I shall not survive the racket
Of this brutal Lisbon Packet."

Now at length we're off for Turkey,
Lord knows when we shall come back!
Breezes foul and tempests murky
May unshin us in a crack.
But, since life at most a jest is,
As philosophers allow
Still to laugh by far the best is,
Then laugh on—as I do now.
Laugh at all things,
Great and small things,
Sick or well, at sea or shore;
While we're quaffing,
Let's have laughing—
Who the devil cares for more?—
Some good wine! and who would lack it,
Ev'n on board the Lisbon Packet?

[Palmouth Beach, June 30, 1860.
First published, 1830.]

* Lord Byron's three servants.
† These lines were written at Malta. The lady to whom they were addressed, and whom he afterwards apostrophizes in the stanzas on the thunderstorm of Zita, (see page 460), and in Child Harold (see page 15), is thus mentioned in a letter to his mother:—"This letter is committed to the charge of a very extraordinary lady, whom you have doubtless heard of. Mrs. Spencer Smith, of whose escape the Marquis de Salvo published a narrative a few years ago. She has since been shipwrecked; and her life has been from its commencement so fertile in remarkable incidents, that in a romance they would appear improbable. She was born at Constantinople, where her father, Baron Herbert, was Austrian

LINES WRITTEN IN AN ALBUM, AT MALTA.

As o'er the cold sepulchral stone
Some name arrests the passer-by;
Thus, when thou view'st this page alone,
May mine attract thy passive eye!

And when by thee that name is read,
Perchance in some succeeding year,
Reflect on me as on the dead,
And think my heart is buried here.

[September 21, 1860.]

TO FLORENCE.†

Ou, Lady! when I left the shore,
The distant shore which gave me birth,
I hardly thought to grieve once more
To quit another spot on earth:

Yet here, amidst this barren isle,
Where panting Nature droops the head,
Where only thou art seen to smile,
I view my parting hour with dread.

Though far from Albion's craggy shore,
Divided by the dark blue main;
A few, brief, rolling, seasons o'er,
Perchance I view her cliffs again:

But whate'er I now may roam,
Through scorching clime, and varied sea,
Though Time restore me to my home,
I ne'er shall bend mine eyes on thee:

On thee, in whom at once conspire
All charms which heedless hearts can move,
Whom but to see is to admire,
And, oh! forgive the word—to love.

Forgive the word, in one who ne'er
With such a word can more offend;
And since thy heart I cannot share,
Believe me, what I am, thy friend.

And who so cold as look on thee,
Thou lovely wand'rer, and be less?
Nor be, what man should ever be,
The friend of Beauty in distress?

Ah! who would think that form had pass'd
Through Danger's most destructive path,
Had braved the death-wing'd tempest's blast,
And 'scaped a tyrant's fiercer wrath?

Lady! when I shall view the walls
Where free Byzantium once arose,
And Stamboul's Oriental halls
The Turkish tyrants now enclose;

Though mightiest in the lists of fame,
That glorious city still shall be;
On me 't will hold a dearer claim,
As spot of thy nativity:

ambassador; married unhappily, yet has never been impeached in point of character; excited the vengeance of Buonaparte, by taking a part in some conspiracy; several times risked her life; and is not yet five-and-thirty. She is here on her way to England to join her husband, being obliged to leave Trieste, where she was paying a visit to her mother, by the approach of the French, and embarking now in a ship of war. Since my arrival here I have had converses with other companions. I have found her very pretty, well accomplished, and extremely courteous. Unhappily, is not now so inexpressed against her, that her life would be in danger if she were taken prisoner a second time."

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

And though I bid thee now farewell,
When I behold that wondrous scene,
Since where thou art I may not dwell,
"T will soothe to be where thou hast been.

[September, 1809.]

STANZAS

COMPOSED DURING A THUNDER-STORM.*

CHILL and mirk is the nightly blast,
Where Pindus' mountains rise,
And angry clouds are pouring fast
The vengeance of the skies.

Our guides are gone, our hope is lost,
And lightnings, as they play,
But show where rocks our path have crost,
Or gild the torrent's spray.

Is yon a cot I saw, though low?
When lightning broke the gloom—
How welcome were its shade!—ah, no!
'T is but a Turkish tomb.

Through sounds of foaming waterfalls,
I hear a voice exclaim—
My way-worn countryman, who calls
On distant England's name.

A shot is fired—by foe or friend?
Another—'t is to tell
The mountain peasants to descend,
And lead us where they dwell.

Oh! who in such a night will dare
To tempt the wilderness?
And who 'mid thunder-peals can hear
Our signal of distress?

And who that heard our shouts would rise
To try the dubious road?
Nor rather deem from nightly cries
That outlaws were abroad.

Clouds burst, skies flash, oh, dreadful hour!
More fiercely pours the storm!
Yet here one thought has still the power
To keep my bosom warm.

While wand'ring through each broken path,
O'er brake and craggy brow;
While elements exhaust their wrath,
Sweet Florence, where art thou?

Not on the sea, not on the sea,
Thy bark hath long been gone:
Oh, may the storm that pours on me,
Bow down my head alone!

Full swiftly blew the swift Siroc,
When last I press'd thy lip;
And long ere now, with foaming shock,
Impell'd thy gallant ship.

Now thou art safe; nay, long ere now
Hast trod the shore of Spain;
'T were hard if aught so fair as thou
Should linger on the main.

And since I now remember thee
In darkness and in dread,
As in those hours of revelry
Which mirth and music sped;

Do thou, amid the fair white walls,
If Cadiz yet be free,
At times from out her latticed halls
Look o'er the dark blue sea;

Then think upon Calypso's isles,
Endear'd by days gone by;
To others give a thousand smiles,
To me a single sigh.

And when the admiring circle mark
The paleness of thy face,
A half-form'd tear, a transient spark
Of melancholy grace,

Again thou 'lt smile, and blushing shun
Some coxcomb's gallantry;
Nor own for once thou thought'st on one,
Who ever thinks on thee.

Though smile and sigh alike are vain,
When sever'd hearts repine,
My spirit flies o'er mount and main,
And mourns in search of thine.

STANZAS

WRITTEN IN PASSING THE ARMORACIAN GULF.

THROUGH cloudless skies, in silvery sheen,
Full beams the moon on Actium's coast:
And on these waves, for Egypt's queen,
The ancient world was won and lost.

And now upon the scene I look,
The azure grave of many a Roman;
Where stern Ambition once forsook
His wavering crown to follow woman.

Florence! whom I will love as well
As ever yet was said or sung
(Since Orpheus sang his spouse from hell),
Whilst thou art fair and I am young;

Sweet Florence! those were pleasant times,
When worlds were staked for ladies' eyes:
Had bards as many realms as rhymes,
Thy charms might raise new Antonies.

Though Fate forbids such things to be,
Yet, by thine eyes and ringlets curl'd!
I cannot lose a world for thee,
But would not lose thee for a world.

[November 14, 1809.]

THE SPELL IS BROKE, THE CHARM IS FLOWN!

WRITTEN AT ATHENS, JANUARY 16, 1810.

THE spell is broke, the charm is down!
Thus is it with life's fitful fever:
We madly smile when we should groan;
Delirium is our best deceiver.

Each lucid interval of thought
Recalls the woes of Nature's charter,
And he that acts as wise men ought,
But lives, as saints have died, a martyr.

* This thunder-storm occurred during the night of the 11th October, 1809, when Lord Byron's guides had lost the road to Zuma, near the range of mountains formerly called Pindus.

in Albania. The "Florence" alluded to was Mrs. Spencer Smith of the two previous poems and in Childs Harold.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

WRITTEN AFTER SWIMMING FROM SESTOS TO ABYDOS.*

It, in the month of dark December,
Leander, who was nightly wont
(What maid will not the tale remember?)
To cross thy stream, broad Hellespont!

If, when the wintry tempest roar'd,
He sped to Hero, nothing loth,
And thus of old thy current pour'd,
Fair Venus! how I pity both!

For me, degenerate modern wretch,
Though in the genial month of May,
My dripping limbs I faintly stretch,
And think I've done a feat to-day.

But since he cross'd the rapid tide,
According to the doubtful story,
To woo, and—Lord knows what beside,
And swam for Love, as I for Glory;

'T were hard to say who fared the best:
Sad mortals! thus the gods still plague you!
He lost his labor, I my jest;
For he was drown'd, and I've theague.

[May 6, 1830.]

LINES WRITTEN IN THE TRAVELLERS' BOOK AT ORCHOMENUS.

IN THIS BOOK A TRAVELLER HAD WRITTEN:—

"FAIR Albion, smiling, sees her son depart
To trace the birth and nursery of art:
Noble his object, glorious is his aim;
He comes to Athens, and he writes his name."

BENEATH WHICH LORD BYRON INVENTED THE FOLLOWING:—

THE modest bard, like many a bard unknown,
Rhymes on our names, but wisely hides his own;
But yet, whoe'er he be, to say no worse,
His name would bring more credit than his verse.

[1830.]

MAID OF ATHENS, ERE WE PART.

Εἰς τὴν παῖδα, ὡς ἀνέστη.

MAID of Athens, ere we part,
Give, oh, give me back my heart;
Or, since that has left my breast,
Keep it now, and take the rest!
Hear my vow before I go,

Εἰς τὴν παῖδα, ὡς ἀνέστη.

By those trees unconfin'd,
Wood'd by each Ægean wind;
By those lids whose jetty fringe
Kiss thy soft cheeks' blooming tinge;
By those wild eyes like the rose,

Εἰς τὴν παῖδα, ὡς ἀνέστη.

By that lip I long to taste;
By that zone-encircled waist;

By all the tokens—these that tell
What words can never speak so well;
By love's alternate joy and woe,
Εἰς τὴν παῖδα, ὡς ἀνέστη.

Maid of Athens! I am gone;
Think of me, sweet! when alone.
Though I fly to Istanbul,
Athens holds my heart and soul:
Can I cease to love thee? No!

Εἰς τὴν παῖδα, ὡς ἀνέστη.

[Athens, 1831.]

SUBSTITUTE FOR AN EPITAPH.

KIND Reader! take your choice to cry or laugh;
Here HAROLD lies—but where's his Epitaph?
If such you seek, try Westminster, and view
Ten thousand just as fit for him as you.

[Athens.]

TRANSLATION

OF THE NUMBER'S DOLLS IN THE MIRROR OF SURPRISES.

OH, how I wish that an embargo
Had kept in port the good ship Argo!
Who, still unlaunch'd from Greekian docks,
Had never pass'd the Asiatic rocks;
But now I fear her trip will be a
Damn'd business for my Miss Melissa, &c., &c.

[Athens, 1831.]

MY EPITAPH.

YOUTH, Nature, and relenting Jove,
To keep my lamp in strongly drove;
But Romanelli was so stout,
He beat all three—and blew it out.

[Athens, 1831.]

LINES WRITTEN BENEATH A PICTURE.

DEAR object of defeated care!
Though now of Love and thee bereft,
To reconcile me with despair,
Thine image and my tears are left.

'T is said with Sorrow Time can cope;
But this I feel can ne'er be true;
For by the death-blow of my Hope
My Memory immortal grew.

[Athens, January, 1831.]

TRANSLATION OF THE FAMOUS GREEK WAR SONG.

"Αἰὲν ναῦται οἱ Ἕλληες!"

Sons of the Greeks, arise!
The glorious hour is gone forth,
And, worthy of such ties,
Display who gave us birth.

* On the 31 of May, 1810, while the Salsette (Captain Bathurst) was lying in the Dardanelles, Lieutenant Ekeohead of that frigate and the writer of these rhymes swam from the European shore to the Asiatic—by the by, from Abydos to Sestos would have been more correct. The whole distance from the place whence we started to our landing on the other side, including the length we were carried by the current, was computed by those on board the frigate at upwards of four English miles.

+ Thoreau, the "Maid of Athens," was the daughter of the English vice-consul. See ante, Life of Byron and her portrait.

‡ The song was written by Riga, who participated in the attempt to revolutionize Greece. This translation is as literal as the author could make it in verse. It is of the same nature as that of the original.—While at the Capitoline against Lord Byron devoted some hours daily to the study of the Romancé. See Appendix, Note 48.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

CHORUS.

Sons of Greeks! let us go
In arms against the foe,
Till their hated blood shall flow
In a river past our feet.

Then manfully despising
The Turkish tyrant's yoke,
Let your country see you rising,
And all her chains are broke.
Brave shades of chiefs and sages,
Behold the coming strife!
Hellènes of past ages,
Oh, start again to life!
At the sound of my trumpet, breaking
Your sleep, oh, join with me!
And, the seven-hill'd* city seeking,
Fight, conquer, till we're free.
Sons of Greeks, etc.

Sparta, Sparta, why in slumbers
Lethargic dost thou lie?
Awake, and join thy numbers
With Athens, old ally!
Leonidas recalling,
That chief of ancient song,
Who saved ye once from falling,
The terrible! the strong!
Who made that bold diversion
In old Thermopylæ,
And warring with the Persian
To keep his country free;
With his three hundred waging
The battle, long he stood,
And like a lion raging,
Expired in seas of blood.
Sons of Greeks, etc.

TRANSLATION OF THE ROMAIC SONG,

"Μουσὴν ποτ' ἴπ' ἀγαπᾷ Ὀψιδεύων Χαλδῆ," etc.

I ENTER thy garden of roses,
Beloved and fair Haidée,
Each morning where Flora reposes,
For surely I see her in thee,
Oh, Lovely! thus low I implore thee,
Receive this fond truth from my tongue,
Which utters its song to adore thee,
Yet trembles for what it has sung;
As the branch, at the bidding of Nature,
Adds fragrance and fruit to the tree,
Through her eyes, through her every feature,
Shines the soul of the young Haidée.
But the loveliest garden grows hateful
When Love has abandon'd the bowers;
Bring me hemlock—since mine is ungrateful,
That herb is more fragrant than flowers.
The poison, when pour'd from the chalice,
Will deeply embitter the bowl;
But when drunk to escape from thy malice,
The draught shall be sweet to my soul.
Too cruel! in vain I implore thee
My heart from these horrors to save;
Will nought to my bosom restore thee?
Then open the gates of the grave.

As the chief who to combat advances
Secure of his conquest before,
Thus thou, with those eyes for thy lances,
Hast pierced through my heart to its core.
Ah, tell me, my soul! must I perish
By pangs which a smile would dispel?

* Constantinople.

Would the hope, which thou once bad'st me cherish,
For torture repay me too well?
Now sad is the garden of roses,
Beloved but false Haidée!
There Flora all wither'd reposes,
And mourns o'er thine absence with me.

ON PARTING.

THE kiss, dear maid! thy lip has left
Shall never part from mine,
Till happier hours restore the gift
Untainted back to thine.

Thy parting glance, which fondly beams,
An equal love may see:
The tear that from thine eyelid streams
Can weep no change in me.

I ask no pledge to make me blest
In gazing when alone;
Nor one memorial for a breast,
Whose thoughts are all thine own.

Nor need I write—to tell the tale
My pen were doubly weak:
Oh! what can idle words avail,
Unless the heart could speak?

By day or night, in weal or woe,
That heart, no longer free,
Must bear the love it cannot show,
And silent ache for thee.

[March, 1811.]

EPITAPH FOR JOSEPH BLACKETT,

LATE POET AND SHUENAKER.

STRANGER! behold, interr'd together,
The souls of learning and of leather.
Poor Joe is gone, but left his all:
You'll find his relics in a stall.
His works were neat, and often found
Well stitch'd, and with morocco bound.
Tread lightly—where the bard is laid
He cannot mend the shoe he made;
Yet is he happy in his hole,
With verse immortal as his sole.
But still to business he held fast,
And stuck to Phœbus to the last.
Then who shall say so good a fellow
Was only "leather and prunella"?
For character—he did not lack it;
And if he did, 't were shame to "Black-It."

[Malta, May 10, 1811.]

FAREWELL TO MALTA.

ADIEU, ye joys of La Valette!
Adieu, sirocco, sun, and sweat!
Adieu, thou palace rarely enter'd!
Adieu, ye mansions where—I've ventured!
Adieu, ye cursed streets of stairs!
(How surely he who mounts you swears!)
Adieu, ye merchants often failing!
Adieu, thou mob forever railing!
Adieu, ye packets—without letters!
Adieu, ye fools—who ape your betters!
Adieu, thou damn'dest quarantine,
That gave me fever, and the spleen!
Adieu that stage which makes us yawn, Sirs,
Adieu his Excellency's dancers!

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Adieu to Peter—whom no fault's in,
But could not teach a colonel waiting;
Adieu, ye females fraught with graces!
Adieu red coats, and redder faces!
Adieu the supercilious air
Of all that strut "en militaire!"
I go—but God knows when, or why,
To smoky towns and cloudy sky,
To things (the honest truth to say)
As bad—but in a different way.

Farewell to these, but not adieu,
Triumphant sons of truest blue!
While either Adriatic shore,
And fallen chiefs, and fleets no more,
And nightly smiles, and dally dinners,
Proclaim you war and women's winners.
Pardon my Muse, who apt to prate is,
And take my rhyme—because 'tis "gratin."

And now I've got to Mrs. Fraser,
Perhaps you think I mean to praise her—
And were I vain enough to think
My praise was worth this drop of ink,
A line—or two—were no hard matter,
As here, indeed, I need not flatter:
But she must be content to shine
In better praises than in mine,
With lively air, and open heart,
And fashion's ease, without its art
Her hours can gayly glide along,
Nor ask the aid of idle song.

And now, oh, Malta! since thou 'st got us,
Thou little military hothouse!
I'll not offend with words uncivil,
And wish thee rudely at the devil,
But only stare from out my casement,
And ask, for what is such a place meant?
Then, in my solitary nook,
Return to scribbling, or a book,
Or take my physic while I'm able
(Two spoonfuls hourly by the label),
Prefer my nightcap to my beaver,
And bless the gods—I've got a fever.

[May 26, 1811. First published, 1822.]

TO DIVES.

A FRAGMENT.

UNHAPPY Dives! in an evil hour
'Gainst Nature's voice seduced to deeds accurst!
Once Fortune's minion, now thou feel'st her power;
Wrath's vial on thy lofty head hath burst.
In Wit, in Genius, as in Wealth the first,
How wondrous bright thy blooming morn arose!
But thou wert smitten with th' unhallow'd thirst
Of Crime unnamed, and thy sad noon must close
In scorn, and solitude unsought, the worst of woes.

[1811. First published, 1822.]

ON MOORE'S LAST OPERATIC FARCE, OR FARCICAL OPERA.

Good plays are scarce,
So Moore writes farce;
The poet's fame grows brittle—
We knew before
That Little's Moore,
But now 't is Moore that 's Little.

[September 24, 1811. First published, 1820.]

* Mr. Francis Hodgson (not then the Reverend). See ante, p. 47. † Also: Life of Byron.

† Lord Byron, in a letter to Mr. Dallas, bearing the exact date of these lines, viz., October 11, 1811, writes as follows:—

EPISTLE TO A FRIEND,*

IN ANSWER TO SOME LINES EXHORTING THE AU-THOR TO BE CHEERFUL, AND TO "BAKE
CARE."

OH! "banish care"—such ever be
The motto of thy revelry!
Perchance of mine, when wassail nigh
Renew those riotous delights,
Wherewith the children of Despair
Lull the lone heart, and "banish care."
But not in morn's reflecting hour,
When present, past, and future lower,
When all I loved is changed or gone,
Mock with such taunts the woes of one,
Whose every thought—but let them pass—
Thou know'st I am not what I was.
But, above all, if thou would'st hold
Place in a heart that ne'er was cold,
By all the powers that men revere,
By all unto thy bosom dear,
Thy joys below, thy hopes above,
Speak—speak of anything but love.

'T were long to tell, and vain to hear
The tale of one who scorns a tear;
And there is little in that tale
Which better bosoms would bewail.
But mine has suffer'd more than well
"T would suit philosophy to tell."
I've seen my bride another's bride,—
Have seen her seated by his side,—
Have seen the infant, which she bore,
Wear the sweet smile the mother wore,
When she and I in youth have smiled,
As fond and faultless as her child;—
Have seen her eyes, in cold disdain,
Ask if I felt no secret pain;
And I have acted well my part,
And made my cheek belie my heart,
Return'd the freezing glance she gave,
Yet felt the while that woman's slave;—
Have kiss'd, as if without design,
The babe which ought to have been mine,
And show'd, alas! in each career
Time had not made me love the less.

But let this pass—I'll whine no more,
Nor seek again an eastern shore;
The world befits a busy brain,—
I'll hie me to its haunts again.
But if, in some succeeding year,
When Britain's "May is in the ere,"
Thou hear'st of one, whose deepening crimes
Suit with the saddest of the times;
Of one, whom love nor pity sways,
Nor hope of fame, nor good men's praise;
One, who in stern ambition's pride,
Perchance not blood shall turn aside;
One rank'd in some recording page
With the worst anarchists of the age,
Him wilt thou know—and knowing pause,
Nor with the effect forget the cause.

[Newstead Abbey, Oct. 12, 1811.]

[First published, 1820.]

TO THYZZA.†

WITHOUT a stone to mark the spot,
And say, what Truth might well have said,

"I have been again shocked with a death, and have lost one very dear to me in happier times: but 'I have almost forgot the taste of grief,' and 'supped full of horrors,' till I have become callous; nor have I a tear left for an event which

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

By all, save one, perchance forgot,
Ah! wherefore art thou lowly laid?

By many a shore and many a sea
Divided, yet beloved in vain;
The past, the future fled to thee,
To bid us meet—no—ne'er again.

Could this have been—a word, a look,
That softly said, "We part in peace,"
Had taught my bosom how to brook,
With fainter sighs, thy soul's release.

And didst thou not, since Death for thee
Prepared a light and pangless dart,
Once long for him thou ne'er shalt see,
Who baid, and holds thee in his heart?

Oh! who like him had watch'd thee here
Or sadly mark'd thy glazing eye,
In that dread hour ere death appear,
When silent sorrow fears to sigh,

Till all was past! But when no more
'T was thine to reek of human woe,
Affection's heart-drops, gushing o'er,
Had flow'd as fast—as now they flow.

Shall they not flow, when many a day
In these, to me, deserted towers,
Ere call'd but for a time away,
Affection's mingling tears were ours?

Ours too the glance none saw beside;
The smile none else might understand;
The whisper'd thought of hearts allied,
The pressure of the thrilling hand;

The kiss, so guiltless and refined,
That Love each warmer wish forbore;
Those eyes proclaim'd so pure a mind,
Even Passion blush'd to plead for more.

The tone, that taught me to rejoice,
When prone, unlike thee, to repine;
The song, celestial from thy voice,
But sweet to me from none but thine;

The pledge we wore—I wear it still,
But where is thine?—Ah! where art thou?
Off have I borne the weight of ill,
But never bent beneath till now!

Well hast thou left in life's best bloom
The cup of woe for me to drain.
If rest alone be in the tomb,
I would not wish thee here again;

But if in worlds more blest than this
Thy virtues seek a fitter sphere,
Impart some portion of thy bliss,
To wean me from mine anguish here.

Teach me—too early taught by thee!
To bear, forgiving and forgiven:
On earth thy love was such to me;
It fain would form my hope in heaven!

[October 11, 1811.]

AWAY, AWAY, YE NOTES OF WOE.*

AWAY, away, ye notes of woe!
Be silent, thou once soothing strain.

Or I must flee from hence—for, oh!
I dare not trust those sounds again.
To me they speak of brighter days—
But hush the chords, for now, alas!
I must not think, I may not gaze,
On what I am—on what I was.

The voice that made those sounds more sweet
Is hush'd, and all their charms are fled;
And now their softest notes repeat
A dirge, an anthem o'er the dead!
Yes, Thyra! yes, they breathe of thee,
Beloved dust! since dust thou art;
And all that once was harmony
Is worse than discord to my heart!

'T is silent all!—but on my ear
The well-remember'd echoes thrill;
I hear a voice I would not hear,
A voice that now might well be still:
Yet oft my doubting soul 't will shake;
Even slumber owns its gentle tone,
Till consciousness will vainly wake
To listen, though the dream be flown.

Sweet Thyra! waking as in sleep,
Thou art but now a lovely dream;
A star that trembled o'er the deep,
Then turn'd from earth its tender beam.
But he who through life's dreary way
Must pass, when heaven is veil'd in wrath,
Will long lament the vanish'd ray
That scatter'd gladness o'er his path.

[December 6, 1811.]

ONE STRUGGLE MORE, AND I AM FREE.

ONE struggle more, and I am free
From pangs that rend my heart in twain;
One last long sigh to love and thee,
Then back to busy life again.
It suits me well to mingle now
With things that never pleased before:
Though every joy is fled below,
What future grief can touch me more?

Then bring me wine, the banquet bring;
Man was not form'd to live alone:
I'll be that light, unmeaning thing
That smiles with all, and weeps with none.
It was not thus in days more dear,
It never would have been, but thou
Hast fled, and left me lonely here;
Thou'rt nothing—all are nothing now.

In vain my lyre would lightly breathe!
The smile that sorrow fain would wear
But mocks the woe that lurks beneath,
Like roses o'er a sepulchre.
Though gay companions o'er the bowl
Dispel awhile the sense of ill:
Though pleasure fires the maddening soul,
The heart—the heart is lonely still!

On many a lone and lovely night
It soothed to gaze upon the sky;
For then I deem'd the heavenly light
Shone sweetly on thy pensive eye:
And oft I thought at Cynthia's noon,
When sailing o'er the Ægean wave,
"Now Thyra gazes on that moon!"—
Alas, it gleam'd upon her grave!

five years ago, would have bowed my head to the earth." Several years after the series of poems on Thyra were written, Lord Byron, on being asked to whom they referred, by a person in whose tenderness he never ceased to confide, refused to answer, with marks of painful agitation, such as rendered any further recurrence to the subject impossible. The reader must be left to form his own conclusion. The five following pieces are all devoted to Thyra.

* "I wrote this a day or two ago, on hearing a song of former days."—Lord Byron to Mr. Hodgson, December 8, 1811.

OCCASIONAL PIECES

When stretch'd on fever's sleepless bed,
And sickness shrunk my throbbing veins,
" 'Tis comfort still," I faintly said,
" That Thyra cannot know my pains: "
Like freedom to the time-worn slave,
A boon 't is idle then to give,
Relenting Nature vainly gave
My life, when Thyra ceased to live!

My Thyra's pledge in better days,
When love and life alike were new!
How different now thou meet'st my gaze!
How tinged by time with sorrow's hue!
The heart that gave itself with thee
Is silent—ah, were mine as still!
Though cold as e'en the dead can be,
It feels, it sickens with the chill.

Thou bitter pledge! thou mournful token!
Though painful, welcome to my breast!
Still, still, preserve that love unbroken,
Or break the heart to which thou 'rt press'd!
Time tempers love, but not removes,
More hallow'd when its hope is fled:
Oh! what are thine and living loves
To that which cannot quit the dead?

EUTHANASIA.

When Time, or soon or late, shall bring
The dreamless sleep that lulls the dead,
Oblivion! may thy languid wing
Wave gently o'er my dying bed!

No band of friends or heirs be there,
To weep, or wish, the coming blow:
No maiden, with diave'll'd hair,
To feel, or feign, decorous woe.

But silent let me sink to earth,
With no officious mourners near:
I would not mar one hour of mirth,
Nor startle friendship with a tear.

Yet Love, if Love in such an hour
Could nobly check its useless sighs,
Might then exert its latest power
In her who lives and him who dies.

'T were sweet, my Psyche! to the last
Thy features still serene to see:
Forgetful of its struggles past,
E'en Pain itself should smile on thee.

But vain the wish—for Beauty still
Will shrink, as shrinks the ebbing breath;
And woman's tears, produced at will,
Deceive in life, unman in death.

Then lonely be my latest hour,
Without regret, without a groan;
For thousands Death hath ceased to lower,
And pain been transient or unknown.

" Ay, but to die, and go," alas!
Where all have gone, and all must go!
To be the nothing that I was
Ere born to life and living woe!

Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen,
Count o'er thy days from anguish free,
And know, whatever thou hast been,
'T is something better not to be.

AND THOU ART DEAD, MY LOVE, AND FAIR.

" Ben, quanto mance sat estis regibus vestris cunctis mentibus!"

And thou art dead, as young and fair
As aught of mortal birth;
And form so soft, and charms so rare,
Too soon return'd to Earth!
Though Earth received them in thy bed,
And o'er the spot the crowd may tread
In carelessness or mirth,
There is an eye which could not break
A moment on that grave to look.

I will not ask where thou hast been,
Nor gaze upon the spot;
There flowers or weeds as will may grow,
So I behold them not:
It is enough for me to prove
That what I loved, and long want love,
Like common earth can rot;
To me there needs no stone to tell,
'T is Nothing that I loved so well.

Yet did I love thee to the last
As fervently as thou,
Who didst not change through all the year,
And canst not alter now.
The love where Death has set his seal,
Nor age can chill, nor rival steal,
Nor falsehood disavow:
And, what were worse, thou canst not see,
Or wrong, or change, or fault in me.

The better days of life were ours;
The worst can be but mine:
The sun that cheers, the storm that lowers,
Shall never more be thine.
The silence of that dreamless sleep
I envy now too much to weep;
Nor need I to repine
That all those charms have pass'd away
I might have watch'd through long decay.

The flower in ripen'd bloom unprun'd
Must fall the earliest prey;
Though by no hand untimely cut,
The leaves must drop away:
And yet it were a greater grief
To watch it withering, laid by land,
Than see it pluck'd to-day;
Since earthly eye but ill can bear
To trace the change to foul from fair.

I know not if I could have borne
To see thy beauties fade;
The night that follow'd such a morn
Had worn a deeper shade:
Thy day without a cloud hath pass'd,
And thou wert lovely to the last;
Extinguish'd, not decay'd;
As stars that shoot along the sky
Shine brightest as they fall from high.

As once I wept, if I could weep,
My tears might well be shed,
To think I was not near to keep
One vigil o'er thy bed;
To gaze, how fondly! on thy face,
To fold thee in a faint embrace,
Uphold thy drooping head;
And show that love, however vain,
Nor thou nor I can feel again.

Yet how much less it were to grieve
Though thou hast left me here.

Saul

Thou whose spell can raise the dead,

Bid the prophet's form appear.

"Samuel, raise thy bined head!

King, behold the phantom seer!"

regard; he stood the centre of a cloud;
it changed its hue, retiring from his shroud.
He stood all ghasey in his fixed eye;
hands were wither'd, and his veins were dry;
foot, in bony whiteness, glitter'd there,
unhens and sinewless, and ghostly bare;
no lips that moved not and unbreathing frame,
as cavern'd winds, the hollow accents came.
I saw, and fell to earth, as falls the oak,
ree, and blasted by the thunder-stroke.

"Why is my sleep disquieted?

Who is he that calls the death?

Is it thou, O King? Behold,

Bloodless are these limbs, and cold:

Such are mine; and such shall be

Thine to-morrow, when with me.

Ere the coming day is done,

Such shalt thou be, such thy son.

Fare thee weel, but for a day,

Then we mix our mould'ring clay.

Thou, thy race, lie pale and low,

Pierced by shafts of many a bow,

And the falchion by thy side

To thy heart thy hand shall guide:

Crownless, breathless, headless fall,

Son and sire, the house of Saul!"

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

The loveliest things that still remain,
Than thus remember thee!
The all of thine that cannot die
Through dark and dread Eternity
Returns again to me,
And more thy buried love endears
Than aught, except its living years.
[February, 1821.]

IF SOMETIMES IN THE HAUNTS OF MEN.

If sometimes in the haunts of men
Thine image from my breast may fade,
The lonely hour presents again
The semblance of thy gentle shade:
And now that sad and silent hour
Thus much of thee can still restore,
And Sorrow unobserved may pour
The plaint she dare not speak before.

Oh, pardon that in crowds awhile
I waste one thought I owe to thee,
And, self-condemn'd, appear to smile,
Unfaithful to thy memory;
Nor deem that memory less dear
That then I seem not to repine;
I would not fools should overhear
One sigh that should be wholly thine.

If not the goblet pass unquaff'd,
It is not drain'd to banish care;
The cup must hold a deadlier draught,
That brings a Lethe for despair.
And could Oblivion set my soul
From all her troubled visions free,
I'd dash to earth the sweetest bowl
That drown'd a single thought of thee.

For wert thou vanish'd from my mind,
Where could my vacant bosom turn?
And who would then remain behind
To honor thine abandon'd Urn?
No, no—it is my sorrow's pride
That last dear duty to fulfill:
Though all the world forget beside,
'Tis meet that I remember still.

For well I know, that such had been Thy gentle care for him, who now
Unmourn'd shall quit this mortal scene,
Where none regarded him, but thou:
And, oh! I feel in that was given
A blessing never meant for me;
Thou wert too like a dream of Heaven,
For earthly Love to merit thee.
[March 15, 1821.]

ON A CORNELIAN HEART WHICH WAS BROKEN.*

ILL-FATED Heart! and can it be,
That thou shouldst thus be rent in twain?
Have years of care for thine and thee
Alike been all employ'd in vain?

Yet precious seems each shatter'd part,
And every fragment dearer grown,
Since he who wears thee feels thou art
A fitter emblem of his own.
[March 15, 1821.]

FROM THE FRENCH.

BEAUTY, beauty and poet, has two little crimes;
She makes her own face, and does not make her rhymes.

LINES TO A LADY WEeping.†

WEEP, daughter of a royal line,
A Sire's disgrace, a realm's decay;
Ah! happy if each tear of thine
Could wash a father's fault away!

Weep—for thy tears are Virtue's tears—
Auspicious to these suffering isles;
And be each drop in future years
Repaid thee by thy people's smiles!
[March, 1821.]

THE CHAIN I GAVE.

FROM THE TURKISH.

THE chain I gave was fair to view,
The lute I added sweet in sound;
The heart that offer'd both was true,
And ill deserved the fate it found.

These gifts were charm'd by secret spell,
Thy truth in absence to divine;
And they have done their duty well,—
Alas! they could not teach thee thine.

That chain was firm in every link,
But not to bear a stranger's touch;
That lute was sweet—till thou couldst think
In other hands its notes were such.

Let him who from thy neck unbound
The chain which shiver'd in his grasp,
Who saw that lute refuse to sound,
Restring the chords, renew the clasp.

When thou wert changed, they alter'd too;
The chain is broke, the music mute.
'Tis past—to them and thee adieu—
False heart, frail chain, and silent lute.

LINES WRITTEN ON A BLANK LEAF OF "THE PLEASURES OF MEMORY."

ABSENT or present, still to thee,
My friend, what magic spells belong!
As all can tell, who share, like me,
In turn thy converse and thy song.

But when the dreaded hour shall come
By Friendship ever deem'd too nigh,
And "MEMORY" o'er her Druid's tomb
Shall weep that aught of thee can die,

* We know not whether the reader should understand the cornelian heart of these lines to be the same with that of which some notices are given at p. 388.

† This impromptu owed its birth to an ad lib. that the late Princess Charlotte of Wales burst into tears on hearing that the Whigs had found it impossible to put together a cabinet, at the period of Mr. Perceval's death. The ministerial prints raved for two months on end, in the most foul-mouthed vituperation of the poet, and all that belonged to him—the Morning Post even announced a motion in the House of Lords—"and all this," Lord Byron writes to Mr. Moore, "as Bedreddin in the Arabian Nights remarks, for making a cream tart with pepper: how odd, that eight lines should have given birth, I really think, to eight thousand!"

‡ The reader will recall Collins's exquisite lines on the tomb of Thomson: "In yonder grave a Druid lies," etc.

OCCASIONAL PIECES

How fondly will she then repay
Thy homage offer'd at her shrine,
And blend, while ages roll away,
Her name immortally with mine!

[April 23, 1812.]

ADDRESS.

SPOKEN AT THE OPENING OF DRURY LANE THEATRE, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1812.

In one dread night our city saw, and sigh'd,
Bow'd to the dust, the Drama's tower of pride!
In one short hour beheld the blazing fane,
Apollo sink, and Shakspeare cease to reign.

Ye who beheld (oh! sight admired and mourn'd,
Whose radiance mock'd the ruin it adorn'd!)
Through clouds of fire the masonry fragments riven,
Like Israel's pillar, chase the night from heaven;
Saw the long column of revolving flames
Shake its red shadow o'er the startled Thames,
While thousands, throng'd around the burning dome,

Shrank back appall'd, and trembled for their home,
As glared the volumed blaze, and ghastly shone
The skies, with lightnings awful as their own,
Till blackening ashes and the lonely wall
Usurp'd the Muse's realm, and mark'd her fall;
Say—shall this new, nor less aspiring pile,
Rear'd where once rose the mightiest in our isle,
Know the same favor which the former knew,
A shrine for Shakspeare—worthy him and you?

Yes—it shall be—the magic of that name
Defies the scythe of time, the torch of flame;
On the same spot still consecrates the scene,
And bids the Drama be where she hath been:
This fabric's birth attests the potent spell—
Indulge our honest pride, and say, How well!

As soars this fane to emulate the last,
Oh! might we draw our omens from the past,
Some hour propitious to our prayers may boast
Names such as hallow still the dome we lost.
On Drury first your Siddons' thrilling art
O'erwhelm'd the gentlest, storm'd the sternest heart.
On Drury, Garrick's latest laurels grew;
Here your last tears retiring Roscius drew,
Sigh'd his last thanks, and wept his last adieu:
But still for living wit the wreaths may bloom,
That only waste their odors o'er the tomb.
Such Drury claim'd and claims—nor you refuse
One tribute to revive his slumbering muse;
With garlands deck your own Menander's head,
Nor board your honors idly for the dead.

Dear are the days which made our annals bright,
Ere Garrick fled, or Brinsley ceased to write.
Heirs to their labors, like all high-born heirs,
Vain of our ancestry as they of theirs;
While thus Remembrance borrows Banquo's glass
To claim the accepted shadows as they pass,
And we the mirror hold, where imaged shine
Immortal names, emblazon'd on our line,
Pause—ere their feeble offspring you condemn,
Reflect how hard the task to rival them!

Friends of the stage! to whom both Players and Plays
Must sue alike for pardon or for praise,
Whose judging voice and eye alone direct
The boundless power to cherish or reject;
If e'er frivolity has led to fame,
And made us blush that you forbore to blame;
If e'er the stinking stage could condescend
To soothe the sickly taste it dare not mend,

All past reproach may pass as scenes remote,
And censure, wisely loud, be justly mute!
Oh! since your fat stamp the Deities's laws,
Forbear to mock us with misplaced applause;
So pride shall doubly nerve the actor's power,
And reason's voice be echo'd back by ours!

This greeting o'er, the ancient rule oblige,
The Drama's homage by her herald paid,
Receive our welcome too, whose every tone
Springs from our hearts, and fain would win your own.

The curtain rises—may our stage unfold
Scenes not unworthy Drury's days of old!
Britons our judges, Nature for our guide,
Still may we please—long, long may you preside!

PARENTHERTICAL ADDRESS

BY DR. FLAGIARY.

Half stolen, with acknowledgments, to be spoken in a public articulate voice by Master P. at the opening of the new new theatre. Stolen parts marked with the following name of quotation—thus—

"When energizing objects men pursue,"
Then Lord knows what is writ by Lord knows who
"A modest monologue you here survey,"
Hiss'd from the theatre the "other day,"
As if Sir Fretful wrote "the slumberous" verse,
And gave his son "the rubbish" to rehearse,
"Yet at the thing you 'd never be amazed,"
Knew you the rumpus which the author raised;
"Nor even here your smiles would be repress'd," Knew you these lines—the badness of the best.
"Flame! fire! and flame!" (words borrow'd from Lucretius),
"Dread metaphors which open wounds" like issues!
"And sleeping pangs awake—and—but away!"
(Confound me if I know what need to say),
"Lo Hope reviving re-expands her wings,"
And Master G—recites what Doctor Bunsy sings—
"If mighty things with small we may compare,"
(Translated from the grammar for the fair!)
Dramatic "spirit drives a conquering day,"
And burn'd poor Moscow like a tub at "har,"
"This spirit Wellington has shown in Spain,"
To furnish melodramas for Drury Lane.
"Another Marlborough points to Blenheim's victory,"
And George and I will dramatise it for ye.

"In arts and sciences our tale hath shone"
(This deep discovery is mine alone),
"Oh, British poetry, whose powers inspire"
My verse—or I'm a fool—and Fame's a liar,
"These we invoke, your sister arts explore"
With "smiles" and "lyres," and "panacea," and much more.

These, if we win the Graces, too, we gain
Disgraces, too! "inseparable train!"
"Three who have stolen their witloving aims from Cupid"

(You all know what I mean, unless you're stupid:
"Harmonious throng" that I have kept in poetic,
Now to produce in a "divine aesthetic!")
"While Poesy," with these delightful dexter,
"Sustains her part" in all the "upper" beams!
Thus lifted gloriously, you'll soar along
Borne in the vast balloon of Bunty's song
"Shine in your farce, masque, scenery, and play"
(For this last line George had a balcony)
"Old Drury never, never soar'd so high,"
So says the manager, and so say I.
"But hold, you say, this self-complacent
Is this the poem which the public taste

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

"True—true—that lowers at once our mounting pride;"

But lo!—the papers print what you deride.

"T is ours to look on you—you hold the prize,"

"T is twenty guineas, as they advertise!"

"A double blessing your rewards impart"—

I wish I had them, then, with all my heart.

"Our twofold feeling owns its twofold cause,"

Why son and I both beg for your applause.

"When in your fostering beams you bid us live,"

My next subscription list shall say how much you give!

[October, 1838.]

VERSES FOUND IN A SUMMER HOUSE AT HALES-OWEN.*

WHEN Dryden's fool, "unknowing what he sought,"

His hours in whistling spent, "for want of thought,"†

This guiltless of his vacancy of sense
Supplied, and amply too, by innocence;

Did modern swains, possess'd of Cymon's powers,

In Cymon's manner waste their leisure hours,

Th' offended guests would not, with blushing, see

These fair green walks disgraced by infamy.

Severe the fate of modern fools, alas!

When vice and folly mark them as they pass.

Like noxious reptiles o'er the whiten'd wall,

The filth they leave still points out where they crawl.

REMEMBER THEE! REMEMBER THEE!

REMEMBER thee! remember thee!

Till Lethe quench life's burning stream,

Remorse and shame shall cling to thee,

And haunt thee like a feverish dream!

Remember thee! Ay, doubt it not.

Thy husband too shall think of thee:

By neither shalt thou be forgot,

Thou false to him, thou false to me!

TO TIME.

TIME! on whose arbitrary wing

The varying hours must flag or fly,

Whose tardy winter, fleeting spring,

But drag or drive us on to die—

Hail thou! who on my birth bestow'd

Those boons to all that know thee known;

Yet better I sustain thy load,

For now I bear the weight alone.

I would not one fond heart should share

The bitter moments thou hast given;

And pardon thee, since thou couldst spare

All that I loved, to peace or heaven.

To them be joy or rest, on me

Thy future life shall press in vain:

I nothing owe but years to thee,

A debt already paid in pain.

Yet even that pain was some relief;

It felt, but still forgot thy power:

The active agony of grief

Retards, but never counts the hour.

In joy I've sigh'd to think thy flight
Would soon subside from swift to slow;
Thy cloud could overcast the light,
But could not add a night to woe;

For then, however drear and dark,

My soul was suited to thy sky;

One star alone shot forth a spark

To prove thee—not Eternity.

That beam hath sunk, and now thou art

A blank; a thing to count and curse,

Through each dull tedious trifling part,

Which all regret, yet all rehearse.

One scene even thou canst not deform;

The limit of thy sloth or speed

When future wanderers bear the storm

Which we shall sleep too sound to heed:

And I can smile to think how weak

Thine efforts shortly shall be shown,

When all the vengeance thou canst wreak

Must fall upon—a nameless stone.

TRANSLATION OF A ROMAN LOVE SONG.

Ah! Love was never yet without
The pang, the agony, the doubt,
Which rends my heart with ceaseless sigh,
While day and night roll darkling by.

Without one friend to hear my woe,

I faint, I die beneath the blow.

That Love had arrows, well I knew;

Alas! I find them poison'd too.

Birds, yet in freedom, ah! the net

Which Love around your haunts hath set;

Or, circled by his fatal fire,

Your hearts shall burn, your hopes expire.

A bird of free and careless wing

Was I, through many a smiling spring;

But caught within the subtle snare

I burn, and feebly flutter there.

Who ne'er have loved, and loved in vain,

Can neither feel nor pity pain,

The cold repulse, the look averted,

The lightning of Love's angry glance.

In flattering dreams I deem'd thee mine;

Now hope, and he who hoped, decline;

Like melting wax, or withering flower,

I feel my passion, and thy power.

My light of life! ah, tell me why

That pouting lip, and alter'd eye?

My bird of love! my beautiful mate!

And art thou changed, and canst thou hate?

Mine eyes like wintry streams o'erflow:

What wretch with me would barter woe?

My bird! relent: one note could give

A charm to bid thy lover live.

My curdling blood, my madd'ning brain,

In silent anguish I sustain;

And still thy heart, without partaking

One pang, exults—while mine is breaking.

* In Warwickshire.

† See Cymon and Iphigenia.

‡ A lady actuated by jealousy called on Lord Byron. His lordship was from home; but finding "Vathek" on the table, the lady wrote in the first page of the volume the words "Remember me!" Byron immediately wrote under the ominous warning these two stanzas.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Pour me the poison; fear not thou!
Thou canst not murder more than now:
I've lived to curse my natal day,
And Love, that thus can linger aye.

My wounded soul, my bleeding breast,
Can patience preach thee into rest?
Alas! too late, I dearly know
That joy is harbinger of woe.

THOU ART NOT FALSE, BUT THOU ART FICKLE.

Thou art not false, but thou art fickle,
To those thyself so fondly sought;
The tears that thou hast forced to trickle
Are doubly bitter from that thought:
'Tis this which breaks the heart thou grievest,
Too well thou lovest—too soon thou leavest.

The wholly false the heart despises,
And spurns deceiver and deceit;
But she who not a thought disguises,
Whose love is as sincere as sweet,—
When she can change who loved so truly,
It feels what mine has felt so newly.

To dream of joy and wake to sorrow
Is doom'd to all who love or live;
And if, when conscious on the morrow,
We scarce our fancy can forgive,
That cheated us in slumber only,
To leave the waking soul more lonely,

What must they feel whom no false vision,
But truest, tenderest passion warm'd?
Sincere, but swift in sad transition;
As if a dream alone had charm'd?
Ah! sure such grief is fancy's scheming,
And all thy change can be but dreaming!

ON BEING ASKED WHAT WAS THE "ORIGIN OF LOVE."

THE "Origin of Love!"—Ah, why
That cruel question ask of me,
When thou mayst read in many an eye
He starts to life on seeing thee?

And shouldst thou seek his end to know:
My heart forebodes, my fears foresee,
He'll linger long in silent woe;
But live—until I cease to be.

REMEMBER HIM WHOM PASSION'S POWER.

REMEMBER him whom passion's power
Severely, deeply, vainly proved:
Remember thou that dangerous hour
When neither fell, though both were loved.

That yielding breast, that melting eye,
Too much invited to be bless'd:
That gentle prayer, that pleading sigh,
The wilder wish reproved, repress'd.

Oh! let me feel that all I lost
But saved thee all that conscience fears;
And blush for every pang it cost
To spare the vain remorse of years.

Yet think of this when many a tongue,
Whose busy accents whisper blame,
Would do the heart that loved thee wrong,
And brand a nearly blighted name.

Think that, whate'er to others, thou
Hast seen each selfish thought subdued:
I bless thy purer soul even now,
Even now, in midnight solitude.

Oh, God! that we had met in time,
Our hearts as fond, thy hand more free;
When thou hadst loved without a crime,
And I been less unworthy thee!

Far may thy days, as heretofore,
From this our gaudy world be past!
And that too bitter moment o'er,
Oh! may such trial be thy last.

This heart, alas! perverted long,
Itself destroy'd might there destroy;
To meet thee in the glittering throng,
Would wake Presumption's hope of joy.

Then to the things whose bliss or woe,
Like mine, is wild and worthless all,
That world resign—such scenes forego,
Where those who feel must surely fall.

Thy youth, thy charms, thy tenderness,
Thy soul from long seclusion pure;
From what even here hath pass'd, may guess
What there thy bosom must endure.

Oh! pardon that imploring tear,
Since not by Virtue shed in vain,
My frenzy drew from eyes so dear;
For me they shall not weep again.

Though long and mournful must it be,
The thought that we no more may meet;
Yet I deserve the stern decree,
And almost deem the sentence sweet.

Still, had I loved thee less, my heart
Had then less sacrificed to thine;
It felt not half so much to part,
As if its guilt had made thee mine.

[SEE]

ON LORD THURLOW'S POEMS.

WHEN Thurlow this damn'd nonsense sent
(I hope I am not violent),
Nor man nor gods knew what he meant.

And since not ev'n our Rogers' praise
To common sense his thoughts could raise—
Why would they let him print his lays?

* * * * *

To me, divine Apollo, grant—oh!
Hermilda's first and second canto,
I'm fitting up a new portmanteau;

And thus to furnish decent lining,
My own and others' bays I'm twining—
So, gentle Thurlow, throw me thine in.

TO LORD THURLOW.

"I lay my branch of laurel down,
Then thus to form Apollo's crown
Let every other bring his own."
Lord Thurlow's lines to Mr. Rogers

"I lay my branch of laurel down."

THOU "lay thy branch of laurel down!"
Why, what thou 'st stole is not enow;
And, were it lawfully thine own,
Does Rogers want it most, or thou?

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Keep to thyself thy wither'd bough,
Or send it back to Doctor Donne:
Were justice done to both, I trow,
He'd have but little, and thou—none.

"Then thus to form Apollo's crown."

A crown! why, twist it how you will,
Thy chaplet must be foolscap still.
When next you visit Delphi's town,
Inquire amongst your fellow lodgers,
They'll tell you Phœbus gave his crown,
Some years before your birth, to Rogers.

"Let every other bring his own."

When coals to Newcastle are carried,
And owls sent to Athens, as wonders,
From his spouse when the Regent's unmarried,
Or Liverpool weeps o'er his blunders;
When Tories and Whigs cease to quarrel,
When Castlereagh's wife has an heir,
Then Rogers shall ask us for laurel,
And thou shalt have plenty to spare.

TO THOMAS MOORE.

WRITTEN THE EVENING BEFORE HIS VISIT TO
MR. LEIGH HUNT IN HORSEMANER-LANE
GAOL, MAY 19, 1818.

Oh, you, who in all names can tickle the town,
Anacreon, Tom Little, Tom Moore, or Tom Brown,—
For hang me if I know of which you may most brag,
Your Quarto two-pounds, or your Two-penny Post
Bag;

But now to my letter—to yours 't is an answer—
To-morrow be with me, as soon as you can, sir,
All ready and dress'd for proceeding to sponge on (According to compact) the wit in the dungeon—
Pray Phœbus at length our political malice
May not get us lodgings within the same palace!
I suppose that to-night you're engaged with some codgers.

And for Sotheby's Blues have deserted Sam Rogers;
And I, though with cold I have nearly my death got.

Must put on my breeches, and wait on the Heathcote;

But to-morrow, at four, we will both play the Scurra,

And you'll be Catullus, the Regent Mamurra.

[First published, 1818.]

IMPROMPTU, IN REPLY TO A FRIEND.

WHEN, from the heart where Sorrow sits,
Her dusky shadow mounts too high,
And o'er the changing aspect flits,
And clouds the brow, or fills the eye;
Heed not that gloom, which soon shall sink;
My thoughts their dungeon know too well;
Back to my breast the wanderers shrink,
And droop within their silent cell.

[September, 1818.]

SONNET, TO GENEVRA.

THINE eyes' blue tenderness, thy long fair hair,
And the wan lustre of thy features—caught
From contemplation—where serenely wrought,
Seems Sorrow's softness charm'd from its despair—

Have thrown such speaking sadness in thine air,
That—but I know thy blessed bosom fraught
With mines of unalloy'd and stainless thought—
I should have deem'd thee doom'd to earthly care.
With such an aspect, by his colors blent,
When from his beauty-breathing pencil born
(Except that thou hast nothing to repent),
The Magdalen of Guido saw the morn—
Such seem'dst thou—but how much more excellent!
With nought Remorse can claim—nor Virtue scoorn.

[December 17, 1818.]

SONNET, TO THE SAME.

THY cheek is pale with thought, but not from woe,
And yet so lovely, that if Mirth could flush
Its rose of whiteness with the brightest blush,
My heart would wish away that ruder glow;
And dazzle not thy deep-blue eyes—but, oh!
While gazing on them sterner eyes will gush,
And into mine my mother's weakness rush,
Soft as the last drops round heaven's airy bow.
For, through thy long dark lashes low depending,
The soul of melancholy Gentleness
Gleams like a seraph from the sky descending,
Above all pain, yet pitying all distress;
At once such majesty with sweetness blending,
I worship more, but cannot love thee less.

[December 17, 1818.]

FROM THE PORTUGUESE.

"TU MI CHAMAS."

In moments to delight devoted,
"My life!" with tenderest tone, you cry;
Dear words! on which my heart had doted,
If youth could neither fade nor die.

To death even hours like these must roll,
Ah! then repeat those accents never;
Or change "my life!" into "my soul!"
Which, like my love, exists for ever.

ANOTHER VERSION.

You call me still your life.—Oh! change the word—
Life is as transient as the inconstant sigh:
Say rather I'm your soul; more just that name,
For, like the soul, my love can never die.

THE DEVIL'S DRIVE;

AN UNFINISHED DRAUGHT.

THE devil return'd to hell by two,
And he stay'd at home till five;
When he dined on some homicides done in ragoût,
And a rebel or so in an Irish stew,
And sausages made of a self-slain Jew—
And bethought himself what next to do,
"And," quoth he, "I'll take a drive.
I walk'd in the morning, I'll ride to-night;
In darkness my children take most delight,
And I'll see how my favorites thrive.

"And what shall I ride in?" quoth Lucifer then—
"If I follow'd my taste, indeed,
I should mount in a wagon of wounded men,
And smile to see them bleed.
But these will be furnish'd again and again,
And at present my purpose is speed;
To see my manor as much as I may,
And watch that no souls shall be poach'd away.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

"I have a state-coach at Carlton House,
A chariot in Seymour Place;
But they're lent to two friends, who make me amends.

By driving my favorite pace:
And they handle their reins with such a grace,
I have something for both at the end of their race.

"So now for the earth to take my chance:"
Then up to the earth sprung he;
And making a jump from Moscow to France,
He stepp'd across the sea,
And reared his hoof on a turnpike road,
No very great way from a bishop's abode.

But first as he flew, I forgot to say,
That he hover'd a moment upon his way,
To look upon Leipsic plain;
And so sweet to his eye was its sulphury glare,
And so soft to his ear was the cry of despair,
That he perch'd on a mountain of slain;
And he gazed with delight from its growing height,
Nor often on earth had he seen such a sight,
Nor his work done half as well:
For the field ran so red with the blood of the dead,
That it bluish'd like the waves of hell!
Then loudly, and wildly, and long laugh'd he:
"Methinks they have here little need of me!"

But the softest note that soothed his ear
Was the sound of a widow sighing;
And the sweetest sight was the cry of despair,
Which horror froze in the blue eyes clear
Of a maid by her lover lying—
As round her fell her long fair hair;
And she look'd to heaven with that frenzied air,
Which seem'd to ask if a God were there!
And, stretch'd by the wall of a ruin'd hut,
With its hollow cheek, and eyes half shut,
A child of famine dying:
And the carnage begun, when resistance is done,
And the fall of the vainly dying!

But the devil has reach'd our cliffs so white,
And what did he there, I pray?
If his eyes were good, he but saw by night
What we see every day:
But he made a tour, and kept a journal
Of all the wondrous sights nocturnal,
And he sold it in shares to the Men of the Row,
Who bid pretty well—but they cheated him, though!

The devil first saw, as he thought, the Mail,
Its coachman and his coat;
So instead of a pistol he cock'd his tail,
And seized him by the throat:
"Aha!" quoth he, "what have we here?
'Tis a new barouche, and an ancient peer!"

So he sat him on his box again,
And bade him have no fear,
But be true to his club, and staunch to his rein,
His brotchel, and his beer;
"Next to seeing a lord at the council board,
I would rather see him here."

The devil gat next to Westminster,
And he turn'd to "the room" of the Commons;
But he heard, as he purposed to enter in there,
That "the Lords" had received a summons;
And he thought, as a "quondam aristocrat,"
He might peep at the peers, though to hear them were flat;
And he walk'd up the house so like one of our own,
That they say that he stood pretty near the throne.

He saw the Lord Liverpool sitting by the door,
The Lord Westmorland certainly not far;
And Johnny of Norfolk—a man of power,
And Chesham, so like his friend Bury;
And he saw the tears in Lord Eldon's eyes,
Because the Catholics would not die;
In spite of his prayers and his prophecies;
And he heard—which set Satan himself a-weeping—
A certain Chief Justice say something like this:
And the devil was shock'd—and said within himself must go,
For I find we have much better manners here,
If thus he harangues when he passes my door;
I shall hint to friend Meloch to call him to order.

WINDSOR POETICE.

Lines composed on the occasion of his royal highness
Prince Regent being seen standing between the statues
Henry VIII. and Charles I., in the royal vault at Windsor.

FAMED for contemptuous breach of sacred ties,
By headless Charles see heartless Henry lies;
Between them stands another scepter'd being—
It moves, it reigns—in all but name, a king!

Charles to his people, Henry to his wife,
—in him the double tyrant starts to life:
Justice and death have mix'd their dust in vain;
Each royal vampire wakes to life again.
Ah, what can tombs avail!—since then disparted
The blood and dust of both—to mould a George!

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

I SPEAK not, I trace not, I breathe not thy name,
There's grief in the sound, there is grief in the tone;
But the tear which now burns on my cheek may impart
The deep thoughts that dwell in that silence of heart.

Too brief for our passion, too long for our pain,
Were those hours—can their joy or their bitterness cease?

We repent—we abjure—we will break this chain,—
We will part,—we will fly to—unite it again!

Oh! thine be the gladness, and mine be the pain!
Forgive me, adored one!—forsake, if thou wilt,
But the heart which is thine shall expire with thine;
And man shall not break it—whatever thou wilt.

And stern to the haughty, but humble to thee,
This soul, in its bitterest blackness, shall be;
And our days seem as swift, and our moments seem sweet,

With thee by my side, than with worlds at our feet.

One sigh of thy sorrow, one look of thy love,
Shall turn me or fix, shall reward or improve;
And the heartless may wonder at all I venture—
Thy lip shall reply, not to them, but to me.

(MS. B. 1. 1.)

ADDRESS INTENDED TO BE RECORDED AT THE CALEDONIAN MEETING.

Who hath not glow'd above the page where Rome
Hath fix'd high Caledon's unconquer'd name;
The mountain land which spur'd the British hero,
And bann'd back the fiery-crested Dane,
Whose bright claymore and hardihood of heart
No foe could tame—no tyrant could subvert?

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

That race is gone—but still their children breathe,
And glory crowns them with redoubled wrath:
O'er Gael and Saxon mingling banners shine,
And, England! add their stubborn strength to thine.
The blood which flow'd with Wallace flows as free,
But now 't is only shed for fame and thee!
Oh! pass not by the northern veteran's claim,
But give support—the world hath given him fame!

The humbler ranks, the lowly brave, who bled
While cheerily following where the mighty led—
Who sleep beneath the undistinguish'd sod
Where happier comrades in their triumph trod,
To us bequeath—'t is all their fate allows—
The sireless offspring and the lonely spouse:
She on high Albyn's dusky hills may raise
The tearful eye in melancholy gaze,
Or view, while shadowy auguries disclose
The Highland seer's anticipated woes.
The bleeding phantom of each martial form
Dim in the cloud, or darkling in the storm;
While, sad, she chants the solitary song,
The soft lament for him who tarries long—
For him, whose distant relics vainly crave
The Coronach's wild requiem to the brave!

'Tis Heaven—not man—must charm away the
Which bursts when Nature's feelings newly flow;
Yet tenderness and time may rob the tear
Of half its bitterness for one so dear;
A nation's gratitude perchance may spread
A thornless pillow for the widow'd head;
May lighten well her heart's maternal care,
And wean from penury the soldier's heir.

[July, 1844.]

FRAGMENT OF AN EPISTLE TO THOMAS MOORE

"WHAT say I?"—not a syllable further in prose;
I'm your man "of all measures," dear Tom—so here goes!
Here goes, for a swim on the stream of old Time,
On those buoyant supporters, the bladders of rhyme.
If our weight breaks them down, and we sink in the flood,
We are smother'd, at least, in respectable mud,
Where the Divers of Bathos lie drown'd in a heap,
And Southey's last Pean has pillow'd his sleep;
That "Felo de se" who, half drunk with his malin-
seey,
Walk'd out of his depth and was lost in a calm sea,
Singing "Glory to God" in a spick and span stanza,
The like (since Tom Sternhold was choked) never man saw.

The papers have told you, no doubt, of the fusses,
The fêtes, and the gapings to get at these Russes,—
Of his Majesty's suite, up from coachman to Het-
man,—
And what dignity decks the flat face of the great
man.

I saw him, last week, at two balls and a party,—
For a prince, his demeanor was rather too hearty.
You know, we are used to quite different graces,
* * * * *

The Czar's look, I own, was much brighter and brisker,
But then he is sadly deficient in whisker;
And wore but a starless blue coat, and in kersey-more breeches whisk'd round, in a waltz with the Jersey,
Who, lovely as ever, seem'd just as delighted
With Majesty's presence as those she invited.

[June, 1844.]

CONDOLATORY ADDRESS

TO SARAH, COUNTESS OF JERSEY, ON THE PRINCE
REGENT'S RETURNING HER PICTURE TO MRS.
WELLS.

WHEN the vain triumph of the imperial lord,
Whom servile Rome obey'd, and yet abhor'd,
Gave to the vulgar gaze each glorious bust,
That left a likeness of the brave, or just;
What most admired each scrutinizing eye
Of all that deck'd that passing pageantry?
What spread from face to face that wondering air?
The thought of Brutus—for his was not there!
That absence proved his worth,—that absence fix'd
His memory on the longing mind, unmix'd;
And more decreed his glory to endure,
Than all a gold Colossus could secure.

If thus, fair Jersey, our desiring gaze
Search for thy form, in vain and mute amaze,
Amidst those pictured charms, whose loveliness,
Bright though they be, thine own had render'd

less:

If he, that vain old man, whom truth admits
Heir of his father's crown, and of his wife,
If his corrupted eye, and wither'd heart,
Could with thy gentle image bear to part;
That tasteless shame be his, and ours the grief
To gaze on Beauty's hand without its chief:
Yet comfort still one selfish thought imparts,
We lose the portrait, but preserve our hearts.

What can his vaulted gallery now disclose?

A garden with all flowers—except the rose;—

A fount that only wants its living stream;

A night, with every star, save Dian's beam.

Lost to our eyes the present forms shall be,

That turn from tracing them to dream of thee;

And more on that recall'd resemblance pause,

Than all he shall not force on our applause.

Long may thy yet meridian lustre shine,

With all that Virtue asks of Homage thine:

The symmetry of youth—the grace of mien—

The eye that gladdens—and the brow serene;

The glossy darkness of that clustering hair,

Which shades, yet shows that forehead more than fair!

Each glance that wins us, and the life that throws

A spell which will not let our looks repose,

But turn to gaze again, and find anew

Some charm that well rewards another view.

These are not lessen'd, these are still as bright,

Albeit too dazzling for a dotard's sight;

And those must wait till ev'ry charm is gone,

To please the paltry heart that pleases none;—

That dull cold sensualist, whose sickly eye

In envious dimness pass'd thy portrait by;

Who rank'd his little spirit to combine

Its hate of Freedom's loveliness, and thine.

[August, 1844.]

TO BELSHAZZAR.

BELSHAZZAR! from the banquet turn,
Nor in thy sensual fullness fall;
Behold! while yet before thee burn
The graven words, the glowing wall.
Many a despotic man miscall
Crown'd and anointed from on high;
But thou, the weakest, worst of all—
Is it not written, thou must die?

Go! dash the roses from thy brow—
Gray hairs but poorly wreath with them;
Youth's garlands misbecome thee now,
More than thy very diadem,
Where thou hast tarnish'd every gem:—
Then throw the worthless bauble by,

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Which, worn by thee, ev'n slaves contemn;
And learn like better men to die!

Oh! early in the balance weigh'd,
And ever light of word and worth,
Whose soul expired ere youth decay'd,
And left thee but a mass of earth:
To see thee moves the scorner's mirth:
But tears in Hope's averted eye
Lament that even thou hadst birth—
Unfit to govern, live, or die.

ELEGIAC STANZAS ON THE DEATH OF SIR PETER PARKER, BART.*

THERE is a tear for all that die,
A mourner o'er the humblest grave;
But nations swell the funeral cry,
And Triumph weeps above the brave.

For them is Sorrow's purest sigh
O'er Ocean's heaving bosom sent;
In vain their bones unburied lie,
All earth becomes their monument!

A tomb is theirs on every page,
An epitaph on every tongue:
The present hours, the future age,
For them bewail, to them belong.

For them the voice of festal mirth
Grows hush'd, their name the only sound;
While deep Remembrance pours to Worth
The goblet's tributary round.

A tribute to crowds that knew them not,
Lamented by admiring foes,
Who would not share their glorious lot?
Who would not die the death they chose?

And, gallant Parker! thus enshrined
Thy life, thy fall, thy fame shall be;
And early valor, glowing, find
A model in thy memory.

But there are breasts that bleed with thee
In woe, that glory cannot quell;
And shuddering hear of victory,
Where one so dear, so dauntless, fell.

Where shall they turn to mourn thee less?
When cease to hear thy cheriah'd name?
Time cannot teach forgetfulness,
While Grief's full heart is fed by Fame.

Alas! for them, though not for thee,
They cannot choose but weep the more;
Deep for the dead the grief must be,
Who ne'er gave cause to mourn before.

[Dunbar, 1745.]

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

"O Lacrymarum fons, tenero sacros
Ducentum ortus ex animo: quater
Felix! in imo qui scotentem
Pectore te, pia Nympha, sensit."
GRATIA FRANKLIN.

THERE'S not a joy the world can give like that it takes away,
When the glow of early thought declines in feeling's dull decay;

'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush aye,
which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is gone, ere youth itself be past.

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness
Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt or ocean of acess:
The magnet of their course is gone, or only points
in vain
The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall now stretch again.

Then the mortal coldness of the soul like death itself comes down;
It cannot feel for others' woes, it dare not draw
its own;
That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears,
And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.

Though wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth distract the breast,
Through midnight hours that yield no more their former hope of rest;
'Tis but as ivy-leaves around the ruin'd tower wreaths,
All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

Oh, could I feel as I have felt,—or be what I have been,
Or weep as I could once have wept, o'er many a vanish'd scene;
As springs in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish though they be,
So 'midst the wither'd waste of life, those tears would flow to me.

[March, 1835.]

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

THERE be none of Beauty's daughters
With a magic like thee;
And like music on the waters
Is thy sweet voice to me:
When, as if its sound were causing
The charmed ocean's pausing,
The waves lie still and gleaming,
And the lull'd winds seem dreaming.

And the midnight moon is weaving
Her bright chain o'er the deep;
Whose breast is gently heaving,
As an infant's asleep:
So the spirit bows before thee,
To listen and adore thee;
With a full but soft emotion,
Like the swell of Summer's ocean.

ON NAPOLEON'S ESCAPE FROM ELBA.

ONCE fairly set out on his party of pleasure,
Taking towns at his liking, and crowns at his leisure,
From Elba to Lyons and Paris he goes,
Making balls for the ladies, and bows to his foes.

[March 17, 1815.]

* This gallant officer fell in August, 1814, in his twenty-ninth year, whilst commanding, on shore, a party belonging to his ship, the Menelaus, and animating them in storming the American camp near Baltimore. He was Lord Byron's first cousin; but they had never met since boyhood.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

ODE FROM THE FRENCH.

I.

We do not curse thee, Waterloo!
Though Freedom's blood thy plain bedew;
There 't was shed, but is not sunk—
Rising from each gory trunk,
Like the water-spout from ocean,
With a strong and growing motion—
It soars, and mingles in the air,
With that of lost Labedoyere—
With that of him whose honor'd grave
Contains the "bravest of the brave,"
A crimson cloud it spreads and glows,
But shall return to whence it rose;
When 't is full 't will burst asunder—
Never yet was heard such thunder,
As then shall shake the world with wonder—
Never yet was seen such lightning
As o'er heaven shall then be bright'ning!
Like the Wormwood Star foretold
By the sainted Seer of old,
Show'ring down a fiery flood,
Turning rivers into blood.

II.

The Chief has fallen, but not by you,
Vanquishers of Waterloo!
When the soldier citizen
Sway'd not o'er his fellow men—
Save in deeds that led them on Where Glory smiled on Freedom's son—
Who, of all the despots banded,
With that youthful chief competed?
Who could boast o'er France defeated,
Till lone Tyranny commanded?
Till, goaded by ambition's sting,
The Hero sunk into the King?
Then he fell!—so perish all,
Who would men by man enthrall!

III.

And thou, too, of the snow-white plume,*
Whose realm refused thee ev'n a tomb;†
Better hadst thou still been leading
France o'er hosts of hirelings bleeding,
Than sold thyself to death and shame
For a meanly royal name;
Such as he of Naples wears,
Who thy blood-bought title bears.
Little didst thou deem, when dashing
On thy war-horse through the ranks,
Like a stream which burst its banks,
While helmets cleft, and sabres clashing,
Shone and shiver'd fast around thee—
Of the fate at last which found thee:
Was that haughty plume laid low
By a slave's dishonest blow?
Once—as the Moon sways o'er the tide,
It roll'd in air, the warrior's guide;
Through the smoke-created night
Of the black and sulphurous fight,
The soldier raised his seeking eye
To catch that crest's ascendancy—
And as it onward rolling rose,
So moved his heart upon our foes.

There, where death's brief pang was quickest,
And the battle's wreck lay thickest,
Strew'd beneath the advancing banner
Of the eagle's burning crest—
(There with thunder-clouds to fan her,
Who could then her wing arrest—
Victory beaming from her breast?)
While the broken line enlarging
Fell, or fled along the plain;
There be sure was Murat charging!
There he ne'er shall charge again!

IV.

O'er glories gone the invaders march,
Weeps Triumph o'er each levell'd arch—
But let Freedom rejoice,
With her heart in her voice;
But, her hand on her sword,
Doubly shall she be adored;
France hath twice too well been taught
The "moral lesson" dearly bought—
Her safety sits not on a throne,
With Capet or Napoleon!
But in equal rights and laws,
Hearts and hands in one great cause—
Freedom, such as God hath given
Unto all beneath his heaven,
With their breath, and from their birth,
Though Guilt would sweep it from the earth;
With a fierce and lavish hand
Scattering nations' wealth like sand;
Pouring nations' blood like water,
In imperial seas of slaughter!

V.

But the heart and the mind,
And the voice of mankind,
Shall arise in communion—
And who shall resist that proud union?
The time is past when swords subdued—
Man may die—the soul 's renew'd:
Even in this low world of care
Freedom ne'er shall want an heir;
Millions breathe but to inherit
Her for ever bounding spirit—
When once more her hosts assemble,
Tyrants shall believe and tremble—
Smile they at this idle threat?
Crimson tears will follow yet.‡

FROM THE FRENCH.

Must thou go, my glorious Chief,
Sever'd from thy faithful few?
Who can tell thy warrior's grief,
Maddening o'er that long adieu?
Woman's love, and friendship's zeal,
Dear as both have been to me—
What are they to all I feel,
With a soldier's faith for thee?

Idol of the soldier's soul!
First in fight, but mightiest now:
Many could a world control;
Thee alone no doom can bow.

* Poor dear Murat, what an end! His white plume used to be a rallying-point in battle, like Henry the Fourth's. He refused a confessor and a bandage; so would neither suffer his soul nor body to be bandaged."—Byron Letters.

† Murat's remains are said to have been torn from the grave and burnt.

‡ "Talking of politics, as Cæsar Quotem says, pray look at the conclusion of my 'Ode on Waterloo,' written in the year 1814, and, comparing it with the Duke de Berri's catastrophe in 1820, tell me if I have not as good a right to the character of 'Valer,' in both senses of the word, as Fitzgerald and Coleridge?"

* Crimson tears will follow yet."

and have they not?"—Byron Letters, 1820.

§ "All wept, but particularly Savary, and a Polish officer who had been exalted from the ranks by Buonaparte. He clung to his master's knees; wrote a letter to Lord Keith, entreating permission to accompany him, even in the most menial capacity, which could not be admitted."

OCCASIONAL PIECES

By thy side for years I dared
Death; and envied those who fell,
When their dying shout was heard,
Blessing him they served so well.

Would that I were cold with those,
Since this hour I live to see;
When the doubts of coward foes
Scarcely dare trust a man with thee,
Dreading each should set thee free!
Oh! although in dungeons pent,
All their chains were light to me,
Gazing on thy soul unbent.

Would the sycophants of him
Now so deaf to duty's prayer,
Were his borrow'd glories dim,
In his native darkness share?
Were that world this hour his own,
All thou calmly dost resign,
Could he purchase with that throne
Hearts like those which still are thine?

My chief, my king, my friend, adieu!
Never did I droop before;
Never to my sovereign sue,
As his foes I now implore:
All I ask is to divide
Every peril he must brave;
Sharing by the hero's side
His fall, his exile, and his grave.

ON THE STAR OF "THE LEGION OF HONOR."

FROM THE FRENCH.

STAR of the brave!—whose beam hath shed
Such glory o'er the quick and dead—
Thou radiant and adored deceit!
Which millions rush'd in arms to greet,—
Wild meteor of immortal birth!
Why rise in Heaven to set on Earth?

Souls of slain heroes form'd thy rays;
Eternity flash'd through thy blaze;
The music of thy martial sphere
Was fame on high and honor here;
And thy light broke on human eyes,
Like a volcano of the skies.

Like lava roll'd thy stream of blood,
And swept down empires with its flood;
Earth rock'd beneath thee to her base,
As thou didst lighten through all space;
And the shorn Sun grew dim in air,
And set while thou wert dwelling there.

Before thee rose, and with thee grew,
A rainbow of the loveliest hue
Of three bright colors,* each divine,
And fit for that celestial sign;
For Freedom's hand had blended them,
Like tints in an immortal gem.

One tint was of the sunbeam's dyes;
One, the blue depth of Seraph's eyes;
One, the pure Spirit's veil of white
Had robed in radiance of its light:
The three so mingled did bespeak
The texture of a heavenly dream.

Star of the brave! thy ray is pale,
And darkness must again prevail!
But oh, thou Rainbow of the free!
Our tears and blood must flow for thee.

When thy bright promise fades away,
Our life is but a load of clay.

And Freedom hallow'd with her tread
The silent cities of the dead;
For beautiful in death are they
Who proudly fall in her array;
And soon, oh, Goddess! may we be
For evermore with them or time!

NAPOLEON'S FAREWELL

FROM THE FRENCH.

FAREWELL to the Land where the gleam of thy Glory

Arose and o'ershadow'd the earth with her name—
She abandons me now—but the page of her story,
The brightest or blackest, is fill'd with my fate;
I have war'd with a world which vanquish'd me only

When the meteor of conquest allur'd me the day,
I have coped with the nations which crush'd me the lonely,
The last single Captive to millions in war.

Farewell to thee, France! when thy diadem crown'd
me.

I made thee the gem and the wonder of earth—
But thy weakness decrees I should leave as I found
thee,

Decay'd in thy glory, and sunk in thy worth.
Oh! for the veteran hearts that were wasted
In strife with the storm, when their battles were won—

Then the Eagle, whose gaze in that moment was blasted,

Had still soar'd with eyes fix'd on victory's standard!

Farewell to thee, France!—but when Liberty rallies
Once more in thy regions, remember me there—
The violet still grows in the depth of thy valleys;
Though wither'd, thy tear will unfold it again—
Yet, yet, I may baffle the hosts that surround me,
And yet may thy heart leap awake to my voice—
There are links which must break in the chain that has bound us,

Then turn thee and call on the Chief of thy ancestral

ENDORSEMENT TO THE DEED OF REPARATION, IN THE APRIL OF 1830.

A Year ago you swore, fond she!
"To love, to honor," and so forth:
Such was the vow you pledged to me,
And here 's exactly what 's worth.

DARKNESS.

I HAD a dream, which was not all a dream.
The bright sun was extinguish'd, and the stars
Did wander darkling in the eternal space,
Rayless and pathless, and the icy earth
Swung blind and blackening in the moonless air;
Morn came and went—and came, and brought no
day,
And men forgot their passions in the dread
Of this their desolation; and all hearts
Were chill'd into a selfish prayer for light;
And they did live by watchfires—and the thrones,
The palaces of crowned kings—the huts,
The habitations of all things which dwell,
Were burnt for beacons; cities were consumed,
And men were gather'd round their blazing doors
To look once more into each other's faces;

* The tricolor.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Happy were those who dwelt within the eye
 Of the volcanoes, and their mountain torch:
 A fearful hope was all the world contain'd;
 Forests were set on fire—but hour by hour
 They fell and faded—and the crackling trunks
 Irregularly with a crash—and all was black.
 The brows of men by the despairing light
 Wore an unearthly aspect, as by fits
 The flashes fell upon them; some lay down
 And hid their eyes and wept; and some did rest
 Their chins upon their clenched hands, and smiled;
 And others hurried to and fro, and fed
 Their funeral piles with fuel, and look'd up
 With mad disquietude on the dull sky,
 The pall of a past world; and then again
 With curses cast them down upon the dust,
 And gnash'd their teeth and howl'd: the wild birds
 shriek'd,

And, terrified, did flutter on the ground,
 And flap their useless wings; the wildest brutes
 Came tame and tremulous; and vipers crawl'd
 And twined themselves among the multitude,
 Lining, but stingless—they were slain for food:
 And War, which for a moment was no more,
 Did glut himself again:—a meal was bought
 With blood, and each sat sullenly apart
 Jorging himself in gloom: no love was left;
 All earth was but one thought—and that was death
 Immediate and inglorious; and the pang
 Of famine fed upon all entrails—men
 Died, and their bones were tombless as their flesh;
 The meagre by the meagre were devour'd:
 Even dogs assail'd their masters, all save one,
 And he was faithful to a corpse, and kept
 The birds and beasts and famish'd men at bay,
 Till hunger clung them, or the dropping dead
 Lured their lank jaws; himself sought out no food,
 But with a piteous and perpetual moan,
 And a quick desolate cry, licking the hand
 Which answer'd not with a caress—he died.
 The crowd was famish'd by degrees; but two
 Of an enormous city did survive,
 And they were enemies; they met beside
 The dying embers of an altar-place
 Where had been heap'd a mass of holy things
 For an unholy usage; they raked up,
 And shivering scraped with their cold skeleton hands
 The feeble ashes, and their feeble breath
 Blew for a little life, and made a flame
 Which was a mockery; then they lifted up
 Their eyes as it grew lighter, and beheld
 Each other's aspects—saw, and shriek'd, and died—
 Even of their mutual hideousness they died,
 Unknowing who he was upon whose brow
 Famine had written Fiend. The world was void,
 The populous and the powerful was a lump,
 Seasonless, herbless, treeless, manless, lifeless—
 A lump of death—a chaos of hard clay.
 The rivers, lakes, and ocean all stood still,
 And nothing stirr'd within their silent depths;
 Ships sailorless lay rotting on the sea,
 And their masts fell down piecemeal; as they dropp'd.

They slept on the abyss without a surge—
 The waves were dead; the tides were in their grave,
 The moon, their mistress, had expired before;
 The winds were wither'd in the stagnant air,
 And the clouds perish'd! Darkness had no need
 Of aid from them—She was the Universe.

[Disraeli, July, 1818.]

CHURCHILL'S GRAVE:

A FACT LITERALLY RENDERED.

I STOOD beside the grave of him who blazed
 The comet of a season, and I saw

The humblest of all sepulchres, and gazed
 With not the less of sorrow and of awe
 On that neglected turf and quiet stone,
 With name no clearer than the names unknown,
 Which lay unread around it; and I ask'd
 The Gardener of that ground, why it might be
 That for this plant strangers his memory task'd
 Through the thick deaths of half a century.
 And thus he answer'd—"Well, I do not know
 Why frequent travellers turn to pilgrims so;
 He died before my day of Sextonship.

And I had not the digging of this grave."
 And is this all? I thought,—and do we rip
 The veil of Immortality, and crave
 I know not what of honor and of light
 Through unborn ages, to endure this blight,
 So soon, and so successless? As I said,
 The Architect of all on which we tread,
 For Earth is but a tombstone, did essay
 To extricate remembrance from the clay,
 Whose minglings might confuse a Newton's
 thought.

Were it not that all life must end in one,
 Of which we are but dreamers,—as he caught
 As 't were the twilight of a former Sun,
 Thus spoke he,—“I believe the man of whom
 You wot, who lies in this selected tomb,
 Was a most famous writer in his day,
 And therefore travellers step from out their way
 To pay him honor,—and myself whate'er
 Your honor pleases;”—then most pleas'd I shook

From out my pocket's avaricious nook
 Some certain coins of silver, which as 't were Perforce I gave this man, though I could spare
 So much but inconveniently:—Ye smile,
 I see ye, ye profane ones! all the while,
 Because my homely phrase the truth would tell.
 You are the fools, not I—for I did dwell
 With a deep thought, and with a soften'd eye,
 On that Old Sexton's natural homily,
 In which there was Obscurity and Fame—
 The Glory and the Nothing of a Name.

[Disraeli, 1818.]

PROMETHEUS.

TITAN! to whose immortal eyes
 The sufferings of mortality,
 Seen in their sad reality,
 Were not as things that gods despise;
 What was thy pity's recompense?
 A silent suffering, and intense:
 The rock, the vulture, and the chain,
 All that the proud can feel of pain,
 The agony they do not show,
 The suffocating sense of woe,
 Which speaks but in its loneliness,
 And then is jealous lest the sky
 Should have a listener, nor will sigh
 Until its voice is echoless.

Titan! to thee the strife was given
 Between the suffering and the will,
 Which torture where they cannot kill;
 And the inexorable Heaven,
 And the deaf tyranny of Fate,
 The ruling principle of Hate,
 Which for its pleasure doth create
 The things it may annihilate,
 Refused thee even the boon to die:
 The wretched gift eternally
 Was thine—and thou hast borne it well.
 All that the Thunderer wrung from thee
 Was but the menace which flung back
 On him the torments of thy rack;
 The fate thou didst so well foresee,
 But would not to appease him tell;

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

And in thy Silence was his Sentence,
And in his Soul a vain repentance,
And evil dread so ill dissembled,
That in his hand the lightnings trembled.

Thy godlike crime was to be kind,
To render with thy precepts less
The sum of human wretchedness,
And strengthen Man with his own mind;
But baffled as thou wert from high,
Still in thy patient energy,
In the endurance, and repulse
Of thine impenetrable Spirit,
Which Earth and Heaven could not convulse,
A mighty lesson we inherit:
Thou art a symbol and a sign
To Mortals of their fate and force;
Like thee, Man is in part divine,
A troubled stream from a pure source;
And Man in portions can foresee
His own funeral destiny;
His wretchedness, and his resistance,
And his sad unaltered existence:
To which his Spirit may oppose
Itself—and equal to all woes,
And a firm will, and a deep sense,
Which even in torture can destroy
Its own concentrated recompense,
Triumphant where it dares defy,
And making Death a Victory.

[Diodesd, July, 1832.]

A FRAGMENT.

COULD I remount the river of my years
To the first fountain of our smiles and tears,
I would not trace again the stream of hours
Between their outworn banks of wither'd flowers,
But bid it flow as now—until it glides
Into the number of the nameless tides. * * * *

What is this Death?—a quiet of the heart?
The whole of that of which we are a part?
For life is but a vision—what I see
Of all which lives alone is life to me,
And being so—the absent are the dead,
Who haunt us from tranquillity, and spread
A dreary shroud around us, and invest
With sad remembrances our hours of rest.

The absent are the dead—for they are cold,
And ne'er can be what once we did behold;
And they are changed, and cheerless,—or if yet
The unforgotten do not all forget,
Since thus divided—equal must it be
If the deep barrier be of earth, or sea;
It may be both—but one day end it must
In the dark union of insensate dust.

The under-earth inhabitants—are they
But mingled millions decomposed to clay?
The ashes of a thousand ages spread
Wherever man has trodden or shall tread?
Or do they in their silent cities dwell
Each in his incommunicative cell?
Or have they their own language? and a sense
Of breathless being?—darken'd and intense
As midnight in her solitude?—Oh, Earth!
Where are the past?—and wherefore had they
birth?

The dead are thy inheritors—and we
But bubbles on thy surface; and the key
Of thy profundity is in the grave,
The ebon portal of thy peopled cave,
Where I would walk in spirit, and behold
Our elements resolved to things untold,
And fathom hidden wonders, and explore
The essence of great bosoms now no more. * * * *

[Diodesd, July, 1832.]

SONNET TO LAKE LEMAN.

ROUSSEAU—Voltaire—our Gibbon—and De Staël—
Leman! these names are worthy of thy shore,
Thy shore of names like these! wert thou no
more,
Their memory thy remembrance would recall:
To them thy banks were lovely as to all,
But they have made them lovelier, for the lore
Of mighty minds doth hallow in the core
Of human hearts the ruin of a wall
Where dwelt the wise and wondrous; but by thee
How much more, Lake of Beauty! do we feel,
In sweetly gliding o'er thy crystal sea,
The wild glow of that not ungentle zeal,
Which of the heirs of immortality
Is proud, and makes the breath of glory real!

[Diodesd, July, 1832.]

A VERY MOURNFUL BALLAD

ON THE SIEGE AND CONQUEST OF ALHAMA.*

Which, in the Arabic language, is to the following purport.

THE Moorish King rides up and down,
Through Granada's royal town;
From Elvira's gates to those
Of Bivarrambla on he goes.

Woe is me, Alhama!

Letters to the monarch tell
How Alhama's city fell:
In the fire the scroll he threw,
And the messenger he slew.

Woe is me, Alhama!

He quits his mule, and mounts his horse,
And through the street directs his course;
Through the street of Zacatin
To the Alhambra spurring in.

Woe is me, Alhama!

When the Alhambra walls he gain'd,
On the moment he ordain'd
That the trumpet straight should sound
With the silver clarion round.

Woe is me, Alhama!

And when the hollow drums of war
Beat the loud alarm afar,
That the Moors of town and plain
Might answer to the martial strain.

Woe is me, Alhama!

Then the Moors, by this aware
That bloody Mars recall'd them there,
One by one, and two by two,
To a mighty squadron grew.

Woe is me, Alhama!

Out then spake an aged Moor
In these words the king before,
"Wherefore call on us, oh, King?
What may mean this gathering?"

Woe is me, Alhama!

"Friends! ye have, alas! to know
Of a most disastrous blow,
That the Christians, stern and bold,
Have obtain'd Alhama's hold."

Woe is me, Alhama!

Out then spake old Alfaqui,
With his beard so white to see,

* The effect of the original ballad—which existed both in Spanish and Arabic—was such that it was forbidden to be sung by the Moors, on pain of death, within Granada.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

"Good King! thou art justly served,
Good King! this thou hast deserved.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"By thee were slain, in evil hour,
The Abencerrage, Granada's flower;
And strangers were received by thee
Of Cordova the Chivalry.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"And for this, oh, King! is sent
On thee a double chastisement:
Thee and thine, thy crown and realm,
One last wreck shall overwhelm.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"He who holds no laws in awe,
He must perish by the law;
And Granada must be won,
And thyself with her undone."
Woe is me, Alhama!

Fire flash'd from out the old Moor's eyes,
The Monarch's wrath began to rise,
Because he answer'd, and because
He spake exceeding well of laws.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"There is no law to say such things
As may disgust the ear of kings:"—
Thus, snorting with his choler, said
The Moorish King, and doom'd him dead.
Woe is me, Alhama!

Moor Alfaqui! Moor Alfaqui!
Though thy beard so hoary be,
The King hath sent to have thee seized,
For Alhama's loss displeased.
Woe is me, Alhama!

And to fix thy head upon
High Alhambra's loftiest stone;
That this for thee should be the law,
And others tremble when they saw.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"Cavalier, and man of worth!
Let these words of mine go forth;
Let the Moorish Monarch know,
That to him I nothing owe.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"But on my soul Alhama weighs,
And on my inmost spirit preys;
And if the King his land hath lost,
Yet others may have lost the most.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"Sires have lost their children, wives
Their lords, and valiant men their lives;
One what best his love might claim
Hath lost, another wealth, or fame.
Woe is me, Alhama!

"I lost a damsel in that hour,
Of all the land the loveliest flower;
Doubloons a hundred I would pay,
And think her ransom cheap that day."
Woe is me, Alhama!

And as these things the old Moor said,
They sever'd from the trunk his head;
And to the Alhambra's wall with speed
'T was carried, as the King decreed.
Woe is me, Alhama!

And men and infants therein weep
Their loss, so heavy and so deep:
Granada's ladies, all she rears
Within her walls, burst into tears.
Woe is me, Alhama!

And from the windows o'er the walls
The sable web of mourning falls;
The King weeps as a woman o'er
His loss, for it is much and sore.
Woe is me, Alhama!

TRANSLATION FROM VITTORELLI.

ON A NUN.

Sonnet composed in the name of a father, whose daughter had recently died shortly after her marriage; and addressed to the father of her who had lately taken the veil.

Of two fair virgins, modest, though admired,
Heaven made us happy, and now, wretched sires;
Heaven for a nobler doom their worth desires,
And gazing upon either, both required.
Mine, while the torch of Hymen newly fired
Becomes extinguish'd, soon—too soon—expires:
But thine, within the closing grate retired,
Eternal captive, to her God aspires.
But thou at least from out the jealous door,
Which shuts between your never-meeting eyes,
Mayst hear her sweet and pious voice once more:
I to the marble, where my daughter lies.
Rush,—the swollen flood of bitterness I pour,
And knock, and knock, and knock—but none replies.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

BRIGHT be the place of thy soul!
No lovelier spirit than thine
E'er burst from its mortal control,
In the orbs of the blessed to shine.
On earth thou wert all but divine,
As thy soul shall immortally be;
And our sorrow may cease to repine
When we know that thy God is with thee.

Light be the turf of thy tomb!
May its verdure like emeralds be!
There should not be the shadow of gloom,
In aught that reminds us of thee.
Young flowers and an evergreen tree
May spring from the spot of thy rest:
But nor cypress nor yew let us see;
For why should we mourn for the blest?

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

THEY say that Hope is happiness;
But genuine Love must prize the best,
And Memory wakes the thoughts that bless:
They rose the first—they set the last;

And all that Memory loves the most
Was once our only Hope to be,
And all that Hope adored and lost
Hath melted into Memory.

Alas! it is delusion all:
The future cheats us from afar,
Nor can we be what we recall,
Nor dare we think on what we are.

TO THOMAS MOORE.

MY boat is on the shore,
And my bark is on the sea;
But, before I go, Tom Moore,
Here's a double health to thee!

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Here's a sigh to those who love me,
And a smile to those who hate;
And, whatever sky's above me,
Here's a heart for every fate.

Though the ocean roar around me,
Yet it still shall bear me on;
Though a desert should surround me,
It hath springs that may be won.

Were't the last drop in the well,
As I gasp'd upon the brink,
Ere my fainting spirit fell,
'T is to thee that I would drink.

With that water, as this wine,
The libation I would pour
Should be—peace with thine and mine,
And a health to thee, Tom Moore.

[July, 1817.]

ON THE BUST OF HELEN BY CANOVA.*

In this beloved marble view,
Above the works and thoughts of man,
What nature could, but would not do,
And beauty and Canova con!
Beyond imagination's power
Beyond the Bard's defeated art,
With immortality her dower,
Behold the Helen of the heart!

[November, 1818.]

SONG FOR THE LUDDITES.

As the Liberty lads o'er the sea
Bought their freedom, and cheaply, with blood,
So we, boys, we
Will do fighting, or live free.
And down with all kings but King Ludd!

When the web that we weave is complete,
And the shuttle exchanged for the sword,
We will fling the winding sheet
O'er the despot at our feet,
And dye it deep in the gore he has pour'd.

Though black as his heart its hue,
Since his veins are corrupted to mud,
Yet this is the dew
Which the tree shall renew
Of Liberty, planted by Ludd!†

[December, 1818.]

TO THOMAS MOORE.

WHAT are you doing now,
Oh, Thomas Moore?
What are you doing now,
Oh, Thomas Moore?
Sighing or suing now,
Rhyming or wooing now,
Billing or cooing now,
Which, Thomas Moore?

But the Carnival's coming,
Oh, Thomas Moore!

The Carnival's coming,
Oh, Thomas Moore!
Masking and humming,
Flinging and drumming,
Guitarring and strumming,
Oh, Thomas Moore!

SO, WE'LL GO NO MORE A-ROVING.

So, we'll go no more a-roving
So late into the night,
Though the heart be still as loving,
And the moon be still as bright.

For the sword outwears its sheath,
And the soul wears out the breast,
And the heart must pause to breathe,
And love itself have rest.

Though the night was made for lovers,
And the day returns too soon,
Yet we'll go no more a-roving
By the light of the moon.

VERBISULE.

I READ the "Christabel;"

Very well:

I read the "Missionary;"

Pretty—very:

I tried at "Ildericum;"

Ahem!

I read a sheet of "Marg'ret of Anjou;"

Can you?

I turn'd a page of Scott's "Waverley;"

Pooh! pooh!

I look'd at Wordsworth's milk-white Christabel;

Do!

Hillo!

Etc., etc.

[March, 1819.]

TO MR. MURRAY.

To hook the reader, you, John Murray,
Have publish'd "Anjou's Marguerite,"
Which won't be sold off in a hurry
(At least, it has not been as yet);
And then, still further to bewilder me,
Without remorse you set up "Ildericum;"
So mind you don't get into debt,
Because as how, if you should fail,
These books would be but baddish ware.

And mind you do not let escape
These rhymes to Morning Post or Penny,
Which would be very treacherous—very
And get me into such a scrape!
For, firstly, I should have to sail;
All in my little boat, against a Gull,
And, should I chance to stay the Amphibia
wight,
Have next to combat with the franklin knight.

[March 21, 1819.]

* "The Helen of Canova (a bust which is in the house of Madame the Countess d'Arbigny) is," says Lord Byron, "without exception, to my mind, the most perfectly beautiful of human conceptions, and far beyond my ideas of human execution."—Lord Byron to Mr. Murray, November 23, 1818.

† "Are you not near the Luddites? By the Lord! if there's a row, but I'll be among ye! How go on the weavers—the breakers of frames—the Lutherans of politics—the reformers? There's an amiable creature this Christabel! Impromptu. I have written it principally to offend your neighbor—, who is all clergy and legality—milk and cream—milk and water."—Lord Byron to Mr. Murray, November 24, 1818.

‡ The "Missionary" was written by Miss Barrett, "Ildericum" by Mr. Gally Knight; and "Marguerite of Anjou" by Miss Holford.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

EPISTLE FROM MR. MURRAY TO DR. POLIDORI.

DEAR DOCTOR, I have read your play,
Which is a good one in its way.—
Purges the eyes and moves the bowels,
And drenches handkerchiefs like towels
With tears, that, in a flux of grief,
Afford hysterical relief
To shatter'd nerves and quicken'd pulses,
Which your catastrophe convulses.

I like your moral and machinery;
Your plot, too, has such scope for scenery;
Your dialogue is apt and smart;
The play's concoction full of art;
Your hero raves, your heroine cries,
All stab, and every body dies.
In short, your tragedy would be
The very thing to hear and see:
And for a piece of publication,
If I decline on this occasion,
It is not that I am not sensible
To merits in themselves ostensible,
But—and I grieve to speak it—plays
Are drugs—mere drugs, sir—now-a-days.
I had a heavy loss by "Manuel,"—
Too lucky if it prove not annual,—
And Sotheby, with his "Orestes," (Which, by the by, the author's best is),
Has lain so very long on hand,
That I despair of all demand.
I've advertised, but see my books,
Or only watch my shopman's looks;—
Still Ivan, Ina, and such lumber,
My back-shop glut, my shelves encumber.

There's Byron too, who once did better,
Has sent me, folded in a letter,
A sort of—it's no more a drama
Than Darnley, Ivan, or Kebab;
So alter'd since last year his pen is,
I think he's lost his wits at Venice.
In short, sir, what with one and t'other,
I dare not venture on another.
I write in haste; excuse each blunder;
The coaches through the street so thunder!
My room's so full—we've Gifford here
Reading MS. with Hookham Frere,
Pronouncing on the nouns and particles
Of some of our forthcoming Articles.

The Quarterly—Ah, sir, if you
Had but the genius to review!
A smart critique upon St. Helena,
Or if you only would but tell in a
Short compass what—but, to resume:
As I was saying, sir, the room—
The room's so full of wits and bards,
Crabbes, Campbells, Crockers, Freres, and Wards,
And others, neither bards nor wits:—
My humble tenement admits
All persons in the dress of gent.,
From Mr. Hammond to Dog Dent.

A party dines with me to-day,
All clever men, who make their way:
Crabbe, Malcolm, Hamilton, and Chantrey,
Are all partakers of my pantry.
They're at this moment in discussion
On poor De Stadi's late dissolution.
Her book, they say, was in advance—
Pray Heaven, she tell the truth of France!
Thus run our time and tongues away;—
But, to return, sir, to your play:

Sorry, sir, but I cannot deal,
Unless 't were acted by O'Neill.
My hands so full, my head so busy,
I'm almost dead, and always dizzy;
And so, with endless truth and hurry,
Dear Doctor, I am yours,

JOHN MURRAY.
[August, 1827.]

EPISTLE TO MR. MURRAY.

MY dear Mr. Murray,
You're in a damn'd hurry
To set up this ultimate Canto;^a
But (if they don't rob us)
You'll see Mr. Hobhouse
Will bring it safe in his portmanteau.

For the Journal you hint of,
As ready to print off,
No doubt you do right to commend it;
But as yet I have writ off
The devil a bit of
Our "Beppo":—when copied, I'll send it.

Then you've * * * o's Tour,—
No great things, to be sure,—
You could hardly begin with a less work;
For the pompous recollection,
Who don't speak Italian
Nor French, must have scribbled by guesswork.

You can make any loss up
With "Spence" and his gossip,
A work which must surely succeed;
Then Queen Mary's Epistle-craft,
With the new "Fytie" of "Whistlecraft,"
Must make people purchase and read.

Then you've General Gordon,
Who girded his sword on,
To serve with a Muscovite master,
And help him to polish
A nation so owlish,
They thought shaving their beards a disaster.

For the man, "poor and shrewd,"†
With whom you'd conclude
A compact without more delay,
Perhaps some such pen is Still extant in Venice;

But please, sir, to mention your pay.
[Venice, January 2, 1828.]

TO MR. MURRAY.

STRAHAN, TONSON, Lintot of the times,
Patron and publisher of rhymes,
For thee the bard up Pindus climbs,
My Murray.

To thee, with hope and terror dumb,
The undedged MS. authors come;
Thou printest all—and seldest some—
My Murray.

Upon thy table's baize so green
The last new Quarterly is seen,—
But where is thy new Magazine,
My Murray?

Along thy sprucest bookshelves shine
The works thou deemest most divine—
The "Art of Cookery," and mine,
My Murray.

^a The fourth canto of "Childe Harold."

† Vide your letter.

OCCASIONAL PIECES

Tours, Travels, Essays too, I wist,
And Sermons, to thy mill bring grist;
And then thou hast the "Navy List,"
My Murray.

And Heaven forbid I should conclude
Without "the Board of Longitude," Although this narrow paper would,
My Murray.

[Pindar, Antich 66, 222.]

ON THE BIRTH OF JOHN WILLIAM RIZZO HOPFNER.

His father's sense, his mother's grace,
In him, I hope, will always sit so;
With—still to keep him in good case—
The health and appetite of Rizzo.*

[February, 1812.]

STANZAS TO THE PO.

River, that rollest by the ancient walls,
Where dwells the lady of my love, when she Walks by thy brink, and there perchance recalls
A faint and fleeting memory of me;

What if thy deep and ample stream should be
A mirror of my heart, where she may read
The thousand thoughts I now betray to thee,
Wild as thy wave, and headlong as thy speed!

What do I say—a mirror of my heart?
Are not thy waters sweeping, dark, and strong?
Such as my feelings were and are, thou art;
And such as thou art were my passions long.

Time may have somewhat tamed them,—not for ever;

Thou overflow'st thy banks, and not for aye
Thy bosom overboils, congenial river!
Thy floods subside, and mine have sunk away,

But left long wrecks behind, and now again,
Borne in our old unchanged career, we move;
Thou tendest wildly onwards to the main,
And I—to loving one I should not love.

The current I behold will sweep beneath
Her native walls, and murmur at her feet;
Her eyes will look on thee, when she shall breathe
The twilight air, unharm'd by summer's heat.

She will look on thee.—I have look'd on thee,
Full of that thought; and, from that moment,
ne'er

Thy waters could I dream of, name, or see,
Without the inseparable sigh for her!

Her bright eyes will be imaged in thy stream,—
Yes! they will meet the wave I gaze on now:
Mine cannot witness, even in a dream,
That happy wave repass me in its flow!

* On the birth of this child, the son of the British vice-consul at Venice, Lord Byron wrote these lines. They are in no other respect remarkable, than that they were thought worthy of being metrically translated into no less than ten different languages; namely, Greek, Latin, Italian (also in the Venetian dialect), German, French, Spanish, Illyrian, Hebrew, Armenian, and Samaritan.

* About the middle of April, 1810, Lord Byron travelled from Venice to Ravenna, at which last city he expected to find the Countess Guiccioli. The above stanzas, which have been as much admired as any thing of the kind he ever wrote, were composed, according to Madame Guiccioli, during this journey, and while Lord Byron was actually sail-

The wave that bears my tears returns no more:
Will she return by whom that wave shall sweep—
Both tread thy banks, both wander on thy shore,
I by thy source, she by the dark-blue deep.

But that which keepeth us apart is not
Distance, nor depth of wave, nor space of earth,
But the distraction of a various lot,
As various as the climates of our birth.

A stranger loves the lady of the land,
Born far beyond the mountains, but his blood
Is all meridian, as if never ta'en'd
By the black wind that chills the polar pool.

My blood is all meridian; were it not,
I had not left my clime, nor should I be,
In spite of torture, ne'er to be forgot,
A slave again of love,—at least of thee.

'Tis vain to struggle—let me perish young—
Live as I lived, and love as I have loved;
To dust if I return, from dust I sprung,
And then, at least, my heart can never be moved.

[April, 1812.]

SONNET TO GEORGE THE FOURTH.

ON THE REPRAL OF LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD'S FORFEITURE.

To be the father of the fatherless,
To stretch the hand from the throne's height, and raise

His offspring, who expired in other days
To make thy sire's sway by a kingdom less,—
This is to be a monarch, and repress
Envy into unutterable praise.

Dismiss thy guard, and trust thee to such truth,
For who would lift a hand, except to blame?
Were it not easy, sir, and is't not sweet
To make thyself beloved? and to be

Omnipotent by mercy's means? for thee
Thy sovereignty would grow but more complete;
A despot thou, and yet thy people free,
And by the heart, not hand, enslaving us.

[Belgium, August 21, 1812.]

EPIGRAM.

FROM THE FRENCH OF BULFONTE.

Is, for silver or for gold,
You could melt ten thousand pangs
Into half a dozen smiles,
Then your face we might behold,
Looking, doubtless, much more sunny;
Yet even then 't would be d—

[August 21, 1812.]

ing on the Po. In transmitting them to England in 1810, he says,—"They must not be published; they would do this, as they are more verses of society, and written upon private feelings and passions." They were first published in 1824.

* Ravenna—a city to which Lord Byron afterwards declared himself more attached than to any other place in Greece. He resided in it rather more than two years, and quitted it," says Madame Guiccioli, "with the deepest and with a presentiment that his departure would be the forerunner of a thousand evils. In the short course of his life, Lord Byron has pictured the tragedy of his own time, he was leading.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

STANZAS.*

COULD Love forever
Run like a river,
And Time's endeavor
Be tried in vain—
No other pleasure
With this could measure;
And like a treasure
We'd hug the chain.
But since our sighing
Ends not in dying,
And, form'd for lying,
Love plumes his wing;
Then for this reason
Let's love a season;
But let that season be only Spring.

When lovers parted
Feel broken-hearted,
And, all hopes thwarted,
Expect to die;
A few years older,
Ah! how much colder
They might behold her
For whom they sigh!
When link'd together,
In every weather,
They pluck Love's feather
From out his wing—
He'll stay forever,
But sadly shiver
Without his plumage, when past the Spring.

Like Chiefs of Faction,
His life is action—
A formal paction
That curbs his reign,
Obscures his glory,
Despot no more, be
Such territory
Quits with disdain.
Still, still advancing,
With banners glancing,
His power enhancing,
He must move on—
Repose but cloy's him,
Retreat destroys him,
Love brooks not a degraded throne.

Wait not, fond lover!
Till years are over,
And then recover,
As from a dream.
While each bewailing
The other's failing,
With wrath and railing,
All hideous seem—
While first decreasing,
Yet not quite ceasing,
Wait not till teasing
All passion blight:
If once diminish'd
Love's reign is finish'd—
Then part in friendship—and bid good-night.

So shall Affection
To recollection
The dear connection
Bring back with joy:
You had not waited
Till, tired or hated,
Your passions sated
Began to cloy.

Your last embraces
Leave no cold traces—
The same fond faces
As through the past:
And eyes, the mirrors
Of your sweet errors,
Reflect but rapture—not least though last.

True, separations
Ask more than patience;
What desperations
From such have risen!
But yet remaining,
What is't but chaining
Hearts which, once waning,
Beat 'gainst their prison?
Time can but cloy love,
And use destroy love:
The winged boy, Love,
Is but for boys—
You'll find it torture
Though sharper, shorter,
To wean, and not wear out your joys. (1829.)

ON MY WEDDING-DAY.

Here's a happy new year! but with reason
I beg you'll permit me to say—
Wish me many returns of the season,
But as few as you please of the day. (January 2, 1829.)

EPITAPH FOR WILLIAM PITT.

With death doom'd to grapple,
Beneath this cold slab, he
Who lied in the Chapel
Now lies in the Abbey. (January, 1829.)

EPIGRAM

In digging up your bones, Tom Paine,
Will Cobbett has done well:
You visit him on earth again,
He'll visit you in hell. (January, 1821.)

STANZAS.

When a man hath no freedom to fight for at home,
Let him combat for that of his neighbors;
Let him think of the glories of Greece and of Rome,
And get knock'd on the head for his labors.

To do good to mankind is the chivalrous plan,
And is always as nobly requited;
Then battle for freedom wherever you can,
And, if not shot or hang'd, you'll get knighted. (November, 1829.)

EPIGRAM.

The world is a bundle of hay,
Mankind are the asses who pull;
Each tugs it a different way,
And the greatest of all is John Bull.

* * Byron had been painfully excited by some circumstances which appeared to make it necessary that he should immediately quit Italy; and in the day and the hour that he wrote the song was laboring under an access of fever."

OCCASIONAL PIECES

THE CHARITY BALL.

WHAT matter the pangs of a husband and father,
If his sorrows in exile be great or be small,
So the Pharisee's glories around her she gather,
And the saint patronises her "charity ball!"

What matter—a heart which, though faulty, was feeling,

Be driven to excesses which once could appal—
That the sinner should suffer is only fair dealing,
As the saint keeps her charity back for "the ball!"

EPIGRAM ON MY WEDDING-DAY.

TO FREDERICK.

THIS day, of all our days, has done
The worst for me and you:—
'T is just six years since we were one,
And five since we were two.

[January 4, 1821.]

ON MY THIRTY-THIRD BIRTHDAY.

JANUARY 22, 1821.

THROUGH life's dull road, so dim and dirty,
I have dragg'd to three and thirty.
What have these years left to me?
Nothing—except thirty-three.

EPIGRAM,

ON THE BRADERS' COMPANY HAVING RESOLVED
TO PRESENT AN ADDRESS TO QUEEN CAROLINE.

THE Braders, it seems, are preparing to pass
An address, and present it themselves all in brass;—
A superfluous pageant—for, by the Lord Harry!
They'll find where they're going much more than they carry.

MARTIAL, Lib. I. Epig. 1.

"Elo est, quem legis, ille, quam requiris,
Tota notus in orbe Martialis," etc.

HE unto whom thou art so partial,
Oh, reader! is the well-known Martial,
The Epigrammatist: while living,
Give him the fame thou wouldst be giving;
So shall he hear, and feel, and know it—
Post-orbits rarely reach a poet.

BOWLES AND CAMPBELL.

To the tune of "Why, how now, saucy jade?"

WHY, how now, saucy Tom?
If you thus must ramble,
I will publish some Remarks on Mister Campbell.

* These lines were written on reading in the newspapers that Lady Byron had been patroness of a ball in aid of some charity at Hinkley.

A 2

ANSWER.

Why, how now, Billy Bowles?
Here the priest is married!
(To the public) How can you, &c. in your mind!
Listen to his twaddling?

[January 22, 1821.]

EPIGRAM.

Oh, Castlereagh! thou art a patriot now,
Cato died for his country, so didst thou:
He perish'd rather than see Rome enslaved,
Thou cut'st thy throat that Britain may be saved!

So Castlereagh has cut his throat!—The wound
Of this is,—that his own was not the first.

So He has cut his throat at last!—He! Who?
The man who cut his country's long ago.

EPITAPH.

POSTERITY will ne'er survey
A nobler grave than this!
Here lie the bones of Castlereagh:
Stop, traveller,

JOHN KEATS.

Who kill'd John Keats?
"I," says the Quarterly,
So savage and Tartar!
"T was one of my boys."

Who shot the arrow?
"The post-prize Killdeer,
(So ready to kill men),
Or Southey, or Barry."

[Jan. 22, 1821.]

THE CONQUEST.

This fragment was found amongst Lord Grey's papers after his departure from Genoa for Geneva.

[March 22, 1821.]

THE Son of Love and Lord of War I sing;
Him who made England bow to Normandy,
And left the name of conqueror more than king
To his unconquerable dynasty.
Not fann'd alone by Victory's beating wings,
He rear'd his bold and brilliant throne on high;
The Bastard kept, like Rome, his prey fast,
And Britain's bravest victor was the hind.

TO MR. MURRAY.

FOR Orford† and for Waldegrave‡
You gave much more than me you gave;
Which is not fairly to behave.
My Murray.

† Horace Walpole's Memoirs of the last years of the reign of George III.

‡ Memoirs by James Earl Waldegrave, published in 1781, when Prince of Wales.

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

Because if a live dog, 't is said,
Be worth a lion fairly sped,
A live lord must be worth two dead,
My Murray.

And if, as the opinion goes,
Verse hath a better sale than prose,—
Certain, I should have more than those,
My Murray.

But now this sheet is nearly cramm'd,
So, if you will, I sha'n't be sham'm'd,
And if you won't, you may be dam'n'd,
My Murray.*

THE IRISH AVATAR.†

"And Ireland, like a basteded elephant, kneeling to receive the paltry rider."—OSWALD.

Now the daughter of Brunswick is cold in her grave,
And her ashes still float to their home o'er the tide,

Lo! George the triumphant speeds over the wave,
To the long-cherish'd isle which he loved like his—bride!

True, the great of her bright and brief era are gone,
The rainbow-like epoch where Freedom could

Pause
For the few little years, out of centuries won,
Which betray'd not, or crush'd not, or wept not her name.

True, the chains of the Catholic clank o'er his rage,
The castle still stands, and the senate's no more,
And the famine which dwelt on her freedomless crags
Is extending its steps to her desolate shore.

To her desolate shore—where the emigrant stands
For a moment to gaze ere he flies from his hearth;
Tears fall on his chain, though it drops from his hands,
For the dungeon he quits is the place of his birth.

But he comes! the Messiah of royalty comes!
Like a goodly Leviathan roll'd from the waves;
Then receive him as best such an advent becomes,
With a legion of cooks, and an army of slaves!

He comes in the promise and bloom of threescore,
To perform in the pageant the sovereign's part—
But long live the shamrock which shadows him o'er!
Could the green in his hat be transferr'd to his heart!

Could that long-wither'd spot but be verdant again,
And a new spring of noble affections arise—
Then might Freedom forgive thee this dance in thy chain,
And this about of thy slavery which saddens the skies.

Is it madness or meanness which clings to thee now?
Were he God—as he is but the homeliest clay,
With scarce fewer wrinkles than sins on his brow—
Such servile devotion might shame him away.

Ay, roar in his train! let thine orators lash
Their fanciful spirits to pauper his pride—
Not thus did thy Grattan indignantly flash
His soul o'er the freedom implored and denied.

Ever-glorious Grattan! the best of the good!
So simple in heart, so sublime in the rest!
With all which Demosthenes wanted endued,
And his rival or victor in all he possess'd.

Ere Tully arose in the zenith of Rome,
Though unequal'd, preceded, the task was begun—
But Grattan sprung up like a god from the tomb
Of ages, the first, last, the saviour, the one!

With the skill of an Orpheus to soften the brute;
With the fire of Prometheus to kindle mankind;
Even Tyranny listening mute melted or mute,
And corruption shrunk scorch'd from the glance of his mind.

But back to our theme! Back to despots and slaves!
Feasts furnish'd by Famine! rejoicings by Pain!
True freedom but welcomes, while slavery still raves,
When a week's miseries hath loosen'd her chain.

Let the poor squalid splendor thy wreck can afford
(As the bankrupt's profusion his ruin would hide)
Gild over the palace, Lo! Erin, thy lord!
Kiss his foot with thy blessing, his blessings denied!

Or if freedom past hope be extorted at last,
If the idol of brass find his feet are of clay,
Must what terror or policy wring forth be class'd
With what monarchs ne'er give, but as wolves yield their prey?

Each brute hath its nature; a king's is to reign,—
To reign! in that word see, ye ages, compris'd
The cause of the curses all annals contain,
From Cæsar the dreaded to George the despis'd!

Wear, Fingal, thy trapping! O'Connell, proclaim
His accomplishments! His!!! and thy country convince Half an age's contempt was an error of fame,
And that "Hal is the rascaldest, sweetest, young prince!"

Will thy yard of blue ribbon, poor Fingal, recall
The fetters from millions of Catholic limbs?
Or, has it not bound thee the fastest of all
The slaves, who now hail their betrayer with hymns?

Ay! "Build him a dwelling!" let each give his mite!
Till, like Babel, the new royal dome hath arisen!
Let thy beggars and helots their pittance unite—
And a palace bestow for a poor-house and prison!

Spread—spread, for Vitellius, the royal repeat,
Till the gluttonous despot be stuff'd to the gorge!
And the roar of his drunkards proclaim him at last
The Fourth of the fools and oppressors call'd "George!"

Let the tables be loaded with feasts till they groan!
Till they groan like thy people, through ages of woe!

* "Can't accept your courteous offer. These matters must be arranged with Mr. Douglas Kinnaird. He is my trustee, and a man of honor. To him you can state all your mercantile reasons, which you might not like to state to me personally, such as 'heavy season'—'flat public'—'don't go off'—'Jordahl writes too much'—'won't take advice'—'declining popularity'—'deduction for the trade'—'make very little'—'generally loss by him'—'pirated edition'—'foreign edition'—"

—'severe criticisms,' etc., with other hints and howls for an oration, which I leave Douglas, who is an orator, to answer."
—Lord Byron to Mr. Murray, August 23, 1811.

† "The enclosed lines, as you will directly perceive, are written by the Rev. W. L. B—. Of course it is for him to deny them if they are not."—Lord Byron to Mr. Moore, September 17, 1811.

OCCASIONAL PIECES

Let the wine flow around the old Bardounal's throne,
Like their blood which has flow'd, and which yet has to flow.

But let not his name be thine idol alone—
On his right hand behold a Sejanus appears!
Thine own Castlereagh! let him still be thine own!
A wretch never named but with curses and jeers!

Till now, when the tale which should blush for his
birth,
Deep, deep as the gore which he shed on her soil,
Seems proud of the reptile which crawl'd from her
earth,
And for murder repays him with shouts and a smile.

Without one single ray of her genius, without
The fancy, the manhood, the fire of her race—
The miscreant who well might plunge Erin in doubt
If she ever gave birth to a being so base.

If she did—let her long-boasted proverb be hush'd,
Which proclaims that from Erin no reptile can spring—

See the cold-blooded serpent, with venom full flush'd,
Still warning its folds in the breast of a king!

Shout, drink, feast, and fatter! Oh, Erin! how low
Wert thou sunk by misfortune and tyranny, till
Thy welcome of tyrants hath plunged thee below
The depth of thy deep in a deeper gulf still.

My voice, though but humble, was raised for thy right,

My vote, as a freeman's, still voted thee free.
This hand, though but feeble, would arm in thy fight,
And this heart, though outworn, had a throb still for thee!

Yes, I loved thee and thine, though thou art not my land,

I have known noble hearts and great souls in thy sons,
And I wept with the world, o'er the patriot band
Who are gone, but I weep them no longer as once.

For happy are they now reposing afar,—
Thy Grattan, thy Curran, thy Sheridan, all
Who, for years, were the chiefs in the eloquent war,
And redeem'd, if they have not retarded, thy fall.

Yes, happy are they in their cold English graves!
Their shades cannot start to thy shouts of to-day—
Nor the steps of enslavers and chain-kissing slaves
Be stamp'd in the turf o'er their fetterless clay.

Till now I had envied thy sons and their shore,
Though their virtues were hunted, their liberties
sed;

There was something so warm and sublime in the core

Of an Irishman's heart, that I envy—thy dead.

Or, if aught in my bosom can quench for an hour

My contempt for a nation so servile, though sore,
Which though trod like the worm will not turn upon power,

'Tis the glory of Grattan, and genius of Moore!

(September, 1881.)

STANZAS

WRITTEN ON THE ROAD BETWEEN BLESSINGTON AND FINEA.*

Oh, talk not to me of a name great in story;
The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
Are worth all your laurels, though ever so glossy.

What are garlands and crowns to the brow that is wrinkled?

'Tis but as a dead flower with May-day beauties,
Then away with all such from the head that is hoary!

What care I for the wreaths that can only give glory?

Oh, FINEA!—if I e'er took delight in thy praise,
'T was less for the sake of thy high-sounding name,
Than to see the bright eyes of the dear one discover
She thought that I was not unworthy to love her.

There chiefly I sought thee, there only I found thee
Her glance was the best of the rays that surround
thee;

When it sparkled o'er aught that was bright in my story,
I knew it was love, and I feel it was glory.

(November, 1881.)

STANZAS

TO A HINDOO AIR.

Oh!—my lonely—lonely—lonely—Pillow!
Where is my lover? where is my lover?
Is it his bark which my dreary dreams discover?
Far—far away! and alone along the billow!

Oh! my lonely—lonely—lonely—Pillow!
Why must my head ache where his gentle bowing?
How the long night flags lovelessly and slowly,
And my head droops over thee like the willow!

Oh! thou, my sad and solitary Pillow!
Send me kind dreams to keep my heart from breaking,
In return for the tears I shed upon thee waking;
Let me not die till he comes back o'er the billow.

Then if thou wilt—no more my lonely Pillow!
In one embrace let these arms again enfold him,
And then expire of the joy—but to behold him!
Oh! my lone bosom!—oh! my lonely Pillow!

IMPROMPTU.†

BENEATH Blessington's eyes
The reclaim'd Paradise
Should be free as the fanner from evil;
But, if the new Eve
For an Apple should grieve,
What mortal would not play the devil?‡

[1881.]

* "I composed these stanzas (except the fourth, added now) a few days ago, on the road from Florence to Fies."—Byron Diary, Pisa, 8th November, 1881.

† "With a view of inducing Lord and Lady Blessington to prolong their stay at Genoa, Lord Byron suggested their taking a pretty villa called 'Il Paradiso,' in the neighborhood of his own, and accompanied them to look at it. Upon that occasion it was that, on the lady expressing some intentions of residing there, he produced this impromptu." A portrait of Lady Blessington will be seen under, "Life of Byron."

‡ "The Genoese with had already applied this character just to himself. Taking it into their heads that this wife (which was also, I believe, a Casa Salazar) had been fixed on for his own residence, they said, 'Il Paradiso è ancora estratto in Paradiso.'"—Mozzoni

OCCASIONAL PIECES.

TO THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON.

You have ask'd for a verse:—the request
In a rhymèr 't were strange to deny;
But my Hippocrene was but my breast,
And my feelings (its fountain) are dry.

Were I now as I was, I had sung
What Lawrence has painted so well;
But the strain would expire on my tongue,
And the theme is too soft for my shell.

I am ashes where once I was fire,
And the bard in my bosom is dead:
What I loved I now merely admire,
And my heart is as gray as my head.

My life is not dated by years—
There are moments which act as a plough;
And there is not a furrow appears
But is deep in my soul as my brow.

Let the young and the brilliant aspire
To sing what I gaze on in vain;
For sorrow has torn from my lyre
The string which was worthy the strain.

ON THIS DAY I COMPLETE MY THIRTY-SIXTH YEAR.

MISSOLONGHI, January 22, 1824.*

'T is time this heart should be unmoved,
Since others it hath ceased to move:
Yet, though I cannot be beloved,
Still let me love!

My days are in the yellow leaf;
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone!

* "This morning Lord Byron came from his bedroom into the apartment where Colonel Stanhope and some friends were assembled, and said with a smile—"You were complaining, the other day, that I never write any poetry now. This

The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone as some volcanic tale;
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile.

The hope, the fear, the jealous care,
The exalted portion of the pain
And power of love, I cannot share,
But wear the chain.

But 't is not thus—and 't is not here—
Such thoughts should shake my soul, nor now,
Where glory decks the hero's bier,
Or binds his brow.

The sword, the banner, and the field,
Glory and Greece, around me see!
The Spartan, borne upon his shield,
Was not more free.

Awake! (not Greece—she is awake!)
Awake, my spirit! Think through whom
Thy life-blood tracks its parent lake,
And then strike home!

Tread those reviving passions down,
Unworthy manhood!—unto thee
Indifferent should the smile or frown
Of beauty be.

If thou regrettest thy youth, why live?
The land of honorable death
Is here:—up to the field, and give Away thy breath!

Seek out—less often sought than found—
A soldier's grave, for thee the best;
Then look around, and choose thy ground,
And take thy rest.

is my birthday, and I have just finished something, which, I think, is better than what I usually write." He then produced these noble and affecting verses.—COUNT GAMBA.

ANCIENT GREEK COIN OF STRATON.

The charioteer on the obverse of the coin is supposed to symbolize his victories in the famous Olympic games. The hand is that of Cybele or Proserpine.

DON JUAN.

"Difficile est propriè communia dicere"—HORACE.

"Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?"—Yea, by Saint Anna, and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth, too!"—SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, or What You Will.

DEDICATION.*

I.

BON SOUTHERN! You're a poet—Poet-laureate,
And representative of all the race,
Although 't is true that you turn'd out a Tory at Last,—yours has lately been a common case;
And now, my Epic Renegade! what are ye at?
With all the Lakers, in and out of place?
A nest of tuneful persons, to my eye
Like "four and twenty Blackbirds in a pye";

II.

"Which pye being open'd they began to sing"
(This old song and new simile holds good),
"A dainty dish to set before the King,"
Or Regent, who admires such kind of food;—
And Coleridge, too, has lately taken wing,
But like a hawk encumber'd with his hood,—
Explaining metaphysics to the nation—
I wish he would explain his "Explanation."†

III.

You, Bob! are rather insolent, you know,
At being disappointed in your wish
To supersede all warblers here below,
And be the only Blackbird in the dish;
And then you overstrain yourself, or so,
And tumble downward like the flying fish
Gasping on deck, because you soar too high, Bob,
And fall, for lack of moisture quite a-dry, Bob!

IV.

And Wordsworth, in a rather long "Excursion"
(I think the quarto holds five hundred pages),
Has given a sample from the vasty version
Of his new system to perplex the senses;
'T is poetry—at least by his assertion,
And may appear so when the dog-star rages—
And he who understands it would be able
To add a story to the Tower of Babel.

V.

You—Gentlemen! by dint of long seclusion
From better company, have kept your own
At Keswick, and, through still continued fusion
Of one another's minds, at last have grown
To deem as a most logical conclusion,
That Poetry has wreaths for you alone:
There is a narrowness in such a notion,
Which makes me wish you'd change your lakes for ocean.

VI.

I would not imitate the petty thought,
Nor coin my self-love to so base a vice,
For all the glory your conversion brought,
Since gold alone should not have been its price.
You have your salary; was't for that you wrought?
And Wordsworth has his place in the Kerfane;
You're shabby fellows—true—but poets still,
And duly seated on the immortal hill.

VII.

Your bays may hide the baldness of your brows—
Perhaps some virtuous blushes;—let them go—
To you I envy neither fruit nor boughs—
And for the fame you would engross below,
The field is universal, and allows
Scope to all such as feel the inherent glow:
Scott, Rogers, Campbell, Moore, and Crabbe, will try
'Gainst you the question with posterity.

VIII.

For me, who, wandering with pedestrian Moses,
Content not with you on the winged steed,
I wish your fate may yield ye, when she chooses,
The fame you envy, and the skill you need;
And recollect a poet nothing looses
In giving to his brethren their full meed
Of merit, and complaint of present days
Is not the certain path to future praise.

* This "Dedication" was suppressed, in 1819, with Lord Byron's reluctant consent; but, shortly after his death, its existence became notorious, in consequence of an article in the Westminster Review, generally ascribed to Sir John Lubbock.

† Coleridge's "Biographia Literaria" appeared in 1817.

‡ Wordsworth's place may be in the Customs—it is, I think, in that or the Kerfane—besides another at Lord Lonsdale's table, where this poetical charlatan and political parasite won up the crumbs with a hardened avarice; the converted Jacobin having long subsided into the clownish sycophant of the worst prejudices of the aristocracy.

DON JUAN.

IX.

He that reserves his laurels for posterity
 (Who does not often claim the bright reversion)
 Has generally no great crop to spare it, he Being only injured by his own assertion;
 And although here and there some glorious rarity
 Arise like Titan from the sea's immersion,
 The major part of such appellants go
 To—God knows where—for no one else can know.

X.

If, fallen in evil days on evil tongues,
 Milton appeal'd to the Avenger, Time,
 If Time, the Avenger, execrates his wrongs,
 And makes the word "Miltonic" mean "sublime,"
 He deign'd not to belie his soul in songs,
 Nor turn his very talent to a crime;
 He did not lose the Sire to land the Son,
 But closed the tyrant-hater he begun.

XI.

Think'st thou, could he—the blind Old Man—arise
 Like Sammel from the grave, to freeze once more
 The blood of monarchs with his prophecies,
 Or be alive again—again all hear
 With time and trials, and those helpless eyes,
 And heartless daughters—worn—and pale—and poor;
 Would he adore a sultan? he obey
 The intellectual cunuch Castlereagh?

XII.

Cold-blooded, smooth-faced, placid miscreant!
 Dabbling its sleek young hands in Erin's gore,
 And thus for wider carnage taught to pant,
 Transferr'd to gorge upon a sister shore,
 The vulgar tool that Tyranny could want,
 With just enough of talent, and no more,
 To lengthen fetters by another fir'd,
 And offer poison long already mix'd.

XIII.

As orator of such set trash of phrase,
 Ineffably—legitimately vile,
 That even its grossest flatterers dare not praise,
 Nor see—all nations—condescend to smile,—

Nor even a sprightly blunder's spark can bias
 From that Exion grindstone's ceaseless toll,
 That turns and turns to give the world a notion
 Of endless torments and perpetual motion.

XIV.

A bungler even in its disgusting trade,
 And botching, patching, leaving still behind
 Something of which its masters are afraid,
 States to be curb'd, and thoughts to be confined,
 Conspiracy or Congress to be made—
 Cobbling at manacles for all mankind—
 A tinkering slave-maker, who mends old chains,
 With God and man's abhorrence for its gain.

XV.

If we may judge of matter by the mind,
 Emaculated to the marrow R
 Hath but two objects, how to serve, and bind,
 Deeming the chain it wears even men may fit,
 Entropius of its many masters,†—hild
 To worth as freedom, wisdom as to wit,
 Fearless—because no feeling dwells in ice,
 Its very courage stagnates to a vice.

XVI.

Where shall I turn me not to view its bonds,
 For I will never feed them;—Italy!
 Thy late reviving Roman soul desponds
 Beneath the lie this State—thing breathed o'er thee—
 Thy clanking chain, and Erin's yet green wounds,
 Have voices—tongues to wry aloud for me.
 Europe has slaves—allies—kings—armies still,
 And Southey lives to sing them very ill.

XVII.

Meantime—Sir Laureate—I proceed to dedicate,
 In honest simple verse, this song to you.
 And, if in flattering strains I do not predicate,
 'T is that I still retain my "buff and blue;"
 My politics as yet are all to educate:
 Apostasy's so fashionable, too,
 To keep one creed's a task grown quite herculean;
 Is it not so, my Tory, ultra-Julian?‡

VENICE, September 14, 1838.

* "Pale, but not cadaverous;"—Milton's two elder daughters are said to have robbed him of his books, besides cheating and plaguing him in the economy of his house, &c., &c. His feelings on such an outrage, both as a parent and a scholar, must have been singularly painful. Hayley forcibly as well as aptly compares him to Lear. See part third.

Life of Milton, by W. Hayley (or Hailey, as spelt in the edition before me).

† For the character of Entropius, the cunuch and minister at the court of Arcadius, see Gibbon.

‡ I allude not to my friend Landor's hero, the traitor Count Julian, but to Gibbon's hero, vulgarly yclept "The Apostate."

Don Juan.¹

CANTO THE FIRST.

I.

I WANT a hero: an uncommon want,
When every year and month sends forth a new
one,
Till, after cloying the gazettes with cant,
The age discovers he is not the true one;
Of such as these I should not care to vaunt,
I'll therefore take our ancient friend Don Juan—
We all have seen him, in the pantomime,
Sent to the devil somewhat ere his time.

¹ Begun at Venice, September 6; finished November 1, 1818.

² Admiral Vernon, who served with considerable distinction in the navy, particularly in the capture of Porto Bello, died in 1777.

³ Second son of George II., distinguished himself at the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy, and still more so at that of Culloden, where he defeated the Chevalier, in 1746. The duke, however, obscured his fame by the cruel abuse which he made, or suffered his soldiers to make, of the victory. He died in 1766.

⁴ General Wolfe, the brave commander of the expedition against Quebec, terminated his career in the moment of victory, whilst fighting against the French in 1759.

⁵ In 1759, Admiral Lord Hawke totally defeated the French fleet equipped at Brest for the invasion of England. In 1766 he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty; and died, full of honors, in 1781.

⁶ Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick, who gained the victory of Minden. In 1793, he drove the French out of Hesse. He died in 1796.

⁷ Son of the third duke of Rutland—signalled himself in 1746, on the invasion by Prince Charles; and was constituted, in 1763, commander of the British forces in Germany. He died in 1770.

⁸ An English general officer and dramatist, who distinguished himself in the defence of Portugal, in 1763, against the Spaniards, and also in America by the capture of Ticonderoga; but was at last obliged to surrender, with his army, to General Gates. Died in 1788.

⁹ Second son of the Earl of Albemarle. Placed at the head of the Channel fleet, he partially engaged, in 1778, the French fleet off Ushant, which contrived to escape; he was, in consequence, tried by a court-martial, and honorably acquitted. He died in 1798.

¹⁰ Lord Howe distinguished himself on many occasions during the American war. On the breaking out of the French war, he took the command of the English fleet, and, bringing the enemy to an action on the 1st of June, 1794, obtained a splendid victory. He died in 1798.

¹¹ Barnave, one of the most active promoters of the French revolution, was in 1791 appointed president of the Constituent Assembly. On the flight of the royal family, he was sent to conduct them to Paris. He was guillotined, November, 1793.

¹² Brissot de Warville, at the age of twenty, published several tracts, for one of which he was, in 1784, thrown into the Bastille. He was one of the principal instigators of the revolt of the Champ de Mars, in July, 1793. He was led to the guillotine, October, 1793.

¹³ Condorcet was, in 1792, appointed president of the Legislative Assembly. Having, in 1793, attacked the new Constitution, he was denounced. Being thrown into prison, he was on the following morning found dead, apparently from poison. His works are collected in twenty-one volumes.

II.

Vernon,² the butcher Cumberland,³ Wolfe,⁴
Hawke,⁵
Prince Ferdinand,⁶ Granby,⁷ Burgoyne,⁸ Keppel,⁹
Howe,¹⁰
Evil and good, have had their tithe of talk,
And fill'd their sign-posts then, like Welkley
HOW:
Each in their turn like Banquo's monarchs stalk,
Followers of fame, "nine farrow" of that
HOW:
France, too, had Buonaparté and Dumourier
Recorded in the Monitor and Courier.

III.

Barnave,¹¹ Brissot,¹² Condorcet,¹³ Mirabeau,¹⁴
Petion,¹⁵ Clootz,¹⁶ Danton,¹⁷ Marat,¹⁸ La Fayette,¹⁹
Were French, and famous people, as we know;
And there were others, scarce forgotten yet,
Joubert,²⁰ Hoche,²¹ Marcass,²² Lannes,²³ Desaix,²⁴
Mareau,²⁵
With many of the military set,
Exceedingly remarkable at times,
But not at all adapted to my rhymes.

¹⁴ Mirabeau, so well known as one of the chief promoters of, and actors in, the French revolution, died in 1791.

¹⁵ Petion, mayor of Paris in 1791, took an active part in the imprisonment of the king. Becoming, in 1793, an object of suspicion to Robespierre, he took refuge in the department of the Calvados; where his body was found in a field, half devoured by wolves.

¹⁶ John Baptiste (better known under the appellation of Anacharsis) Clootz. In 1793, at the bar of the National Convention, he described himself as "the orator of the human race." Being suspected by Robespierre, he was, in 1794, condemned to death. On the scaffold he begged to be decapitated the last, as he wished to make some observations essential to the establishment of certain principles, while the heads of the others were falling; a request obligingly complied with.

¹⁷ Danton played a very important part during the first years of the French revolution. After the fall of the king, he was made Minister of Justice. His violent measures led to the bloody scenes of September, 1793. Being denounced to the Committee of Safety, he ended his career on the guillotine, in 1794.

¹⁸ This wretch figured among the actors of the 10th of August, and in the assassination of September, 1793. In May, 1793, he was denounced, and delivered over to the revolutionary tribunal, which acquitted him; but his bloody career was arrested by the knife of an assassin, in the person of Charlotte Cordé.

¹⁹ Of all these "famous people," the general was the last survivor. He died in 1834.

²⁰ Joubert distinguished himself at the engagements of Lacom, Montemote, Millesimo, Cava, Montebello, Elvico, and especially in the Tyrol. He was afterwards opposed to Suvarrow, and was killed, in 1799, at Novi.

²¹ In 1793, Hoche was appointed to the command of the expedition against Ireland, and sailed in December from Brest; but, a storm dispersing the fleet, the plan failed. After his return, he received the command of the army of the Moselle and Meuse; but died suddenly, in September, 1797, it was supposed of poison.

²² General Marcass first distinguished himself in La Vendée. He was killed by a rifle-ball at Altkirchen. See vol. p. 27.

²³ Lannes, Duke of Montebello, distinguished himself at Millesimo, Lodi, Aboukir, Acre, Montebello, Austerlitz, Jena, Pultusk, Preuss, Eylau, Friedland, Tudela, Saragossa, Echmuhl, and, lastly, at Baileg; where, in May, 1809, he was killed by a cannon-shot.

²⁴ At the taking of Malta, and at the battles of Chebrat and of the Pyramids, Desaix displayed the greatest bravery. He was mortally wounded by a cannon-ball at Marengo, but as victory declared for the French.

²⁵ One of the most distinguished of the republican generals. In 1813, on hearing of the reverses of Napoleon at Russia, he joined the allied armies. He was struck by a cannon-ball at the battle of Dresden, in 1813.

IV.

Nelson was once Britannia's god of war,
And still should be so, but the tide is turn'd;
There 's no more to be said of Trafalgar,
'T is with our hero quietly inurn'd;
Because the army 's grown more popular,
At which the naval people are concern'd;
Besides, the prince is all for the land-service,
Forgetting Duncan, Nelson, Howe, and Jervis.

V.

Brave men were living before Agamemnon
And since, exceeding valorous and sage,
A good deal like him too, though quite the same none;
But then they shone not on the poet's page,
And so have been forgotten:—I condemn none,
But can't find any in the present age
Fit for my poem (that is, for my new one);
So, as I said, I'll take my friend Don Juan.

VI.

Most epic poets plunge "in medias res"
(Horace makes this the heroic turnpike road),
And then your hero tells, whenever you please,
What went before—by way of episode,
While seated after dinner at his ease,
Beside his mistress in some soft abode,
Palace, or garden, paradise, or cavern,
Which serves the happy couple for a tavern.

VII.

That is the usual method, but not mine—
My way is to begin with the beginning;
The regularity of my design
Forbids all wandering as the worst of sinning,
And therefore I shall open with a line
(Although it cost me half an hour in spinning)
Narrating somewhat of Don Juan's father,
And also of his mother, if you'd rather.

VIII.

In Seville was he born, a pleasant city,
Famous for oranges and women—he
Who has not seen it will be come to pity,
So says the proverb—and I quite agree;
Of all the Spanish towns is none more pretty,
Cadix perhaps—but that you soon may see;—
Don Juan's parents lived beside the river,
A noble stream, and call'd the Guadalquivir.

IX.

His father's name was José—Don, of course,
A true Hidalgo, free from every stain
Of Moor or Hebrew blood, he traced his source
Through the most Gothic gentlemen of Spain;
A better cavalier ne'er mounted horse,
Or, being mounted, e'er got down again,
Than José, who begot our hero, who Begot—but that 's to come—Well, to renew:

X.

His mother was a learned lady, famed
For every branch of every science known—

* Professor Fetnagle, of Baden, who, in 1812, under the especial patronage of the "Blues," delivered a course of lectures at the Royal Institution, on Mnemonics.

† "Lady Byron had good ideas, but could never express them: wrote poetry also, but it was only good by accident. Her letters were always enigmatical, often unintelligible. She was governed by what she called fixed rules and principles squared mathematically."—Byron Letters.

‡ Sir Samuel Romilly lost his lady on the 9th of October, and committed suicide on the 31 of November, 1812.—"But there will come a day of reckoning, even if I should not live to see it. I have at least seen Romilly shattered, who was one of my assassins. When that man was doing his worst to uproot my whole family, tree, branch, and blossom—when,

In every Christian language ever named,
With virtues equal'd by her wit alone;
She made the cleverest people quite ashamed,
And even the good with inward envy groan,
Finding themselves so very much exceeded
In their own way by all the things that she did.

XI.

Her memory was a mine: she knew by heart
All Calderon and greater part of Lope,
So that if any actor miss'd his part,
She could have served him for the prompter's copy;
For her Fetnagle's were an useless art,*
And he himself obliged to shut up shop—he Could never make a memory so fine as
That which adorn'd the brain of Donna Inez.†

XII.

Her favorite science was the mathematical,
Her noblest virtue was her magnanimity,
Her wit (she sometimes tried at wit) was Attic
all,
Her serious sayings darken'd to sublimity;
In short, in all things she was fairly what I call
A prodigy—her morning dress was dimity,
Her evening silk, or, in the summer, muslin,
And other stuffs, with which I won't stay puzzling.

XIII.

She knew the Latin—that is, "the Lord's prayer,"
And Greek—the alphabet—I 'm nearly sure;
She read some French romances here and there,
Although her mode of speaking was not pure;
For native Spanish she had no great care,
At least her conversation was obscure;
Her thoughts were theorems, her words a problem,
As if she deem'd that mystery would ennoble 'em.

XIV.

She liked the English and the Hebrew tongue,
And said there was analogy between 'em;
She proved it somehow out of sacred song,
But I must leave the proofs to those who 've seen
'em;
But this I heard her say, and can't be wrong,
And all may think which way their judgments
lean 'em,
"T is strange—the Hebrew noun which means 'I am,'
The English always uses to govern d—n."

XV.

Some women use their tongues—she look'd a lecture,
Each eye a sermon, and her brow a homily,
An all-in-all sufficient self-director,
Like the lamented late Sir Samuel Romilly,‡
The Law's expounder, and the State's corrector,
Whose suicide was almost an anomaly—
One sad example more, that "All is vanity"—
(The jury brought their verdict in "Insanity").

after taking my retainer, he went over to them—when he was bringing consolation on my household gods—did he think that, in less than three years, a natural event—a severe, domestic, but an expected and common calamity—would lay his carcass in a cross-road, or stamp his name in a verdict of lunacy! Did he (who in his sexagenary * * *) reflect or consider what my feelings must have been, when wife, and child, and sister, and name, and fame, and country, were to be my sacrifice on his legal altar—and this at a moment when my health was declining, my fortune embarrassed, and my mind had been shaken by many kinds of disappointment—while I was yet young, and might have reformed what might be wrong in my conduct, and retrieved what was perplexing in my affairs!—Byron Letters, June, 1819.

XVI.

Le short, she was a walking calculation,
Miss Edgeworth's novels stepping from their coven,*
Or Mrs. Trimmer's books on education,[†]
Or "Celebs' Wife"‡ set out in quest of lovers,
Morality's prim personification,
In which not Envy's self a flaw discovers;
To others' share let "female errors fall,"
For she had not even one—the worst of all.

XVII.

Oh! she was perfect past all parallel—
Of any modern female saint's comparison;
So far above the cunning powers of hell,
Her guardian angel had given up his garrison;
Even her minutest motions went as well
As those of the best time-piece made by Harrison:
In virtues nothing earthly could surpass her,
Save thine "incomparable oil," Macassar!

XVIII.

Perfect she was, but as perfection is Insidious in this naughty world of ours,
Where our first parents never learn'd to kiss
Till they were exiled from their earlier bowers,
Where all was peace, and innocence, and bliss
(I wonder how they got through the twelve hours),
Don José, like a liberal son of Eve,
Went plucking various fruit without her leave.

XIX.

He was a mortal of the careless kind,
With no great love for learning, or the learn'd,
Who chose to go where'er he had a mind,
And never dream'd his lady was concern'd;
The world, as usual, wickedly inclin'd
To see a kingdom or a house o'erturn'd,
Whisper'd he had a mistress, some said two;
But for domestic quarrels one will do.

XX.

Now Donna Ines had, with all her merit,
A great opinion of her own good qualities;
Neglect, indeed, requires a saint to bear it,
And such, indeed, she was in her moralities;
But then she had a devil of a spirit,
And sometimes mix'd up fancies with realities,
And let few opportunities escape
Of getting her liege lord into a scrape.

XXI.

This was an easy matter with a man
Off in the wrong, and never on his guard;
And even the wisest, do the best they can,
Have moments, hours, and days, so unprepared,

* Maria Edgeworth, author of "Treatise on Practical Education," "Castle Rackrent," etc., etc., etc.

† "Comparative View of the New Plan of Education," "Teacher's Assistant," etc., etc.

‡ Hannah More's "Celebs in Search of a Wife," etc.

§ The facts are:—I left London for Kirby Maltrey, the residence of my father and mother, on the 15th of January, 1816. Lord Byron had signified to me in writing (January 6) his absolute desire that I should leave London on the earliest day that I could conveniently fix. It was not safe for me to undertake the fatigue of a journey sooner than the 15th. Previously to my departure, I had been strongly impressed on my mind, that Lord Byron was under the influence of insanity. This opinion was derived in a great measure from the communications made to me by his nearest relatives and personal attendant, who had more opportunities than myself of observing him during the latter part of my stay in town. It was even represented to me that he was in danger of destroying himself. With the concurrence of his family, I had consulted Dr. Baillie as a friend (January 8) respecting this

That you might "brain them with a stick,"
And sometimes better hit a creature dead,
And then turn into skeletons by day,
And why and wherefore so did you?

XXII.

'Tis pity learned virgins ever vet
With persons of no sort of consequence;
Or gentlemen, who, though well bred and well,
Grow tired of scientific conversing;
I don't choose to say much upon this head,
I'm a plain man, and in a single word
But—Oh! ye lords of ladies' intellects,
Inform us truly, have they not been great?

XXIII.

Don José and his lady quarrel'd—
Not any of the many could divine,
Though several thousand people chose to say,
'T was surely no concern of theirs nor mine;
I loathe that low vice—curiosity;
But if there's anything in which I shine,
'T is in arranging all my friends' affairs,
Not having, of my own, domestic cares.

XXIV.

And so I interfered, and with the best
Intentions, but their treatment was not kind;
I think the foolish people were possess'd,
For neither of them could I ever find,
Although their porter afterwards confess'd,
But that's no matter, and the worst of this
For little Juan o'er me threw, down from his
A pail of housemaid's water unask'd.

XXV.

A little curly-headed, good-for-nothing,
And mischief-making monkey from the East;
His parents ne'er agreed except in doing
Upon the most unquiet trap on earth;
Instead of quarrelling, had they been told
Their senses, they'd have sent young Juan
To school, or had him soundly whipp'd and
To teach him manners for the time to come.

XXVI.

Don José and the Donna Ines led
For some time an unhappy sort of life;
Wishing each other, not divorced, but dead;
They lived respectably as man and wife,
Their conduct was exceedingly well-bred,
And gave no outward signs of inward strife;
Until at length the smother'd fire broke out,
And put the business past all kind of doubt.

XXVII.

For Ines call'd some druggists and physicians,
And tried to prove her loving lord was dying.

supposed malady. On acquainting him with the state of the case, and with Lord Byron's desire that I should leave London, Dr. Baillie thought that my absence might be useful as an experimental measure the fact of mental derangement in Dr. Baillie, not having had access to Lord Byron, he did not pronounce a positive opinion on that point, but that in correspondence with Lord Byron I should be both light and soothing topics. Under these circumstances I left London, determined to follow the advice of Dr. Baillie.—Lady Byron.

I was surprised one day by a doctor (Dr. Lambington) almost forcing his way into my room. I did not know the real object of his visit. I thought that he was a trifling, and somewhat importunate, person, but what should I have thought, if I had been wiser, that he was a man of great talents, and that he was sent to provide proofs of my insanity, that my answers to these questions were either consistent, for my imagination was not so strong.

It as he had some lucid intermissions,
The next decided he was only bad;
It when they ask'd her for her depositions,
No sort of explanation could be had,
We that her duty both to man and God
Quir'd this conduct—which seem'd very odd.

XXVIII.

He kept a journal, where his faults were noted,
And open'd certain trunks of books and letters,
I which might, if occasion served, be quoted;
And then she had all Seville for abettors,
Besides her good old grandmother (who doted);
The hearers of her case became repeaters,
Men advocates, inquisitors, and judges,
None for amusement, others for old grudges.

XXIX.

And then this best and meekest woman bore
With such serenity her husband's woes,
As the Spartan ladies did of yore,
Who saw their spouses kill'd, and nobly chose
Never to say a word about them more—
Calmly she heard each calumny that rose,
And saw his agonies with such sublimity,
That all the world exclaim'd, "What magnanimity!"

XXX.

To doubt this patience, when the world is damning
Us,
Is philosophic in our former friends;
It is also pleasant to be deem'd magnanimous,
The more so in obtaining our own ends;
And what the lawyers call a "malus animus"
Conduct like this by no means comprehends:
Revenge in person's certainly no virtue,
But then 't is not my fault, if others hurt you.

XXXI.

And if our quarrels should rip up old stories,
And help them with a lie or two additional,
I'm not to blame, as you well know—no more is Any one else—they were become traditional;
Besides, their resurrection aids our glories
By contrast, which is what we just were wishing
All:
And science profits by this resurrection—
Dead scandals form good subjects for dissection.

XXXII.

Their friends* had tried at reconciliation,
Then their relations, who made matters worse.
(T were hard to tell upon a like occasion
To whom it may be best to have recourse—
I can't say much for friend or yet relation):
The lawyers did their utmost for divorce,
But scarce a fee was paid on either side
Before, unluckily, Don José died.

XXXIII.

He died: and most unluckily, because,
According to all hints I could collect
From counsel learned in those kinds of laws
(Although their talk's obscure and circumspect),
His death contrived to spoil a charming cause;
A thousand pities also with respect
To public feeling, which on this occasion
Was manifested in a great sensation.

out a certificate for Bedlam; and perhaps the lawyer gave a more favorable report to his employers. I do not, however, say Lady Byron with this transaction; probably she was not privy to it. She was the tool of others. Her mother always detested me, and had not even the decency to conceal it in her house."—Lord Byron. *My mother always treated Lord

XXXIV.

But ah! he died; and buried with him lay
The public feeling and the lawyers' fees:
His house was sold, his servants sent away,
A Jew took one of his two mistresses,
A priest the other—at least so they say:
I ask'd the doctors after his disease—
He died of the slow fever call'd the tertian,
And left his widow to her own aversion.

XXXV.

Yet José was an honorable man,
That I must say, who knew him very well;
Therefore his frailties I'll no further scan,
Indeed there were not many more to tell:
And if his passions now and then outran
Discretion, and were not so peaceable
As Numa's (who was also named Pompilius),
He had been ill brought up, and was born bilious.

XXXVI.

Whate'er might be his worthlessness or worth,
Poor fellow! he had many things to wound him.
Let's own—since it can do no good on earth—
It was a trying moment that which found him
Standing alone beside his desolate hearth,
Where all his household gods lay shiver'd round
him:
No choice was left his feelings or his pride,
Save death or Doctors' Commons—so he died.

XXXVII.

Dying intestate, Juan was sole heir
To a chancery suit, and messuages, and lands,
Which, with a long minority and care,
Promised to turn out well in proper hands:
Inez became sole guardian, which was fair,
And answer'd but to nature's just demands;
An only son left with an only mother
Is brought up much more wisely than another.

XXXVIII.

Suggest of women, even of widows, she
Resolved that Juan should be quite a paragon,
And worthy of the noblest pedigree:
(His sire was of Castile, his dam from Aragon.)
Then for accomplishments of chivalry,
In case our lord the king should go to war again,
He learn'd the arts of riding; fencing, gunnery,
And how to scale a fortress—or a nunnery.

XXXIX.

But that which Donna Inez most desired,
And saw into herself each day before all
The learned tutors whom for him she hired,
Was, that his breeding should be strictly moral:
Much into all his studies she inquired,
And so they were submitted first to her, all
Arts, sciences, no branch was made a mystery
To Juan's eyes, excepting natural history.

XL.

The languages, especially the dead,
The sciences, and most of all the abstruse,
The arts, at least all such as could be said
To be the most remote and deeply read;
In all these he was much and deeply read;
But not a page of anything that's loose,
Or hints continuation of the species,
Was ever suffer'd, lest he should grow vicious.

Byron with an affectionate consideration and indulgence, which extended to every little peculiarity of his feelings. Never did an irritating word escape her lips in her whole intercourse with him."—Lady Byron.

* Mr. Rogers, Mr. Hobhouse, etc., etc.

XII.

His classic studies made a little puzzle,
Because of filthy loves of gods and goddesses,
Who in the earlier ages raised a bustle,
But never put on pantaloons or bodices;
His reverend tutors had at times a tussle,
And for their Æneids, Iliads, and Odyssseys,
Were forced to make an odd sort of apology,
For Donna Inez dreaded the Mythology.

XIII.

Ovid 's a rake, as half his verses show him,
Anacreon's morals are a still worse sample,
Catullus scarcely has a decent poem,
I don't think Sappho's Ode a good example,
Although Longinus tells us there is no hymn
Where the sublime soars forth on wings more ample;
But Virgil's songs are pure, except that horrid one
Beginning with "Formosum Pastor Corydon."

XIII.

Lucretius' irreligion is too strong
For early stomachs, to prove wholesome food;
I can't help thinking Juvenal was wrong,
Although no doubt his real intent was good,
For speaking out so plainly in his song,
So much indeed as to be downright rude;
And then what proper person can be partial
To all those nauseous epigrams of Martial?

XIV.

Juan was taught from out the best edition,
Expurgated by learned men, who place,
Judiciously, from out the schoolboy's vision,
The grosser parts; but, fearful to deface,
Too much their modest bard by this omission,
And pitying sore his mutilated case,
They only add them all in an appendix,*
Which saves, in fact, the trouble of an index;

XV.

For there we have them all "at one fell swoop,"
Instead of being scatter'd through the pages;
They stand forth marshall'd in a handsome troop,
To meet the ingenuous youth of future ages,
Till some less rigid editor shall stoop
To call them back into their separate cages,
Instead of standing staring all together:
Like garden gods—and not so decent either.

XVI.

The Misal too (it was the family Misal)
Was ornamented in a sort of way
Which ancient mass-books often are, and this all Kinds of grotesques illumined; and how they,
Who saw those figures on the margin kiss all,
Could turn their optics to the text and pray,
Is more than I know—But Don Juan's mother
Kept this herself, and gave her son another.

XVII.

Sermons he read, and lectures he endured,
And homilies, and lives of all the saints;
To Jerome and to Chrysostom inured,
He did not take such studies for restraints;
But how faith is acquired, and then insured,
So well not one of the aforesaid paints
As Saint Augustine in his fine Confessions,
Which make the reader envy his transgressions.†

XVIII.

This, too, was a seal'd book to little Juan—
I can't but say that his mamma was right,
If such an education was the true one.
She scarcely trusted him from out her sight;
Her maids were old, and if she took a new one,
You might be sure she was a perfect fright:
She did this during even her husband's life—
I recommend as much to every wife.

XIX.

Young Juan wax'd in goodness and grace;
At six a charming child, and at eleven
With all the promise of as fine a face
As e'er to man's maturer growth was given:
He studied steadily, and grew apace,
And seem'd, at least, in the right road to heaven.
For half his days were pass'd at church, the other
Between his tutors, confessor, and mother.

L.

At six, I said, he was a charming child,
At twelve he was a fine, but quiet boy;
Although in infancy a little wild,
They tamed him down amongst them: to a stroy
His natural spirit not in vain they toll'd,
At least it seem'd so; and his mother's joy
Was to declare how sage, and still, and steady,
Her young philosopher was grown already.

LI.

I had my doubts, perhaps I have them still,
But what I say is neither here nor there:
I knew his father well, and have some skill
In character—but it would not be fair
From sire to son to augur good or ill:
He and his wife were an ill-sorted pair—
But scandal's my aversion—I protest
Against all evil-speaking, even in jest.

LII.

For my part I say nothing—nothing—but
This I will say—my reasons are my own—
That if I had an only son to put
To school (as God be praised that I have none),
'Tis not with Donna Inez I would shut
Him up to learn his catechism alone;
No—no—I'd send him out betimes to college,
For there it was I pick'd up my own knowledge.

LIII.

For there one learns—'tis not for me to boast,
Though I acquired—but I pass over that,
As well as all the Greek I since have lost:
I say that there 's the place—but "Verbum sat,"
I think I pick'd up too, as well as most,
Knowledge of matters—but no matter what—
I never married—but, I think, I know
That sons should not be educated so.

LIV.

Young Juan now was sixteen years of age,
Tall, handsome, slender, but well knit: he seem'd
Active, though not so sprightly, as a page;
And every body but his mother deem'd
Him almost man; but she flew in a rage
And bit her lips (for else she might have scream'd)
If any said so, for to be precocious
Was in her eyes a thing the most atrocious.

* Fact! There is, or was, such an edition, with all the obnoxious epigrams of Martial placed by themselves at the end.

† See his Confessions, l. l., c. ix. By the representation which Saint Augustine gives of himself in his youth, it is easy to see that he was what we should call a rake. He avoided the school as the plague; he loved nothing but gaming and public shows; he robbed his father of everything he could find; he invented a thousand lies to save the rod, which they were obliged to make use of to punish his irregularities.

LV.

mongst her numerous acquaintance, all
Selected for discretion and devotion,
There was the Donna Julia, whom to call
Pretty were but to give a feeble notion
Of many charms in her as natural
As sweetness to the flower, or salt to ocean,
Her zone to Venus, or his bow to Cupid
But this last simile is trite and stupid).

LVI.

The darkness of her Oriental eye
Accorded with her Moorish origin;
Her blood was not all Spanish, by the by;
In Spain, you know, this is a sort of sin.)
When proud Granada fell, and, forced to fly,
Boabdil wept,* of Donna Julia's kin
Some went to Africa, some stay'd in Spain,
Her great great grandmamma chose to remain.

LVII.

She married (I forget the pedigree)
With an Hidalgo, who transmitted down
His blood less noble than such blood should be;
At such alliances his sires would frown,
In that point so precise in each degree
That they bred in and in, as might be shown,
Marrying their cousins,—nay, their aunts, and nieces,
Which always spoils the breed, if it increases.

LVIII.

This heathenish cross restored the breed again,
Ruin'd its blood, but much improved its flesh;
For from a root the ugliest in Old Spain
Sprung up a branch as beautiful as fresh;
The sons no more were short, the daughters plain;
But there's a rumor which I fain would hush,
'T is said that Donna Julia's grandmamma
Produced her Don more heirs at love than law.

LIX.

However this might be, the race went on Improving still through every generation,
Until it centred in an only son,
Who left an only daughter; my narration
May have suggested that this single one
Could be but Julia (whom on this occasion
I shall have much to speak about), and she
Was married, charming, chaste, and twenty-three.

LX.

Her eye (I'm very fond of handsome eyes)
Was large and dark, suppressing half its fire
Until she spoke, then through its soft disguise
Flash'd an expression more of pride than ire,
And love than either; and there would arise
A something in them which was not desire,
But would have been, perhaps, but for the soul
Which struggled through and chasten'd down the whole.

LXI.

Her glossy hair was cluster'd o'er a brow
Bright with intelligence, and fair, and smooth;
Her eyebrow's shape was like the aërial bow,
Her cheek all purple with the beam of youth,

Mounting, at times, to a transparent glow,
As if her veins ran lightning; she, in sooth,
Possess'd an air and grace by no means common:
Her stature tall—I hate a dumpy woman.

LXII.

Wedded she was some years, and to a man
Of fifty, and such husbands are in plenty;
And yet, I think, instead of such a one
'T were better to have two of five-and-twenty,
Especially in countries near the sun:
And now I think on't, "mi vien in mente,"
Ladies even of the most uneasy virtue
Prefer a spouse whose age is short of thirty.

LXIII.

'T is a sad thing, I cannot choose but say,
And all the fault of that indecent sun,
Who cannot leave alone our helpless clay,
But will keep baking, broiling, burning on,
That howsoever people fast and pray,
The flesh is frail, and so the soul undone:
What men call gallantry, and gods adultery,
Is much more common where the climate's sultry.

LXIV.

Happy the nations of the moral North!
Where all is virtue, and the winter season
Sends sin, without a rag on, shivering forth ('T was snow that brought Saint Anthony† to reason);
Where juries cast up what a wife is worth,
By laying what'er sum, in mulct, they please on
The lover, who must pay a handsome price,
Because it is a marketable vice.

LXV.

Alfonso was the name of Julia's lord,
A man well looking for his years, and who
Was neither much beloved nor yet abhorr'd:
They lived together as most people do,
Suffering each other's follies by accord,
And not exactly either one or two;
Yet he was jealous, though he did not show it,
For jealousy dislikes the world to know it.

LXVI.

Julia was—yet I never could see why—
With Donna Inez quite a favorite friend;
Between their tastes there was small sympathy,
For not a line had Julia ever penn'd:
Some people whisper (but, no doubt, they lie,
For malice still imputes some private end)
That Inez had, ere Don Alfonso's marriage,
Forgot with him her very prudent carriage;

LXVII.

And that still keeping up the old connection,
Which time had lately render'd much more chaste,
She took his lady also in affection,
And certainly this course was much the best:
She flatter'd Julia with her age protection,
And complimented Don Alfonso's taste;
And if she could not (who can?) silence scandal,
At least she left it a more slender handle.

* Having surrendered the last symbol of power, the unfortunate Boabdil continued on towards the Alpuzarras, that he might not behold the entrance of the Christians into his capital. His devoted band of cavaliers followed him in gloomy silence. Having ascended an eminence commanding the last view of Granada, they paused involuntarily to take a farewell gaze at their beloved city, which a few steps more would shut from their sight for ever. While they yet looked, a light cloud of smoke broke forth from the citadel; and presently a peal of artillery, faintly heard, told that the city was taken possession of, and the throne of the Moslem kings was lost for ever. The heart of Boabdil, softened by misfortunes, and overcharged with grief, could no longer contain itself. "Allah achbar! God is great!" said he; but the words of resignation died upon his lips, and he burst into a flood of tears."—WASHINGTON IRVING.

† For the particulars of Saint Anthony's recipe for hot blood in cold weather, see Mr. Alban Butler's "Lives of the Saints."

LXVIII.

I can't tell whether Julia saw the affair
With other people's eyes, or if her own
Discoveries made, but none could be aware
Of this, at least no symptom e'er was shown;
Perhaps she did not know, or did not care,
Indifferent from the first, or callous grown:
I'm really puzzled what to think or say,
She kept her counsel in so close a way.

LXIX.

Juan she saw, and, as a pretty child,
Caress'd him often—such a thing might be Quite innocently done, and harmless styled,
When she had twenty years, and thirteen he;
But I am not so sure I should have smiled
When he was sixteen, Julia twenty-three;
Those few short years make wondrous alterations,
Particularly amongst sunburnt nations.

LXX.

Whate'er the cause might be, they had become Changed; for the dame grew distant, the youth shy,
Their looks cast down, their greetings almost dumb,
And much embarrassment in either eye;
There surely will be little doubt with some
That Donna Julia knew the reason why,
But as for Juan, he had no more notion
Than he who never saw the sea of ocean.

LXXI.

Yet Julia's very coldness still was kind,
And tremulously gentle her small hand
Withdrew itself from his, but left behind
A little pressure, thrilling, and so bland
And alight, so very alight, that to the mind
'T was but a doubt; but ne'er magician's wand
Wrought change with all Armida's fairy art
Like what this light touch left on Juan's heart.

LXXII.

And if she met him, though she smiled no more,
She looked a sadness sweeter than her smile,
As if her heart had deeper thoughts in store
She must not own, but cherish'd more the while
For that compression in its burning core;
Even innocence itself has many a wile,
And will not dare to trust itself with truth,
And love is taught hypocrisy from youth.

LXXIII.

But passion most dissembles, yet betrays
Even by its darkness; as the blackest sky
Foretells the heaviest tempest, it displays
Its workings through the vainly guarded eye,
And in whatever aspect it arrays
Itself, 't is still the same hypocrisy;
Coldness or anger, even disdain or hate,
Are masks it often wears, and still too late.

LXXIV.

Then there were sighs, the deeper for suppression,
And stolen glances, sweeter for the theft,
And burning blushes, though for no transgression,
Tremblings when met, and restlessness when left;
All these are little preludes to possession,
Of which young passion cannot be bereft,
And merely tend to show how greatly love is Embarrass'd at first starting with a novice.

LXXV.

Poor Julia's heart was in an awkward state;
She felt it going, and resolved to make
The noblest efforts for herself and mate,
For honor's, pride's, religion's, virtue's sake.
Her resolutions were most truly great,
And almost might have made a Tarquin quake:

494

She pray'd the Virgin Mary for her grace,
As being the best judge of a lady's case.

LXXVI.

She vow'd she never would see Juan more,
And next day paid a visit to his mother,
And look'd extremely at the opening door,
Which, by the Virgin's grace, let in another;
Grateful she was, and yet a little sore—
Again it opens, it can be no other,
'T is surely Juan now—No! I'm afraid
That night the Virgin was no further pray'd.

LXXVII.

She now determined that a virtuous woman
Should rather face and overcome temptation,
That fight was base and dastardly, and no man
Should ever give her heart the least sensation;
That is to say, a thought beyond the common
Preference, that we must feel upon occasion,
For people who are pleasanter than others,
But then they only seem so many brothers.

LXXVIII.

And even if by chance—and who can tell?
The devil's so very sly—she should discover
That all within was not so very well,
And, if still free, that such or such a lover
Might please perhaps, a virtuous wife can quell Such thoughts, and be the better when they're over;
And if the man should ask, 't is but denial:
I recommend young ladies to make trial.

LXXIX.

And then there are such things as love divine,
Bright and immaculate, unmix'd and pure,
Such as the angels think so very fine,
And matrons, who would be no less secure,
Platonic, perfect, "just such love as mine;"
Thus Julia said—and thought so, to be sure;
And so I'd have her think, were I the man
On whom her reveries celestial ran.

LXXX.

Such love is innocent, and may exist
Between young persons without any danger.
A hand may first, and then a lip be kiss'd;
For my part, to such doings I'm a stranger,
But hear these freedoms form the utmost list
Of all o'er which such love may be a ranger:
If people go beyond, 't is quite a crime,
But not my fault—I tell them all in time.

LXXXI.

Love, then, but love within its proper limits,
Was Julia's innocent determination
In young Don Juan's favor, and to him its Exertion might be useful on occasion;
And, lighted at too pure a shrine to dim its Ethereal lustre, with what sweet persuasion
He might be taught, by love and her together—
I really don't know what, nor Julia either.

LXXXII.

Fraught with this fine intention, and well faced
In mail of proof—her purity of soul,
She, for the future of her strength convinced,
And that her honor was a rock, or mole,
Exceeding eagerly from that hour dispensed
With any kind of troublesome control;
But whether Julia to the task was equal
Is that which must be mention'd in the sequel.

LXXXIII.

Her plan she deem'd both innocent and feasible,
And, surely, with a strippling of sixteen

Not scandal's fangs could fix on much that's seizable,

Or if they did so, satiated to mean
Nothing but what was good, her breast was peaceable—

A quiet conscience makes one so serene!
Christians have burnt each other, quite persuaded
That all the Apostles would have done as they did.

LXXXIV.

And if in the mean time her husband died,
But Heaven forbid that such a thought should cross

Her brain, though in a dream! (and then she sigh'd)
Never could she survive that common loss;
But just suppose that moment should betide,
I only say suppose it—inter nos.
This should be entre nous, for Julia thought
In French, but then the rhyme would go for naught).

LXXXV.

I only say, suppose this supposition:
Juan being then grown up to man's estate
Would fully suit a widow of condition.
Even seven years hence it would not be too late;
And in the interim (to pursue this vision)
The mischief, after all, could not be great,
For he would learn the rudiments of love,
I mean the seraph way of those above.

LXXXVI.

So much for Julia. Now we'll turn to Juan.
Poor little fellow! he had no idea
Of his own case, and never bit the true one
In feelings quick as Ovid's Miss Medea.^{*}
He puzzled over what he found a new one,
But not as yet imagined it could be a
Thing quite in course, and not at all alarming,
Which, with a little patience, might grow charming.

LXXXVII.

Silent and pensive, idle, restless, slow,
His home deserted for the lonely wood,
Tormented with a wound he could not know,
His, like all deep grief, plunged in solitude:
I'm fond myself of solitude or so,
But then, I beg it may be understood,
By solitude I mean a sultan's, not
A hermit's, with a harem for a grot.

LXXXVIII.

Oh, Love! in such a wilderness as this,
Where transport and security entwine,
Here is the empire of thy perfect bliss,
And here thou art a god indeed divine."
The bard I quote from does not sing amiss,[†]
With the exception of the second line,
For that same twining "transport and security"
Are twisted to a phrase of some obscurity.

LXXXIX.

The poet meant, no doubt, and thus appeals
To the good sense and senses of mankind,
The very thing which everybody feels,
As all have found on trial, or may find,
That no one likes to be disturb'd at meals
Or love.—I won't say more about "entwined"
Or "transport," as we knew all that before,
But beg "Security" will bolt the door.

^{*} See Ovid. de Art. Amand. l. 11.

[†] Campbell's Gertrude of Wyoming—(I think)—the opening of canto second—but quote from memory.

† Juan Boscan Almagar, of Barcelona, died about the year 1542. In concert with his friend Garcilasso, he introduced the Italian style into Castilian poetry, and com-

XC.

Young Juan wander'd by the glassy brooks,
Thinking unutterable things; he threw
Himself at length within the leafy nooks
Where the wild branch of the cork forest grew;
There poets find materials for their books,
And every now and then we read them through,
So that their plan and prosody are eligible,
Unless, like Wordsworth, they prove unintelligible.

XCI.

He, Juan (and not Wordsworth), so pursued
His self-communion with his own high soul,
Until his mighty heart, in its great mood,
Had mitigated part, though not the whole
Of its disease; he did the best he could
With things not very subject to control,
And turn'd, without perceiving his condition,
Like Coleridge, into a metaphysician.

XCII.

He thought about himself, and the whole earth,
Of man the wonderful, and of the stars,
And how the dence they ever could have birth;
And then he thought of earthquakes, and of wars,
How many miles the moon might have in girth,
Of air-balloons, and of the many bars
To perfect knowledge of the boundless skies;—
And then he thought of Donna Julia's eyes.

XCIII.

In thoughts like these true wisdom may discern
Longings sublime, and aspirations high,
Which some are born with, but the most part learn
To plague themselves withal, they know not
why:

'T was strange that one so young should thus concern
His brain about the action of the sky;
If you think 't was philosophy that this did,
I can't help thinking puberty assisted.

XCIV.

He pored upon the leaves, and on the flowers,
And heard a voice in all the winds; and then
He thought of wood-nymphs and immortal bowers,
And how the goddesses came down to men:
He miss'd the pathway, he forgot the hours,
And when he look'd upon his watch again,
He found how much old Time had been a winner—
He also found that he had lost his dinner.

XCV.

Sometimes he turn'd to gaze upon his book,
Boscan,[‡] or Garcilasso; [—by the wind
Even as the page is rustled while we look,
So by the poetry of his own mind
Over the mystic leaf his soul was shook.
As if 't were one whereon magicians bind
Their spells, and give them to the passing gale,
According to some good old woman's tale.

XCVI.

Thus would he while his lonely hours away
Disatisfied, nor knowing what he wanted;
Nor glowing reverie, nor poet's lay,
Could yield his spirit that for which it panted,
A bosom whereon he his head might lay,
And hear the heart beat with the love it granted, menaced his labors by writing sonnets in the manner of Petrarch.

‡ Garcilasso de la Vega, of a noble family at Toledo, was a warrior as well as a poet. After serving with distinction in Germany, Africa, and Provence, he was killed, in 1536, by a stone thrown from a tower, which fell upon his head as he was leading on his battalion.

With—several other things, which I forget,
Or which, at least, I need not mention yet.

XCVII.

Those lonely walks, and lengthening reveries,
Could not escape the gentle Julia's eyes;
She saw that Juan was not at his ease;
But that which chiefly may, and must surprise,
Is, that the Donna Inez did not tease
Her only son with question or surmise;
Whether it was she did not see, or would not,
Or, like all very clever people, could not.

XCVIII.

This may seem strange, but yet 't is very common;
For instance—gentlemen, whose ladies take
Leave to o'erstep the written rights of women,
And break the—Which commandment is 't they break?

(I have forgot the number, and think no man Should rashly quote, for fear of a mistake.)
I say, when these same gentlemen are jealous,
They make some blunder, which their ladies tell us.

XCIX.

A real husband always is auspicious,
But still no less suspects in the wrong place,
Jealous of some one who had no such wishes,
Or pandering blindly to his own disgrace.
By harboring some dear friend extremely vicious;
The last indeed 's infallibly the case:
And when the spouse and friend are gone off wholly,
He wonders at their vice, and not his folly.

C.

Thus parents also are at times short-sighted:
Though watchful as the lynx, they ne'er discover
The while the wicked world beholds delighted,
Young Hopeful's mistress, or Miss Fanny's lover,
Till some confounded escapade has blighted
The plan of twenty years, and all is over;
And then the mother cries, the father swears,
And wonders why the devil he got heirs.

CI.

But Inez was so anxious, and so clear
Of sight, that I must think, on this occasion,
She had some other motive much more near
For leaving Juan to this new temptation,
But what that motive was, I sha'n't say here;
Perhaps to finish Juan's education,
Perhaps to open Don Alfonso's eyes,
In case he thought his wife too great a prize.

CII.

It was upon a day, a summer's day;—
Summer's indeed a very dangerous season,
And so is spring about the end of May;
The sun, no doubt, is the prevailing reason;
But whatsoever the cause is, one may say,
And stand convicted of more truth than trea-
son;
That there are months which nature grows more merry in,—
March has its hares, and May must have its heroines.

CIII.

'T was on a summer's day—the sixth of June:
I like to be particular in dates,
Not only of the age, and year, but moon;
They are a sort of post-horse, where the Fates
Change horses, making history change its tune,
Then spur away o'er empires and o'er states,
Leaving at last not much besides chronology,
Excepting the post-obits of theology.

CIV.

'T was on the sixth of June, about the hour
Of half-past six—perhaps still nearer seven—
When Julia sat within that pretty a bower
As e'er held houri in that heathenish heaven
Described by Mahomet, and Anacreon Moore,
To whom the lyre and laurels have been given,
With all the trophies of triumphant song—
He won them well, and may he wear them long!

CV.

She sat, but not alone; I know not well
How this same interview had taken place,
And even if I knew, I should not tell—
People should hold their tongues in any case;
No matter how or why the thing befell,
But there were she and Juan, face to face—
When two such faces are so, 't would be wise,
But very difficult, to shut their eyes.

CVI.

How beautiful she look'd! her conscious heart
Glow'd in her cheek, and yet she felt no wrong.
Oh, Love! how perfect is thy mystic art,
Strengthening the weak, and trampling on the strong!
How self-deceitful is the sagest part
Of mortals whom thy lure hath led along!—
The precipice she stood on was immense,
So was her creed in her own innocence.

CVII.

She thought of her own strength, and Juan's youth,
And of the folly of all prudish fears,
Victorious virtue, and domestic truth,
And then of Don Alfonso's fifty years:
I wish these last had not occur'd, in sooth,
Because that number rarely much endears,
And through all climates, the snowy and the sunny,
Sounds ill in love, whatever it may in money.

CVIII.

When people say, "I've told you fifty times,"
They mean to scold, and very often do;
When poets say, "I've written fifty rhymes,"
They make you dread that they'll recite them too;
In gangs of fifty, thieves commit their crimes;
At fifty love for love is rare, 't is true,
But then, no doubt, it equally as true is,
A good deal may be bought for fifty Louis.

CIX.

Julia had honor, virtue, truth, and love
For Don Alfonso; and she inly swore,
By all the vows below to powers above,
She never would disgrace the ring she wore,
Nor leave a wish which wisdom might reprove;
And while she ponder'd this, besides much more,
One hand on Juan's carelessly was thrown,
Quite by mistake—she thought it was her own;

CX.

Unconsciously she lean'd upon the other,
Which play'd within the tangles of her hair;
And to contend with thoughts she could not smother

She seem'd, by the distraction of her air.
'T was surely very wrong in Juan's mother
To leave together this imprudent pair,
She who for many years had watch'd her son so—
I'm very certain mine would not have done so.

CXI.

The hand which still held Juan's, by degrees
Gently, but palpably confirm'd its grasp,
As if it said, "Detain me, if you please;"
Yet there's no doubt she only meant to clasp is fingers with a pure Platonic squeeze;

She would have shrunk as from a toad, or asp, ad she imagined such a thing could rouse feeling dangerous to a prudent spouse.

CXII.

cannot know what Juan thought of this,
But what he did, is much what you would do;
is young lip thank'd it with a grateful kiss,
And then, abash'd at its own joy, withdrew a deep despair, lest he had done amiss,— Love is so very timid when 'tis new:
he blush'd, and frown'd not, but she strove to speak,
and held her tongue, her voice was grown so weak.

CXIII.

'he sun set, and up rose the yellow moon:
The devil's in the moon for mischief; they
Who call'd her CHASTE, methinks, began too soon
Their nomenclature; there is not a day,
'he longest, not the twenty-first of June,
Sees half the business in a wicked way,
In which three single hours of moonshine smile—
and then she looks so modest all the while!

CXIV.

There is a dangerous silence in that hour,
A stillness, which leaves room for the full soul
To open all itself, without the power
Of calling wholly back its self-control;
The silver light which, hallowing tree and tower,
Sheds beauty and deep softness o'er the whole,
Breathes also to the heart, and o'er it throws
A loving languor, which is not repose.

CXV.

And Julia sat with Juan, half embraced
And half retiring from the glowing arm,
Which trembled like the bosom where 'twas placed;
Yet still she must have thought there was no
harm,
Or else 'twere easy to withdraw her waist;
But then the situation had its charm,
And then—God knows what next—I can't go
on;
I'm almost sorry that I e'er begun.

CXVI.

Oh, Plato! Plato! you have paved the way,
With your confounded fantasies, to more
Immoral conduct by the fancied sway
Your system feigns o'er the contrivance core
Of human hearts, than all the long array
Of poets and romancers:—You're a bore,
A charlatan, a coxcomb—and have been,
At best, no better than a go-between.

CXVII.

And Julia's voice was lost, except in sighs,
Until too late for useful conversation;
The tears were gushing from her gentle eyes,
I wish, indeed, they had not had occasion;
But who, alas! can love, and then be wise?
Not that remorse did not oppose temptation;
A little still she strove, and much repented,
And whispering "I will ne'er consent"—consented.

CXVIII.

'Tis said that Xerxes offer'd a reward
To those who could invent him a new pleasure:
Methinks the requisition's rather hard,
And must have cost his majesty a treasure:
For my part, I'm a moderate-minded bard,
Fond of a little love (which I call leisure);
I care not for new pleasures, as the old
Are quite enough for me, so they but hold.

CXIX.

Oh, Pleasure! you're indeed a pleasant thing,
Although one must be damn'd for you, no doubt;
I make a resolution every spring
Of reformation, ere the year run out,
But somehow, this my vernal vow takes wing;
Yet still, I trust, it may be kept throughout:
I'm very sorry, very much ashamed,
And mean, next winter, to be quite reclaim'd.

CXX.

Here my chaste Muse a liberty must take—Start not! still chaster reader—she'll be nice
hence—
Forward, and there is no great cause to quake;
This liberty is a poetic license,
Which some irregularity may make
In the design, and as I have a high name
Of Aristotle and the Rules, 'tis fit
To beg his pardon when I err a bit.

CXXI.

This license is to hope the reader will Suppose from June the sixth (the fatal day,
Without whose epoch my poetic skill
For want of facts would all be thrown away),
But keeping Julia and Don Juan still
In sight, that several months have pass'd; we'll say
'Twas in November, but I'm not so sure
About the day—the era's more obscure.

CXXII.

We'll talk of that anon.—'Tis sweet to hear
At midnight on the blue and moonlit deep
The song and oar of Adria's gondolier,
By distance mellow'd, o'er the waters sweep;
'Tis sweet to see the evening star appear;
'Tis sweet to listen as the night-winds creep
From leaf to leaf; 'tis sweet to view on high
The rainbow, based on ocean, span the sky.

CXXIII.

'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark
Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home;
'Tis sweet to know there is an eye will mark
Our coming, and look brighter when we come;
'Tis sweet to be awaken'd by the lark,
Or lull'd by falling waters; sweet the hum
Of bees, the voice of girls, the song of birds,
The lip of children, and their earliest words.

CXXIV.

Sweet is the vintage, when the showering grapes
In Bacchanal profusion reel to earth,
Purple and gushing: sweet are our escapes
From civic revelry to rural mirth;
Sweet to the miser are his glittering heaps,
Sweet to the father is his first-born's birth,
Sweet is revenge—especially to women,
Pillage to soldiers, prize-money to seamen.

CXXV.

Sweet is a legacy, and passing sweet
The unexpected death of some old lady,
Or gentleman of seventy years complete,
Who've made "us youth" wait too—too long already,
For an estate, or cash, or country seat,
Still breaking, but with stamina so steady,
That all the Israelites are fit to mob its Next owner for their double-damn'd post-obits.

CXXVI.

'Tis sweet to win, no matter how, one's laurels,
By blood or ink; 'tis sweet to put an end

To strife; 'tis sometimes sweet to have our quarrels,
Particularly with a tiresome friend:
Sweet is old wine in bottles, ale in barrels;
Dear is the helpless creature we defend Against the world; and dear the schoolboy spot
We ne'er forget, though there we are forgot.

CXXVII.

But sweeter still than this, than these, than all,
Is first and passionate love—it stands alone,
Like Adam's recollection of his fall;
The tree of knowledge has been pluck'd—all 's
known—
And life yields nothing further to recall
Worthy of this ambrosial sin, so shown,
No doubt in fable, as the unforgiven
Fire which Prometheus flieh'd for us from heaven.

CXXVIII.

Man 's a strange animal, and makes strange use
Of his own nature, and the various arts,
And likes particularly to produce
Some new experiment to show his parts;
This is the age of oddities let loose,
Where different talents find their different marts;
You'd best begin with truth, and when you've lost your
Labor, there 's a sure market for imposture.

CXXIX.

What opposite discoveries we have seen!
(Signs of true genius, and of empty pockets.)
One makes new noses, one a guillotine,
One breaks your bones, one sets them in their sockets;
But vaccination certainly has been
A kind antithesis to Congreve's rockets,
With which the Doctor paid off an old pox,
By borrowing a new one from an ox.

CXXX.

Bread has been made (indifferent) from potatoes;
And galvanism has set some corpses grinning,
But has not answer'd like the apparatus
Of the Humane Society's beginning,
By which men are unsuffocated gratis:
What wondrous new machines have late been spinning!
I said the small-pox has gone out of late;
Perhaps it may be follow'd by the great.

CXXXI.

'Tis said the great came from America;
Perhaps it may set out on its return,—
The population there so spreads, they say
'Tis grown high time to thin it in its turn,
With war, or plague, or famine, any way,
So that civilization they may learn;
And which in ravage the more loathsome evil is—
Their real lues, or our pseudo-syphilis?

CXXXII.

This is the patent age of new inventions
For killing bodies, and for saving souls,
All propagated with the best intentions:
Sir Humphry Davy's lantern,* by which coals
Are safely mined for in the mode he mentions,
Tombucot travels, voyages to the Poles,
Are ways to benefit mankind, as true,
Perhaps, as shooting them at Waterloo.

CXXXIII.

Man 's a phenomenon, one knows not what,
And wonderful beyond all wondrous measure;

* The "Safety Lamp," after long researches and innumerable experiments, was at length invented by the late Sir Humphry Davy, in 1815.

'Tis pity though, in this sublime world, that Pleasure 's a sin, and sometimes sin 's a pleasure;
Few mortals know what end they would be at,
But whether glory, power, or love, or treasure,
The path is through perplexing ways, and when
The goal is gain'd, we die, you know—and then—

CXXXIV.

What then?—I do not know, no more do you—
And so good night.—Return we to our story:
'Twas in November, when fine days are few,
And the far mountains wax a little hoary,
And clap a white cape on their mantles blue;
And the sea dashes round the promontory,
And the loud breaker boils against the rock,
And sober suns must set at five o'clock.

CXXXV.

'Twas, as the watchmen say, a cloudy night;
No moon, no stars, the wind was low or loud
By gusts, and many a sparkling hearth was bright
With the piled wood, round which the family
crowd;
There 's something cheerful in that sort of light,
Even as a summer's sky without a cloud:
I'm fond of fire, and crickets, and all that,
A lobster salad, and champagne, and chat.

CXXXVI.

'Twas midnight—Donna Julia was in bed,
Sleeping, most probably,—when at her door
Arose a clatter might awake the dead,
If they had never been awake before,
And that they have been so we all have read,
And are to be so, at the least, once more;—
The door was fasten'd, but with voice and fist
First knocks were heard, then "Madam—Madam—hast!

CXXXVII.

"For God's sake, Madam—Madam—have 'd my master,
With more than half the city at his back—
Was ever heard of such a oust disaster!
'Tis not my fault—I kept good watch—Alack!
Do pray undo the bolt a little faster—
They're on the stair just now, and in a crack
Will all be here; perhaps he yet may fly—
Surely the window 's not so very high!"

CXXXVIII.

By this time Don Alfonso was arrived,
With torches, friends, and servants in great number;
The major part of them had long been wived,
And therefore paused not to disturb the slumber
Of any wicked woman, who contrived
By stealth her husband's temples to encumber:
Examples of this kind are so contagious,
Were one not punish'd, all would be outrageous.

CXXXIX.

I can't tell how, or why, or what suspicious
Could enter into Don Alfonso's head;
But for a cavalier of his condition
It surely was exceedingly ill-bred,
Without a word of previous admonition,
To hold a levee round his lady's bed,
And summon lackeys, arm'd with fire and sword,
To prove himself the thing he most abhor'd.

CXL.

Poor Donna Julia! starting as from sleep
(Mind—that I do not say—she had not slept),

† Lady Mary W. Montagu was an extraordinary woman: she could translate Epictetus, and yet write a song worthy of Aristippus.

Began at once to scream, and yawn, and weep;
Her maid, Antonia, who was an adept,
Contrived to fling the bed-clothes in a heap,
As if she had just now from out them crept:
I can't tell why she should take all this trouble
To prove her mistress had been sleeping double.

CXLI.

But Julia mistress, and Antonia maid,
Appear'd like two poor harmless women, who
Of goblins, but still more of men afraid,
Had thought one man might be deter'd by two,
And therefore side by side were gently laid,
Until the hours of absence should run through,
And truant husband should return, and say,
"My dear, I was the first who came away."

CXLI.

Now Julia found at length a voice, and cried,
"In heaven's name, Don Alfonso, what d'ye mean?
Has madness seized you? would that I had died
Ere such a monster's victim I had been!
What may this midnight violence betide,
A sudden fit of drunkenness or spleen?
Dare you suspect me, whom the thought would kill?
Search, then, the room!"—Alfonso said, "I will."

CXLI.

He search'd, they search'd, and rummaged everywhere,
Closet and clothes-press, chest and window-seat,
And found much linen, lace, and several pair
Of stockings, slippers, brushes, combs, complete,
With other articles of ladies fair,
To keep them beautiful, or leave them neat:
Arms they prick'd and curtains with their swords,
And wounded several shutters, and some boards.

CXLI.

Under the bed they search'd, and there they found—
No matter what—it was not that they sought;
They open'd windows, gazing if the ground
Had signs or footmarks, but the earth said nought;
And then they stared each others' faces round:
"T is odd, not one of all these seekers thought,
And seems to me almost a sort of blunder,
Of looking in the bed as well as under."

CXLI.

During this inquisition Julia's tongue
Was not asleep—"Yes, search and search," she cried,
"Insult on insult heap, and wrong on wrong!
It was for this that I became a bride!
For this in silence I have suffer'd long
A husband like Alfonso at my side;
But now I'll bear no more, nor here remain,
If there be law or lawyers in all Spain."

CXLI.

"Yes, Don Alfonso! husband now no more,
If ever you indeed deserved the name,
Is't worthy of your years?—you have threescore—
Fifty, or sixty, it is all the same—
Is't wise or fitting, causeless to explore
For facts against a virtuous woman's fame?
Ungrateful, perjured, barbarous Don Alfonso,
How dare you think your lady would go on so?"

CXLI.

"Is it for this I have disdain'd to hold
The common privileges of my sex?"

That I have chosen a confessor so old
And deaf, that any other it would vex,
And never once he has had cause to scold,
But found my very innocence perplex
So much, he always doubted I was married—
How sorry you will be when I've miscarried!

CXLI.

"Was it for this that no Cortejo* e'er
I yet have chosen from out the youth of Seville?
Is it for this I scarce went anywhere,
Except to bull-fights, mass, play, rout, and revel?
Is it for this, whate'er my suitors were,
I favor'd none—nay, was almost uncivil?
Is it for this that General Count O'Reilly,
Who took Algiers,† declares I used him vilely?"

CXLI.

"Did not the Italian Musico Caszani
Sing at my heart six months at least in vain?
Did not his countryman, Count Corniani,
Call me the only virtuous wife in Spain?
Were there not also Russians, English, many?
The Count Strongstroganoff I put in pain,
And Lord Mount Coffeehouse, the Irish peer,
Who kill'd himself for love (with wine) last year."

CL.

"Have I not had two bishops at my feet?
The Duke of Iohar, and Don Fernan Nunez;
And is it thus a faithful wife you treat?
I wonder in what quarter now the moon is:
I praise your vast forbearance not to beat
Me also, since the time so opportune is—
Oh, valiant man! with sword drawn and cock'd trigger,

Now, tell me, don't you cut a pretty figure?"

CL.

"Was it for this you took your sudden journey,
Under pretence of business indispensable
With that sublime of rascals your attorney,
Whom I see standing there, and looking sensible
Of having play'd the fool? though both I spurn, he Deserves the worst, his conduct's less defensible,
Because, no doubt, 't was for his dirty fee,
And not from any love to you nor me."

CL.

"If he comes here to take a deposition,
By all means let the gentleman proceed;
You've made the apartment in a fit condition:—
There's pen and ink for you, sir, when you need—
Let everything be noted with precision,
I would not you for nothing should be fee'd—
But, as my maid's undrest, pray turn your spies out."
"Oh!" sobb'd Antonia, "I could tear their eyes out."

CL.

"There is the closet, there the toilet, there
The antechamber—search them under, over;
There is the sofa, there the great arm-chair,
The chimney—which would really hold a lover.
I wish to sleep, and beg you will take care
And make no further noise, till you discover
The secret cavern of this lurking treasure—
And when 't is found, let me, too, have that pleasure."

CL.

"And now, Hidalgo! now that you have thrown Doubt upon me, confusion over all,
Pray have the courtesy to make it known
Who is the man you search for? how d'ye call

*The Spanish "Cortejo" is much the same as the Italian
"Cavalier Servente."

† Donna Julia here made a mistake. Count O'Reilly did not take Algiers—but Algiers very nearly took him: he and his army and fleet retreated with great loss, and not must credit, from before that city, in the year 1795.

Him? what's his lineage? let him but be shown—
I hope he's young and handsome—is he tall?
Tell me—and be assured, that since you stain
My honor thus, it shall not be in vain.

CLV.

"At least, perhaps, he has not sixty years,
At that age he would be too old for slaughter,
Or for so young a husband's jealous fears—
(Antonia! let me have a glass of water.)
I am ashamed of having shed these tears,
They are unworthy of my father's daughter;
My mother dream'd not in my natal hour,
That I should fall into a monster's power.

CLVI.

"Perhaps 't is of Antonia you are jealous,
You saw that she was sleeping by my side,
When you broke in upon us with your fellows:
Look where you please—we've nothing, sir, to hide,

Only another time, I trust, you'll tell us,
Or for the sake of decency abide
A moment at the door, that we may be Drest to receive so much good company.

CLVII.

"And now, sir, I have done, and say no more;
The little I have said may serve to show
The guileless heart in silence may grieve o'er
The wrongs to whose exposure it is slow:—
I leave you to your conscience as before,
'T will one day ask you why you used me so?
God grant you feel not then the bitterest grief!—
Antonia! where's my pocket-handkerchief?"

CLVIII.

She ceased, and turn'd upon her pillow; pale
She lay, her dark eyes flashing through their tears,
Like skies that rain and lighten; as a veil,
Waved and o'erhading her wan cheek, appears
Her streaming hair; the black curls strive, but fall,
To hide the glossy shoulder, which uprears
Its snow through all;—her soft lips lie apart,
And louder than her breathing beats her heart.

CLIX.

The Senhor Don Alfonso stood confused;
Antonia bustled round the ransack'd room,
And, turning up her nose, with looks abused
Her master, and his myrmidons, of whom
Not one, except the attorney, was amused;
He, like Achates, faithful to the tomb,
So there were quarrels, cared not for the cause,
Knowing they must be settled by the laws.

CLX.

With prying snub-nose, and small eyes, he stood,
Following Antonia's motions here and there,
With much suspicion in his attitude;
For reputations he had little care;
So that a suit or action were made good,
Small pity had he for the young and fair,
And ne'er believed in negatives, till these
Were proved by competent false witnesses.

CLXI.

But Don Alfonso stood with downcast looks,
And, truth to say, he made a foolish figure;
When, after searching in five hundred nooks,
And treating a young wife with so much rigor,
He gain'd no point, except some self-rebukes,
Added to those his lady with such vigor
Had pour'd upon him for the last half-hour,
Quick, thick, and heavy—as a thunder-shower.

ETO

CLXII.

At first he tried to hammer an excuse,
To which the sole reply was tears, and sobs,
And indications of hysterics, whose
Prologue is always certain throes, and throbs,
Gasps, and whatever else the owners choose:
Alfonso saw his wife, and thought of Job's;
He saw too, in perspective, her relations,
And then he tried to muster all his patience.

CLXIII.

He stood in act to speak, or rather stammer,
But sage Antonia cut him short before
The anvil of his speech received the hammer,
With "Pray, sir, leave the room, and say no more,
Or madam dies."—Alfonso mutter'd, "D—n her,"
But nothing else, the time of words was o'er;
He cast a rueful look or two, and did,
He knew not wherefore, that which he was bid.

CLXIV.

With him retired his "poor comitatus,"
The attorney last, who linger'd near the door
Reluctantly, still tarrying there as late as Antonia let him—not a little wroth
At this most strange and unexplain'd "Motus"
In Don Alfonso's facts, which just now wore
An awkward look; as he revolved the case,
The door was fasten'd in his legal face.

CLXV.

No sooner was it bolted, than—Oh, shame!
Oh, sin! Oh, sorrow! and Oh, womankind!
How can you do such things and keep your fame,
Unless this world, and t' other too, be blind?
Nothing so dear as an unliken'd good name!
But to proceed—for there is more behind:
With much heartfelt reluctance be it said,
Young Juan alipp'd, half-another'd, from the bed.

CLXVI.

He had been bid—I don't pretend to say
How, nor can I indeed describe the where—
Young, slender, and pack'd easily, he lay,
No doubt, in little compass, round or square;
But pity him I neither must nor may
His suffocation by that pretty pair;
'T were better, sure, to die so, than be shut
With mandlin Clarence in his Malmsey butt.

CLXVII.

And, secondly, I pity not, because
He had no business to commit a sin,
Forbid by heavenly, fined by human laws,
At least 't was rather early to begin;
But at sixteen the conscience rarely gnaws
So much as when we call our old debts in
At sixty years, and draw the accounts of evil,
And find a deuced balance with the devil.

CLXVIII.

Of his position I can give no notion:
'T is written in the Hebrew Chronicle,
How the physicians, leaving pill and potion,
Prescribed, by way of bilster, a young belle,
When old King David's blood grew dull in motion,
And that the medicine answer'd very well;
Perhaps 't was in a different way applied,
For David lived, but Juan nearly died.

CLXIX.

What's to be done? Alfonso will be back
The moment he has sent his fools away.
Antonia's skill was put upon the rack,
But no device could be brought into play—
And how to parry the renew'd attack?
Besides, it wanted but few hours of day:

Antonia puzzled; Julia did not speak,
But press'd her bloodless lip to Juan's cheek.

CLXX.

He turn'd his lip to hers, and with his hand
Call'd back the tangles of her wandering hair;
Even then their love they could not all command,
And half forgot their danger and despair:
Antonia's patience now was at a stand—
"Come, come, 't is no time now for fooling there,"
She whisper'd, in great wrath—"I must deposit
This pretty gentleman within the closet:

CLXXI.

"Pray, keep your nonsense for some luckier night—
Who can have put my master in this mood?
What will become of 't—I'm in such a fright,
The devil's in the urchin, and no good—
Is this a time for giggling? this a plight?
Why, don't you know that it may end in blood?
You'll lose your life, and I shall lose my place,
My mistress all, for that half-girlish face.

CLXXII.

"Had it but been for a stout cavalier
Of twenty-five or thirty—(come, make haste)
But for a child, what piece of work is here!
I really, madam, wonder at your taste—
(Come, sir, get in)—my master must be near:
There, for the present, at the least, he's fast,
And if we can but till the morning keep
Our counsel—(Juan, mind, you must not sleep)."

CLXXIII.

Now, Don Alfonso entering, but alone,
Closed the oration of the trusty maid:
She loiter'd, and he told her to be gone,
An order somewhat sullenly obey'd;
However, present remedy was none,
And no great good seem'd answer'd if she staid:
Regarding both with alow and sidelong view,
She smuff'd the candle, curtained, and withdrew.

CLXXIV.

Alfonso paused a minute—then begun
Some strange excuses for his late proceeding;
He would not justify what he had done,
To say the best, it was extreme ill-breeding;
But there were ample reasons for it, none
Of which he specified in this his pleading:
His speech was a fine sample, on the whole,
Of rhetoric, which the learn'd call "rigmarole."

CLXXV.

Julia said nought; though all the while there rose
A ready answer, which at once enables
A matron, who her husband's foible knows,
By a few timely words to turn the tables,
Which, if it does not silence, still must pose,—
Even if it should comprise a pack of fables;
'Tis to retort with firmness, and when he Suspects with one, do you reproach with three.

CLXXVI.

Julia, in fact, had tolerable grounds—
Alfonso's loves with Inez were well known;
But whether 't was that one's own guilt confounds—
But that can't be, as has been often shown,
A lady with apologies abounds:—
It might be that her silence sprang alone
From delicacy to Don Juan's ear,
To whom she knew his mother's fame was dear.

CLXXVII.

There might be one more motive, which makes
two;
Alfonso ne'er to Juan had alluded,—

Mention'd his jealousy, but never who
Had been the happy lover, he concluded,
Conceal'd amongst his premises: 't is true,
His mind the more o'er this its mystery brooded;
To speak of Inez now were, one may say,
Like throwing Juan in Alfonso's way.

CLXXVIII.

A hint, in tender cases, is enough;
Silence is best: besides, there is a tact—
(That modern phrase appears to me sad stuff)
But it will serve to keep my verse compact)—
Which keeps, when push'd by questions rather rough,
A lady always distant from the fact:
The charming creatures lie with such a grace,
There's nothing so becoming to the face.

CLXXIX.

They blush, and we believe them; at least I
Have always done so; 't is of no great use,
In any case, attempting a reply,
For then their eloquence grows quite profuse;
And when at length they're out of breath, they sigh,

And cast their languid eyes down, and let loose
A tear or two, and then we make it up;
And then—and then—and then—sit down and sup.

CLXXX.

Alfonso closed his speech, and begg'd her pardon,
Which Julia half withheld, and then half granted,
And laid conditions he thought very hard on,
Denying several little things he wanted:
He stood like Adam lingering near his garden,
With useless penitence perplex'd and haunted,
Beseeching she no further would refuse,
When, lo! he stumbled o'er a pair of shoes.

CLXXXI.

A pair of shoes!—what then? not much, if they
Are such as fit with ladies' feet, but these
(No one can tell how much I grieve to say)
Were masculine; to seize them, and to seize,
Was but a moment's act.—Ah! well-a-day!
My teeth begin to chatter, my veins freeze!
Alfonso first examined well their fashion,
And then flew out into another passion.

CLXXXII.

He left the room for his relinquish'd sword,
And Julia instant to the closet flew.
"Fly, Juan, fly! for heaven's sake—not a word—
The door is open—you may yet allp through
The passage you so often have explored—
Here is the garden-key—Fly—fly—Adieu!
Haste—haste! I hear Alfonso's hurrying feet—
Day has not broke—there's no one in the street."

CLXXXIII.

None can say that this was not good advice,
The only mischief was, it came too late;
Of all experience 't is the usual price,
A sort of income-tax laid on by fate:
Juan had reach'd the room-door in a trice,
And might have done so by the garden-gate,
But met Alfonso in his dressing-gown,
Who threaten'd death—so Juan knock'd him down.

CLXXXIV.

Dire was the scuffle, and out went the light;
Antonia cried out "Rape!" and Julia "Fire!"
But not a servant stirr'd to aid the fight.
Alfonso, pommell'd to his heart's desire,
Swore lustily he'd be revenged this night;
And Juan, too, blasphemed an octave higher;
His blood was up: though young, he was a Tartar,
And not at all disposed to prove a martyr.

CLXXXV.

Alfonso's sword had dropp'd ere he could draw it,
And they continued battling hand to hand,
For Juan very luckily ne'er saw it;
His temper not being under great command,
If at that moment he had chanced to claw it,
Alfonso's days had not been in the land
Much longer.—Think of husbands', lovers' lives!
And how ye may be doubly widows—wives!

CLXXXVI.

Alfonso grappled to detain the foe,
And Juan throttled him to get away,
And blood ('t was from the nose) began to flow;
At last, as they more faintly wrestling lay,
Juan contrived to give an awkward blow,
And then his only garment quite gave way;
He fled, like Joseph, leaving it; but there,
I doubt, all likeness ends between the pair.

CLXXXVII.

Lights came at length, and men, and maids, who found
An awkward spectacle their eyes before;
Antonia in hysterics, Julia swoon'd,
Alfonso leaning, breathless, by the door;
Some half-torn drapery scatter'd on the ground,
Some blood, and several footsteps, but no more:
Juan the gate gain'd, turn'd the key about,
And, liking not the inside, lock'd the out.

CLXXXVIII.

Here ends this canto.—Need I sing, or say,
How Juan, naked, favor'd by the night,
Who favors what she should not, found his way,
And reach'd his home in an unseemly plight?
The pleasant scandal which arose next day,
The nine days' wonder which was brought to light,
And how Alfonso sued for a divorce,
Were in the English newspapers, of course.

CLXXXIX.

If you would like to see the whole proceedings,
The depositions, and the cause at full,
The names of all the witnesses, the pleadings
Of counsel to nonsuit, or to annul,
There's more than one edition, and the readings
Are various, but they none of them are dull:
The best is that in short-hand ta'en by Gurney,*
Who to Madrid on purpose made a journey.

CXC.

But Donna Inez, to divert the train
Of one of the most circulating scandals
That had for centuries been known in Spain,
At least since the retirement of the Vandals,
First vow'd (and never had she vow'd in vain)
To Virgin Mary several pounds of candles;
And then, by the advice of some old ladies,
She sent her son to be shipp'd off from Cadiz.

CXCI.

She had resolved that he should travel through
All European climes, by land or sea,
To mend his former morals, and get new,
Especially in France and Italy,
(At least this is the thing most people do.)
Julia was sent into a convent: she Grieved, but, perhaps, her feelings may be better
Shown in the following copy of her Letter:—

CXCVI.

"They tell me 't is decided you depart:
'T is wise—'t is well, but not the less a pain;

I have no further claim on your young heart,
Mine is the victim, and would be again:
To love too much has been the only art
I used;—I write in haste, and if a stain
Be on this sheet, 't is not what it appears;
My eyeballs burn and throb, but have no tears.

CXCVII.

"I loved, I love you, for this love have lost
State, station, heaven, mankind's, my own esteem,
And yet can not regret what it hath cost,
So dear is still the memory of that dream;
Yet, if I name my guilt, 't is not to boast,
None can deem harsher of me than I deem:
I trace this scrawl because I cannot rest—
I've nothing to reproach, or to request.

CXCVI.

"Man's love is of man's life a thing apart.
'T is woman's whole existence; man may range
The court, camp, church, the vessel, and the mart;
Sword, gown, gain, glory, offer in exchange
Pride, fame, ambition, to fill up his heart,
And few there are whom these can not estrange;
Men have all these resources, we but one,
To love again, and be again undone.

CXCV.

"You will proceed in pleasure, and in pride,
Beloved and loving many; all is o'er
For me on earth, except some years to hide
My shame and sorrow deep in my heart's core;
These I could bear, but cannot cast aside
The passion which still rages as before,—
And so farewell—forgive me, love me—No,
That word is idle now—but let it go.

CXCVI.

"My breast has been all weakness, is so yet;
But still I think I can collect my mind;
My blood still rushes where my spirit's set.
As roll the waves before the settled wind;
My heart is feminine, nor can forget—
To all, except one image, madly blind;
So shakes the needle, and so stands the pole,
As vibrates my fond heart to my fir'd soul.

CXCVII.

"I have no more to say, but linger still,
And dare not set my seal upon this sheet,
And yet I may as well the task fulfill,
My misery can scarce be more complete;
I had not lived till now, could sorrow kill;
Death shuns the wretch who fain the blow would meet,
And I must even survive this last adieu,
And bear with life, to love and pray for you!"

CXCVIII.

This note was written upon gilt-edged paper
With a neat little crow-quill, slight and new;
Her small white hand could hardly reach the taper,
It trembled as magnetic needles do,
And yet she did not let one tear escape her;
The seal a sun-flower; "Elle vous suit partout,"
The motto cut upon a white cornelian;
The wax was superflue, its hue vermilion.

CXCVIX.

This was Don Juan's earliest scrape; but whether I shall proceed with his adventures is Dependent on the public altogether;
We'll see, however, what they say to this.
Their favor in an author's cap 's a feather,
And no great mischief 's done by their caprice;
And if their approbation we experience,
Perhaps they'll have some more about a year hence.

* William Brodie Gurney, Esq., the eminent short-hand writer to the houses of parliament.

CC.

'poem's epic, and is meant to be Divided in twelve books; each book containing,
With love, and war, a heavy gale at sea,
A list of ships, and captains, and kings reign-
ing,
New characters; the episodes are three:
A panoramic view of hell's in training,
After the style of Virgil and of Homer,
That my name of Epic's no misnomer.

CCI.

If these things will be specified in time,
With strict regard to Aristotle's rules,
As Vade Mecum of the true sublime,
Which makes so many poets, and some fools:
Good poets like blank-verse, I'm fond of rhyme;
Good workmen never quarrel with their tools;
We've got new mythological machinery,
And very handsome supernatural scenery.

CCII.

Here's only one slight difference between
Me and my epic brethren gone before,
And here the advantage is my own, I ween;
(Not that I have not several merits more,
But this will more peculiarly be seen);
They so embellish, that 't is quite a bore
Their labyrinth of fables to thread through,
Whereas this story's actually true.

CCIII.

If any person doubt it, I appeal
To history, tradition, and to facts,
To newspapers, whose truth all know and feel,
To plays in five, and operas in three acts;
All these confirm my statement a good deal,
But that which more completely faith exacts
Is, that myself, and several now in Seville,
Saw Juan's last elopement with the devil.

CCIV.

If ever I should condescend to prose,
I'll write poetical commandments, which Shall supersede beyond all doubt all those
That went before; in these I shall enrich
My text with many things that no one knows,
And carry precept to the highest pitch:
I'll call the work "Longinus o'er a Bottle,
Or, Every Poet his own Aristotle."

CCV.

Thou shalt believe in Milton, Dryden, Pope;
Thou shalt not set up Wordsworth, Coleridge,
Southey;
Because the first is crased beyond all hope,
The second drunk, the third so quaint and mouthy;

With Crabbe it may be difficult to cope,
And Campbell's Hippocrene is somewhat drouthy;
Thou shalt not steal from Samuel Rogers, nor Commit—falsification with the muse of Moore.

CCVI.

Thou shalt not covet Mr. Sotheby's Muse,
His Pegasus, nor anything that's his;
Thou shalt not bear false witness like "the Blues"—

(There's one, at least, is very fond of this);
Thou shalt not write, in short, but what I choose:
This is true criticism, and you may kiss,—
Exactly as you please, or not,—the rod;
But if you don't, I'll lay it on, by G—d!

CCVII.

If any person should presume to assert
This story is not moral, first, I pray,

That they will not cry out before they're hurt,
Then that they'll read it o'er again, and say
(But, doubtless, nobody will be so pert),
That this is not a moral tale, though gay:
Besides, in Canto Twelfth, I mean to show
The very place where wicked people go.

CCVIII.

If, after all, there should be some so blind
To their own good this warning to despise,
Led by some tortuosity of mind,
Not to believe my verse and their own eyes,
And cry that they "the moral cannot find,"
I tell him, if a clergyman, he lies;
Should captains the remark, or critics, make,
They also lie too—under a mistake.

CCIX.

The public approbation I expect,
And beg they'll take my word about the moral,
Which I with their amusement will connect
(So children cutting teeth receive a coral);
Meantime they'll doubtless please to recollect
My epical pretensions to the laurel:
For fear some prudish readers should grow skittish,
I've bribed my grandmother's review—the British.

CCX.

I sent it in a letter to the Editor,
Who thank'd me duly by return of post—
I'm for a handsome article his creditor;
Yet, if my gentle Muse he please to roast,
And break a promise after having made it her,
Denying the receipt of what it cost,
And smear his page with gall instead of honey,
All I can say is—that he had the money.

CCXI.

I think that with this holy new alliance
I may ensure the public, and defy
All other magazines of art or science,
Daily, or monthly, or three monthly; I
Have not essay'd to multiply their clients,
Because they tell me 't were in vain to try,
And that the Edinburgh Review and Quarterly
Treat a dissenting author very martyric.

CCXII.

"Non ego hoc ferrem calidus juvenis Consule Planco," Horace said, and so
Say I; by which quotation there is meant a Hint that some six or seven good years ago
(Long ere I dreamt of dating from the Brenta)
I was most ready to return a blow,
And would not brook at all this sort of thing
In my hot youth—when George the Third was King.

CCXIII.

But now at thirty years my hair is gray—
(I wonder what it will be like at forty?
I thought of a peruke the other day—)
My heart is not much greener; and, in short, I
Have squander'd my whole summer while 't was
May,
And feel no more the spirit to retort; I
Have spent my life, both interest and principal,
And deem not, what I deem'd, my soul invincible.

CCXIV.

No more—no more—Oh! never more on me
The freshness of the heart can fall like dew,
Which out of all the lovely things we see
Extracts emotions beautiful and new,
Hived in our bosoms like the bag o' the bee.
Think'st thou the honey with those objects grew?

Alas! 'twas not in them, but in thy power
To double even the sweetness of a flower.

CCXV.

No more—no more—Oh! never more, my heart,
Canst thou be my sole world, my universe!
Once all in all, but now a thing apart,
Thou canst not be my blessing or my curse:
The illusion's gone for ever, and thou art
Insensible, I trust, but none the worse,
And in thy stead I've got a deal of judgment,
Though heaven knows how it ever found a lodg-
-ment.

CCXVI.

My days of love are over; me no more
The charms of maid, wife, and still less of widow,
Can make the fool of which they made before,—
In short, I must not lead the life I did do;
The credulous hope of mutual minds is o'er;
The copious use of claret is forbid too,
So for a good old-gentlemanly vice,
I think I must take up with avarice.

CCXVII.

Ambition was my idol, which was broken
Before the shrines of Sorrow, and of Pleasure;
And the two last have left me many a token
O'er which reflection may be made at leisure:
Now, like Friar Bacon's brazen head, I've spoken,
"Time is, Time was, Time's past:"—a chemist's treasure
Is glittering youth, which I have spent betimes—
My heart in passion, and my head on rhymes.

CCXVIII.

What is the end of Fame? 'tis but to fill
A certain portion of uncertain paper:
Some liken it to climbing up a hill,
Whose summit, like all hills, is lost in vapor;
For this men write, speak, preach, and heroes kill,
And bards burn what they call their "midnight taper."
To have, when the original is dust,
A name, a wretched picture, and worse bust.

CCXIX.

What are the hopes of man? Old Egypt's King
Cheops erected the first pyramid
And largest, thinking it was just the thing
To keep his memory whole, and mummy hid;
But somebody or other rummaging
Burglariously broke his coffin's lid:
Let not a monument give you or me hopes,
Since not a pinch of dust remains of Cheops.

CCXX.

But I, being fond of true philosophy,
Say very often to myself, "Alas!
All things that have been born were born to die,
And flesh (which Death mows down to hay) is futile!"
You've pass'd your youth not so unpleasantly,
And if you had it o'er again—'t would pass—
So thank your stars that matters are no worse,
And read your Bible, sir, and mind your purse."

CCXXI.

But for the present, gentle reader! and
Still gentler purchaser! the bard—that's I—
Must, with permission, shake you by the hand,
And so your humble servant, and good-bye!
We meet again, if we should understand
Each other; and if not, I shall not try
Your patience further than by this short sample—
'T were well if others follow'd my example.

CCXXII.

"Go, little book, from this my solitude!
I cast thee on the waters—go thy ways!
And if, as I believe, thy vein be good,
The world will find thee after many days."
When Southey's read, and Wordsworth understood,
I can't help putting in my claim to praise—
The four first rhymes are Southey's, every line:
For God's sake, reader! take them not for mine.

CANTO THE SECOND.

I.

Oh, ye! who teach the ingenuous youth of nations,
Holland, France, England, Germany, or Spain,
I pray ye dog them upon all occasions,
It mends their morals, never mind the pain:
The best of mothers and of educations
In Juan's case were but employ'd in vain,
Since, in a way that's rather of the oddest, he Became divested of his native modesty.

II.

Had he but been placed at a public school,
In the third form, or even in the fourth,
His daily task had kept his fancy cool,
At least, had he been nurtured in the north;
Spain may prove an exception to the rule,
But then exceptions always prove its worth—
A lad of sixteen causing a divorce
Puzzled his tutors very much, of course.

III.

I can't say that it puzzles me at all,
If all things be considered: first, there was
His lady-mother, mathematical,
A—never mind:—his tutor, an old ass;
A pretty woman—(that's quite natural;
Or else the thing had hardly come to pass).
A husband rather old, not much in unity
With his young wife—a time, and opportunity.

IV.

Well—well; the world must turn upon its axis,
And all mankind turn with it, heads or tails,
And live and die, make love and pay our taxes,
And as the veering wind shifts, shift our sails;
The king commands us, and the doctor quacks us,
The priest instructs, and so our life exhales,
A little breath, love, wine, ambition, fame,
Fighting, devotion, dust,—perhaps a name.

V.

I said, that Juan had been sent to Cadiz—
A pretty town, I recollect it well—
'T is there the mart of the colonial trade is (Or was, before Peru learn'd to rebel),
And such sweet girls—I mean, such graceful ladies,
Their very walk would make your bosom swell:
I can't describe it, though so much it strikes,
Nor liken it—I never saw the like:

VI.

An Arab horse, a stately stag, a barb
New broke, a camelopard, a gazelle,
No—none of these will do:—and then their garb
Their veil and petticoat—Alas! to dwell

Upon such things would very near absorb
A canto—then their feet and ankles,—well,
Thank Heaven I've got no metaphor quite ready,
(And so, my sober Muse—come, let's be steady—

VII.

Chaste Muse!—well, if you must, you must)—the veil
Thrown back a moment with the glancing hand,
While the o'erpowering eye, that turns you pale,
Flashes into the heart:—All sunny land
Of love! when I forget you, may I fail
To—say my prayers—but never was there planned
A dress through which the eyes give such a volley,
Excepting the Venetian Fazzio!

VIII.

But to our tale: the Donna Ines sent
Her son to Cadiz only to embark;
To stay there had not answer'd her intent,
But why?—we leave the reader in the dark—
'T was for a voyage the young man was meant,
As if a Spanish ship were Noah's ark,
To wean him from the wickedness of earth,
And sent him like a dove of promise forth.

IX.

Don Juan bade his valet pack his things
According to direction, then received
A lecture and some money: for four springs
He was to travel; and though Inez grieved
(As every kind of parting has its stings),
She hoped he would improve—perhaps believed:
A letter, too, she gave (he never read it)
Of good advice—and two or three of credit.

X.

In the mean time, to pass her hours away,
Brave Ines now set up a Sunday-school
For naughty children, who would rather play
(Like truant rogues) the devil, or the fool;
Infants of three years old were taught that day,
Dances were whipt, or set upon a stool:
The great success of Juan's education
Spurr'd her to teach another generation.

XI.

Juan embark'd—the ship got under way,
The wind was fair, the water passing rough;
A devil of a sea rolls in that bay,
As I, who've cross'd it oft, know well enough;
And, standing on the deck, the dashing spray
Flies in one's face, and makes it weather-tough:
And there he stood to last, and take again,
His first—perhaps his last—farewell of Spain.

XII.

I can't but say it is an awkward sight
To see one's native land receding through
The growing waters: it unmans one quite,
Especially when life is rather new:
I recollect Great Britain's coast looks white,
But almost every other country's blue,
When gazing on them, mystified by distance,
We enter on our nautical existence.

XIII.

So Juan stood, bewild'rd, on the deck:
The wind sung, cordage strain'd, and sailors swam,
And the ship creak'd, the town became a speck,
From which away so fair and fast they bore.
The best of remedies is a beef-steak
Against sea-sickness: try it, sir, before
You sneer, and I assure you this is true,
For I have found it answer—so may you.

XIV.

Don Juan stood, and, gazing from the stern,
Beheld his native Spain receding far:
First partings form a lesson hard to learn,
Even nations feel this when they go to war;
There is a sort of unexpressed concern,
A kind of shock that sets one's heart ajar:
At leaving even the most unpleasant people
And places, one keeps looking at the steeple.

XV.

But Juan had got many things to leave,
His mother, and a mistress, and no wife,
So that he had much better cause to grieve
Than many persons more advanced in life;
And if we now and then a sigh must heave
At quitting even those we quit in strife,
No doubt we weep for those the heart endears—
That is, till deeper griefs congeal our tears.

XVI.

So Juan wept, as wept the captive Jews
By Babel's waters, still remembering Sion:
I'd weep,—but mine is not a weeping Muse,
And such light griefs are not a thing to die on;
Young men should travel, if but to amuse
Themselves; and the next time their servants
Behind their carriages their new portmanteau,
Perhaps it may be lined with this my canto.

XVII.

And Juan wept, and much he sigh'd and thought,
While his salt tears dropp'd into the salt sea,
"Sweets to the sweet" (I like so much to quote;
You must excuse this extract,—'t is where she,
The Queen of Denmark, for Ophelia brought Flowers to the grave); and, sobbing often, he Reflected on his present situation,
And seriously resolved on reformation.

XVIII.

"Farewell, my Spain! a long farewell!" he cried,
"Perhaps I may revisit thee no more,
But die, as many an exiled heart hath died,
Of its own thirst to see again thy shore:
Farewell, where Guadaluvir's waters glide!
Farewell, my mother! and, since all is o'er,
Farewell, too, dearest Julia!—(here he drew
Her letter out again, and read it through).

XIX.

"And oh! if e'er I should forget, I swear—
But that's impossible, and cannot be—
Sooner shall this blue ocean melt to air,
Sooner shall earth resolve itself to sea,
Than I resign thine image, oh, my fair!
Or think of anything, excepting thee;
A mind diseased no remedy can physio—
(Here the ship gave a lurch, and he grew sea-sick).

XX.

"Sooner shall heaven kiss earth—(here he fell sicker)
Oh, Julia! what is every other woe?—
(For God's sake let me have a glass of liquor; Pedro, Battista, help me down below.)
Julia, my love!—(you rascal, Pedro, quicker)—
Oh, Julia!—(this curst vessel pitches so)—
Beloved Julia, hear me still beseeching!"
(Here he grew inarticulate with retching.)

XXI.

He felt that chilling heaviness of heart,
Or rather stomach, which, alas! attends,
Beyond the best apothecary's art,
The loss of love, the treachery of friends,

Or death of those we dote on, when a part
Of us dies within them as each foud hope ends:
No doubt he would have been much more pathetic,
But the sea acted as a strong emetic.

XXII.

Love's a capricious power: I've known it hold
Out through a fever caused by its own heat,
But be much puzzled by a cough and cold,
And find a quinsy very hard to treat;
Against all noble maladies he's bold,
But vulgar illnesses don't like to meet.
Nor that a sneeze should interrupt his sigh,
Nor inflammations redder his blind eye.

XXIII.

But worst of all is nausea, or a pain
About the lower region of the bowels;
Love, who heroically breathes a vein,
Shrinks from the application of hot towels,
And purgatives are dangerous to his reign.
Sea-sickness death: his love was perfect, how Could Juan's passion, while the billows roar,
Resist his stomach, ne'er at sea before?

XXIV.

The ship, call'd the most holy "Trinidad,"
Was steering duly for the port Leghorn;
For there the Spanish family Moncada
Were settled long ere Juan's sire was born:
They were relations, and for them he had a Letter of introduction, which the morn
Of his departure had been sent him by His Spanish friends for those in Italy.

XXV.

His suite consisted of three servants and
A tutor, the licentiate Pedrillo,
Whose several languages did understand,
But now lay sick and speechless on his pillow,
And, rocking in his hammock, long'd for land,
His headache being increased by every billow;
And the waves oozing through the port-hole made
His berth a little damp, and him afraid.

XXVI.

'T was not without some reason, for the wind
Increased at night, until it blew a gale;
And though 't was not much to a naval mind,
Some landmen would have look'd a little pale,
For sailors are, in fact, a different kind:
At sunset they began to take in sail,
For the sky show'd it would come on to blow,
And carry away, perhaps, a mast or so.

XXVII.

At one o'clock the wind with sudden shift
Threw the ship right into the trough of the sea,
Which struck her aft, and made an awkward rift.
Started the stern-post, also shatter'd the Whole of her stern-frame, and, ere she could lift
Herself from out her present jeopardy,
The rudder tore away: 't was time to sound
The pumps, and there were four feet water found.

XXVIII.

One gang of people instantly was put
Upon the pumps, and the remainder set
To get up part of the cargo, and what not;
But they could not come at the leak as yet;
At last they did get at it really, but Still their salvation was an even bet:
The water rush'd through in a way quite puzzling,
While they thrust sheets, shirts, jackets, bales of mould,

XXIX.

Into the opening; but all such expedients
Would have been vain, and they soon were down,
Despite of all their efforts and expellents,
But for the pumps: I'm glad to make them known,
To all the brother tars who may have need of them,
For fifty tons of water were spew'd
By them per hour, and they had all been tedious,
But for the maker, Mr. Mann, of London.

XXX.

As day advanced the weather seem'd to abate,
And then the leak they reckon'd to reduce,
And keep the ship afloat, though three feet yet
Kept two hand and one chain-pump still in use.
The wind blew fresh again: as it grew late
A squall came on, and while some guns were loose,
A gust—which all descriptive power transcends—
Laid with one blast the ship on her beam ends.

XXXI.

There she lay, motionless, and seem'd to wait;
The water left the hold, and wash'd the deck,
And made a scene men do not soon forget;
For they remember battles, fires, and wrecks,
Or any other thing that brings regret,
Or breaks their hopes, or hearts, or heads, or nests:
Thus drownings are much talk'd of by the crew,
And swimmers, who may chance to be surprised.

XXXII.

Immediately the masts were cut away,
Both main and mizen; first the mainmast crew,
The main-mast follow'd; but the ship still lay
Like a mere log, and baffled our intent.
Foremast and bowsprit were cut down, and they Eased her at last (although we never meant
To part with all till every hope was blighted,
And then with violence the old ship righted.

XXXIII.

It may be easily supposed, while this
Was going on, some people were uneasy,
That passengers would find it much agreeable
To lose their lives, as well as spoil their state;
That even the able seaman, desiring his Days nearly o'er, might be disposed to quit,
As upon such occasions tars will ask
For grog, and sometimes drink rum from the cask.

XXXIV.

There's nought, no doubt, so much the sailors prize
As rum and true religion: thus it was,
Some plunder'd, some drank spirits, some sang psalms,
The high wind made the trouble, and as they
The hoarse harsh waves kept time; mightiest the quailms

Of all the luckless landmen's sea-sick songs:
Strange sounds of wailing, blasphemy, confusion,
Clamor'd in chorus to the roaring ocean.

XXXV.

Perhaps more mischief had been done, but for
Our Juan, who, with some beyond his years,
Got to the spirit-room, and stood before
It with a pair of pistols; and their lives
As if Death were more dreadful by the
Of fire than water, spite of odds and odds,
Kept still aloof the crew, who, ere they Thought it would be becoming to the

XXXVI.

"Give us more grog," they cried, "and
All one an hour hence."

'T is true that death awaits both you and me,
But let us die like men, not sink below
Like brutes: "—and thus his dangerous post kept he,
And none liked to anticipate the blow;
And even Pedrillo, his most reverend tutor,
Was for some run a disappointed suitor.

XXXVII.

The good old gentleman was quite aghast,
And made a loud and pious lamentation;
Repented all his sins, and made a last
Irrevocable vow of reformation;
Nothing should tempt him more (this peril past)
To quit his academic occupation,
In cloisters of the classic Salamanca,
To follow Juan's wake, like Sancho Panca.

XXXVIII.

But now there came a flash of hope once more;
Day broke, and the wind lull'd: the masts were
gone,
The leak increased; shoals round her, but no shore,
The vessel swam, yet still she held her own.
They tried the pumps again, and though before
Their desperate efforts seem'd all useless grown,
A glimpse of sunshine set some hands to bale—
The stronger pump'd, the weaker thrumm'd a sail.

XXXIX.

Under the vessel's keel the sail was pass'd,
And for the moment it had some effect;
But with a leak, and not a stick of mast,
Nor rag of canvas, what could they expect?
But still 't is best to struggle to the last,
'T is never too late to be wholly wreck'd:
And though 't is true that man can only die once,
'T is not so pleasant in the Gulf of Lyons.

XL.

There winds and waves had hurl'd them, and from thence,
Without their will, they carried them away;
For they were forced with steering to dispense,
And never had as yet a quiet day
On which they might repose, or even commence
A jurmast or rudder, or could say
The ship would swim an hour, which, by good luck,
Still swam—though not exactly like a duck.

XLI.

The wind, in fact, perhaps, was rather less.
But the ship labor'd so, they scarce could hope
To weather out much longer; the distress
Was also great with which they had to cope
For want of water, and their solid mess
Was scant enough: in vain the telescope
Was used—nor sail nor shore appear'd in sight,
Nought but the heavy sea, and coming night.

XLII.

Again the weather threaten'd,—again blew
A gale, and in the fore and after hold
Water appear'd; yet, though the people knew
All this, the most were patient, and some bold,
Until the chains and leathers were worn through
Of all our pumps:—a wreck complete she roll'd,
At mercy of the waves, whose mercies are Like human beings during civil war.

XLIII.

Then came the carpenter, at last, with tears
In his rough eyes, and told the captain, he Could do no more: he was a man in years,
And long had voyaged through many a stormy
sea,
And if he wept at length, they were not fears
That made his eyelids as a woman's be,

But he, poor fellow, had a wife and children,—
Two things for dying people quite bewildering.

XLIV.

The ship was evidently settling now
Fast by the head; and, all distinction gone,
Some went to prayers again, and made a vow
Of candles to their saints—but there were none
To pay them with; and some look'd o'er the bow;
Some hoisted out the boats; and there was one
That begg'd Pedrillo for an absolution,
Who told him to be damn'd—in his confusion.

XLV.

Some lash'd them in their hammocks; some put on
Their best clothes, as if going to a fair;
Some cursed the day on which they saw the sun,
And gnash'd their teeth, and, howling, tore their hair;
And others went on as they had begun,
Getting the boats out, being well aware
That a tight boat will live in a rough sea,
Unless with breakers close beneath her lee.

XLVI.

The worst of all was, that in their condition,
Having been several days in great distress,
'T was difficult to get out such provision
As now might render their long suffering less:
Men, even when dying, dislike inanition;
Their stock was damaged by the weather's stress:
Two casks of biscuit, and a keg of butter,
Were all that could be thrown into the cutter.

XLVII.

But in the long-boat they contrived to stow
Some pounds of bread, though injured by the wet;
Water, a twenty-gallon cask or so;
Six flasks of wine; and they contrived to get
A portion of their beef up from below,
And with a piece of pork, moreover, met,
But scarce enough to serve them for a luncheon—
Then there was rum, eight gallons in a puncheon.

XLVIII.

The other boats, the yawl and pinnace, had
Been stove in the beginning of the gale;
And the long-boat's condition was but bad,
As there were but two blankets for a sail,
And one oar for a mast, which a young lad
Threw in by good luck over the ship's rail;
And two boats could not hold, far less be stored,
To save one half the people then on board.

XLIX.

'T was twilight, and the sunless day went down
Over the waste of waters; like a veil,
Which, if withdrawn, would but disclose the frown
Of one whose hate is mask'd but to assail.
Thus to their hopeless eyes the night was shown,
And grimly darkled o'er the faces pale,
And the dim desolate deep: twelve days had Fear
Been their familiar, and now Death was here.

L.

Some trial had been making at a raft,
With little hope in such a rolling sea,
A sort of thing at which one would have laugh'd,
If any laughter at such times could be,
Unless with people who too much have quaff'd,
And have a kind of wild and horrid glee,
Half epileptical, and half hysterical:—
Their preservation would have been a miracle.

LI.

At half-past eight o'clock, booms, hencoops, spars,
And all things, for a chance, had been cast loose,

That still could keep afloat the struggling tars,
For yet they strove, although of no great use:
There was no light in heaven but a few stars,
The boats put off o'ercrowded with their crews;
She gave a hee!, and then a lurch to port,
And, going down head foremost—sunk, in short.

LII.

Then rose from sea to sky the wild farewell—
Then shriek'd the timid, and stood still the brave,—
Then some leap'd overboard with dreadful yell,
As eager to anticipate their grave;
And the sea yawn'd around her like a hell,
And down she suck'd with her the whirling wave,
Like one who grapples with his enemy,
And strives to strangle him before he die.

LIII.

And first one universal shriek there rush'd,
Louder than the loud ocean, like a crash,
Of echoing thunder; and then all was hush'd,
Save the wild wind and the remorseless dash
Of billows; but at intervals there gush'd,
Accompanied with a convulsive splash,
A solitary shriek, the bubbling cry
Of some strong swimmer in his agony.

LIV.

The boats, as stated, had got off before,
And in them crowded several of the crew;
And yet their present hope was hardly more
Than what it had been, for so strong it blew
There was slight chance of reaching any shore,
And then they were too many, though so few—
Nine in the cutter, thirty in the boat,
Were counted in them when they got afloat.

LV.

All the rest perish'd; near two hundred souls
Had left their bodies; and what's worse, alas!
When over Catholics the ocean rolls,
They must wait several weeks before a mass
Takes off one peck of purgatorial coals,
Because, till people know what's come to pass,
They won't lay out their money on the dead—
It costs three francs for every mass that's said.

LVI.

Juan got into the long-boat, and there
Contrived to help Pedrillo to a place;
It seem'd as if they had exchanged their care,
For Juan wore the magisterial face
Which courage gives, while poor Pedrillo's pair
Of eyes were crying for their owner's care:
Battista, though (a name call'd shortly Tita),
Was lost by getting at some aqua-vita.

LVII.

Pedro, his valet, too, he tried to save,
But the same cause, conducive to his loss,
Left him so drunk, he jump'd into the wave,
As o'er the cutter's edge he tried to cross,
And so he found a wine-and-watery grave;
They could not rescue him although so close,
Because the sea ran higher every minute,
And for the boat—the crew kept crowding in it.

LVIII.

A small old spaniel,—which had been Don José's,
His father's, whom he loved, as ye may think,
For on such things the memory reposes
With tenderness,—stood howling on the brink,
Knowing (dogs have such intellectual noses!),
No doubt, the vessel was about to sink;
And Juan caught him up, and ere he stepp'd
Off threw him in, then after him he leap'd.

STU

LIX.

He also stuff'd his money where he could
About his person, and Pedrillo's too,
Who let him do, in fact, whatever he would,
Not knowing what himself to say, or do,
As every rising wave his dread renew'd;
But Juan, trusting they might still get through,
And deeming there were remedies for any ill,
Thus re-embark'd his tutor and his spaniel.

LX.

'T was a rough night, and blew so stiffly yet,
That the sail was becalm'd between the seas,
Though on the wave's high top too much to set,
They dared not take it in for all the breeze:
Each sea curl'd o'er the stern, and kept them wet,
And made them bale without a moment's ease,
So that themselves as well as hopes were damp'd,
And the poor little cutter quickly swamp'd.

LXI.

Nine souls more went in her: the long-boat still Kept above water, with an oar for mast,
Two blankets stitch'd together, answering ill
Instead of sail, were to the oar made fast;
Though every wave roll'd menacing to ill,
And present peril all before surpass'd,
They grieved for those who perish'd with the cutter,
And also for the biscuit-casks and butter.

LXII.

The sun rose red and fiery, a sure sign
Of the continuance of the gale: to run
Before the sea until it should grow fine,
Was all that for the present could be done:
A few tea-spoonfuls of their rum and wine
Were served out to the people, who begun
To faint, and damaged bread wet through the bags,
And most of them had little clothes but rags.

LXIII.

They counted thirty, crowded in a space
Which left scarce room for motion or exertion;
They did their best to modify their case,
One half sate up, though numb'd with the immersion,
While t'other half were laid down in their place,
At watch and watch; thus, shivering like the tertian
Ague in its cold fit, they fill'd their boat,
With nothing but the sky for a great coat.

LXIV.

'T is very certain the desire of life
Prolongs it: this is obvious to physicians,
When patients, neither plagued with friends nor wife,
Survive through very desperate conditions,
Because they still can hope, nor shines the knife
Nor shears of Atropos before their visions:
Despair of all recovery spoils longevity,
And makes men's miseries of alarming brevity.

LXV.

'T is said that persons living on annuities
Are longer lived than others,—God knows why,
Unless to plague the grantors,—yet so true it is,
That some, I really think, do never die:
Of any creditors the worst a Jew it is,
And that's their mode of furnishing supply:
In my young days they lent me cash that way,
Which I found very troublesome to pay.

LXVI.

'T is thus with people in an open boat,
They live upon the love of life, and bear ore than can be believed, or even thought,

And stand like rocks the tempest's wear and tear;
And hardship still has been the sailor's lot,
Since Noah's ark went cruising here and there;
He had a curious crew as well as cargo,
Like the first old Greek privateer, the Argo.

LXVII.

At man is a carnivorous production,
And must have meals, at least one meal a day;
He cannot live, like woodcocks, upon suction,
But, like the shark and tiger, must have prey;
Although his anatomical construction
Bears vegetables, in a gubbling way,
Our laboring people think beyond all question
Cef, veal, and mutton, better for digestion.

LXVIII.

And thus it was with this our hapless crew;
For on the third day there came on a calm,
And though at first their strength it might renew,
And, lying on their weariness like balm,
Still'd them like turtles sleeping on the blue
Of ocean, when they woke they felt a qualm,
And fell all ravenously on their provision,
Instead of boarding it with due precision.

LXIX.

The consequence was easily foreseen—
They ate up all they had, and drank their wine,
In spite of all remonstrances, and then
On what, in fact, next day were they to dine?
They hoped the wind would rise, these foolish men!
And carry them to shore; these hopes were fine,
But as they had but one ear, and that brittle,
It would have been more wise to save their victual.

LXX.

The fourth day came, but not a breath of air
And Ocean slumber'd like an unwean'd child:
The fifth day, and their boat lay floating there,
The sea and sky were blue, and clear, and mild—
With their one ear (I wish they had had a pair)
What could they do? and hunger's rage grew
Wild:

So Juan's spaniel, spite of his entreating,
Was kill'd, and portion'd out for present eating.

LXXI.

On the sixth day they fed upon his hide,
And Juan, who had still refused, because
The creature was his father's dog that died,
Now feeling all the vulture in his jaws,
With some remorse received (though first denied)
As a great favor one of the fore-paws,
Which he divided with Pedrillo, who Devour'd it, longing for the other too.

LXXII.

The seventh day, and no wind—the burning sun
Blister'd and scorch'd, and, stagnant on the sea,
They lay like carcases; and hope was none,
Save in the breeze that came not: savagely
They glared upon each other—all was done,
Water, and wine, and food,—and you might see
The longings of the cannibal arise
(Although they spoke not) in their wolfish eyes.

LXXIII.

At length one whisper'd his companion, who
Whisper'd another, and thus it went round,
And then into a hoarser murmur grew,
An ominous, and wild, and desperate sound;
And when his comrade's thought each sufferer
Knew,
'T was but his own, suppress'd till now, he Found:

And out they spoke of lots for flesh and blood,
And who should die to be his fellows' food.

LXXIV.

But ere they came to this, they that day shared
Some leathern caps, and what remain'd of shoes;
And then they look'd around them, and despair'd,
And none to be the sacrifice would choose;
At length the lots were torn up, and prepared,
But of materials that must shock the Muse—
Having no paper, for the want of better.
They took by force from Juan Julia's letter.

LXXV.

The lots were made, and mark'd, and mix'd, and banded,
In silent horror, and their distribution
Lull'd even the savage hunger which demanded,
Like the Promethean vulture, this pollution;
None in particular had sought or plann'd it,
'T was nature gnaw'd them to this resolution,
By which none were permitted to be neuter—
And the lot fell on Juan's luckless tutor.

LXXVI.

He but requested to be bled to death:
The surgeon had his instruments, and bled
Pedrillo, and so gently ebb'd his breath,
You hardly could perceive when he was dead.
He died as born, a Catholic in faith,
Like most in the belief in which they're bred,
And first a little crucifix he kiss'd,
And then held out his jugular and wrist.

LXXVII.

The surgeon, as there was no other fee,
Had his first choice of morsels for his pains;
But being thirstiest at the moment, he
Preferr'd a draught from the fast-flowing veins:
Part was divided, part thrown in the sea,
And such things as the entrails and the brains
Regaled two sharks, who follow'd o'er the billow—
The sailors ate the rest of poor Pedrillo.

LXXVIII.

The sailors ate him, all save three or four,
Who were not quite so fond of animal food;
To these was added Juan, who, before
Refusing his own spaniel, hardly could Feel now his appetite increased much more;
'T was not to be expected that he should,
Even in extremity of his disaster,
Dine with them on his pastor and his master.

LXXIX.

'T was better that he did not: for, in fact,
The consequence was awful in the extreme;
For they, who were most ravenous in the act,
Went raging mad—Lord! how they did blaspheme!
And foam, and roll, with strange convulsions rack'd,
Drinking salt water like a mountain stream,
Tearing, and grinning, howling, screeching, swear-
ing,
And, with hyena-laughter, died despairing.

LXXX.

Their numbers were much thinn'd by this inflic-
tion,
And all the rest were thin enough, Heaven knows;
And some of them had lost their recollection,
Happier than they who still perceived their woes;
But others ponder'd on a new dissection,
As if not warn'd sufficiently by those
Who had already perish'd, suffering madly,
For having used their appetites so sadly.

LXXXI.

And next they thought upon the master's mate,
As fastest; but he saved himself, because,
Besides being much averse from such a fate,
There were some other reasons: the first was
He had been rather indisposed of late;
And that which chiefly proved his saving clause,
Was a small present made to him at Cadiz,
By general subscription of the ladies.

LXXXII.

Of poor Pedrillo something still remain'd,
But was used sparingly,—some were afraid,
And others still their appetites constrain'd;
Or but at times a little supper made;
All except Juan, who throughout abstain'd,
Chewing a piece of bamboo, and some lead:
At length they caught two boobies, and a noddy,
And then they left off eating the dead body.

LXXXIII.

And if Pedrillo's fate should shocking be,
Remember Ugolino condescends
To eat the head of his arch-enemy
The moment after he politely ends
His tale; if foes be food in hell, at sea
'T is surely fair to dine upon our friends,
When shipwreck's short allowance grows too
wantry,
Without being much more horrible than Dante.

LXXXIV.

And the same night there fell a shower of rain,
For which their mouths gaped, like the cracks of earth
When dried to summer dust; till taught by pain,
Men really know not what good water's worth;
If you had been in Turkey or in Spain,
Or with a famish'd boat's crew had your berth,
Or in the desert heard the camel's bell,
You'd wish yourself where Truth is—in a well.

LXXXV.

It pour'd down torrents, but they were no richer
Until they found a ragged piece of sheet,
Which served them as a sort of spongy pitcher,
And when they deem'd its moisture was complete,
They wrung it out, and though a thirsty ditcher
Might not have thought the scanty draught so sweet
As a full pot of porter, to their thinking
They ne'er till now had known the joys of drinking.

LXXXVI.

And their baked lips, with many a bloody crack,
Suck'd in the moisture, which like nectar
stream'd;
Their throats were ovens, their swollen tongues were black.
As the rich man's in hell, who vainly scream'd
To beg the beggar, who could not rain back
A drop of dew, when every drop had seem'd
To taste of heaven—if this be true, indeed,
Some Christians have a comfortable creed.

LXXXVII.

There were two fathers in this ghastly crew,
And with them their two sons, of whom the one
Was more robust and hardy to the view,
But he died early; and when he was gone,
His nearest messmate told his sire, who threw
One glance at him, and said, "Heaven's will be done!"

I can do nothing," and he saw him thrown
Into the deep without a tear or groan.

LXXXVIII.

The other father had a weaker child,
Of a soft cheek, and aspect delicate;
But the boy bore up long, and with a mild
And patient spirit held aloof his fate;
Little he said, and now and then he smiled,
As if to win a part from off the weight
He saw increasing on his father's heart,
With the deep deadly thought, that they must part.

LXXXIX.

And o'er him bent his sire, and never raised
His eyes from off his face, but wiped the foam
From his pale lips, and ever on him gazed,
And when the wish'd-for shower at length we come,
And the boy's eyes, which the dull film half gazed,
Brighten'd, and for a moment seem'd to roan,
He squeezed from out a rag some drops of rain
Into his dying child's mouth—but in vain.

XC.

The boy expired—the father held the clay,
And look'd upon it long, and when at last
Death left no doubt, and the dead burden lay
Stiff on his heart, and pulse and hope were past,
He watch'd it wistfully, until away
'T was borne by the rude wave wherein 't was cast;
Then he himself sunk down all dumb and shivering,
And gave no sign of life, save his limbs quivering.

XCI.

Now overhead a rainbow, bursting through
The scattering clouds, shone, spanning the dark
sea,
Resting its bright base on the quivering blue;
And all within its arch appear'd to be
Clearer than that without, and its wide base
Wax'd broad and waving, like a banner free,
Then changed like to a bow that's bent, and then
Forsook the dim eyes of these shipwreck'd men.

XCII.

It changed, of course; a heavenly chameleon,
The airy child of vapor and the sun,
Brought forth in purple, cradled in vermilion,
Baptized in molten gold, and swathed in dun,
Glittering like crecents o'er a Turk's pavilion,
And blending every color into one,
Just like a black eye in a recent scuffle
(For sometimes we must box without the muffle).

XCIII.

Our shipwreck'd seamen thought it a good omen—
It is as well to think so, now and then;
'T was an old custom of the Greek and Roman,
And may become of great advantage when
Folks are discouraged; and most surely no man
Had greater need to nerve himself again
Than these, and so this rainbow look'd like hope—
Quite a celestial kaleidoscope.*

XCIV.

About this time a beautiful white bird,
Web-footed, not unlike a dove in size
And plumage (probably it might have err'd
Upon its course), pass'd off before their eyes,
And tried to perch, although it saw and heard
The men within the boat, and in this guise
It came and went, and flutter'd round them till Night fell:—this seem'd a better omen still.

* An instrument, invented by Sir David Brewster, which presents the eye by an ever-varying succession of splendid 480 static and symmetrical forms, and has been of great service in suggesting patterns to our manufacturers.

XCIV.

t in this case I also must remark,
T was well this bird of promise did not perch, cause the tackle of our shatter'd bark
Was not so safe for roosting as a church;
id had it been the dove from Noah's ark,
returning there from her successful search,
rich in their way that moment chanced to fall,
ey would have eat her, olive-branch and all.

XCIV.

With twilight it again came on to blow,
But not with violence; the stars shone out,
e boat made way; yet now they were so low,
They knew not where nor what they were about;
me fancied they saw land, and some said "No!"
The frequent fog-banks gave them cause to doubt—
me swore that they heard breakers, others guns, id all mistook about the latter once.

XCVII.

morning broke, the light wind died away,
When he who had the watch sung out and swore,
't was not land that rose with the sun's ray,
He wish'd that land he never might see more;
id the rest rubb'd their eyes and saw a bay,
Or thought they saw, and shaped their course for shore;
r shore it was, and gradually grew stinct, and high, and palpable to view.

XCVIII.

nd then of these some part burst into tears,
And others, looking with a stupid stare,
ould not yet separate their hopes from fears,
And seem'd as if they had no further care;
hile a few pray'd—(the first time for some years)—
And at the bottom of the boat three were sleep: they shook them by the hand and head, nd tried to awaken them, but found them dead.

XCIX.

he day before, fast sleeping on the water,
They found a turtle of the hawk's-bill kind,
nd by good fortune, gliding softly, caught her,
Which yielded a day's life, and to their mind
roved even still a more nutritious matter,
Because it left encouragement behind:
hey thought that in such perils, more than chance ad sent them this for their deliverance.

C.

he land appear'd a high and rocky coast,
And higher grew the mountains as they drew,
s by a current, toward it: they were lost
In various conjectures, for none knew
e what part of the earth they had been tost,
So changeable had been the winds that blew;
me thought it was Mount Ætna, some the highlands
f Candia, Cyprus, Rhodes, or other islands.

CI.

feantime the current, with a rising gale,
Still set them on towards the welcome shore,
like Charon's bark of spectres, dull and pale:
Their living freight was now reduced to four,
nd three dead, whom their strength could not avail
To heave into the deep with those before, hough the two sharks still follow'd them, and dash'd
he spray into their faces as they splash'd.

CII.

'amine, despair, cold, thirst, and heat, had done
Their work on them by turns, and thinn'd them to

Such things a mother had not known her son
Amidst the skeletons of that gaunt crew;
By night chill'd, by day scor'd, thus one by one
They perish'd, until wither'd to these few,
But chiefly by a species of self-slaughter,
In washing down Pedrillo with salt water.

CIII.

As they drew nigh the land, which now was seen
Unequal in its aspect here and there,
They felt the freshness of its growing green,
That waved in forest-tops, and smooth'd the air,
And fell upon their glazed eyes like a screen
From glistening waves, and skies so hot and bare—
Lovely seem'd any object that should sweep
Away the vast, salt, dread, eternal deep.

CIV.

The shore look'd wild, without a trace of man,
And girt by formidable waves; but they
Were mad for land, and thus their course they ran,
Though right ahead the roaring breakers lay:
A reef between them also now began
To show its boiling surf and bounding spray,
But finding no place for their landing better,
They ran the boat for shore,—and overset her.

CV.

But in his native stream, the Guadalquivir,
Juan to lave his youthful limbs was wont;
And having learnt to swim in that sweet river,
Had often turn'd the art to some account:
A better swimmer you could scarce see ever,
He could, perhaps, have pass'd the Hellespont,
As once (a feat on which ourselves we prided)
Leander, Mr. Ekenhead, and I did.

CVI.

So here, though faint, emaciated, and stark,
He buoy'd his boyish limbs, and strove to ply
With the quick wave, and gain, ere it was dark,
The beach which lay before him, high and dry:
The greatest danger here was from a shark,
That carried off his neighbor by the thigh;
As for the other two, they could not swim,
So nobody arrived on shore but him.

CVII.

Nor yet had he arrived but for the ear,
Which, providentially for him, was wash'd
Just as his feeble arms could strike no more,
And the hard wave o'erwhelm'd him as 't was dash'd
Within his grasp; he clung to it, and sore
The waters beat while he thereto was lash'd;
At last, with swimming, wading, scrambling, he Roll'd on the beach, half senseless, from the sea:

CVIII.

There, breathless, with his digging nails he clung
Fast to the sand, lest the returning wave,
From whose reluctant roar his life he wrung,
Should suck him back to her insatiate grave:
And there he lay, full length, where he was flung,
Before the entrance of a cliff-worm cave,
With just enough of life to feel its pain,
And deem that it was saved, perhaps, in vain.

CIX.

With slow and staggering effort he arose,
But sunk again upon his bleeding knee
And quivering hand; and then he look'd for those Who long had been his mates upon the sea;
But none of them appear'd to share his woes,
Save one, a corpse, from out the famish'd three,
Who died two days before, and now had found
An unknown barren beach for burial ground.

CX.

And as he gazed, his dizzy brain spun fast,
And down he sunk; and as he sunk, the sand
Swam round and round, and all his senses pass'd:
He fell upon his side, and his stretch'd hand
Droop'd dripping on the oar (their jury-mast),
And, like a wither'd lily, on the land
His slender frame and pallid aspect lay,
As fair a thing as e'er was form'd of clay.

CXI.

How long in his damp trance young Juan lay
He knew not, for the earth was gone for him,
And Time had nothing more of night nor day
For his congealing blood, and senses dim;
And how this heavy faintness pass'd away
He knew not, till each painful pulse and limb,
And tingling vein, seem'd throbbing back to life,
For Death, though vanquish'd, still retired with strife.

CXII.

His eyes he open'd, shut, again unclosed,
For all was doubt and disdains; he thought
He still was in the boat, and had but dozed,
And felt again with his despair o'erwrought,
And wish'd it death in which he had reposed,
And then once more his feelings back were brought,
And slowly by his swimming eyes was seen
A lovely female face of seventeen.

CXIII.

'Twas bending close o'er his, and the small mouth
Seem'd almost prying into his for breath;
And chafing him, the soft warm hand of youth
Recall'd his answering spirits back from death;
And, bathing his chill temples, tried to soothe
Each pulse to animation, till beneath
Its gentle touch and trembling care, a sigh
'T'w these kind efforts made a low reply.

CXIV.

Then was the cordial pour'd, and mantle flung
Around his scarce-clad limbs; and the fair arm
Raised higher the faint head which o'er it hung;
And her transparent cheek, all pure and warm,
Pillow'd his death-like forehead; then she wrung
His dewy curls, long drench'd by every storm;
And watch'd with eagerness each throb that drew
A sigh from his heaved bosom—and hers, too.

CXV.

And lifting him with care into the cave,
The gentle girl, and her attendant,—one
Young, yet her elder, and of brow less grave,
And more robust of figure,—then begun
To kindle fire, and as the new flames gave Light to the rocks that roof'd them, which the sun
Had never seen, the maid, or whatsoe'er
She was, appear'd distinct, and tall, and fair.

CXVI.

Her brow was overhung with coils of gold,
That sparkled o'er the auburn of her hair,
Her clustering hair, whose longer locks were roll'd
In braids behind; and though her stature were Even of the highest for a female mould,
They nearly reach'd her heel; and in her air
There was a something which bespoke command,
As one who was a lady in the land.

CXVII.

Her hair, I said, was auburn; but her eyes
Were black as death, their lashes the same hue,
Of downcast length, in whose silk shadow lies
Deepest attraction; for when to the view

Forth from its raven fringe the full glance flies,
Ne'er with such force the swiftest arrow flew;
'Tis as the snake late coil'd, who pours his length,
And hurls at once his venom and his strength.

CXVIII.

Her brow was white and low, her cheek's pure dye
Like twilight rosy still with the set sun;
Short upper lip—sweet lips! that make us sigh
Ever to have seen such; for she was one
Fit for the model of a statuary
(A race of mere impostors, when all's done—
I've seen much finer women, ripe and real,
Than all the nonsense of their stone ideal).

CXIX.

I'll tell you why I say so, for 't is just
One should not rail without a decent cause:
There was an Irish lady, to whose bust
I ne'er saw justice done, and yet she was
A frequent model; and if e'er she must Yield to stern Time and Nature's wrinkling laws,
They will destroy a face which mortal thought
Ne'er compassed, nor less mortal chisel wrought.

CXX.

And such was she, the lady of the cave:
Her dress was very different from the Spanish,
Simpler, and yet of colors not so grave;
For, as you know, the Spanish women banish
Bright hues when out of doors, and yet, while wove
Around them (what I hope will never vanish)
The basquina and the mantilla, they Seem at the same time mystical and gay.

CXXI.

But with our dame! this was not the case:
Her dress was many-color'd, finely spun;
Her locks curl'd negligently round her face,
But through them gold and gems profusely shone:
Her girdle sparkled, and the richest lace
Flow'd in her veil, and many a precious stone
Flash'd on her little hand; but, what was shock-
ing,
Her small snow feet had slippers, but no stocking.

CXXII.

The other female's dress was not unlike,
But of inferior materials: she
Had not so many ornaments to strike,
Her hair had armor only, bound to be
Her dowry; and her veil, in form alike,
Was coarser; and her air, though firm, less free;
Her hair was thicker, but less long; her eyes
As black, but quicker, and of smaller size.

CXXIII.

And these two tended him, and cheer'd him both
With food and raiment, and those soft atten-
tions,
Which are—(as I must own)—of female growth,
And have ten thousand delicate inventions:
They made a most superior mess of broth,
A thing which poetry but seldom mentions,
But the best dish that e'er was cook'd since He-mer's
Achilles order'd dinner for new comers.

CXXIV.

I'll tell you who they were, this female pair,
Lest they should seem princesses in disguise;
Besides, I hate all mystery, and that air
Of clap-trap, which your recent poets prize;
And so, in short, the girls they really were,
They shall appear before your curious eyes,
Mistress and maid; the first was only daughter
Of an old man, who lived upon the water.

CXXV.

A fisherman he had been in his youth,
And still a sort of fisherman was he;
But other speculations were, in sooth,
Added to his connection with the sea,
Perhaps not so respectable, in truth:
A little smuggling, and some piracy,
Left him, at last, the sole of many masters
Of an ill-gotten million of piastres.

CXXVI.

A fisher, therefore, was he,—though of men,
Like Peter the Apostle,—and he fish'd
For wandering merchant-vessels, now and then,
And sometimes caught as many as he wish'd;
The cargoes he confiscated, and gain
He sought in the slave-market too, and dish'd
Full many a morsel for that Turkish trade,
By which, no doubt, a good deal may be made.

CXXVII.

He was a Greek, and on his tale had built
(One of the wild and smaller Cyclades)
A very handsome house from out his guilt,
And there he lived exceedingly at ease;
Heaven knows what cash he got, or blood he spilt,
A sad old fellow was he, if you please:
But this I know, it was a spacious building,
Full of barbaric carving, paint, and gilding.

CXXVIII.

He had an only daughter, call'd Haidée,
The greatest heiress of the Eastern Isles;
Besides, so very beautiful was she,
Her dowry was as nothing to her smiles:
Still in her teens, and like a lovely tree
She grew to womanhood, and between whites
Rejected several suitors, just to learn
How to accept a better in his turn.

CXXIX.

And walking out upon the beach, below
The cliff, towards sunset, on that day she found,
Insensible,—not dead, but nearly so,—
Don Juan, almost famish'd, and half drown'd;
But being naked, she was shock'd, you know,
Yet deem'd herself in common pity bound,
As far as in her lay, "to take him in,
A stranger" dying, with so white a skin.

CXXX.

But taking him into her father's house
Was not exactly the best way to save,
But like conveying to the cat the mouse,
Or people in a trance into their grave;
Because the good old man had so much "—,"
Unlike the honest Arab thieves so brave,
He would have hospitably cured the stranger,
And sold him instantly when out of danger.

CXXXI.

And therefore, with her maid, she thought it best
(A virgin always on her maid relies)
To place him in the cave for present rest:
And when, at last, he open'd his black eyes,
Their charity increased about their guest;
And their compassion grew to such a size,
It open'd half the turnpike-gates to heaven—(Saint Paul says, 'tis the toll which must be given).

CXXXII.

They made a fire,—but such a fire as they Upon the moment could contrive with such Materials as were cast up round the bay,—
Some broken planks, and oars, that to the touch
Were nearly tinder, since so long they lay
A mast was almost crumbled to a crutch;
But, by God's grace, here wrecks were in such plenty,
That there was fuel to have furnish'd twenty.

CXXXIII.

He had a bed of furs, and a pelisse,
For Haidée stripp'd her sables off to make
His couch; and, that he might be more at ease,
And warm, in case by chance he should awake,
They also gave a petticoat apiece,
She and her maid,—and promised by daybreak
To pay him a fresh visit, with a dish
For breakfast, of eggs, coffee, bread, and fish.

CXXXIV.

And thus they left him to his lone repose:
Juan slept like a top, or like the dead,
Who sleep at last, perhaps (God only knows),
Just for the present; and in his lull'd head
Not even a vision of his former woes
Throb'd in accursed dreams, which sometimes spread
Unwelcome visions of our former years,
Till the eye, cheated, opens thick with tears.

CXXXV.

Young Juan slept all dreamless:—but the maid,
Who smooth'd his pillow, as she left the den
Look'd back upon him, and a moment stay'd,
And turn'd, believing that he call'd again.
He slumber'd; yet she thought, at least she said
(The heart will slip, even as the tongue and pen),
He had pronounced her name—but she forgot
That at this moment Juan knew it not.

CXXXVI.

And pensive to her father's house she went,
Enjoining silence strict to Zoe, who
Better than her knew what, in fact, she meant,
She being wiser by a year or two:
A year or two's an age when rightly spent,
And Zoe spent hers, as most women do,
In gaining all that useful sort of knowledge
Which is acquired in Nature's good old college.

CXXXVII.

The morn broke, and found Juan slumbering still Fast in his cave, and nothing clash'd upon
His rest; the rushing of the neighboring rill,
And the young beams of the excluded sun,
Troubled him not, and he might sleep his fill;
And need he had of slumber yet, for none
Had suffer'd more—his hardships were comparative
To those related in my grand-dad's "Narrative."

CXXXVIII.

Not so Haidée; she sadly toss'd and tumbled,
And started from her sleep, and, turning o'er,
Dream'd of a thousand wrecks, o'er which she stumbled,
And handsome corpses strew'd upon the shore;
And woke her maid so early that she grumbled,
And call'd her father's old slaves up, who swore

* Entitled "A Narrative of the Honorable John Byron (Commander in a late expedition round the world, containing an account of the great distresses suffered by himself and his companions on the coast of Patagonia, from the year 1780, till their arrival in England, 1786; written by himself." This narrative, one of the most interesting that ever appeared, was published in 1788.

In several oaths—Armenian, Turk, and Greek—
They knew not what to think of such a freak.

CXXIX.

But up she got, and up she made them get,
With some pretence about the sun, that makes
Sweet skies just when he rises, or is set;
And 'tis, no doubt, a sight to see when breaks
Bright Phoebus, while the mountains still are wet
With mist, and every bird with him awakes,
And night is flung off like a mourning suit
Worn for a husband,—or some other brute.

CXL.

I say, the sun is a most glorious sight,
I've seen him rise full oft, indeed of late
I have sat up on purpose all the night,
Which hastens, as physicians say, one's fate;
And so all ye, who would be in the right
In health and purse,* begin your day to date
From daybreak, and when coffin'd at fourscore,
Engrave upon the plate, you rose at four.

CXXI.

And Haidée met the morning face to face;
Her own was freshest, though a feverish flush
Had dyed it with the headlong blood, whose race
From heart to cheek is curd'd into a blush,
Like to a torrent which a mountain's base,
That overpowers some Alpine river's rush,
Checks to a lake, whose waves in circles spread;
Or the Red Sea—but the sea is not red.

CXXII.

And down the cliff the island virgin came,
And near the cave her quick light footsteps
drew,
While the sun smiled on her with his first flame,
And young Aurora kiss'd her lips with dew,
Taking her for a sister; just the same Mistake you would have made on seeing the two,
Although the mortal, quite as fresh and fair,
Had all the advantage, too, of not being air.

CXXIII.

And when into the cavern Haidée stepp'd
All timidly, yet rapidly, she saw
That like an infant Juan sweetly slept;
And then she stopp'd, and stood as if in awe
(For sleep is awful), and on tiptoe crept
And wrapt him closer, lest the air, too raw,
Should reach his blood, then o'er him still as death
Bent, with hush'd lips, that drank his scarce-drawn breath.

CXXIV.

And thus like to an angel o'er the dying
Who die in righteousness, she lean'd; and there
All tranquilly the shipwreck'd boy was lying,
As o'er him lay the calm and starlike air.
But Zoe the meantime some eggs was frying.
Since, after all, no doubt the youthful pair
Must breakfast, and betimes—lest they should ask
it,
She drew out her provision from the basket.

CXXV.

She knew that the best feelings must have victual,
And that a shipwreck'd youth would hungry be;
Besides, being less in love, she yawn'd a little,
And felt her veins chill'd by the neighboring sea;
And so, she cook'd their breakfast to a titile;
I can't say that she gave them any tea,

But there were eggs, fruit, coffee, bread, fish, honey,
With Selo wine,—and all for love, not money.

CXXVI.

And Zoe, when the eggs were ready, and
The coffee made, would fain have waken'd Juan;
But Haidée stopp'd her with her quick small hand.
And without a word, a sign her finger drew on
Her lip, which Zoe needs must understand;
And, the first breakfast spoilt, prepared a new one,
Because her mistress would not let her break
That sleep which seem'd as it would ne'er awake.

CXXVII.

For still he lay, and on his thin worn cheek
A purple hectic play'd like dying day
On the snow-tops of distant hills; the streak
Of suffrance yet upon his forehead lay,
Where the blue veins look'd shadowy, shrunken, and weak;
And his black curls were dewy with the spray,
Which weigh'd upon them yet, all damp and sallow,
Mix'd with the stony vapors of the vault.

CXXVIII.

And she bent o'er him, and he lay beneath,
Heav'd as the babe upon its mother's breast,
Droop'd as the willow when no winds can breathe,
Lull'd like the depth of ocean when at rest.
Fair as the crowning rose of the whole wreath,
Soft as the callow cygnet in its nest;
In short, he was a very pretty fellow,
Although his woes had turn'd him rather pallid.

CXXIX.

He woke and gazed, and would have slept again,
But the fair face which met his eyes forbade
Those eyes to close, though weariness and pain
Had further sleep a further pleasure made:
For woman's face was never form'd in vain
For Juan, so that even when he pray'd
He turn'd from grisly saints, and martyrs hairy,
To the sweet portraits of the Virgin Mary.

CL.

And thus upon his elbow he arose,
And look'd upon the lady, in whose cheek
The pale contented with the purple rose,
As with an effort she began to speak;
Her eyes were eloquent, her words would pose,
Although she told him, in good modern Greek,
With an Ionian accent, low and sweet,
That he was faint, and must not talk, but eat.

CLI.

Now Juan could not understand a word,
Being no Grecian; but he had an ear,
And her voice was the warble of a bird,
So soft, so sweet, so delicately clear,
That finer, simpler music ne'er was heard;
The sort of sound we echo with a tear,
Without knowing why—an overpowering tone,
Whence Melody descends as from a throne.

CLII.

And Juan gazed as one who is awake
By a distant organ, doubting if he be
Not yet a dreamer, till the spell is broke
By the watchman, or some such reality,
Or by one's early valet's cursed knock;
At least it is a heavy sound to me,
Who like a morning slumber—for the night
Shows stars and women in a better light.

* "In the year 1784, Dr. Franklin published a most ingenious essay on the advantages of early rising, as a more piece of economy. He estimates the saving that might be made in Paris alone, by using sunshine instead of candles, at sixty-six millions of French livres, or four millions sterling per annum."—HALL.

CLXIII.

And Juan, too, was help'd out from his dream,
Or sleep, or whate'er it was, by feeling
A most prodigious appetite; the steam
Of Zoe's cookery no doubt was stealing
Upon his senses, and the kindling beam
Of the new fire, which Zoe kept up, knealing,
To stir her viands, made him quite awake
And long for food, but chiefly a beef-steak.

CLXIV.

But beef is rare within these oxen isles;
Goat's flesh there is, no doubt, and kid, and mutton,
And, when a holiday upon them smiles,
A joint upon their barbarous spits they put on:
But this occurs but seldom, between whiles,
For some of these are rocks with scarce a hut
on;
Others are fair and fertile, among which
This, though not large, was one of the most rich.

CLXV.

I say that beef is rare, and can't help thinking
That the old fable of the Minotaur—
From which our modern morals, rightly shrinking,
Condemn the royal lady's taste who wore
A cow's shape for a mask—was only (sinking
The allegory) a mere type, no more,
That Pasiphaë promoted breeding cattle,
To make the Cretans bloodier in battle.

CLXVI.

For we all know that English people are Fed upon beef—I won't say much of beer,
Because 'tis liquor only, and being far
From this my subject, has no business here;
We know, too, they are very fond of war,
A pleasure—like all pleasures—rather dear;
So were the Cretans—from which I infer,
That beef and battles both were owing to her.

CLXVII.

But to resume. The languid Juan raised
His head upon his elbow, and he saw
A sight on which he had not lately gazed,
As all his latter meals had been quite raw,
Three or four things, for which the Lord he praised,
And, feeling still the famish'd vulture gnaw,
He fell upon whate'er was offer'd, like
A priest, a shark, an alderman, or pike.

CLXVIII.

He ate, and he was well supplied; and she,
Who watch'd him like a mother, would have fed
Him past all bounds, because she smiled to see
Such appetite in one she had deem'd dead:
But Zoe, being older than Haidée,
Knew (by tradition, for she ne'er had read)
That famish'd people must be slowly nurs'd,
And fed by spoonfuls, else they always burst.

CLXIX.

And so she took the liberty to state,
Rather by deeds than words, because the case
Was urgent, that the gentleman, whose fate
Had made her mistress quit her bed to trace
The sea-shore at this hour, must leave his plate,
Unless he wish'd to die upon the place—

* When at Seville in 1808, Lord Byron lodged in the house of two unmarried ladies; and in his diary he describes himself as having made earnest love to the younger of them, with the help of a dictionary. "For some time," he says, "I went on prosperously, both as a linguist and a lover, till at length, the lady took a fancy to a ring which I wore, and set her heart on my giving it to her, as a pledge of my sincerity.

She snatch'd it, and refused another morsel,
Saying, he had gorged enough to make a horse ill.

CLXX.

Next they—he being naked, save a tatter'd
Pair of scarce decent trowsers—went to work,
And in the fire his recent rage they scatter'd,
And dress'd him, for the present, like a Turk,
Or Greek—that is, although it not much matter'd,
Omitting turban, slippers, pistols, dirt.—
They furnish'd him, entire, except some stitches,
With a clean shirt, and very spacious breeches.

CLXXI.

And then fair Haidée tried her tongue at speaking,
But not a word could Juan comprehend,
Although he listen'd so that the young Greek in
Her earnestness would ne'er have made an end;
And, as he interrupted not, went eking
Her speech out to her protégé and friend,
Till pausing at the last her breath to take,
She saw he did not understand Romaine.

CLXXII.

And then she had recourse to nods, and signs,
And smiles, and sparkles of the speaking eye,
And read (the only book she could) the lines
Of his fair face, and found, by sympathy,
The answer eloquent, where the soul shines
And darts in one quick glance a long reply;
And thus in every look she saw express'd
A world of words, and things at which she guess'd.

CLXXIII.

And now, by dint of fingers and of eyes,
And words repeated after her, he took
A lesson in her tongue; but by surmise,
No doubt, less of her language than her look:
As he who studies fervently the skies
Turns oftener to the stars than to his book,
Thus Juan learn'd his alpha beta better
From Haidée's glance than any graven letter.

CLXXIV.

'Tis pleasing to be school'd in a strange tongue
By female lips and eyes—that is, I mean,
When both the teacher and the taught are young,
As was the case, at least, where I have been;
They smile so when one's right, and when one's wrong

They smile still more, and then there intervene
Pressure of hands, perhaps even a chaste kiss;—
I learn'd the little that I know by this:

CLXXV.

That is, some words of Spanish, Turk, and Greek,
Italian not at all, having no teachers;
Much English I cannot pretend to speak,
Learning that language chiefly from its preachers,
Barrow, South, Tillotson, whom every week
I study, also Blair, the highest teachers
Of eloquence in piety and prose—
I hate your poets, so read none of those.

CLXXVI.

As for the ladies, I have nought to say,
A wanderer from the British world of fashion,[†]
Where I, like other "dogs, have had my day,"
Like other men, too, may have had my passion—

This, however, could not be;—any thing but the ring, I declared, was at her service, and much more than its value,—but the ring itself I had made a vow never to give away."

[†] "In 1815, I formed, in the fashionable world of London, an item, a fraction, the segment of a circle, the unit of a million, the nothing of something. I had been the lion of 1812."—Byron Diary, 1821.

But that, like other things, has pass'd away,
And all her fools whom I could lay the lash on:
Foes, friends, men, women, now are nought to me
But dreams of what has been, no more to be.

CLXVII.

Return we to Don Juan. He begun
To hear new words, and to repeat them; but
Some feelings, universal as the sun,
Were such as could not in his breast be shut
More than within the bosom of a nun:
He was in love,—as you would be, no doubt,
With a young benefactress,—so was she,
Just in the way we very often see.

CLXVIII.

And every day by daybreak—rather early
For Juan, who was somewhat fond of rest—
She came into the cave, but it was merely
To see her bird reposing in his nest;
And she would softly stir his locks so curly,
Without disturbing her yet slumbering guest,
Breathing all gently o'er his cheek and mouth,
As o'er a bed of roses the sweet south.

CLXIX.

And every morn his color fresher came,
And every day help'd on his convalescence;
'T was well, because health in the human frame
Is pleasant, besides being true love's essence,
For health and idleness to passion's flame
Are oil and gunpowder; and some good lessons
Are also learnt from Ceres and from Bacchus,
Without whom Venus will not long attack us.

CLXX.

While Venus fills the heart (without heart really Love, though good always, is not quite so good),
Ceres presents a plate of vermicelli,—
For love must be sustain'd like flesh and blood,—
While Bacchus pours out wine, or hands a jelly:
Eggs, oysters, too, are amatory food;
But who is their purveyor from above
Heaven knows,—it may be Neptune, Pan, or Jove.

CLXXI.

When Juan woke he found some good things ready,
A bath, a breakfast, and the finest eyes
That ever made a youthful heart less steady,
Besides her maid's, as pretty for their size;
But I have spoken of all this already—
And repetition's tiresome and unwise,—
Well—Juan, after bathing in the sea,
Came always back to coffee and Haidée.

CLXXII.

Both were so young, and one so innocent,
That bathing pass'd for nothing; Juan seem'd
To her, as 't were, the kind of being sent,
Of whom these two years she had nightly
dream'd,
A something to be loved, a creature meant
To be her happiness, and whom she deem'd
To render happy; all who joy would win
Must share it,—Happiness was born a twin.

CLXXIII.

It was such pleasure to behold him, such Enlargement of existence to partake
Nature with him, to thrill beneath his touch,
To watch him slumbering, and to see him wake:
To live with him for ever were too much;
But then the thought of parting made her quake;
He was her own, her ocean-treasure, cast
Like a rich wreck—her first love, and her last.

CLXXIV.

And thus a moon roll'd on, and fair Haidée
Paid daily visits to her boy, and took Such plentiful precautions, that still he Remain'd unknown within his craggy nook;
At last her father's prowess put out to sea,
For certain merchantmen upon the look,
Not as of yore to carry off an Io,
But three Ragusan vessels, bound for Scio.

CLXXV.

Then came her freedom, for she had no mother,
So that, her father being at sea, she was Free as a married woman, or such other
Female, as where she likes may freely pass,
Without even the incumbrance of a brother,
The freest she that ever gazed on glass:
I speak of Christian lands in this comparison,
Where wives, at least, are seldom kept in garrison.

CLXXVI.

Now she prolong'd her visits and her talk
(For they must talk), and he had learnt to say
So much as to propose to take a walk,—
For little had he wander'd since the day
On which, like a young flower snapp'd from the stalk,
Drooping and dewy on the beach he lay,—
And thus they walk'd out in the afternoon,
And saw the sun set opposite the moon.

CLXXVII.

It was a wild and breaker-beaten coast,
With cliffs above, and a broad sandy shore,
Guarded by shoals and rocks as by an host,
With here and there a creek, whose aspect wore
A better welcome to the tempest-tost;
And rarely ceased the haughty billow's roar,
Save on the dead long summer days, which make
The outstretch'd ocean glitter like a lake.

CLXXVIII.

And the small ripple split upon the beach
Scarcely o'erpass'd the cream of your champagne,
When o'er the brim the sparkling bumpers reach,
That spring-dew of the spirit! the heart's rain!
Few things surpass old wine; and they may preach
Who please,—the more because they preach in vain,—
Let us have wine and women, mirth and laughter,
Sermons and soda-water the day after.

CLXXIX.

Man, being reasonable, must get drunk,
The best of life is but intoxication:
Glory, the grape, love, gold, in these are sunk
The hopes of all men, and of every nation;
Without their sap, how branchless were the trunk
Of life's strange tree, so fruitful on occasion!
But to return,—Get very drunk; and when
You wake with headache, you shall see what then.

CLXXX.

Ring for your valet—bid him quickly bring
Some hock and soda-water, then you'll know
A pleasure worthy Xerxes the great king;
For not the best sherbet, sublimed with snow,
Nor the first sparkle of the desert-spring,
Nor Burgundy in all its sunset glow,
After long travel, ennui, love, or slaughter,
Vie with that draught of hock and soda-water.

CLXXXI.

The coast—I think it was the coast that I
Was just describing—Yes, it was the coast—
Lay at this period quiet as the sky,
The sands untumbled, the blue waves untost,

They gazed upon the glittering sea below,
Whence the broad moon rose circling into sight;
They heard the waves' splash, and the wind so low,
And saw each other's dark eyes darting light
Into each other—

DON JUAN.—Page 487.

And all was stillness, save the sea-bird's cry,
And dolphin's leap, and little billow crost
By some low rock or shelve, that made it fret
Against the boundary it scarcely wet.

CLXXXII.

And forth they wander'd, her sire being gone,
As I have said, upon an expedition;
And mother, brother, guardian, she had none,
Save Zoe, who, although with due precision
She waited on her lady with the sun,
Thought daily service was her only mission,
Bringing warm water, wreathing her long tresses,
And aking now and then for cast-off dresses.

CLXXXIII.

It was the cooling hour, just when the rounded
Red sun sinks down behind the azure hill,
Which then seems as if the whole earth it bounded,
Circling all nature, bush'd, and dim, and still,
With the far mountain-crescent half surrounded;
On one side, and the deep sea calm and chill
Upon the other, and the rosy sky
With one star sparkling through it like an eye.

CLXXXIV.

And thus they wander'd forth, and hand in hand,
Over the shining pebbles and the shells,
Glided along the smooth and harden'd sand,
And in the worn and wild receptacles
Work'd by the storms, yet work'd as it were plann'd,
In hollow halls, with sparry roofs and cells,
They turn'd to rest; and, each clasp'd by an arm,
Yielded to the deep twilight's purple charm.

CLXXXV.

They look'd up to the sky, whose floating glow
Spread like a rosy ocean, vast and bright;
They gazed upon the glittering sea below,
Whence the broad moon rose circling into sight;
They heard the waves' splash, and the wind so low,
And saw each other's dark eyes darting light
Into each other—and, beholding this,
Their lips drew near, and clung into a kiss;

CLXXXVI.

A long, long kiss, a kiss of youth, and love,
And beauty, all concentrating like rays
Into one focus, kindled from above;
Such kisses as belong to early days,
Where heart, and soul, and sense, in concert move,
And the blood's lava, and the pulse a blaze,
Each kiss a heart-quake,—for a Kiss's strength,
I think, it must be reckon'd by its length.

CLXXXVII.

By length I mean duration; theirs endured Heaven knows how long—no doubt they never reckon'd;
And if they had, they could not have secured
The sum of their sensations to a second:
They had not spoken; but they felt allured,
As if their souls and lips each other beckon'd,
Which, being join'd, like swarming bees they clung—
Their hearts the flowers from whence the honey sprung.

CLXXXVIII.

They were alone, but not alone as they
Who shut in chambers think it loneliness;
The silent ocean, and the starlight bay,
The twilight glow, which momentarily grew less,
The voiceless sands, and dropping caves, that lay
Around them, made them to each other press,
As if there were no life beneath the sky
Save theirs, and that their life could never die.

CLXXXIX.

They fear'd no eyes nor ears on that lone beach;
They felt no terrors from the night; they were
All in all to each other: though their speech
Was broken words, they thought a language
there,—
And all the burning tongues the passions teach
Found in one sign the best interpreter
Of nature's oracle—first love,—that all
Which Eve has left her daughters since her fall.

CXC.

Haidée spoke not of scruples, ask'd no vows,
Nor offer'd any; she had never heard
Of plight and promises to be a spouse,
Or perils by a loving maid incur'd;
She was all which pure ignorance allows,
And flew to her young mate like a young bird;
And, never having dreamt of falsehood, she
Had not one word to say of constancy.

CXCI.

She loved, and was beloved—she adored,
And she was worshipp'd; after nature's fashion,
Their intense souls, into each other pour'd,
If souls could die, had perish'd in that passion,—
But by degrees their senses were restored,
Again to be o'ercome, again to dash on;
And, beating 'gainst his bosom, Haidée's heart
Felt as if never more to beat apart.

CXCII.

Alas! they were so young, so beautiful,
So lonely, loving, helpless, and the hour
Was that in which the heart is always full,
And, having o'er itself no further power,
Prompts deeds eternity can not annul,
But pays off moments in an endless shower
Of hell-fire—all prepared for people giving
Pleasure or pain to one another living.

CXCIII.

Alas! for Juan and Haidée! they were
So loving and so lovely—till then never,
Excepting our first parents, such a pair
Had run the risk of being damn'd for ever:
And Haidée, being devout as well as fair,
Had, doubtless, heard about the Stygian river,
And hell and purgatory—but forgot
Just in the very crisis she should not.

CXCIV.

They look upon each other, and their eyes
Gleam in the moonlight; and her white arm clasps
Round Juan's head, and his around her lies
Half buried in the tresses which it grasps;
She sits upon his knee, and drinks his sighs,
He hers, until they end in broken gasps;
And thus they form a group that's quite antique,
Half naked, loving, natural, and Greek.

CXCV.

And when those deep and burning moments pass'd,
And Juan sunk to sleep within her arms,
She slept not, but all tenderly, though fast,
Sustain'd his head upon her bosom's charms;
And now and then her eye to heaven is cast,
And then on the pale cheek her breast now warms,
Pillow'd on her o'erflowing heart, which pants
With all it granted, and with all it grants.

CXCVI.

An infant when it gazes on a light,
A child the moment when it drains the breast,
A devotee when soars the Host in sight,
An Arab with a stranger for a guest,

A sailor when the prize has struck in fight,
A miser filling his most hoarded chest,
Feel rapture; but not such true joy are reaping
As they who watch o'er what they love while sleeping.

CXCIV.

For there it lies so tranquil, so beloved,
All that it hath of life with us is living;
So gentle, stirless, helpless, and unmoved,
And all unconscious of the joy 't is giving;
All it hath felt, inflicted, pass'd, and proved,
Hush'd into depths beyond the watcher's diving:
There lies the thing we love with all its errors
And all its charms, like death without its terrors.

CXCIV.

The lady watch'd her lover—and that hour
Of Love's, and Night's, and Ocean's solitude,
O'erflow'd her soul with their united power;
Amidst the barren sand and rocks so rude
She and her wave-worn love had made their bower,
Where nought upon their passion could intrude,
And all the stars that crowded the blue space
Saw nothing happier than her glowing face.

CXCIV.

Alas! the love of women! it is known
To be a lovely and a fearful thing;
For all of theirs upon that die is thrown,
And if 't is lost, life hath no more to bring
To them but mockeries of the past alone,
And their revenge is as the tiger's spring,
Deadly, and quick, and crushing; yet, as real
Torture is theirs, what they inflict they feel.

CC.

They are right; for man, to man so oft unjust,
Is always so to women; one sole end
Awaits them, treachery is all their trust;
Taught to conceal, their bursting hearts despond
Over their idol, till some wealthier lust
Buys them in marriage—and what rests beyond?
A thankless husband, next a faithless lover,
Then dressing, nursing, praying, and all's over.

CCI.

Some take a lover, some take drams or prayers,
Some mind their household, others dissipation,
Some run away, and but exchange their cares,
Losing the advantage of a virtuous station;
Few changes e'er can better their affairs,
Theirs being an unnatural situation,
From the dull palace to the dirty hovel:
Some play the devil, and then write a novel.*

CCII.

Haidée was Nature's bride, and knew not this;
Haidée was Passion's child, born where the sun
Showers triple light, and scorches even the kiss
Of his gazelle-eyed daughters; she was one
Made but to love, to feel that she was his
Who was her chosen: what was said or done
Elsewhere was nothing. She had nought to fear,
Hope, care, nor love, beyond,—her heart beat here.

CCIII.

And oh! that quickening of the heart, that beat!
How much it costs us! yet each rising throb
Is in its cause as its effect so sweet,
That Wisdom, ever on the watch to rob

Joy of its alchemy, and to repeat
Fine truths; even Conscience, too, has a tough job
To make us understand each good old maxim,
So good—I wonder Castlereagh don't tax 'em.

CCL.

And now 't was done—on the lone shore were plighted
Their hearts: the stars, their nuptial torches, shed
Beauty upon the beautiful they lighted:
Ocean their witness, and the cave their bed,
By their own feelings hallow'd and united,
Their priest was Solitude, and they were wed:
And they were happy, for to their young eyes
Each was an angel, and earth paradise.

CCV.

Oh, Love! of whom great Caesar was the suitor,
Titus the pinner, Antony the slave,
Horace, Catullus, scholars, Ovid tutor,
Sappho the sage blue-stocking, in whose grave
All those may leap who rather would be neuter—
(Leucadia's rock still overlooks the wave)—
Oh, Love! thou art the very god of evil,
For, after all, we cannot call thee devil.

CCVI.

Thou mak'st the chaste connubial state precarious,
And jestest with the brows of mightiest men:
Caesar and Pompey, Mahomet, Belshazzar,
Have much employed the muse of history's pen:
Their lives and fortunes were extremely various;
Such worthless Time will never see again;
Yet to these four in three things the same luck holds,
They all were heroes, conquerors, and cuckolds.

CCVII.

Thou mak'st philosophers; there's Epicurus
And Aristippus, a material crew!
Who to immoral courses would allure us
By theories quite practicable too;
If only from the devil they would insure us,
How pleasant were the maxim (not quite new),
"Eat, drink, and love, what can the rest avail us?"
So said the royal sage Sardanapalus.

CCVIII.

But Juan! had he quite forgotten Julia?
And should he have forgotten her so soon?
I can't but say it seems to me most truly a
Perplexing question; but, no doubt, the moon
Does these things for us, and whenever newly a Strong palpitation rises, 't is her boon,
Else how the devil is it that fresh features
Have such a charm for us poor human creatures?

CCIX.

I hate inconstancy—I loathe, detest,
Abhor, condemn, abjure the mortal made
Of such quicksilver clay that in his breast
No permanent foundation can be laid;
Love, constant love, has been my constant guest,
And yet last night, being at a masquerade,
I saw the prettiest creature, fresh from Milan,
Which gave me some sensations like a villain.

CCX.

But soon Philosophy came to my aid,
And whisper'd, "Think of every sacred tie!"

* "Lady Caroline Lamb was supposed by Lord Byron to have alluded to him in her novel of 'Glenarvon,' published in 1816.—'Madame de Staël once asked me,' said Lord Byron, 'if my real character was well drawn in that novel. She was only singular in putting the question in the dry way she did.'

There are many who pin their faith on that infamous production. I am made out a very amiable person in that work! The only thing belonging to me in it is part of a letter." See portrait of Lady Caroline Lamb, ante, Life of Byron.

"I will, my dear Philosophy!" I said,
 "But then her teeth, and then, oh, Heaven! her
 eye!
 I'll just inquire if she be wife or maid,
 Or neither—out of curiosity."
 "Stop!" cried Philosophy, with air so Grecian
 (Though she was mask'd then as a fair Venetian);

CCXI.

"Stop!" so I stopp'd.—But to return: that which Men call inconstancy is nothing more
 Than admiration due where nature's rich
 Profusion with young beauty covers o'er
 Some favor'd object; and as in the niche
 A lovely statue we almost adore,
 This sort of adoration of the real
 Is but a heightening of the "beau idéal."

CCXII.

'Tis the perception of the beautiful,
 A fine extension of the faculties,
 Platonic, universal, wonderful,
 Drawn from the stars, and filter'd through the skies,
 Without which life would be extremely dull;
 In short, it is the use of our own eyes,
 With one or two small senses added, just
 To hint that flesh is form'd of fiery dust.

CCXIII.

Yet 'tis a painful feeling, and unwilling,
 For surely if we always could perceive
 In the same object graces quite as killing
 As when she rose upon us like an Eve,
 'T would save us many a headache, many a aching ling
 (For we must get them anyhow, or grieve),
 Whereas if one sole lady pleased for ever,
 How pleasant for the heart, as well as liver!

CCXIV.

The heart is like the sky, a part of heaven,
 But changes night and day, too, like the sky;
 Now o'er it clouds and thunder must be driven,
 And darkness and destruction as on high:
 But when it hath been scorch'd, and pierced, and riven,
 Its storms expire in water-drops; the eye
 Pours forth at last the heart's blood turn'd to tears,
 Which make the English climate of our years.

CCXV.

The liver is the lazaret of bile,
 But very rarely executes its function,
 For the first passion stays there such a while,
 That all the rest creep in and form a junction,
 Like knots of vipers on a dunghill's soil,
 Rage, fear, hate, jealousy, revenge, compunc-
 tion,
 So that all mischiefs spring up from this entrail,
 Like earthquakes from the hidden fire call'd "central."

CCXVI.

In the mean time, without proceeding more
 In this anatomy, I've finish'd now
 Two hundred and odd stanzas as before,
 That being about the number I'll allow
 Each canto of the twelve, or twenty-four;
 And, laying down my pen, I make my bow,
 Leaving Don Juan and Haidee to plead
 For them and theirs with all who deign to read.

CANTO THE THIRD.

I.

HAIL, Muse! of cetera.—We left Juan sleeping,
 Pillow'd upon a fair and happy breast,
 And watch'd by eyes that never yet knew weeping,
 And loved by a young heart, too deeply blest
 To feel the poison through her spirit creeping,
 Or know who rested there, a foe to rest,
 Had sol'd the sunset of her sinless years,
 And turn'd her pure heart's purest blood to tears!

II.

Oh, Love! what is it in this world of ours
 Which makes it fatal to be loved? Ah, why
 With cypress branches hast thou wreath'd thy bowers,
 And made thy best interpreter a sigh?
 As those who dote on odors pluck the flowers,
 And place them on their breast—but place to die—
 Thus the frail beings we would fondly cherish
 Are laid within our bosoms but to perish.

III.

In her first passion woman loves her lover,
 In all the others all she loves is love,
 Which grows a habit she can ne'er get over,
 And fits her loosely—like an easy glove,
 As you may find, whenever you like to prove her:
 One man alone at first her heart can move;
 She then prefers him in the plural number,
 Not finding that the additions much encumber.

IV.

I know not if the fault be men's or theirs;
 But one thing's pretty sure: a woman planted
 (Unless at once she plunge for life in prayers)—
 After a decent time must be gallanted;
 Although, no doubt, her first of love affairs
 Is that to which her heart is wholly granted;
 Yet there are some, they say, who have had none,
 But those who have ne'er end with only one.

V.

'Tis melancholy, and a fearful sign
 Of human frailty, folly, also crime,
 That love and marriage rarely can combine,
 Although they are both born in the same clime;
 Marriage from love, like vinegar from wine—
 A sad, sour, sober beverage—by time
 Is sharpen'd from its high celestial flavor
 Down to a very homely household savor.

VI.

There's something of antipathy, as 't were,
 Between their present and their future state;
 A kind of flattery that's hardly fair
 Is used until the truth arrives too late—
 Yet what can people do, except despair?
 The same things change their names at such a rate;
 For instance—passion in a lover's glorious,
 But in a husband is pronounced uxorious.

VII.

Men grow ashamed of being so very fond;
 They sometimes also get a little tired

(But that, of course, is rare), and then despond:

The same things cannot always be admired,
Yet 't is "so nominated in the bond."

That both are tied till one shall have expired.
Sad thought! to lose the spouse that was adorning
Our days, and put one's servants into mourning.

VIII.

There's doubtless something in domestic doings

Which forms, in fact, true love's antithesis;

Romances paint at full length people's wooings,

But only give a bust of marriages;

For no one cares for matrimonial coolings.

There's nothing wrong in a connubial kiss:

Think you, if Laura had been Petrarch's wife,

He would have written sonnets all his life?

IX.

All tragedies are finish'd by a death,

All comedies are ended by a marriage;

The future states of both are left to faith,

For authors fear description might disparage

The worlds to come of both, or fall beneath,

And then both worlds would punish their miscarriage;

So leaving each their priest and prayer-book ready,
They say no more of Death or of the Lady.

X.

The only two that in my recollection

Have sung of heaven and hell, or marriage, are

Dante and Milton, and of both the affection

Was hapless in their nuptials, for some bar

Of fault or temper ruin'd the connection

(Such things, in fact, it don't ask much to mar);

But Dante's Beatrice and Milton's Eve

Were not drawn from their spouses, you conceive.

XI.

Some persons say that Dante meant theology

By Beatrice, and not a mistress—I,

Although my opinion may require apology,

Deem this a commentator's fantasy,

Unless indeed it was from his own knowledge he Decided thus, and show'd good reason why;

I think that Dante's more abstruse ecstasies

Meant to personify the mathematics.

XII.

Haidée and Juan were not married, but

The fault was theirs, not mine: it is not fair,

Chaste reader, then, in any way to put

The blame on me, unless you wish they were;

Then if you'd have them wedded, please to shut

The book which treats of this erroneous pair,

Before the consequences grow too awful;

'T is dangerous to read of loves unlawful.

XIII.

Yet they were happy,—happy in the illicit

Indulgence of their innocent desires;

But more imprudent grown with every visit,

Haidée forgot the island was her sire's;

When we have what we like 't is hard to miss it,

At least in the beginning, ere one tires;

Thus she came often, not a moment losing,

Whilst her practical papa was cruising.

XIV.

Let not his mode of raising cash seem strange,

Although he fleeced the flags of every nation,

For into a prime minister but change

His title, and 't is nothing but taxation;

But he, more modest, took an humbler range

Of life, and in an honest vocation

Pursued o'er the high seas his watery journey,

And merely practiced as a sea-attorney.

XV.

The good old gentleman had been detain'd

By winds and waves, and some important captures;

And, in the hope of more, at sea remain'd,

Although a squall or two had damp'd his raptures,

By swamping one of the prizes; he had chain'd

His prisoners, dividing them like chapters

In number'd lots; they all had cuffs and collars,

And averaged each from ten to a hundred dollars.

XVI.

Some he disposed of off Cape Matapan,

Among his friends the Mainots; some he sold

To his Tunis correspondents, save one man

Toss'd overboard unsalable (being old);

The rest—save here and there some richer one,

Reserved for future ransom—in the hold,

Were link'd alike, as for the common people he

Had a large order from the Dey of Tripoli.

XVII.

The merchandise was served in the same way,

Pieced out for different marts in the Levant,

Except some certain portions of the prey,

Light classic articles of female want,

French stuffs, laces, tweezers, toothpicks, teapot,

tray,

Guitars and castanets from Alicant,

All which selected from the spoil he gathers,

Robb'd for his daughter by the best of fathers.

XVIII.

A monkey, a Dutch mastiff, a macaw,

Two parrots, with a Persian cat and kittens,

He chose from several animals he saw—

A terrier, too, which once had been a Briton's,

Who dying on the coast of Ithaca,

The peasants gave the poor dumb thing a pit-lance.

These to secure in this strong blowing weather,

He caged in one huge hamper all together.

XIX.

Then having settled his marine affairs,

Despatching single cruisers here and there,

His vessel having need of some repairs,

He shaped his course to where his daughter fair

Continued still her hospitable cares;

But that part of the coast being shoal and bare,

And rough with reefs which ran out many a mile,

His port lay on the other side o' the isle.

XX.

And there he went ashore without delay,

Having no custom-house nor quarantine

To ask him awkward questions on the way,

About the time and place where he had been;

He left his ship to be hove down next day,

With orders to the people to careen;

So that all hands were busy beyond measure,

In getting out goods, ballast, guns, and treasure.

XXI.

Arriving at the summit of a hill

Which overlook'd the white walls of his home,

He stopp'd.—What singular emotions fill

Their bosoms who have been induced to roam!

With fluttering doubts if all be well or ill—

With love for many, and with fears for some;

All feelings which o'erleap the years long lost,

And bring our hearts back to their starting-post.

XXII.

The approach of home to husbands and to sires,

After long travelling by land or water,

Most naturally some small doubt inspires—

A female family's a serious matter;

(None trusts the sex more, or so much admires—
But they hate flattery, so I never flatter;) *Wives in their husbands' absences grow subtler,
And daughters sometimes run off with the butler.*

XXIII.

An honest gentleman at his return
May not have the good fortune of Ulysses;
Not all lone matrons for their husbands mourn,
Or show the same dislike to suitors' kisses;
The odds are that he finds a handsome urn
To his memory—and two or three young misses Born to some friend, who holds his wife and riches—
And that his Argus bites him by—the breeches.

XXIV.

If single, probably his plighted fair
Has in his absence wedded some rich miser;
But all the better, for the happy pair
May quarrel, and the lady grow wiser,
He may resume his amatory care
As cavalier servente, or despise her;
And that his sorrow may not be a dumb one,
Write odes on the Inconstancy of Woman.

XXV.

And oh! ye gentlemen who have already
Some chaste raison of the kind—I mean
An honest friendship with a married lady—
The only thing of this sort ever seen
To last—of all connections the most steady,
And the true Hymen (the first 's but a screen)—
Yet for all that keep not too long away;
I've known the absent wrong'd four times a day.

XXVI.

Lambro, our sea-solicitor, who had
Much less experience of dry land than ocean,
On seeing his own chimney-smoke, felt glad;
But not knowing metaphysics, had no notion
Of the true reason of his not being mad,
Or that of any other strong emotion;
He loved his child, and would have wept the loss of her,
But knew the cause no more than a philosopher.

XXVII.

He saw his white walls shining in the sun,
His garden trees all shadowy and green;
He heard his rivulet's light bubbling run,
The distant dog-bark; and perceived between
The umbrage of the wood so cool and dun
The moving figures, and the sparkling sheen
Of arms (in the East all arm)—and various dyes
Of color'd garbs, as bright as butterflies.

XXVIII.

And as the spot where they appear he nears,
Surprised at these unwonted signs of idling,
He hears—alas! no music of the spheres,
But an unhallow'd, earthly sound of fiddling!
A melody which made him doubt his ears,
The cause being past his guessing or unriddling;
A pipe, too, and a drum, and shortly after,
A most unoriental roar of laughter.

XXIX.

And still more nearly to the place advancing,
Descending rather quickly the declivity,
Through the waved branches, o'er the greensward glancing,
Midst other indications of festivity,
Seeing a troop of his domestics dancing
Like dervishes, who turn as on a pivot, he

Perceived it was the Pyrrhic dance* so martial,
To which the Levantines are very partial.

XXX.

And further on a troop of Grecian girls,
The first and tallest her white kerchief waving,
Were strung together like a row of pearls,
Link'd hand in hand, and dancing; each too having
Down her white neck long floating auburn curls—
(The least of which would set ten poets raving);
Their leader sang—and bounded to her song,
With choral step and voice, the virgin throng.

XXXI.

And here, assembled cross-legg'd round their trays,
Small social parties just begun to dine;
Pious and meats of all sorts met the gaze,
And flasks of Samian and of Chian wine,
And sherbet cooling in the porous vase;
Above them their dessert grew on its vine;
The orange and pomegranate nodding o'er,
Dropp'd in their laps, scarce pluck'd, their mellow store.

XXXII.

A band of children, round a snow-white ram,
There wreath'd his venerable horns with flowers;
While peaceful as if still an unwean'd lamb,
The patriarch of the flock all gently cowers
His sober head, majestically tame,
Or eats from out the palm, or playful lowers
His brow, as if in act to butt, and then
Yielding to their small hands, draws back again.

XXXIII.

Their classical profiles, and glittering dresses,
Their large black eyes, and soft seraphic cheeks,
Crimson as cleft pomegranates, their long tresses,
The gesture which enchants, the eye that speaks,
The innocence which happy childhood blesses,
Made quite a picture of these little Greeks;
So that the philosophical beholder
Sigh'd for their sakes—that they should e'er grow older.

XXXIV.

Afar, a dwarf buffoon stood telling tales
To a sedate gray circle of old smokers,
Of secret treasures found in hidden vales,
Of wonderful replies from Arab jokers,
Of charms to make good gold and cure bad ails,
Of rocks bewitch'd that open to the knockers,
Of magic ladies who, by one sole act,
Transform'd their lords to beasts (but that 's a fact).

XXXV.

Here was no lack of innocent diversion
For the imagination or the senses,
Song, dance, wine, music, stories from the Persian,
All pretty pastimes in which no offence is;
But Lambro saw all these things with aversion,
Perceiving in his absence such expences,
Dreading that climax of all human ills,
The inflammation of his weekly bills.

XXXVI.

Ah! what is man? what perils still environ
The happiest mortals even after dinner!
A day of gold from out an age of iron
Is all that life allows the luckiest sinner;
Pleasure (whene'er she sings, at least) 's a siren,
That lures, to stay alive, the young beginner;

* "This dance is still performed by young men armed cap-à-pie, who execute, to the sound of instruments, all the proper movements of attack and defence."

Lambro's reception at his people's banquet
Was such as fire accords to a wet blanket.

XXXVII.

He—being a man who seldom used a word
Too much, and wishing gladly to surprise
(In general he surprised men with the sword)
His daughter—had not sent before to advise
Of his arrival, so that no one stirr'd;
And long he paused to reassure his eyes,
In fact much more astonish'd than delighted,
To find so much good company invited.

XXXVIII.

He did not know (alas! how men will lie)
That a report (especially the Greeks)
Avouch'd his death (such people never die),
And put his house in mourning several weeks,—
But now their eyes and also lips were dry;
The bloom, too, had return'd to Haidée's cheeks.
Her tears, too, being return'd into their fount,
She now kept house upon her own account.

XXXIX.

Hence all this rice, meat, dancing, wine, and idling,
Which turn'd the idle into a place of pleasure;
The servants all were getting drunk or idling,
A life which made them happy beyond measure.
Her father's hospitality seem'd middling,
Compared with what Haidée did with his treasure;
'T was wonderful how things went on improving,
While she had not one hour to spare from loving.

XL.

Perhaps you think, in stumbling on this feast,
He flew into a passion, and in fact
There was no mighty reason to be pleased;
Perhaps you prophesy some sudden act,
The whip, the rack, or dungeon at the least,
To teach his people to be more exact,
And that, proceeding at a very high rate,
He show'd the royal penchants of a pirate.

XLI.

You're wrong.—He was the mildest manner'd
man
That ever scuttled ship or cut a throat;
With such true breeding of a gentleman,
You never could divine his real thought;
No courtier could, and scarcely woman can
Gird more deceit within a petticoat;
Pity he loved adventurous life's variety,
He was so great a loss to good society.

XLII.

Advancing to the nearest dinner tray,
Tapping the shoulder of the nighest guest,
With a peculiar smile, which, by the way,
Boded no good, whatever it express'd,
He ask'd the meaning of this holiday;
The vinous Greek to whom he had address'd
His question, much too merry to divine
The questioner, fill'd up a glass of wine,

XLIII.

And without turning his facetious head,
Over his shoulder, with a Bacchant air,
Presented the overflowing cup, and said,
"Talking 's dry work, I have no time to spare."
A second hiccup'd, "Our old master 's dead,
You'd better ask our mistress, who 's his heir."

* "The account of Lambro proceeding to the house is poetically imagined; and in his character may be traced a vivid likeness of Ali Pacha, and happy illustrative allusions

"Our mistress!" quoth a third: "Our mistress!—
pooh!—
You mean our master—not the old, but new."

XLIV.

These rascals, being new comers, knew not whom
They thus address'd—and Lambro's visage fell—
And o'er his eye a momentary gloom
Pass'd, but he strove quite courteously to quell
The expression, and endeavoring to resume
His smile, requested one of them to tell
The name and quality of his new patron,
Who seem'd to have turn'd Haidée into a matron.

XLV.

"I know not," quoth the fellow, "who or what
He is, nor whence he came—and little care;
But this I know, that this roast capon 's fat,
And that good wine ne'er wash'd down better fare;
And if you are not satisfied with that,
Direct your questions to my neighbor there;
He'll answer all for better or for worse,
For none likes more to hear himself converse."

XLVI.

I said that Lambro was a man of patience,
And certainly he show'd the best of breeding,
Which scarce even France, the paragon of nations,
E'er saw her most polite of sons exceeding;
He bore these sneers against his near relations,
His own anxiety, his heart, too, bleeding,
The insults, too, of every servile glutton,
Who all the time was eating up his mutton.

XLVII.

Now in a person used to much command—
To bid men come, and go, and come again—
To see his orders done, too, out of hand—
Whether the word was death, or but the chain—
It may seem strange to find his manners bland;
Yet such things are, which I cannot explain,
Though doubtless he who can command himself
Is good to govern—almost as a Guelph.

XLVIII.

Not that he was not sometimes rash or so,
But never in his real and serious mood;
Then calm, concentrated, and still, and slow,
He lay could like the bos in the wood;
With him it never was a word and blow,
His angry word once o'er, he shed no blood,
But in his silence there was much to rue,
And his one blow left little work for two.

XLIX.

He ask'd no further questions, and proceeded
On to the house, but by a private way,*
So that the few who met him hardly heeded,
So little they expected him that day;
If love paternal in his bosom pleaded
For Haidée's sake, is more than I can say,
But certainly to one deem'd dead returning,
This revel seem'd a curious mode of mourning.

L.

If all the dead could now return to life
(Which God forbid!), or some, or a great many,
For instance, if a husband or his wife
(Nuptial examples are as good as any),
No doubt, what'er might be their former strife,
The present weather would be much more rainy—
Tears shed into the grave of the connection
Would share most probably its resurrection.

to the adventures of that chief."—GALIN. See portrait, and Life of Byron.

LI.

He enter'd in the house—his home no more his home,
A thing to human feelings the most trying,
And harder for the heart to overcome,
Perhaps, than even the mental pause of dying;
To find our hearthstone turn'd into a tomb,
And round its once warm precincts palely lying
The ashes of our hopes, is a deep grief,
Beyond a single gentleman's belief.

LII.

He enter'd in the house—his home no more,
For without hearts there is no home;—and felt
The solitude of passing his own door
Without a welcome: there he long had dwelt,
There his few peaceful days Time had swept o'er,
There his worn bosom and keen eye would melt
Over the innocence of that sweet child,
His only shrine of feelings undied.

LIII.

He was a man of a strange temperament,
Of mild demeanor though of savage mood,
Moderate in all his habits, and content
With temperance in pleasure, as in food,
Quick to perceive, and strong to bear, and meant
For something better, if not wholly good;
His country's wrongs and his despair to save her
Had stung him from a slave to an enslaver.

LIV.

The love of power, and rapid gain of gold,
The hardness by long habitude produced,
The dangerous life in which he had grown old,
The mercy he had granted oft abused,
The sights he was accustom'd to behold,
The wild seas, and wild men with whom he cruised,
Had cost his enemies a long repentance,
And made him a good friend, but bad acquaintance.

LV.

But something of the spirit of old Greece
Flash'd o'er his soul a few heroic rays,
Such as lit onward to the Golden Fleece
His predecessors in the Colchian days;
'Tis true he had no ardent love for peace—
Alas! his country show'd no path to praise:
Hate to the world and war with every nation
He waged, in vengeance of her degradation.

LVI.

Still o'er his mind the influence of the clime
Shed its Ionian elegance, which show'd
Its power unconsciously full many a time,—
A taste seen in the choice of his abode,
A love of music and of scenes sublime,
A pleasure in the gentle stream that flow'd
Past him in crystal, and a joy in flowers,
Bedew'd his spirit in his calmer hours.

LVII.

But whate'er he had of love reposed
On that beloved daughter: she had been
The only thing which kept his heart unclosed
Amidst the savage deeds he had done and seen,
A lonely pure affection unopposed:
There wanted but the loss of this to wean
His feelings from all milk of human kindness,
And turn him like the Cyclops mad with blindness.

LVIII.

The cubless tigress in her jungle raging
Is dreadful to the shepherd and the flock;
The ocean when its yeasty war is waging
Is awful to the vessel near the rock;

But violent things will sooner bear assuaging,
Their fury being spent by its own shock,
Than the stern, single, deep, and wordless ire
Of a strong human heart, and in a sire.

LIX.

It is a hard although a common case
To find our children running restive—they
In whom our brightest days we would retrace,
Our little selves re-form'd in finer clay,
Just as old age is creeping on apace,
And clouds come o'er the sunset of our day,
They kindly leave us, though not quite alone,
But in good company—the gout or stone.

LX.

Yet a fine family is a fine thing
(Provided they don't come in after dinner);
'T is beautiful to see a matron bring
Her children up (if nursing them don't thin her);
Like cherubs round an altar-piece they cling
To the fireside (a sight to touch a sinner).
A lady with her daughters or her nieces
Shine like a guinea and seven-shilling piece.

LXI.

Old Lambro pass'd unseen a private gate,
And stood within his hall at eventide;
Meantime the lady and her lover sat
At wassail in their beauty and their pride:
An ivory inlaid table spread with state
Before them, and fair slaves on every side;
Gems, gold, and silver, form'd the service mostly,
Mother of pearl and coral the less costly.

LXII.

The dinner made about a hundred dishes;
Lamb and pistachio nuts—in short, all meats,
And saffron soups, and sweetbreads; and the fishes
Were of the finest that e'er founned in nets,
Drest to a Sybarite's most pamper'd wishes;
The beverage was various sherbets
Of raisin, orange, and pomegranate juice,
Squeezed through the rind, which makes it best for use.

LXIII.

These were ranged round, each in its crystal ewer,
And fruits, and date-bread loaves closed the re-
 past,
And Mocha's berry, from Arabia pure,
In small fine china cups, came in at last;
Gold cups of fillgree made to secure
The hand from burning underneath them placed,
Cloves, cinnamon, and saffron too were boil'd
Up with the coffee, which (I think) they spoil'd.

LXIV.

The hangings of the room were tapestry, made
Of velvet panels, each of different hue,
And thick with damask flowers of silk inlaid;
And round them ran a yellow border too;
The upper border, richly wrought, display'd,
Embroider'd delicately o'er with blue,
Soft Persian sentences, in Hiac letters,
From poets, or the moralists their betters.

LXV.

These Oriental writings on the wall,
Quite common in those countries, are a kind
Of monitors adapted to recall,
Like skulls at Memphian banquets, to the mind
The words which shook Belshazzar in his hall,
And took his kingdom from him: You will find,
Though sages may pour out their wisdom's treasure,
There is no sterner moralist than Pleasure.

LXVI.

A beauty at the season's close grown hectic,
A genius who has drunk himself to death,
A rake turn'd methodistic, or Eclectic—
(For that's the name they like to pray beneath)
But most, an alderman struck apoplectic,
Are things that really take away the breath,—
And show that late hours, wine, and love are able To do not much less damage than the table.

LXVII.

Haidée and Juan carpeted their feet
On crimson satin, border'd with pale blue;
Their sofa occupied three parts complete
Of the apartment—and appear'd quite new;
The velvet cushions (for a throne more meet)
Were scarlet, from whose glowing centre glow'd
A sun emboss'd in gold, whose rays of tissue,
Meridian-like, were seen all light to issue.

LXVIII.

Crystal and marble, plate and porcelain,
Had done their work of splendor; Indian mats
And Persian carpets, which the heart bled to stain,
Over the floors were spread; gazelles and cats,
And dwarfs and blacks, and such light things, that gain
Their breed as ministers and favorites—(that's
To say, by degradation)—mingled there
As plentiful as in a court, or fair.

LXIX.

There was no want of lofty mirrors, and
The tables, most of ebony inlaid
With mother of pearl or ivory, stood at hand,
Or were of tortoise-shell or rare woods made,
Fretted with gold or silver;—by command,
The greater part of these were ready spread
With viands and sherbets in ice—and wine—
Kept for all comers at all hours to dine.

LXX.

Of all the dresses I select Haidée's:
She wore two jellicks—one was of pale yellow;
Of azure, pink, and white was her chemise—
'Neath which her breast heaved like a little hill-
low;
With buttons form'd of pearls as large as peas,
All gold and crimson shone her jellick's fellow,
And the striped white gauze baracan that bound her,
Like fleecy clouds about the moon, flow'd round her.

LXXI.

One large gold bracelet clasp'd each lovely arm,
Lockless—so pliable from the pure gold
That the hand stretch'd and shut it without harm,
The limb which it adorn'd its only mould;
So beautiful—its very shape would charm,
And clinging as if loth to lose its hold,
The purest ore enclosed the whitest skin
That e'er by precious metal was held in.*

LXXII.

Around, as princess of her father's land,
A like gold bar above her instep roll'd †
Announced her rank; twelve rings were on her
hand;
Her hair was starr'd with gems; her veil's fine
fold

Below her breast was fasten'd with a band
Of lavish pearls, whose worth could scarce be told;
Her orange silk full Turkish trousers fur'd
About the prettiest ankle in the world.

LXXIII.

Her hair's long auburn waves down to her heel
Flow'd like an Alpine torrent which the sun
Dyes with his morning light,—and would conceal
Her person; if allow'd at large to run,
And still they seem'd resentfully to feel
The silken fillet's curb, and sought to shun
Their bonds whens'er some Zephyr caught began
To offer his young pinion as her fan.

LXXIV.

Round her she made an atmosphere of life,
The very air seem'd lighter from her eyes,
They were so soft and beautiful, and rife
With all we can imagine of the skies,
And pure as Psyche ere she grew a wife—
Too pure even for the purest human ties;
Her overpowering presence made you feel
It would not be idolatry to kneel.

LXXV.

Her eyelashes, though dark as night, were tinged
(It is the country's custom), but in vain;
For those large black eyes were so blackly fringed,
The glossy rebels mock'd the jetty stain,
And in their native beauty stood avenged:
Her nails were touch'd with henna; but again
The power of art was turn'd to nothing, for
They could not look more rosy than before.

LXXVI.

The henna should be deeply dyed to make
The skin relieved appear more fairly fair;
She had no need of this, day ne'er will break
On mountain tops more heavenly white than her:
The eye might doubt if it were well awake.
She was so like a vision; I might err,
But Shakspeare also says, 'tis very silly
"To gild refined gold, or paint the lily."

LXXVII.

Juan had on a shawl of black and gold,
But a white baracan, and so transparent
The sparkling gems beneath you might behold,
Like small stars through the milky way apparent;
His turban, fur'd in many a graceful fold,
An emerald aigrette with Haidée's hair in 't
Surmounted, as its clasp, a glowing crescent,
Whose rays shone ever trembling, but incessant.

LXXVIII.

And now they were diverted by their suite,
Dwarfs, dancing girls, black eunuchs, and a poet,
Which made their new establishment complete;
The last was of great fame, and lik'd to show it;
His verses rarely wanted their due feet—
And for his theme—he seldom sung below it,
He being paid to satirize or flatter,
As the psalm says, "inditing a good matter."

LXXIX.

He praised the present, and abused the past,
Reversing the good custom of old days,

* This dress is Moorish, and the bracelets and bar are worn in the manner described. The reader will perceive hereafter, that as the mother of Haidée was of Fez, her daughter wore the garb of the country.

† The bar of gold above the instep is a mark of sovereign rank in the women of the families of the deys, and is worn as such by their female relatives.

* This is no exaggeration: there were four women whom I remember to have seen, who possessed their hair in this profusion; of these, three were English, the other was a Levantine. Their hair was of that length and quantity, that, when let down, it almost entirely shaded the person, so as nearly to render dress a superfluity. Of these, only one had dark hair; the Oriental's had, perhaps, the lightest color of the four.

An Eastern anti-Jacobin at last
 He turn'd, preferring pudding to no praise—
 For some few years his lot had been o'ercast
 By his seeming independent in his lays,
 But now he sung the Sultan and the Pacha jahaw.
 With truth like Southey, and with verse like Cra-

LXXX.

He was a man who had seen many changes,
 And always changed as true as any needle;
 His polar star being one which rather ranges,
 And not the fix'd—he knew the way to wheedle:
 So vile he 'scaped the doom which oft avenges;
 And being fluent (save indeed when fee'd ill),
 He lied with such a fervor of intention—
 There was no doubt he earn'd his laureate pension.

LXXXI.

But he had genius,—when a turncoat has it,
 The "Vases irritabiles" takes care
 That without notice few full moons shall pass it;
 Even good men like to make the public stare:—
 But to my subject—let me see—what was it?—
 Oh!—the third canto—and the pretty pair—
 Their loves, and feasts, and house, and dress, and mode
 Of living in their insular abode.

LXXXII.

Their poet, a sad trimmer, but no less
 In company a very pleasant fellow,
 Had been the favorite of full many a mess
 Of men, and made them speeches when half mellow;
 And though his meaning they could rarely guess,
 Yet still they deign'd to hiccup or to bellow
 The glorious meed of popular applause,
 Of which the first no'er knows the second cause.

LXXXIII.

But now being lifted into high society,
 And having pick'd up several odds and ends
 Of free thoughts in his travels for variety,
 He deem'd, being in a lone isle, among friends,
 That without any danger of a riot, he Might for long lying make himself amends;
 And singing as he sung in his warm youth,
 Agree to a short armistice with truth.

LXXXIV.

He had travell'd 'mongst the Arabs, Turks, and Franks,
 And knew the self-loves of the different nations;
 And having lived with people of all ranks,
 Had something ready upon most occasions—
 Which got him a few presents and some thanks.
 He varied with some skill his adulations;
 To "do at Rome as Romans do," a piece
 Of conduct was which he observed in Greece.

LXXXV.

Thus, usually, when he was asked to sing,
 He gave the different nations something national;
 'T was all the same to him—"God save the king,"
 Or "Ca ira," according to the fashion all:
 His muse made increment of anything.
 From the high lyric down to the low rational;
 If Pindar sang horse-races, what should hinder
 Himself from being as pliable as Pindar?

LXXXVI.

In France, for instance, he would write a chanson;
 In England a six-canto quarto tale;

In Spain he'd make a ballad or romance on
 The last war—much the same in Portugal;
 In Germany, the Pegasus he'd prance on
 Would be old Goethe's—(see what says De Stakl);
 In Italy he'd ape the "Trecentisti";
 In Greece he'd sing some sort of hymn like thist' ye:

1.

The isles of Greece, the isles of Greece!
 Where burning Sappho loved and sung,
 Where grew the arts of war and peace,
 Where Delos rose, and Phœbus sprung!
 Eternal summer glids them yet,
 But all, except their sun, is set.

E.

The Scian† and the Teian muse,‡
 The hero's harp, the lover's lute,
 Have found the fame your shores refuse:
 Their place of birth alone is mute
 To sounds which echo further west
 Than your shores! "Islands of the Blest."§

A.

The mountains look on Marathon—
 And Marathon looks on the sea;
 And musing there an hour alone,
 I dream'd that Greece might still be free;
 For standing on the Persians' grave,
 I could not deem myself a slave.

4.

A king sate on the rocky brow
 Which looks o'er sea-born Salamis;
 And ships, by thousands, lay below,
 And men in nations;—all were his!
 He counted them at break of day—
 And when the sun set where were they?

E.

And where are they? and where art thou,
 My country? On thy voiceless shore
 The heroic lay is tuneless now—
 The heroic bosom beats no more!
 And must thy lyre, so long divine,
 Degenerate into hands like mine?

H.

'T is something, in the dearth of fame,
 Though link'd among a fetter'd race,
 To feel at least a patriot's shame,
 Even as I sing, suffuse my face;
 For what is left the poet here?
 For Greeks a blush—for Greece a tear.

7.

Must we but weep o'er days more blest?
 Must we but blush?—Our fathers bled.
 Earth! render back from out thy breast
 A remnant of our Spartan dead!
 Of the three hundred grant but three,
 To make a new Thermopylæ!

B.

What, silent still? and silent all?
 Ah! no!—the voices of the dead
 Sound like a distant torrent's fall,
 And answer, "Let one living head,
 But one arise,—we come, we come!"
 'T is but the living who are dumb.

E.

In vain—in vain: strike other chords;
 Fill high the cup with Samian wine!

* The poets of the fourteenth century—Dante, etc.

† Homer.

‡ Anacreon.

§ The seven sages of the Greek poets were supposed to have been the Cape de Verd Islands or the Canaries.

Leave battles to the Turkish hordes,
And shed the blood of Scio's vine!
Hark! rising to the ignoble call—
How answers each bold Bacchanal!

II.

You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet,
Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?
Of two such lessons, why forget
The nobler and the manlier one?
You have the letters Cadmus gave—
Think ye he meant them for a slave?

II.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
We will not think of themes like these!
It made Anacreon's song divine:
He served—but served Polyorates—
A tyrant; but our masters then
Were still, at least, our countrymen.

II.

The tyrant of the Chersonese
Was freedom's best and bravest friend;
That tyrant was Miltiades!
Oh! that the present hour would lend
Another despot of the kind!
Such chains as his were sure to bind.

II.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
On Sull's rock, and Parga's shore,
Exists the remnant of a line
Such as the Doric mothers bore;
And there, perhaps, some seed is sown,
The Heracleidan blood might own.

II.

Trust not for freedom to the Franks—
They have a king who buys and sells;
In native swords, and native ranks,
The only hope of courage dwells;
But Turkish force, and Latin fraud,
Would break your shield, however broad.

II.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
Our virginia dance beneath the shade—
I see their glorious black eyes shine;
But gazing on each glowing maid,
My own the burning tear-drop laves,
To think such breasts must suckle slaves.

II.

Place me on Sunium's marbled steep,
Where nothing, save the waves and I,
May hear our mutual murmurs sweep;
There, swan-like, let me sing and die:
A land of slaves shall ne'er be mine—
Dash down yon cup of Samian wine!

LXXXVII.

Thus sung, or would, or could, or should have sung,
The modern Greek, in tolerable verse;
If not like Orpheus quite, when Greece was young,
Yet in these times he might have done much worse:
His strain display'd some feeling—right or wrong;
And feeling, in a poet, is the source
Of others' feeling; but they are such liars,
And take all colors—like the hands of dyers.

LXXXVIII.

But words are things, and a small drop of ink,
Falling like dew, upon a thought, produces

That which makes thousands, perhaps millions,
think;

'T is strange, the shortest letter which man uses
Instead of speech, may form a lasting link
Of ages; to what straits old Time reduces
Fral man, when paper—even a rag like this,
Survives himself, his tomb, and all that's his.

LXXXIX.

And when his bones are dust, his grave a blank,
His station, generation, even his nation,
Become a thing, or nothing, save to rank
In chronological commemoration,
Some dull M.S. oblivion long has sunk,
Or graven stone found in a barrack's station
In digging the foundation of a closet,
May turn his name up, as a rare deposit.

XC.

And glory long has made the sages smile;
'T is something, nothing, words, illusion, wind—
Depending more upon the historian's style
Than on the name a person leaves behind:
Troy owes to Homer what whist owes to Hoyle:
The present century was growing blind
To the great Marlborough's skill in giving knocks,
Until his late Life by Archdeacon Coxe.

XCI.

Milton's the prince of poets—so we say;
A little heavy, but no less divine:
An independent being in his day—
Learn'd, pious, temperate in love and wine;
But his life falling into Johnson's way,
We're told this great high priest of all the Nine
Was whipt at college—a harsh sire—odd spouse,
For the first Mrs. Milton left his house.*

XCII.

All these are, cortex, entertaining facts,
Like Shakespeare's stealing deer, Lord Bacon's bribes;
Like Titus' youth, and Caesar's earliest acts;
Like Burns (whom Doctor Currie well describes);
Like Cromwell's pranks;—but although truth exacts
These amiable descriptions from the scribes,
As most essential to their hero's story,
They do not much contribute to his glory.

XCIII.

All are not moralists, like Southey, when
He prated to the world of "Pantisocracy,"
Or Wordsworth unexcised, unshired, who then
Season'd his peddler poems with democracy;
Or Coleridge,† long before his eighty pen
Let to the Morning Post its aristocracy;
When he and Southey, following the same path,
Espoused two partners (milliners of Bath).

XCIV.

Such names at present cut a convict figure,
The very Botany Bay in moral geography;
Their loyal treason, renegade rigor,
Are good manure for their more bare biography;
Wordsworth's last quarto, by the way, is bigger
Than any since the birthday of typography;
A drowsy trowy poem, call'd the "Excursion,"
Writ in a manner which is my aversion.

XCV.

He there builds up a formidable dyke
Between his own and others' intellect;
But Wordsworth's poem, and his followers, like
Johanna Southcote's Shiloh,‡ and her sect,

* See Johnson's Life of Milton.

† See Coleridge's Biographia Literaria, 1817.

‡ The followers of this fanatic are said to have amounted, at one time, to a hundred thousand. She announced herself

Are things which in this century don't strike
The public mind—so few are the elect;
And the new births of both their stale virginities
Have proved but dropsies, taken for divinities.

XCVI.

But let me to my story: I must own,
If I have any fault, it is digression,
Leaving my people to proceed alone,
While I soliloquize beyond expression:
But these are my addresses from the throne,
Which put off business to the ensuing session:
Forgetting each omission is a loss to
The world, not quite so great as Ariosto.

XCVII.

I know that what our neighbors call "longueurs," (We've not so good a word, but have the thing),
In that complete perfection which insures
An epic from Bob Southey every spring—)
Form not the true temptation which allures
The reader; but 't would not be hard to bring
Some fine examples of the epopée,
To prove its grand ingredient is canon.

XCVIII.

We learn from Horace, "Homer sometimes sleeps;"
We feel without him, Wordsworth sometimes wakes,
To show with what complacency he creeps,
With his dear "Waggoners," around his lakes.
He wishes for "a boat" to sail the deeps—
Of ocean?—No, of air: and then he makes
Another outcry for "a little boat,"
And drives a sea to set it well afloat.

XCIX.

If he must fain sweep o'er the ethereal plain,
And Pegasus runs restive in his "Wagon,"
Could he not beg the loan of Charles's Wain?
Or pray Medea for a single dragon?
Or if, too classic for his vulgar brain,
He fear'd his neck to venture such a nag on,
And he must needs mount nearer to the moon,
Could not the blockhead ask for a balloon?

C.

"Peddlers," and "Boats," and "Wagons!" Oh!
ye shades
Of Pope and Dryden, are we come to this?
That trash of such sort not alone evades
Contempt, but from the bathos' vast abyss
Floats scumlike uppermost, and these Jack Cades
Of sense and song above your graves may hiss—
The "little boatman" and his "Peter Bell"
Can sneer at him who drew "Achitophel!"*

CL.

T' our tale.—The feast was over, the slaves gone,
The dwarfs and dancing girls had all retired;
The Arab lore and poet's song were done,
And every sound of revelry expired;
The lady and her lover, left alone,
The rosy flood of twilight's sky admired;—
Ave Maria! o'er the earth and sea,
That heavenliest hour of Heaven is worthiest
these!

as the mother of a second Shiloh, whose speedy advent she confidently predicted. A cradle of expensive materials was prepared for the expected prodigy. Dr. Reace and another medical man attested her droop; and many were her dupes down to the moment of her death, in 1814.

*The verses of Dryden, once highly celebrated, are forgotten.—Ms. W. WORDSWORTH'S Preface.

†The first time I had a conversation with Lord Byron on

CII.

Ave Maria! blessed be the hour!
The time, the clime, the spot, where I so oft
Have felt that moment in its fullest power
Sink o'er the earth so beautiful and soft,
While swung the deep bell in the distant tower,
Or the faint dying day-hymn stole aloft,
And not a breath crept through the rosy air,
And yet the forest leaves seem'd stirr'd with prayer.

CIII.

Ave Maria! 't is the hour of prayer!
Ave Maria! 't is the hour of love!
Ave Maria! may our spirits dare
Look up to thine and to thy Son's above!
Ave Maria! oh that face so fair!
Those downcast eyes beneath the Almighty dove—
What though 't is but a pictured image?—strike—
That painting is no idol,—'t is too like.

CIV.

Some kinder casuists are pleased to say,
In nameless print—that I have no devotion;
But set those persons down with me to pray,
And you shall see who has the properest notion
Of getting into heaven the shortest way:
My altars are the mountains and the ocean,
Earth, air, stars,—all that springs from the great
Whole,
Who hath produced, and will receive the soul.

CV.

Sweet hour of twilight!—in the solitude
Of the pine forest, and the silent shore
Which bounds Ravenna's immemorial wood,
Rooted where once the Adrian wave flow'd o'er,
To where the last Cæsarean fortress stood,
Evergreen forest! which Boccaccio's lore
And Dryden's lay made haunted ground to me,
How have I loved the twilight hour and thee!†

CVI.

The shrill cicadas, people of the pines,
Making their summer lives one ceaseless song,
Were the sole echoes, save my steed's and mine,
And vesper bell's, that rose the boughs along;
The spectre huntsman of Onesti's line,
His hell-dogs, and their chase, and the fair throng
Which learn'd from this example not to fly
From a true lover,—shadow'd my mind's eye.

CVII.

Oh, Hesperus! thou bringest all good things—
Home to the weary, to the hungry cheer,
To the young bird the parent's brooding wings,
The welcome stall to the o'erlabor'd steer;
Whate'er of peace about our hearthstone clings,
Whate'er our household gods protect of dear,
Are gather'd round us by thy look of rest;
Thou bring'st the child, too, to the mother's breast.

CVIII.

Soft hour! which wakes the wish and melts the heart
Of those who sail the seas, on the first day
When they from their sweet friends are torn apart;
Or fills with love the pilgrim on his way

the subject of religion was at Ravenna, my native country, in 1820, while we were riding on horseback in an extensive solitary wood of pines. The scene invited to religious meditation. It was a fine day in spring. "How," he said, "raising our eyes to heaven, or directing them to the earth, can we doubt of the existence of God?—or how, turning them to what is within us, can we doubt that there is something more noble and durable than the clay of which we are formed?"—
COUNT GAMBRA.

As the far bell of vesper makes him start,
Seeming to weep the dying day's decay;
Is this a fancy which our reason scorns?
Ah! surely nothing dies but something mourns!

CII.

When Nero periah'd by the justest doom
Which ever the destroyer yet destroy'd,
Amidst the roar of liberated Rome,
Of nations freed, and the world overjoy'd,
Some hands unseen strew'd flowers upon his tomb:
Perhaps the weakness of a heart not void
Of feeling for some kindness done, when power
Had left the wretch an uncorrupted hour.

CIX.

But I'm digressing; what on earth has Nero,
Or any such like sovereign buffoons,
To do with the transactions of my hero,
More than such madmen's fellow man—the moon's?
Sure my invention must be down at zero,
And I grown one of many "wooden spoons"
Of verse (the name with which we Cantabs please
To dub the last of honors in degrees).

CXI.

I feel this tediousness will never do—
'Tis being too epic, and I must cut down
(In copying) this long canto into two;
They'll never find it out, unless I own
The fact, excepting some experienced few;
And then as an improvement 't will be shown:
I'll prove that such the opinion of the critic is
From Aristotle passim.—See Illustrations.

CANTO THE FOURTH.

I.

NOTHING so difficult as a beginning
In poetry, unless perhaps the end;
For oftentimes when Pegasus seems winning
The race, he sprains a wing, and down we tend,
Like Lucifer when hurl'd from heaven for sinning;
Our sin the same, and hard as his to mend,
Being pride, which leads the mind to soar too far,
Till our own weakness shows us what we are.

II.

But Time, which brings all beings to their level,
And sharp Adversity, will teach at last
Man,—and, as we would hope, perhaps the devil,—
That neither of their intellects are vast:
While youth's hot wishes in our red veins revel,
We know not this—the blood flows on too fast;
But as the torrent widens towards the ocean,
We ponder deeply on each past emotion.

III.

As boy, I thought myself a clever fellow,
And wish'd that others held the same opinion;

* See Suetonius for this fact.—"The public joy was so great upon the occasion of his death, that the common people ran up and down with caps upon their heads. And yet there were some who for a long time trimmed up his tomb with spring and summer flowers, and one while placed his image upon

They took it up when my days grew more mellow,
And other minds acknowledged my dominion:
Now my sere fancy "falls into the yellow
Leaf," and imagination droops her pinnas,
And the sad truth which hovers o'er my desk
Turns what was once romantic to burlesque.

IV.

And if I laugh at any mortal thing,
'Tis that I may not weep; and if I weep,
'Tis that our nature cannot always bring
Itself to apathy, for we must steep
Our hearts first in the depths of Lethe's spring,
Ere what we least wish to behold will sleep:
Thetis baptized her mortal son in Styx;
A mortal mother would on Lethe fix.

V.

Some have accused us of a strange design
Against the creed and morals of the land,
And trace it in this poem every line:
I don't pretend that I quite understand
My own meaning when I would be very fine;
But the fact is that I have nothing plann'd,
Unless it were to be a moment merry,
A novel word in my vocabulary.

VI.

To the kind reader of our sober clime
This way of writing will appear exotic;
Pulci was sire of the half-serious rhyme,
Who sang when chivalry was more Quixotic,
And revell'd in the fancies of the time,
True knights, chaste dames, huge giants, kings
despotic;
But all these, save the last, being obsolete,
I chose a modern subject as more meet.

VII.

How I have treated it, I do not know;
Perhaps no better than they have treated me,
Who have imputed such designs as show
Not what they saw, but what they wish'd to see:
But if it gives them pleasure, be it so;
This is a liberal age, and thoughts are free;
Meantime Apollo plucks me by the ear,
And tells me to resume my story here.

VIII.

Young Juan and his lady-love were left
To their own hearts' most sweet society;
Even Time the pitiless in sorrow cleft
With his rude scythe such gentle bosoms; he Sigh'd to behold them of their hours bereft,
Though foe to love; and yet they could not be
Meant to grow old, but die in happy spring,
Before one charm or hope had taken wing.

IX.

Their faces were not made for wrinkles, their
Pure blood to stagnate, their great hearts to fail;
The blank gray was not made to blast their hair,
But like the climes that know no snow nor hail,
They were all summer; lightning might assail
And shiver them to ashes, but to trail
A long and snake-like life of dull decay
Was not for them—they had too little clay.

X.

They were alone once more; for them to be Thus was another Eden; they were never his rostra dressed up in state robes, another while published proclamations in his name, as if he was yet alive, and would shortly come to Rome again, with a vengeance to all his enemies."

Weary, unless when separate; the tree
Cut from its forest root of years—the river
Damm'd from its fountain—the child from the knee
And breast maternal wren'd at once for ever,—
Would wither less than these two torn apart;
Alas! there is no instinct like the heart—

XI.

The heart—which may be broken: happy they!
Thrice fortunate! who of that fragile mould,
The precious porcelain of human clay,
Break with the first fall: they can ne'er behold
The long year link'd with heavy day on day,
And all which must be borne, and never told;
While life's strange principle will often lie
Deepest in those who long the most to die.

XII.

"Whom the gods love die young," was said of yore,
And many deaths do they escape by this:
The death of friends, and that which always even more—

The death of friendship, love, youth, all that is,
Except mere breath; and since the alien shore
Awaits at last even those who longest miss
The old archer's shafts, perhaps the early grave
Which men weep over may be meant to save.

XIII.

Haidée and Juan thought not of the dead.
The heavens, and earth, and air, seem'd made for
them:
They found no fault with Time, save that he fled;
They saw not in themselves aught to condemn:
Each was the other's mirror, and but read
Joy sparkling in their dark eyes like a gem,
And knew such brightness was but the reflection
Of their exchanging glances of affection.

XIV.

The gentle pressure, and the thrilling touch,
The least glance better understood than words,
Which still said all, and ne'er could say too much;
A language, too, but like to that of birds,
Known but to them, at least appearing such
As but to lovers a true sense affords;
Sweet playful phrases, which would seem absurd
To those who have ceased to hear such, or ne'er heard—

XV.

All these were theirs, for they were children still,
And children still they should have ever been;
They were not made in the real world to fill
A busy character in the dull scene.
But like two beings born from out a rill,
A nymph and her beloved, all unseen
To pass their lives in fountains and on flowers,
And never know the weight of human hours.

XVI.

Moons changing had roll'd on, and changeless found
Those their bright rise had lighted to such joys
As rarely they beheld throughout their round;
And these were not of the vain kind which cloy,
For theirs were buoyant spirits, never bound
By the mere senses; and that which destroys
Most love, possession, unto them appear'd
A thing which each endearment more endear'd.

XVII.

Oh, beautiful! and rare as beautiful!
But theirs was love in which the mind delights
To lose itself, when the old world grows dull,
And we are sick of its hack sounds and sights,
Intrigues, adventures of the common school,
Its petty passions, marriages, and flights,

Where Hymen's torch but brands one strumpet
Whose husband only knows her not a wh—re. [more,

XVIII.

Hard words; harsh truth; a truth which many
know.

Enough.—The faithful and the fairy pair,
Who never found a single hour too slow,
What was it made them thus exempt from care?
Young innate feelings all have felt below,
Which perish in the rest, but in them were Inherent; what we mortals call romantic,
And always envy, though we deem it frantic.

XIX.

This is in others a factitious state,
An opium dream* of too much youth and reading,
But was in them their nature or their fate:
No novels e'er had set their young hearts bleeding,
For Haidée's knowledge was by no means great,
And Juan was a boy of saintly breeding;
So that there was no reason for their loves
More than for those of nightingales or doves.

XX.

They gazed upon the sunset; 't is an hour
Dear unto all, but dearest to their eyes,
For it had made them what they were: the power
Of love had first o'erwhelm'd them from such skies,
When happiness had been their only dower,
And twilight saw them link'd in passion's ties;
Charm'd with each other, all things charm'd that brought
The past still welcome as the present thought.

XXI.

I know not why, but in that hour to-night,
Even as they gazed, a sudden tremor came,
And swept, as 't were, across their hearts' delight,
Like the wind o'er a harp-string, or a flame,
When one is shook in sound, and one in sight:
And thus some boding dash'd through either
frame,
And call'd from Juan's breast a faint low sigh,
While one new tear arose in Haidée's eye.

XXII.

That large black prophet eye seem'd to dilate
And follow far the disappearing sun,
As if their last day of a happy date
With his broad, bright, and dropping orb were Juan gazed on her as to ask his fate— [gone.
He felt a grief, but knowing cause for none,
His glance inquired of hers for some excuse
For feelings causeless, or at least abstruse.

XXIII.

She turn'd to him, and smiled, but in that sort
Which makes not others smile; then turn'd aside:
Whatever feeling shook her, it seem'd short,
And master'd by her wisdom or her pride;
When Juan spoke, too—it might be in sport—
Of this their mutual feeling, she replied—
"If it should be so,—but—it cannot be—
Or I at least shall not survive to see."

XXIV.

Juan would question further, but she press'd
His lip to hers, and silenced him with this,
And then dismiss'd the omen from her breast,
Defying augury with that fond kiss;

* The "Confessions of an English Opium-Eater," by De Quincey, had been published shortly before this canto was written.

And no doubt of all methods 't is the best:
Some people prefer wine—'t is not amiss;
I have tried both; so those who would a part take
May choose between the headache and the heartache.

XXV.

One of the two, according to your choice,
Woman or wine, you 'll have to undergo;
Both maladies are taxes on our joys:
But which to choose. I really hardly know;
And if I had to give a casting voice,
For both sides I could many reasons show,
And then decide, without great wrong to either,
It were much better to have both than neither.

XXVI.

Juan and Haidée gazed upon each other
With swimming looks of speechless tenderness,
Which mix'd all feelings, friend, child, lover,
brother;
All that the best can mingle and express
When two pure hearts are pour'd in one another,
And love too much, and yet can not love less;
But almost sanctify the sweet excess
By the immortal wish and power to bless.

XXVII.

Mix'd in each other's arms, and heart in heart,
Why did they not then die?—they had lived too
long
Should an hour come to bid them breathe apart;
Years could but bring them cruel things or wrong;
The world was not for them, nor the world's art
For beings passionate as Sappho's song;
Love was born with them, in them, so intense,
It was their very spirit—not a sense.

XXVIII.

They should have lived together deep in woods,
Unseen as sings the nightingale; they were
Unfit to mix in these thick solitudes
Call'd social, haunts of Hate, and Vice, and Care:
How lonely every freeborn creature broods!
The sweetest song-birds nestle in a pair;
The eagle soars alone; the gull and crow
Flock o'er their carrion, just like men below.

XXIX.

Now pillow'd cheek to cheek, in loving sleep,
Haidée and Juan their slumbers took,
A gentle slumber, but it was not deep,
For ever and anon a something shook
Juan, and shuddering o'er his frame would creep;
And Haidée's sweet lips murmur'd like a brook
A wordless music, and her face so fair
Stirr'd with her dream, as rose-leaves with the air;

XXX.

Or as the stirring of a deep clear stream
Within an Alpine hollow, when the wind
Walks o'er it, was she shaken by the dream,
The mystical usurper of the mind—
O'erpowering us to be what'er may seem
Good to the soul which we no more can bind;
Strange state of being! (for 't is still to be)
Senseless to feel, and with seal'd eyes to see.

XXXI.

She dream'd of being alone on the sea-shore,
Chain'd to a rock; she knew not how, but stir
She could not from the spot, and the loud roar
Grew, and each wave rose roughly, threatening
her:
And o'er her upper lip they seem'd to pour,
Until she sobb'd for breath, and soon they were Foaming o'er her lone head, so fierce and high—
Each broke to drown her, yet she could not die.

XXXII.

XXXIII.

Anon—she was released, and then she stray'd
O'er the sharp shingles with her bleeding feet,
And stumbled almost every step she made;
And something roll'd before her in a sheet,
Which she must still pursue howe'er afraid:
'T was white and indistinct, nor stopp'd to meet
Her glance nor grasp, for still she gazed and grasp'd
And ran, but it escaped her as she clasp'd.

XXXIII.

The dream changed:—in a cave she stood, its walls
Were hung with marble icicles; the work
Of ages on its water-fretted halls,
Where waves might wash, and seals might breed
and lurk;
Her hair was dripping, and the very balls
Of her black eyes seem'd turn'd to tears, and mirk
The sharp rocks look'd as below each drop they caught,
Which rose to marble as it fell,—she thought.

XXXIV.

And wet, and cold, and lifeless at her feet,
Pale as the foam that froth'd on his dead brow,
Which she essay'd in vain to clear (how sweet
Were once her cares, how idle seem'd they now!),
Lay Juan, nor could aught renew the best
Of his quench'd heart: and the sea dirges low
Rang in her sad ears like a mermaid's song,
And that brief dream appear'd a life too long.

XXXV.

And gazing on the dead, she thought his face
Faded, or alter'd into something new—
Like to her father's features, till each trace
More like and like to Lambro's aspect grew—
With all his keen worn look and Grecian grace;
And starting, she awoke, and what to view?
Oh! Powers of Heaven! what dark eye meets she
there?

'T is—'t is her father's—fix'd upon the pair!

XXXVI.

Then shrieking, she arose, and shrieking fell,
With joy and sorrow, hope and fear, to see
Him whom she deem'd a habitant where dwell
The ocean-buried, risen from death, to be
Perchance the death of one she loved too well:
Dear as her father had been to Haidée,
It was a moment of that awful kind—
I have seen such—but must not call to mind.

XXXVII.

Up Juan sprang to Haidée's bitter shriek,
And caught her falling, and from off the wall
Snatch'd down his sabre, in hot haste to wreak
Vengeance on him who was the cause of all:
Then Lambro, who till now forbore to speak,
Smiled scornfully, and said, "Within my call,
A thousand scimitars await the word;
Put up, young man, put up your silly sword."

XXXVIII.

And Haidée clung around him; "Juan, 't is—'T is Lambro—'t is my father! Kneel with me—
He will forgive us—yes—it must be—yes.
Oh! dearest father, in this agony
Of pleasure and of pain—even while I live
Thy garment's hem with transport, can it be
That doubt should mingle with my filial joy?
Deal with me as thou wilt, but spare this boy."

XXXIX.

High and inscrutable the old man stood,
Calm in his voice, and calm within his eye—

Not always signs with him of calmest mood:
He look'd upon her, but gave no reply;
Then turn'd to Juan, in whose cheek the blood
Of came and went, as there resolved to die;
In arms, at least, he stood, in act to spring
On the first foe whom Lambro's call might bring.

XL.

"Young man, your sword;" so Lambro once more
Said:
Juan replied, "Not while this arm is free."
The old man's cheek grew pale, but not with dread,
And drawing from his belt a pistol, he Replied, "Your blood be then on your own head."
Then look'd close at the flint, as if to see
'T was fresh—for he had lately used the look—
And next proceeded quietly to cock.

XLI.

It has a strange quick jar upon the ear,
That cocking of a pistol, when you know
A moment more will bring the sight to bear
Upon your person, twelve yards off, or so;
A gentlemanly distance, not too near,
If you have got a former friend for foe;
But after being fired at once or twice,
The ear becomes more Irish, and less nice.

XLII.

Lambro presented, and one instant more
Had stopp'd this Canto, and Don Juan's breath,
When Haidée threw herself her boy before;
Stern as her sire: "On me," she cried, "let death
Descend—the fault is mine; this fatal shore
He found—but sought not. I have pledged my Faith;
I love him—I will die with him: I knew
Your nature's firmness—know your daughter's too."

XLIII.

A minute past, and she had been all tears,
And tenderness, and infancy; but now
She stood as one who champion'd human fears—
Pale, statue-like, and stern, she woo'd the blow;
And tall beyond her sex, and their compeers,
She drew up to her height, as if to show
A fairer mark; and with a fix'd eye scan'd
Her father's face—but never stopp'd his hand.

XLIV.

He gazed on her, and she on him; 't was strange
How like they look'd! the expression was the same;
Serenely savage, with a little change
In the large dark eye's mutual-darted flame;
For she, too, was as one who could avenge,
If cause should be—a lioness, though tame,
Her father's blood before her father's face
Boil'd up, and proved her truly of his race.

XLV.

I said they were alike, their features and
Their stature, differing but in sex and years;
Even to the delicacy of their hand
There was resemblance, such as true blood wears;
And now to see them, thus divided, stand
In fix'd fury, when joyous tears,
And sweet exclamation, should have welcomed both,
Show what the passions are in their full growth.

XLVI.

The father paused a moment, then withdrew
His weapon, and replaced it; but stood still,
And looking on her, as to look her through,
"Not I," he said, "have sought this stranger's ill;
Not I have made this desolation: few
Would bear such outrage, and forbear to kill;

But I must do my duty—how thou hast
Done thine, the present vouchers for the past.

XLVII.

"Let him disarm; or, by my father's head,
His own shall roll before you like a ball!"
He raised his whistle, as the word he said,
And blew; another answer'd to the call,
And rushing in disorderly, though led,
And arm'd from boot to turban, one and all,
Some twenty of his train came, rank on rank;
He gave the word,—"Arrest or slay the Frank."

XLVIII.

Then, with a sudden movement, he withdrew
His daughter; while compress'd within his clasp,
Twixt her and Juan interposed the crew;
In vain she struggled in her father's grasp—
His arms were like a serpent's coil: then flew
Upon their prey, as darts an angry asp.
The file of pirates: save the foremost, who
Had fallen, with his right shoulder half cut through.

XLIX.

The second had his cheek laid open; but
The third, a wary, cool old swordsman, took
The blows upon his cutlass, and then put
His own well in; so well, ere you could look,
His man was floor'd, and helpless at his foot,
With the blood running like a little brook
From two smart sabre gashes, deep and red—
One on the arm, the other on the head.

L.

And then they bound him where he fell, and bore
Juan from the apartment: with a sign
Old Lambro bade them take him to the shore,
Where lay some ships which were to sail at nine.
They laid him in a boat, and plied the oar
Until they reach'd some galliot, placed in line;
On board of one of these, and under hatches,
They stow'd him, with strict orders to the watches.

LI.

The world is full of strange vicissitudes,
And here was one exceedingly unpleasant:
A gentleman so rich in the world's goods,
Handsome and young, enjoying all the present,
Just at the very time when he least broods
On such a thing, is suddenly to sea sent,
Wounded and chain'd, so that he cannot move,
And all because a lady fell in love.

LII.

Here I must leave him, for I grow pathetic,
Moved by the Chinese nymph of tears, green tea!
Than whom Cassandra was not more prophetic:
For if my pure libations exceed three,
I feel my heart become so sympathetic,
That I must have recourse to black Bohem:
'T is pity wine should be so deleterious,
For tea and coffee leave us much more serious,

LIII.

Unless when qualified with thee, Cognac!
Sweet Naiad of the Phlegethontic rill!
Ah! why the liver wilt thou thus attack,
And make, like other nymphs, thy lovers ill?
I would take refuge in weak punch, but rack
(In each sense of the word), whene'er I fill
My mind and midnight beakers to the brim,
Wakes me next morning with its synonym.

LIV.

I leave Don Juan for the present, safe—
Not sound, poor fellow, but severely wounded;

Yet could his corporal pangs amount to half
Of those with which his Haidée's bosom bounded!
She was not one to weep, and rave, and chafe,
And then give way, subdued because surrounded;
Her mother was a Moorish maid from Fes,
Where all is Eden, or a wilderness.

LV.

There the large olive rains its amber store
In marble founts; there grain, and flower, and fruit,
Gush from the earth until the land runs o'er;
But there, too, many a poison-tree has root,
And midnight listens to the lion's roar,
And long, long deserts scorch the camel's foot,
Or heaving whelm the helpless caravan;
And as the soil is, so the heart of man.

LVI.

Afric is all the sun's, and as her earth
Her human clay is kindled; full of power
For good or evil, burning from its birth,
The Moorish blood partakes the planet's heat,
And like the soil beneath it will bring forth:
Beauty and love were Haidée's mother's dower;
But her large dark eye show'd deep Passion's force,
Though sleeping like a lion near a source.

LVII.

Her daughter, temper'd with a milder ray,
Like summer clouds all silvery, smooth, and fair,
Till slowly charged with thunder they display
Terror to earth, and tempest to the air,
Had held till now her soft and milky way;
But overwrought with passion and despair,
The fire burst forth from her Numidian veins,
Even as the Rimoon sweeps the blasted plains.

LVIII.

The last sight which she saw was Juan's gore,
And he himself o'ermaster'd and cut down;
His blood was running on the very floor
Where late he trod, her beautiful, her own;
Thus much she view'd an instant and no more,—
Her struggles ceased with one convulsive groan;
On her sire's arm, which until now scarce held
Her writhing, fell she like a cedar fell'd.

LIX.

A vein had burst, and her sweet lips' pure dyes
Were dabbled with the deep blood which ran o'er;
And her head droop'd, as when the lily lies O'ercharged with rain: her summon'd handmaids bore
Their lady to her couch with gushing eyes;
Of herbs and cordials they produced their store,
But she defied all means they could employ,
Like a life could not hold, nor death destroy.

LX.

Days lay she in that state unchanged, though chill—
With nothing livid, still her lips were red;
She had no pulse, but death seem'd absent still;
No hideous sign proclaim'd her surely dead;
Corruption came not, in each mind to kill
All hope; to look upon her sweet face bred
New thoughts of life, for it seem'd full of soul—
She had so much, earth could not claim the whole.

LXI.

The ruling passion, such as marble shows
When exquisitely chisell'd, still lay there,
But fix'd as marble's unchanged aspect throws
O'er the fair Venus, but for ever fair;
O'er the Laocoon's all-eternal throes,
And ever-dying Gladiator's air,
Their energy like life forms all their fame,
Yet looks not life, for they are still the same.—

LXII.

She woke at length, but not as sleepers wake,
Rather the dead, for life seem'd something new,
A strange sensation which she must partake
Perforce, since whatsoever met her view
Struck not her memory, though a heavy ache
Lay at her heart, whose earliest beat still trose
Brought back the sense of pain without the cause,
For, for a while, the furies made a pause.

LXIII.

She look'd on many a face with vacant eye,
On many a token without knowing what;
She saw them watch her without asking why;
And reck'd not who around her pillow sat;
Not speechless, though she spoke not; not a sigh
Relieved her thoughts; dull silence and quick chat
Were tried in vain by those who served; she gave
No sign, save breath, of having left the grave.

LXIV.

Her handmaids tended, but she heeded not;
Her father watch'd, she turn'd her eyes away;
She recognised no being, and no spot,
However dear or cherish'd in their day;
They changed from room to room, but all forgot,
Gentle, but without memory she lay;
At length those eyes, which they would fain be weaning
Back to old thoughts, wax'd full of fearful meaning.

LXV.

And then a slave bethought her of a harp;
The harper came, and tuned his instrument;
At the first notes, irregular and sharp,
On him her flashing eyes a moment bent,
Then to the wall she turn'd as if to warp
Her thoughts from sorrow through her heart resent;
And he began a long low island song
Of ancient days, ere tyranny grew strong.

LXVI.

Anon her thin wan fingers beat the wall
In time to his old tune; he changed the theme,
And sung of love; the fierce name struck through
all

Her recollection; on her flash'd the dream
Of what she was, and is, if ye could call
To be so being; in a gushing stream
The tears rush'd forth from her overclouded brain,
Like mountain mists at length dissolved in rain.

LXVII.

Short solace, vain relief!—thought came too quick,
And whirl'd her brain to madness; she arose
As one who ne'er had dwelt among the sick,
And flew at all she met, as on her foes;
But no one ever heard her speak or shriek,
Although her paroxysm drew towards its close;—
Here was a frenzy which disdain'd to rave,
Even when they smote her, in the hope to save.

LXVIII.

Yet she betray'd at times a gleam of sense;
Nothing could make her meet her father's face,
Though on all other things with looks intense
She gazed, but none she ever could retrace;
Food she refused, and raiment; no pretence
Aval'd for either; neither change of place,
Nor time, nor skill, nor remedy, could give her
Senses to sleep—the power seem'd gone for ever.

LXIX.

Twelve days and nights she wither'd thus; at last,
Without a groan, or sigh, or glance, to show

A parting pang, the spirit from her pass'd:
And they who watch'd her nearest could not know
The very instant, till the change that cast
Her sweet face into shadow, dull and slow,
Glazed o'er her eyes—the beautiful, the black—
Oh! to possess such lustre—and then lack!^a

LXX.

She died, but not alone: she held within
A second principle of life, which might
Have dawn'd a fair and sinless child of sin;
But closed its little being without light,
And went down to the grave unborn, wherein Blossom and bough lie wither'd with one blight;
In vain the dews of Heaven descend above
The bleeding flower and blasted fruit of love.

LXXI.

Thus lived—thus died she; never more on her Shall sorrow light, or shame. She was not made
Through years or moons the inner weight to bear,
Which colder hearts endure till they are laid
By age in earth: her days and pleasures were Brief, but delightful—such as had not staid
Long with her destiny; but she sleeps well
By the sea-shore, whereon she loved to dwell.

LXXII.

That tale is now all desolate and bare,
Its dwellings down, its tenants pass'd away;
None but her own and father's grave is there,
And nothing outward tells of human clay;
Ye could not know where lies a thing so fair,
No stone is there to show, no tongue to say,
What was; no dirge, except the hollow sea's,
Mourns o'er the beauty of the Cyclades.

LXXIII.

But many a Greek maid in a loving song
Sighs o'er her name; and many an islander
With her sea's story makes the night less long;
Valor was his, and beauty dwelt with her:
If she loved rashly, her life paid for wrong—
A heavy price must all pay who thus err,
In some shape; let none think to fly the danger,
For soon or late Love is his own avenger.

LXXIV.

But let me change this theme, which grows too sad,
And lay this sheet of sorrows on the shelf;
I don't much like describing people mad,
For fear of seeming rather touch'd myself—
Beides, I've no more on this bend to add;
And as my Muse is a capricious elf,
We'll put about, and try another tack
With Juan, left half kill'd some stanzas back.

LXXV.

Wounded and fetter'd, "cabin'd, cribb'd, con-
fin'd,"
Some days and nights elapsed before that he Could altogether call the past to mind;
And when he did, he found himself at sea,
Sailing six knots an hour before the wind;
The shores of Ilion lay beneath their lee—
Another time he might have liked to see 'em,
But now was not much pleased with Cape Sigæum.

LXXVI.

There, on the green and village-cotted hill, is (Flank'd by the Hellespont, and by the sea)

Entomb'd the bravest of the brave, Achilles;
They say so—(Bryant says the contrary):
And further downward, tall and towering still, is The tumulus—of whom? Heaven knows; 't may be

Patroclus, Ajax, or Protesilaus;
All heroes, who if living still would slay us.

LXXVII.

High barrows, without marble, or a name,
A vast, untill'd, and mountain-skirted plain,
And Ida in the distance, still the same,
And old Scamander (if 't is he), remain;
The situation seems still form'd for fame—
A hundred thousand men might fight again,
With ease; but where I sought for Ilion's walls,
The quiet sheep feeds, and the tortoise crawls;

LXXVIII.

Troops of untended horses; here and there
Some little hamlets, with new names uncouth;
Some shepherds (unlike Paris), led to stare
A moment at the European youth
Whom to the spot their school-boy feelings bear;
A Turk, with beads in hand, and pipe in mouth,
Extremely taken with his own religion,
Are what I found there—but the devil a Phrygian.

LXXIX.

Don Juan, here permitted to emerge
From his dull cabin, found himself a slave;
Forlorn, and gazing on the deep blue surge,
O'ershadow'd there by many a hero's grave;
Weak still with loss of blood, he scarce could urge
A few brief questions; and the answers gave
No very satisfactory information
About his past or present situation.

LXXX.

He saw some fellow captives, who appear'd
To be Italians, as they were in fact;
From them, at least, their destiny he heard,
Which was an odd one; a troop going to act
In Sicily—all singers, duly rear'd
In their vocation; had not been attack'd
In sailing from Livorno by the pirate,
But sold by the impresario at no high rate.[†]

LXXXI.

By one of these, the buffo of the party,
Juan was told about their curious case;
For although destined to the Turkish mart, he Still kept his spirits up—at least his face;
The little fellow really look'd quite hearty,
And bore him with some gayety and grace,
Showing a much more reconciled demeanor,
Than did the prima donna and the tenor.

LXXXII.

In a few words he told their hapless story,
Saying, "Our Machiavellian impresario,
Making a signal off some promontory,
Hail'd a strange brig; Corpo di Calo Mario!
We were transferr'd on board her in a hurry,
Without a single scudo of salario;
But if the Sultan has a taste for song,
We will revive our fortunes before long.

LXXXIII.

"The prima donna, though a little old,
And haggard with a dissipated life,

^a And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with look-lustre eyes."

At FINE LXXXII.

[†] This is a fact. A few years ago a man engaged a company for some foreign theatre, embarked them at an Italian port, and carrying them to Algiers sold them all. One of the women, returned from her captivity, I heard sing, by a strange coincidence, in Rossini's opera of "L'Italiana in Algieri," at Venice, in the beginning of 1817.

And subject, when the house is thin, to cold,
Has some good notes; and then the tenor's wife,
With no great voice, is pleasing to behold;
Last carnival she made a deal of strife,
By carrying off Count Cesare Clegna
From an old Roman princess at Bologna.

LXXXIV.

"And then there are the dancers; there 's the Nini,
With more than one profession gains by all;
Then there 's that laughing slut the Pelegrini,
She, too, was fortunate last carnival,
And made at least five hundred good scocchi,
But spends so fast, she has not now a paul;
And then there 's the Grottesca—such a dancer!
Where men have souls or bodies she must answer.

LXXXV.

"As for the figuranti, they are like
The rest of all that tribe; with here and there
A pretty person, which perhaps may strike,
The rest are hardly fitted for a fair;
There 's one, though tall and stiffer than a pike,
Yet has a sentimental kind of air
Which might go far, but she don't dance with vigor;
The more 's the pity, with her face and figure.

LXXXVI.

"As for the men, they are a middling set;
The musico is but a crack'd old basin,
But being qualified in one way yet,
May the seraglio do to set his face in,
And as a servant some preferment get;
His singing I no further trust can place in:
From all the Pope makes yearly 't would perplex
To find three perfect pipes of the third sex.

LXXXVII.

"The tenor's voice is spoilt by affectation,
And for the bass, the beast can only bellow;
In fact, he had no singing education,
An ignorant, noteless, timeless, tuneless fellow;
But being the prima donna's near relation,
Who swore his voice was very rich and mellow,
They hired him, though to hear him you'd believe
An ass was practicing recitative.

LXXXVIII.

"T would not become myself to dwell upon
My own merits, and though young—I see, sir—
you
Have got a travell'd air, which speaks you one
To whom the opera is by no means new:
You 've heard of Raucocanti?—I 'm the man;
The time may come when you may hear me too;
You was not last year at the fair of Lugo,
But next, when I 'm engaged to sing there—do go.

LXXXIX.

"Our baritone I almost had forgot,
A pretty lad, but bursting with conceit;
With graceful action, science not a jot,
A voice of no great compass, and not sweet,
He always is complaining of his lot,
Forsooth, scarce fit for ballads in the street;
In lovers' parts his passion more to breathe,
Having no heart to show, he shows his teeth."

XC.

Here Raucocanti's eloquent recital
Was interrupted by the pirate crew,
Who came at stated moments to invite all
The captives back to their sad berths; each threw
A rueful glance upon the waves (which bright all
From the blue skies derived a double blus,
Dancing all free and happy in the sun),
And then went down the hatchway one by one.

XCI.

They heard next day—that in the Dardanelles,
Waiting for his Sublimity's firman,
The most imperative of sovereign spells,
Which everybody does without who can,
More to secure them in their naval cells,
Lady to lady, well as man to man,
Were to be chain'd and lotted out per couple,
For the slave market of Constantinople.

XCII.

It seems when this allotment was made out,
There chanced to be an odd male, and odd female,
Who (after some discussion and some doubt,
If the soprano might be deem'd to be male,
They placed him o'er the women as a scout)
Were link'd together, and it happen'd the male
Was Juan—who, an awkward thing at his age,
Fair'd off with a Boeotian blooming visage.

XCIII.

With Raucocanti luckily was chain'd
The tenor; these two hated with a hate
Found only on the stage, and each more pain'd
With this his tuneless neighbor than his fate;
Sad strife arose, for they were so cross-grain'd,
Instead of bearing up without debate,
That each pull'd different ways with many an oath,
"Arcades ambo," 'd est—blackguards both.

XCIV.

Juan's companion was a Romagnole,
But bred within the march of old Ancona,
With eyes that look'd into the very soul
(And other chief points of a "bella donna"),
Bright—and as black and burning as a coal;
And through her clear brunette complexion shone a
Great wish to please—a most attractive dower,
Especially when added to the power.

XCV.

But all that power was wasted upon him,
For sorrow o'er each sense held stern command;
Her eye might flash on his, but found it dim:
And though thus chain'd, as a natural her hand
Touch'd his, nor that—nor any handsome limb
(And she had some not easy to withstand)
Could stir his pulse, or make his faith feel brittle;
Perhaps his recent wounds might help a little.

XCVI.

No matter; we should ne'er too much inquire,
But facts are facts: no knight could be more
true,
And firmer faith no lady-love desire;
We will omit the proofs, save one or two:
"T is said no one in hand " can hold a fire
By thought of frosty Caucasus; " but few,
I really think; yet Juan's then ordeal
Was more triumphant, and not much less real.

XCVII.

Here I might enter on a chaste description,
Having withstood temptation in my youth,
But hear that several people take exception
At the first two books having too much truth;
Therefore I 'll make Don Juan leave the ship soon,
Because the publisher declares, in sooth,
Through needles' eyes it easier for the camel is
To pass, than those two cantos into families.

XCVIII.

'T is all the same to me; I 'm fond of yielding,
And therefore leave them to the purer page
Of Smollett, Prior, Ariosto, Fielding,
Who say strange things for so correct an age;

I once had great alacrity in wielding
My pen, and liked poetic war to wage,
And recollect the time when all this cant
Would have provoked remarks which now it sha'n't.

XCIX.

As boys love rows, my boyhood liked a squabble;
But at this hour I wish to part in peace,
Leaving such to the literary rabble;
Whether my verse's fame be doom'd to cease
While the right hand which wrote it still is able,
Or of some centuries to take a lease,
The grass upon my grave will grow as long,
And sigh to midnight winds, but not to song.

C.

Of poets who come down to us through distance
Of time and tongues, the foster-babes of Fame,
Life seems the smallest portion of existence;
Where twenty ages gather o'er a name,
'T is as a snowball which derives assistance
From every flake, and yet rolls on the same,
Even till an iceberg it may chance to grow;
But, after all, 't is nothing but cold snow.

CI.

And so great names are nothing more than nominal,
And love of glory 's but an airy lust,
Too often in its fury overcoming all
Who would as 't were identify their dust
From out the wide destruction, which, entombing
all,
Leaves nothing till "the coming of the just"—
Save change: I 've stood upon Achilles' tomb,*
And heard Troy doubted; time will doubt of Rome.

CII.

The very generations of the dead
Are swept away, and tomb inherits tomb,
Until the memory of an age is fled,
And, buried, sinks beneath its offspring's doom:
Where are the epitaphs our fathers read?
Save a few glean'd from the sepulchral gloom
Which once-named myriads nameless lie beneath,
And lose their own in universal death.

CIII.

I canter by the spot each afternoon
Where parish'd in his fame the hero-boy,
Who lived too long for men, but died too soon
For human vanity, the young De Foix!
A broken pillar, not uncouthly hewn,
But which neglect is hastening to destroy,
Records Ravenna's carnage on its face,
While weeds and ordure rankle round the base.†

CIV.

I pass each day where Dante's bones are laid:
A little cupola, more neat than solemn,
Protects his dust, but reverence here is paid
To the bard's tomb,‡ and not the warrior's column:
The time must come, when both alike decay'd,
The chieftain's trophy, and the poet's volume,
Will sink where lie the songs and wars of earth,
Before Pelides' death, or Homer's birth.

CV.

With human blood that column was cemented,
With human filth that column is defiled,
As if the peasant's coarse contempt were vented
To show his loathing of the spot he soil'd:
Thus is the trophy used, and thus lamented
Should ever be those blood-hounds, from whose wild
Instinct of gore and glory earth has known
Those sufferings Dante saw in hell alone.

CVI.

Yet there will still be bards: though fame is smoke,
Its fumes are frankincense to human thought;
And the unequal feelings, which first woke
Song in the world, will seek what then they sought;
As on the beach the waves at last are broke,
Thus to their extreme verge the passions brought
Dash into poetry, which is but passion,
Or at least was so ere it grew a fashion.

CVII.

If in the course of such a life as was
At once adventurous and contemplative,
Men who partake all passions as they pass,
Acquire the deep and bitter power to give
Their images again as in a glass,
And in such colors that they seem to live;
You may do right forbidding them to show 'em,
But spoil (I think) a very pretty poem.

CVIII.

Oh! ye, who make the fortunes of all books!
Benign Cereuleans of the second sex!
Who advertise new poems by your looks,
Your "imprimatur" will ye not annex?
What! must I go to the oblivious cooks,
Those Cornish plunderers of Parmassian wrecks?
Ah! must I then the only minstrel be,
Proscribed from tasting your Castilian tea!

CIX.

What! can I prove "a lion" then no more?
A ball-room bard, a foolscap, hot-press darling?
To bear the compliments of many a bore,
And sigh, "I can't get out," like Yorick's star-
ling;
Why then I 'll swear, as poet Wordy swore (Because the world won't read him, always snarl-
ing),
That taste is gone, that fame is but a lottery,
Drawn by the blue-coat mimes of a coterie.

CX.

Oh! "darkly, deeply, beautifully blue,"
As some one somewhere sings about the sky,
And I, ye learned ladies, say of you:
They say your stockings are so—(Heaven knows
why)
I have examined few pair of that hue;
Blue as the garters which serenely lie
Round the Patrician left-legs, which adorn
The festal midnight, and the levee morn.

CXI.

Yet some of you are most seraphic creatures—
But times are alter'd since, a rhyming lover,

* "I stood upon the plain of Troy daily, for more than a month, in 1810; and if anything diminished my pleasure, it was that the blackguard Bryant had impugned its veracity."
—Byron Diary, 1821.

† The pillar which records the battle of Ravenna is about two miles from the city, on the opposite side of the river to the road towards Forlì. Gaston de Foix, who gained the battle, was killed in it: there fell on both sides twenty thousand men.

‡ Dante was buried ('in sacra minorum sede') at Ravenna, in a handsome tomb, which was erected by his protector, Guido da Polenta, restored by Bernardo Bembo in 1484, again restored by Cardinal Corsi in 1688, and replaced by a more magnificent sepulchre in 1780, at the expense of the cardinal Luigi Valent Gonsaga. The Florentines having in vain frequently attempted to recover his body, crowned his image in a church, and his picture is still one of the idols of their cathedral."—HOMERUS.

You read my stanzas, and I read your features:
And—but no matter, all those things are over;
Still I have no dislike to learned natures.
For sometimes such a world of virtues cover;
I knew one woman of that purer school,
The loveliest, chastest, best, but—quite a fool.

CXII.

Humboldt, "the first of travellers," but not
The last, if late accounts be accurate,
Invented, by some name I have forgot,
As well as the sublime discovery's date,
An airy instrument, with which he sought
To ascertain the atmospheric state,
By measuring "the intensity of blue":
Oh, Lady Daphne! let me measure you!

CXIII.

But to the narrative:—The vessel bound
With slaves to sell off in the capital,
After the usual process, might be found
At anchor under the seraglio wall;
Her cargo, from the plague being safe and sound,
Were landed in the market, one and all,
And there with Georgians, Russians, and Circassians,
Bought up for different purposes and passions.

CXIV.

Some went off dearly; fifteen hundred dollars
For one Circassian, a sweet girl, were given,
Warranted virgin; beauty's brightest colors
Had deck'd her out in all the hues of heaven:
Her sale sent home some disappointed bawlers,
Who bade on till the hundreds reach'd eleven;
But when the offer went beyond, they knew
'T was for the Sultan, and at once withdrew.

CXV.

Twelve negroes from Nubia brought a price
Which the West Indian market scarce could bring.
Though Wilberforce, at last, has made it twice
What 't was ere Abolition; and the thing
Need not seem very wonderful, for vice
Is always much more splendid than a king:
The virtues, even the most exalted, Charity,
Are saving—vice spares nothing for a rarity.

CXVI.

But for the destiny of this young troop,
How some were bought by pachas, some by Jews,
How some to burdens were obliged to stoop,
And others rose to the command of crews
As renegades; while in hapless group,
Hoping no very old virgins might choose,
The females stood, as one by one they pick'd 'em,
To make a mistress, or fourth wife, or victim:

CXVII.

And this must be reserved for further song;
Also our hero's lot, however unpleasant
(Because this Canto has become too long),
Must be postponed discreetly for the present;

* "The cyanometer—an instrument invented for ascertaining the intensity of the blue color of the sky."

* In a note from Madame Guliccoli to Lord Byron, she says, "Remember, my Byron, the promise you have made me. Never shall I be able to tell you the satisfaction I feel from it; so great are the sentiments of pleasure and confidence with which the sacrifice you have made has inspired me." In a postscript to the note she adds, "Mi reverendo solo che Don Giovanni non resti all' inferno." "I am only sorry that Don Juan was not left in the infernal regions."

* "Lady Mary Wortley was strangely when she says, 'Saint Paul would out a strange figure by Saint Sophia.'"

I'm sensible redundancy is wrong,
But could not for the muse of me put less in 't:
And now delay the progress of Don Juan,
Till what is call'd in Oasian the fifth Duan.

CANTO THE FIFTH. †

I.

WHEN amatory poets sing their loves
In liquid lines mellifuously bland,
And pair their rhymes as Venus yokes her doves,
They little think what mischief is in hand;
The greater their success the worse it proves,
As Ovid's verse may give to understand;
Even Petrarch's self, if judged with due severity,
Is the Platonic pimp of all posterity.¹⁷

II.

I therefore do denounce all amorous writing,
Except in such a way as not to attract;
Plain—simple—short, and by no means inviting,
But with a moral to each error tack'd,
Form'd rather for instructing than delighting,
And with all passions in their turn attack'd;
Now, if my Pegasus should not be shod ill,
This poem will become a moral model.

III.

The European with the Asian shore
Sprinkled with palaces; the Ocean stream
Here and there studded with a seventy-four;
Sophia's cupola with golden gleam;
The cypress groves; Olympus high and hoar;
The twelve isles, and the more than I could dream,
Far less describe, present the very view
Which charm'd the charming Mary Montagu.

IV.

I have a passion for the name of "Mary,"¹⁸
For once it was a magic sound to me;
And still it half calls up the realms of fairy,
Where I beheld what never was to be;
All feelings changed, but this was last to vary,
A spell from which even yet I am not quite free:
But I grow sad—and let a tale grow cold,
Which must not be pathetically told.

V.

The wind swept down the Euxine, and the wave
Broke foaming o'er the blue Symplegades;
'T is a grand sight from off "the Giant's Grave!"
To watch the progress of those rolling mounds
Between the Bosphorus, as they lash and lave
Europe and Asia, you being quite at ease:

have been in both, surveyed them inside and out attentively. Saint Sophia's is undoubtedly the most interesting, from its immense antiquity, and the circumstance of all the Greek emperors, from Justinian, having been crowned there, and several murdered at the altar, besides the Turkish sultans who attended it regularly. But it is not to be mentioned in the same page with Saint Paul's (I speak like a Cockney)." Byron Letters, 1830.

† See ante, p. 311.

! The "Giant's Grave" is a height on the Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, much frequented by holiday parties; like Harrow and Highgate.

There's not a sea the passenger o'er pukes in,
Turns up more dangerous breakers than the Euxine.

VI.

'Twas a raw day of Autumn's bleak beginning,
When nights are equal, but not so the days;
The Parcae then cut short the further spinning
Of seamen's fates, and the loud tempests raise
The waters, and repentance for past sinning
In all, who o'er the great deep take their ways:
They vow to amend their lives, and yet they don't;
Because if drown'd, they can't—if spared, they won't.

VII.

A crowd of shivering slaves of every nation,
And age, and sex, were in the market ranged;
Each bevy with the merchant in his station:
Poor creatures! their good looks were sadly changed.
All save the blacks seem'd faded with vexation,
From friends, and home, and freedom far estranged;
The negroes more philosophy display'd—
Used to it, no doubt, as eels are to be flay'd.

VIII.

Juan was juvenile, and thus was full,
As most at his age are, of hope, and health;
Yet I must own, he look'd a little dull,
And now and then a tear stole down by stealth;
Perhaps his recent loss of blood might pull
His spirit down; and then the loss of wealth,
A mistress, and such comfortable quarters,
To be put up for auction amongst Tartars,

IX.

Were things to shake a stoic; ne'ertheless,
Upon the whole his carriage was serene:
His figure, and the splendor of his dress,
Of which some gilded remnants still were seen,
Drew all eyes on him, giving them to guess
He was above the vulgar by his mien;
And then, though pale, he was so very handsome;
And then—they calculated on his ransom.

X.

Like a backgammon board the place was dotted With whites and blacks, in groups on show for sale,
Though rather more irregularly spotted:
Some bought the jet, while others chose the pale.
It chanced amongst the other people lotted,
A man of thirty, rather stout and hale,
With resolution in his dark gray eyes,
Next Juan stood, till some might choose to buy.

XI.

He had an English look; that is, was square
In make, of a complexion white and ruddy,
Good teeth, with curling rather dark brown hair,
And, it might be from thought, or toll, or study,
An open brow a little mark'd with care:
One arm had on a bandage rather bloody;
And there he stood with such canny frowd, that greater
Could scarce be shown even by a mere spectator.

XII.

But seeing at his elbow a mere lad,
Of a high spirit evidently, though
At present weigh'd down by a doom which had O'erthrown even men, he soon began to show
A kind of blunt compassion for the sad
Lot of so young a partner in the woe,
Which for himself he seem'd to deem no worse
Than any other scrape, a thing of course.

XIII.

"My boy!"—said he, "amidst this motley crew
Of Georgians, Russians, Nubians, and what not,
All ragamuffins differing but in hue,
With whom it is our luck to cast our lot,
The only gentlemen seem I and you;
So let us be acquainted, as we ought:
If I could yield you any consolation,
'T would give me pleasure.—Pray, what is your nation?"

XIV.

When Juan answer'd—"Spanish!" he replied,
"I thought, in fact, you could not be a Greek;
Those servile dogs are not so proudly eyed:
Fortune has play'd you here a pretty freak,
But that's her way with all men, till they're tried;
But never mind,—she'll turn, perhaps, next week;
She has served me also much the same as you,
Except that I have found it nothing new."

XV.

"Pray, sir," said Juan, "if I may presume,
What brought you here?"—"Oh! nothing very rare—
Six Tartars and a drag-chain—"—"To this doom
But what conducted, if the question's fair,
Is that which I would learn."—"I served for some Months with the Russian army here and there;
And taking lately, by Suwarrow's bidding,
A town, was ta'en myself instead of Widdin."*

XVI.

"Have you no friends?"—"I had—but, by God's blessing,
Have not been troubled with them lately. Now
I have answer'd all your questions without pressing,
And you an equal courtesy should show."
"Alas!" said Juan, "t were a tale distressing,
And long besides."—"Oh! if 't is really so,
You're right on both accounts to hold your tongue;
A sad tale saddens doubly when 't is long."

XVII.

"But droop not: Fortune at your time of life,
Although a female moderately fickle,
Will hardly leave you (as she's not your wife)
For any length of days in such a pickle.
To strive, too, with our fate were such a strife
As if the corn-sheaf should oppose the sickle:
Men are the sport of circumstances, when
The circumstances seem the sport of men."

XVIII.

"'T is not," said Juan, "for my present doom
I mourn, but for the past;—I loved a maid:—"—
He paused, and his dark eye grew full of gloom;
A single tear upon his eyelash staid
A moment, and then dropp'd; "but to resume;
'T is not my present lot, as I have said,
Which I deplore so much; for I have borne
Hardships which have the hardest overworn,

XIX.

"On the rough deep. But this last blow—" and
here
He stopp'd again, and turn'd away his face.
"Ay," quoth his friend, "I thought it would appear
That there had been a lady in the case;
And these are things which ask a tender tear,
Such as I, too, would shed if in your place:
I cried upon my first wife's dying day,
And also when my second ran away:

* A considerable town in Bulgaria, on the right bank of the Danube.

XX.

"My third—"—"Your third!" quoth Juan, turning round;
 "You scarcely can be thirty: have you three?"
 "No—only two at present above ground:
 Surely 'tis nothing wonderful to see
 One person thrice in holy wedlock bound!"
 "Well, then, your third," said Juan, "what did she?"
 She did not run away, too,—did she, sir?"
 "No, faith."—"What then?"—"I ran away from her."

XXI.

"You take things coolly, sir," said Juan. "Why,"
 Replied the other, "what can a man do?
 There still are many rainbows in your sky,
 But mine have vanish'd. All, when life is new,
 Commence with feelings warm, and prospects high;
 But time strips our illusions of their hue,
 And one by one in turn, some grand mistake
 Casts off its bright skin yearly like the snake."

XXII.

"Tis true, it gets another bright and fresh,
 Or fresher, brighter; but the year gone through,
 This skin must go the way, too, of all flesh,
 Or sometimes only wear a week or two:—
 Love's the first net which spreads its deadly mesh;
 Ambition, Avarice, Vengeance, Glory, glue
 The glittering lime-twigs of our latter days,
 Where still we flutter on for pence or praise."

XXIII.

"All this is very fine, and may be true,"
 Said Juan; "but I really don't see how It betters present times with me or you."
 "No?" quoth the other; "yet you will allow
 By setting things in their right point of view,
 Knowledge, at least, is gain'd; for instance, now,
 We know what slavery is, and our disasters
 May teach us better to behave when masters."

XXIV.

"Would we were masters now, if but to try
 Their present lessons on our Pagan friends here,"
 Said Juan,—swallowing a heart-burning sigh:
 "Heaven help the scholar, whom his fortune sends here!"
 "Perhaps we shall be one day, by and by."
 Rejoind the other, "when our bad luck mends
 here;
 Meantime (yon old black eunuch seems to eye us)
 I wish to God that somebody would buy us."

XXV.

"But after all, what is our present state?
 'Tis bad, and may be better—all men's lot:
 Most men are slaves, none more so than the great,
 To their own whims and passions, and what not;
 Society itself, which should create
 Kindness, destroys what little we had got:
 To feel for none is the true social art
 Of the world's stoles—men without a heart."

XXVI.

Just now a black old neutral personage
 Of the third sex step up, and peering over
 The captives seem'd to mark their looks and age,
 And capabilities, as to discover
 If they were fitted for the purposed cage:
 No lady e'er is ogled by a lover,

Horse by a blackleg, broadcloth by a tailor,
 Fee by a counsel, felon by a jailer,

XXVII.

As is a slave by his intended bidder.
 'Tis pleasant purchasing our fellow creatures;
 And all are to be sold, if you consider
 Their passions, and are dextrous; some by features
 Are bought up, others by a warlike leader,
 Some by a place—as tend their years or natures:
 The most by ready cash—but all have prices,
 From crowns to kicks, according to their vices."

XXVIII.

The eunuch, having eyed them o'er with care,
 Turn'd to the merchant, and began to bid
 First but for one, and after for the pair;
 They haggled, wrangled, swore, too—so they did!
 As though they were in a mere Christian fair,
 Cheeping an ox, an ass, a lamb, or kid;
 So that their bargain sounded like a battle
 For this superior yoke of human cattle."

XXIX.

At last they settled into simple grumbling,
 And pulling out reluctant purses, and
 Turning each piece of silver o'er, and tumbling
 Some down, and weighing others in their hand,
 And by mistake sequins* with paras jumbling,
 Until the sum was accurately scan'd,
 And then the merchant giving change, and signing
 Receipts in full, began to think of dining."

XXX.

I wonder if his appetite was good?
 Or, if it were, if also his digestion?
 Methinks at meals some odd thoughts might intrude,
 And conscience ask a curious sort of question,
 About the right divine how far we should Sell flesh and blood. When dinner has oppress'd one,
 I think it is perhaps the gloomiest hour
 Which turns up out of the sad twenty-four."

XXXI.

Voltaire says "No:" he tells you that Candide
 Found life most tolerable after meals;
 He's wrong—unless a man were a pig, indeed,
 Repletion rather adds to what he feels,
 Unless he's drunk, and then no doubt he's freed
 From his own brain's oppression while it reels.
 Of food I think with Philip's son, or rather Ammon's (ill pleased with one world and one father);

XXXII.

I think with Alexander, that the act
 Of eating, with another act or two,
 Makes us feel our mortality in fact.
 Redoubled: when a roast and a ragout,
 And fish, and soup, by some side diables back'd,
 Can give us either pain or pleasure, who
 Would pique himself on intellects, whose use
 Depends so much upon the gastric juice?

XXXIII.

The other evening ('t was on Friday last)—
 This is a fact, and no poetic fable—
 Just as my great coat was about me cast,
 My hat and gloves still lying on the table,
 I heard a shot—'t was eight o'clock scarce past—
 And, running out as fast as I was able,

* The Turkish scoshino is a gold coin, worth about seven shillings and sixpence. The para is not quite equal to an English halfpenny.

* The assassination alluded to took place on the 8th of December, 1830, in the streets of Ravenna, not a hundred paces from the residence of the writer. The circumstances were as described.—* December 8, 1830. I open my letter to tell you a fact, which will show the state of this country better than I can. The commandant of the troops is now lying dead in my house. He was shot at a little past eight o'clock,

I found the military commandant
Stretch'd in the street, and able scarce to pant.

XXXIV.

Poor fellow! for some reason, surely bad,
They had slain him with five slugs; and left him
there
To perish on the pavement: so I had
Him borne into the house and up the stair,
And strip'd, and look'd to,—But why should I add

More circumstances? vain was every care;
The man was gone: in some Italian quarrel
Kill'd by five bullets from an old gun-barrel.

XXXV.

I gazed upon him, for I knew him well;
And though I have seen many corpses, never Saw one, whom such an accident befell,
So calm: though pierced through stomach, heart,
and liver,
He seem'd to sleep,—for you could scarcely tell
(As he bled inwardly, no hideous river
Of gore divulged the cause) that he was dead:
So as I gazed on him, I thought or said—

XXXVI.

"Can this be death? then what is life or death?
Speak!" but he spoke not: "wake!" but still he slept:—
"But yesterday and who had mightier breath?
A thousand warriors by his word were kept
In awe: he said, as the centurion saith,
'Go,' and he goeth; 'come,' and forth he stepp'd.
The trump and bugle till he spake were dumb—
And now nought left him but the muffled drum."

XXXVII.

And they who waited once and worshipp'd—they
With their rough faces throng'd about the bed
To gaze once more on the commanding clay
Which for the last, though not the first, time bled;
And such an end! that he who many a day
Had faced Napoleon's foes until they fled,—
The foremost in the charge or in the sally,
Should now be butcher'd in a civic alley.

XXXVIII.

The scars of his old wounds were near his new,
Those honorable scars which brought him fame;
And horrid was the contrast to the view—
But let me quit the theme; as such things claim
Perhaps even more attention than is due
From me: I gazed (as oft I have gazed the same)
To try if I could wrench aught out of death
Which should confirm, or shake, or make a faith;

XXXIX.

But it was all a mystery. Here we are,
And there we go:—but where? five bits of lead,
Or three, or two, or one, send very far!
And is this blood, then, form'd but to be shed?
Can every element our elements mar?
And air—earth—water—fire live—and we dead?
We, whose minds comprehend all things? No more;
But let us to the story as before.

XL.

The purchaser of Juan and acquaintance
Bore off his bargains to a gilded boat,

Embark'd himself and them, and off they went thence

As fast as oars could pull and water float;
They look'd like persons being led to sentence,
Wondering what next, till the *calque was brought
Up in a little creek below a wall
O'erstopp'd with cypresses, dark-green and tall.

XLI.

Here their conductor tapping at the wicket
Of a small iron door, 't was open'd, and
He led them onward, first through a low thicket
Flank'd by large groves, which tower'd on either
hand:
They almost lost their way, and had to pick it—
For night was closing ere they came to land.
The eunuch made a sign to those on board,
Who row'd off, leaving them without a word.

XLII.

As they were plodding on their winding way
Through orange bowers, and jasmine, and so forth
(Of which I might have a good deal to say,
There being no such profusion in the North
Of Oriental plants, "et cetera,"
But that of late your scribblers think it worth
Their while to rear whole hotbeds in their works,
Because one poet travel'd 'mongst the Turks):

XLIII.

As they were threading on their way, there came Into Don Juan's head a thought, which he Whisper'd to his companion:—"t was the same
Which might have then occur'd to you or me.
"Methinks,"—said he,—"'t would be no great
shame
If we should strike a stroke to set us free;
Let's knock that old black fellow on the head,
And march away—'t were easier done than said."

XLIV.

"Yes," said the other, "and when done, what then?
How get out? how the devil got we in?
And when we once were fairly out, and when
From Saint Bartholomew we have saved our skin,
To-morrow'd see us in some other den,
And worse off than we hitherto have been;
Besides, I'm hungry, and just now would take,
Like Esau, for my birthright a beef-steak."

XLV.

"We must be near some place of man's abode;—
For the old negro's confidence in creeping,
With his two captives, by so queer a road,
Shows that he thinks his friends have not been sleeping;
A single cry would bring them all abroad:
'T is better therefore looking before leaping—
And there, you see, this turn has brought us
through,
By Jove, a noble palace!—lighted too."

XLVI.

It was indeed a wide extensive building
Which open'd on their view, and o'er the front
There seem'd to be besprent a deal of gilding
And various hue, as is the Turkish wont,— about two hundred paces from my door. I was putting on my great coat when I heard the shot. On coming into the hall, I found all my servants on the balcony, exclaiming that a man was murdered. I immediately ran down, calling on Tia (the bravest of them) to follow me. The rest wanted to hinder us from going, as it is the custom for everybody here, it seems, to run away from the stricken deer."—Byron's Letters.

* The light and elegant wherries plying about the quays of Constantinople are so called.

† Saint Bartholomew is said to have been slayed alive.

A gaudy taste; for they are little skill'd in
The arts of which these lands were once the font:
Each villa on the Bosphorus looks a screen
New painted, or a pretty opera-scene.

XLVII.

And nearer as they came, a genial savor
Of certain stews, and roast meats, and pilans,
Things which in hungry mortals' eyes find favor,
Made Juan in his harsh intentions pause,
And put himself upon his good behavior:
His friend, too, adding a new saving clause,
Said, "In Heaven's name, let's get some supper now,
And then I 'm with you, if you 're for a row."

XLVIII.

Some talk of an appeal unto some passion,
Some to men's feelings, others to their reason;
The last of these was never much the fashion,
For reason thinks all reasoning out of season:
Some speakers whine, and others lay the lash on,
But more or less continue still to tease on,
With arguments according to their "forte":
But no one ever dreams of being short.—

XLIX.

But I digress: of all appeals,—although
I grant the power of pathos, and of gold,
Of beauty, flattery, threats, a shilling,—no
Method 's more sure at moments to take hold
Of the best feelings of mankind, which grow
More tender, as we every day behold,
Than that all-softening, overpowering knell,
The tocsin of the soul—the dinner-bell.

L.

Turkey contains no bells, and yet men dine;
And Juan and his friend, albeit they heard
No Christian knoll to table, saw no line
Of lackeys usher to the feast prepared,
Yet smelt roast meat, beheld a huge fire shine,
And cooks in motion with their clean arms bared,
And gazed around them to the left and right,
With the prophetic eye of appetite.

LI.

And giving up all notions of resistance,
They follow'd close behind their sable guide,
Who little thought that his own crack'd existence
Was on the point of being set aside:
He motion'd them to stop at some small distance,
And knocking at the gate, 't was open'd wide,
And a magnificent large hall display'd
The Asian pomp of Ottoman parade.

LII.

I won't describe; description is my forte,
But every fool describes in these bright days
His wondrous journey to some foreign court,
And spawns his quarto, and demands your praise—
Death to his publisher, to him 't is sport:
While Nature, tortured twenty thousand ways,
Resigns herself with exemplary patience
To guide-books, rhymes, tours, sketches, illustrations.*

LIII.

Along this hall, and up and down, some, squatted
Upon their hams, were occupied at chess;
Others in monosyllable talk chatted,
And some seem'd much in love with their own dress;

And divers smoked superb pipes, decorated
With amber mouths of greater price or less;
And several strutted, others slept, and some
Prepared for supper with a glass of rum.

LIV.

As the black eunuch entered with his brace
Of purchased infidels, some raised their eyes
A moment, without slackening from their pace;
But those who ate, ne'er stirr'd in any wise:
One or two stared the captives in the face,
Just as one views a horse to guess his price;
Some nodded to the negro from their station,
But no one troubled him with conversation.

LV.

He leads them through the hall, and, without stopping,
On through a farther range of goodly rooms,
Splendid but silent, save in one, where, dropping,t
A marble fountain echoes through the glooms
Of night, which robe the chamber, or where popping
Some female head most curiously presumes
To thrust its black eyes through the door or lattice,
As wondering what the devil noise that is.

LVI.

Some faint lamps gleaming from the lofty walls
Gave light enough to hint their further way,
But not enough to show the imperial halls
In all the flashing of their full array;
Perhaps there 's nothing—I 'll not say appalls,
But saddens more by night as well as day,
Than an enormous room without a soul
To break the lifeless splendor of the whole.

LVII.

Two or three seem so little, one seems nothing:
In deserts, forests, crowds, or by the shore,
There solitude, we know, has her full growth in
The spots which were her realms for evermore;
But in a mighty hall or gallery, both in
More modern buildings and those built of yore,
A kind of death comes o'er us all alone,
Seeing what 's meant for many with but one.

LVIII.

A neat, snug study on a winter's night,
A book, friend, single lady, or a glass
Of claret, sandwich, and an appetite,
Are things which make an English evening pass;
Though certes by no means so grand a sight
As is a theatre lit up by gas.
I pass my evenings in long galleries solely,
And that 's the reason I 'm so melancholy.

LIX.

Alas! man makes that great which makes him little:
I grant you in a church 't is very well:
What speaks of Heaven should by no means be brittle,
But strong and lasting, till no tongue can tell
Their names who rear'd it; but huge houses fit ill—
And huge tombs worse—mankind, since Adam fell:

Methinks the story of the tower of Babel
Might teach them this much better than I 'm able.

LL.

Babel was Nimrod's hunting-box, and then
A town of gardens, walls, and wealth amazing,

* "Guide des Voyageurs," "Directions for Travellers," etc.—"Rhymes, Incidental and Humorous," "Rhyming Rem-iniscences," "Excursions in Rhyme," etc.—"Lady Morgan's Tour in Italy," "Tour through Icaria," etc., etc.—"Sketches of Italy," "Sketches of Modern Greece," etc., etc.—The last is a playful allusion to his friend Mr. Hobhouse's "Illustrations of Childe Harold."

† A common furniture. I recollect being received by AN Pacha, in a large room, paved with marble, containing a marble basin, and fountain playing in the centre, etc., etc.

Where Nebuchadonozor, king of men,
Maign'd, till one summer's day he took to grazing,
And Daniel tamed the lions in their den,
The people's awe and admiration raising;
'T was famous, too, for Thibae and for Pyramus,
And the calumniated queen Semiramis*—

LXI.

That injured queen, by chroniclers so coarse
Has been accused (I doubt not by conspiracy)
Of an improper friendship for her horse
(Love, like religion, sometimes runs to heresy):
This monstrous tale had probably its source
(For such exaggerations here and there I see)
In writing "Courser" by mistake for "Courier":
I wish the case could come before a jury here.†

LXII.

But to resume,—should there be (what may not Be in these days?) some infidels, who don't,
Because they can't find out the very spot
Of that same Babel, or because they won't (Though Claudius Rich, Esquire, some bricks has got,
And written lately two memoirs upon 't)
Believe the Jews, those unbelievers, who Must be believed, though they believe not you,

LXIII.

Yet let them think that Horace has exprest
Shortly and sweetly the masonic folly
Of those, forgetting the great place of rest,
Who give themselves to architecture wholly;
We know where things and men must end at best:
A moral (like all morals) melancholy,
And "Et sepulchri immemor struis domos"
Shows that we build when we should but entomb us.

LXIV.

At last they reach'd a quarter most retired,
Where echo woke as if from a long slumber;
Though full of all things which could be desired,
One wonder'd what to do with such a number
Of articles which nobody required;
Here wealth had done its utmost to encumber
With furniture an exquisite apartment,
Which puzzled Nature much to know what Art meant.

LXV.

It seem'd, however, but to open on
A range or suite of further chambers, which Might lead to heaven knows where; but in this
one
The movables were prodigially rich:
Sofas 't was half a sin to sit upon,
So costly were they; carpets every stitch
Of workmanship so rare, they made you wish
You could glide o'er them like a golden fish.

LXVI.

The black, however, without hardly deigning
A glance at that which wrapt the slaves in wonder,
Trampled what they scarce trod for fear of stain-
ing,
As if the milky way their feet was under
With all its stars; and with a stretch attaining
A certain press or cupboard niched in yonder,
In that remote recess which you may see—
Or if you don't the fault is not in me,—

LXVII.

I wish to be perspicuous; and the black,
I say, unlocking the recess, pull'd forth
A quantity of clothes fit for the back
Of any Mussulman, whatever his worth;
And of variety there was no lack—
And yet, though I have said there was no dearth,—
He chose himself to point out what he thought
Most proper for the Christians he had bought.

LXVIII.

The suit he thought most suitable to each
Was, for the elder and the stouter, first
A Candiot cloak, which to the knee might reach,
And trousers not so tight that they would burst,
But such as fit an Asiatic breech;
A shawl, whose folds in Cashmire had been nurst,
Slippers of saffron, dagger rich and handy;
In short, all things which form a Turkish Dandy.

LXIX.

While he was dressing, Baba, their black friend,
Hinted the vast advantages which they Might probably attain both in the end,
If they would but pursue the proper way
Which Fortune plainly seem'd to recommend;
And then he added, that he needs must say,
"T would greatly tend to better their condition,
If they would condescend to circumcise."

LXX.

"For his own part, he really should rejoice
To see them true believers, but no less
Would leave his proposition to their choice."
The other, thanking him for this excess
Of goodness, in thus leaving them a voice
In such a trifle, scarcely could express
"Sufficiently" (he said) "his approbation
Of all the customs of this polish'd nation.

LXXI.

"For his own share—he saw but small objection
To so respectable an ancient rite;
And, after swallowing down a slight refection,
For which he own'd a present appetite,
He doubted not a few hours of reflection
Would reconcile him to the business quite."
"Will it?" said Juan, sharply: "Strike me dead,
But they as soon shall circumcise my head!

LXXII.

"Cut off a thousand heads, before—"—"Now, pray,"
Replied the other, "do not interrupt:
You put me out in what I had to say.
Sir!—as I said, as soon as I have supt,
I shall perpend if your proposal may
Be such as I can properly accept;
Provided always your great goodness still Remits the matter to our own free will."

LXXIII.

Baba eyed Juan, and said, "Be so good
As dress yourself"—and pointed out a suit
In which a princess with great pleasure would Array her limbs; but Juan standing mute,
As not being in a masquerading mood,
Gave it a slight kick with his Christian foot;
And when the old negro told him to "Get ready,"
Replied, "Old gentleman, I'm not a lady."

* Babylon was enlarged by Nimrod, strengthened and beautified by Nebuchadonozor, and rebuilt by Semiramis. Excepting the ruins of some large and lofty turrets, like that of Babel or Belsus, the cities of Babylon and Nineveh are so completely crumbled into dust, as to be wholly undistinguishable but by a few inequalities of the surface on which they once stood.

† At the time when Lord Byron was writing this canto, the unfortunate affair of Queen Caroline was occupying much attention in Italy, as in England. The allusions to the domestic troubles of George IV. in the text are frequent.

LXXXIV.

"What you may be, I neither know nor care,"
Said Baba: "but pray do as I desire:
I have no more time nor many words to spare."
"At least," said Juan, "sure I may inquire
The cause of this odd travesty?"—"Forbear,"
Said Baba, "to be curious; 't will transpire,
No doubt, in proper place, and time, and season;
I have no authority to tell the reason."

LXXXV.

"Then if I do," said Juan, "I'll be———"Hold!"
Rejoind' the negro, "pray be not provoking;
This spirit's well, but it may wax too bold,
And you will find us not too fond of joking."
"What, sir!" said Juan, "shall it e'er be told
That I unsex'd my dress?" But Baba, stroking
The things down, said, "Incense me, and I call
Those who will leave you of no sex at all."

LXXXVI.

"I offer you a handsome suit of clothes:
A woman's, true; but then there is a cause
Why you should wear them."—"What, though my soul loathes
The effeminate garb?"—thus, after a short pause,
Sigh'd Juan, muttering also some slight oaths,
"What the devil shall I do with all this gauze?"
Thus he profanely term'd the finest lace
Which e'er set off a marriage-morning face.

LXXXVII.

And then he swore; and, sighing, on he slipp'd
A pair of trousers of flesh-color'd silk;
Next with a virgin zone he was equip'd,
Which girt a slight chemise as white as milk;
But tugging on his petticoat, he tripp'd,
Which—as we say—or as the Scotch say, whilt
(The rhyme obliges me to this; sometimes Monarchs are less imperative than rhymes),—

LXXXVIII.

Whilk, which (or what you please), was owing to
His garment's novelty, and his being awkward:
And yet at last he managed to get through
His toilet, though no doubt a little backward:
The negro Baba help'd a little too,
When some untoward part of raiment stuck
hard;
And, wrestling both his arms into a gown,
He paused, and took a survey up and down.

LXXXIX.

One difficulty still remain'd—his hair
Was hardly long enough; but Baba found
So many false long tresses all to spare,
That soon his head was most completely crown'd,
After the manner then in fashion there;
And this addition with such gems was bound
As suited the ensemble of his toilet,
While Baba made him comb his head and o' it.

LXXXX.

And now being femininely all array'd,
With some small aid from scissors, paint, and tweezers,
He look'd in almost all respects a maid,
And Baba smilingly exclaim'd, "You see, sir,
A perfect transformation here display'd;
And now, then, you must come along with me,
sir,
That is—the Lady:" clapping his hands twice,
Four blacks were at his elbow in a trice.

LXXXXI.

"You, sir," said Baba, nodding to the one,
"Will please to accompany those gentlemen

To supper; but you, worthy Christian nun,
Will follow me: no trifling, sir; for when
I say a thing, it must at once be done.
What fear you? think you this a lion's den?
Why, 't is a palace; where the truly wise
Anticipate the Prophet's paradise.

LXXXXII.

"You fool! I tell you no one means you harm."
"So much the better," Juan said, "for them;
Else they shall feel the weight of this my arm,
Which is not quite so light as you may deem.
I yield thus far; but soon will break the charm,
If any take me for that which I seem:
So that I trust for every body's sake,
That this disguise may lead to no mistake."

LXXXXIII.

"Blockhead! come on, and see," quoth Baba; while Don Juan, turning to his comrade, who,
Though somewhat grieved, could scarce forbear a smile
Upon the metamorphosis in view,—
"Farewell!" they mutually exclaim'd: "this soil
Seems fertile in adventures strange and new;
One's turn'd half Mussulman, and one a maid,
By this old black enchanter's unsought aid."

LXXXXIV.

"Farewell!" said Juan: "should we meet no more,
I wish you a good appetite."—"Farewell!"
Replied the other; "though it grieves me sore:
When we next meet, we'll have a tale to tell.
We needs must follow when Fate puts from shore.
Keep your good name; though Eve herself can't tell."
"Nay," quoth the maid, "the Sultan's self shan't carry me,
Unless his highness promises to marry me."

LXXXXV.

And thus they parted, each by separate doors;
Baba led Juan onward room by room
Through glittering galleries, and o'er marble floors,
Till a gigantic portal through the gloom,
Haughty and huge, along the distance looms;
And wafted far arose a rich perfume:
It seem'd as though they came upon a shrine,
For all was vast, still, fragrant, and divine.

LXXXXVI.

The giant door was broad, and bright, and high,
Of gilded bronze, and carved in curious guise;
Warriors thereon were battling furiously;
Here stalks the victor, there the vanquish'd lies;
There captives led in triumph droop the eye,
And in perspective many a squadron flies:
It seems the work of times before the line
Of Rome transplanted fell with Constantine.

LXXXXVII.

This massy portal stood at the wide close
Of a huge hall, and on its either side
Two little dwarfs, the least you could suppose,
Were sat, like ugly imps, as if allied
In mockery to the enormous gate which rose
O'er them in almost pyramidal pride:
The gate so splendid was in all its features,
You never thought about those little creatures,

LXXXXVIII.

Until you nearly trod on them, and then
You started back in horror to survey

* Feature of a gate—a ministerial metaphor: "the feature upon which this question hangs." See the "Fudge Family" or bear Castlereagh.

The wondrous hideousness of those small men,
Whose color was not black, nor white, nor gray,
But an extraneous mixture, which no pen
Can trace, although perhaps the pencil may;
They were misshapen pigmies, deaf and dumb—
Monsters, who cost a no less monstrous sum.

LXXXIX.

Their duty was—for they were strong, and though
They look'd so little, did strong things at times—

To ope this door, which they could really do,
The hinges being as smooth as Rogers' rhymes;
And now and then, with tough strings of the bow,
As is the custom of those Eastern climes,
To give some rebel Pacha a cravat:
For mutes are generally used for that.

XC.

They spoke by signs—that is, not spoke at all;
And looking like two incubi, they glared
As Baba with his fingers made them fall
To heaving back the portal folds: it scared
Juan a moment, as this pair so small,
With shrinking serpent optics on him stared;
It was as if their little looks could poison
Or fascinate whome'er they fix'd their eyes on.

XCI.

Before they enter'd, Baba paused to hint
To Juan some slight lessons as his guide:
"If you could just contrive," he said, "to stint
That somewhat manly majesty of stride,
'T would be as well, and—(though there's not much in't)

To swing a little less from side to side,
Which has at times an aspect of the oddest;—
And also could you look a little modest,

XCII.

"'T would be convenient; for these mutes have eyes
Like needles, which may pierce those petticoats;
And if they should discover your disguise,
You know how near us the deep Bosphorus floats;

And you and I may chance, ere morning rise,
To find our way to Marmora without boats,
Stitch'd up in sacks—a mode of navigation
A good deal practiced here upon occasion."

XCIII.

With this encouragement, he led the way
Into a room still nobler than the last;
A rich confusion form'd a disarray
In such sort, that the eye along it cast
Could hardly carry anything away,
Object on object flash'd so bright and fast;
A dazzling mass of gems, and gold, and glitter,
Magnificently mingled in a litter.

XCIV.

Wealth had done wonders—taste not much; such things
Occur in Orient palaces, and even
In the more chaste'n'd domes of Western kings
(Of which I have also seen some six or seven),

* "A few years ago the wife of Muchtar Pacha complained to his father of his son's supposed infidelity; he asked with whom, and she had the barbarity to give in a list of the twelve handsomest women in Yastina. They were seized, fastened up in sacks, and drowned in the lake the same night. One of the guards who was present informed me, that not one of the victims uttered a cry, or showed a symptom of terror at so sudden a "wrench from all we know, from all we love."
† "With regard to the queen's person, all contemporary authors agree in ascribing to Mary the utmost beauty of

Where I can't say or gold or diamond slings
Great lustre, there is much to be forgiven;
Groups of bad statues, tables, chairs, and pictures,
On which I cannot pause to make my strictures.

XCV.

In this imperial hall, at distance lay
Under a canopy, and there reclined
Quite in a confidential queenly way,
A lady; Baba stopp'd, and kneeling sign'd
To Juan, who though not much used to pray,
Knelt down by instinct, wondering in his mind
What all this meant: while Baba bow'd and bended
His head, until the ceremony ended.

XCVI.

The lady rising up with such an air
As Venus rose with from the wave, on them
Bent like an antelope a Paphian pair
Of eyes, which put out each surrounding gem;
And raising up an arm as moonlight fair,
She sign'd to Baba, who first kiss'd the hem
Of her deep purple robe, and speaking low,
Pointed to Juan, who remain'd below.

XCVII.

Her presence was as lofty as her state;
Her beauty of that overpowering kind,
Whose force description only would abate:
I'd rather leave it much to your own mind,
Than lessen it by what I could relate
Of forms and features; it would strike you blind
Could I do justice to the full detail;
So, luckily for both, my phrases fail.

XCVIII.

Thus much however I may add,—her years
Were ripe, they might make six-and-twenty springs,
But there are forms which Time to touch forbears,
And turns aside his scythe to vulgar things:
Such as was Mary's Queen of Scots; † true—tears
And love destroy; and sapping sorrow wrings
Charms from the charmer, yet some never grow
Ugly; for instance—Ninon de l'Enclos.‡

XCIX.

She spake some words to her attendants, who Composed a choir of girls, ten or a dozen,
And were all clad alike; like Juan, too,
Who wore their uniform, by Baba chosen:
They form'd a very nymph-like looking crew,
Which might have call'd Diana's chorus
"cousin,"
As far as outward show may correspond;
I won't be ball for anything beyond.

C.

They bow'd obeisance and withdrew, retiring,
But not by the same door through which came in Baba and Juan, which last stood admiring.
At some small distance, all he saw within
This strange saloon, much fitted for inspiring
Marvel and praise; for both or none things win;
And I must say, I ne'er could see the very Great happiness of the "Nil admirari."

countenance, and elegance of shape, of which the human form is capable. Her hair was black; her eyes were a dark gray; her complexion was exquisitely fine; and her hands and arms remarkably delicate, both as to shape and color. No man, says Brantome, ever beheld her person without admiration and love, or will read her history without sorrow."

—Boswell.

‡ Mademoiselle de l'Enclos, celebrated for her beauty, her wit, her gallantry, and, above all, for the extraordinary length of time during which she preserved her attractions.

CI.

"Not to admire is all the art I know (Plain truth, dear Murray, needs few flowers of speech)
To make men happy, or to keep them so:"
(So take it in the very words of Creech).
Thus Horace wrote we all know long ago;
And thus Pope quotes the precept to retace
From his translation; but had nons admired,
Would Pope have sung, or Horace been inspired?

CII.

Baba, when all the damsels were withdrawn,
Motion'd to Juan to approach, and then
A second time desired him to kneel down,
And kiss the lady's foot; which maxim when
He heard repeated, Juan with a frown
Drew himself up to his full height again,
And said, "It grieved him, but he could not stoop
To any shoe, unless it shod the Pope."

CIII.

Baba, indignant at this ill-timed pride,
Made fierce remonstrances, and then a threat
He mutter'd (but the last was given aside)
About a bow-string—quite in vain; not yet
Would Juan bend, though 'twere to Mahomet's bride:
There's nothing in the world like etiquette
In kingly chambers or imperial halls,
As also at the race and county balls.

CIV.

He stood like Atlas, with a world of words
About his ears, and nathless would not bend;
The blood of all his line's Castilian lords
Boil'd in his veins, and rather than descend
To stain his pedigree, a thousand swords
A thousand times of him had made an end;
At length perceiving the "foot" could not stand,
Baba proposed that he should kiss the hand.

CV.

Here was an honorable compromise,
A half-way house of diplomatic rest,
Where they might meet in much more peaceful guise;
And Juan now his willingness exprest
To use all fit and proper courtesies,
Adding, that this was commonest and best,
For through the South, the custom still commands
The gentleman to kiss the lady's hands.

CVI.

And he advanced, though with but a bad grace,
Though on more *thorough-bred or fairer fingers
No lips e'er left their transitory trace:
On such as these the lip too fondly lingers,
And for one kiss would fain imprint a brace,
As you will see, if she you love shall bring hers
In contact; and sometimes even a fair stranger's
An almost twelvemonth's constancy endangers.

CVII.

The lady eyed him o'er and o'er, and bade
Baba retire, which he obey'd in style,
As if well used to the retreating trade;
And taking hints in good part all the while,
He whisper'd Juan not to be afraid,
And looking on him with a sort of smile,
Took leave, with such a face of satisfaction,
As good men wear who have done a virtuous action.

* There is nothing, perhaps, more distinctive of birth than the hand. It is almost the only sign of blood which aristocracy can generate.

CVIII.

When he was gone, there was a sudden change:
I know not what might be the lady's thought,
But o'er her bright brow flash'd a tumult strange,
And into her clear cheek the blood was brought,
Blood-red as sunset summer clouds which range
The verge of heaven; and in her large eyes
wrought,
A mixture of sensations might be scann'd,
Of half voluptuousness and half command.

CIX.

Her form had all the softness of her sex,
Her features all the sweetness of the devil,
When he put on the cherub to perplex
Eve, and paved (God knows how) the road to evil;
The sun himself was scarce more free from specks
Than she from aught at which the eye could cavil;
Yet, somehow, there was something somehow wanting,
As if she rather order'd than was granting.—

CX.

Something imperial, or imperious, threw
A chain o'er all she did; that is, a chain
Was thrown as 't were about the neck of you,—
And rapture's self will seem almost a pain
With aught which looks like despotism in view;
Our souls at least are free, and 'tis in vain
We would against them make the flesh obey—
The spirit in the end will have its way.

CXI.

Her very smile was haughty, though so sweet;
Her very nod was not an inclination;
There was a self-will even in her small feet,
As though they were quite conscious of her station—
They trod as upon necks; and to complete
Her state (it is the custom of her nation),
A poniard deck'd her girdle, as the sign
She was a sultan's bride (thank Heaven, not mine!).

CXII.

"To hear and to obey" had been from birth
The law of all around her; to fulfill
All fantasies which yielded joy or mirth,
Had been her slaves' chief pleasure, as her will;
Her blood was high, her beauty scarce of earth:
Judge, then, if her caprices e'er stood still;
Had she but been a Christian, I've a notion
We should have found out the "perpetual motion."

CXIII.

Whate'er she saw and coveted was brought;
Whate'er she did not see, if she supposed
It might be seen, with diligence was sought,
And when 'twas found straightway the bargain closed:
There was no end unto the things she bought,
Nor to the trouble which her fancies sought;
Yet even her tyranny had such a grace,
The women pardon'd all except her face.

CXIV.

Juan, the latest of her whims, had caught
Her eye in passing on his way to sale;
She order'd him directly to be bought,
And Baba, who had ne'er been known to fail
In any kind of mischief to be wrought,
At all such auctions knew how to prevail:
She had no prudence, but he had; and this Explains the garb which Juan took amiss.

CXV.

His youth and features favor'd the disguise,
And should you ask how she, a sultan's bride,

Could risk or compass such strange fantasies,
This I must leave sultanas to decide:
Emperors are only husbands in wives' eyes,
And kings and consorts oft are mystified,
As we may ascertain with due precision,
Some by experience, others by tradition.

CXXVI.

But to the main point, where we have been tending:—

She now conceived all difficulties past,
And deem'd herself extremely condescending
When, being made her property at last,
Without more preface, in her blue eyes blending
Passion and power, a glance on him she cast,
And merely saying, "Christian, canst thou love?"
Conceived that phrase was quite enough to move.

CXXVII.

And so it was, in proper time and place;
But Juan, who had still his mind o'erflowing
With Haidée's tale and soft Ionian face, Felt the warm blood, which in his face was glowing,
Rush back upon his heart, which fill'd apace,
And left his cheeks as pale as snowdrops blowing:
These words went through his soul like Arab spears,
So that he spoke not, but burst into tears.

CXXVIII.

She was a good deal shock'd; not shock'd at tears,
For women shed and use them at their liking;
But there is something when man's eye appears
Wet, still more disagreeable and striking:
A woman's tear-drop melts, a man's half soars,
Like molten lead, as if you thrust a pike in
His heart to force it out, for (to be shorter)
To them 't is a relief, to us a torture.

CXXIX.

And she would have consoled, but knew not how:
Having no equals, nothing which had e'er
Infected her with sympathy till now,
And never having dreamt what 't was to bear
Aught of a serious, sorrowing kind, although
There might arise some pouting petty care
To cross her brow, she wonder'd how so near
Her eyes another's eye could shed a tear.

CXXX.

But nature teaches more than power can spoil,
And, when a strong although a strange sensation
Moves—female hearts are such a genial soil
For kinder feelings, whate'er their nation,
They naturally pour the "wine and oil,"
Samaritans in every situation;
And thus Gulbeyaz, though she knew not why,
Felt an odd glistening moisture in her eye.

CXXXI.

But tears must stop like all things else; and soon
Juan, who for an instant had been moved
To such a sorrow by the intrusive tone
Of one who dared to ask if "he had loved,"
Call'd back the stolid to his eyes, which shone
Bright with the very weakness he reproved;
And although sensitive to beauty, he Felt most indignant still at not being free.

CXXXII.

Gulbeyaz, for the first time in her days,
Was much embarrass'd, never having met
In all her life with aught save prayers and praise;
And as she also risk'd her life to get Him whom she meant to tutor in love's ways
Into a comfortable tête-à-tête,

To lose the hour would make her quite a martyr,
And they had wasted now almost a quarter.

CXXXIII.

I also would suggest the fitting time,
To gentlemen in any such ill case,
That is to say—in a meridian clime,
With us there is more law given to the chase,
But here a small delay forms a great crime:
So recollect that the extremest grace
Is just two minutes for your declaration—
A moment more would hurt your reputation.

CXXXIV.

Juan's was good; and might have been still better,
But he had got Haidée into his head:
However strange, he could not yet forget her,
Which made him seem exceedingly ill-bred.
Gulbeyaz, who look'd on him as her debtor
For having had him to her palace led,
Began to blush up to the eyes, and then
Grow deadly pale, and then blush back again.

CXXXV.

At length, in an imperial way, she laid
Her hand on his, and bending on him eyes,
Which needed not an empire to persuade,
Look'd into his for love, where none replied:
Her brow grew black, but she would not upbraid,
That being the last thing a proud woman tries;
She rose, and pausing one chaste moment, threw
Herself upon his breast, and there she grew.

CXXXVI.

This was an awkward test, as Juan found,
But he was steel'd by sorrow, wrath, and pride;
With gentle force her white arms he unbound,
And seated her all drooping by his side,
Then rising haughtily he glanced around,
And looking coldly in her face, he cried,
"The prison'd eagle will not pair, nor I Serve a sultana's sensual fantasy."

CXXXVII.

"Thou ask'st, if I can love? be this the proof
How much I have loved—that I love not thee!
In this vile garb, the distaff, web, and wool,
Were fitter for me: Love is for the free!
I am not dazzled by this splendid roof;
Whate'er thy power, and great it seems to be,
Heads bow, knees bend, eyes watch around a
throne,
And hands obey—our hearts are still our own."

CXXXVIII.

This was a truth to us extremely trite;
Not so to her, who ne'er had heard such things:
She deem'd her least command must yield delight,
Earth being only made for queens and kings.
If hearts lay on the left side or the right
She hardly knew, to such perfection brings Legitimacy its born votaries, when
Aware of their due royal rights o'er men.

CXXXIX.

Besides, as has been said, she was so fair
As even in a much humbler lot had made
A kingdom or confusion anywhere,
And also, as may be presumed, she laid
Some stress on charms, which seldom are, if e'er,
By their possessors thrown into the shade:
She thought hers gave a double "right divine;"
And half of that opinion 's also mine.

CXL.

Remember, or (if you can not) imagine,
Ye! who have kept your chastity when young,

While some more desperate dowager has been waging

Love with you, and been in the dog-days stung
By your refusal, recollect her raging!
Or recollect all that was said or sung
On such a subject; then suppose the face
Of a young downright beauty in this case.

CXXXI.

Suppose,—but you already have supposed,
The spouse of Potiphar, the Lady Booby,
Phedra, and all which story has disclosed
Of good examples; pity that so few by Poets and private tutors are exposed.
To educate—ye youth of Europe—you by!
But when you have supposed the few we know,
You can't suppose Gulbeyaz' angry brow.

CXXXII.

A tigress robb'd of young, a lioness,
Or any interesting beast of prey,
Are smiles at hand for the distress
Of ladies who cannot have their own way;
But though my turn will not be served with less,
These don't express one half what I should say:
For what is stealing young ones, few or many,
To cutting short their hopes of having any?

CXXXIII.

The love of offspring's nature's general law,
From tigresses and cubs to ducks and ducklings;
There's nothing whets the beak, or arms the claw,
Like an invasion of their babes and sucklings;
And all who have seen a human nursery, saw How mothers love their children's squalls and sucklings:

This strong extreme effect (to tire no longer
Your patience) shows the cause must still be stronger.

CXXXIV.

If I said fire flash'd from Gulbeyaz' eyes,
'T were nothing—for her eyes flash'd always fire;
Or said her cheeks assumed the deepest dye,
I should but bring disgrace upon the dye,
So supernatural was her passion's rise,
For ne'er till now she knew a cheek'd desire:
Even ye who know what a cheek'd woman is (Enough, God knows!) would much fall short of this.

CXXXV.

Her rage was but a minute's, and 't was well—
A moment's more had slain her; but the while
It lasted 't was like a short glimpse of hell:
Nought's more sublime than energetic bile,
Though horrible to see, yet grand to tell,
Like ocean warring 'gainst a rocky tale;
And the deep passions flashing through her form
Made her a beautiful embodied storm.

CXXXVI.

A vulgar tempest 't were to a typhoon
To match a common fury with her rage,
And yet she did not want to reach the moon,
Like moderate Hotspur on the immortal page;
Her anger pitch'd into a lower tune,
Perhaps the fault of her soft sex and age—
Her wish was but to "kill, kill, kill," like Lear's,
And then her thirst of blood was quenched in tears.

CXXXVII.

A storm it raged, and like the storm it pass'd,
Pass'd without words—in fact she could not speak;
And then her sex's shame broke in at last,
A sentiment till then in her but weak,
But now it flow'd in natural and fast,
As water through an unexpected leak;

For she felt humbled—and humiliation
Is sometimes good for people in her station.

CXXXVIII.

It teaches them that they are flesh and blood,
It also gently hints to them that others,
Although of clay, are yet not quite of mud;
That urns and pipkins are but fragile brothers,
And works of the same pottery, bad or good,
Though not all born of the same sires and mothers;
It teaches—Heaven knows only what it teaches,
But sometimes it may mend, and often reaches.

CXXXIX.

Her first thought was to cut off Juan's head;
Her second, to cut only his—acquaintance;
Her third, to ask him where he had been bred;
Her fourth, to rally him into repentance;
Her fifth, to call her maids and go to bed;
Her sixth, to stab herself; her seventh, to sentence
The lash to Baba;—but her grand resource
Was to sit down again, and cry of course.

CXL.

She thought to stab herself, but then she had
The dagger close at hand, which made it awkward;
For Eastern stays are little made to pad,
So that a poniard pierces if 't is stuck hard:
She thought of killing Juan—but, poor lad!
Though he deserved it well for being so backward,
The cutting off his head was not the art
Most likely to attain her aim—his heart.

CXLI.

Juan was moved: he had made up his mind
To be impaled, or quarter'd as a dish
For dogs, or to be slain with pangs refined,
Or thrown to lions, or made baits for fiends,
And thus heroically stood resolute,
Rather than sin—except to his own wish:
But all his great preparations for dying
Dissolved like snow before a woman crying.

CXLII.

As through his palms Bob Acres' valor oozed,*
So Juan's virtue ebb'd, I know not how;
And first he wonder'd why he had refused;
And then, if matters could be made up now;
And next his savage virtue he accused,
Just as a friar may accuse his vow,
Or as a dame repents her of her oath,
Which mostly ends in some small breach of both.

CXLIII.

So he began to stammer some excuses;
But words are not enough in such a matter,
Although you borrow'd all that e'er the muses
Have sung, or even a Dandy's dandiest chatter,
Or all the figures Castlereagh abuses;
Just as a languid smile began to flatter
His peace was making, but before he ventured
Further, old Baba rather briskly enter'd.

CXLIV.

"Bride of the Sun! and Sister of the Moon!"
('T was thus he spake) "and Empress of the Earth!
Whose frown would put the spheres all out of tune, Whose smile makes all the planets dance with mirth,

* "Yes, my valor is certainly going! it is soaking off! I feel it oozing, as it were, at the palms of my hands!"—SHERIDAN'S Rivals.

Your slave brings tidings—he hopes not too soon—
Which your sublime attention may be worth:
The Sun himself has sent me like a ray
To hint that he is coming up this way.[†]

CXLV.

"Is it," exclaimed Gulbeyaz, "as you say?
I wish to heaven he would not shine till morning!
But bid my women form the milky way.
Hence, my old comet! give the stars due warn-
ing—"
And, Christian! mingle with them as you may,
And as you'd have me pardon your past scorn-
ing—"
Here they were interrupted by a humming
Sound, and then by a cry, "The Sultan's coming!"

CXLVI.

First came her damsels, a decorous file,
And then his Highness' eunuchs, black and white;
The train might reach a quarter of a mile:
His Majesty was always so polite
As to announce his visits a long while
Before he came, especially at night;
For being the last wife of the Emperor,
She was of course the favorite of the four.

CXLVII.

His Highness was a man of solemn port,
Shaw'd to the nose, and bearded to the eyes,
Snatch'd from a prison to preside at court,
His lately bowstrung brother caused his rise;
He was as good a sovereign of the sort
As any mention'd in the histories
Of Cantemir, or Knölik, where few shine
Save Solyman, the glory of their line.[‡]

CXLVIII.

He went to mosque in state, and said his prayers
With more than "Oriental scrupulosity;"[‡]
He left to his vizier all state affairs,
And show'd but little royal curiosity:
I know not if he had domestic cares—
No process proved connubial animosity;
Four wives and twice five hundred maids, unseen,
Were ruled as calmly as a Christian queen.

CXLIX.

If now and then there happen'd a slight slip,
Little was heard of criminal or crime;
The story scarcely pass'd a single lip—
The sack and sea had settled all in time,
From which the secret nobody could rip:
The public knew no more than does this rhyme;
No scandals made the daily press a curse—
Morals were better, and the fish no worse.

CL.

He saw with his own eyes the moon was round,
Was also certain that the earth was square,
Because he had journey'd fifty miles, and found
No sign that it was circular anywhere;
His empire also was without a bound:
'Tis true, a little troubled here and there,
By rebel pachas, and encroaching giaours,
But then they never came to "the Seven Towers;"[‡]

CLI.

Except in shape of envoys, who were sent
To lodge there when a war broke out, according To the true law of nations, which ne'er meant
Those scoundrels, who have never had a sword in Their dirty diplomatic hands, to vent
Their spleen in making strife, and safely wording
Their lies, yclept despatches, without risk or
The singeing of a single inkly whisker.

CLII.

He had fifty daughters and four dozen sons,
Of whom all such as came of age were stow'd,
The former in a palace, where like nuns
They lived till some Bashaw was sent abroad,
When she, whose turn it was, was wed at once,
Sometimes at six years old—though this seems odd,
'Tis true; the reason is, that the Bashaw
Must make a present to his sire-in-law.

CLIII.

His sons were kept in prison, till they grew
Of years to fill a bowstring or the throne,
One or the other, but which of the two
Could yet be known unto the fates alone;
Meantime the education they went through
Was princely, as the proofs have always shown;
So that the heir apparent still was found
No less deserving to be hang'd than crown'd.

CLIV.

His Majesty saluted his fourth spouse
With all the ceremonies of his rank,
Who clear'd her sparkling eyes and smooth'd her
brows,
As suits a matron who has play'd a prank;
These must seem doubly mindful of their vows,
To save the credit of their breaking bank:
To no men are such cordial greetings given
As those whose wives have made them fit for heaven.

CLV.

His Highness cast around his great black eyes,
And looking, as he always look'd, perceived
Juan amongst the damsels in disguise,
At which he seem'd no whit surprised nor grieved,
But just remark'd with air sedate and wise,
While still a fluttering sigh Gulbeyaz heaved,
"I see you've bought another girl; 'tis pity
That a mere Christian should be half so pretty."

CLVI.

This compliment, which drew all eyes upon
The new-bought virgin, made her blush and shake.
Her comrades, also, thought themselves undone:
Oh, Mahomet! that his Majesty should take Such notice of a gisour, while scarce to one
Of them his lips imperial ever spake!
There was a general whisper, toos, and wriggle,
But etiquette forbade them all to giggle.

CLVII.

The Turks do well to shut—at least, sometimes—
The women up—because, in sad reality,
Their chastity in these unhappy climes
Is not a thing of that astringing quality

* But prithce—get my women in the way.

† That all the stars may gleam with due adorning.—MS.
‡ It may not be unworthy of remark, that Bacon, in his essay on "Empire," hints that Solyman was the last of his line; on that authority, I know not. These are his words:—
"The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solyman's line; as the succession of the Turks from Solyman until this day is supposed to be untrue, and of strange blood; for that Solyman the second was thought to be supposititious." But Bacon, in his historical authorities, is often inaccurate. I could give half a dozen instances from his Apophthegms only.—See Appendix. Note 51.

‡ Gibbon.

§ "The state prison of Constantinople, in which the Porte shuts up the ministers of hostile powers who are dilatory in taking their departure, under pretence of protecting them from the insults of the mob."—Horn.

Which in the North prevents precocious crimes,
And makes our snow less pure than our morality;
The sun, which yearly melts the polar ice,
Has quite the contrary effect on vice.

CLVIII.

Thus in the East they are extremely strict,
And wedlock and a padlock mean the same:
Excepting only when the former's pick'd
It ne'er can be replaced in proper frame;
Spoilt, as a pipe of claret is when prick'd:
But then their own polygamy's to blame

Why don't they knead two virtuous souls for life
Into that moral centaur, man and wife?

CLIX.

Thus far our chronicle; and now we pause,
Though not for want of matter; but 't is time,
According to the ancient epic laws,
To slacken sail, and anchor with our rhyme.
Let this fifth canto meet with due applause.
The sixth shall have a touch of the sublime;
Meanwhile, as Homer sometimes sleeps, perhaps
You'll pardon to my muse a few short naps.

PREFACE TO CANTOS VI., VII., AND VIII.

THE details of the siege of Ismail in two of the following cantos (i. e., the seventh and eighth) are taken from a French work, entitled "Histoire de la Nouvelle Russie." Some of the incidents attributed to Don Juan really occurred, particularly the circumstance of his saving the infant, which was the actual case of the late Duc de Richelieu, then a young volunteer in the Russian service, and afterward the founder and benefactor of Odessa, where his name and memory can never cease to be regarded with reverence.

In the course of these cantos, a stanza or two will be found relative to the late Marquis of Londonderry, but written some time before his decease. Had that person's oligarchy died with him, they would have been suppressed; as it is, I am aware of nothing in the manner of his death* or of his life to prevent the free expression of the opinions of all whom his whole existence was consumed in endeavoring to enslave. That he was an amiable man in private life, may or may not be true; but with this the public have nothing to do; and as to lamenting his death, it will be time enough when Ireland has ceased to mourn for his birth. As a minister, I, for one of millions, looked upon him as the most despotic in intention, and the weakest in intellect, that ever tyrannised over a country. It is the first time indeed since the Normans that England has been insulted by a minister (at least) who could not speak English, and that Parliament permitted itself to be dictated to in the language of Mrs. Malaprop.†

Of the manner of his death little need be said, except that if a poor radical, such as Waddington or Watson, had cut his throat, he would have been buried in a cross-road, with the usual appurtenances of the stake and mallet. But the minister was an elegant lunatic—a sentimental suicide—he merely cut the "carotid artery" (blessings on their learning!), and lo! the pageant, and the Abbey! and "the syllables of dolor yelled forth" by the newspapers—and the harangue of the Coroner in a eulogy over the bleeding body of the deceased—(an Antony worthy of such a Cæsar)—and the nauseous and atrocious cant of a degraded crew of conspirators against all that is sincere and honorable. In his death he was necessarily one of two things by the law—a felon or a madman—and in either case no great subject for pægyric. In his life he was—what all the world knows, and half of it will feel for years to come, unless his death prove a "moral lesson" to the surviving Sejanus of Europe. It may at least serve as some consolation to the nations, that their oppressors are not happy, and in some instances judge so justly of their own actions as to anticipate the sentence of mankind. Let us hear no more of this man; and let Ireland remove the ashes of her Grattan from the sanctuary of Westminster. Shall the patriot of humanity repose by the Werther of politics!!!

With regard to the objections which have been made on another score to the already published cantos of this poem, I shall content myself with two quotations from Voltaire:—"Le pudeur s'est enfuïe des cœurs, et s'est réfugiée sur les lèvres." . . . "Plus les mœurs sont dépravées, plus les expressions deviennent mesurées; on craint de regagner en langage ce qu'on a perdu en vertu."

This is the real fact, as applicable to the degraded and hypocritical mass which leavens the present English generation, and is the only answer they deserve. The hackneyed and lavished title of Blasphemer—which, with Radical, Liberal, Jacobin, Reformer, etc., are the changes which the hirelings are daily ringing in the ears of those who will listen—should be welcome to all who recollect on whom it was originally bestowed. Socrates and Jesus Christ were put to death publicly as blasphemers, and so have been and may be many who dare to oppose the most notorious abuses of the name of God and the mind of man. But persecution is not refutation, nor even triumph: the "wretched infidel," as he is called, is probably happier in his prison than the proudest of his assailants. With his opinions I have nothing to do—they may be right or wrong—but he has suffered for them, and that very suffering for conscience' sake will make more proselytes to deism than the example of heterodox Prelates to Christianity, suicide statesmen to oppression, or over-per-

* Robert, second marquis of Londonderry, died, by his own hand, at his seat at North Cray, in Kent, in August, 1822. During the session of parliament which had just closed, his lordship appears to have sunk under the weight of his labors, and insanity was the consequence.

† See Sheridan's comedy of "The Rivals."

‡ From this number must be excepted Canning. Canning is a genius, almost a universal one, an orator, a wit, a poet, a statesman; and no man of talent can long pursue the path of his late predecessor, Lord G. If ever man saved his country, Canning can, but will he? I, for one, hope so.

§ When Lord Sandwich said "he did not know the difference between orthodoxy and heterodoxy," Warburton, the bishop, replied, "Orthodoxy, my lord, is my doxy, heterodoxy is another man's doxy." A prelate of the present day has discovered, it seems, a third kind of doxy, which has not greatly excited in the eyes of the elect that which Bentham calls "Church-of-Englandism."

sioned homicides to the impious alliance which insults the world with the name of "Holy!" I have no wish to trample on the dishonored or the dead; but it would be well if the adherents to the classes from whence those persons sprung should abate a little of the cost which is the crying sin of this double-dealing and false-speaking time of selfish spoilers, and—but enough for the present.

PARA, July, 1888.

CANTO THE SIXTH.

I.

"~~There~~ is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which,—taken at the flood,"—you know the rest,*
And most of us have found it now and then:
At least we think so, though but few have guess'd
The moment, till too late to come again.
But no doubt everything is for the best—
Of which the surest sign is in the end:
When things are at the worst they sometimes mend.

II.

There is a tide in the affairs of women,
Which, taken at the flood, leads—God knows
where:
Those navigators must be able seamen
Whose charts lay down its current to a hair;
Not all the reveries of Jacob Behmen†
With its strange whirle and eddies can compare:
Men with their heads reflect on this and that—
But women with their hearts on heaven knows what!

III.

And yet a headlong, headstrong, downright she,
Young, beautiful, and daring—who would risk
A throne, the world, the universe, to be
Beloved in her own way, and rather whisk
The stars from out the sky, than not be free
As are the billows when the breeze is brisk—
Though such a she's a devil (if there be one),
Yet she would make full many a Manichean.

IV.

Thrones, worlds, et cetera, are so oft upset
By commonest ambition, that when passion
O'erthrows the same, we readily forget,
Or at the least forgive, the loving rash one.
If Antony be well remember'd yet,
'Tis not his conquests keep his name in fashion,
But Actium, lost for Cleopatra's eyes,
Outbalances all Caesar's victories.

V.

He died at fifty for a queen of forty;
I wish their years had been fifteen and twenty,
For then wealth, kingdoms, worlds are but a sport—I Remember when, though I had no great plenty
Of worlds to lose, yet still, to pay my court, I Gave what I had—a heart; as the world went, I Gave what was worth a world; for worlds could never
Restore me those pure feelings, gone for ever.

VI.

'T was the boy's "mite," and, like the "widow's,"
may
Perhaps be weigh'd hereafter, if not now;

But whether such things do or do not weigh,
All who have loved, or love, will still allow Life has nought like it. God is love, they say,
And Love's a god, or was before the brow
Of earth was wrinkled by the sins and tears
Of—but Chronology best knows the years.

VII.

We left our hero and third heroine in
A kind of state more awkward than uncommon,
For gentlemen must sometimes risk their akin
For that sad tempter, a forbidden woman:
Sultans too much abhor this sort of sin,
And don't agree at all with the wise Roman,
Heroic, stoic Cato, the sententious,
Who lent his lady to his friend Hortensius.‡

VIII.

I know Gulbeyaz was extremely wrong;
I own it, I deplore it, I condemn it;
But I detest all fiction even in song,
And so must tell the truth, how'er you blame it.
Her reason being weak, her passions strong,
She thought that her lord's heart (even could she claim it)
Was scarce enough; for he had fifty-nine
Years, and a fifteen-hundredth concubine.

IX.

I am not, like Cassio, "an arithmetician,"
But by "the bookish theoric" it appears,
If 'tis summ'd up with feminine precision,
That, adding to the account his Highness' years,
The fair Sultana err'd from inanition;
For, were the Sultan just to all his dears,
She could but claim the fifteen-hundredth part
Of what should be monopoly—the heart.

X.

It is observed that ladies are litigious
Upon all legal objects of possession,
And not the least so when they are religious,
Which doubles what they think of the trans-
gression;
With suits and prosecutions they besiege us,
As the tribunals show through many a session,
When they suspect that any one goes shares
In that to which the law makes them sole heirs.

XI.

Now, if this holds good in a Christian land,
The heathen also, though with lesser latitude,
Are apt to carry things with a high hand,
And take, what kings call "an imposing attitude,"
And for their rights connubial make a stand,
When their liege husbands treat them with ingratitude;
And as four wives must have quadruple claims,
The Tigris hath its jealousies like Thames.

* See Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, act iv., sc. iii.

† A noted visionary, born near Ghrilitz, in Upper Lunaticia, in 1575, and founder of the sect called Behmentica.

‡ Cato gave up his wife Marcia to his friend Hortensius;

but, on the death of the latter, took her back again. This conduct was ridiculed by the Romans, who observed, that Marcia entered the house of Hortensius very poor, but returned to the bed of Cato loaded with treasures.—PLUTARCH.

XII.

Guibeyaz was the fourth, and (as I said)
The favorite; but what's favor amongst four?
Polygamy may well be held in dread,
Not only as a sin, but as a bore:
Most wise men with one moderate woman wed,
Will scarcely find philosophy for more;
And all (except Mahometans) forbear
To make the nuptial couch a "Bed of Ware."^{*}

XIII.

His Highness, the sublimest of mankind,—
So styled according to the usual forms
Of every monarch, till they are consign'd
To those sad hungry Jacobins the worms,†
Who on the very loftiest kings have dined,—
His Highness gazed upon Guibeyaz' charms,
Expecting all the welcome of a lover
(A "Highland welcome"‡ all the wide world over).

XIV.

Now here we should distinguish; for how'er
Kisses, sweet words, embraces, and all that,
May look like what is—neither here nor there,
They are put on as easily as a hat,
Or rather bonnet, which the fair sex wear,
Trimmed either heads or hearts to decorate,
Which form an ornament, but no more part
Of heads, than their carresses of the heart.

XV.

A slight blush, a soft tremor, a calm kind
Of gentle feminine delight, and shown
More in the eyelids than the eyes, resign'd
Rather to hide what pleases most unknown,
Are the best tokens (to a modest mind)
Of love, when seated on his loveliest throne,
A sincere woman's breast,—for over-warm
Or over-cold annihilates the charm.

XVI.

For over-warmth, if false, is worse than truth;
If true, 't is no great lease of its own fire;
For no one, save in very early youth,
Would like (I think) to trust all to desire,
Which is but a precarious bond, in sooth,
And apt to be transferr'd to the first buyer
At a sad discount: while your over-chilly
Women, on t' other hand, seem somewhat silly.

XVII.

That is, we cannot pardon their bad taste,
For so it seems to lovers swift or slow,
Who fain would have a mutual flame confess'd,
And see a sentimental passion glow,
Even were Saint Francis' paramour their guest,
In his monastic concubine of snow; §—
In short, the maxim for the amorous tribe is Horatian, "Medio tu tutissimus ibis."

XVIII.

The "tu" 's too much,—but let it stand,—the verse
Requires it, that 's to say, the English rhyme,
And not the pink of old hexameters;
But, after all, there's neither tune nor time
In the last line, which cannot well be worse,
And was thrust in to close the octave's chime:
I own no prosody can ever rate it
As a rule, but truth may, if you translate it.

* At Ware, the inn known by the sign of the Saracen's Head still contains the famous bed; measuring twelve feet square, to which an allusion is made by Shakespeare in "Twelfth Night."

† Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we eat all creatures else, to fat us; and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service: two dishes but to one table: that's the end."—Hamlet.

XIX.

If fair Guibeyaz overdid her part,
I know not—! succeeded, and success
Is much in most things, not less in the heart
Than other articles of female dress.
Self-love in man, too, beats all female art;
They lie, we lie, all lie, but love no less:
And no one virtue wert, except starvation,
Could stop that worst of vices—propagation.

XX.

We leave this royal couple to repose:
A bed is not a throne, and they may sleep,
Whate'er their dreams be, if of joys or woes:
Yet disappointed joys are woes as deep
As any man's clay mixture undergoes.
Our least of sorrows are such as we weep:
'T is the vile dail drop on drop which wears
The soul out (like the stone) with petty cares.

XXI.

A scolding wife, a sullen son, a bill
To pay, unpaid, protested, or discounted
At a percentage; a child cross, dog ill,
A favorite horse fallen lame just as he's mounted,
A bad old woman making a worse will,
Which leaves you minus of the cash you counted
As certain;—these are paltry things, and yet
I've rarely seen the man they did not fret.

XXII.

I'm a philosopher; confound them all!
Bills, beasts, and men, and—no! not womankind!
With one good hearty curse I vent my gall,
And then my stoicism leaves nought behind
Which it can either pain or evil call,
And I can give my whole soul up to mind;
Though what 's soul, or mind, their birth or growth,
Is more than I know—the deuce take them both!

XXIII.

So now all things are d—n'd one feels at ease,
As after reading Athanasius' curse,
Which doth your true believer so much please:
I doubt if any now could make it worse
O'er his worst enemy when at his knees,
'T is so sententious, positive, and terse,
And decorates the book of Common Prayer,
As doth a rainbow the just-clearing air.

XXIV.

Guibeyaz and her lord were sleeping, or
At least one of them!—Oh, the heavy night,
When wicked wives, who love some bachelor,
Lie down in dudgeon to sigh for the light
Of the gray morning, and look vainly for Its twinkle through the lattice dusky quite—
To toss, to tumble, doze, revive, and quake
Lest their too lawful bed-fellow should wake!

XXV.

These are beneath the canopy of heaven,
Also beneath the canopy of beds
Four-posted and silk curtain'd, which are given
For rich men and their brides to lay their heads
Upon, in sheets white as what birds call "driven Snow." Well! 't is all hap-hazard when one weds.
Guibeyaz was an empress, but had been
Perhaps as wretched if a peasant's queen.

‡ See Waverley.

§ "The blessed Francis, being strongly solicited one day by the emotions of the flesh, pulled off his clothes and scourged himself soundly: being after this inflamed with a wonderful fervor of mind, he plunged his naked body into a great heap of snow. The devil, being overcome, retired immediately, and the holy man returned victorious into his cell." See Butler's Lives of the Saints.

XXVI.

Don Juan in his feminine disguise,
With all the damsels in their long array,
Had bow'd themselves before th' imperial eyes,
And at the usual signal ta'en their way
Back to their chambers, those long galleries
In the seraglio, where the ladies lay
Their delicate limbs; a thousand bosoms there
Beating for love, as the caged bird's for air.

XXVII.

I love the sex, and sometimes would reverse
The tyrant's * wish, "that mankind only had One neck, which he with one fell stroke might perce:"

My wish is quite as wide, but not so bad,
And much more tender on the whole than fierce;
It being (not now, but only while a lad)
That womankind had but one rosy mouth,
To kiss them all at once from North to South.

XXVIII.

Oh, enviable Briareus! with thy hands
And heads, if thou hadst all things multiplied
In such proportion!—But my muse withstands
The giant I thought of being a Titan's bride,
Or travelling in Patagonian lands;
So let us back to Iliuput, and guide
Our hero through the labyrinth of love
In which we left him several lines above.

XXIX.

He went forth with the lovely Odaliques,†
At the given signal join'd to their array;
And though he certainly ran many risks,
Yet he could not at times keep, by the way,
(Although the consequences of such friaks
Are worse than the worst damages men pay
In moral England, where the thing 's a tax),
From ogling all their charms from breasts to backs.

XXX.

Still he forgot not his disguise:—along
The galleries from room to room they walk'd,
A virgin-like and edifying throng,
By eunuchs flank'd; while at their head there stalk'd
A dame who kept up discipline among
The female ranks, so that none stirr'd or talk'd,
Without her sanction, on their she-parades:
Her title was "the Mother of the Maids."

XXXI.

Whether she was a "mother," I know not,
Or whether they were "maids" who call'd her
mother;

But this is her seraglio title, got
I know not how, but good as any other;
So Cantemir‡ can tell you, or De Tott:
Her office was to keep aloof or smother
All bad propensities in fifteen hundred Young women, and correct them when they blunder'd.

XXXII.

A goodly sinecure, no doubt! but made
More easy by the absence of all men—
Except his Majesty,—who, with her aid,
And guards, and bolts, and walls, and now and then

A slight example, just to cast a shade
Along the rest, contrived to keep this den
Of beauties cool as an Italian convent,
Where all the passions have, alas! but one vent.

XXXIII.

And what is that? Devotion, doubtless—how Could you ask such a question?—but we will Continue. As I said, this goodly row
Of ladies of all countries at the will
Of one good man, with stately march and slow,
Like water-lilies floating down a rill—
Or rather lake—for rills do not run slowly,—
Faced on most maiden-like and melancholy.

XXXIV.

But when they reach'd their own apartments, there,
Like birds, or boys, or bedlamites broke loose,
Waves at spring-tide, or women anywhere
When freed from bonds (which are of no great use
After all), or like Irish at a fair,
Their guards being gone, and as it were a truce
Establish'd between them and bondage, they Began to sing, dance, chatter, smile, and play.

XXXV.

Their talk, of course, ran most on the new comer;
Her shape, her hair, her air, her everything:
Some thought her dress did not so much become her,
Or wonder'd at her ears without a ring;
Some said her years were getting nigh their summer,
Others contended they were but in spring;
Some thought her rather masculine in height,
While others wish'd that she had been so quite.

XXXVI.

But no one doubted on the whole, that she
Was what her dress bespoke, a damsel fair,
And fresh, and "beautiful exceedingly,"
Who with the brightest Georgians‡ might compare;

They wonder'd how Gulbeyras, too, could be
So silly as to buy slaves who might share
(If that his Highness wearied of his bride)
Her throne and power, and everything beside.

XXXVII.

But what was strangest in this virgin crew,
Although her beauty was enough to vex,
After the first investigating view,
They all found out as few, or fewer, speaks
In the fair form of their companion new,
Than is the custom of the gentle sex,
When they survey, with Christian eyes or Heathen,
In a new face "the ugliest creature breathing."

XXXVIII.

And yet they had their little jealousies,
Like all the rest; but upon this occasion,
Whether there are such things as sympathies
Without our knowledge or our approbation,
Although they could not see through his disguise,
All felt a soft kind of concatenation,
Like magnetism, or devilism, or what
You please—we will not quarrel about that:

XXXIX.

But certain 't is they all felt for their new Companion something newer still, as 't were

* Callista—see Suetonius. "Being in a rage at the people, for favoring a party in the Circensian games in opposition to him, he cried out, 'I wish the Roman people had but one neck.'"

† The ladies of the seraglio.

‡ Demetrius Cantemir, a prince of Moldavia; whose "History of the Growth and Decay of the Ottoman Empire in Russia" was translated into English by Tindal. He died in 1728.

§ "It is in the adjacent climates of Georgia, Mingrelia, and Circassia, that nature has placed, at least to our eyes, the model of beauty, in the shape of the limbs, the color of the skin, the symmetry of the features, and the expression of the countenance: the men are formed for action, the women for love."—GIBSON.

A sentimental friendship through and through,
Extremely pure, which made them all concur
In wishing her their sister, save a few
Who wish'd they had a brother just like her,
Whom, if they were at home in sweet Circassia,
They would prefer to Padisha* or Pacha.

XL.

Of those who had most genius for this sort
Of sentimental friendship, there were three,
Lolah, Katinka,† and Dudù; in short
(To save description), fair as fair can be
Were they, according to the best report,
Though differing in stature and degree,
And clime and time, and country and complexion;
They all alike admired their new connection.

XLI.

Lolah was dusk as India and as warm;
Katinka was a Georgian, white and red,
With great blue eyes, a lovely hand and arm,
And feet so small they scarce seem'd made to tread.
But rather skim the earth; while Dudù's form
Look'd more adapted to be put to bed,
Being somewhat large, and languishing, and lazy,
Yet of a beauty that would drive you crazy.

XLII.

A kind of sleepy Venus seem'd Dudù,
Yet very fit to "murder sleep" in those
Who gazed upon her cheek's transcendent hue,
Her Attic forehead, and her Phidian nose:
Few angles were there in her form. 'Tis true,
Thinner she might have been, and yet scarce lose:
Yet, after all, 't would puzzle to say where
It would not spoil some separate charm to pore.

XLIII.

She was not violently lively, but
Stole on your spirit like a May-day breaking;
Her eyes were not too sparkling, yet, half-shut,
They put beholders in a tender taking:
She look'd (this simile's quite new) just out
From marble, like Pygmalion's statue waking,
The mortal and the marble still at strife,
And timidly expanding into life.

XLIV.

Lolah demanded the new damsel's name—
"Juanna."—Well, a pretty name enough.
Katinka ask'd her also whence she came—
"From Spain."—"But where to Spain?"—
"Don't ask such stuff,
Nor show your Georgian ignorance—for shame!"
Said Lolah, with an accent rather rough,
To poor Katinka: "Spain's an island near Morocco, betwixt Egypt and Tangier."

XLV.

Dudù said nothing, but sat down beside
Juanna, playing with her veil or hair;
And looking at her steadfastly, she sigh'd,
As if she pined her for being there,
A pretty stranger without friend or guide,
And all abash'd, too, at the general stare
Which welcomes hapless strangers in all places,
With kind remarks upon their mien and faces.

XLVI.

But here the Mother of the Maids drew near,
With "Ladies, it is time to go to rest.
I'm puzzled what to do with you, my dear,"
She added to Juanna, their new guest:

"Your coming has been unexpected here,
And every couch is occupied; you had best
Partake of mine; but by to-morrow early
We will have all things settled for you fairly."

XLVII.

Here Lolah interposed—"Mamma, you know
You don't sleep soundly, and I cannot bear
That anybody should disturb you so;
I'll take Juanna; we're a slenderer pair
Than you would make the half of;—don't say so;
And I of your young charge will take due care."
But here Katinka interfered, and said,
"She also had compassion and a bed."

XLVIII.

"Besides, I hate to sleep alone," quoth she.
The matron frown'd:—"Why so?"—"For fear of ghosts."
Replied Katinka: "I am sure I see
A phantom upon each of the four posts;
And then I have the worst dreams that can be,
Of Guebres, Glaours, and Glnas, and Gouls in hosts."
The dame replied, "Between your dreams and
you,
I fear Juanna's dreams would be but few.

XLIX.

"You, Lolah, must continue still to lie
Alone, for reasons which don't matter; you
The same, Katinka, until by and by:
And I shall place Juanna with Dudù,
Who's quiet, inoffensive, silent, shy,
And will not toss and chatter the night through.
What say you, child?"—Dudù said nothing, as
Her talents were of the more silent class;

L.

But she rose up, and kiss'd the matron's brow
Between the eyes, and Lolah on both cheeks,
Katinka too; and with a gentle bow (Curt'sies are neither used by Turks nor Greeks)

She took Juanna by the hand to show
Their place of rest, and left to both their piques,
The others putting at the matron's preference
Of Dudù, though they held their tongues from deference.

LI.

It was a spacious chamber (Oda is
The Turkish title), and ranged round the wall
Were couches, toilets—and much more than this
I might describe, as I have seen it all,
But it suffices—little was amiss;
'T was on the whole a nobly furnish'd hall,
With all things ladies want, save one or two,
And even those were nearer than they knew.

LII.

Dudù, as has been said, was a sweet creature,
Not very dashing, but extremely winning,
With the most regulated charms of feature,
Which painters cannot catch like faces sinning
Against proportion—the wild strokes of nature
Which they hit off at once in the beginning,
Full of expression, right or wrong, that strike,
And pleasing, or unpleasing, still are like.

LIII.

But she was a soft landscape of mild earth,
Where all was harmony, and calm, and quiet,
Luxuriant, budding; cheerful without mirth,
Which, if not happiness, is much more nigh it

* Padisha is the Turkish title of the Grand Signior.

† Katinka was the name of the youngest of the three girls at whose house Lord Byron resided while at Athens, in 1810.

Than are your mighty passions and so forth,
Which some call "the sublime:" I wish they'd try it:
I've seen your stormy seas and stormy women,
And pity lovers rather more than seamen.

LIV.

But she was pensive more than melancholy,
And serious more than pensive, and serene,
It may be, more than either—not unholy
Her thoughts, at least till now, appear to have been.

The strangest thing was, beauteous, she was wholly Unconscious, albeit turn'd of quick seventeen,
That she was fair, or dark, or short, or tall;
She never thought about herself at all.

LV.

And therefore was she kind and gentle as
The Age of Gold (when gold was yet unknown,
By which its nomenclature came to pass;
Thus most appropriately has been shown
"Lucus à non lucendo," not what was,
But what was not; a sort of style that's grown
Extremely common in this age, whose metal
The devil may decompose, but never settle:

LVI.

I think it may be of "Corinthian Brass,"*
Which was a mixture of all metals, but
The brass uppermost). Kind reader! pass
This long parenthesis: I could not shut
It sooner for the soul of me, and class
My faults even with your own! which meaneth,
Put
A kind construction upon them and me:
But that you won't—then don't—I am not less free.

LVII.

'T is time we should return to plain narration,
And thus my narrative proceeds:—Dudù,
With every kindness short of ostentation,
Show'd Juan, or Juanna, through and through
This labyrinth of females, and each station Described—what's strange—in words extremely few:

I have but one simile, and that's a blunder,
For wordless woman, which is silent thunder.

LVIII.

And next she gave her (I say her, because
The gender still was epicene, at least
In outward show, which is a saving clause)
An outline of the customs of the East,
With all their chaste integrity of laws,
By which the more a harem is increased,
The stricter doubtless grow the vestal duties
Of any supernumerary beauties.

LIX.

And then she gave Juanna a chaste kiss:
Dudù was fond of kissing—which I'm sure
That nobody can ever take amiss,
Because 't is pleasant, so that it be pure,
And between females means no more than this—
That they have nothing better near, or newer.
"Kiss" rhymes to "bliss" in fact as well as verse—
I wish it never led to something worse.

LX.

In perfect innocence she then unmade
Her toilet, which cost little, for she was
A child of Nature, carelessly array'd:
If fond of a chance ogle at her glass,

'T was like the fawn, which, in the lake display'd,
Beholds her own shy, shadowy image pass,
When first she starts, and then returns to peep,
Admiring this new native of the deep.

LXI.

And one by one her articles of dress
Were laid aside; but not before she offer'd
Her aid to fair Juanna, whose excess
Of modesty declined the assistance proffer'd:
Which pass'd well off—as she could do no less;
Though by this politesse she rather suffer'd,
Pricking her fingers with those cursed pins,
Which surely were invented for our sins,—

LXII.

Making a woman like a porcupine,
Not to be rashly touch'd. But still more dread,
Oh, ye! whose fate it is, as once 't was mine,
In early youth, to turn a lady's maid;—
I did my very boyish best to shine
In tricking her out for a masquerade:
The pins were placed sufficiently, but not
Stuck all exactly in the proper spot.

LXIII.

But these are foolish things to all the wise,
And I love wisdom more than she loves me;
My tendency is to philosophize
On most things, from a tyrant to a tree;
But still the spouseless virgin Knowledge flies.
What are we? and whence came we? what shall we
Our ultimate existence? what's our present?
Are questions answerless, and yet incessant.

LXIV.

There was deep silence in the chamber: dim
And distant from each other burn'd the lights,
And slumber hover'd o'er each lovely limb
Of the fair occupants: if there be sprites,
They should have walk'd there in their spiritlike trim.

By way of change from their sepulchral sites,
And shown themselves as ghosts of better taste
Than haunting some old ruin or wild waste.

LXV.

Many and beautiful lay those around,
Like flowers of different hue, and clime, and root,
In some exotic garden sometimes found,
With cost, and care, and warmth induced to shoot.
One with her auburn tresses lightly bound,
And fair brows gently drooping, as the fruit
Nods from the tree, was slumbering with soft
breath,
And lips apart, which show'd the pearls beneath.

LXVI.

One with her flush'd cheek laid on her white arm,
And raven ringlets gather'd in dark crowd
Above her brow, lay dreaming soft and warm;
And smiling through her dream, as through a cloud
The moon breaks, half un veil'd each further charm,
As, slightly stirring in her snowy shroud,
Her beauties seized the unconscious hour of night
All bashfully to struggle into light.

LXVII.

This is no bull, although it sounds so; for 'T was night, but there were lamps, as hath been said.

* This brass, so famous in antiquity, is a mixture of gold, silver, and copper, and is supposed to have been produced by the fusion of these metals, in which Corinth abounded, when it was sacked.

A third's all pallid aspect offer'd more
The traits of sleeping sorrow, and betray'd
Through the heaved breast the dream of some far shore
Beloved and deplored; while slowly stray'd
(As night-dew, on a cypress glittering, tinges
The black bough) tear-drops through her eyes' dark fringes.

LXXVIII.

A fourth as marble, statue-like and still,
Lay in a breathless, hush'd, and stony sleep;
White, cold, and pure, as looks a frozen rill,
Or the snow minaret on an Alpine steep,
Or Lot's wife done in salt,—or what you will:—
My smiles are gather'd in a heap,
So pick and choose—perhaps you'll be content
With a carved lady on a monument.

LXIX.

And lo! a fifth appears:—and what is she?
A lady of a "certain age," which means
Certainly aged—what her years might be
I know not, never counting past their teens;
But there she slept, not quite so fair to see,
As ere that awful period intervenes
Which lays both men and women on the shelf,
To meditate upon their sins and self.

LXX.

But all this time how slept, or dream'd, Dudu?
With strict inquiry I could ne'er discover,
And soon to add a syllable untrue;
But ere the middle watch was hardly over,
Just when the fading lamps waned dim and blue,
And phantoms hover'd, or might seem to hover,
To those who like their company, about
The apartment, on a sudden she scream'd out:

LXXI.

And that so loudly, that upstart'd all
The Oda, in a general commotion:
Matron and maids, and those whom you may call
Neither, came crowding like the waves of ocean,
One on the other, throughout the whole hall,
All trembling, wondering, without the least notion
More than I have myself of what could make
The calm Dudu so turbulently wake.

LXXII.

But wide awake she was, and round her bed,
With floating draperies and with flying hair,
With eager eyes, and light but hurried tread,
And bosoms, arms, and ankles glancing bare,
And bright as any meteor ever bred
By the North Pole,—they sought her cause of care,
For she seem'd agitated, flush'd, and frighten'd,
Her eye dilated, and her color heighten'd.

LXXIII.

But what is strange—and a strong proof how great
A blessing is sound sleep—Juanna lay
As fast as ever husband by his mate
In holy matrimony snores away.
Not all the clamor broke her happy state
Of slumber, ere they shook her,—so they say
At least,—and then she, too, unclosed her eyes,
And yawn'd a good deal with discreet surprise.

LXXIV.

And now commenced a strict investigation,
Which, as all spoke at once, and more than once
Conjecturing, wondering, asking a narration,
Allike might puzzle either wit or dunce,
To answer in a very clear oration.
Dudu had never pass'd for wanting sense,
But being "no orator as Brutus is,"
Could not at first expound what was amiss.

LXXV.

At length she said, that in a slumber sound
She dream'd a dream of walking in a wood—
A "wood obscure," like that where Dante found Himself in at the age when all grow good;
Life's half-way house, where dames with virtue
crown'd
Run much less risk of lovers turning rude;
And that this wood was full of pleasant fruits,
And trees of goodly growth and spreading roots;

LXXVI.

And in the midst a golden apple grew,—
A most prodigious pippin—but it hung
Rather too high and distant; that she threw
Her glances on it, and then, longing, hung Stones and whatever she could pick up, to Bring down the fruit, which still perversely clung
To its own bough, and dangled yet in sight,
But always at a most provoking height:—

LXXVII.

That on a sudden, when she least had hope,
It fell down of its own accord before
Her feet; that her first movement was to stoop
And pick it up, and bite it to the core;
That just as her young lip began to ope
Upon the golden fruit the vision bore,
A bee flew out, and stung her to the heart,
And so—she woke with a great scream and start.

LXXVIII.

All this she told with some confusion and Dismay, the usual consequence of dreams
Of the unpleasant kind, with none at hand
To expound their vain and visionary gleams.
I've known some odd ones which seem'd really plann'd
Prophetically, or that which one deems
A "strange coincidence," to use a phrase
By which such things are settled nowadays.

LXXIX.

The damsels, who had thoughts of some great harm,
Began, as is the consequence of fear,
To scold a little at the false alarm
That broke for nothing on their sleeping ear.
The matron, too, was wroth to leave her warm
Bed for the dream she had been obliged to hear,
And chafed at poor Dudu, who only sigh'd,
And said, that she was sorry she had cried.

LXXX.

"I've heard of stories of a cock and bull;
But visions of an apple and a bee,
To take us from our natural rest, and pull
The whole Oda from their beds at half-past three,
Would make us think the moon is at its full,
You surely are unwell, child! we must see,
To-morrow, what his Highness's physician
Will say to this hysteric of a vision.

LXXXI.

"And poor Juanna, too, the child's first night
Within these walls, to be broke in upon
With such a clamor—I had thought it right
That the young stranger should not lie alone,
And, as the quietest of all, she might
With you, Dudu, a good night's rest have known;
But now I must transfer her to the charge
Of Lolah—though her couch is not so large."

LXXXII.

Lolah's eyes sparkled at the proposition;
But poor Dudu, with large drops in her own,
Resulting from the scolding or the vision,
Implored that present pardon might be shown

For this first fault, and that on no condition
(She added in a soft and piteous tone)
Juanna should be taken from her, and
Her future dreams should be all kept in hand.

LXXXIII.

She promised never more to have a dream,
At least to dream so loudly as just now;
She wonder'd at herself how she could scream—
'T was foolish, nervous, as she must allow,
A fond hallucination, and a theme
For laughter—but she felt her spirits low,
And begg'd they would excuse her; she'd get over
This weakness in a few hours, and recover.

LXXXIV.

And here Juanna kindly interposed,
And said she felt herself extremely well
Where she then was, as her sound sleep disclosed,
When all around rang like a tocsin bell;
She did not find herself the least disposed
To quit her gentle partner, and to dwell
Apart from one who had no sin to show,
Save that of dreaming once "mal-à-propos."

LXXXV.

As thus Juanna spoke, Dudù turn'd round
And hid her face within Juanna's breast:
Her neck alone was seen, but that was found
The color of a budding rose's crest.
I can't tell why she blush'd, nor can expound
The mystery of this rupture of their rest;
All that I know is, that the facts I state
Are true as truth has ever been of late,

LXXXVI.

And so good night to them,—or, if you will,
Good morrow—for the cock had crown, and
light
Began to clothe each Asiatic hill,
And the mosque crescent struggled into sight
Of the long caravan, which in the chill
Of dewy dawn wound slowly round each height
That stretches to the stony belt, which girds
Asia, where Kaff looks down upon the Kurds.

LXXXVII.

With the first ray, or rather gray of morn,
Gulbeyaz rose from restlessness; and pale
As Passion rises, with its bosom worn,
Array'd herself with mantle, gem, and veil.
The nightingale that sings with the deep thorn,
Which fable places in her breast of wall,
Is lighter far of heart and voice than those Whose headlong passions form their proper woes.

LXXXVIII.

And that's the moral of this composition,
If people would but see its real drift:—
But that they will not do without suspicion,
Because all gentle readers have the gift
Of closing 'gainst the light their orbs of vision;
While gentle writers also love to lift
Their voices 'gainst each other, which is natural,
The numbers are too great for them to flatter all.

LXXXIX.

Rose the sultana from a bed of splendor,
Softer than the soft Sybarite's, who cried
Aloud because his feelings were too tender
To brook a ruffled rose-leaf by his side,—
So beautiful that art could little mend her,
Though pale with conflicts between love and
pride:
So agitated was she with her error,
She did not even look into the mirror.

XC.

Also arose about the self-same time,
Perhaps a little later, her great lord,
Master of thirty kingdoms so sublime,
And of a wife by whom he was abhorr'd;
A thing of much less import in that clime—
At least to those of incomes which afford
The filling up their whole connubial cargo—
Than where two wives are under an embargo.

XCI.

He did not think much on the matter, nor
Indeed on any other: as a man
He liked to have a handsome paramour
At hand, as one may like to have a fan,
And therefore of Circassians had good store,
As an amusement after the Divan;
Though an unusual fit of love, or duty,
Had made him lately bask in his bride's beauty.

XCII.

And now he rose; and after due ablutions
Exacted by the customs of the East,
And prayers and other pious evolutions,
He drank six cups of coffee at the least,
And then withdrew to hear about the Russians,
Whose victories had recently increased
In Catherine's reign, whom glory still adores,
As greatest of all sovereigns and w—s.

XCIII.

But oh, thou grand legitimate Alexander!
Her son's son, let not this last phrase offend
Thine ear, if it should reach—and now rhymes wander
Almost as far as Petersburg, and lend
A dreadful impulse to each loud meander
Of murmuring Liberty's wide waves, which blend
Their roar even with the Baltic's—so you be
Your father's son, 't is quite enough for me.

XCIV.

To call men love-begotten, or proclaim
Their mothers as the antipodes of Timon,
That hater of mankind, would be a shame,
A libel, or whate'er you please to rhyme on;
But people's ancestors are history's game;
And if one lady's alip could leave a crime on
All generations, I should like to know
What pedigree the best would have to show?

XCV.

Had Catherine and the sultan understood
Their own true interests, which kings rarely
know,
Until 't is taught by lessons rather rude,
There was a way to end their strife, although Perhaps precarious, had they but thought good,
Without the aid of prince or plenip;
She to dismiss her guards and be his harem,
And for their other matters, meet and share 'em.

XCVI.

But as it was, his Highness had to hold
His daily council upon ways and means
How to encounter with this martial scold,
This modern Amazon and queen of queans;
And the perplexity could not be told
Of all the pillars of the state, which lean
Sometimes a little heavy on the backs
Of those who cannot lay on a new tax.

XCVII.

Meantime Gulbeyaz, when her king was gone,
Retired into her boudoir, a sweet place
For love or breakfast; private, pleasing, lone,
And rich with all contrivances which grace

Those gay recesses:—many a precious stone
Sparkled along its roof, and many a vase
Of porcelain held in the fether'd flowers,
Those captive soothers of a captive's hours.

XCVIII.

Mother of pearl, and porphyry, and marble,
Vied with each other on this costly spot;
And singing birds without were heard to warble;
And the stain'd glass which lighted this fair grot
Varied each ray:—but all descriptions garble
The true effect, and so we had better not
Be too minute; an outline is the best,—
A lively reader's fancy does the rest.

CIX.

And here she summon'd Baba, and required
Don Juan at his hands, and information
Of what had pass'd since all the slaves retired,
And whether he had occupied their station:
If matters had been managed as desired,
And his disguise with due consideration
Kept up; and above all, the where and how
He had pass'd the night, was what she wish'd to know.

C.

Baba, with some embarrassment, replied
To this long catechism of questions, ask'd
More easily than answer'd,—that he had tried
His best to obey in what he had been ask'd;
But there seem'd something that he wish'd to hide,
Which hesitation more betray'd than mask'd;
He scratch'd his ear, the infallible resource
To which embarrass'd people have recourse.

CII.

Gulbeyaz was no model of true patience,
Nor much disposed to wait in word or deed;
She liked quick answers in all conversations;
And when she saw him stumbling like a steed
In his replies, she puzzled him for fresh ones;
And as his speech grew still more broken-kneed,
Her cheek began to flush, her eyes to sparkle,
And her proud brow's blue veins to swell and dangle.

CIII.

When Baba saw these symptoms, which he knew
To bode him no great good, he deprecated
Her anger, and beseech'd she'd hear him through—
He could not help the thing which he related:
Then out it came at length, that to Dudd
Juan was given in charge, as hath been stated;
But not by Baba's fault, he said, and swore on
The holy camel's hump, besides the Koran.

CIV.

The chief dame of the Oda, upon whom
The discipline of the whole harem bore,
As soon as they re-enter'd their own room,
For Baba's function stoppt short at the door,
Had settled all; nor could he then presume
(The aforesaid Baba) just then to do more,
Without exciting such suspicion as Might make the matter still worse than it was.

CV.

He hoped, indeed he thought, he could be sure
Juan had not betray'd himself; in fact
'T was certain that his conduct had been pure,
Because a foolish or imprudent act
Would not alone have made him insecure,
But ended in his being found out and sack'd,
And thrown into the sea.—Thus Baba spoke
Of all save Dudd's dream, which was no joke.

* "How fares my Kate? What! sweeting, all amot?"— Taming of the Shrew.

CV.

This he discreetly kept in the back ground,
And talk'd away—and might have talk'd till
now,
For any further answer that he found,
So deep an anguish wrung Gulbeyaz' brow:
Her cheek turn'd ashes, ears rung, brain whizz'd round,
As if she had received a sudden blow,
And the heart's dew of pain sprang fast and chilly
O'er her fair front, like Morning's on a lily.

CVI.

Although she was not of the fainting sort,
Baba thought she would faint, but there he err'd—
It was but a convulsion, which though abort
Can never be described; we all have heard,
And some of us have felt thus "all amot,"
When things beyond the common have occur'd;—
Gulbeyaz proved in that brief agony
What she could ne'er express—then how should I?

CVII.

She stood a moment as a Pythoness
Stands on her tripod, agonized, and full
Of inspiration gather'd from distress,
When all the heart-strings like wild horses pull
The heart asunder;—then, as more or less
Their speed abated or their strength grew dull,
She sunk down on her seat by slow degrees,
And bow'd her throbbing head o'er trembling knees.

CVIII.

Her face declined and was unseen; her hair
Fell in long tresses like the weeping willow,
Sweeping the marble underneath her chair,
Or rather sofa (for it was all pillow,
A low, soft ottoman), and black despair
Stirr'd up and down her bosom like a billow,
Which rushes to some shore whose shingles check
Its further course, but must receive its wreck.

CIX.

Her head hung down, and her long hair in stoop-
ing
Conceal'd her features better than a veil;
And one hand o'er the ottoman lay drooping,
White, waxen, and as alabaster pale:
Would that I were a painter! to be grouping
All that a poet drags into detail!
Oh that my words were colors! but their tints
May serve perhaps as outlines or alight hints.

CX.

Baba, who knew by experience when to talk
And when to hold his tongue, now held it till
This passion might blow o'er, nor dared to balk
Gulbeyaz' taciturn or speaking will.
At length she rose up, and began to walk
Slowly along the room, but silent still,
And her brow clear'd, but not her troubled eye;
The wind was down, but still the sea ran high.

CXI.

She stopp'd, and raised her head to speak—but paused,
And then moved on again with rapid pace;
Then slacken'd it, which is the march most caused
By deep emotion:—you may sometimes trace
A feeling in each footstep, as disclosed
By Sallust in his Catiline, who, chased
By all the demons of all passions, show'd
Their work even by the way in which he trode.†

† "His guilty soul, at enmity with gods and men, could find no rest; so violently was his mind torn and distracted

CXII.

Gulbeyaz stopp'd and beckon'd Baba:—"Slave!
Bring the two slaves!" she said in a low tone,
But one which Baba did not like to brave,
And yet he shudder'd, and seem'd rather prone
To prove reluctant, and begg'd leave to crave
(Though he well knew the meaning) to be shown
What slaves her highness wish'd to indicate,
For fear of any error, like the late.

CXIII.

"The Georgian and her paramour," replied
The imperial bride—and added, "Let the boat
Be ready by the secret portal's side:
You know the rest." The words stuck in her throat.

Despite her injured love and fiery pride;
And of this Baba willingly took note,
And begg'd by every hair of Mahomet's beard,
She would revoke the order he had heard.

CXIV.

"To hear is to obey," he said; "but still,
Sultana, think upon the consequence:
It is not that I shall not all fulfill
Your orders, even in their severest sense;
But such precipitation may end ill,
Even at your own imperative expense:
I do not mean destruction and exposure,
In case of any premature disclosure;

CXV.

"But your own feelings. Even should all the rest
Be hidden by the rolling waves, which hide
Already many a once love-beaten breast
Deep in the caverns of the deadly tide—
You love this boyish, new, aeraglio guest,
And if this violent remedy be tried—
Excuse my freedom, when I here assure you,
That killing him is not the way to cure you."

CXVI.

"What dost thou know of love or feeling?—
Wretch!
Begone!" she cried, with kindling eyes—"and do
My bidding!" Baba vanish'd, for to stretch
His own remonstrance further he well knew
Might end in acting as his own "Jack Ketch;"
And though he wish'd extremely to get through
This awkward business without harm to others,
He still prefer'd his own neck to another's.

CXVII.

Away he went then upon his commission,
Growling and grumbling in good Turkish phrase,
Against all women of whatever condition,
Especially sultanas and their ways;
Their obstinacy, pride, and indecision,
Their never knowing their own mind two days,
The trouble that they gave, their immorality,
Which made him daily bless his own neutrality.

CXVIII.

And then he call'd his brethren to his aid,
And sent one on a summons to the pair,
That they must instantly be well array'd,
And above all be comb'd even to a hair,
And brought before the empress, who had made
Inquiries after them with kindest care:

At which Dudd look'd strange, and Juan silly;
But go they must at once, and will I—nill I.

CXIX.

And here I leave them at their preparation
For the imperial presence, wherein whether Gulbeyaz show'd them both commiseration,
Or got rid of the parties altogether,
Like other angry ladies of her nation,—
Are things the turning of a hair or feather
May settle; but far be 't from me to anticipate
In what way feminine caprice may dissipate.

CXX.

I leave them for the present with good wishes,
Though doubts of their well doing, to arrange
Another part of history; for the dishes
Of this our banquet we must sometimes change;
And trusting Juan may escape the fishes,
Although his situation now seems strange,
And scarce secure, as such dispositions are fair,
The Muse will take a little touch at warfare.

CANTO THE SEVENTH.*

I.

Oh, Love! oh, Glory! what are you who fly
Around us ever, rarely to alight?
There's not a meteor in the polar sky
Of such transcendent and more fleeting flight.
Chill, and chain'd to cold earth, we lift on high
Our eyes in search of either lovely light;
A thousand and a thousand colors they Assume, then leave us on our freezing way.

II.

And such as they are, such my present tale is,
A nondescript and ever-varying rhyme,
A versified Aurora Borealis,
Which flashes o'er a waste and icy clime.
When we know what all are, we must bewail us,
But ne'ertheless I hope it is no crime
To laugh at all things—for I wish to know
What, after all, are all things—but a show?

III.

They accuse me—Me—the present writer of
The present poem—of—I know not what—
A tendency to underrate and scoff
At human power and virtue, and all that;
And this they say in language rather rough.
Good God! I wonder what they would be at!
I say no more than hath been said in Dante's
Verse, and by Solomon and by Cervantes;

IV.

By Swift, by Machiavel, by Rochefoucauld,
By Fénelon, by Luther, and by Plato;
By Tillotson, and Wesley, and Rousseau,
Who knew this life was not worth a potato.

by a consciousness of guilt. Accordingly his countenance was pale, his eyes ghastly, his pace one while quick, another slow; indeed, in all his looks there was an air of distraction."

—BALLADIER.

* "The seventh and eighth cantos contain a full detail (like the storm in canto second) of the siege and assault of Ismail, with much of sarcasm on those butchers in large business, your mercenary soldiers. With these things and these fellows it is necessary, in the present clash of philosophy and tyranny, to throw away the scabbard. I know it is against fearful odds; but the battle must be fought; and it will be eventually for the good of mankind, whatever it may be for the individual who risks himself."—Byron Letters, Aug. 4, 1824.

'Tis not their fault, nor mine, if this be so,—
For my part, I pretend not to be Cato,
Nor even Diogenes.—We live and die,
But which is best, you know no more than I.

V.

Socrates said, our only knowledge was
"To know that nothing could be known;" a pleasant
Science enough, which levels to an ass
Each man of wisdom, future, past, or present.
Newton (that proverb of the mind), alas!
Declared, with all his grand discoveries recent,
That he himself felt only "like a youth
Picking up shells by the great ocean—Truth."

VI.

Ecclesiastes said, "that all is vanity"—
Most modern preachers say the same, or show it
By their examples of true Christianity:
In short, all know, or very soon may know it;
And in this scene of all-confess'd inanity,
By saint, by sage, by preacher, and by poet,
Must I restrain me, through the fear of strife,
From holding up the nothingness of life?

VII.

Dogs, or men!—for I flatter you* in saying
That ye are dogs—your betters far—ye may
Read, or read not, what I am now essaying
To show ye what ye are in every way.
As little as the moon stops for the baying
Of wolves, will the bright Muse withdraw one ray
From out her skies—then howl your idle wrath!
While she still silvers o'er your gloomy path.

VIII.

"Fierce loves and faithless wars"—I am not sure
If this be the right reading—'t is no matter;
The fact's about the same, I am secure;
I sing them both, and am about to batter
A town which did a famous siege endure,
And was beleaguerr'd both by land and water
By Souvaroff, or Anglica Suwarrow,
Who loved blood as an alderman loves marrow.

IX.

The fortress is call'd Ismail, and is placed Upon the Danube's left branch and left bank,
With buildings in the Oriental taste,
But still a fortress of the foremost rank,
Or was at least, unless 't is since defaced,
Which with your conquerors is a common prank:
It stands some eighty versts from the high sea,
And measures round of toises thousands three.

X.

Within the extent of this fortification
A borough is comprised along the height
Upon the left, which from its loftier station
Commands the city, and upon its site
A Greek had rais'd around this elevation
A quantity of palisades upright,
So placed as to impede the fire of those
Who held the place, and to assist the foe's.

XI.

This circumstance may serve to give a notion
Of the high talents of this new Vauban:
But the town ditch below was deep as ocean,
The rampart higher than you'd wish to hang:
But then there was a great want of precaution
(Prithce, excuse this engineering slang),

* See "Inscription on the Monument of a Newfoundland Dog," ante, p. 425.

Nor work advanced, nor cover'd way was there,
To hint at least "Here is no thoroughfare."

XII.

But a stone bastion, with a narrow gorge,
And walls as thick as most skulls born as yet;
Two batteries, cap-à-pie, as our Saint George,
Casemated one, and t'other "a barbette,"
Of Danube's bank took formidable charge;
While two-and-twenty cannon duly set
Rose over the town's right side, in bristling tier,
Forty feet high, upon a cavalier.

XIII.

But from the river the town's open quite,
Because the Turks could never be persuaded
A Russian vessel e'er would heave in sight;
And such their creed was till they were invaded.
When it grew rather late to set things right:
But as the Danube could not well be waded,
They look'd upon the Muscovite flotilla,
And only shouted, "Allah!" and "Bis Millah!"

XIV.

The Russians now were ready to attack;
But oh, ye goddesses of war and glory!
How shall I spell the name of each Cosack
Who were immortal, could one tell their story?
Alas! what to their memory can lack?
Achilles' self was not more grim and gory
Than thousands of this new and polish'd nation,
Whose names want nothing but—pronunciation.

XV.

Still I'll record a few, if but to increase
Our euphony: there was Strongenoff, and Strokonoff,
Meknop, Serge Low, Arsmiew of modern Greece,
And Tchitshakoff, and Rogusnoff, and Che-kenoff,
And others of twelve consonants apiece;
And more might be found out, if I could pots enough
Into gazettes; but Fame (capricious strumpet),
It seems, has got an ear as well as trumpet,

XVI.

And cannot tune those discords of narration,
Which may be names at Moscow, into rhyme;
Yet there were several worth commemoration,
As e'er was virgin of a nuptial chime;
Soft words, too, fitted for the peroration
Of Londonderry drawing against time,
Ending in "Ischakin," "ousakin," "ishakey,"
"ouski,"
Of whom we can insert but Rousamouiski,

XVII.

Scherematoff and Chrematoff, Koklophiti,
Koclobeki, Kourakin, and Mouskin Pouskin,
All proper men of weapons, as e'er scoff'd high
Against a foe, or ran a sabre through skin:
Little cared they for Mahomet or Mufti,
Unless to make their kettle-drums a new skin
Out of their hides, if parchment had grown dear,
And no more handy substitute been near.

XVIII.

Then there were foreigners of much renown,
Of various nations, and all volunteers;
Not fighting for their country or its crown,
But wishing to be one day brigadiers;
Also to have the soaking of a town;
'Mongst them were several Englishmen of pith,
Sixteen call'd Thomson, and nineteen named
Smith.

XIX.

Jack Thomson and Bill Thomson;—all the rest
Had been call'd "Jemmy," after the great bard;
I don't know whether they had arms or crest,
But such a godfather's as good a card.
Three of the Smiths were Peters; but the best
Amongst them all, hard blows to inflict or ward,
Was he, since so renown'd "in country quarters
At Halifax;"* but now he served the Tartars.

XX.

The rest were Jacks and Gills and Wills and Bills,
But when I've added that the elder Jack Smith
Was born in Cumberland among the hills,
And that his father was an honest blacksmith,
I've said all I know of a name that fills Three lines of the despatch in taking "Schmeck-
smith."

A village of Moldavia's waste, wherein
He fell, immortal in a bulletin.

XXI.

I wonder (although Mars no doubt's a god I Praise) if a man's name in a bulletin
May make up for a bullet in his body?
I hope this little question is no sin,
Because, though I am but a simple noddy,
I think one Shakespeare puts the same thought in
The mouth of some one in his plays so doting,
Which many people pass for wits by quoting.

XXII.

Then there were Frenchmen, gallant, young, and gay;

But I'm too great a patriot to record
Their Gallic names upon a glorious day;
I'd rather tell ten lies than say a word
Of truth;—such truths are treason; they betray
Their country; and as traitors are abhor'd,
Who name the French in English, save to show
How Peace should make John Bull the Frenchman's foe.

XXIII.

The Russians, having built two batteries on
An isle near Ismail, had two ends in view;
The first was to bombard it, and knock down
The public buildings and the private too,
No matter what poor souls might be undone.
The city's shape suggested this, 't is true;
Form'd like an amphitheatre, each dwelling
Presented a fine mark to throw a shell in.

XXIV.

The second object was to profit by
The moment of the general consternation,
To attack the Turks' flotilla, which lay nigh
Extremely tranquil, anchor'd at its station:
But a third motive was as probably
To frighten them into capitulation;
A façade which sometimes seems warriors,
Unless they are game as bull-dogs and fox-terriers.

XXV.

A habit rather blamable, which is
That of despising those we combat with,
Common in many cases, was in this
The cause of killing Tchitchikoff and Smith;
One of the valorous "Smiths" whom we shall miss.

Out of these nineteen who late rhymed to "pith;"
But 't is a name so spread o'er "Sir" and "Madam,"

That one would think the first who bore it "Adam."

* See the farce of "Love Laughs at Look-alike."

XXVI.

The Russian batteries were incomplete,
Because they were constructed in a hurry;
Thus the same cause which makes a verse want feet,
And throws a cloud o'er Longman and John Murray,
When the sale of new books is not so fleet
As they who print them think is necessary,
May likewise put off for a time what story
Sometimes calls "murder," and at others "glory."

XXVII.

Whether it was their engineer's stupidity,
Their haste or waste, I neither know nor care,
Or some contractor's personal cupidity,
Saving his soul by cheating in the ware
Of homicide, but there was no solidity
In the new batteries erected there;
They either mis'd, or they were never mis'd,
And added greatly to the missing list.

XXVIII.

A sad miscalculation about distance
Made all their naval matters incorrect;
Three fireships lost their amiable existence
Before they reach'd a spot to take effect;
The match was lit too soon, and no assistance
Could remedy this lubberly defect;
They blew up in the middle of the river,
While, though 't was dawn, the Turks slept fast as ever.

XXIX.

At seven they rose, however, and survey'd
The Buss dotilla getting under way;
'T was nine, when still advancing undismay'd,
Within a cable's length their vessels lay
Off Ismail, and commenced a cannonade,
Which was return'd with interest, I may say,
And by a fire of musketry and grape,
And shells and shot of every size and shape.

XXX.

For six hours bore they without intermission
The Turkish fire, and, aided by their own Land batteries, work'd their guns with great precision;
At length they found mere cannonade alone
By no means would produce the town's submis-
sion,
And made a signal to retreat at one.
One bark blew up, a second near the works
Running aground, was taken by the Turks.

XXXI.

The Moslem, too, had lost both ships and men;
But when they saw the enemy retire,
Their Delhis mann'd some boats, and sail'd again,
And gall'd the Russians with a heavy fire,
And tried to make a landing on the main;
But here the effect fell short of their desire:
Count Damas drove them back into the water,
Pell-mell, and with a whole gazette of slaughter.

XXXII.

"If" (says the historian here) "I could report
All that the Russians did upon this day,
I think that several volumes would fall short,
And I should still have many things to say;"
And so he says no more—but pays his court
To some distinguish'd strangers in that fray:
The Prince de Ligne, and Langeron, and Damas, Names great as any that the roll of Fame has.

XXXIII.

This being the case, may show us what Fame is:
For out of these three "preux chevaliers," how

Many of common readers give a guess
That such existed? (and they may live now
For aught we know). Renown's all hit or miss;
There's fortune even in fame, we must allow.
*T is true, the Memoirs of the Prince de Ligne†
Have half withdrawn from him oblivion's screen.

XXXIV.

But here are men who fought in gallant actions
As gallantly as ever heroes fought,
But buried in the heap of such transactions
Their names are rarely found, nor often sought.
Thus even good fame may suffer sad contractions,
And be extinguish'd sooner than she ought:
Of all our modern battles, I will bet
You can't repeat nine names from each gazette.

XXXV.

In short, this ~~last~~ attack, though rich in glory,
Show'd that somewhere, somehow, there was a fault,
And Admiral Ribas (known in Russian story)
Most strongly recommended an assault;
In which he was opposed by young and hoary,
Which made a long debate; but I must halt,
For if I wrote down every warrior's speech,
I doubt few readers e'er would mount the breach.

XXXVI.

There was a man, if that he was a man,
Not that his manhood could be call'd in question,
For had he not been Hercules, his span
Had been as short in youth as indigestion
Made his last illness, when, all worn and wan,
He died beneath a tree, as much unblest on
The soil of the green province he had wasted,
As e'er was locust on the land it blasted.

XXXVII.

This was Potemkin;—a great thing in days
When homicide and harlotry made great;
If stars and titles could entail long praise,
His glory might half equal his estate.
This fellow, being six foot high, could raise
A kind of fantasy proportionate
In the then sovereign of the Russian people,
Who measured men as you would do a steepie.

XXXVIII.

While things were in abeyance, Ribas sent
A courier to the prince, and he succeeded
In ordering matters after his own bent;
I cannot tell the way in which he pleaded,
But shortly he had cause to be content.
In the mean time, the batteries proceeded,
And fourscore cannon on the Danube's border
Were briskly fired and answer'd in due order.

XXXIX.

But on the thirteenth, when already part
Of the troops were embark'd, the siege to raise,
A courier on the spur inspired new heart
Into all panthers for newspaper praise,
As well as dilettanti in war's art.
By his despatches couch'd in pithy phrase;
Announcing the appointment of that lover of Battles to the command, Field-Marshal Souwaroff.

XL.

The letter of the prince to the same marshal
Was worthy of a Spartan, had the cause
Been one to which a good heart could be partial—
Defence of freedom, country, or of laws;
But as it was mere lust of power to o'erarch all
With its proud brow, it merits slight applause,
Save for its style, which said, all in a trice,
"You will take Ismail at whatever price."

XLI.

"Let there be light! said God, and there was light!"
"Let there be blood!" says man, and there's a sea!
The fiat of this spoli'd child of the Night
(For Day ne'er saw his merits) could decree
More evil in an hour, than thirty bright
Summers could renovate, though they should be Lovely as those which ripen'd Eden's fruit;
For war cuts up not only branch, but root.

XLII.

Our friends, the Turks, who with loud "Allahs" now
Began to signalize the Russ retreat,
Were damnably mistaken; few are slow
In thinking that their enemy is beat
(Or beaten, if you insist on grammar, though
I never think about it in a heat),
But here I say the Turks were much mistaken,
Who, hating hogs, yet wish'd to save their bacon.

XLIII.

For, on the sixteenth, at full gallop, drew
In sight two horsemen, who were deem'd Cossacks
For some time, till they came in nearer view.
They had but little baggage at their backs,
For there were but three shirts between the two;
But on they rode upon two Ukraine hacks,
Till, in approaching, were at length descried
In this plain pair, Suwaroff and his guide.

XLIV.

"Great joy to London now!" says some great fool,
When London had a grand illumination,
Which to that bottle-conjuror, John Bull,
Is of all dreams the first hallucination;
So that the streets of color'd lamps are full,
That sage (said John) surrenders at discretion
His purse, his soul, his sense, and even his nonsense,
To gratify, like a huge moth, this one sense.

XLV.

'T is strange that he should further "damn his eyes,"
For they are damn'd: that once all-famous cash
Is to the devil now no further prize,
Since John has lately lost the use of both.
Debt he calls wealth, and taxes Paradise;
And Famine, with her gaunt and bony growth,
Which stares him in the face, he won't examine,
Or swears that Ceres hath begotten Famine.

XLVI.

But to the tale;—great joy unto the camp!
To Russian, Tartar, English, French, Cossack,
O'er whom Suwaroff shone like a gas lamp,
Preeasing a most luminous attack;
Or like a wisp along the marsh so damp,
Which leads beholders on a boggy walk,

* "Letters and Reflections of the Austrian Field-Marshal, Charles Joseph, Prince de Ligne, edited by the Baroness de Stahl-Holstein." 3 vols., 1809.

† Charles Joseph, Comte de Ligne, was born at Brussels. Being, in 1788, sent by the emperor Joseph II. on a mission to Catherine, he became a great favorite with her. She appointed him field-marshal, and gave him an estate in the Crimea. In 1798, he was sent to assist Potemkin at the siege of Otsakoff. He died in 1814.

‡ Count Ségur, the intimate friend of Prince Potemkin, says of him:—"In his youth he had pleased Catherine by the ardor of his passion, by his valor, and by his masculine beauty. Become the rival of Orloff, he performed for his sovereign whatever the most romantic passion could inspire. He put out an eye, to free it from a blemish which diminished his beauty. Banished by his rival, he ran to meet death in battle, and returned with glory. He died in 1781, at the age of fifty-two."

He fitted to and fro a dancing light,
Which all who saw it follow'd, wrong or right.

XLVII.

But certain matters took a different face;
There was enthusiasm and much applause,
The feet and camp saluted with great grace,
And all presaged good fortune to their cause.
Within a cannon-shot length of the place
They drew, constructed ladders, repair'd flaws
In former works, made new, prepared fascines,
And all kinds of benevolent machines.

XLVIII.

'T is thus the spirit of a single mind
Makes that of multitudes take one direction,
As roll the waters to the breathing wind,
Or roams the herd beneath the bull's protection;
Or as a little dog will lead the blind,
Or a bell-dweller form the flock's connection
By tinkling sounds, when they go forth to victual;
Such is the sway of your great men o'er little.

XLIX.

The whole camp rung with joy; you would have thought

That they were going to a marriage feast
(This metaphor, I think, holds good as aught, Since there is discord after both at least):
There was not now a luggage boy but sought
Danger and spoil with ardor much increased;
And why? because a little—odd—old man,
Strip to his shirt, was come to lead the van.

L.

But so it was; and every preparation
Was made with all alacrity: the first
Detachment of three columns took its station,
And waited but the signal's voice to burst
Upon the foe: the second's ordination
Was also in three columns, with a thirst
For glory gaping o'er a sea of slaughter:
The third, in columns two, attack'd by water.

LI.

New batteries were erected, and was held
A general council, in which unanimity,
That stranger to most councils, here prevail'd,
As sometimes happens in a great extremity;
And every difficulty being dispell'd,
Glory began to dawn with due sublimity,
While Souvaroff, determined to obtain it,
Was teaching his recruits to use the bayonet.*

LII.

It is an actual fact, that he, commander
In chief, in proper person deign'd to drill
The awkward squad, and could afford to squander
His time, a corporal's duty to fulfill;
Just as you'd break a sucking salamander
To swallow flame, and never take it ill:
He show'd them how to mount a ladder (which Was not like Jacob's) or to cross a ditch.

LIII.

Also he dress'd up, for the nonce, fascines
Like men with turbans, scimitars, and dirks,
And made them charge with bayonet these machines,
By way of lesson against actual Turks;
And when well practiced in these mimic scenes,
He judged them proper to assail the works:
At which your wise men sneer'd in phrases witty:
He made no answer; but he took the city.

* Fact: Suvaroff did this in person.

LIV.

Most things were in this posture on the eve
Of the assault, and all the camp was in
A stern repose; which you would scarce conceive;
Yet men resolved to dash through thick and thin
Are very silent when they once believe
That all is settled:—there was little din,
For some were thinking of their home and friends,
And others of themselves and latter ends.

LV.

Suvarrow chiefly was on the alert,
Surveying, drilling, ordering, jesting, pondering;
For the man was, we safely may assert,
A thing to wonder at beyond most wondering;
Hero, buffoon, half-demon, and half-dirt,
Praying, instructing, desolating, plundering;
Now Mars, now Momus; and when bent to storm
A fortress, Harlequin in uniform.

LVI.

The day before the assault, while upon drill—
For this great conqueror play'd the corporal—
Some Cossacks, hovering like hawks round a hill,
Had met a party towards the twilight's fall,
One of whom spoke their tongue—or well or ill,
'T was much that he was understood at all;
But whether from his voice, or speech, or manner,
They found that he had fought beneath their banner.

LVII.

Whereon immediately at his request
They brought him and his comrades to headquarters;
Their dress was Moslem, but you might have guess'd
That these were merely masquerading Tartars,
And that beneath each Turkish-fashion'd vest
Lurk'd Christianity; which sometimes barters
Her inward grace for outward show, and makes
It difficult to shun some strange mistakes.

LVIII.

Suvarrow, who was standing in his shirt
Before a company of Calmucks, drilling,
Exclaiming, fooling, swearing at the inert,
And lecturing on the noble art of killing,
For deeming human clay but common dirt,
This great philosopher was thus instilling
His maxims, which to martial comprehension
Proved death in battle equal to a pension;—

LIX.

Suvarrow, when he saw this company
Of Cossacks and their prey, turn'd round and cast
Upon them his slow brow and piercing eye:—
"Whence come ye?"—"From Constantinople last, Captives just now escaped," was the reply.
"What are ye?"—"What you see us." Briefly
pass'd
This dialogue; for he who answer'd knew
To whom he spoke, and made his words but few.

LX.

"Your names?"—"Mine's Johnson, and my com-rade's Juan;
The other two are women, and the third
Is neither man nor woman." The chief threw on
The party a slight glance, then said, "I have heard
Your name before, the second is a new one:
To bring the other three here was absurd:
But let that pass:—I think I have heard your name
In the Nikolaiew regiment?"—"The same."

LXI.

"You served at Widdin?"—"Yes."—"You led the attack?"
"I did."—"What next?"—"I really hardly know."

"You were the first!" the breach?"—"I was not black

At least to follow those who might be so."
"What follow'd?"—"A shot laid me on my back,
And I became a prisoner to the foe."

"You shall have vengeance, for the town surrounded
Is twice as strong as that where you were wounded."

LXXI.

"Where will you serve?"—"Where'er you please."
—"I know

You like to be the hope of the forlorn,
And doubtless would be foremost on the foe
After the hardships you've already borne.
And this young fellow—say what can he do?
He with the beardless chin and garments torn?"
"Why, general, if he hath no greater fault
In war than love, he had better lead the assault."

LXXII.

"He shall if that he dare." Here Juan bow'd
Low as the compliment deserved. Suwarrow
Continued: "Your old regiment's allow'd,
By special providence, to lead to-morrow,
Or it may be to-night, the assault: I have vow'd
To several saints, that shortly plough or harrow
Shall pass o'er what was Ismail, and its Turk
Be unimpeded by the proudest mosque."

LXXIII.

"So now, my lads, for glory!"—Here he turn'd
And drill'd away in the most classic Russian,
Until each high, heroic bosom burn'd
For cash and conquest, as if from a cushion
A preacher had held forth (who nobly spurn'd
All earthly goods save tithes), and bade them push on
To slay the Pagans who resisted, battering
The armies of the Christian Empress Catherine."

LXXIV.

Johnson, who knew by this long colloquy
Himself a favorite, ventured to address
Suwarrow, though engaged with accents high
In his resumed amusement. "I confess
My debt in being thus allow'd to die
Among the foremost; but if you'd express
Explicitly our several posts, my friend
And self would know what duty to attend."

LXXV.

"Right! I was busy, and forgot. Why, you
Will join your former regiment, which should be Now under arms. Ho! Katakoff, take him to—(Here he call'd up a Polish orderly)
His post, I mean the regiment Nikolaiw:
The stranger stripling may remain with me;
He's a fine boy. The women may be sent
To the other baggage, or to the sick tent."

LXXVI.

But here a sort of scene began to ensue:
The ladies,—who by no means had been bred
To be disposed of in a way so new,
Although their harem education led
Doubtless to that of doctrines the most true,
Passive obedience,—now raised up the head,
With flashing eyes and starting tears, and flung
Their arms, as hens their wings about their young,

LXXVII.

O'er the promoted couple of brave men
Who were thus honor'd by the greatest chief
That ever peopled hell with heroes slain,
Or plunged a province or a realm in grief.

Oh, foolish mortals! Always taught in vain!
Oh, glorious laurel! since for one sole leaf
Of thine imaginary deathless tree,
Of blood and tears must flow the unebbing sea.

LXXIX.

Suwarrow, who had small regard for tears,
And not much sympathy for blood, survey'd
The women with their hair about their ears
And natural agonies, with a slight shade
Of feeling: for however habit sears
Men's hearts against whole millions, when their trade
Is butchery, sometimes a single sorrow
Will touch even heroes—and such was Suwarrow.

LXXX.

He said,—and in the kindest Calmuck tone,—
"Why, Johnson, what the devil do you mean
By bringing women here? They shall be shown
All the attention possible, and seen
In safety to the wagons, where alone
In fact they can be safe. You should have been Aware this kind of baggage never thrives;
Save wed a year, I hate recruits with wives."

LXXXI.

"May it please your excellency," thus replied
Our British friend, "these are the wives of others,
And not our own. I am too qualified
By service with my military brothers
To break the rules by bringing one's own bride
Into a camp: I know that nought so bothers
The hearts of the heroic on a charge,
As leaving a small family at large."

LXXXII.

"But these are but two Turkish ladies, who
With their attendant aided our escape,
And afterwards accompanied us through
A thousand perils in this dubious shape.
To me this kind of life is not so new;
To them, poor things, it is an awkward scrape.
I therefore, if you wish me to fight freely,
Request that they may both be used genteelly."

LXXXIII.

Meantime these two poor girls, with swimming eyes,
Look'd on as if in doubt if they could trust
Their own protectors; nor was their surprise
Less than their grief (and truly not less just)
To see an old man, rather wild than wise
In aspect, plainly clad, besmear'd with dust,
Strip'd to his waistcoat, and that not too clean,
More fear'd than all the sultans ever seen.

LXXXIV.

For everything seem'd resting on his nod,
As they could read in all eyes. Now to them,
Who were accusom'd, as a sort of god,
To see the sultan, rich in many a gem,
Like an imperial peacock stalk abroad
(That royal bird, whose tail's a diadem)
With all the pomp of power, it was a doubt
How power could condescend to do without.

LXXXV.

John Johnson, seeing their extreme dismay,
Though little versed in feelings Oriental,
Suggested some slight comfort in his way:
Don Juan, who was much more sentimental,
Swore they should see him by the dawn of day.
Or that the Russian army should repent all:
And, strange to say, they found some consolation
In this—for females like exaggeration.

LXXVI.

And then with tears, and sighs, and some slight kisses.

They parted for the present—these to await,
According to the artillery's hits or misses,
What sages call Chance, Providence, or Fate—(Uncertainty is one of many blisses,
A mortgage on Humanity's estate)—
While their beloved friends began to arm,
To burn a town which never did them harm.

LXXVII.

Suwarrow,—who but saw things in the gross,
Being much too gross to see them in detail,
Who calculated life as so much dross,
And as the wind a widow'd nation's wall,
And cared as little for his army's loss
(So that their efforts should at length prevail)
As wife and friends did for the bolts of Job,—
What was 't to him to hear two women sob?

LXXVIII.

Nothing.—The work of glory still went on
In preparations for a cannonade
As terrible as that of Ilion,
If Homer had found mortars ready made;
But now, instead of slaying Priam's son,
We only can but talk of escalade.
Bombs, drums, guns, bastions, batteries, bayonets,
bullets;
Hard words, which stick in the soft Muses' gullets.

LXXIX.

Oh, thou eternal Homer! who couldst charm
All ears, though long; all ages, though so short,
By merely wielding with poetic arm
Arms to which men will never more resort,
Unless gunpowder should be found to harm
Much less than is the hope of every court,
Which now is leagu'd young Freedom to annoy;
But they will not find Liberty a Troy:—

LXXX.

Oh, thou eternal Homer! I have now
To paint a siege, wherein more men were slain,
With deadlier engines and a speedier blow,
Than in thy Greek gazette of that campaign;
And yet, like all men else, I must allow,
To vie with thee would be about as vain
As for a brook to cope with ocean's flood;
But still we moderns equal you in blood;

LXXXI.

If not in poetry, at least in fact;
And fact is truth, the grand desideratum!
Of which, howe'er the Muse describes each act,
There should be ne'ertheless a slight substratum.
But now the town is going to be attack'd;
Great deeds are doing—how shall I relate 'em?
Souls of immortal generals! Phœbus watches
To color up his rays from your despatches.

LXXXII.

Oh, ye great bulletins of Bonaparte!
Oh, ye less grand long lists of kill'd and wounded!
Shade of Leonidas, who fought so hearty,
When my poor Greece was once, as now, surrounded!
Oh, Caesar's Commentaries! now impart, ye
Shadows of glory! (lest I be confounded),

A portion of your fading twilight hues,
So beautiful, so feeling, to the Muse.

LXXXIII.

When I call "fading" martial immortality,
I mean, that every age and every year,
And almost every day, in sad reality,
Some sucking hero is compell'd to rear,
Who, when we come to sum up the totality
Of deeds to human happiness most dear,
Turns out to be a butcher in great business,
Amusing young folks with a sort of dizziness.

LXXXIV.

Medals, rank, ribbons, lace, embroidery, scarlet,
Are things immortal to immortal man,
As purple to the Babylonian harlot:
An uniform to boys is like a fan
To women; there is scarce a crimson varlet
But deems himself the first in Glory's van.
But Glory's glory; and if you would find
What that is—ask the pig who sees the wind!

LXXXV.

At least he feels it, and some say he sees,
Because he runs before it like a pig;
Or, if that simple sentence should displease,
Say, that he scuds before it like a brig,
A schooner, or—but it is time to cease.
This canto, ere my Muse perceives fatigue.
The next shall ring a peal to shake all people,
Like a bob-major from a village steeple.

LXXXVI.

Hark! through the silence of the cold, dull night,
The hum of armies gathering rank on rank!
Lo! dusky masses steal in dubious sight
Along the leaguer'd wall and bristling bank
Of the arm'd river, while with straggling light
The stars peep through the vapors dim and dank,
Which curl in curious wreaths:—how soon the smoke
Of hell shall pall them in a deeper cloak!

LXXXVII.

Here pause we for the present—as even then
That awful pause, dividing life from death,
Struck for an instant on the hearts of men,
Thousands of whom were drawing their last breath!
A moment—and all will be life again!
The march! the charge! the shouts of either faith,
Hurrah! and Allah! and—one moment more—
The death-cry drowning in the battle's roar.

CANTO THE EIGHTH.*

L

Oh, blood and thunder! and oh, blood and wounds!
These are but vulgar oaths, as you may deem,
Too gentle reader! and most shocking sounds:
And so they are; yet this is Glory's dream

* This canto is almost entirely filled with the taking of Ismail by storm. It would be absurd to attempt, in prose, even a feeble outline of the varied horrors which marked that celebrated scene of rubrics and indiscriminate carnage; the noble writer has depicted them with all that vivid and appalling fidelity, which, on such a theme, might be expected from his powerful muse; and, if anything can add to the shuddering sensation we experience in reading these terrible details, it is the consideration that poetry, in this instance, instead of dealing in fiction, must necessarily relate a tale that falls short of the truth."—CAMPAELL.

Unriddled, and as my true Muse expounds
At present such things, where they are best theme.
So, like a war inquire! Call them Mars.
Believe, what you will—they mean but wars.

II.

All was prepared—the fire, the sword, the men
To wield them in their terrible array.
The army, like a lion from his den,
March'd forth with nerve and sinews bent to slay—
A human Hydra, issuing from its fen
To breathe destruction on its winding way.
Whose heads were heroes, which cut off in vain.
Immediately in others grew again.

III.

History can only take things in the gross;
But could we know them in detail, perchance
In balancing the profit and the loss,
War's merit it by no means might enhance,
To waste so much gold for a little dress,
As hath been done, mere conquest to advance.
The drying up a single tear has more
Of honest fame, than shedding seas of gore.

IV.

And why?—because it brings self-approbation;
Whereas the other, after all its glare,
Shouts, bridges, arches, pensions from a nation,
Which (it may be) has not much left to spare,
A higher title, or a loftier station.
Though they may make Corruption gape or stare,
Yet, in the end, except in Freedom's battles,
Are nothing but a child of Murder's rattle.

V.

And such they are—and such they will be found:
Not so Leonidas and Washington,
Whose every battle-field is holy ground,
Which breathes of nations saved, not worlds undone.
How sweetly on the ear such echoes sound!
While the mere victor's may appeal or stun
The servile and the vain, such names will be
A watchword till the future shall be free.

VI.

The night was dark, and the thick mist allow'd
Nought to be seen save the artillery's flame,
Which arch'd the horizon like a fiery cloud,
And in the Danube's waters shone the same—
A mirror'd hell! the volleying roar, and loud
Long booming of each peal on peal, o'erwhelm'd
The ear far more than thunder; for heaven's flashes

Spare, or smite rarely—man's make millions ashes!

VII.

The column order'd on the assault scarce pass'd
Beyond the Russian batteries a few toises,
When up the bristling Moslem rose at last,
Answering the Christian thunders with like voices:
Then one vast fire, air, earth, and stream embrac'd,
Which rold as 'twere beneath the mighty noises;
While the whole rampart blazed like Etna, when
The restless Titan hiccups in his den;

VIII.

And one enormous shout of "Allah!" rose
In the same moment, loud as even the roar
Of war's most mortal engines, to their foes
Hurling defiance: city, stream, and shore
Resounded "Allah!" and the clouds which close
With thickening canopy the conflict o'er,

Vibrate to the Pancreas man. Mark through
All sounds in pancreas. Allah: Allah: Ha Ha Ha.

IX.

The columns were in movement one and all.
But of the portion which attack'd by water,
Thicker than leaves the even began to fall.
Though led by Armenius, that great son of slaughter.
As brave as ever faced both bomb and ball.
"Carnage" as Wordsworth tells you — is God's daughter:
If he speak truth, she is Christ's sister, and
Just now behaved as in the Holy Land.

X.

The Prince de Ligne was wounded in the knee:
Count Chapone-Bras, too, had a ball between His cap and head, which proves the head to be Aristocratic as was ever seen.
Because it then received no injury
More than the cap: in fact, the ball could mean
No harm unto a right legitimate head:
"Ashes to ashes"—why not lead to lead?

XI.

Also the General Markow, Brigadier,
Insisting on removal of the prince
Amidst some groaning thousands dying near.
All common fellows, who might writher and wince,
And shriek for water into a deaf ear.—
The General Markow, who could thus evince
His sympathy for rank, by the same token,
To teach him greater, had his own leg broken.

XII.

Three hundred cannon threw up their emetic.
And thirty thousand muskets fung their pills
Like hail, to make a bloody dietic.
Mortality! thou hast thy monthly bills:
Thy plagues, thy famines, thy physicians, yet tick,
Like the death-watch, within our ears the ill
Past, present, and to come:—but all may yield
To the true portrait of one battle-field;

XIII.

There the still varying pangs, which multiply
Until their very number makes men hard
By the infinities of agony,
Which meet the gaze, whatever it may regard—
The groan, the roll in dust, the all-white eye
Turn'd back within its socket,—these reward
Your rank and file by thousands, while the rest
May win perhaps a ribbon at the breast!

XIV.

Yet I love glory;—glory's a great thing:—
Think what it is to be in your old age
Maintain'd at the expense of your good king:
A moderate pension shakes full many a sage,
And heroes are but made for bards to sing,
Which is still better; thus in verse to wage
Your wars eternally, besides enjoying
Half-pay for life, make mankind worth destroying.

XV.

The troops, already disembark'd, push'd on
To take a battery on the right: the others,
Who landed lower down, their landing done,
Had set to work as briskly as their brothers:
Being grenadiers, they mounted one by one,
Cheerful as children climb the breasts of
mothers,

* Allah Hul is properly the war cry of the Mussulmans, and they dwell on the last syllable, which gives it a wild and peculiar effect.

'er the intrenchment and the palleade,
Quite orderly, as if upon parade.

XVI.

And this was admirable; for so hot
The fire was, that were red Vespurius loaded,
Besides its lava, with all sorts of shot
And shells or hells, it could not more have goaded.
Of officers a third fell on the spot,
A thing which victory by no means boded
To gentlemen engaged in the assault:
Hounds, when the huntsman tumbles, are at fault.

XVII.

But here I leave the general concern,
To track our hero on his path of fame:
He must his laurels separately earn;
For fifty thousand heroes, name by name,
Though all deserving equally to turn
A couplet, or an elegy to claim,
Would form a lengthy lexicon of glory,
And what is worse still, a much longer story:

XVIII.

And therefore we must give the greater number
To the Gazette—which doubtless fairly dealt
By the deceased, who lie in famous slumber
In ditches, fields, or wheresoe'er they felt
Their clay for the last time their souls encumber:—
Thrice happy he whose name has been well spelt
In the despatch: I knew a man whose loss
Was printed Groce, although his name was Grose.*

XIX.

Juan and Johnson join'd a certain corps,
And fought away with might and main, not knowing
The way which they had never trod before,
And still less guessing where they might be going;
But on they march'd, dead bodies trampling o'er,
Firing, and thrusting, slashing, sweating, glow-
ing,
But fighting thoughtlessly enough to win,
To their two selves, one whole bright bulletin.

XX.

Thus on they wallow'd in the bloody mire
Of dead and dying thousands,—sometimes gain-
ing
A yard or two of ground, which brought them nigher
To some odd angle for which all were straining;
At other times, repulsed by the close fire,
Which really pour'd as if all hell were raining
Instead of heaven, they stumbled backwards o'er
A wounded comrade, sprawling in his gore.

XXI.

Though 't was Don Juan's first of fields, and though
The nightly muster and the silent march
In the chill dark, when courage does not glow
So much as under a triumphal arch,
Perhaps might make him shiver, yawn, or throw
A glance on the dull clouds (as thick as starch,
Which stiffen'd heaven) as if he wish'd for day;—
Yet for all this he did not run away.

XXII.

Indeed he could not. But what if he had?
There have been and are heroes who begun

With something not much better, or as bad:
Frederick the Great from Molwitz deign'd to run

For the first and last time; for, like a pad,
Or hawk, or bride, most mortals after one
Warm bout are broken in to their new tricks,
And fight like fends for pay or politics.

XXIII.

He was what Erin calls, in her sublime
Old Erse or Irish, or it may be Puntio;—
(The antiquarians] who can settle time,
Which settles all things, Roman, Greek, or Ru-nic,
Swear that Pat's language sprung from the same clime

With Hannibal, and wears the Tyrian tunio
Of Dido's alphabet; and this is rational
As any other notion, and not national;—

XXIV.

But Juan was quite "a broth of a boy,"
A thing of impulse and a child of song;
Now swimming in the sentiment of joy,
Or the sensation (if that phrase seem wrong),
And afterward, if he must needs destroy,
In such good company as always throng
To battles, sieges, and that kind of pleasure,
No less delighted to employ his leisure;

XXV.

But always without malice: if he warr'd
Or loved, it was with what we call "the best Intentions," which form all mankind's trump card,
To be produced when brought up to the test.
The statesman, hero, harlot, lawyer—ward
Off each attack, when people are in quest
Of their designs, by saying they meant well;
'T is pity "that such meaning should pave hell."†

XXVI.

I almost lately have begun to doubt
Whether hell's pavement—if it be so paved—
Must not have latterly been quite worn out,
Not by the numbers good intent hath saved,
But by the mass who go below without
Those ancient good intentions, which once shaved
And smooth'd the brimstone of that street of hell
Which bears the greatest likeness to Pall Mall.

XXVII.

Juan, by some strange chance, which oft divides
Warrior from warrior in their grim career,
Like chastest wives from constant husbands' sides
Just at the close of the first bridal year,
By one of those odd turns of Fortune's tides,
Was on a sudden rather puzzled here,
When, after a good deal of heavy firing,
He found himself alone, and friends retiring.

XXVIII.

I don't know how the thing occur'd—it might
Be that the greater part were kill'd or wounded,
And that the rest had faced unto the right
About; a circumstance which has confounded
Cæsar himself, who, in the very sight
Of his whole army, which so much abounded
In courage, was obliged to snatch a shield,
And rally back his Romans to the field.‡

* A fact: see the Waterloo Gazette. I recollect remarking at the time to a friend:—"There is fame! a man is killed, his name is Grose, and they print it Grove." I was at college with the deceased, who was a very amiable and clever man, and his society in great request for his wit, gaiety, and "Chansons à boire."

† See General Valancey and Sir Lawrence Parsons.

‡ The Portuguese proverb says that "hell is paved with good intentions."—See ante, p. 428.

§ The Norvil marched to the number of sixty thousand, and fell upon Cæsar, as he was fortifying his camp, and had not the least notion of so sudden an attack. They first routed his cavalry, and then surrounded the twelfth and the seventh legions, and killed all the officers. Had not Cæsar

XXXIX.

Juan, who had no shield to snatch, and was
No Cæsar, but a fine young lad, who fought
He knew not why, arriving at this pass,
Stop'd for a minute, as perhaps he ought
For a much longer time; then, like an ass—
(Start not, kind reader, since great Homer thought
This simile enough for Ajax, Juan
Perhaps may find it better than a new one);—

XL.

Then, like an ass, he went upon his way,
And, what was stranger, never look'd behind;
But seeing, flashing forward, like the day
Over the hills, a fire enough to blind
Those who dislike to look upon a fray,
He stumbled on, to try if he could find
A path, to add his own slight arm and forces
To corps, the greater part of which were corpses.

XXXI.

Perceiving then no more the commandant
Of his own corps, nor even the corps, which had Quite disappear'd—the gods know how! (I can't Account for everything which may look bad
In history; but we at least may grant
It was not marvellous that a mere lad,
In search of glory, should look on before,
Nor care a pinch of snuff about his corps):—

XXXII.

Perceiving nor commander nor commanded,
And left at large, like a young heir, to make
His way to—where he knew not—single handed;
As travellers follow over bog and brake
An "ignis fatuus;" or as sailors stranded
Unto the nearest hut themselves betake;
So Juan, following honor and his nose,
Rush'd where the thickest fire announced most foes.

XXXIII.

He knew not where he was, nor greatly cared,
For he was dizzy, busy, and his veins
Fill'd as with lightning—for his spirit shared
The hour, as is the case with lively brains;
And where the hottest fire was seen and heard,
And the loud cannon peel'd his hoarsest strains,
He rush'd, while earth and air were sadly shaken
By thy humane discovery, Friar Bacon!

XXXIV.

And as he rush'd along, it came to pass he Fell in with what was late the second column,
Under the orders of the General Lascy,
But now reduced, as is a bulky volume
Into an elegant extract (much less massy)
Of heroism, and took his place with solemn
Air 'midst the rest, who kept their valiant faces
And level'd weapons still against the glads.

XXXV.

Just at this crisis up came Johnson too,
Who had "retreated," as the phrase is when Men run away much rather than go through Destruction's jaws into the devil's den;
But Johnson was a clever fellow, who Knew when and how "to cut and come again,"
And never ran away, except when running
Was nothing but a valorous kind of cunning.

XXXVI.

And so, when all his corps were dead or dying,
Except Don Juan, a mere novice, whose

More virgin valor never dreamt of flying,
From ignorance of danger, which endures
Its votaries, like innocence relying
On its own strength, with careless nerves and thems,—
Johnson retired a little, just to rally
Those who catch cold in "shadows of Death's valley."

XXXVII.

And there, a little shelter'd from the shot,
Which rain'd from bastion, battery, parapet,
Rampart, wall, casemate, house—for there was not
In this extensive city, a sore beast
By Christian soldiery, a single spot
Which did not combat like the devil, as yet,—
He found a number of Chasseurs, all scatter'd
By the resistance of the chase they batter'd.

XXXVIII.

And these he call'd on; and, what's strange, they came Unto his call, unlike "the spirits from
The vasty deep," to whom you may exclaim,
Says Hotspur, long ere they will leave their home.
Their reasons were uncertainty, or shame
At shrinking from a bullet or a bomb,
And that odd impulse, which in wars or creeds
Makes men, like cattle, follow him who leads.

XXXIX.

By Jove! he was a noble fellow, Johnson,
And though his name, than Ajax or Achilles,
Sounds less harmonious, underneath the sun soon
We shall not see his likeness: he could kill his Man quite as quietly as blows the monsoon
Her steady breath (which some months the same still is):
Seldom he varied feature, hue, or muscle,
And could be very busy without bustle;

XL.

And therefore, when he ran away, he did so
Upon reflection, knowing that behind
He would find others who would fain be rid so
Of idle apprehensions, which like wind
Trouble heroic stomachs. Though their lids so Often are soon closed, all heroes are not blind,
But when they light upon immediate death,
Retire a little, merely to take breath.

XLI.

But Johnson only ran off, to return
With many other warriors, as we said,
Unto that rather somewhat misty bourn,
Which Hamlet tells us is a pass of dread.
To Jack, how'er, this gave but slight concern:
His soul (like galvanism upon the dead)
Acted upon the living as on wire,
And led them back into the heaviest fire.

XLII.

Egad! they found the second time what they
The first time thought quite terrible enough
To fly from, malgré all which people say
Of glory, and all that immortal stuff
Which fills a regiment (besides their pay,
That daily shilling which makes warriors tough)—
They found on their return the self-same welcome,
Which made some think, and others know, a hell come.

XLIII.

They fell as thick as harvests beneath hail,
Grass before scythes, or corn below the sickle, snatched a buckler from one of his own men, forced his way through the combatants before him, and rushed upon the barbarians; or had not the tenth legion, seeing his danger, ran from the heights where they were posted, and mowed down the enemy's ranks, not one Roman would have survived the battle."—PLUTARCH.

Proving that trite old truth, that life's as frail
As any other boon for which men stickle.
The Turkish batteries thrash'd them like a fall,
Or a good boxer, into a sad pickle
Putting the very bravest, who were knock'd
Upon the head before their guns were cock'd.

XLIV.

The Turks behind the traverses and flanks
Of the next bastion, fired away like devils,
And swept, as gales sweep foam away, whole ranks:
However, Heaven knows how, the Fate who levels
Towns, nations, worlds, in her revolving pranks,
So order'd it, amidst these sulphury revels,
That Johnson, and some few who had not scamper'd,
Reach'd the interior talus* of the rampart.

XLV.

First one or two, then five, six, and a dozen
Came mounting quickly up, for it was now
All neck or nothing, as, like pitch or resin,
Flame was shower'd forth above, as well as below,
So that you scarce could say who best had chosen,
The gentlemen that were the first to show
Their martial faces on the parapet,
Or those who thought it brave to wait as yet.

XLVI.

But those who scaled, found out that their advance
Was favor'd by an accident or blunder:
The Greek or Turkish Cohorn's ignorance
Had palisado'd in a way you'd wonder
To see in forts of Netherlands or France—(Though these our Gibraltar must knock under)—
Right in the middle of the parapet
Just named, these palisades were primly set:

XLVII.

So that on either side some nine or ten
Paces were left, wherewith you could contrive
To march; a great convenience to our men,
At least to all those who were left alive,
Who thus could form a line and fight again;
And that which further aided them to strive
Was, that they could kick down the palisades,
Which scarcely rose much higher than grass blades.

XLVIII.

Among the first,—I will not say the first,
For such precedence upon such occasions
Will oftentimes make deadly quarrels burst
Out between friends as well as allied nations:
The Briton must be bold who really durst
Put to such trial John Bull's partial patience,
As say that Wellington at Waterloo
Was beaten,—though the Prussians say so too;—

XLIX.

And that if Blucher, Bulow, Gneisenau,
And God knows who besides in "au" and "ow,"
Had not come up in time to cast an awe
Into the hearts of those who fought till now
As tigers combat with an empty claw,
The Duke of Wellington had ceased to show
His orders, also to receive his pensions;
Which are the heaviest that our history mentions.

L.

But never mind;—"God save the king!" and kings!
For if he don't, I doubt if men will longer—
I think I hear a little bird, who sings
The people by and by will be the stronger:

The veriest jade will wince whose harness wrings
So much into the raw as quite to wrong her
Beyond the rules of posting,—and the mob
At last fall sick of imitating Job.

LI.

At first it grumbles, then it swears, and then,
Like David, flings smooth pebbles 'gainst a giant;
At last it takes to weapons such as men
Snatch when despair makes human hearts less pliant,
Then comes "the tug of war."—"It will come again,
I rather doubt; and I would fain say "He on 't,"
If I had not perceived that revolution
Alone can save the earth from hell's pollution.

LII.

But to continue:—I say not the first,
But of the first, our little friend Don Juan
Walk'd o'er the walls of Iamail, as if nured
Amidst such scenes—though this was quite a new one
To him, and I should hope to meet. The thirst
Of glory, which so pierces through and through
one,
Pervaded him—although a generous creature,
As warm in heart as famine in feature.

LIII.

And here he was—who upon woman's breast,
Even from a child, felt like a child; how'er
The man in all the rest might be confest,
To him it was Elysium to be there;
And he could even withstand that awkward test
Which Rousseau points out to the dubious fair,
"Observe your lover when he leaves your arms;"
But Juan never left them while they had charms,

LIV.

Unless compell'd by fate, or wave, or wind,
Or near relations, who are much the same.
But here he was!—where each tie that can bind
Humanity must yield to steel and flame:
And he whose very body was all mind,
Flung here by fate or circumstance, which tame
The loftiest, hurried by the time and place,
Dash'd on like a spur'd blood-horse in a race.

LV.

So was his blood stirr'd while he found resistance,
As is the hunter's at the five-bar gate,
Or double post and rail, where the existence
Of Britain's youth depends upon their weight,
The lightest being the safest: at a distance
He hated cruelty, as all men hate
Blood, until heated—and even then his own
At times would curdle o'er some heavy groan.

LVI.

The General Lasoy, who had been hard press'd,
Seeing arrive an aid so opportune
As were some hundred youngsters all abreast,
Who came as if just dropp'd down from the moon,
To Juan, who was nearest him, address'd
His thanks, and hopes to take the city soon,
Not reckoning him to be a "base Besonian"[†]
(As Pistol calls it), but a young Livonian.

LVII.

Juan, to whom he spoke in German, knew
As much of German as of Sanscrit, and
In answer made an inclination to
The general who held him in command;

* Talus, the slope or inclination of a wall, whereby, reclining at the top so as to fall within its base, the thickness is gradually lessened according to the height.—Mill. Dict.

† Pistol's "Besonian" is a corruption of besogne—a needy man—metaphorically (at least) a scoundrel.

For seeing one with ribbons, black and blue,
Stars, medals, and a bloody sword in hand,
Addressing him in tones which seem'd to thank,
He recognized an officer of rank.

LVIII.

Short speeches pass between two men who speak
No common language; and besides, in time
Of war and taking towns, when many a shriek
Rings o'er the dialogue, and many a crime
Is perpetrated ere a word can break
Upon the ear, and sounds of horror chime
In like church-bells, with sigh, howl, groan, yell,
Prayer,
There cannot be much conversation there.

LIX.

And therefore all we have related in
Two long octaves, pass'd in a little minute;
But in the same small minute, every sin
Contrived to get itself comprised within it.
The very cannon, deafen'd by the din,
Grew dumb, for you might almost hear a linnet,
As soon as thunder, 'midst the general noise
Of human nature's agonising voice!

LX.

The town was enter'd. Oh, eternity!—
"God made the country, and man made the town."
So Cowper says—and I begin to be
Of his opinion, when I see cast down
Rome, Babylon, Tyre, Carthage, Nineveh,
All walls men know, and many never known;
And pondering on the present and the past,
To deem the woods shall be our home at last:—

LXI.

Of all men, saving Sylla the man-slayer,
Who passes for in life and death most lucky,
Of the great names which in our faces stare,
The General Boone, backwoodsman of Kentucky,
Was happiest among mortals anywhere;
For killing nothing but a bear or buck, he Enjoy'd the lonely, vigorous, harmless days
Of his old age in wilds of deepest maze.*

LXII.

Crime came not near him—she is not the child
Of solitude; Health shrank not from him—for
Her home is in the rarely-trodden wild,
Where if men seek her not, and death be more
Their choice than life, forgive them, as beguiled
By habit to what their own hearts abhor—
In cities caged. The present case in point I
Cite is, that Boone lived hunting up to ninety;

LXIII.

And what's still stranger, left behind a name
For which men vainly decimate the throng,
Not only famous, but of that good fame
Without which glory's but a tavern song—
Simple, serene, the antipodes of shame,
Which hate nor envy e'er could tinge with wrong;
An active hermit, even in age the child
Of Nature, or the Man of Ross run wild.

LXIV.

'T is true he shrank from men even of his nation,
When they built up unto his darling trees,—

He moved some hundred miles off, for a station
Where there were fewer houses and more ease;
The inconvenience of civilization
Is, that you neither can be pleased nor please;
But where he met the individual man,
He show'd himself as kind as mortal can.

LXV.

He was not all alone: around him grew
A sylvan tribe of children of the chase,
Whose young, unawaken'd world was ever new,
Nor sword nor sorrow yet had left a trace
On her unwrinkled brow, nor could you view
A frown on Nature's or on human face;
The free-born forest found and kept them free,
And fresh as is a torrent or a tree.

LXVI.

And tall, and strong, and swift of foot were they,
Beyond the dwarding city's pale abortions,
Because their thoughts had never been the prey
Of care or gain: the green woods were their portions;
No sinking spirits told them they grew gray.
No fashion made them apes of her distortions;
Simple they were, not savage; and their rifles,
Though very true, were not yet used for trifles.

LXVII.

Motion was in their days, rest in their slumbers,
And cheerfulness the handmaid of their toil;
Nor yet too many nor too few their numbers;
Corruption could not make their hearts her
soil;
The lust which stings, the splendor which encum-
bers,
With the free foresters divide no spoil;
Serene, not sullen, were the solitudes
Of this unsighing people of the woods.

LXVIII.

So much for Nature:—by way of variety,
Now back to thy great joys, Civilization!
And the sweet consequence of large society,
War, pestilence, the despot's desolation,
The kingly scourge, the lust of notoriety,
The millions slain by soldiers for their rations,
The scenes like Catherine's boudoir at threescore,
With Ismail's storm to soften it the more.

LXIX.

The town was enter'd: first one column made
Its sanguinary way good—then another;
The reeking bayonet and the flashing blade
Clash'd 'gainst the scimitar, and babe and mother
With distant shrieks were heard Heaven to upbraid:—
Still closer sulphury clouds began to smother
The breath of morn and man, where foot by foot
The madden'd Turks their city still dispute.

LXX.

Kontousof, he who afterwards beat back
(With some assistance from the frost and snow)
Napoleon on his bold and bloody track,
It happen'd was himself beat back just now:
He was a jolly fellow, and could crack
His jest alike in face of friend or foe,
Though life, and death, and victory were at stake;
But here it seem'd his jokes had ceased to take:

* "The wildest solitudes are to the taste of some people. General Boone, who was chiefly instrumental in the first settlement of Kentucky, is of this turn. It is said, that he is now (1818), at the age of seventy, pursuing the daily chase two hundred miles to the westward of the last abode of civilized man. He had retired to a chosen spot, beyond the Missouri, which, after him, is named 'Boone's Lick,' out of the reach, as he flattered himself, of intrusion; but white men, even there, encroached upon him, and two years ago, he went back two hundred miles further."—BRANCKEN'S Notes on America.

LXXI.

For having thrown himself into a ditch,
Follow'd in haste by various grenadiers,
Whose blood the puddle greatly did enrich,
He climb'd to where the parapet appears;
But there his project reach'd its utmost pitch
(Amongst other deaths the General Ribaulpierre's
Was much regretted), for the Moslem men
Threw them all down into the ditch again.

LXXII.

And had it not been for some stray troops landing
They knew not where, being carried by the stream
To some spot, where they lost their understanding,
And wander'd up and down as in a dream,
Until they reach'd, as daybreak was expanding,
That which a portal to their eyes did seem,—
The great and gay Koutousow might have lain
Where three parts of his column yet remain.

LXXIII.

And scrambling round the rampart, these same troops,
After the taking of the "Cavalier,"*
Just as Koutousow's most "forlorn" of "hopes"
Took, like chameleons, some slight tinge of fear,
Open'd the gate call'd "Killa," to the groups
Of baffled heroes, who stood shyly near,
Sliding knee-deep in lately frozen mud,
Now thaw'd into a marsh of human blood.

LXXIV.

The Kozacks, or, if so you please, Cossacks—
(I don't much pique myself upon orthography,
So that I do not grossly err in facts,
Statistics, tactics, politics, and geography)—
Having been used to serve on horses' backs,
And no great dilettant in topography
Of fortresses, but fighting where it pleases
Their chiefs to order,—were all cut to pieces.

LXXV.

Their column, though the Turkish batteries thun-
der'd
Upon them, nevertheless had reach'd the ram-
part,
And naturally thought they could have plunder'd
The city, without being further hamper'd;
But as it happens to brave men, they blunder'd—
The Turks at first pretended to have scamper'd,
Only to draw them 'twixt two bastion corners,
From whence they sallied on those Christian scorn-
ers.

LXXVI.

Then being taken by the tail—a taking Fatal to bishops as to soldiers—these Cossacks were all cut off as day was breaking,
And found their lives were let at a short lease—
But perish'd without shivering or shaking,
Leaving as ladders their heap'd carcasses,
O'er which Lieutenant-Colonel Yousoukoi
March'd with the brave battalion of Polouzki:—

LXXVII.

This valiant man kill'd all the Turks he met,
But could not eat them, being in his turn
Slain by some Mussulmans, who would not yet,
Without resistance, see their city burn.
The walls were won, but 't was an even bet
Which of the armies would have cause to mourn:
'T was blow for blow, disputing inch by inch,
For one would not retreat, nor t' other flinch.

LXXVIII.

Another column also suffer'd much:—
And here we may remark with the historian,
You should but give few cartridges to such Troops as are meant to march with greatest glory
on:
When matters must be carried by the touch
Of the bright bayonet, and they all should hurry
on,
They sometimes, with a hankering for existence,
Keep merely firing at a foolish distance.

LXXIX.

A junction of the General Meknop's men
(Without the General, who had fallen some time Before, being badly seconded just then)
Was made at length with those who dared to climb
The death-disgorging rampart once again;
And though the Turks' resistance was sublime,
They took the bastion, which the Seraskier
Defended at a price extremely dear.

LXXX.

Juan and Johnson, and some volunteers
Among the foremost, offer'd him good quarter,
A word which little suits with Seraskiers,
Or at least suited not this valiant Tartar.
He died, deserving well his country's tears,
A savage sort of military martyr.
An English naval officer, who wish'd
To make him prisoner, was also dish'd:

LXXXI.

For all the answer to his proposition
Was from a pistol-shot that laid him dead;
On which the rest, without more intermission,
Began to lay about with steel and lead—
The pious metals most in requisition
On such occasions; not a single head
Was spared;—three thousand Moslems perish'd
here,
And sixteen bayonets pierced the Seraskier.

LXXXII.

The city's taken—only part by part—
And Death is drunk with gore: there's not a street
Where fights not to the last some desperate heart
For those for whom it soon shall cease to beat.
Here War forgot his own destructive art
In more destroying Nature; and the heat
Of carnage, like the Nile's sun-sodden slime,
Engender'd monstrous shapes of every crime.

LXXXIII.

A Russian officer, in martial tread
Over a heap of bodies, felt his heel
Seized fast, as if 't were by the serpent's head
Whose fangs Eve taught her human seed to feel;
In vain he kick'd, and swore, and writhed, and bled,
And howl'd for help as wolves do for a meal—
The teeth still kept their gratifying hold,
As do the subtle snakes described of old.

LXXXIV.

A dying Moslem, who had felt the foot
Of a foe o'er him, snatch'd it at, and bit
The very tendon which is most acute—
(That which some ancient Muse or modern wit Named after thee, Achilles) and quite through 't
He made the teeth meet, nor relinquish'd it

* "A 'cavalier' is an elevation of earth, situated ordinarily in the gorge of a bastion, bordered with a parapet, and cut into more or fewer embrasures, according to its capacity."—Molt. Dict.

Even with his life—for (but they lie) 't is said
To the live leg still clung the sever'd head.

LXXXV.

However this may be, 't is pretty sure
The Russian officer for life was lamed,
For the Turk's teeth stuck faster than a skewer,
And left him 'midst the invalid and maim'd:
The regimental surgeon could not cure
His patient, and perhaps was to be blamed
More than the head of the inveterate foe,
Which was cut off, and scarce even then let go.

LXXXVI.

But then the fact 's a fact—and 't is the part
Of a true poet to escape from fiction
Whene'er he can; for there is little art
In leaving verse more free from the restriction
Of truth than prose, unless to suit the mart
For what is sometimes call'd poetic diction
And that outrageous appetite for lies
Which Satan angles with for souls, like flies.

LXXXVII.

The city 's taken, but not render'd!—No!
There 's not a Moslem that hath yielded sword:
The blood may gush out, as the Danube's flow
Rolls by the city wall; but deed nor word
Acknowledge aught of dread of death or foe:
In vain the yell of victory is roar'd
By the advancing Muscovite—the groan
Of the last foe is echo'd by his own.

LXXXVIII.

The bayonet pierces and the sabre cleaves,
And human lives are lavish'd everywhere,
As the year closing whirls the scarlet leaves
When the stripp'd forest bows to the bleak air,
And groans; and thus the peopled city grieves,
Shorn of its best and loveliest, and left bare;
But still it falls in vast and awful splinters,
As oaks blown down with all their thousand winters.

LXXXIX.

It is an awful topic—but 't is not
My cue for any time to be terrific:
For checker'd as is seen our human lot
With good, and bad, and worse, alike prolific
Of melancholy merriment, to quote
Too much of one sort would be soporific;—
Without, or with, offence to friends or foes,
I sketch your world exactly as it goes.

XC.

And one good action in the midst of crimes
Is "quite refreshing," in the affected phrase
Of these ambrosial, Pharisaic times,
With all their pretty milk-and-water ways,
And may serve therefore to bedew these rhymes,
A little scorch'd at present with the blaze
Of conquest and its consequences, which Make epic poetry so rare and rich.

XCI.

Upon a taken bastion, where there lay
Thousands of slaughter'd men, a yet warm group
Of murder'd women, who had found their way
To this vain refuge, made the good heart droop
And shudder;—while, as beautiful as May,
A female child of ten years tried to stoop
And hide her little palpitating breast
Amidst the bodies lull'd in bloody rest.

XCII.

Two villainous Cossacks pursued the child
With flashing eyes and weapons: match'd with
them,

The rudest brute that roams Siberia's wild
Has feelings pure and polish'd as a gem,—
The bear is civilized, the wolf is mild;
And whom for this at last must we condemn?
Their natures? or their sovereigns, who employ
All arts to teach their subjects to destroy?

XCIII.

Their sabres glitter'd o'er her little head,
Whence her fair hair rose twining with affright,
Her hidden face was plunged amidst the dead:
When Juan caught a glimpse of this sad sight,
I shall not say exactly what he said,
Because it might not solace "ears polite;"
But what he did, was to lay on their backs,
The readiest way of reasoning with Cossacks.

XCIV.

One's hip he slash'd, and split the other's shoulder,
And drove them with their brutal yells to seek
If there might be chirurgeons who could solder
The wounds they richly merited, and shriek
Their baffled rage and pain; while waxing colder
As he turn'd o'er each pale and gory cheek,
Don Juan raised his little captive from
The heap a moment more had made her tomb.

XCV.

And she was chill as they, and on her face
A slender streak of blood announced how near
Her fate had been to that of all her race;
For the same blow which laid her mother here
Had scarr'd her brow, and left its crimson trace,
As the last link with all she held dear;
But else unhurt, she open'd her large eyes,
And gazed on Juan with a wild surprise.

XCVI.

Just at this instant, while their eyes were fix'd
Upon each other, with dilated glance,
In Juan's look, pain, pleasure, hope, fear, mix'd
With joy to save, and dread of some mischance
Unto his protégée; while here, transfix'd
With infant terrors, glared as from a trance,
A pure, transparent, pale, yet radiant face,
Like to a lighted alabaster vase;—

XCVII.

Up came John Johnson (I will not say "Jack,"
For that were vulgar, cold, and commonplace
On great occasions, such as an attack
On cities, as hath been the present case):
Up Johnson came, with hundreds at his back,
Exclaiming:—"Juan! Juan! On, boy! brace
Your arm, and I'll bet Moscow to a dollar,
That you and I will win Saint George's collar.*

XCVIII.

"The Seraskier is knock'd upon the head,
But the stone bastion still remains, wherein
The old Pacha sits among some hundreds dead,
Smoking his pipe quite calmly 'midst the din
Of our artillery and his own: 't is said
Our kill'd, already piled up to the chin,
Lie round the battery; but still it batters,
And grape in volleys, like a vineyard, scatters.

XCIX.

"Then up with me!"—But Juan answer'd, "Look Upon this child—I saved her—must not leave
Her life to chance; but point me out some nook
Of safety, where she less may shrink and grieve,
And I am with you."—Whereon Johnson took
A glance around—and shrugg'd—and twitch'd his sleeve

* A Russian military order.

And black silk neckcloth—and replied, "You're right; Poor thing! what 's to be done? I'm puzzled quite."

C.

Said Juan—"Whatever is to be Done, I'll not quit her till she seems secure
Of present life a good deal more than we."— Quoth Johnson—"Neither will I quite insure;
But at the least you may die gloriously."—
Juan replied—"At least I will endure
What'er is to be borne—but not resign
This child, who is parentless, and therefore mine."

CL.

Johnson said—"Juan, we've no time to lose;
The child 's a pretty child—a very pretty—
I never saw such eyes—but hark! now choose Between your fame and feelings, pride and pity:—
Hark! how the roar increases!—no excuse
Will serve when there is plunder in a city:—
I should be loath to march without you, but,
By God! we'll be too late for the first cut."

CII.

But Juan was immovable; until
Johnson, who really loved him in his way,
Pick'd out amongst his followers with some skill
Such as he thought the least given up to prey;
And swearing if the infant came to ill
That they should all be shot on the next day;
But if she were deliver'd safe and sound,
They should at least have fifty rubles round,

CIII.

And all allowances besides of plunder
In fair proportion with their comrades:—then
Juan consented to march on through thunder,
Which thinn'd at every step their ranks of men:
And yet the rest rush'd eagerly—no wonder,
For they were heated by the hope of gain,
A thing which happens everywhere each day—
No hero trusteth wholly to half pay.

CIV.

And such is victory, and such is man!
At least nine-tenths of what we call so:—God
May have another name for half we scan
As human beings, or his ways are odd.
But to our subject: a brave Tartar khan—
Or "anlan," as the author (to whose nod
In prose I bend my humble verse) doth call
This chieftain—somehow would not yield at all:

CV.

But flank'd by six brave sons (such is polygamy,
That she spawns warriors by the score, where none
Are prosecuted for that false crime bigamy),
He never would believe the city won
While courage clung to but a single twig.—Am I Describing Priam's, Peleus', or Jove's son?
Neither—but a good, plain, old, temperate man,
Who fought with his five children in the van.

CVI.

To take him was the point.—The truly brave,
When they behold the brave oppress'd with odds,
Are touch'd with a desire to shield and save:—
A mixture of wild beasts and demi-gods
Are they—now furious as the sweeping wave,
Now moved with pity: even as sometimes nods

The rugged tree unto the summer wind,
Compassion breathes along the savage mind.

CVII.

But he would not be taken, and replied
To all the propositions of surrender
By moving Christians down on every side,
As obstinate as Swedish Charles at Bender.*
His five brave boys no less the foe defied;
Whereon the Russian pathos grew less tender,
As being a virtue, like terrestrial patience,
Apt to wear out on trifling provocations.

CVIII.

And spite of Johnson and of Juan, who Expended all their Eastern phraseology
In begging him, for God's sake, just to show
So much less fight as might form an apology
For them in saving such a desperate foe—
He hew'd away, like doctors of theology
When they dispute with skeptics; and with curses
Struck at his friends, as babies beat their nurses.

CIX.

Nay, he had wounded, though but slightly, both
Juan and Johnson; whereupon they fell,
The first with sighs, the second with an oath,
Upon his angry sultanship, pell-mell,
And all around were grown exceeding wroth
At such a pertinacious infidel,
And pour'd upon him and his sons like rain,
Which they resisted like a sandy plain

CX.

That drinks and still is dry. At last they perish'd—
His second son was level'd by a shot;
His third was sabred; and the fourth, most cherish'd
Of all the five, on bayonets met his lot;
The fifth, who, by a Christian mother nourish'd,
Had been neglected, ill-used, and what not,
Because deform'd, yet died all game and bottom,
To save a sire who blush'd that he begot him.

CXI.

The eldest was a true and tameless Tartar,
As great a scorner of the Nazarene
As ever Mahomet pick'd out for a martyr,
Who only saw the black-eyed girls in green,
Who make the beds of those who won't take quarter
On earth, in Paradise; and when once seen,
Those hours, like all other pretty creatures,
Do just what'er they please, by dint of features.

CXII.

And what they pleased to do with the young khan
In heaven I know not, nor pretend to guess;
But doubtless they prefer a fine young man
To tough old heroes, and can do no less;
And that's the cause no doubt why, if we scan
A field of battle's ghastly wilderness,
For one rough, weather-beaten, veteran body,
You'll find ten thousand handsome oxcombs bloody.

CXIII.

Your hours also have a natural pleasure
In lopping off your lately married men,
Before the bridal hours have danced their measure,
And the sad, second moon grows grows dim again,
Or dull repentance hath had dreary leisure
To wish him back a bachelor now and then:

* At Bender, after the fatal battle of Pultawa, Charles gave a proof of that unreasonable obstinacy which occasioned all his misfortunes in Turkey. When advised to write to the grand visier, according to the custom of the Turks, he said it was beneath his dignity. The same obstinacy placed him necessarily at variance with all the ministers of the Porte."—VOLTAIRE.

And thus your hour! (it may be) disputes
Of these brief blossoms the immediate fruits.

CXXV.

Thus the young khan, with hours in his sight,
Thought not upon the charms of four young brides,
But bravely rush'd on his first heavenly night.
In short, howe'er our better faith derides,
These black-eyed virgins make the Moslems fight,
As though there were one heaven and none besides—

Whereas, if all be true we hear of heaven
And hell, there must at least be six or seven.

CXXV.

So fully flash'd the phantom on his eyes,
That when the very lance was in his heart,
He shouted "Allah!" and saw Paradise
With all its veil of mystery drawn apart,
And bright eternity without disguise
On his soul, like a ceaseless sunrise, dart :—
With prophets, hours, angels, saints, desoried
In one voluptuous blaze,—and then he died :

CXXVI.

But with a heavenly rapture on his face.
The good old khan, who long had ceased to see
Hours, or aught except his florid race,
Who grew like cedars round him gloriously—
When he beheld his latest hero grace
The earth, which he became like a fell'd tree,
Paused for a moment from the fight, and cast
A glance on that alain son, his first and last.

CXXVII.

The soldiers, who beheld him drop his point,
Stopp'd as if once more willing to concede
Quarter, in case he bade them not "aroynt!"
As he before had done. He did not heed
Their pause nor signs: his heart was out of joint,
And shook (till now unshaken) like a reed,
As he look'd down upon his children gone,
And felt—though done with life—he was alone.

CXXVIII.

But 't was a transient tremor:—with a spring
Upon the Russian steel his breast he flung,
As carelessly as hurls the moth her wing
Against the light wherein she dies: he clung
Closer, that all the deadlier they might wring,
Unto the bayonets which had pierced his young;
And throwing back a dim look on his sons,
In one wide wound pour'd forth his soul at once.

CXXIX.

'T is strange enough—the rough, tough soldiers,
who
Spared neither sex nor age in their career
Of carnage, when this old man was pierced through,
And lay before them with his children near,
Touch'd by the heroism of him they slew,
Were melted for a moment; though no tear Flow'd from their bloodshot eyes, all red with strife,
They honor'd such determined scorn of life.

CXX.

But the stone bastion still kept up its fire,
Where the chief pacha calmly held his post:
Some twenty times he made the Russ retire,
And baffled the assaults of all their host;
At length he condescended to inquire
If yet the city's rest were won or lost;
And being told the latter, sent a boy
To answer Ribas' summons to give way.

CXXI.

In the mean time, cross-legg'd, with great sang-froid,
Among the scorching ruins he sat smoking
Tobacco on a little carpet :—Troy
Saw nothing like the scene around :—yet looking
With martial stolidism, nought seem'd to annoy
His stern philosophy; but gently stroking
His beard, he puff'd his pipe's ambrosial gales,
As if he had three lives, as well as tails.

CXXII.

The town was taken—whether he might yield
Himself or bastion, little matter'd now:
His stubborn valor was no future shield.
Ismael's no more! The crescent's silver bow
Sunk, and the crimson cross glared o'er the field,
But red with no redeeming gore: the glow
Of burning streets, like moonlight on the water,
Was imaged back in blood, the sea of slaughter.

CXXIII.

All that the mind would shrink from of excesses;
All that the body perpetrates of bad;
All that we read, hear, dream, of man's distresses;
All that the devil would do if run stark mad;
All that defies the worst which pen expresses;
All by which hell is peopled, or sad
As hell—mere mortals who their power abuse—
Was here (as heretofore and since) let loose.*

CXXIV.

If here and there some transient trait of pity
Was shown, and some more noble heart broke through
Its bloody bond, and saved, perhaps, some pretty
Child, or an aged, helpless man or two—
What's this in one annihilated city,
Where thousand loves, and ties, and duties grew?
Cockneys of London! Muscadins of Paris!
Just ponder what a pious pastime war is.

CXXV.

Think how the joys of reading a Gazette
Are purchased by all agonies and crimes:
Or if these do not move you, don't forget
Such doom may be your own in after times.
Meantime the Taxes, Castlereagh, and Debt,
Are hints as good as sermons, or as rhymes.
Read your own hearts and Ireland's present story
Then feed her famine fat with Wellesley's glory.

CXXVI.

But still there is unto a patriot nation,
Which loves so well its country and its king,
A subject of sublimest exultation—
Bear it, ye Muses, on your brightest wing!

* "No man could describe the horrors which ensued. The ferocious victors, instead of being struck with admiration or respect by the noble defence of the brave garrison, were so enraged at the great slaughter of their fellows which had taken place, that no bounds could be prescribed to the excess of their fury. All order and command seem to have been entirely at an end during the horrors of that terrible night: the officers could neither restrain the slaughter, nor prevent the general plunder, made by the lawless and ferocious soldiers. Thousands of the Turks, incapable of enduring the sight of the horrid scenes of destruction in which all that was dear to them was involved, rushed desperately upon the bayonets of the enemy, in order to shorten their misery; while those who could reach the Danube threw themselves headlong into it for the same purpose. The streets and passages were so choked by the heaps of dead and dying bodies which lay in them, as considerably to impede the progress of the victors in their eager search for plunder."—DR. LARSEN'S, in Ann. Reg. for 1811.

How'er the mighty locust, Desolation,
Strip your green fields, and to your harvests eling,
Gaunt famine never shall approach the throne—
Though Ireland starve, great George weighs twenty stone.

CXXVII.

But let me put an end unto my theme:
There was an end of Ismail—hapless town!
Far flash'd her burning towers o'er Danube's stream,
And redly ran his blushing waters down.
The horrid war-whoop and the shriller scream
Rose still; but fainter were the thunders grown:
Of forty thousand who had mann'd the wall,
Some hundreds breathed—the rest were silent all!

CXXVIII.

In one thing ne'ertheless 't is fit to praise
The Russian army upon this occasion,
A virtue much in fashion nowadays,
And therefore worthy of commemoration:
The topic 's tender, so shall be my phrase—
Perhaps the season's chill, and their long station
In winter's depth, or want of rest and victual,
Had made them chaste;—they ravish'd very little.

CXXIX.

Much did they slay, more plunder, and no less
Might here and there occur some violation
In the other line;—but not to such excess
As when the French, that dissipated nation,
Take towns by storm: no cause can I guess,
Except cold weather and commiseration;
But all the ladies, save some twenty score,
Were almost as much virgins as before.

CXXX.

Some odd mistakes, too, happen'd in the dark,
Which show'd a want of lanterns, or of taste—
Indeed the smoke was such they scarce could mark
Their friends from foes,—besides such things from haste
Occur, though rarely, when there is a spark
Of light to save the venerable chaste:
But six old damsels, each of seventy years,
Were all deflower'd by different grenadiers.

CXXXI.

But on the whole their continence was great;
So that some disappointment there ensued
To those who had felt the inconvenient state
Of "single blessedness," and thought it good (Since it was not their fault, but only fate,
To bear these crosses) of such waning pride
To make a Roman sort of Sabine wedding,
Without the expense and the suspense of bedding.

CXXXII.

Some voices of the buxom middle-aged
Were also heard to wonder in the din
(Widows of forty were these birds long caged)
"Wherefore the ravishing did not begin!"
But what the thirst for gore and plunder rag'd,
There was small leisure for superfluous sin;
But whether they escaped or no, lies hid
In darkness—I can only hope they did.

CXXXIII.

Suwarrow now was conqueror—a match
For Timour or for Zinghis in his trade.

* "Among those who fell were a number of the bravest, most experienced, and renowned commanders in the Turkish armies. Six or seven Tartar princes of the illustrious line of Gheral likewise perished with the rest. A few hundreds of prisoners were preserved, to serve as melancholy recorders and witnesses of the destruction which they had beheld. In

While mosques and streets, beneath his eyes, like thatch

Blas'd, and the cannon's roar was scarce allay'd,
With bloody hands he wrote his first despatch;
And here exactly follows what he said:—
"Glory to God and to the Empress!" (Powers Eternal! such names mingled!) "Ismail's ours."

CXXXIV.

Methinks these are the most tremendous words,
Since "Menè, Menè, Tekel," and "Upharsin,"
Which hands or pens have ever traced of swords.
Heaven help me! I'm but little of a person:
What Daniel read was short-hand of the Lord's,
Severe, sublime; the prophet wrote no farce on
The fate of nations;—but this Russ so witty
Could rhyme, like Nero, o'er a burning city.

CXXXV.

He wrote this Polar melody, and set it,
Duly accompanied by shrieks and groans,
Which few will sing, I trust, but none forget it,—
For I will teach, if possible, the stones
To rise against earth's tyrants. Never let it
Be said that we still truckle unto thrones;—
But ye—our children's children! think how we Show'd what things were before the world was free!

CXXXVI.

That hour is not for us, but 't is for you:
And as, in the great joy of your millennium,
You hardly will believe such things were true
As now occur, I thought that I would pen you
'em;
But may their very memory perish too!—
Yet if perchance remember'd, still disdain you
'em
More than you scorn the savages of yore,
Who painted their bare limbs, but not with gore.

CXXXVII.

And when you hear historians talk of thrones,
And those that sat upon them, let it be
As we now gaze upon the mammoth's bones,
And wonder what old world such things could see,
Or hieroglyphics on Egyptian stones,
The pleasant riddles of futurity—
Guessing at what shall happily be hid,
As the real purpose of a pyramid.

CXXXVIII.

Reader! I have kept my word,—at least so far
As the first canto promised. You have now
Had sketches of love, tempest, travel, war,—
All very accurate, you must allow,
And epic, if plain truth should prove no bar;
For I have drawn much less with a long bow
Than my forerunners. Carelessly I sing,
But Phœbus lends me now and then a string,

CXXXIX.

With which I still can harp, and carp, and fiddle.
What further hath befallen or may befall
The hero of this grand poetic riddle,
I by and by may tell you, if at all:
But now I choose to break off in the middle,
Worn out with battering Ismail's stubborn wall,
While Juan is sent off with the despatch,
For which all Petersburg is on the watch.

consequence of an accurate inquiry set on foot by an Ottoman commander of rank, it appears that the whole number of Turks who perished in the slaughter of Ismail amounted to thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and sixteen."—Dr. LAURENCE.

CALL.

This special honor was conferr'd, because
 He had behaved with courage and humanity—
 Which last men like, when they have time to pause
 From their ferocities produced by vanity.
 His little captive gain'd him some applause
 For saving her amidst the wild insanity
 Of carnage,—and I think he was more glad in her
 Safety, than his new order of Saint Vladimir.

OXLII.

The Moslem orphan went with her protector,
 For she was homeless, houseless, helpless; all
 Her friends, like the sad family of Hector,
 Had perish'd in the field or by the wall:
 Her very place of birth was but a spectre
 Of what it had been; there the Muezzin's call
 To prayer was heard no more!—and Juan wept,
 And made a vow to shield her, which he kept.

CANTO THE NINTH.

I.

Og, Wellington! (or "Villainton"—for Fame
 Sounds the heroic syllables both ways;
 France could not even conquer your great name,
 But punn'd it down to this facetious phrase—
 Beating or beaten she will laugh the same,)
 You have obtain'd great pensions and munificence!

Glory like yours should any dare gainsay,
 Humanity would rise, and thunder "Nay!"

II.

I don't think that you used Kinnaird quite well
 In Marinét's affair—in fact, 't was shabby,
 And like some other things won't do to tell
 Upon your tomb in Westminster's old abbey.
 Upon the rest 't is not worth while to dwell,
 Such tales being for the tea-hours of some tabby;
 But though your years as man tend fast to zero,
 In fact your grace is still but a young hero.

III.

Though Britain owes (and pays you too) so much,
 Yet Europe doubtless owes you greatly more:
 You have repair'd Legitimacy's crutch,
 A prop not quite so certain as before:
 The Spanish, and the French, as well as Dutch,
 Have seen, and felt, how strongly you restore;
 And Waterloo has made the world your debtor
 (I wish your bards would sing it rather better).

IV.

You are "the best of cut-throats!"—do not start;
 The phrase is Shakespeare's, and not misapplied:—
 War 's a brain-spattering, windpipe-slit-ting art,
 Unless her cause by right be sanctified.
 If you have acted once a generous part,
 The world, not the world's masters, will decide,
 And I shall be delighted to learn who,
 Save you and yours, have gain'd by Waterloo?

V.

I am no flatterer—you've supp'd full of flattery:
 They say you like it too—'t is no great wonder.

He whose whole life has been assault and battery,
 At last may get a little tired of thunder;
 And swallowing eulogy much more than satire, he
 May like being praised for every lucky blunder,
 Call'd "Saviour of the Nations"—not yet saved,
 And "Europe's Liberator"—still enslaved.

VI.

I've done. Now go and dine from off the plate
 Presented by the Prince of the Brazils,
 And send the sentinel before your gate
 A slice or two from your luxurious meals:
 He fought, but has not fed so well of late,
 Some hunger, too, they say the people feels:—
 There is no doubt that you deserve your ration,
 But pray give back a little to the nation.

VII.

I don't mean to reflect—a man so great as
 You, my lord duke! is far above reflection:
 The high Roman fashion, too, of Cincinnatus,
 With modern history has but small connection:
 Though as an Irishman you love potatoes,
 You need not take them under your direction;
 And half a million for your Sabine farm
 Is rather dear!—I'm sure I mean no harm.

VIII.

Great men have always scorn'd great recompenses:
 Epaminondas saved his Thebes, and died,
 Not leaving even his funeral expenses:
 George Washington had thanks, and nought beside,
 Except the all-cloudless glory (which few men's is)
 To free his country: Pitt too had his pride,
 And as a high-soul'd minister of state is Renown'd for ruining Great Britain gratis.

IX.

Never had mortal man such opportunity,
 Except Napoleon, or abused it more:
 You might have freed fallen Europe from the unity
 Of tyrants, and been blest from shore to shore:
 And now—what is your fame? Shall the Muse
 Tune it to us?

Now—that the rabble's first vain shouts are o'er?
 Go! hear it in your famish'd country's cries!
 Behold the world! and curse your victories!

X.

As these new cantos touch on warlike feats,
 To you the unflattering Muse deigns to inscribe
 Truths, that you will not read in the Gazettes.
 But which 't is time to teach the hireling tribe
 Who fatten on their country's gore, and debts,
 Must be recited—and without a bribe.
 You did great things: but not being great in mind,
 Have left undone the greatest—and mankind.

XI.

Death laughs—Go ponder o'er the skeleton
 With which men image out the unknown thing
 That hides the past world, like to a set sun
 Which still elsewhere may rouse a brighter
 spring—
 Death laughs at all you weep for!—look upon
 This hourly dread of all! whose threaten'd sting
 Turns life to terror, even though in its sheath:
 Mark! how its lipless mouth grins without breath!

XII.

Mark! how it laughs and scoffs at all you are!
 And yet was what you are; from ear to ear
 It laughs not—there is now no fleshy bar
 So call'd; the Antio long hath ceased to hear,
 But still he smiles; and whether near or far,
 He stripes from man that mantle (far more dear

Than even the tailor's), his incarnate skin,
White, black, or copper—the dead bones will grin.

XXIII.

And thus Death laughs,—it is sad merriment,
But still it is so; and with such example
Why should not Life be equally content
With his superior, in a smile to trample
Upon the nothings which are daily spent
Like bubbles on an ocean much less ample
Than the eternal deluge, which devours
Suns as rays—worlds like atoms—years like hours?

XXIV.

"To be, or not to be? that is the question,"
Says Shakspeare, who just now is much in fashion.
I am neither Alexander nor Hephæstion,
Nor ever had for abstract fame much passion;
But would much rather have a sound digestion
Than Buonaparte's cancer:—could I dash on Through fifty victories to shame or fame,
Without a stomach—what were a good name?

XXV.

"O dura lile messorum!"—"Oh,
Ye rigid guts of reapers!" I translate
For the great benefit of those who know
What indigestion is—that inward fate
Which makes all Stix through one small liver flow.
A peasant's sweat is worth his lord's estate:
Let this one toll for bread—that rack for rent,
He who sleeps best may be the most content.

XXVI.

"To be, or not to be?"—"Ere I decide,
I should be glad to know that which is being.
'Tis true we speculate both far and wide,
And deem, because we see, we are all seeing:
For my part, I'll enlist on neither side,
Until I see both sides for once agreeing.
For me, I sometimes think that life is death,
Rather than life a mere affair of breath.

XXVII.

"Que scale-je?" was the motto of Montaigne,
As also of the first academicians:
That all is dubious which man may attain,
Was one of their most favorite positions.
There's no such thing as certainty, that's plain
As any of Mortality's conditions;
So little do we know what we're about in
This world, I doubt if doubt itself be doubting.

XXVIII.

It is a pleasant voyage perhaps to float,
Like Pyrrho,* on a sea of speculation;
But what if carrying sail capsize the boat?
Your wise men don't know much of navigation;
And swimming long in the abyss of thought
Is apt to tire; a calm and shallow station
Well nigh the shore, where one stoops down and gathers
Some pretty shell, is best for moderate bathers.

XXIX.

"But heaven," as Casio says, "is above all!—
No more of this, then, let us pray!" We have Souls to save, since Eve's slip and Adam's fall,
Which tumbled all mankind into the grave,
Besides fish, beasts, and birds. "The sparrow's fall
Is special providence," though how it gave

Offence, we know not; probably it perch'd
Upon the tree which Eve so fondly search'd.

XX.

Oh, ye immortal gods! what is theogony?
Oh, thou, too, mortal man! what is philanthropy?
Oh, world! which was and is, what is cosmogony?
Some people have accused me of misanthropy;
And yet I know no more than the mahogany
That forms this desk, of what they mean; lykan- thropy!
I comprehend, for without transformation
Men become wolves on any slight occasion.

XXI.

But I, the mildest, meekest of mankind,
Like Moses, or Melancthon, who have ne'er
Done anything exceedingly unkind,—
And (though I could not now and then forbear
Following the bent of body or of mind)
Have always had a tendency to spare,—
Why do they call me misanthrope? Because They hate me, not I them:—and here we'll pause.

XXII.

'Tis time we should proceed with our good poem,—
For I maintain that it is really good,
Not only in the body but the poem,
However little both are understood
Just now,—but by and by the Truth will show 'em
Herself in her sublimest attitude:
And till she doth, I fain must be content
To share her beauty and her banishment.

XXIII.

Our hero (and, I trust, kind reader! yours)
Was left upon his way to the chief city
Of the immortal Peter's polish'd boors,
Who still have shown themselves more brave than witty.
I know its mighty empire now allures
Much flattery—even Voltaire's, and that's a pity.
For me, I deem an absolute autocrat
Not a barbarian, but much worse than that.

XXIV.

And I will war, at least in words (and—should My chance so happen—deeds), with all who war
With Thought;—and of Thought's foes by far most rude,
Tyrants and sycophants have been and are.
I know not who may conquer: if I could
Have such a prescience, it should be no bar
To this my plain, sworn, downright detestation
Of every despotism in every nation.

XXV.

It is not that I adulterate the people:
Without me, there are demagogues enough,
And infidels, to pull down every steeple,
And set up in their stead some proper stuff,
Whether they may sow skepticism to reap hell,
As is the Christian dogma rather rough,
I do not know;—I wish men to be free
As much from mobs as kings—from you as me.

XXVI.

The consequence is, being of no party,
I shall offend all parties:—never mind!
My words, at least, are more sincere and hearty
Than if I sought to sail before the wind.

* Pyrrho, the philosopher of Elis, was in continual suspense of judgment: he doubted of everything; never made any conclusion; and when he had carefully examined a subject, and investigated all its points, he concluded by still doubting of its evidence."—AVL. GEL.

† See Othello.

‡ "A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts."—TOLCE.

He who has nought to gain can have small art: he
Who neither wishes to be bound nor blind,
May still expatiate freely, as will I,
Nor give my voice to slavery's jackal cry.

XXVII.

That's an appropriate simile, that jackal :—
I've heard them in the Ephesian ruins howl
By night, as do that mercenary pack all,
Power's base purveyors, who for pickings prowl.
And scent the prey their masters would attack all.
However, the poor jackals are less foul
(As being the brave lions' keen providers)
Than human insects, catering for spiders.

XXVIII.

Raise but an arm! 't will brush their web away,
And without that, their poison and their claws
Are useless. Mind, good people! what I say—
(Or rather peoples)—go on without pause!
The web of these tarantulas each day
Increases, till you shall make common cause:
None, save the Spanish fly and Attic bee,
As yet are strongly stinging to be free.

XXIX.

Don Juan, who had shone in the late slaughter,
Was left upon his way with the despatch,
Where blood was talk'd of as we would of water;
And carcases that lay as thick as thatch
O'er silenced cities, merely served to flatter Fair Catherine's pastime—who look'd on the match
Between these nations as a main of cocks,
Wherein she liked her own to stand like rocks.

XXX.

And there in a kibika he roll'd on (A cursed sort of carriage without springs,
Which on rough roads leaves scarcely a whole bone),
Pondering on glory, chivalry, and kings,
And orders, and on all that he had done—
And wishing that post-horses had the wings
Of Pegasus, or at the least post-chaises
Had feathers, when a traveller on deep ways is.

XXXI.

At every jolt—and they were many—still
He turn'd his eyes upon his little charge,
As if he wish'd that she should fare less ill
Than he, in these sad highways left at large.
To ruts, and flints, and lovely Nature's skill,
Who is no pavior, nor admits a bargain
On her canals, where God takes sea and land,
Fishery and farm, both into his own hand.

XXXII.

At least he pays no rent, and has best right
To be the first of what we used to call
"Gentlemen farmers"—a race worn out quite,
Since lately there have been no rents at all,
And "gentlemen" are in a piteous plight,
And "farmers" can't raise Ceres from her fall:
She fell with Buonaparte—What strange thoughts
Arise, when we see emperors fall with oats!

XXXIII.

But Juan turn'd his eyes on the sweet child
Whom he had saved from slaughter—what a trophy!
Oh! ye who build up monuments, defiled
With gore, like Nadir Shah, that cooive sophy,
Who, after leaving Hindostan a wild,
And scarce to the Mogul a cup of coffee

[M]

To soothe his woes withal; was slain, the sinner!
Because he could no more digest his dinner; *

XXXIV.

Oh, ye! or woe! or ha! or abel! reflect,
That one life saved, especially if young
Or pretty, is a thing to recollect
Far sweeter than the greenest laurels sprung
From the manure of human clay, though deck'd
With all the praises ever said or sung:
Though hymn'd by every harp, unless within
Your heart joins chorus, Fame is but a din.

XXXV.

Oh, ye great authors luminous, voluminous!
Ye twice ten hundred thousand daily scribes!
Whose pamphlets, volumes, newspapers, illumine
us!
Whether you're paid by government in bribes,
To prove the public debt is not consuming us—
Or, roughly treading on the "courtier's kibes"
With clownish heel, your popular circulation
Feeds you by printing half the realm's starvation;—

XXXVI.

Oh, ye great authors!—"Appropos des bottes,"—
I have forgotten what I meant to say,
As sometimes have been greater sages' lots;—
'T was something calculated to allay
All wrath in barracks, palaces, or oots:
Certain it would have been but thrown away,
And that's one comfort for my lost advice,
Although no doubt it was beyond all price.

XXXVII.

But let it go:—it will one day be found
With other relics of "a former world,"
When this world shall be former, underground,
Thrown topsy-turvy, twisted, crisp'd, and cur'd,
Baked, fried, or burnt, turn'd inside out, or crown'd.
Like all the worlds before, which have been hur'd
First out of, and then back again to chaos,
The superstratum which will overlay us.

XXXVIII.

So Cuvier says:—and then shall come again
Unto the new creation, rising out
From our old crash, some mystic, ancient strain
Of things destroy'd and left in airy doubt;
Like to the notions we now entertain
Of Titans, giants, fellows of about
Some hundred feet in height, not to say miles,
And mammoths, and your winged crocodiles.

XXXIX.

Think if then George the Fourth should be dug up!
How the new worldlings of the then new East
Will wonder where such animals could sup!
(For they themselves will be but of the least:
Even worlds miscarry, when too oft they pup,
And every new creation hath decreased
In size, from overworking the material—
Men are but maggots of some huge Earth's burial.)

XL.

How will—to these young people, just thrust out
From some fresh Paradise, and set to plough.
And dig, and sweat, and turn themselves about,
And plant, and reap, and spin, and grind, and
Till all the arts at length are brought about,
Especially of war and taxing,—how,

* He was killed in a conspiracy, after his temper had been exasperated by his extreme civility to a degree of insanity.

I say, will these great relics, when they see 'em,
Look like the monsters of a new museum!

XLI.

But I am apt to grow too metaphysical:
"The time is out of joint,"—and so am I;
I quite forget this poem's merely quizzical,
And deviate into matters rather dry.
I ne'er decide what I shall say, and this I call
Much too poetical: men should know why
They write, and for what end: but, note or text,
I never know the word which will come next.

XLII.

So on I ramble, now and then narrating,
Now pondering:—it is time we should narrate.
I left Don Juan with his horses baling—
Now we'll get o'er the ground at a great rate.
I shall not be particular in stating
His journey, we're so many tours of late:
Suppose him then at Petersburg; suppose
That pleasant capital of painted snows;

XLIII.

Suppose him in a handsome uniform;
A scarlet coat, black facings, a long plume,
Waving, like sails new shiver'd in a storm,
Over a cock'd hat in a crowded room,
And brilliant breeches, bright as a cairngorm,*
Of yellow casimire we may presume,
White stockings drawn uncurled as new milk
O'er limbs whose symmetry set off the silk;

XLIV.

Suppose him sword by side, and hat in hand,
Made up by youth, fame, and an army tailor—
That great enchanter, at whose rod's command
Beauty springs forth, and Nature's self turns paler,
Seeing how Art can make her work more grand
(When she don't pin men's limbs in like a jailer)—
Behold him placed as if upon a pillar! He Seems Love turn'd a Lieutenant of artillery!

XLV.

His bandage slipp'd down into a cravat;
His wings subdued to epaulettes; his quiver
Shrunk to a scabbard, with his arrows at
His side as a small-sword, but sharp as ever;
His bow converted into a cock'd hat;
But still so like, that Psyche were more clever
Than some wives (who make blunders no less stupid)
If she had not mistaken him for Cupid.

XLVI.

The courtiers stared, the ladies whisper'd, and
The empress smiled: the reigning favorite
frown'd—
I quite forget which of them was in hand
Just then; as they are rather numerous found,
Who took by turns that difficult command
Since first her majesty was singly crown'd:
But they were mostly nervous six-foot fellows,
All fit to make a Patagonian jealous.

XLVII.

Juan was none of these, but slight and slim,
Blushing and beardless; and yet nevertheless
There was a something in his turn of limb,
And still more in his eye, which seem'd to express,

That though he look'd like one of the seraphim,
There lurk'd a man beneath the spirit's dress.
Beside, the empress sometimes liked a boy,
And had just buried the fair-faced Lanskol.†

XLVIII.

No wonder then that Yermoloff, or Momonoff,
Or Scherbatoff, or any other off
Or on, might dread her majesty had not roots enough
Within her bosom (which was not too tough)
For a new flame; a thought to cast of gloom enough
Along the aspect, whether smooth or rough,
Of him who, in the language of his station,
Then held that "high official situation."

XLIX.

Oh, gentle ladies! should you seek to know
The import of this diplomatic phrase,
Bid Ireland's Londonderry's Marquess † show
His parts of speech; and in the strange displays
Of that odd string of words, all in a row,
Which none divine, and every one obeys,
Perhaps you may pick out some queer no meaning,
Of that weak wordy harvest the sole gleanings.

L.

I think I can explain myself without
That inexplicable beast of prey—
That Sphinx, whose words would ever be a doubt,
Did not his deeds unravel them each day—
That monstrous hieroglyphic—that long spout
Of blood and water, leaden Castlereagh!
And here I must an anecdote relate,
But luckily of no great length or weight.

LI.

An English lady ask'd of an Italian
What were the actual and official duties
Of the strange thing, some women set a value on,
Which hovers off about some married beauties,
Called "Cavalier servente;" a Pygmalion
Whose statues warm (I fear, alas! too true 't is) Beneath his art. The dame, press'd to disclose
them,
Said—"Lady, I beseech you to suppose them."

LII.

And thus I supplicate your supposition,
And mildest, matron-like interpretation,
Of the Imperial favorite's condition.
'T was a high place, the highest in the nation
In fact, if not in rank; and the suspicion
Of any one's attaining to his station,
No doubt gave pain, where each new pair of should-ders,
If rather broad, made stocks rise and their holders.

LIII.

Juan, I said, was a most beautiful boy,
And had retain'd his boyish look beyond
The usual hirsute seasons which destroy,
With beards and whiskers, and the like, the fond Parisian aspect, which upset old Troy
And founded Doctors' Commons:—I have conn'd
The history of divorces, which, though checker'd,
Calls Ilion's the first damages on record.

LIV.

And Catherine, who loved all things (save her lord,
Who was gone to his place), and pass'd for much, whom she loved the most. Lanskol's fortune was estimated at three million rubles. He bequeathed it to the empress, who returned it to the sisters of that favorite, reserving only to herself the right of purchasing the pictures, medals, and library."—FOOTE.

† This was written long before the suicide of that person.

* A yellow-colored crystal, denominated from a hill in Inverness-shire, where it is found.

† He was the grande passion of the grande Catherine. See her Lives under the head of "Lanskol."—"Lanskol was a youth of as fine and interesting a figure as the imagination can paint. Of all Catherine's favorites, he was the man

Admiring those (by dainty dames abhor'd)
Gigantic gentlemen, yet had a touch
Of sentiment; and he she most adored
Was the lamented Lanskoi, who was such
A lover as had cost her many a tear,
And yet but made a middling grenadier.

LV.

Oh, thou "tetrarima cause" of all "belli"—
Thou gate of life and death—thou nondescript!
Whence is our exit and our entrance,—well I
May pause in pondering how all souls are dipt
In thy perennial fountain:—how man fell I Know not, since knowledge saw her branches stript
Of her first fruit; but how he falls and rises
Since, thou hast settled beyond all surmises.

LVI.

Some call thee "the worst cause of war," but I
Maintain thou art the best: for after all,
From thee we come, to thee we go, and why
To get at thee not batter down a wall,
Or waste a world? since no one can deny
Thou dost replenish worlds both great and small:
With, or without thee, all things at a stand
Are, or would be, thou sea of life's dry land!

LVII.

Catherine, who was the grand epitome
Of that great cause of war, or peace, or what
You please (it causes all the things which be,
So you may take your choice of this or that)—
Catherine, I say, was very glad to see
The handsome herald, as whose plumage sat
Victory; and, pausing as she saw him kneel
With his despatch, forgot to break the seal.

LVIII.

Then recollecting the whole empress, nor Forgetting quite the woman (which composed
At least three parts of this great whole), she tore
The letter open with an air which posed
The court, that watch'd each lock her visage wore,
Until a royal smile at length disclosed Fair weather for the day. Though rather spacious,
Her face was noble, her eyes fine, mouth gracious.*

LIX.

Great joy was here, or rather joys: the first
Was a ta'en city, thirty thousand slain.
Glory and triumph o'er her aspect burst,
As an East Indian sunrise on the main.
These quench'd a moment her ambition's thirst—
So Arab deserts drink in summer's rain:
In vain!—As fall the dew on quenchless sands,
Blood only serves to wash Ambition's hands!

LX.

Her next amusement was more fanciful;
She smiled at mad Suvarrow's rhymes, who threw
Into a Russian couplet rather dull
The whole Gazette of thousands whom he slew.
Her third was feminine enough to annul
The shudder which runs naturally through

* "Catherine had been handsome in her youth, and she preserved a gracefulness and majesty to the last period of her life. She was of a moderate stature, but well proportioned; and as she carried her head very high, she appeared rather tall. She had an open front, an aquiline nose, an agreeable mouth, and her chin, though long, was not misshapen. Her hair was auburn, her eyebrows black and rather thick, and her blue eyes had a gentleness which was often affected, but oftener still a mixture of pride. Her physiognomy was not deficient in expression; but this expression never discovered

Our veins, when things call'd sovereigns think it best
To kill, and generals turn it into jest.

LXI.

The two first feelings ran their course complete,
And lighted first her eye, and then her mouth:
The whole court look'd immediately most sweet,
Like flowers well water'd after a long drouth:—
But when on the lieutenant at her feet
Her majesty, who liked to gaze on youth
Almost as much as on a new despatch,
Glanced mildly, all the world was on the watch.

LXII.

Though somewhat large, exuberant, and truculent,
When wroth—while pleased, she was as fine a figure
As those who like things rosy, ripe, and succulent,
Would wish to look on, while they are in vigor.
She could repay each amatory look you lent
With interest, and in turn was wont with rigor
To exact of Cupid's bills the full amount
At sight, nor would permit you to discount.

LXIII.

With her the latter, though at times convenient,
Was not so necessary; for they tell
That she was handsome, and though Mercue look'd lenient,
And always used her favorites too well.
If once beyond her boudoir's precincts in eye went,
Your "fortune" was in a fair way "to swell
A man" (as Giles says); for though she would widen all
Nations, she liked man as an individual.

LXIV.

What a strange thing is man! and what a stranger
Is woman! What a whirlwind is her head,
And what a whirlpool full of depth and danger
Is all the rest about her! Whether wed,
Or widow, maid, or mother, she can change her
Mind like the wind: whatever she has said
Or done, is light to what she'll say or do:—
The oldest thing on record, and yet new!

LXV.

Oh, Catherine! (for of all interjections,
To thee both oh! and ah! belong of right
In love and war) how odd are the connections
Of human thoughts, which jostle in their flight!
Just now yours were cut out in different sections:
First Ismail's capture caught your fancy quite;
Next of new knights, the fresh and glorious batch;
And thirdly he who brought you the despatch!

LXVI.

Shakspeare talks of "the herald Mercury
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill:"
And some such visions cross'd her majesty,
While her young herald knelt before her still.
'T is very true the hill seem'd rather high,
For a lieutenant to climb up; but skill
Smooth'd even the Simpson's steep, and by God's blessing,
With youth and health all knees are "heaven-kissing."

what was passing in the soul of Catherine, or rather it served her the better to disguise it."—TOOKES.

* "Suvarrow is as singular for the brevity of his style as for the rapidity of his conquests. On the taking of Tourtourkaya, in Bulgaria, he actually wrote no more to the emperor than two lines of Russ poetry:—

"Slavo Bogom, Slavo bowam,
Glory to God, glory to you,
Tourtourkaya aviala, is tam,
Tourtourkaya is taken, here am I."—TOOKES.

LXVII.

Her majesty look'd down, the youth look'd up—
And so they fell in love;—she with his face,
His grace, his God-knows-what: for Cupid's cup
With the first draught intoxicates apace,
A quintessential laudanum or "black drop,"
Which makes one drunk at once, without the base
Expend of full bumpers; for the eye
In love drinks all life's fountains (save tears) dry.

LXVIII.

He, on the other hand, if not in love,
Fell into that no less imperious passion,
Self-love—which, when some sort of thing above
Ourselves, a singer, dancer, much in fashion,
Or duchess, princess, empress, "deigns to prove"
(T is Pope's phrase) a great longing, though a rash one,
For one especial person out of many—
Makes us believe ourselves as good as any.

LXIX.

Besides, he was of that delighted age
Which makes all female ages equal—when
We don't much care with whom we may engage,
As bold as Daniel in the lions' den,
So that we can our native sin amuse
In the next ocean, which may flow just then,
To make a twilight in, just as Sol's heat is Quench'd in the lap of the salt sea, or Thetis.

LXX.

And Catherine (we must say thus much for Catherine),
Though bold and bloody, was the kind of thing
Whose temporary passion was quite flattering,
Because each lover look'd a sort of king,
Made up upon an amatory pattern,
A royal husband in all save the ring—
Which, being the damndest part of matrimony,
Seem'd taking out the sting to leave the honey.

LXXI.

And when you add to this, her womanhood
In its meridian, her blue eyes or gray—
(The last, if they have soul, are quite as good,
Or better, as the best examples say:
Napoleon's, Mary's (queen of Scotland), should Lend to that color a transcendent ray;
And Pallas also sanctions the same hue,
Too wise to look through optics black or blue)—

LXXII.

Her sweet smile, and her then majestic figure,
Her plumpness, her imperial condescension,
Her preference of a boy to men much bigger
(Fellows whom Messalina's self would pension),
Her prime of life, just now in juicy vigor,
With other extras, which we need not mention,—
All these, or any one of these, explain
Enough to make a stripling very vain.

LXXIII.

And that's enough, for love is vanity,
Selfish in its beginning as its end,
Except where 't is a mere insanity,
A maddening spirit which would strive to blend
Itself with beauty's frail inanity,
On which the passion's self seems to depend;
And hence some heathenish philosophers
Make love the main-spring of the universe.

LXXIV.

Besides Platonic love, besides the love
Of God, the love of sentiment, the loving

Of faithful pairs—(I needs must rhyme with dove,
That good old steamboat which keeps verses moving
'Gainst reason—Reason ne'er was hand-and-glove
With rhyme, but always leant less to improving
The sound than sense)—besides all these pretences
To love, there are those things which words name senses;

LXXV.

Those movements, those improvements in our bodies
Which make all bodies anxious to get out
Of their own sand-pits, to mix with a goddess,
For such all women are at first no doubt.
How beautiful that moment! and how odd is
That fever which precedes the languid rout
Of our sensations! What a curious way
The whole thing is of clothing souls in clay!

LXXVI.

The noblest kind of love is love Platonical,
To end or to begin with; the next grand
Is that which may be christen'd love canonical,
Because the clergy take the thing in hand;
The third sort to be noted in our chronicle
As flourishing in every Christian land,
Is, when chaste matrons to their other ties
Add what may be call'd marriage in disguise.

LXXVII.

Well, we won't analyze—our story must Tell for itself: the sovereign was unlitte,
Juan much flatter'd by her love, or just;—
I cannot stop to alter words once written,
And the two are so mix'd with human dust,
That he who names one, both perchance may hit
on;
But in such matters Russia's mighty empress
Behaved no better than a common sempstress.

LXXVIII.

The whole court melted into one wide whisper,
And all lips were applied unto all ears!
The elder ladies' wrinkles curl'd much crispier
As they beheld; the younger cast some looks
On one another, and each lovely lipser
Smiled as she talk'd the matter o'er; but tears
Of rivalry rose in each clouded eye
Of all the standing army who stood by.

LXXIX.

All the ambassadors of all the powers
Inquired, Who was this very new young man,
Who promised to be great in some few hours?
Which is full soon (though life is but a span).
Already they beheld the silver showers
Of rubles rain, as fast as specie can,
Upon his cabinet, besides the presents
Of several ribbons, and some thousand peasants.*

LXXX.

Catherine was generous,—all such ladies are:
Love—that great opener of the heart and all
The ways that lead there, be they near or far,
Above, below, by turnpikes great or small,—
Love—(though she had a cursed taste for war,
And was not the best wife, unless we call
Such Clytemnestra, though perhaps 't is better
That one should die, than two drag on the fetter!—

LXXXI.

Love had made Catherine make each lover's fortune,
Unlike our own half-chaste Elizabeth,
Whose avarice all disbursements did importune,
If history, the grand liar, ever saith

* A Russian estate is always valued by the number of the slaves upon it.

The truth; and though grief her old age might aborton,

Because she put a favorite to death,
Her vile, ambiguous method of flirtation,
And stinginess, disgrace her sex and station.

LXXXII.

But when the levée rose, and all was bustle
In the dissolving circle, all the nations'
Ambassadors began as 't were to bustle
Round the young man with their congratulations.
Also the softer silks were heard to rustle
Of gentle dames, among whose recreations
It is to speculate on handsome faces,
Especially when such lead to high places.

LXXXIII.

Juan, who found himself, he knew not how,
A general object of attention, made
His answers with a very graceful bow,
As if born for the ministerial trade.
Though modest, on his unembarrass'd brow
Nature had written "gentleman." He said
Little, but to the purpose; and his manner
Flung hovering graces o'er him like a banner.

LXXXIV.

An order from her majesty consign'd
Our young lieutenant to the genial care
Of those in office: all the world look'd kind
(As it will look sometimes with the first stars,
Which youth would not act ill to keep in mind),
As also did Miss Protasoff then there,
Named from her mystic office "l'Epreuveuse,"
A term inexplicable to the Muse.

LXXXV.

With her then, as in humble duty bound,
Juan retired,—and so will I, until
My Pegasus shall tire of touching ground.
We have just lit on a "heaven-kissing hill,"
So lofty that I feel my brain turn round,
And all my fancies whirling like a mill;
Which is a signal to my nerves and brain,
To take a quiet ride in some green lane.

CANTO THE TENTH.

I.

WHEN Newton saw an apple fall, he found
In that slight startle from his contemplation—
'T is said (for I'll not answer above ground
For any sage's creed or calculation)—
A mode of proving that the earth turn'd round
In a most natural whirl, called "gravitation;"
And this is the sole mortal who could grapple,
Since Adam, with a fall, or with an apple.

II.

Man fell with apples, and with apples rose,
If this be true; for we must deem the mode
In which Sir Isaac Newton could disclose
Through the then unpaved stars the turnpike road,
A thing to counterbalance human woes:
For ever since immortal man hath glow'd
With all kinds of mechanics, and full soon
Steam-engines will conduct him to the moon.

III.

And wherefore this exordium?—Why, just now,
In taking up this paltry sheet of paper,
My bosom underwent a glorious glow,
And my internal spirit cut a caper:
And though so much inferior, as I know,
To those who, by the dint of glass and vapor,
Discover stars, and sail in the wind's eye,
I wish to do as much by poetry.

IV.

In the wind's eye I have sail'd, and sail; but for
The stars, I own my telescope is dim;
But at the least I have shunn'd the common shore,
And leaving land far out of sight, would skim
The ocean of eternity: the roar
Of breakers has not daunted my alight, trim,
But still sea-worthy skiff; and she may float
Where ships have founder'd, as doth many a boat.

V.

We left our hero, Juan, in the bloom
Of favoritism, but not yet in the blush;—
And far be it from my Muses to presume
(For I have more than one Muse at a push)
To follow him beyond the drawing-room:
It is enough that Fortune found him flush
Of youth, and vigor, beauty, and those things
Which for an instant clip enjoyment's wings.

VI.

But soon they grow again and leave their nest.
"Oh!" saith the Psalmist, "that I had a dove's Pinions to flee away, and be at rest!"
And who that recollects young years and loves,—
Though hoary now, and with a withering breast,
And palsied fancy, which no longer roves
Beyond its dimm'd eye's sphere,—but would much rather
Sigh like his son, than cough like his grandfather?

VII.

But sighs subside, and tears (even widows') shrink,
Like Arno in the summer, to a shallow,
So narrow as to shame their wintry brink,
Which threatens inundations deep and yellow!
Such difference doth a few months make. You'd think
Grief a rich field which never would lie fallow;
No more it doth, its ploughs but change their boys,
Who furrow some new soil to sow for joys.

VIII.

But coughs will come when sighs depart—and now
And then before sighs cease; for oft the one
Will bring the other, ere the lake-like brow
Is ruffled by a wrinkle, or the sun
Of life reach'd ten o'clock: and while a glow
Hectic and brief as summer's day nigh dose,
O'er spreads the cheek which seems too pure for clay,
Thousands blaze, love, hope, die,—how happy
they!

IX.

But Juan was not meant to die so soon.
We left him in the focus of such glory
As may be won by favor of the moon,
Or ladies' fancies—rather transitory
Perhaps; but who would scorn the month of June,
Because December, with his breath so hoary, Must come? Much rather should he court the ray,
To hoard up warmth against a wintry day.

X.

Besides, he had some qualities which fix
Middle-aged ladies even more than young:

The former know what 's what; while new-fledged chicks

Know little more of love than what is sung
In rhymes, or dreamt (for fancy will play tricks)
In visions of those skies from whence Love sprung.

Some reckon women by their suns or years,
I rather think the moon should date the years.

XI.

And why? because she's changeable and chaste.

I know no other reason, whatsoever
Suspicious people, who find fault in haste,
May choose to tax me with; which is not fair,
Nor flattering to "their temper or their taste."

As my friend Jeffrey writes with such an air:
However, I forgive him, and I trust
He will forgive himself;—if not, I must.

XII.

Old enemies who have become new friends
Should so continue—"it is a point of honor;
And I know nothing which could make amends
For a return to hatred: I would shun her
Like garlic, howsoever she extends
Her hundred arms and legs, and fain outrun
her.

Old flames, new wives, become our bitterest foes—
Converted foes should scorn to join with those.

XIII.

This were the worst desertion:—renegades,
Even shuffling booties, that incarnate lie,
Would scarcely join again the "reformadoes,"*
Whom he foretook to fill the laureate's sty;
And honest men from Iceland to Barbadoes,
Whether in Caledon or Italy,
Should not veer round with every breath, nor seize
To pain, the moment when you cease to please.

XIV.

The lawyer and the critic but behold
The baser sides of literature and life,
And nought remains unseen, but much untold,
By those who scour those double vales of strife.
While common men grow ignorantly old,
The lawyer's brief is like the surgeon's knife,
Dissecting the whole inside of a question,
And with it all the process of digestion.

XV.

A legal broom 's a moral chimney-sweeper,
And that 's the reason he himself 's so dirty;
The endless soot† bestows a tint far deeper Than can be hid by altering his shirt; he Retains the sable stains of the dark creeper,
At least some twenty-nine do out of thirty,
In all their habits:—not so you, I own;
As Cæsar wore his robe you wear your gown.

XVI.

And all our little feuds, at least all mine,
Dear Jeffrey, once my most redoubted foe
(As far as rhyme and criticism combine
To make such puppets of us things below),
Are over: Here 's a health to "Auld Lang Syne!"
I do not know you, and may never know
Your face—but you have acted on the whole
Most nobly, and I own it from my soul.

* "Reformers," or rather "Reformed." The baron Bradwardine in Waverley is authority for the word.
† Query, suit?—Printer's Devil.
‡ The brig of Don, near the "auld town" of Aberdeen, with its one arch, and its black deep salmon stream below, is in my memory as yesterday. I still remember, though perhaps I may misquote, the awful proverb which made me pause to

XVII.

And when I use the phrase of "Auld Lang Syne!"
'Tis not address'd to you—the more 's the pity
For me, for I would rather take my wine
With you, than aught (save Scott) in your proud city.
But somehow—it may seem a schoolboy's whine,
And yet I seek not to be grand nor witty,
But I am half a Scot by birth, and bred
A whole one, and my heart flies to my head,—

XVIII.

As "Auld Lang Syne" brings Scotland, one and all, Scotch plaids, Scotch snoods, the blue hills, and clear streams,
The Dee, the Don, Balgounie's brig's black wall,†
All my boy feelings, all my gentler dreams
Of what I then dreamt, clothed in their own pall,
Like Banquo's offspring:—floating past me seems
My childhood in this childishness of mine:
I care not—"t is a glimpse of "Auld Lang Syne."

XIX.

And though, as you remember, in a fit
Of wrath and rhyme, when juvenile and curly,
I rail'd at Scots to show my wrath and wit,
Which must be own'd was sensitive and surly,
Yet 't is in vain such sallies to permit,
They cannot quench young feelings fresh and
I "scotch'd not kill'd" the Scotchman in my blood,
And love the land of "mountain and of flood."

XX.

Don Juan, who was real, or ideal,—
For both are much the same, since what men think Exists when the once thinkers are less real
Than what they thought, for mind can never sink,
And 'gainst the body makes a strong appeal;
And yet 't is very puzzling on the brink
Of what is call'd eternity, to stare,
And know no more of what is here, than there;—

XXI.

Don Juan grew a very polish'd Russian—
How we won't mention, why we need not say:
Few youthful minds can stand the strong concussion
Of any slight temptation in their way;
But his just now were spread as is a cushion
Smooth'd for a monarch's seat of honor: gay
Dance, and dances, revels, ready money,
Made ice seem paradise, and winter sunny.

XXII.

The favor of the empress was agreeable;
And though the duty wax'd a little hard,
Young people at his time of life should be able
To come off handsomely in that regard.
He was now growing up like a green tree, able
For love, war, or ambition, which reward
Their luckier votaries, till old age's tedium
Make some prefer the circulating medium.

XXIII.

About this time, as might have been anticipated,
Seduced by youth and dangerous examples,
Don Juan grew, I fear, a little dissipated;
Which is a sad thing, and not only tramples
On our fresh feelings, but—as being participated
With all kinds of incorrigible samples cross it, and yet lean over it with a childish delight, being an only son, at least by the mother's side. The saying as recollected by me was this, but I have never heard or seen it since:

I was nine years of age:—

† Brig of Balgounie, black 's your woe!
Wi' a wife's as soon, and a mear's as Joel,
Down ye shall fa'!"

Of frail humanity—must make us selfish,
And shut our souls up in us like a shell-fish.

XXIV.

This we pass over. We will also pass
The usual progress of intrigues between Unequal matches, such as are, alas!
A young lieutenant's with a not old queen,
But one who is not so youthful as she was
In all the royalty of sweet seventeen.
Sovereigns may sway materials, but not matter,
And wrinkles, the d—d democrats, won't flatter.

XXV.

And Death, the sovereign's sovereign, though the great
Gracchus of all mortality, who levels,
With his Agarrion laws,* the high estates
Of him who feasts, and fights, and roars, and revels,
To one small grass-grown patch (which must await Corruption for its crop) with the poor devils
Who never had a foot of land till now,—
Death's a reformer, all men must allow.

XXVI.

He lived (not Death, but Juan) in a hurry
Of waste, and haste, and glare, and gloss, and glitter.
In this gay clime of bear-skins black and furry—
Which (though I hate to say a thing that's bitter)
Peep out sometimes, when things are in a hurry,
Through all the "purple and fine linen," flitter
For Babylon's than Russia's royal harlot—
And neutralize her outward show of scarlet.

XXVII.

And this same state we won't describe: we would Perhaps from hearsay, or from recollection;
But getting nigh grim Dante's "obscure wood,"
That horrid equinox, that hateful section
Of human years, that half-way house, that rude
Hut, whence wise travellers drive with circumspectious
Life's sad post-horses o'er the dreary frontier
Of age, and looking back to youth, give one tear;—

XXVIII.

I won't describe,—that is, if I can help
Description; and I won't reflect,—that is,
If I can stave off thought, which—as a whelp
Clings to its teat—sticks to me through the abyss
Of this odd labyrinth; or as the kelp
Holds by the rock; or as a lover's kiss
Drains its first draught of lips:—but, as I said,
I won't philosophize, and will be read.

XXIX.

Juan, instead of courting courts, was courted,—
A thing which happens rarely: this he owed
Much to his youth, and much to his reported
Valor; much also to the blood he show'd,
Like a race-horse; much to each dress he sported,
Which set the beauty off in which he glow'd,
As purple clouds fringe the sun; but most
He owed to an old woman and his poet.

XXX.

He wrote to Spain;—and all his near relations,
Perceiving he was in a handsome way

Of getting on himself, and finding stations
For cousins also, answer'd the same day.
Several prepared themselves for emigrations;
And eating ices, were o'erheard to say,
That with the addition of a slight pelisse,
Madrid's and Moscow's climes were of a piece.

XXXI.

His mother, Donna Inez, finding, too,
That in the lieu of drawing on his banker,
Where his assets were waxing rather few,
He had brought his spending to a handsome anchor,—
Replied, "that she was glad to see him through Those pleasures after which wild youth will hanker;
As the sole sign of man's being in his senses
Is, learning to reduce his past expenses.

XXXII.

"She also recommended him to God,
And no less to God's Son, as well as Mother;
Warn'd him against Greek worship, which looks odd
In Catholic eyes; but told him, too, to smother
Outward dialike, which don't look well abroad;
Inform'd him that he had a little brother
Born in a second wedlock; and above
All, praised the empress's maternal love.

XXXIII.

"She could not too much give her approbation
Unto an empress, who prefer'd young men
Whose age, and what was better still, whose nation
And climate, stopp'd all scandal (now and then):—
At home it might have given her some vexation;
But where thermometers sink down to ten,
Or five, or one, or zero, she could never Believe that virtue thaw'd before the river."

XXXIV.

Oh for a forty-person power† to chant
Thy praise, Hypocritay! Oh for a hymn
Loud as the virtues thou dost loudly vaunt,
Not practice! Oh for trumpet of cherubin!
Or the ear-trumpet of my good old aunt,
Who, though her spectacles at last grew dim,
Drew quiet consolation through its hint,
When she no more could read the pious print.

XXXV.

She was no hypocrite at least, poor soul,
But went to heaven in as sincere a way
As anybody on the elected rail,
Which portions out upon the judgment day
Heaven's freeholds, in a sort of doomsday scroll,
Such as the conqueror William did repay
His knights with, lotting others' properties
Into some sixty thousand new knights' fees.

XXXVI.

I can't complain, whose ancestors are there,
Ernels, Radulphus,—eight-and-forty manors
(If that my memory doth not greatly err)
Were their reward for following Billy's banners:
And though I can't help thinking 't was scarce fair
To strip the Saxons of their Hydes,‡ like tanners;
Yet as they founded churches with the produce,
You'll deem, no doubt, they put it to a good use.

* Tiberius Gracchus, being tribune of the people, demanded in their name the execution of the Agarrion law; by which all persons possessing above a certain number of acres were to be deprived of the surplus for the benefit of the poor citizens.

† A metaphor taken from the "forty-horse power" of a steam-engine.

That mad wag, the Reverend Sydney Smith, sitting by a brother clergyman at dinner, observed afterwards that his dull neighbor had a "twice-person power" of conversation.

‡ "Hyde."—I believe a hyde of land to be a legitimate word, and, as such, subject to the tax of a quibble.

XXXVII.

The gentle Juan flourish'd, though at times
He felt like other plants call'd sensitive,
Which shrink from touch, as monarchs do from rhymes,
Save such as Southey can afford to give.
Perhaps he long'd in bitter frosts for climes
In which the Neva's ice would cease to live
Before May-day: perhaps, despite his duty,
In royalty's vast arms he sigh'd for beauty.

XXXVIII.

Perhaps—but, sans perhaps, we need not seek
For causes young or old: the canker-worm
Will feed upon the fairest, freest cheek,
As well as further drain the wither'd form:
Care, like a housekeeper, brings every week
His bills in, and however we may storm,
They must be paid: though six days smoothly
run,
The seventh will bring blue devils or a dun.

XXXIX.

I don't know how it was, but he grew sick:
The empress was alarm'd, and her physician
(The same who physick'd Peter) found the tick
Of his fierce pulse betoken a condition
Which augur'd of the dead, however quick
Itself, and show'd a feverish disposition;
At which the whole court was extremely troubled:
The sovereign shock'd, and all his medicines doubled.

XL.

Low were the whispers, manifold the rumors:
Some said he had been poison'd by Potemkin;
Others talk'd learnedly of certain tumors,
Exhaustion, or disorders of the same kin;
Some said 't was a concoction of the humors,
Which with the blood too readily will claim kin;
Others again were ready to maintain,
" 'T was only the fatigue of last campaign."

XLI.

But here is one prescription out of many:
"Sodæ sulphat. ʒvj. ʒss. Mannæ optim.
Aq. fervent. f. ʒij. ʒij. tinct. Sennæ Haustus" (and here the surgeon came and cupp'd
him)
"R Pulv. Com. gr. iij. Ipecacuanhæ"
(With more beside if Juan had not stopp'd 'em).
"Bolus Potassæ Sulphuret. sumendus, Et haustus ter in die capiendus."

XLII.

This is the way physicians mend or end us,
Secundum artem: but although we sneer
In health—when ill, we call them to attend us,
Without the least propensity to jeer;
While that "hiatus maxime defendus"
To be fill'd up by spade or mattock's near,
Instead of gliding graciously down Lethe,
We tease mild Baillie, or soft Abernethy.*

XLIII.

Juan demurr'd at this first notice to Quit; and though death had threaten'd an ejection,
His youth and constitution bore him through,
And sent the doctors in a new direction.
But still his state was delicate: the hue
Of health but flicker'd with a faint reflection
Along his wasted cheek, and seem'd to gravel
The faculty—who said that he must travel.

* Both Dr. Baillie and John Abernethy, the great surgeon, were remarkable for plainness of speech.

XLIV.

The climate was too cold, they said, for him,
Meridian-born, to bloom in. This opinion
Made the chaste Catherine look a little grim,
Who did not like at first to lose her minion:
But when she saw his dazzling eye wax dim,
And drooping like an eagle's with clipt pinion,
She then resolved to send him on a mission,
But in a style becoming his condition.

XLV.

There was just then a kind of a discussion,
A sort of treaty or negotiation,
Between the British cabinet and Russian,
Maintain'd with all the due prevarication
With which great states such things are apt to push on:
Something about the Baltic's navigation,
Hides, train-oil, tallow, and the rights of Thetis,
Which Britons deem their "uti possidetis."

XLVI.

So Catherine, who had a handsome way
Of sitting out her favorites, conferr'd
This secret charge on Juan, to display
At once her royal splendor, and reward
His services. He kiss'd hands the next day,
Received instructions how to play his card,
Was laden with all kinds of gifts and honors,
Which show'd what great discernment was the donor's.

XLVII.

But she was lucky, and luck's all. Your queens
Are generally prosperous in reigning;
Which puzzles us to know what Fortune means.
But to continue: though her years were waning,
Her climacteric teased her like her teens;
And though her dignity brook'd no complaining,
So much did Juan's setting off distress her,
She could not find at first a fit successor.

XLVIII.

But time, the comforter, will come at last;
And four-and-twenty hours, and twice that number
Of candidates requesting to be placed,
Made Catherine taste next night a quiet slumber:—
Not that she meant to fix again in haste,
Nor did she find the quantity encumber,
But always choosing with deliberation,
Kept the place open for their emulation.

XLIX.

While this high post of honor's in abeyance,
For one or two days, reader, we request
You'll mount with our young hero the conveyance
Which wafted him from Petersburg the best
Barouche, which had the glory to display once
The fair czarina's autocratic crest.
When, a new Iphigene, she went to Tauris,
Was given to her favorite, and now bore his.

L.

A bulldog, and a bullfinch, and an ermine,
All private favorites of Don Juan;—for (Let deeper sages the true cause determine)
He had a kind of inclination, or Weakness, for what most people deem mere vermin.
Live animals: an old maid of threescore
For cats and birds more penchant ne'er display'd,
Although he was not old, nor even a maid;—

LI.

The animals aforesaid occupied
Their station: there were valets, secretaries,

In other vehicles; but at his side
 Sat little Lella, who survived the peries
 He made 'gainst Cossack sabres in the wide Slaughter of Ismail. Though my wild Muse varies
 Her note, she don't forget the infant girl
 Whom he preserved, a pure and living pearl.

LII.

Poor little thing! She was as fair as doctile,
 And with that gentle, serious character,
 As rare in living beings as a fossil Man 'midst thy mouldy mammoths, "grand Cu-vier!"

Ill fitted was her ignorance to jostle
 With this o'erwhelming world, where all must err:
 But she was yet but ten years old, and therefore Was tranquil, though she knew not why or wherefore.

LIII.

Don Juan loved her, and she loved him, as
 Nor brother, father, sister, daughter love.
 I cannot tell exactly what it was;
 He was not yet quite old enough to prove
 Parental feelings, and the other class,
 Call'd brotherly affection, could not move
 His bosom—for he never had a sister:
 Ah! if he had, how much he would have miss'd her!

LIV.

And still less was it sensual: for besides
 That he was not an ancient debauchee
 (Who like sour fruit, to stir their veins' salt tides,
 As acids rouse a dormant alkali),
 Although ('twill happen as our planet guides)
 His youth was not the chastest that might be,
 There was the purest Platonism at bottom
 Of all his feelings—only he forgot 'em.

LV.

Just now there was no peril of temptation;
 He loved the infant orphan he had saved,
 As patriots (now and then) may love a nation;
 His pride, too, felt that she was not enslaved
 Owing to him;—as also her salvation
 Through his means and the church's might be paid.
 But one thing's odd, which here must be inserted,
 The little Turk refused to be converted.

LVI.

'Twas strange enough she should retain the impression
 Through such a scene of change, and dread, and slaughter;
 But though three bishops told her the transgre-
 sion,
 She show'd a great dislike to holy water;
 She also had no passion for confession;
 Perhaps she had nothing to confess;—no matter:
 Whate'er the cause, the church made little of it—
 She still held out that Mahomet was a prophet.

LVII.

In fact, the only Christian she could bear
 Was Juan; whom she seem'd to have selected
 In place of what her home and friends once were.
 He naturally loved what he protected:

And thus they form'd a rather curious pair,
 A guardian green in years, a ward connected
 In neither clime, time, blood, with her defender;
 And yet this want of ties made theirs more tender.

LVIII.

They journey'd on through Po and and through Warsaw,
 Famous for mines of salt and yokes of iron:
 Through Courland also, which that famous farce
 saw,
 Which gave her dukes the graceless name of
 "Biron."⁴
 'Tis the same landscape which the modern Mar-
 saw,
 Who march'd to Moscow, led by Fame, the siren!
 To lose by one month's frost some twenty years
 Of conquest, and his guard of grenadiers.

LIX.

Let this not seem an anti-climax:—"Oh!
 My guard! my old guard!"⁵ exclaim'd that god of clay.
 Think of the Thunderer's falling down below
 Carotid-artery-cutting Castlereagh!
 Alas! that glory should be chill'd by snow!
 But should we wish to warm us on our way
 Through Poland, there is Kosciuszko's name
 Might scatter fire through ice, like Hecla's flame.

LX.

From Poland they came on through Prussia Proper,
 And Königsberg, the capital, whose vaunt,
 Besides some ruins of iron, lead, or copper,
 Has lately been the great Professor Kant;⁶
 Juan, who cared not a tobacco-stopper
 About philosophy, pursued his jaunt
 To Germany, whose somewhat tardy millions
 Have princes who spur more than their postillions.

LXI.

And thence through Berlin, Dresden, and the like,
 Until he reach'd the castellated Rhine:—
 Ye glorious Gothic scenes! how much ye strike
 All fantasies, not even excepting mine!
 A gray wall, a green ruin, rusty pike,
 Make my soul pass the equinoctial line
 Between the present and past worlds, and hover
 Upon their airy confines, half-sees over.

LXII.

But Juan posted on through Mannheim, Bonn,
 Which Drachenfels frowns over like a spectre
 Of the good feudal times for ever gone,
 On which I have not time just now to lecture.
 From thence he was drawn onwards to Cologne,
 A city which presents to the inspector
 Eleven thousand maidenheads of bone,
 The greatest number flesh hath ever known.⁷

LXIII.

From thence to Holland's Hague and Helvoetsluys,
 That water-land of Dutchmen and of ditches,
 Where juniper expresses its best juice,
 The poor man's sparkling substitute for riches.
 Senates and sages have condemn'd its use—
 But to deny the mob a cordial, which is Too often all the clothing, meat, or fuel,
 Good government has left them, seems but cruel.

* In the empress Anne's time, Biron, her favorite, assumed the name and arms of the "Birones" of France; which families are yet extant with that of England. There are still the daughters of Courland of that name; one of them I remember seeing in England in the blessed year of the Alliance (1814)—the Duchess of S.—to whom the English Duchess of Somerset presented me as a namesake.

⁴ Napoleon's exclamation at the Elvée Bourbon, June the 26th, 1815.

⁵ Immanuel Kant, the celebrated founder of a new philosophical sect, was born at Königsberg. He died in 1804.

⁶ Saint Ursula and her eleven thousand virgins were still extant in 1814, and may be so yet, as much as ever.

LXIV.

Here he embark'd, and with a flowing sail
Went bounding for the island of the free,
Towards which the impatient wind blew half a gale;
High dash'd the spray, the bows dipp'd in the sea,
And sea-sick passengers turn'd somewhat pale;
But Juan, season'd, as he well might be,
By former voyages, stood to watch the skiffs
Which pass'd, or catch the first glimpse of the cliffs.

LXV.

At length they rose, like a white wall along
The blue sea's border; and Don Juan felt—
What even young strangers feel a little strong
At the first sight of Albion's chalky belt—
A kind of pride that he should be among Those haughty shopkeepers, who sternly dealt
Their goods and edicts out from pole to pole,
And made the very billows pay them toll.

LXVI.

I've no great cause to love that spot of earth,
Which holds what might have been the noblest
nation;
But though I owe it little but my birth,
I feel a mix'd regret and veneration
For its decaying fame and former worth.
Seven years (the usual term of transportation)
Of absence lay one's old resentments level,
When a man's country's going to the devil.

LXVII.

Alas! could she but fully, truly, know
How her great name is now throughout abhorr'd;
How eager all the earth is for the blow
Which shall lay bare her bosom to the sword;
How all the nations deem her their worst foe,
That worse than worst of foes, the once adored
False friend, who held out freedom to mankind,
And now would chain them, to the very mind;—

LXVIII.

Would she be proud, or boast herself the free,
Who is but first of slaves? The nations are
In prison,—but the jailer, what is he?
No less a victim to the bolt and bar.
Is the poor privilege to turn the key
Upon the captive, freedom? He's as far
From the enjoyment of the earth and air
Who watches o'er the chain, as they who wear.

LXIX.

Don Juan now saw Albion's earliest beauties,
Thy cliffs, dear Dover! harbor, and hotel;
Thy custom-house, with all its delicate duties;
Thy waiters running mucks at every bell;
Thy packets, all whose passengers are booties
To those who upon land or water dwell;
And last, not least, to strangers uninstructed,
Thy long, long bills, whence nothing is deducted.

LXX.

Juan, though careless, young, and magnifque,
And rich in rubies, diamonds, cash, and credit,
Who did not limit much his bills per week,
Yet stared at this a little, though he paid it,—
(His Maggior Duomo, a smart, subtle Greek,
Before him summ'd the awful scroll and read it):
But doubtless as the air, though seldom sunny,
Is free, the respiration's worth the money.

LXXI.

On with the horses! Off to Canterbury!
Tramp, tramp o'er pebble, and splash, splash
through puddle;
Hurrah! how swiftly speeds the post so merry!
Not like slow Germany, wherein they muddle
Along the road, as if they went to bury
Their fare; and also pause besides, to fuddle,
With "schnapps"—and dogs! whom "Hundsfot," or "Verducker,"
Affect no more than lightning a conductor.

LXXII.

Now there is nothing gives a man such spirits,
Leavening his blood as cayenne doth a curry,
As going at full speed—no matter where its Direction be, so 't is but in a hurry,
And merely for the sake of its own merits;
For the less cause there is for all this hurry,
The greater is the pleasure in arriving
At the great end of travel—which is driving.

LXXIII.

They saw at Canterbury the cathedral;
Black Edward's helm,* and Becket's bloody stone,†
Were pointed out as usual by the bedral,
In the same quaint, uninterested tone:—
There's glory again for you, gentle reader! All
Ends in a rusty casque and dubious bone,
Half solved into these sodas or magnesias,
Which form that bitter draught, the human species.

LXXIV.

The effect on Juan was of course sublime:
He breathed a thousand Cressays, as he saw
That casque, which never stoop'd except to Time.
Even the bold Churchman's tomb excited awe,
Who died in the then great attempt to climb
O'er kings, who now at least must talk of law
Before they butcher. Little Lella gazed,
And asked why such a structure had been raised:

LXXV.

And being told it was "God's house," she said
He was well lodged, but only wonder'd how
He suffer'd infidels in his homestead,
The cruel Nazarenes, who had laid low
His holy temples in the lands which bred
The True Believers;—and her infant brow
Was bent with grief that Mahomet should resign
A mosque so noble, flung like pearls to swine.

LXXVI.

On! on! through meadows, managed like a garden,
A paradise of hope and high production;
For, after years of travel by a bard in Countries of greater heat, but lesser suction,
A green field is a sight which makes him pardon
The absence of that more sublime construction,
Which mixes up vines, olives, precipices,
Glaciers, volcanoes, oranges, and ices.

LXXVII.

And when I think upon a pot of beer—
But I won't weep!—and so drive on, postillions!
As the smart boys spur'd fast in their career,
Juan admired these highways of free millions;
A country in all senses the most dear
To foreigner or native, save some silly ones,
Who "kick against the pricks" just at this juncture,
And for their pains get only a fresh puncture.

* On the tomb of the prince lies a whole-length brass figure of him, his armor with a hood of mail, and a skull-cap enriched with a coronet, which had been once studded with jewels, but only the collars now remain.

† Becket was assassinated in the cathedral, in 1171.

LXXXVIII.

What a delightful thing 's a turnpike road !
So smooth, so level, such a mode of shaving
The earth, as scarce the eagle in the broad
Air can accomplish, with his wide wings waving.
Had such been cut in Phaeton's time, the god
Had told his son to satisfy his craving
With the York mail :—but onward as we roll,
"Surgit amari aliquid"—the toll !

LXXXIX.

Alas ! how deeply painful is all payment !
Take lives, take wives, take aught except men's purses.

As Machiavel shows those in purple raiment,
Such is the shortest way to general curses.
They hate a murderer much less than a claimant
On that sweet ore which everybody nurses.—
Kill a man's family, and he may brook it,
But keep your hands out of his breeches' pocket :

LXXX.

So said the Florentine : ye monarchs, hearken
To your instructor. Juan now was borne,
Just as the day began to wane and darken,
O'er the high hill, which looks with pride or scorn
Toward the great city.—Ye who have a spark in Your veins of Cockney spirit, smile or mourn
According as you take things well or ill :—
Bold Britons, we are now on Shooter's Hill !

LXXXI.

The sun went down, the smoke rose up, as from
A half-unquench'd volcano, o'er a space
Which well besem'd the "devil's drawing-room."
As some have qualified that wondrous place :
But Juan felt, though not approaching home,
As one who, though he were not of the race,
Revered the soil, of those true sons the mother,
Who butcher'd half the earth, and bullied t' other.*

LXXXII.

A mighty mass of brick, and smoke, and shipping,
Dirty and dusky, but as wide as ey
Could reach, with here and there a sail just skipping
In sight, then lost amidst the forestry
Of masts ; a wilderness of steeples peeping
On tip-toe through their sea-coal canopy ;
A huge, dun cupola, like a foolscap crown
On a fool's head—and there is London Town !

LXXXIII.

But Juan saw not this : each wreath of smoke
Appear'd to him but as the magic vapor
Of some alchemic furnace, from whence broke
The wealth of worlds (a wealth of tax and paper) ;
The gloomy clouds, which o'er it as a yoke
Are bow'd, and put the sun out like a taper,
Were nothing but the natural atmosphere,
Extremely wholesome, though but rarely clear.

LXXXIV.

He paused—and so will I ; as doth a crew
Before they give their broadside. By and by,
My gentle countrymen, we will renew
Our old acquaintance ; and at least I 'll try
To tell you truths you will not take as true,
Because they are so :—a male Mrs. Fry,†

* India ; America.

† The Quaker lady, whose benevolent exertions have effected so great a change in the condition of the female prisoners in Newgate.

‡ This worthy alderman died in 1880.

§ "Oh for a blast of that dread born.

On Fontarbanian echoes borne,

That to King Charles did come,

With a soft besom will I sweep your halls,
And brush a web or two from off the walls.

LXXXV.

Oh, Mrs. Fry ! Why go to Newgate ? Why
Preach to poor rogues ? And wherefore not beg
With Cariton, or with other houses ? Try
Your hand at harden'd and imperial sin.
To mend the people's an absurdity,
A jargon, a mere philanthropic din,
Unless you make their betters better :—Fry !
I thought you had more religion, Mrs. Fry.

LXXXVI.

Teach them the decencies of good threescore ;
Cure them of tours, humors and highland dresses ;
Tell them that youth once gone returns no more,
That hired huzzas redeem no land's distresses ;
Tell them Sir William Curtis ‡ is a bore,
Too dull even for the dullest of excoresses,
The witless Falstaff of a hoary Hal,
A fool whose bells have ceased to ring at all.

LXXXVII.

Tell them, though it may be perhaps too late
On life's worn confine, jaded, bloated, sated,
To set up vain pretence of being great,
'Tis not so to be good ; and be it stated,
The worstest kings have ever loved least state :
And tell them—But you won't, and I have praised
Just now enough ; but by and by I 'll prattle
Like Roland's horn † in Roncesvalles' battle.

CANTO THE ELEVENTH.

I.

When Bishop Berkeley said "there was no matter,"
And proved it—it was no matter what he said :
They say his system 't is in vain to batter,
Too subtle for the ariest human head ;
And yet who can believe it ? I would shatter
Gladly all matters down to stone or lead,
Or adamant, to find the world a spirit,
And wear my head, denying that I wear it.

II.

What a sublime discovery 't was to make the Universe universal egotism,
That all 's ideal—all ourselves !—I 'll stake the World (be it what you will) that that 's no achism.
Oh, Doubt !—if thou be'st Doubt, for which some take thee,
But which I doubt extremely—thou sole prism
Of the Truth's rays, spoil not my draught of spirit :
Heaven's brandy, though our brain can hardly bear
it.

III.

For ever and anon comes Indigestion
(Not the moist "dainty Ariel"), and perplexes
Our soarings with another sort of question :
And that which after all my spirit vexes,

When Rowland brava, and Olivier,

And every painskin and peer,

On Roncesvalles died."—Marmion.

† "The celebrated and ingenious Bishop of Choyne, in his 'Principles of Human Knowledge,' denies, without any ceremony, the existence of every kind of matter whatever, so does he think this conclusion one that need, in any degree, stagger the incredulous."

Is, that I find no spot where man can rest eye on,
Without confusion of the sorts and sexes,
Of beings, stars, and this unriddled wonder,
The world, which at the worst 's a glorious blunder—

IV.

If it be chance; or if it be according
To the old text, still better:—lest it should Turn out so, we 'll say nothing 'gainst the wording,
As several people think such hazards rude.
They 're right; our days are too brief for affording Space to dispute what no one ever could Decide, and everybody one day will Know very clearly—or at least lie still.

V.

And therefore will I leave off metaphysical
Discussion, which is neither here nor there:
If I agree that what is, is; then this I call
Being quite perspicuous and extremely fair;
The truth is, I've grown lately rather phthisical:
I don't know what the reason is—the air
Perhaps; but as I suffer from the shocks
Of illness, I grow much more orthodox.

VI.

The first attack at once proved the Divinity
(But that I never doubted, nor the Devil);
The next, the Virgin's mystical virginity;
The third, the usual Origin of Evil;
The fourth at once establish'd the whole Trinity
On so uncontroversial a level,
That I devoutly wish'd the three were four
On purpose to believe so much the more.

VII.

To our theme.—The man who has stood on the Acropolis,
And look'd down over Attica; or he
Who has sail'd where picturesque Constantinople
is,
Or seen Timbuctoo, or hath taken tea
In small-eyed China's crockery-ware metropolis,
Or sat amidst the bricks of Nineveh,
May not think much of London's first appearance—
But ask him what he thinks of it a year hence?

VIII.

Don Juan had got out on Shooter's Hill;
Sunset the time, the place the same declivity
Which looks along that vale of good and ill
Where London streets ferment in full activity,
While everything around was calm and still,
Except the creak of wheels, which on their pivot
be
Heard,—and that bee-like, bubbling, busy hum
Of cities, that boil over with their soun:—

IX.

I say, Don Juan, wrapt in contemplation,
Walk'd on behind his carriage, o'er the summit,
And lost in wonder of so great a nation,
Gave way to it, since he could not overcome it.
"And here," he cried, "is Freedom's chosen station;
Here peals the people's voice, nor can entomb it
Racks, prisons, inquisitions; resurrection
Awaits it, each new meeting or election.

X.

"Here are chaste wives, pure lives; here people pay
But what they please; and if that things be dear,

'T is only that they love to throw away
Their cash, to show how much they have a year.
Here laws are all inviolate; none lay
Traps for the traveller; every highway 's clear;
Here"—he was interrupted by a knife,
With "Damn your eyes! your money or your life!"—

XI.

These freeborn sounds proceeded from four pads
In ambush laid, who had perceived him loiter
Behind his carriage; and, like handy lads,
Had seized the lucky hour to reconnoitre,
In which the heedless gentleman who gads
Upon the road, unless he prove a fighter,
May find himself within that tale of riches
Exposed to lose his life as well as breeches.

XII.

Juan, who did not understand a word
Of English, save their shibboleth, "God damn!"
And even that he had so rarely heard,
He sometimes thought 't was only their "Salam,"
Or "God be with you!"—and 't is not absurd
To think so: for half English as I am
(To my misfortune), never can I say
I heard them wish "God with you," save that way;—

XIII.

Juan yet quickly understood their gesture,
And being somewhat choleric and sudden,
Drew forth a pocket pistol from his vesture,
And fired it into one assailant's pudding—
Who fell, as rolls an ox o'er in his pasture,
And roar'd out, as he writhed his native mud in,
Unto his nearest follower or henchman,
"Oh, Jack! I'm floor'd by that 'ere bloody French-
man!"

XIV.

On which Jack and his train set off at speed,
And Juan's suite, late scatter'd at a distance,
Came up, all marvelling at such a deed,
And offering, as usual, late assistance.
Juan, who saw the moon's late minion bleed
As if his veins would pour out his existence,
Stood calling out for bandages and lint,
And wish'd he had been less hasty with his flint.

XV.

"Perhaps," thought he, "it is the country's wont
To welcome foreigners in this way: now
I recollect some innkeepers who don't Differ, except in robbing with a bow,
In lieu of a bare blade and brazen front.
But what is to be done? I can't allow
The fellow to lie groaning on the road:
So take him up; I 'll help you with the load."

XVI.

But ere they could perform this pious duty,
The dying man cried, "Hold! I've got my gruel!
Oh, for a glass of maux!† We've miss'd our booty;
Let me die where I am!" And as the fuel
Of life shrunk in his heart, and thick and sooty
The drops fell from his death-wound, and he drew ill
His breath,—he from his swelling throat untied
A kerchief, crying, "Give Sal that!"—and died.

XVII.

The cravat stain'd with bloody drops fell down
Before Don Juan's feet: he could not tell

* "Folstaf. Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon: and let men say, we be men of good government; being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we-steal."—Henry IV.

† Gin or Hollands.

Exactly why it was before him thrown,
Nor what the meaning of the man's farewell.
Poor Tom was once a kiddy⁸ upon town,
A thorough varmint, and a real swell,
Full flash,[†] all fancy, until fairly diddled,
His pockets first and then his body riddled.

XVIII.

Don Juan, having done the best he could
In all the circumstances of the case,
As soon as "Crown's quest" allow'd, pursued
His travels to the capital apace :—
Esteeming it a little hard he should
In twelve hours' time, and very little space,
Have been obliged to slay a freeborn native
In self-defence : this made him meditative.

XIX.

He from the world had cut off a great man,
Who in his time had made heroic bustle.
Who in a row like Tom could lead the van,
Booze in the ken,[‡] or at the spellken[§] hustle?
Who quess a fat ?^{||} Who (spite of Bow Street's ban)
On the high toby-spice[¶] so flash the muzzle?
Who on alark,^{} with black-eyed Sal (his blowing^{††}),
So prime, so swell,^{‡‡} so nutty,^{§§} and so knowing?

XX.

But Tom's no more—and so no more of Tom.
Heroes must die; and by God's blessing 't is
Not long before the most of them go home.
Hail! Thamis, hail! Upon thy verge it is That Juan's chariot, rolling like a drum
In thunder, holds the way it can't well miss,
Through Kennington and all the other "tons,"
Which make us wish ourselves in town at once :—

XXI.

Through Groves, so call'd as being void of trees (Like lucas from no light); through prospects named
Mount Pleasant, as containing nought to please,
Nor much to climb; through little boxes framed
Of bricks, to let the dust in at your ease,
With "To be let," upon their doors proclaim'd;
Through "Rows" most modestly call'd "Paradise,"
Which Eve might quit without much sacrifice :—

XXII.

Through coaches, drays, choked turnpikes, and a whirl
Of wheels, and roar of voices, and confusion;
Here taverns wooing to a pint of "purl,"^{|||}
There mails fast flying off like a delusion;
There barbers' blocks with periwigs in curl
In windows; here the lamplighter's infusion
Slowly distill'd into the glimmering glass
(For in those days we had not got to gas^{††}) :—

XXIII.

Through this, and much, and more, is the approach
Of travellers to mighty Babylon:
Whether they come by horse, or chaise, or coach,
With slight exceptions, all the ways seem one.
I could say more, but do not choose to encroach
Upon the guide-book's privilege. The sun

Had set some time, and night was on the ridge
Of twilight, as the party cross'd the bridge.

XXIV.

That's rather fine, the gentle sound of Thamis—
Who vindicates a moment, too, his stream—
Though hardly heard through multifarious "damme's."
The lamps of Westminster's more regular gleam,
The breadth of pavement, and yon shrine where fame is
A spectral resident—whose pallid beam
In shape of moonshine hovers o'er the pile—
Make this a sacred part of Aibion's isle.

XXV.

The Druids' groves are gone—so much the better:
Stonehenge is not—but what the devil is it?—
But Bedlam still exists with its sage fetter,
That madmen may not bite you on a visit;
The Bench too seats or suits full many a debtor;
The Mansion House, too (though some people quiz it),
To me appears a stiff yet grand erection;
But then the Abbey's worth the whole collection.

XXVI.

The line of lights, too, up to Charing Cross,
Pall Mall, and so forth, have a coruscation
Like gold as in comparison to dross,
Match'd with the Continent's illumination,
Whose cities Night by no means deigns to gloss.
The French were not yet a lamp-lighting nation,
And when they grew so—on their new-found lastern,
Instead of wicks, they made a wicked man turn.

XXVII.

A row of gentlemen along the streets
Suspended may illuminate mankind—
As also bonfires made of country seats:
But the old way is best for the purblind:
The other looks like phosphorus on shests,
A sort of ignis fatuus to the mind,
Which, though 't is certain to perplex and frighten,
Must burn more mildly ere it can enlighten.

XXVIII.

But London's so well lit, that if Diogenes
Could recommence to hunt his honest man,
And found him not amidst the various progenies
Of this enormous city's spreading span,
'T were not for want of lamps to aid his dodging his Yet undiscover'd treasure. What I can,
I've done to find the same throughout life's journey,
But see the world is only one attorney.

XXIX.

Over the stones still rattling, up Pall Mall,
Through crowds and carriages, but waxing thinner
As thunder'd knockers broke the long-seal'd spell
Of doors 'gainst duns, and to an early dinner
Admitted a small party as night fell :—
Don Juan, our young diplomatic sinner,
Pursued his path, and drove past some hotels,
Saint James's Palace and Saint James's "Hells,"^{}

⁸ "A thief who affects a knowingsness in his air and conversation, which renders him in reality an object of ridicule."— Vaux.

[†] "A fellow who affects any particular habit, as swearing, dressing in a particular manner, taking snuff, etc., merely to be noticed, is said to do it out of flash."—P. EGAN.

[‡] A house that harbors thieves is called a ken.—[§] The playhouse.—^{||} To puzzle or confound a gull, or silly fellow.—
[¶] Robbery on horseback.—^{} Fun or sport of any kind.—^{††} A pickpocket's trull.—^{‡‡} So gentlemanly. See Slang Dictio-

^{§§} "A person who conceives a strong inclination for another of the opposite sex is said to be quite nutty upon him or her."
—Ibid.

^{|||} "A kind of medicated malt liquor, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused."—TODD.

^{††} The streets of London were first regularly lighted with gas in 1812.

^{} "Hells," gaming-houses. What their number may now be in this life, I know not. Before I was of age I knew them pretty accurately, both "gold" and "silver." I was once nearly called out by an acquaintance, because when he asked

XXX.

They reach'd the hotel: forth stream'd from the front door
A tide of well-clad waiters, and around
The mob stood, and as usual several score
Of those pedestrian Paphians who abound
In decent London when the daylight's o'er;
Commodious but immoral, they are found
Useful, like Malthus, in promoting marriage.—
But Juan now is stepping from his carriage

XXXI.

Into one of the sweetest of hotels,
Especially for foreigners—and mostly
For those whom favor or whom fortune swells,
And cannot find a bill's small items costly.
There many an envoy either dwelt or dwells
(The den of many a diplomatic lost lie),
Until to some conspicuous square they pass,
And blazon o'er the door their names in brass.

XXXII.

Juan, whose was a delicate commission,
Private, though publicly important, bore
No title to point out with due precision
The exact affair on which he was sent o'er.
'T was merely known, that on a secret mission
A foreigner of rank had graced our shore,
Young, handsome, and accomplished, who was said
(In whispers) to have turn'd his sovereign's head.

XXXIII.

Some rumor also of some strange adventures
Had gone before him, and his wars and loves;
And as romantic heads are pretty painters,
And, above all, an Englishwoman's roves
Into the excursion, breaking the indentures
Of sober reason, whences'er it moves,
He found himself extremely in the fashion,
Which serves our thinking people for a passion.

XXXIV.

I don't mean that they are passionless, but quite
The contrary; but then 't is in the head;
Yet as the consequences are as bright
As if they acted with the heart instead,
What after all can signify the site
Of ladies' incubrations? So they lead
In safety to the place for which you start,
What matters if the road be head or heart?

XXXV.

Juan presented in the proper place,
To proper placemen, every Russa credential;
And was received with all the due grimace
By those who govern in the mood potential,
Who, seeing a handsome stripling with smooth face,
Thought (what in state affairs is most essential)
That they as easily might do the youngster
As hawks may pounce upon a woodland songster.

XXXVI.

They err'd, as aged men will do; but by
And by we'll talk of that; and if we don't,
'T will be because our notion is not high
Of politicians and their double front.
Who live by lies, yet dare not boldly lie:—
Now what I love in women is, they won't
Or can't do otherwise than lie, but do it
So well, the very truth seems falsehood to it.

me where I thought that his soul would be found hereafter,
I answered, "In Silver Hell."
* See the Irish Avatar, ante, p. 468.

† "Anent" was a Scotch phrase meaning "concerning"—

XXXVII.

And, after all, what is a lie? 'T is but
The truth in masquerade; and I defy Historians, heroes, lawyers, priests, to put
A fact without some leaven of a lie.
The very shadow of true Truth would shut
Up annals, revelations, poesy,
And prophecy—except it should be dated
Some years before the incidents related.

XXXVIII.

Praised be all liars and all lies! Who now
Can tax my mild Muse with misanthropy?
She rings the world's "Te Deum," and her brow
Blushes for those who will not:—but to sigh
Is idle; let us like most others bow,
Kiss hands, feet, any part of majesty,
After the good example of "Green Erin,"
Whose shamrock now seems rather worse for wearing.

XXXIX.

Don Juan was presented, and his dress
And mien excited general admiration—
I don't know which was more admired or less:
One monstrous diamond drew much observation,
Which Catherine in a moment of "ivresse"
(In love or brandy's fervent fermentation)
Bestow'd upon him, as the public learn'd;
And, to say truth, it had been fairly earn'd.

XL.

Besides the ministers and underlings,
Who must be courteous to the accredited
Diplomatists of rather wavering kings,
Until their royal riddle's fully read,
The very clerks,—those somewhat dirty springs
Of office, or the house of office, fed
By foul corruption into streams,—even they Were hardly rude enough to earn their pay:

XLI.

And insolence no doubt is what they are
Employ'd for, since it is their daily labor,
In the dear offices of peace or war;
And should you doubt, pray ask of your next neighbor,
When for a passport, or some other bar
To freedom, he applied (a grief and a bore),
If he found not this spawn of taxborn riches,
Like lap-dogs, the least civil sons of b—s.

XLII.

But Juan was received with much "empress-
ment":—
These phrases of refinement I must borrow
From our next neighbors' land, where, like a chess-
man,
There is a move set down for joy or sorrow,
Not only in mere talking, but the press. Man
In islands, it seems, downright and thorough,
More than on continents—as if the sea
(See Billingsgate) made even the tongue more free.

XLIII.

And yet the British "Damme" 's rather Attie,
Your continental oaths are but incontinent,
And turn on things which no aristocratic Spirit would name, and therefore even I won't anent†
This subject quote; as it would be schismatic
In politesse, and have a sound affronting in 't:—

"with regard to:" It has been made English by the Scotch novels; and, as the Frenchman said, "If it be not, ought to be English."

But "Damme" 's quite ethereal, though too daring—
Platonic blasphemy, the soul of swearing.

XLIV.

For downright rudeness, ye may stay at home;
For true or false politeness (and scarce that
Now) you may cross the blue deep and white foam—
The first the emblem (rarely though) of what
You leave behind, the next of much you come
To meet. However, 't is no time to chat
On general topics: poems must confine Themselves to unity, like this of mine.

XLV.

In the great world,—which, being interpreted,
Meaneth the west or worst end of a city,
And about twice two thousand people bred
By no means to be very wise or witty,
But to sit up while others lie in bed,
And look down on the universe with pity,—
Juan, as an inveterate patrician,
Was well received by persons of condition.

XLVI.

He was a bachelor, which is a matter
Of import both to virgin and to bride,
The former's hymeneal hopes to flatter;
And (should she not hold fast by love or pride)
'T is also of some moment to the latter:
A rib 's a thorn in a wed gallant's side,
Requires decorum, and is apt to double
The horrid sin—and what's still worse, the trouble.

XLVII.

But Juan was a bachelor—of arts,
And parts, and hearts: he danced and sung, and had
An air as sentimental as Mozart's
Softest of melodies; and could be sad
Or cheerful, without any "daws or starts,"
Just at the proper time: and though a lad,
Had seen the world—which is a curious sight,
And very much unlike what people write.

XLVIII.

Fair virgins blush'd upon him; wedded dames
Bloom'd also in less transitory hues;
For both commodities dwell by the Thames,
The painting and the painted; youth, ceruse,
Against his heart prefer'd their usual claims,
Such as no gentleman can quite refuse:
Daughters admired his dress, and pious mothers
Inquired his income, and if he had brothers.

XLIX.

The milliners who furnish "drapery Misses" *
Throughout the season, upon speculation
Of payment are the honeymoon's last kisses
Have waned into a crescent's consecration,
Thought such an opportunity as this is,
Of a rich foreigner's initiation,
Not to be overlook'd—and gave such credit,
That future bridegrooms swore, and sigh'd, and paid it.

L.

The Blues, that tender tribe, who sigh o'er sonnets,
And with the pages of the last Review

Line the interior of their heads or bonnets,
Advanced in all their azure's highest hue:
They talk'd bad French or Spanish, and upon its Late authors ask'd him for a hint or two;
And which was softest, Russian or Castilian?
And whether in his travels he saw Ilion?

LI.

Juan, who was a little superficial,
And not in literature a great Drawcansir,
Examined by this learned and especial
Jury of matrons, scarce knew what to answer:
His duties warlike, loving, or official,
His steady application as a dancer,
Had kept him from the brink of Hippocrene,
Which now he found was blue instead of green.

LII.

However, he replied at hazard, with
A modest confidence and calm assurance,
Which lent his learned lucubrations pith,
And pass'd for arguments of good endurance.
That prodigy, Miss Araminta Smith
(Who at sixteen translated "Hercules Furens"
Into as furious English), with her best look,
Set down his sayings in her commonplace book.

LIII.

Juan knew several languages—as well
He might—and brought them up with skill, in time
To save his fame with each accomplish'd belle,
Who still regretted that he did not rhyme.
There wanted but this requisite to swell
His qualifications (with them) into sublime:
Lady Fitz-Frisky, and Miss Mervia Mannish,
Both long'd extremely to be sung in Spanish.

LIV.

However, he did pretty well, and was Admitted as an aspirant to all
The coteries, and, as in Banquo's glass,
At great assemblies or in parties small,
He saw ten thousand living authors pass,
That being about their average numeral;
Also the eighty "greatest living poets,"
As every paltry magazine can show etc.

LV.

In twice five years the "greatest living poet,"
Like to the champion in the fusty ring,
Is call'd on to support his claim, or show it,
Although 't is an imaginary thing.
Even I,—albeit I'm sure I did not know it,
Nor sought of foolscap subjects to be king,—
Was reckon'd, a considerable time,
The grand Napoleon of the realms of rhyme.

LVI.

But Juan was my Moscow, and Fallero
My Leipzig, and my Mont Saint Jean seems Cain:
"La Belle Alliance" of dunces down at zero,
Now that the Lion 's fall'n, may rise again:
But I will fall at least as fall my hero;
Nor reign at all, or as a monarch reign;
Or to some lonely lale of jallero go,
With turncock Southey for my turnkey Lowe.

* "Drapery Misses."—This term is probably anything now but a mystery. It was, however, almost so to me when I first returned from the West in 1811-1812. It means a pretty, a high-born, a fashionable young female, well instructed by her friends, and furnished by her milliner with a wardrobe upon credit, to be repaid, when married, by the husband. The riddle was first read to me by a young and pretty hetman, on my praising the "drapery" of the "unlochered" but "pretty virginities" (like Mrs. Anne Page) of the then day.

which has now been some years yesterday; she assured me that the thing was common in London; and as her own thousands, and blooming looks, and rich simplicity of array, put any suspicion in her own case out of the question, I confess I gave some credit to the allegation. If necessary, authorities might be cited; in which case I could quote the "drapery" and the wares. Let us hope, however, that it is now obsolete.

LVII.

Sir Walter reign'd before me; Moore and Campbell
Before and after; but now grown more holy,
The Muses upon Sion's hill must ramble
With poets almost clergymen, or wholly;
And Pegasus has a psalmic ambler
Beneath the very Reverend Rowley Powley,
Who shoes the glorious animal with stilts,
A modern Ancient Pistol—by the hilts!

LVIII.

Still he croaks that artificial bard
Laborer in the same vineyard, though the vine
Yields him but vinegar for his reward,—
That neutralised dull Doros of the Nine;
That swarthy Sporus, neither man nor bard;
That ox of verse, who ploughs for every line:—
Cambyses' roaring Romans beat at least
The howling Hebrews of Cybele's priest.—

LIX.

Then there's my gentle Euphues; who, they say,
Sets up for being a sort of moral me;²
He'll find it rather difficult some day
To turn out both, or either, it may be.
Some persons think that Coleridge hath the sway;
And Wordsworth has supporters, two or three;
And that deep-mouth'd Eccelesian "Savage Landor"
Has taken for a swan rogue Southey's gander.

LX.

John Keats, who was kill'd off by one critique,
Just as he really proposed something great,
If not intelligible, without Greek
Contrived to talk about the gods of late,
Much as they might have been supposed to speak.†
Poor fellow! His was an untoward fate;
'T is strange the mind, that very dery particle,
Should let itself be smuff'd out by an article.

LXI.

The list grows long of live and dead pretenders
To that which none will gain—or none will know
The conqueror at least; who, ere Time renders
His last award, will have the long grass grow
Above his burnt-out brain, and sapless cinders.
If I might augur, I should rate but low
Their chances;—they're too numerous, like the thirty
Mock tyrants, when Rome's annals wax'd but dirty.

LXII.

This is the literary lower empire,
Where the prætorian bands take up the matter;—
A "dreadful trade," like his who "gathers samphire,"
The insolent soldiery to soothe and flatter,
With the same feelings as you'd coax a vampire.
Now, were I once at home, and in good satire,
I'd try conclusions with those Janizaries,
And show them what an intellectual war is.

LXIII.

I think I know a trick or two, would turn
Their flanks;—but it is hardly worth my while,
With such small gear to give myself concern:
Indeed I've not the necessary bile;
My natural temper's really ought but stern,
And even my Muse's worst reproof's a smile;
And then she drops a brief and modern curtsy,
And glides away, assured she never hurts ye.

LXIV.

My Juan, whom I left in deadly peril
Amongst live poets and blue ladies, pass'd
With some small profit through that field so sterile.
Being tired in time, and neither least nor last,
Left it before he had been treated very ill;
And henceforth found himself more gayly class'd
Amongst the higher spirits of the day,
The sun's true son, no vapor, but a ray.

LXV.

His morns he pass'd in business—which dissected,
Was like all business, a laborious nothing
That leads to lassitude, the most infected
And Centaur Nessus garb of mortal clothing,
And on our sofas makes us lie dejected,
And talk in tender horrors of our loathing
All kinds of toil, save for our country's good—
Which grows no better, though 't is time it should.

LXVI.

His afternoons he pass'd in visits, luncheons,
Lounging, and boxing; and the twilight hour
In riding round those vegetable puncheons Call'd "Parks," where there is neither fruit nor flower
Enough to gratify a bee's slight munchings;
But after all it is the only "bower"
(In Moore's phrase) where the fashionable fair
Can form a slight acquaintance with fresh air.

LXVII.

Then dress, then dinner, then awakes the world!
Then glare the lamps, then whirl the wheels, then roar
Through street and square fast flashing chariots huri'd
Like harness'd meteors; then along the floor
Chalk mimics painting; then festoons are twirl'd;
Then roll the brazen thunders of the door,
Which opens to the thousand happy few
An earthly Paradise of "Or Mola."

LXVIII.

There stands the noble hostess, nor shall sink
With the three-thousandth curtsy; there she waits,
The only dance which teaches girls to think.‡
Makes one in love even with its very faults.
Saloon, room, hall, o'erflow beyond their brink,
And long the latest of arrivals hatta,
'Midst royal dukes and dames condemn'd to climb,
And gain an inch of staircase at a time.

LXIX.

Thrice happy he who, after a survey
Of the good company, can win a corner,
A door that's in or boudoir out of the way,
Where he may fix himself like small "Jack Horner,"
And let the Babel round run as it may,
And look on as a mourner, or a scorner,
Or an approver, or a mere spectator,
Yawning a little as the night grows later.

LXX.

But this won't do, save by and by; and he
Who, like Don Juan, takes an active share,
Must steer with care through all that glittering sea
Of gems and plumes and pearls and silks, to
where

* Some Reviewer had bestowed the title of "a Moral Byron" on Mr. Bryan Procter, author of "Dramatic Sketches," etc., etc., all published under the name of "Barry Cornwall."
† The Biographical Dictionary says—"Being in delicate health, he was induced to try the climate of Italy, where he arrived in November, 1830, and died in the following December. His death has been attributed to the attacks of critics; but it was, in fact, owing to a consumptive complaint of long standing." Compare, however, ante, p. 438.

‡ See ante, p. 305.

He deems it is his proper place to be;
Dissolving in the waltz to some soft air.
Or prouder prancing with mercurial skill,
Where Science marshals forth her own quadrille.

LXXI.

Or, if he dance not, but hath higher views
Upon an heiress or his neighbor's bride,
Let him take care that that which he pursues
Is not at once too palpably deserted.
Full many an eager gentleman oft rues
His haste; impatience is a blundering guide,
Amongst a people famous for reflection,
Who like to play the fool with circumspection.

LXXII.

But, if you can contrive, get next at supper;
Or, if forestall'd, get opposite and ogle:—
Oh, ye ambrosial moments! always upper
In mind, a sort of sentimental bogle,*
Which sits for ever upon memory's crupper,
The ghost of vanish'd pleasures once in vogue!

III
Can tender souls relate the rise and fall
Of hopes and fears which shake a single ball.

LXXIII.

But these precautionary hints can touch
Only the common run, who must pursue,
And watch, and ward; whose plans a word too
much
Or little overturns; and not the few
Or many (for the number's sometimes such)
Whom a good mien, especially if new,
Or fame, or name, for wit, war, sense, or nonsense,
Permits whate'er they please, or did not long since.

LXXIV.

Our hero, as a hero, young and handsome,
Noble, rich, celebrated, and a stranger,
Like other slaves of course must pay his ransom,
Before he can escape from so much danger
As will environ a conspicuous man. Some Talk about poetry, and "rack and manger,"
And ugliness, disease, as toil and trouble;—
I wish they knew the life of a young noble.

LXXV.

They are young, but know not youth—it is anticipated;
Handsome but wasted, rich without a sou;
Their vigor in a thousand arms is dissipated;
Their cash comes from, their wealth goes to, a Jew;
Both senates see their nightly votes participated
Between the tyrant's and the tribunes' crew;
And having voted, dined, drank, gam'd, and whored,
The family vault receives another lord.

LXXVI.

"Where is the world?" cries Young, at eighty—
"Where
The world in which a man was born?" Alas!
Where is the world of eighty years past? 'Twas
there—
I look for it—it is gone, a globe of glass!
Crack'd, shiver'd, vanish'd, scarcely gazed on, ere
A silent change dissolves the glittering mass.
Statesmen, chiefs, orators, queens, patriots, kings,
And dandies, all are gone on the wind's wings.

LXXVII.

Where is Napoleon the grand? God knows:
Where little Castlereagh? The devil can tell:

Where Grattan, Curran, Sheridan, all those Who bound the bar or senate in their spell?
Where is the unhappy Queen, with all her woes?
And where the Daughter, whom the Isles loved
well?
Where are those martyr'd saints the Five per Cent?
And where—oh, where the devil are the Rents?

LXXVIII.

Where's Brummell? Diah'd. Where's Long Pole
Wellesley? Diddled.
Where's Whitbread? Bonnilly? Where's George
the Third?
Where is his will? (That's not so soon unriddled.) And where is "Fam" the Fourth, our "royal bird"?
Gone down, it seems, to Scotland, to be fiddled
Unto by Sawney's violin, we have heard:
"Caw me, caw thee"—for six months hath been hatching
This scene of royal itch and loyal scratching.

LXXIX.

Where is Lord This? And where my Lady That?
The Honorable Mistresses and Misses?
Some laid aside like an old Opera hat,
Married, unmarried, and remarried: (this is An evolution oft performed of late).
Where are the Dublin abouts—and London hives?
Where are the Grenvilles? Turn'd as usual. Where My friends the Whigs? Exactly where they were.

LXXX.

Where are the Lady Carolines and Franceses?
Divorced or doing thereabout. Ye annals
So brilliant, where the list of routs and dances is,— Thou Morning Post, sole record of the panels
Broken in carriages, and all the fantasies
Of fashion,—say what streams now fill those channels?
Some die, some fly, some languish on the Continent,
Because the times have hardly left them one tenant.

LXXXI.

Some who once set their caps at cautious dukes,
Have taken up at length with younger brothers:
Some heiresses have bit at sharpers' hooks:
Some maids have been made wives, some merely mothers:
Others have lost their fresh and fairy looks:
In short, the list of alterations bothers.
There's little strange in this, but something strange
is
The unusual quickness of these common changes.

LXXXII.

Talk not of seventy years as age; in seven
I have seen more changes, down from monarchs
to
The humblest individual under heaven,
That might suffice a moderate century through.
I knew that nought was lasting, but now even Change grows too changeable, without being new:
Nought's permanent among the human race,
Except the Whigs not getting into place.

LXXXIII.

I have seen Napoleon, who seem'd quite a Jupiter,
Shrink to a Saturn. I have seen a duke
(No matter which) turn politician stupider,
If that can well be, than his wooden look.
But it is time that I should hoist my "blue Peter,"
And sail for a new theme:—I have seen—and shook
To see it—the king his'd, and then carest;
But don't pretend to settle which was best.

* Scotch for goblin.

LXXXIV.

I have seen the Landholders without a rap—
 I have seen Johanna Southcote—I have seen
 The House of Commons turn'd to a tax-trap—
 I have seen that sad affair of the late Queen—
 I have seen crowns worn instead of a fool's cap—
 I have seen a Congress doing all that's mean—
 I have seen some nations, like o'erloaded asses,
 Kick off their burdens—meaning the high classes.

LXXXV.

I have seen small poets, and great prozers, and Interminable—not eternal—speakers—
 I have seen the funds at war with house and land—
 I have seen the country gentlemen turn squeak-
 ers—
 I have seen the people ridden o'er like sand
 By slaves on horseback—I have seen malt liquors
 Exchanged for "thin potations" by John Bull—
 I have seen John half detect himself a fool.—

LXXXVI.

But "carpe diem," Juan, "carpe, carpe!"
 To-morrow sees another race as gay
 And transient, and devour'd by the same harpy.
 "Life's a poor player,"—then "play out the play,
 Ye villains!" and above all keep a sharp eye
 Much less on what you do than what you say:
 Be hypocritical, be cautious, be
 Not what you seem, but always what you see.

LXXXVII.

But how shall I relate in other cantos
 Of what befell our hero in the land,
 Which 't is the common cry and lie to vaunt as
 A moral country? But I hold my hand—
 For I disdain to write an Atalanta;
 But 't is as well at once to understand,
 You are not a moral people, and you know it,
 Without the aid of too sincere a poet.

LXXXVIII.

What Juan saw and underwent shall be
 My topic, with of course the due restriction
 Which is required by proper courtesy;
 And recollect the work is only fiction,
 And that I sing of neither mine nor me,
 Though every scribe, in some alight turn of dic-
 tion,
 Will hint allusions never meant. Ne'er doubt
 This—when I speak, I don't hint, but speak out.

LXXXIX.

Whether he married with the third or fourth
 Offspring of some sage husband-hunting countess,
 Or whether with some virgin of more worth
 (I mean in Fortune's matrimonial bounties)
 He took to regularly peopling earth,
 Of which your lawful, awful wedlock fount is,—
 Or whether he was taken in for damages,
 For being too excursive in his homages,—

XC.

as yet within the unred events of time.
 Thus far, go forth, thou lay, which I will back
 Against the same given quantity of rhyme,
 For being as much the subject of attack

As ever yet was any work sublime,
 By those who love to say that white is black.
 So much the better—I may stand alone,
 But would not change my free thoughts for a throne.

CANTO THE TWELFTH.*

I.

Of all the barbarous middle ages, that
 Which is most barbarous is the middle age
 Of man! It is—I really scarce know what;
 But when we hover between fool and sage,
 And don't know justly what we would be at—
 A period something like a printed page,
 Black letter upon foolscap, while our hair
 Grows grizzled, and we are not what we were;—

II.

Too old for youth,—too young, at thirty-five,
 To herd with boys, or hoard with good three-score,—
 I wonder people should be left alive:
 But since they are, that epoch is a bore:
 Love lingers still, although 't were late to wive:
 And as for other love, the illusion's o'er;
 And money, that most pure imagination,
 Gleans only through the dawn of its creation.†

III.

Oh, Gold! Why call we misers miserable?
 Theirs is the pleasure that can never pall;
 Theirs is the best bower anchor, the chain cable
 Which holds fast other pleasures great and small.
 Ye who but see the saving man at table,
 And scorn his temperate board, as none at all,
 And wonder how the wealthy can be sparing,
 Know not what visions spring from each cheese-paring.

IV.

Love or lust makes man sick, and wine much sicker;
 Ambition rends, and gaming gains a loss;
 But making money, slowly first, then quicker,
 And adding still a little through each cross
 (Which will come over things), beats love or liquor,
 The gamester's counter, or the statesman's dross.
 Oh, Gold! I still prefer thee unto paper,
 Which makes bank credit like a bank of vapor.

V.

Who hold the balance of the world? Who reign
 O'er congress, whether royalist or liberal?
 Who rouse the shirtless patriots of Spain? ‡ (That make old Europe's journals squeak and gibber all.)
 Who keep the world, both old and new, in pain
 Or pleasure? Who make politics run gibber all?
 The shade of Buonaparte's noble daring?—
 Jew Rothschild, and his fellow Christian, Baring.

* Cantos xii., xiii., and xiv. appeared in London, in November, 1833.

† In an unpublished letter to Mr. Douglas Kinnaird, dated hence, January 13, 1833, we find the following passage:—"I will economise and do, as I have partly proved to you by my arduous revenue of 1833, which almost equals the ditto of the United States of America (vide President's Report to Congress); and do you second my parsimony by judicious disbursements of what is requisite, and a moderate liquidation.

Also make an investment of any spare moneys as may render some useance to the owner; because, however little, 'every little makes a mickle,' as we of the north say, with more reason than rhyme. I hope that you have all receipts, etc., etc., etc., and acknowledgments of moneys paid in liquidation of debts, to prevent extortion, and hinder the fellows from coming twice, of which they would be capable, particularly as my absence would lend a pretext to the pretension."

‡ The Desamortisers.

VI.

Those, and the truly liberal Laditie,
Are the true lords of Europe. Every loan
Is not a merely speculative hit;
But seats a nation or upsets a throne.
Republics also get involved a bit;
Columbia's stock hath holders not unknown
On 'Change; and even thy silver soil, Peru,
Must get itself discounted by a Jew.

VII.

Why call the miser miserable? as I said before: the frugal life is his,
Which in a saint or cynic ever was
The theme of praise: a hermit would not miss
Canonization for the self-same cause,
And wherefore blame gaunt wealth's austerities?
Because, you'll say, sought calls for such a trial;—
Then there's more merit in his self-denial.

VIII.

He is your only poet;—passion, pure,
And sparkling on from heap to heap, displays,
Possess'd, the ore, of which mere hopes allure
Nations athwart the deep: the golden rays
Flash up in ingots from the mine obscure:
On him the diamond pours its brilliant blaze,
While the mild emerald's beam shades down the dyes
Of other stones, to soothe the miser's eyes.

IX.

The lands on either side are his; the ship
From Ceylon, Inde, or far Cathay,* unloads
For him the fragrant produce of each trip;
Beneath his cars of Ceres groan the roads,
And the vine blushes like Aurora's lip:
His very cellars might be kings' abodes;
While he, despising every sensual call,
Commands—the intellectual lord of all.

X.

Perhaps he hath great projects in his mind,
To build a college, or to found a race,
A hospital, a church,—and leave behind
Some dome surmounted by his image fane:
Perhaps he fain would liberate mankind
Even with the very ore which makes them base;
Perhaps he would be wealthiest of his nation,
Or revel in the joys of calculation.

XI.

But whether all, or each, or none of these
May be the hoarder's principle of action,
The fool will call such mania a disease:—
What is his own? Go—look at each transaction,
Wars, revels, loves—do these bring men more ease
Than the mere plodding through each "vulgar fraction"?
Or do they benefit mankind? Lean miser!
Let spendthrifts' heirs inquire of yours—who's wiser?

XII.

How beautiful are rouleaus! how charming chests
Containing ingots, bags of dollars, coins
(Not of old victors, all whose heads and crests
Weigh not the thin ore where their visage shines,
But of fine unclipt gold, where dully rests
Some likeness, which the glittering cirque confines,
Of modern, reigning, sterling, stupid stamp!—
Yea! ready money is Aladdin's lamp.

XIII.

"Love rules the camp, the court, the grove,—for love
Is heaven, and heaven is love:"—so sings the bard;

Which it were rather difficult to prove (A thing with poetry in general hard).
Perhaps there may be something in "the grove,"
At least it rhymes to "love;" but I'm prepar'd
To doubt (no less than landlords of their rental)
If "courts" and "camps" be quite so sentimental.

XIV.

But if Love don't, Cash does, and Cash alone:
Cash rules the grove, and tells it too besides;
Without cash, camps were thin, and courts were
none;
Without cash, Malthus tells you—"take no brides."
So Cash rules Love the ruler, on his own
High ground, as virgin Cynthia sways the tides:
And as for "Heaven being Love," why not my honor
Is wax? Heaven is not Love, 't is Matrimony.

XV.

Is not all love prohibited whatever,
Excepting marriage? which is love, no doubt,
After a sort; but somehow people never
With the same thought the two words have help'd
out.
Love may exist with marriage, and should ever,
And marriage also may exist without,
But love some banns is both a sin and shame,
And ought to go by quite another name.

XVI.

Now if the "court," and "camp," and "grove," be not
Recruited all with constant married men,
Who never coveted their neighbor's lot,
I say that line's a lapsus of the pen;—
Strange too in my "buon camerado" Scott,
So celebrated for his morals, when
My Jeffrey held him up as an example
To me;—of which these morals are a sample.

XVII.

Well, if I don't succeed, I have succeeded,
And that's enough; succeeded in my youth,
The only time when much success is needed:
And my success produced what I, in sooth,
Cared most about; it need not now be pleaded—Whate'er it was, 't was mine; I've paid, in truth,
Of late, the penalty of such success,
But have not learn'd to wish it any less.

XVIII.

That suit in Chancery,—which some persons plead
In an appeal to the unborn, whom they,
In the faith of their procreative creed,
Baptize posterity, or future clay,—
To me seems but a dubious kind of read
To lean on for support in any way;
Since odds are that posterity will know
No more of them, than they of her, I trow.

XIX.

Why, I'm posterity—and so are you;
And whom do we remember? Not a hundred.
Were every memory written down all true,
The tenth or twentieth name would be but blunder'd;
Even Plutarch's Lives have but pick'd out a few,
And 'gainst those few your annalists have thun-
der'd;
And Mitford† in the nineteenth century
Gives, with Greek truth, the good old Greek the li-

* China.

† See Mitford's Greece. "Græcia Verum." His great plan-ure consists in praising tyrants, abusing Plutarch, spelling oddly, and writing quaintly; and what is strange, after all

XX.

Good people all, of every degree,
Ye gentle readers and ungentle writers,
In this twelfth Canto 't is my wish to be
As serious as if I had for inditers
Malthus and Wilberforce:—the last set free
The Negroes, and is worth a million fighters;
While Wellington has but enslaved the Whites,
And Malthus does the thing 'gainst which he writes.

XXI.

I 'm serious—so are all men upon paper;
And why should I not form my speculation,
And hold up to the sun my little taper?
Mankind just now seem wrapt in meditation
On constitutions and steamboats of vapor;
While sages write against all procreation,
Unless a man can calculate his means
Of feeding brats the moment his wife weans.

XXII.

That 's noble! That 's romantic! For my part,
I think that "Philo-genitiveness" is—(Now here 's a word quite after my own heart,
Though there 's a shorter a good deal than this,
If that politeness set it not apart;
But I 'm resolved to say nought that 's amiss)—
I say, methinks that "Philo-genitiveness"
Might meet from men a little more forgiveness.

XXIII.

And now to business.—Oh, my gentle Juan!
Thou art in London—in that pleasant place,
Where every kind of mischief 's daily brewing,
Which can await warm youth in its wild race.
'T is true, that thy career is not a new one;
Thou art no novice in the headlong chase
Of early life; but this is a new land,
Which foreigners can never understand.

XXIV.

What with a small diversity of climate,
Of hot or cold, mercurial or sedate,
I could send forth my mandate like a primate
Upon the rest of Europe's social state;
But thou art the most difficult to rhyme at.
Great Britain, which the Muse may penetrate.
All countries have their "Lions," but in these
There is but one superb menagerie.

XXV.

But I am sick of politics. Begin,
"Paulo Majora," Juan, undecided
Amongst the paths of being "taken in,"
Above the ice had like a skater glided:
When tired of play, he flirted without sin
With some of those fair creatures who have prided
Themselves on innocent tantalization,
And hate all vice except its reputation.

XXVI.

But these are few, and in the end they make
Some devilish escapade or stir, which shows
That even the purest people may mistake
Their way through virtue's primrose paths of snow;
And then men stare, as if a new ass spake
To Balaam, and from tongue to ear o'erflows
Quicksilver small talk, ending (if you note it)
With the kind world's amen—"Who would have thought it?"

XXVII.

The little Lella, with her Orient eyes,
And taciturn Asiatic disposition
(Which saw all Western things with small surprise,
To the surprise of people of condition,
Who think that novelties are butterflies
To be pursued as food for inanition),
Her charming figure and romantic history,
Became a kind of fashionable mystery.

XXVIII.

The women much divided—as is usual
Amongst the sex in little things or great.
Think not, fair creatures, that I mean to abuse you
all—
I have always liked you better than I state:
Since I 've grown moral, still I must accuse you all
Of being apt to talk at a great rate;
And now there was a general sensation
Amongst you, about Lella's education.

XXIX.

In one point only were you settled—and
You had reason; 't was that a young child of grace,
As beautiful as her own native land,
And far away, the last bud of her race,
Howe'er our friend Don Juan might command
Himself for five, four, three, or two years' space,
Would be much better taught beneath the eye
Of peacocks whose follies had run dry.

XXX.

So first there was a generous emulation,
And then there was a general competition,
To undertake the orphan's education.
As Juan was a person of condition,
It had been an affront on this occasion
To talk of a subscription or petition;
But sixteen dowagers, ten unwed she sages
Whose tale belongs to "Hallam's Middle Ages,"

XXXI.

And one or two sad, separate wives, without
A fruit to bloom upon their withering bough—
Begg'd to bring up the little girl, and "out,"—
For that 's the phrase that settles all things now,
Meaning a virgin's first blush at a rout,
And all her points as thorough-bred to show:
And I assure you, that like virgin honey
Tastes their first season (mostly if they have money).

XXXII.

How all the needy honorable misters,
Each out-at-elbow peer, or desperate dandy,
The watchful mothers, and the careful sisters
(Who, by the by, when clever, are more handy
At making matches, where "t is gold that glistens,"
Than their de relatives), like flies o'er candy
Buzz round "the Fortune" with their busy battery,
To turn her head with waltzing and with flattery!

XXXIII.

Each aunt, each cousin, hath her speculation;
Nay, married dames will now and then discover
Such pure disinterestedness of passion,
I 've known them court an heiress for their lover.
"Tantene!" Such the virtues of high station,
Even in the hopeful Isle, whose outlet 's "Dover!"
While the poor rich wretch, object of these cares,
Has cause to wish her sire had had male heirs.

He is the best modern history of Greece in any language, and he is perhaps the best of all modern historians whatsoever.
Having named his sins, it is but fair to state his virtues.

too—learning, labor, research, wrath, and partiality. I call the latter virtues in a writer, because they make him write in earnest.

XXXIV.

Some are soon bagg'd, and some reject three doses.

'T is fine to see them scattering refusals
And wild dismay o'er every angry cousin
(Friends of the party), who begin accusals,
Such as—"Unless Miss (Blank) meant to have chosen

Poor Frederick, why did she accord perusals
To his billets? Why waltz with him? Why, I pray,
Look yea last night, and yet say no to-day?

XXXV.

"Why?—Why?—Besides, Fred really was attach'd;
'T was not her fortune—he has enough without:
The time will come she'll wish that she had match'd
So good an opportunity, no doubt:—
But the old Marchioness some plan had hatch'd,
As I'll tell Aurea at to-morrow's rout:
And after all poor Frederick may do better—
Pray did you see her answer to his letter?"

XXXVI.

Smart uniforms and sparkling coronets
Are spurr'd in turn, until her turn arrives,
After male loss of time, and hearts, and bets
Upon the sweepstakes for substantial wives;
And when at last the pretty creature gets
Some gentleman, who fights, or writes, or drives,
It soothes the awkward squad of the rejected
To find how very badly she selected.

XXXVII.

For sometimes they accept some long pursuer,
Worn out with importunity; or fall
(But here perhaps the instances are fewer)
To the lot of him who scarce pursued at all.
A hazy widower turn'd of forty's sure*
(If 't is not vain examples to recall)
To draw a high prize: now, howe'er he got her, I
See nought more strange in this than t' other lottery.

XXXVIII.

I, for my part—(one "modern instance" more,
"True, 't is a pity—pity 't is, 't is true")—
Was chosen from out an amatory score,
Albeit my years were less discreet than few;
But though I also had reform'd before
Those became one who soon were to be two,
I'll not gainsay the generous public's voice,
That the young lady made a monstrous choice.

XXXIX.

Oh, pardon my digression—or at least
Peruse! 'T is always with a moral end
That I dissent, like grace before a feast:
For like an aged aunt, or tiresome friend,
A rigid guardian, or a zealous priest,
My Muse by exhortation means to mend
All people, at all times, and in most places,
Which puts my Pegasus to these grave paces.

XL.

But now I'm going to be immoral; now
I mean to show things really as they are,
Not as they ought to be: for I avow,
That till we see what's what in fact, we're far
From much improvement with that virtuous plough
Which skims the surface, leaving scarce a scar
Upon the black loam long manured by Vice,
Only to keep its corn at the old price.

XLI.

But first of little Lella we'll dispose;
For like a day-dawn she was young and pure,

* This line may puzzle the commentators more than the present generation.

Or like the old comparison of snows,
Which are more pure than pleasant to be sure.
Like many people everybody knows,
Don Juan was delighted to secure
A goodly guardian for his infant charge,
Who might not profit much by being at large.

XLII.

Besides, he had found out he was no tutor
(I wish that others would find out the same),
And rather wish'd in such things to stand neuter.
For silly wards will bring their guardians blame:
So when he saw each ancient dame a suitor
To make his little wild Asiatic fame,
Consulting "the Society for Vice Suppression," Lady Pinchbeck was his choice.

XLIII.

Olden she was—but had been very young;
Virtuous she was—and had been, I believe;
Although the world has such an evil tongue
That—but my chaster ear will not receive
An echo of a syllable that's wrong:
In fact, there's nothing makes me so much grieve,
As that abominable tittle-tattle,
Which is the cud eschew'd by human cattle.

XLIV.

Moreover I've remark'd (and I was once
A slight observer in a modest way),
And so may every one except a dunce,
That ladies in their youth a little gay,
Besides their knowledge of the world, and sense
Of the sad consequence of going astray,
Are wiser in their warnings 'gainst the woe
Which the mere passionless can never know.

XLV.

While the harsh prude indemnifies her virtue
By railing at the unknown and envied passion,
Seeking far less to save you than to hurt you,
Or, what's still worse, to put you out of fashion,—
The kinder veteran with calm words will court
you
Entreating you to pause before you dash on;
Expounding and illustrating the riddle
Of epic Love's beginning, end, and middle.

XLVI.

Now whether it be thus, or that they are stricter,
As better knowing why they should be so,
I think you'll find from many a family picture,
That daughters of such mothers as may know
The world by experience rather than by lecture,
Turn out much better for the Smithfield Show
Of vestals brought into the marriage mart,
Than those bred up by prudes without a heart.

XLVII.

I said that Lady Pinchbeck had been talk'd about—
As who has not, if female, young, and pretty?
But now no more the ghost of Scandal stalk'd
about;
She merely was deem'd amiable and witty,
And several of her best bon-mots were hawk'd
about:
Then she was given to charity and pity,
And pass'd (at least the latter years of life)
For being a most exemplary wife.

XLVIII.

High in high circles, gentle in her own,
She was the mild reprover of the young,
Whenever—which means every day—they'd shown
An awkward inclination to go wrong.
The quantity of good she did 's unknown,
Or at the least would lengthen out my song:

In brief, the little orphan of the East
Had raised an interest in her, which increased.

LIII.

Juan, too, was a sort of favorite with her,
Because she thought him a good heart at bottom,
A little spoil'd, but not so altogether;
Which was a wonder, if you think who got him,
And how he had been toss'd, he scarce knew
whither:

Though this might ruin others, it did not him,
At least entirely—for he had seen too many Changes in youth, to be surprised at any.

L.

And these vicissitudes tell best in youth;
For when they happen at a riper age,
People are apt to blame the Fates, forsooth,
And wonder Providence is not more sage.
Adversity is the first path to truth:
He who hath proved war, storm, or woman's rage,
Whether his winters be eighteen or eighty,
Hath won the experience which is deem'd so weighty.

LII.

How far it profits is another matter.—
Our hero gladly saw his little change
Safe with a lady, whose last grown-up daughter
Being long married, and thus set at large,
Had left all the accomplishments she taught her
To be transmitted, like the Lord Mayor's barge,
To the next comer; or—as it will tell
More Muse-like—like to Cythera's shell.

LII.

I call such things transmission; for there is
A floating balance of accomplishment,
Which forms a pedigree from Miss to Miss,
According as their minds or backs are bent.
Some walk; some draw; some fathom the abyss
Of metaphysics; others are content
With music; the most moderate shine as wits;
While others have a genius turn'd for fits.

LIII.

But whether fits, or wits, or harpsichords,
Theology, fine arts, or finer stays,
May be the baits for gentlemen or lords
With regular descent, in these our days,
The last year to the new transfers its hoards;
New vestals claim men's eyes with the same praise
Of "elegant" et cætera, in fresh batches—
All mismatched creatures, and yet bent on matches.

LIV.

But now I will begin my poem. 'Tis
Perhaps a little strange, if not quite new,
That from the first of Cantos up to this
I've not begun what we have to go through.
These first twelve books are merely flourishes,
Preludios, trying just a string or two
Upon my lyre, or making the pegs sure;
And when so, you shall have the overture.

LV.

My Muses do not care a pinch of rosin
About what's call'd success, or not succeeding:
Such thoughts are quite below the strain they have chosen;
'Tis a "great moral lesson" they are reading.
I thought, at setting off, about two dozen
Cantos would do; but at Apollo's pleading,

If that my Pegasus should not be founder'd,
I think to canter gently through a hundred.

LVI.

Don Juan saw that microcosm on stilts,
Yclept the Great World; for it is the least.
Although the highest: but as swords have hilts
By which their power of mischief is increased,
When man in battle or in quarrel tilts,
Thus the low world, north, south, or west, or east,
Must still obey the high—which is their handle,
Their moon, their sun, their gas, their farthing candle.

LVII.

He had many friends who had many wives, and was Well look'd upon by both, to that extent
Of friendship which you may accept or pass,
It does nor good nor harm: being merely meant
To keep the wheels going of the higher class,
And draw them nightly when a ticket's sent;
And what with masquerades, and fêtes, and balls,
For the first season such a life scarce falls.

LVIII.

A young unmarried man, with a good name
And fortune, has an awkward part to play;
For good society is but a game,
"The royal game of Goose,"* as I may say,
Where everybody has some separate aim,
And end to answer, or a plan to lay—
The single ladies wishing to be double,
The married ones to save the virgins trouble.

LIX.

I don't mean this as general, but particular
Examples may be found of such pursuits:
Though several also keep their perpendicular
Like poplars, with good principles for roots;
Yet many have a method more reticular—
"Fishers for men," like sirens with soft lutes:
For talk six times with the same single lady,
And you may get the wedding dresses ready.

LX.

Perhaps you'll have a letter from the mother,
To say her daughter's feelings are trepann'd;
Perhaps you'll have a visit from the brother,
All strut, and stays, and whiskers, to demand
What "your intentions are?"—One way or other
It seems the virgin's heart expects your hand:
And between pity for her case and yours,
You'll add to Matrimony's list of cures.

LXI.

I've known a dozen weddings made even thus,
And some of them high names: I have also known
Young men who—though they hated to discuss Pretensions which they never dream'd to have shown—
Yet neither frighten'd by a female fuss,
Nor by mustachios moved, were let alone,
And lived, as did the broken-hearted fair,
In happier plight than if they form'd a pair.

LXII.

There's also nightly, to the uninitiated,
A peril—not indeed like love or marriage,
But not the less for this to be depreciated:
It is—I meant and mean not to disparage
The show of virtue even in the vitiated—
It adds an outward grace unto their carriage—

* "This ancient game originated, I believe, in Germany, and is well calculated to make young persons ready at reckoning the produce of two given numbers. It is called the game of the goose, because at every fourth and fifth compartment of the table in succession a goose is depicted; and if the cast thrown by the player falls upon a goose, he moves forward double the number of his throw."—STRUTT.

But to denounce the amphibious sort of harlot,
"Couleur de rose," who's neither white nor scarlet.

LXXIII.

Such is your cold coquette, who can't say "No,"
And won't say "Yes," and keeps you on and off-
ing
On a lee shore, till it begins to blow—
Then sees your heart wreck'd with an inward scoffing.
This works a world of sentimental woe,
And sends new Werters yearly to their coffin;
But yet is merely innocent flirtation,
Not quite adultery, but adulation.

LXXIV.

"Ye gods, I grow a talker!" Let us prate.
The next of perils, though I place it sternest,
Is when, without regard to "church or state,"
A wife makes or takes love in upright earnest.
Ahead, such things decide few women's fate—
(Such, early traveller! is the truth thou learn-est).

But in old England, when a young bride errs,
Poor thing! Eve's was a trifling case to hers.

LXXV.

For 't is a low, newspaper, humdrum, lawsuit
Country, where a young couple of the same ages
Can't form a friendship, but the world o'erawes it.
Then there's the vulgar trick of those d—d damages!
A verdict—grievous foe to those who cause it!—
Forms a sad climax to romantic homage;
Besides those soothing speeches of the pleaders,
And evidences which regale all readers.

LXXVI.

But they who blunder thus are raw beginners;
A little genial sprinkling of hypocrisy
Has saved the fame of thousand splendid sinners,
The lowliest oligarchs of our gynecocracy;
You may see such at all the balls and dinners,
Among the proudest of our aristocracy,
So gentle, charming, charitable, chaste—
And all by having tact as well as taste.

LXXVII.

Juan, who did not stand in the predicament
Of a mere novice, had one safeguard more;
For he was sick—no, 't was not the word sick I meant—
But he had seen so much good love before,
That he was not in heart so very weak;—I meant
But thus much, and no sneer against the shore
Of white cliffs, white necks, blue eyes, bluer stock-
ings,
Tithes, taxes, duns, and doors with double knock-
ings.

LXXVIII.

But coming young from lands and scenes romantic,
Where lives, not lawsuits, must be risk'd for Passion,
And Passion's self must have a spice of frantic,
Into a country where 't is half a fashion,
Seem'd to him half commercial, half pedantic,
How'er he might esteem this moral nation:
Besides (alas! his taste—forgive and pity!)
At first he did not think the women pretty.

LXXIX.

I say at first—for he found out at last,
But by degrees, that they were fairer far
Than the more glowing dames whose lot is cast
Beneath the influence of the eastern star.
A further proof we should not judge in haste;
Yet inexperience could not be his bar

To taste:—the truth is, if men would confess,
That novelties please less than they impress.

LXX.

Though travelld, I have never had the luck to Trace up those shuffling negroes, Nile or Niger,
To that impracticable place Timbuctoo,
Where Geography finds no one to oblige her
With such a chart as may be safely stuck to—
For Europe ploughs in Afric like "bos piger;"
But if I had been at Timbuctoo, there
No doubt I should be told that black is fair.

LXXI.

It is. I will not swear that black is white;
But I suspect in fact that white is black;
And the whole matter rests upon eyesight.
Ask a blind man, the best judge. You 'll attack
Perhaps this new position—but I'm right;
Or if I'm wrong, I'll not be taken aback:—
He hath no morn nor night, but all is dark
Within; and what seest thou? A dubious apart.

LXXII.

But I'm relapsing into metaphysics,
That labyrinth, whose clue is of the same
Construction as your cures for hectic phthisica,
Those bright moths fluttering round a dying
flame;
And this reflection brings me to plain physics,
And to the beauties of a foreign dame,
Compared with those of our pure pearls of price,
Those polar summers, all sun, and some ice.

LXXIII.

Or say they are like virtuous mermaids, whose Beginnings are fair faces, ends mere fishes;—
Not that there's not a quantity of those Who have a due respect for their own wishes.
Like Russians rushing from hot baths to snows*
Are they, at bottom virtuous even when vicious:
They warm into a scrape, but keep of course,
As a reserve, a plunge into remorse.

LXXIV.

But this has nought to do with their outsides.
I said that Juan did not think them pretty
At the first blush; for a fair Briton hides
Half her attractions—probably from pity—
And rather calmly into the heart glides,
Than storms it as a foe would take a city;
But once there (if you doubt this, prithee try)
She keeps it for you like a true ally.

LXXV.

She cannot step as does an Arab barb,
Or Andalusian girl from mass returning,
Nor wear as gracefully as Gauls her garb,
Nor in her eye Ausonia's glance is burning;
Her voice, though sweet, is not so fit to warble those bravuras (which still I am learning
To like, though I have been seven years in Italy,
And have, or had, an ear that served me prettily);—

LXXVI.

She cannot do these things, nor one or two Others, in that off-hand and dashing style
Which takes so much—to give the devil his due;
Nor is she quite so ready with her smile,
Nor settles all things in one interview
(A thing approved as saving time and toil);—
But though the soil may give you time and trouble,
Well cultivated, it will render double.

* The Russians, as is well known, run out from their hot baths to plunge into the Neva; a pleasant practical antithesis which it seems does them no harm.

LXXVII.

And if in fact she takes to a "grande passion,"
It is a very serious thing indeed:
Nine times in ten 't is but caprice or fashion,
Coquetry, or a wish to take the lead,
The pride of a mere child with a new sash on,
Or wish to make a rival's bosom bleed:
But the tenth instance will be a tornado,
For there's no saying what they will or may do.

LXXVIII.

The reason 's obvious; if there 's an élat,
They lose their caste at once, as do the Parias;
And when the delicacies of the law
Have fill'd their papers with their comments various,
Society, that china without flaw
(The hypocrite!), will banish them like Marius,
To sit amidst the ruins of their guilt:*
For Fame 's a Carthage not so soon rebuilt.

LXXX.

Perhaps this is as it should be:—It is
A comment on the Gospel's "Sin no more,
And be thy sins forgiven:"—but upon this
I leave the saints to settle their own score.
Abroad, though doubtless they do much amiss,
An erring woman finds an opener door
For her return to Virtue—as they call
That lady, who should be at home to all.

LXXXI.

For me, I leave the matter where I find it,
Knowing that such uneasy virtue leads
People some ten times less in fact to mind it,
And care but for discoveries, and not deeds.
And as for chastity, you 'll never bind it
By all the laws the strictest lawyer pleads,
But aggravate the crime you have not prevented,
By rendering desperate those who had else repented.

LXXXI.

But Juan was no casuist, nor had ponder'd
Upon the moral lessons of mankind:
Besides, he had not seen of several hundred
A lady altogether to his mind.
A little "bias"—'t is not to be wonder'd
At, that his heart had got a tougher rind:
And though not vainer from his past success,
No doubt his sensibilities were less.

LXXXII.

He also had been busy seeing sights—
The Parliament and all the other houses;
Had sat beneath the gallery at nights,
To hear debates whose thunder roused (not rouses)
The world to gaze upon those northern lights,
Which flash'd as far as where the musk-bull
browes;

He had also stood at times behind the throne—
But Grey† was not arrived, and Chatham gone.‡

LXXXIII.

He saw, however, at the closing session,
That noble sight, when really free the nation,
A king in constitutional possession
Of such a throne as is the proudest station,

Though despots know it not—till the progress
Of freedom shall complete their education.
'T is not mere splendor makes the show august
To eye or heart—it is the people's trust.

LXXXIV.

There, too, he saw (what'er he may be now)
A Prince, the prince of princes at the time,
With fascination in his very bow,
And full of promise, as the spring of prime.
Though royalty was written on his brow,
He had then the grace, too, rare in every clime,
Of being, without alloy of fop or beau,
A finish'd gentleman from top to toe.

LXXXV.

And Juan was received, as hath been said,
Into the best society; and there
Occur'd what often happens, I'm afraid,
However disciplined and debonnaire:—
The talent and good humor he display'd,
Besides the mark'd distinction of his air,
Exposed him, as was natural, to temptation,
Even though himself avoided the occasion.

LXXXVI.

But what, and where, with whom, and when, and
why,
Is not to be put hastily together;
And as my object is morality
(Whatever people say), I don't know whether
I 'll leave a single reader's eyelid dry,
But harrow up his feelings till they wither,
And hew out a huge monument of pathos,
As Philip's son proposed to do with Athos.‡

LXXXVII.

Here the twelfth canto of our introduction
Ends. When the body of the book 's begun,
You 'll find it of a different construction
From what some people say 't will be when
done;
The plan at present 's simply in concoction.
I can't oblige you, reader, to read on;
That 's your affair, not mine: a real spirit
Should neither court neglect, nor dread to bear it.

LXXXVIII.

And if my thunderbolt not always rattles,
Remember, reader! you have had before,
The worst of tempests and the best of battles,
That e'er were brew'd from elements or gore,
Besides the most sublime of—Heaven knows what else;
An usurer could scarce expect much more—
But my best canto, save one on astronomy,
Will turn upon "political economy."

LXXXIX.

That is your present theme for popularity:
Now that the public hedge hath scarce a stake,
It grows an act of patriotic charity,
To show the people the best way to break.
My plan (but I, if but for singularity;
Reserve it) will be very sure to take.
Meantime, read all the national-debt sinkers,
And tell me what you think of our great thinkers.

* A Gentile or German soldier sent to arrest him, overawed by his aspect, recoiled from the task: and the people of the place, as if moved by the miracle, concurred in aiding his escape. The presence of such an exile on the ground where Carthage had stood was supposed to increase the majesty and the melancholy of the scene. 'Go,' he said to the Victor who brought him the orders of the pretor to depart, 'tell him that you have seen Marius sitting on the ruins of Carthage.'" PENGROCH.

† Charles, second Earl Grey, succeeded to the peerage in 1807.

‡ William Pitt, first earl of Chatham, died in May, 1778, after having been carried home from the House of Lords, where he had fainted away at the close of a remarkable speech on the American Revolutionary war.

§ A sculptor projected to hew Mount Athos into a statue of Alexander, with a city in one hand, and, I believe, a river in his pocket, with various other similar devices. But Alexander's grove, and Athos remains. I trust ere long to look over a nation of freemen.

CANTO THE THIRTEENTH.

I.

I NOW mean to be serious;—it is time,
 Since laughter nowadays is deem'd too serious;
 A jest at Vice by Virtue's call'd a crime,
 And critically held as delinquent;
 Besides, the sad's a source of the sublime,
 Although when long a little apt to weary us;
 And therefore shall my lay soar high and solemn,
 As an old temple dwindled to a column.

II.

The Lady Adeline Amundeville
 ('T is an old Norman name, and to be found
 In pedigrees, by those who wander still Along the last fields of that Gothic ground)
 Was high-born, wealthy by her father's will,
 And beauteous, even where beauties most abound,
 In Britain—which of course true patriots find
 The goodliest soil of body and of mind.

III.

I'll not gainsay them; it is not my cue;
 I'll leave them to their taste, no doubt the best:
 An eye's an eye, and whether black or blue,
 Is no great matter, so 't is in request;
 'T is nonsense to dispute about a hue—
 The kindest may be taken as a test.
 The fair sex should be always fair; and no man,
 Till thirty, should perceive there's a plain woman.

IV.

And after that serene and somewhat dull
 Epoch, that awkward corner turn'd for days
 More quiet, when our moon's no more at full,
 We may presume to criticise or praise;
 Because indifference begins to lull
 Our passions, and we walk in wisdom's ways;
 Also because the figure and the face
 Hint, that 't is time to give the younger place.

V.

I know that some would fain postpone this era,
 Reluctant as all placemen to resign
 Their post; but theirs is merely a chimera,
 For they have pass'd life's equinoctial line:
 But then they have their claret and Madeira,
 To irrigate the dryness of decline;
 And county meetings, and the parliament,
 And debt, and what not, for their solace sent.

VI.

And is there not religion, and reform,
 Peace, war, the taxes, and what's call'd the
 "Nation"?
 The struggle to be pilots in a storm?
 The landed and the money'd speculation?
 The joys of mutual hate to keep them warm,
 Instead of love, that mere hallucination?
 Now hatred is by far the longest pleasure;
 Men love in haste, but they detest at leisure.

VII.

Rough Johnson, the great moralist, profess'd,
 Right honestly, "he liked an honest hater!"—

* "Sir, I love a good hater." See Boswell's Johnson.
 † Mephistopheles is the name of the devil in Goethe's Faust.

The only truth that yet has been confest
 Within these latest thousand years or later.
 Perhaps the fine old fellow spoke in jest:—
 For my part, I am but a mere spectator,
 And gaze where'er the palace or the hovel is,
 Much in the mode of Goethe's Mephistopheles;

VIII.

But neither love nor hate in much excess;
 Though 't was not once so. If I sneer sometimes.
 It is because I cannot well do less,
 And now and then it also suits my rhymes.
 I should be very willing to redress
 Men's wrongs, and rather check than punish crimes,
 Had not Cervantes, in that too true tale
 Of Quixote, shown how all such efforts fail.

IX.

Of all tales 't is the saddest—and more sad,
 Because it makes us smile: his hero's right,
 And still pursues the right;—to curb the bad
 His only object, and 'gainst odds to fight
 His guerdon: 't is his virtue makes him mad!
 But his adventures form a sorry sight;—
 A sorrier still is the great moral taught
 By that real epic unto all who have thought.

X.

Bedressing injury, revenging wrong,
 To aid the damsel and destroy the caltiff;
 Opposing singly the united strong,
 From foreign yoke to free the helpless native:—
 Alas! must noblest views, like an old song,
 Be for mere fancy's sport a theme creative,
 A jest, a riddle, Fame through thin and thick sought!
 And Socrates himself but Wisdom's Quixote?

XI.

Cervantes smiled Spain's chivalry away;
 A single laugh demolish'd the right arm
 Of his own country;—seldom since that day Has Spain had heroes. While Romance could charm,
 The world gave ground before her bright array;
 And therefore have his volumes done such harm,
 That all their glory, as a composition,
 Was dearly purchased by his land's perdition.

XII.

I'm "at my old lones"—disgression, and forget
 The Lady Adeline Amundeville;
 The fair most fatal Juan ever met,
 Although she was not evil nor meant ill;
 But Destiny and Passion spread the net
 (Fate is a good excuse for our own will),
 And caught them;—what do they not catch, so thinks?
 But I'm not Oedipus, and life's a Sphinx.

XIII.

I tell the tale as it is told, nor dare
 To venture a solution: "Davyus sum;"
 And now I will proceed upon the pair.
 Sweet Adeline, amidst the gay world's hum,
 Was the Queen-Bee, the glass of all that's fair;
 Whose charms made all men speak, and women
 dumb.
 The last's a miracle, and such was reckon'd,
 And since that time there has not been a second.

XIV.

Chaste was she, to detraction's desperation,
 And wedded unto one she had loved well—

* "Davyus sum, non Oedipus."—Tern.

A man known in the councils of the nation,
Cool, and quite English, imperturbable,
Though apt to act with fire upon occasion,
Proud of himself and her: the world could tell
Nought against either, and both seem'd secure—
She in her virtue, he in his hauteur.

XV.

It chanced some diplomatical relations,
Arising out of business, often brought
Himself and Juan in their mutual stations
Into close contact. Though reserved, nor caught
By specious seeming, Juan's youth, and patience,
And talent, on his haughty spirit wrought,
And form'd a basis of esteem, which ends
In making men what courtesy calls friends.

XVI.

And thus Lord Henry, who was cautious as
Reserve and pride could make him, and full slow
In judging men—when once his judgment was Determined, right or wrong, on friend or foe,
Had all the pertinacity pride has,
Which knows no ebb to its imperious flow,
And loves or hates, disdaining to be guided,
Because its own good pleasure hath decided.

XVII.

His friendships, therefore, and no less aversions, Though oft well founded, which confirm'd but
more
His prepossessions, like the laws of Persians
And Medes, would ne'er revoke what went before.
His feelings had not those strange fits, like tertians,
Of common likings, which make some deplore
What they should laugh at—the mere ague still
Of men's regard, the fever or the chill.

XVIII.

"Tis not in mortals to command success:
But do you more, Sempronius—don't deserve it,"
And take my word, you won't have any less.
Be wary, watch the time, and always serve it;
Give gently way, when there's too great a press;
And for your conscience, only learn to nerve it;
For, like a racer, or a boxer training,
T will make, if proved, vast efforts without paining.

XIX.

Lord Henry also liked to be superior,
As most men do, the little or the great;
The very lowest find out an inferior,
At least they think so, to exert their state
Upon: for there are very few things wearier
Than solitary Pride's oppressive weight,
While mortals generously would divide,
By bidding others carry while they ride.

XX.

In birth, in rank, in fortune likewise equal,
O'er Juan he could no distinction claim;
In years he had the advantage of time's sequel;
And, as he thought, in country much the same—
Because bold Britons have a tongue and free quill,
At which all modern nations vainly aim;
And the Lord Henry was a great debater,
So that few members kept the house up later.

XXI.

These were advantages: and then he thought—
It was his foible, but by no means sinister—
That few or none more than himself had caught
Court mysteries, having been himself a minister:
He liked to teach that which he had been taught,
And greatly shone whenever there had been a stir;

And reconciled all qualities which grace man,
Always a patriot, and sometimes a placeman.

XXII.

He liked the gentle Spaniard for his gravity;
He almost honor'd him for his docility;
Because, though young, he acquiesced with suavity,
Or contradicted but with proud humility.
He knew the world, and would not see depravity
In faults which sometimes show the soil's fertility,
If that the weeds o'erlive not the first crop—
For then they are very difficult to stop.

XXIII.

And then he talk'd with him about Madrid,
Constantinople, and such distant places;
Where people always did as they were bid,
Or did what they should not with foreign graces.
Of couriers also spake they: Henry rid
Well, like most Englishmen, and loved the races;
And Juan, like a true-born Andalusian,
Could back a horse, as despots ride a Russian.

XXIV.

And thus acquaintance grew, at noble routs,
And diplomatic dinners, or at other—
For Juan stood well both with Ins and Outs,
As in freemasonry a higher brother.
Upon his talent Henry had no doubts;
His manner show'd him sprung from a high
mother;
And all men like to show their hospitality
To him whose breeding matches with his quality.

XXV.

At Blank-Blank Square;—for we will break no squares
By naming streets: since men are so censorious,
And apt to sow an author's wheat with tares,
Reaping allusions private and inglorious,
Where none were dreamt of, unto love's affairs,
Which were, or are, or are to be notorious,
That therefore do I previously declare,
Lord Henry's mansion was in Blank-Blank Square.

XXVI.

Also there bin * another pious reason
For making squares and streets anonymous;
Which is, that there is scarce a single season
Which doth not shake some very splendid house
With some slight heart-quake of domestic treason—
A topic scandal doth delight to rouse:
Such I might stumble over unawares,
Unless I knew the very chastest squares.

XXVII.

'Tis true, I might have chosen Piccadilly,
A place where peccadilloes are unknown;
But I have motives, whether wise or silly,
For letting that pure sanctuary alone.
Therefore I name not square, street, place, until I
Find one where nothing naughty can be shown,
A vestal shrine of innocence of heart:
Such are—but I have lost the London Chart.

XXVIII.

At Henry's mansion then, in Blank-Blank Square
Was Juan a recherché, welcome guest,
As many other noble scions were;
And some who had but talent for their crest;
Or wealth, which is a passport everywhere;
Or even mere fashion, which indeed is the best
Recommendation; and to be well drest
Will very often supersede the rest.

* "With every thing that pretty does,
My lady sweet, arise."—SHAKESPEARE

XXXI.

And since "there's safety in a multitude
Of counsellors," as Solomon has said,
Or some one for him, in some sage, grave mood ;—
Indeed we see the daily proof display'd
In senates, at the bar, in wordy feud,
Where'er collective wisdom can parade,
Which is the only cause that we can guess
Of Britain's present wealth and happiness ;—

XXX.

But as "there's safety" grafted in the number
"Of counsellors," for men,—thus for the sex
A large acquaintance lets not Virtue slumber ;
Or should it shake, the choice will more perplex—
Variety itself will more enumber.
Midst many rocks we guard more against wrecks ;
And thus with women : howsoe'er it shocks some 's
Self-love, there's safety in a crowd of coxcombs.

XXXI.

But Adeline had not the least occasion
For such a shield, which leaves but little merit
To virtue proper, or good education.
Her chief resource was in her own high spirit,
Which judg'd mankind at their due estimation ;
And for coquetry, she disdain'd to wear it :
Secure of admiration, its impression
Was faint, as of an every-day possession.

XXXII.

To all she was polite without parade ;
To some she show'd attention of that kind
Which flatters, but is flattery convey'd
In such a sort as cannot leave behind
A trace unworthy either wife or maid ;—
A gentle, genial courtesy of mind,
To those who were, or pass'd for, meritorious,
Just to console sad glory for being glorious ;

XXXIII.

Which is in all respects, save now and then,
A dull and desolate appendage. Gaze
Upon the shades of those distinguish'd men
Who were or are the puppet-shows of praise,
The praise of persecution. Gaze again
On the most favor'd ; and amidst the blaze
Of sunset halos o'er the laurel-brow'd,
What can ye recognize ?—a gilded cloud.

XXXIV.

There also was of course in Adeline
That calm patrician polish in the address,
Which ne'er can pass the equinoctial line
Of anything which nature would express ;
Just as a mandarin finds nothing fine,—
At least his manner suffers not to guess,
That anything he views can greatly please.
Perhaps we have borrow'd this from the Chinese—

XXXV.

Perhaps from Horace : his "Nô admirari"*
Was what he call'd the "Art of Happiness ;"
An art on which the artists greatly vary,
And have not yet attain'd to much success.
However, 't is expedient to be wary :
Indifference cries don't produce distress ;
And rash enthusiasm in good society
Were nothing but a moral inebriety.

XXXVI.

But Adeline was not indifferent : for (Now for a commonplace !) beneath the snow,
As a volcano holds the lava more
Within—et cætera. Shall I go on ?—No!

I hate to hunt down a tired metaphor,
So let the often-used volcano go.
Poor thing ! How frequently, by me and others,
It hath been stirr'd up till its smoke quite smother !

XXXVII.

I'll have another figure in a trice :—
What say you to a bottle of champagne ?
Frozen into a very vicious ice,
Which leaves few drops of that immortal rain,
Yet in the very centre, past all price,
About a liquid glassful will remain ;
And this is stronger than the strongest grape
Could e'er express in its expanded shape :

XXXVIII.

'T is the whole spirit brought to a quintessence ;
And thus the chilliest aspects may concenize
A hidden nectar under a cold presence.
And such are many—though I only meant her
From whom I now deduce these moral lessons,
On which the Muse has always sought to mix.
And your cold people are beyond all price,
When once you've broken their confounded ice.

XXXIX.

But after all they are a Northwest Passage
Unto the glowing India of the soul ;
And as the good ships sent upon that message
Have not exactly ascertain'd the Pole
(Though Parry's efforts look a lucky passage),
Thus gentlemen may run upon a shoal ;
For if the Pole's not open, but all frost
(A chance still), 't is a voyage or vessel lost.

XL.

And young beginners may as well commence
With quiet cruising o'er the ocean woman ;
While those who are not beginners should have ^{sense}
Enough to make for port, ere Time shall summon
With his gray signal-flag ; and the past tense,
The dreary "Puisne" of all things human,
Must be declined, while life's thin thread's spun
out
Between the gaping heir and gnawing gout.

XLI.

But heaven must be diverted : its diversion
Is sometimes treacherous—but never mild :
The world upon the whole is worth the assertion
(If but for comfort) that all things are kind :
And that same devilish doctrine of the Fensins,
Of the two principles, but leaves behind
As many doubts as any other doctrine
Has ever puzzled Faith withal, or yoked her in.

XLII.

The English winter—ending in July,
To recommence in August—now was done.
'T is the postilion's paradise : wheels fly ;
On roads, east, south, north, west, there is a run.
But for post-horses who find sympathy ?
Man's pity's for himself, or for his son,
Always premising that said son at college
Has not contracted much more debt than know-edge.

XLIII.

The London winter's ended in July—
Sometimes a little later. I don't err
In this : whatever other blunders lie
Upon my shoulders, here I must aver
My Muse a glass of weatherology ;
For parliament is our barometer :
Let radicals its other acts attack,
Its sessions form our only almanac.

* See ante, p. 221.

XLIV.

When its quicksilver's down at zero,—lo!
Coach, chariot, luggage, baggage, equipage!
Wheels whirl from Carlton palace to Soho,
And happiest they who horses can engage;
The turnpikes glow with dust; and Rotten Row
Sleeps from the chivalry of this bright age;
And tradesmen, with long bills and longer faces,
Sigh—as the postboys fasten on the traces.

XLV.

They and their bills, "Arcadians both,"* are left
To the Greek kalends of another season.
Alas! to them of ready cash bereft,
What hope remains? Of hope the full possession,
Or generous draft, conceded as a gift,
At a long date—till they can get a fresh one—
Hawk'd about at a discount, small or large;
Also the solace of an overcharge.

XLVI.

But these are trifles. Downward flies my lord,
Nodding beside my lady in his carriage.
Away! away! "Fresh horses!" are the word,
And changed as quickly as hearts after marriage;
The obsequious landlord hath the change restored;
The postboys have no reason to disparage
Their fee; but ere the water'd wheels may hiss
hence,
The ostler pleads too for a reminiscence.

XLVII.

'T is granted; and the valet mounts the dicky—
That gentleman of lords and gentlemen;
Also my lady's gentlewoman, tricky,
Trick'd out, but modest more than post's pen
Can paint,—"Cori viaggino i Ricchi!"†
(Excuse a foreign slipshod now and then,
If but to show I've travell'd: and what's travel,
Unless it teaches one to quote and cavil?)

XLVIII.

The London winter and the country summer
Were wellnigh over. 'T is perhaps a pity,
When Nature wears the gown that doth become
her,
To lose those best months in a sweaty city,
And wait until the nightingale grows dumber,
Listening debates not very wise or witty,
Ere patriots their true country can remember;—
But there's no shooting (save grouse) till September.

XLIX.

I've done with my tirade. The world was gone;
The twice two thousand, for whom earth was
made,
Were vanish'd to be what they call alone—
That is, with thirty servants for parade,
As many guests, or more; before whom groan
As many covers, duly, daily laid.
Let none accuse old England's hospitality—
Its quantity is but condensed to quality.

L.

Lord Henry and the Lady Adeline
Departed like the rest of their company,

* "Arcadian ambrosia."

† "Thus the rich travel."

‡ "Byron was too good by nature for what he wished to be—he could not drain the blood of the cavaliers out of his veins—he could not cover the coronet all over with the red night-cap;—hence that self-reproaching melancholy which was eternally crossing and unerving him,—hence the dark heaving of soul with which he must have written, in his Italian village letters, this glorious description of his own lost ancestral seat."—LOCKHART, 1884.

The peerage, to a mansion very fine;
The Gothic Babel of a thousand years.
None than themselves could boast a longer line,
Where time through heroes and through beauties steers;
And oaks as olden as their pedigree
Told of their sires, a tomb in every tree.

LL.

A paragraph in every paper told
Of their departure: such is modern fame;
'T is pity that it takes no further hold
Than an advertisement, or much the same;
When, ere the ink be dry, the sound grows cold.
The Morning Post was foremost to proclaim—
"Departure, for his country seat, to-day,
Lord H. Amundeville and Lady A.

LII.

"We understand the splendid host intends
To entertain, this autumn, a select
And numerous party of his noble friends;
'Midst whom we have heard, from sources quite correct,
The Duke of D—— the shooting season spends,
With many more by rank and fashion deck'd;
Also a foreigner of high condition,
The envoy of the secret Russian mission."

LIII.

And thus we see—who doubts the Morning Post?
(Whose articles are like the "Thirty-nine,"
Which those most swear to who believe them
most)—
Our gay Russ Spaniard was ordain'd to shine,
Deck'd by the rays reflected from his host,
With those who, Pope says, "greatly daring dine."
'T is odd, but true,—last war the News abounded
More with these dinners than the kill'd or wounded;—

LIV.

As thus: "On Thursday there was a grand dinner;
Present, Lords A. B. C."—Earls, dukes, by name
Announced with no less pomp than victory's winner;
Then underneath, and in the very same Column: date, "Falmouth. There has lately been here
The Slip-dash regiment, so well known to fame,
Whose loss in the late action we regret:
The vacancies are fill'd up—see Gazette."

LV.

To Norman Abbey whirl'd the noble pair,—
An old, old monastery once, and now
Still older mansion,†—of a rich and rare
Mix'd Gothic, such as artists all allow Few specimens yet left us can compare
Withal:‡ it lies perhaps a little low,
Because the monks prefer'd a hill behind,
To shelter their devotion from the wind.‡

LVL.

It stood embosom'd in a happy valley,
Crown'd by high woodlands, where the Druid oak

§ "The front of Newstead Abbey has a most noble and majestic appearance; being built in the form of the west end of a cathedral, adorned with rich carvings and lofty pinnacles."—Art. Newstead, in Beauties of England, vol. xii. See ante, illustration, Life of Byron.

|| "How sweetly in front looked the transparent water, and the light of religious remains (equalled by no architecture scarcely in the kingdom, except that of York cathedral) backed by the most splendid field beauties, diversified by the swells of the earth on which they were rooted!"—Thomson's Nottinghamshire.

Stood like Caractacus, in act to rally
His host, with broad arms 'gainst the thunder-stroke;
And from beneath his boughs were seen to rally
The dappled foresters; as day awoke,
The branching stag swept down with all his herd,
To quaff a brook which murmur'd like a bird.*

LVII.

Before the mansion lay a lucid lake,†
Broad as transparent, deep, and freshly fed
By a river, which its soften'd way did take
In currents through the calmer waters spread
Around: the wildfowl nestled in the brake
And sedges, brooding in their liquid bed:
The woods sloped downwards to its brink, and
With their green faces fix'd upon the flood.

LVIII.

Its outlet dash'd into a deep cascade,
Sparkling with foam, until again subsiding,
Its shriller echoes—like an infant made
Quiet—sank into softer ripples, gliding
Into a rivulet; and thus allay'd,
Pursued its course, now gleaming, and now hid-
ing
Its windings through the woods; now clear, now blue,
According as the skies their shadows threw.

LIX.

A glorious remnant of the Gothic pile
(While yet the church was Rome's) stood half apart
In a grand arch, which once screen'd many an aisle.
These last had disappear'd—a loss to art:
The first yet frown'd superbly o'er the soil,
And kindled feelings in the roughest heart,
Which mourn'd the power of time's or tempest's
march,
In gazing on that venerable arch.

LX.

Within a niche, nigh to its pinnacle,
Twelve saints had once stood sanctified in stone;
But these had fallen, not when the friars fell,
But in the war which struck Charles from his throne,
When each house was a fortress—as tell
The annals of full many a line undone,—
The gallant cavaliers, who fought in vain
For those who knew not to resign or reign.‡

LXI.

But in a higher niche, alone, but crown'd,
The Virgin Mother of the God-born Child,§
With her Son in her blessed arms, look'd round; Spared by some chance when all beside was spoil'd;
She made the earth below seem holy ground;
This may be superstition, weak or wild,
But even the faintest relics of a shrine
Of any worship wake some thoughts divine.

* "The beautiful park of Newstead, which once was richly ornamented with two thousand seven hundred head of deer, and numberless fine-spreading oaks, is now divided and subdivided into farms."—THOMSON'S Nottinghamshire.

† See ante, Epistle to Augusta, p. 378.

‡ See ante, p. 335.

§ "In the bow-window of the Hall there are yet the arms of Newstead Priory, viz. England, with a chief azure, in the middle whereof is the Virgin Mary with Babe on."—THOMSON.

¶ "Next to the apartment called King Edward the Third's room, on account of that monarch having slept there, is the sounding gallery, so called from a very remarkable echo

LXII.

A mighty window, hollow in the centre,
Shorn of its glass of thousand colorings,
Through which the deepen'd glories once could enter,
Streaming from off the sun like seraph's wings.
Now yawns all desolate: now loud, now fainter,
The gale sweeps through its fretwork, and oft sings
The owl his anthem, where the silenced choir
Lies with their hallelujahs quench'd like fire.

LXIII.

But in the noontide of the moon, and when
The wind is winged from one point of heaven,
There means a strange unearthly sound, which
then
Is musical—a dying accent driven
Through the huge arch, which soars and sinks
again.
Some deem it but the distant echo given
Back to the night wind by the waterfall,
And harmonised by the old choral wall:

LXIV.

Others, that some original shape, or form
Shaped by decay perchance, hath given the power
(Though less than that of Memnon's statue, warm
In Egypt's rays, to harp at a fix'd hour)
To this gray ruin, with a voice to charm
Sad, but serene, it sweeps o'er tree or tower;
The cause I know not, nor can solve; but such
The fact:—I've heard it,—once perhaps too much.‡

LXV.

Amidst the court a Gothic fountain play'd,‡
Symmetrical, but deck'd with carvings quaint—
Strange faces, like to men in masquerade,
And here perhaps a monster, there a saint:
The spring gush'd through grim mouths of granite
made,
And sparkled into basins, where it spent
Its little torrent in a thousand bubbles,
Like man's vain glory, and his valner troubles.

LXVI.

The mansion's self was vast and venerable,
With more of the monastic than has been
Elsewhere preserved: the cloisters still were stable,
The cells, too, and refectory, I ween;
An exquisite small chapel had been able,
Still unimpaired, to decorate the scene; **
The rest had been reform'd, replaced, or sunk,
And spoke more of the baron than the monk.

LXVII.

Huge halls, long galleries, spacious chambers, join'd
By no quite lawful marriage of the arts,
Might shock a connoisseur; but when combined,
Form'd a whole which, irregular in parts,
Yet left a grand impression on the mind,
At least of those whose eyes are in their hearts:
We gaze upon a giant for his stature,
Nor judge at first if all be true to nature.

which it possesses."—Art. Newstead, in Beauties of England,
vol. xii.

¶ "From the windows of the gallery over the cloisters, we see the cloister court, with a basin in the centre, used as a saw for fish, &c."—Art. Newstead, in Beauties of England, vol. xii.

 "The cloisters exactly resemble those of Westminster Abbey, only on a smaller scale; but possessing, if possible, a more venerable appearance. These were the cloisters of the ancient abbey, and many of its ancient tenants now lie in silent repose under the flagged pavement. The ancient chapel, too, is still entire: its ceiling is a very handsome specimen of the Gothic style of springing arches."—Art.
Newstead, in Beauties of England, vol. xii.

LXVIII.

Steel barons, molten the next generation
To silken rows of gay and garter'd ears,
Glanced from the walls in goodly preservation :
And Lady Marys blooming into girls,
With fair long locks, had also kept their station :
And countesses mature in robes and pearls :
Also some beauties of Sir Peter Lely,
Whose drapery hints we may admire them freely.

LXIX.

Judges in very formidable ermine
Were there, with brows that did not much invite
The accused to think their lordships would determine
His cause by leaning much from might to right :
Bishops, who had not left a single sermon ;
Attorneys-general, awful to the sight,
As hinting more (unless our judgments warp us)
Of the "Star Chamber" than of "Habeas Corpus."

LXX.

Generals, some all in armor, of the old
And iron time, ere lead had ta'en the lead ;
Others in wigs of Marlborough's martial fold,
Huger than twelve of our degenerate breed :
Lordlings, with staves of white or keys of gold :
Nimrods, whose canvas scarce contain'd the
steed ;
And here and there some stern high patriot stood,
Who could not get the place for which he sued.

LXXI.

But ever and anon, to soothe your vision,
Fatigued with these hereditary glories,
There rose a Carlo Dolce or a Titian,
Or wilder group of savage Salvatore's :
Here danced Albano's boys, and here the sea alone
In Vernet's ocean lights ; and there the stories
Of martyrs awed, as Spagnoletto tainted
His brush with all the blood of all the sainted.

LXXII.

Here sweetly spread a landscape of Lorraine ;
There Rembrandt made his darkness equal light,
Or gloomy Caravaggio's gloomier stain
Bronzed o'er some lean and stolid anchorite :—
But, lo ! a Teniers' woad, and not in vain,
Your eyes to revel in a livelier sight :
His bell-mouth'd goblet makes me feel quite Danish ;
Or Dutch with thirst—What, ho ! a flask of Rhenish.

LXXIII.

Oh, reader ! if that thou canst read,—and know,
'T is not enough to spell, or even to read,
To constitute a reader : there must go
Virtues of which both you and I have need.
Firstly, begin with the beginning—(though
That clause is hard) ; and secondly, proceed ;
Thirdly, commence not with the end—or, sinning
In this sort, end at last with the beginning.

LXXIV.

But, reader, thou hast patient been of late,
While I, without remorse of rhyme, or fear,
Have built and laid out ground at such a rate,
Dan Phœbus takes me for an auctioneer.
That poets were so from their earliest date,
By Homer's "Catalogue of ships" is clear ;
But a mere modern must be moderate—
I spare you then the furniture and plate.

LXXV.

The mellow autumn came, and with it came
The promised party, to enjoy its sweets.
The corn is cut, the manor full of game ;
The pointer ranges, and the sportsman beats
In russet jacket :—lynx-like is his aim ;
Full grows his bag, and wonderful his feats.
Ah, snipe and partridges ! Ah, brilliant pheasants !
And ah, ye poachers !—"T is no sport for peasants.

LXXVI.

An English autumn, though it hath no vines,
Blushing with Bacchant coronals along
The paths, o'er which the far festoon entwines
The red grape in the sunny lands of song,
Hath yet a purchased choice of choicest wines ;
The claret light, and the Madeira strong.
If Britain mourn her bleakness, we can tell her,
The very best of vineyards is the cellar.

LXXVII.

Then, if she hath not that serene decline
Which makes the southern autumn's day appear
As if 't would to a second spring resign
The season, rather than to winter drar,—
Of in-door comforts still she hath a mine,—
The sea-coal fires, the "earliest of the year ;"
Without doors, too, she may compete in mellow,
As what is lost in green is gain'd in yellow.

LXXVIII.

And for the effeminate collegiatura—
Rife with more horns than hounds—she hath the chase,
So animated that it might allure a
Saint from his beads to join the jocund race ;
Even Nimrod's self might leave the plains of Dura ;
And wear the Melton jacket for a space :
If she hath no wild boars, she hath a tame
Preserve of bores, who ought to be made game.

LXXIX.

The noble guests, assembled at the Abbey,
Consisted of—we give the sex the pas—
The Duchess of Fitz-Fulke ; the Countess Crabby ;
The Ladies Scilly, Busey ;—Miss Ecclat,
Miss Bombazeen, Miss Mackstay, Miss O'Tabby,
And Mrs. Babbi, the rich banker's squaw ;
Also the honorable Mrs. Sleep,
Who look'd a white lamb, yet was a black sheep :

LXXX.

With other Countesses of Blank—but rank ;
At once the "lie" and the "élite" of crowds ;
Who pass like water filter'd in a tank,
All purged and pious from their native clouds ;
Or paper turn'd to money by the Bank :
No matter how or why, the passport shrouds
The "passée" and the past ; for good society
Is no less famed for tolerance than piety,—

LXXXI.

That is, up to a certain point ; which point
Forms the most difficult in punctuation.
Appearances appear to form the joint
On which it hinges in a higher station ;
And so that no explosion cry "A roint
Thee, witch !" or each Medea has her Jason ;
Or (to the point with Horace and with Pulci)
"Omne tulit punctum, quem miscuit utile dulci,"

* Salvatore Rosa.

† If I err not, "your Dane" is one of Inigo's catalogues of nations "acquainted in their drinking."

‡ In Assyria.

LXXXII.

I can't exactly trace their rule of right,
Which hath a little leaning to a lottery.
I've seen a virtuous woman put down quite
By the mere combination of a coterie;
Also a so-so matron boldly fight
Her way back to the world by dint of plottery,
And shine the very *Sirius of the spheres,
Escaping with a few slight, scarless sneers.

LXXXIII.

I have seen more than I'll say:—but we will see
How our villeggiatura will get on.
The party might consist of thirty-three
Of highest caste—the Brahmins of the ton.
I have named a few, not foremost in degree,
But ta'en at hazard as the rhyme may run.
By way of sprinkling, scatter'd amongst these,
There also were some Irish absentees.

LXXXIV.

There was Parolles, too, the legal bully,
Who limits all his battles to the bar
And senate: when invited elsewhere, truly,
He shows more appetite for words than war.
There was the young bard Backrhyme, who had newly
Come out and glimmer'd as a six weeks' star.
There was Lord Pyrrho, too, the great freethinker;
And Sir John Potdeeps, the mighty drinker.

LXXXV.

There was the Duke of Dash, who was a—duke,
"Ay, every inch a" duke; there were twelve peers
Like Charlemagne's—and all such peers in look
And intellect, that neither eyes nor ears
For commoners had ever them mistook.
There were the six Miss Rawbolds—pretty dears!
All song and sentiment; whose hearts were set
Less on a convent than on a coronet.

LXXXVI.

There were four Honorable Misters, whose Honor was more before their names than after;
There was the preux Chevalier de la Ruse,
Whom France and Fortune lately deign'd to wait
here,
Whose chiefly harmless talent was to amuse;
But the dubs found it rather serious laughter,
Because—such was his magic power to please—
The dice seem'd charm'd, too, with his repartees.

LXXXVII.

There was Dick Jargon, the metaphysician,
Who loved philosophy and a good dinner;
Angle, the soi-disant mathematician;
Sir Henry Silvercup, the great race-winner.
There was the Reverend Rodomont Precisian,
Who did not hate so much the sin as sinner:
And Lord Augustus Fitz-Plantagenet,
Good at all things, but better at a bet.

LXXXVIII.

There was Jack Jargon, the gigantic guardsman;
And General Fireface, famous in the field,
A great tactician, and no less a swordsman,
Who ate, last war, more Yankees than he kill'd.
There was the waggish Welsh Judge, Jeffries
Hardsman,†
In his grave office so completely skill'd,
That when a culprit came for condemnation,
He had his judge's joke for consolation.

* Sirius, i. e., bitch-star.

† George Hardinge, Esq., M. P., one of the Welsh judges, died in 1818.

LXXXIX.

Good company's a chess-board—there are kings,
Queens, bishops, knights, rooks, pawns; the world's a game;
Save that the puppets pull at their own strings,
Methinks gay Punch hath something of the same.
My Muse, the butterfly hath but her wings,
Not stings, and flits through ether without aim.
Alighting rarely:—were she but a hornet,
Perhaps there might be vices which would mourn it.

XC.

I had forgotten—but must not forget—
An orator, the latest of the session,
Who had deliver'd well a very set Smooth speech, his first and maidenly trans-
gression

Upon debate: the papers echo'd yet
With his début, which made a strong impression,
And rank'd with what in every day display'd—
"The best first speech that ever yet was made."

XCI.

Proud of his "Hear him!" proud, too, of his role
And lost virginity of oratory,
Proud of his learning (just enough to quote),
He revell'd in his Ciceronian glory:
With memory excellent to get by rote,
With wit to hatch a pun or tell a story,
Graced with some merit, and with more effrontery,
"His country's pride," he came down to the country.

XCII.

There also were two wits by acclamation,
Longbow from Ireland, Strongbow from the Tweed,‡
Both lawyers and both men of education:
But Strongbow's wit was of more polish'd breed;
Longbow was rich in an imagination
As beautiful and bounding as a steed,
But sometimes stumbling over a potato,—
While Strongbow's best things might have come from Cato.

XCIII.

Strongbow was like a new-tuned harpichord;
But Longbow wild as an Æolian harp,
With which the winds of heaven can claim accord,
And make a music, whether flat or sharp.
Of Strongbow's talk you would not change a word:
At Longbow's phrases you might sometimes carp:
Both wits—one born so, and the other bred,
This by his heart—his rival by his head.

XCIV.

If all these seem an heterogeneous mass
To be assembled at a country seat,
Yet think, a specimen of every class
Is better than a humdrum tête-à-tête.
The days of Comedy are gone, alas!
When Congreve's fool could vie with Mollins's bête:
Society is smooth'd to that excess,
That manners hardly differ more than dress.

XCV.

Our ridicules are kept in the back-ground—
Ridiculous enough, but also dull;
Professions, too, are no more to be found
Professional; and there is nought to cull
Of folly's fruit; for though your fools abound,
They're barren, and not worth the pains to pull.
Society is now one polish'd horde,
Form'd of two mighty tribes, the Bored and Bored.

‡ Curran and Burke.

XCVI.

But from being farmers, we turn gleaners, gleanings
The scanty but right-well thread'd ears of truth;
And, gentle reader! when you gather meaning,
You may be Boaz, and I—modest Ruth.
Further I'd quote, but Scripture intervening
Forbids. A great impression in my youth
Was made by Mrs. Adams, where she cries,
"That Scriptures out of church are blasphemies."*

XCVII.

But what we can we glean in this vile age
Of chaff, although our gleanings be not grist.
I must not quite omit the talking sage,
Kit-Cat, the famous conversationist,
Who, in his commonplace book, had a page
Prepared each morn for evenings, "List, oh list!"
"Alas, poor ghost!"—What unexpected woes
Await those who have studied their bons-mots!

XCVIII.

Firstly, they must allure the conversation,
By many windings, to their clever clinch;
And secondly, must let slip no occasion,
Nor bode (abat.) their hearers of an inch,
But take an ell—and make a great sensation,
If possible; and thirdly, never flinch
When some smart talker puts them to the test,
But seize the last word, which no doubt 's the best.

XCIX.

Lord Henry and his lady were the hosts;
The party we have touch'd on were the guests.
Their table was a board to tempt even ghosts
To pass the Styx for more substantial feasts.
I will not dwell upon ragouts or roasts,
Albeit all human history attests
That happiness for man—the hungry sinner!—
Since Eve ate apples, much depends on dinner.†

C.

Witness the lands which "flow'd with milk and honey,"
Held out unto the hungry Israelites:
To this we have added since, the love of money,
The only sort of pleasure which requites.
Youth fades, and leaves our days no longer sunny;
We tire of mistresses and parasites;
But oh, ambrosial cash! Ah! who would lose thee?
When we no more can use, or even abuse thee!

CI.

The gentlemen got up betimes to shoot,
Or hunt: the young, because they liked the sport—
The first thing boys like after play and fruit;
The middle-aged, to make the day more short;
For even is a growth of English root,
Though nameless in our language!—we retort
The fact for words, and let the French translate
That awful yawn which sleep can not abate.

* "Mrs. Adams answered Mr. Adams, that it was blasphemous to talk of Scripture out of church." This dogma was broached to her husband—the best Christian in any book.—See Joseph Andrews.

† "A man seldom thinks with more earnestness of any thing than he does of his dinner; and if he cannot get that well dressed, he should be suspected of inaccuracy in other things."—JOHNSON.

‡ It would have taught him humanity at least. This sentimental savage, whom it is a mode to quote (amongst the novelists) to show their sympathy for innocent sports and old songs, teaches how to sew up frogs, and break their legs by way of experiment, in addition to the art of angling,—the cruellest, the coldest, and the roughest of pretended sports. They may talk about the beauties of nature, but the angler

CII.

The elderly walk'd through the library,
And tumbled books, or criticised the pictures,
Or saunter'd through the gardens piteously;
And made upon the hot-house several strictures,
Or rode a nag which trotted not too high,
Or on the morning papers read their lectures,
Or on the watch their longing eyes would fix,
Longing at sixty for the hour of six.

CIII.

But none were "géné;" the great hour of union
Was rung by dinner's knell; till then all were Masters of their own time—or in communion,
Or solitary, as they chose to bear
The hours, which which to pass is but to few
know.
Each rose up at his own, and had to spare
What time he chose for dress, and broke his fast
When, where, and how he chose for that repast.

CIV.

The ladies—some rouged, some a little pale—
Met the morn as they might. If fine, they rode,
Or walk'd; if foul, they read, or told a tale,
Sung, or rehearsed the last dance from abroad;
Discuss'd the fashion which might next prevail,
And settled bonnets by the newest code,
Or cramm'd twelve sheets into one little letter,
To make each correspondent a new debtor.

CV.

For some had absent lovers, all had friends.
The earth has nothing like a she epistle,
And hardly heaven—because it never ends.
I love the mystery of a female misal,
Which, like a creed, ne'er says all it intends,
But full of cunning as Ulysses' whistle,
When he allured poor Dolon:—you had better
Take care what you reply to such a letter.

CVI.

Then there were billiards: cards, too, but no dice;—
Save in the clubs no man of honor plays;—
Boats when 't was water, skating when 't was ice,
And the hard frost destroy'd the scenting days:
And angling, too, that solitary vice,
Whatever Isaac Walton sings or says:
The quaint, old, cruel coxcomb, in his gullet
Should have a hook, and a small trout to pull it.‡

CVII.

With evening came the banquet and the wine;
The conversation; or the duel,
Attuned by voices more or less divine
(My heart or head aches with the memory yet).
The four Miss Rawbolds in a glee would shine;
But the two youngest loved more to be set
Down to the harp—because to music's charms
They added graceful necks, white hands and arms.

merely thinks of his dish of fish; he has no leisure to take his eyes from off the stream, and a single bite is worth to him more than all the scenery around. Besides, some fish bite best on a rainy day. The whale, the shark, and the tunny fishery have somewhat of noble and perilous in them; even net fishing, trawling, etc. are more humane and useful. But angling!—no angler can be a good man.

"One of the best men I ever knew,—as humane, delicate-minded, generous, and excellent a creature as any in the world,—was an angler: true, he angled with painted flies, and would have been incapable of the extravagancies of I. Walton."

The above addition was made by a friend in reading over the MS.—"Andi alteram pariem."—I leave it to counterbalance my own observation.

CVIII.

Sometimes a dance (though rarely on field days,
For then the gentlemen were rather tired)
Display'd some sylph-like figures in its mase;
Then there was small-talk ready when required;
Flirtation—but decorous; the mere praise
Of charms that should or should not be admired.
The hunters fought their fox-hunt o'er again,
And then retreated soberly—at ten.

CIX.

The politicians, in a nook apart,
Discuss'd the world, and settled all the spheres:
The wits watch'd every loophole for their art,
To introduce a bon-mot head and ears;
Small is the rest of those who would be smart,
A moment's good thing may have cost them years
Before they find an hour to introduce it;
And then, even then, some bore may make them lose it.

CX.

But all was gentle and aristocratic
In this our party; polish'd, smooth, and cold,
As Phidian forms cut out of marble Attic.
There now are no Squire Westerns as of old;
And our Sophias are not so emphatic,
But fair as then, or fairer to behold.
We have no accomplish'd blackguards, like Tom Jones,
But gentlemen in stays, as stiff as stones.

CXI.

They separated at an early hour;
That is, ere midnight—which is London's noon:
But in the country ladies seek their bower
A little earlier than the waning moon.
Peace to the slumbers of each folded flower—
May the rose call back its true color soon!
Good hours of fair cheeks are the fairest tincters,
And lower the price of rouge—at least some winters.

CANTO THE FOURTEENTH.

I.

Ir from great nature's or our own abyss
Of thought we could but snatch a certainty,
Perhaps mankind might find the path they miss—
But then 't would spoil much good philosophy.
One system eats another up, and this
Much as old Saturn ate his progeny;
For when his pious consort gave him stones
In lieu of sons, of these he made no bones.

II.

But System doth reverse the Titan's breakfast,
And eats her parents, albeit the digestion
Is difficult. Pray tell me, can you make fast,
After due search, your faith to any question?
Look back o'er ages, ere unto the stake fast
You bind yourself, and call some mode the best
one.
Nothing more true than not to trust your senses;
And yet what are your other evidences?

III.

For me, I know nought; nothing I deny,
Admit, reject, condemn; and what know you,
Except perhaps that you were born to die?
And both may after all turn out untrue.

An age may come, Font of Eternity,
When nothing shall be either old or new.
Death, so call'd, is a thing which makes men weep,
And yet a third of life is pass'd in sleep.

IV.

A sleep without dreams, after a rough day
Of toil, is what we covet most; and yet
How clay shrinks back from more quiescent clay!
The very Suicide that pays his debt
At once without installments (an old way
Of paying debts, which creditors regret),
Lets out impatiently his rushing breath,
Less from disgust of life than dread of death.

V.

'T is round him, near him, here, there, everywhere,
And there's a courage which grows out of fear,
Perhaps of all most desperate, which will dare
The worst to know it:—when the mountains rear
Their peaks beneath your human foot, and there
You look down o'er the precipice, and drear
The gulf of rock yawns,—you can't gaze a minute,
Without an awful wish to plunge within it.

VI.

'T is true, you don't—but, pale and struck with terror,
Retire: but look into your past impression!
And you will find, though shuddering at the mirror
Of your own thoughts, in all their self-confession,
The lurking bias, be it truth or error,
To the unknown; a secret prepossession,
To plunge with all your fears—but where? You know not,
And that's the reason why you do—or do not.

VII.

But what's this to the purpose? you will say.
Gent. reader, nothing; a mere speculation,
For which my sole excuse is—'t is my way;
Sometimes with and sometimes without occasion,
I write what's uppermost, without delay;
This narrative is not meant for narration,
But a mere airy and fantastic basis,
To build up common things with common places.

VIII.

You know, or don't know, that great Bacon saith,
"Fling up a straw, 't will show the way the wind blows;"
And such a straw, borne on by human breath,
Is poetry, according as the mind glows;
A paper kite which flies 'twixt life and death,
A shadow which the onward soul behind throws:
And mine's a bubble, not blown up for praise,
But just to play with, as an infant plays.

IX.

The world is all before me—or behind;
For I have seen a portion of that same,
And quite enough for me to keep in mind:—
Of passions, too, I have proved enough to blame,
To the great pleasure of our friends, mankind,
Who like to mix some slight alloy with fame;
For I was rather famous in my time,
Until I fairly knock'd it up with rhyme.

X.

I have brought this world about my ears, and eke
The other; that's to say, the clergy—who Upon my head have bid their thunders break
In plots libels by no means a few.
And yet I can't help scribbling once a week,
Tiring old readers, nor discovering new.
In youth I wrote because my mind was full,
And now because I feel it growing dull.

XI.

But "why then publish?"—there are no rewards
Of fame or profit when the world grows weary.
I ask in turn,—Why do you play at cards?
Why drink? Why read?—To make some hour less dreary.
It occupies me to turn back regards
On what I've seen or ponder'd, sad or cheery;
And what I write I cast upon the stream,
To swim or sink—I have had at least my dream.

XII.

I think that were I certain of success,
I hardly could compose another line:
So long I've battled either more or less,
That no defeat can drive me from the Nine.
This feeling 't is not easy to express,
And yet 't is not affected, I opine.
In play, there are two pleasures for your choosing—
The one is winning, and the other losing.

XIII.

Besides, my Muse by no means deals in fiction:
She gathers a repertory of facts,
Of course with some reserve and slight restriction,
But mostly sings of human things and acts—
And that 's one cause she meets with contradiction;
For too much truth, at first sight, ne'er attracts;
And were her object only what 's call'd glory,
With more ease too she'd tell a different story.

XIV.

Love, war, a tempest—surely there 's variety;
Also a seasoning alight of lucubration;
A bird's-eye view, too, of that wild, Society;
A slight glance thrown on men of every station.
If you have nought else, here 's at least satletry,
Both in performance and in preparation;
And though these lines should only line port-manteaus,
Trade will be all the better for these Cantos.

XV.

The portion of this world which I at present
Have taken up to fill the following sermon,
Is one of which there 's no description recent:
The reason why, is easy to determine:
Although it seems both prominent and pleasant,
There is a sameness in its game and ermine,
A dull and family likeness through all ages,
Of no great promise for poetic pages.

XVI.

With much to excite, there 's little to exalt;
Nothing that speaks to all men and all times;
A sort of varnish over every fault;
A kind of commonplace, even in their crimes;
Facitious passions, wit without much salt,
A want of that true nature which sublimates
Whatever it shows with truth; a smooth monotony
Of character, in those at least who have got any.

XVII.

Sometimes, indeed, like soldiers off parade,
They break their ranks and gladly leave the drill;
But then the roll-call draws them back afraid,
And they must be or seem what they were: still Doubtless it is a brilliant masquerade:
But when of the first sight you have had your fill,
It palls—at least it did so upon me,
This paradise of pleasure and ennui.

XVIII.

When we have made our love, and gam'd our gam-
ing,
Drest, voted, shone, and, may be, something
more;

With dandles dined; heard senators declaiming;
Seen beauties brought to market by the score,
Said rakes to sadder husbands chastely taming;
There 's little left but to be bored or bore.
Witness those "ci-devant jeunes hommes" who stem
The stream, nor leave the world which leaveth them.

XIX.

'T is said—indeed a general complaint—
That no one has succeeded in describing
The monde, exactly as they ought to paint:
Some say, that authors only snatch, by bribing
The porter, some slight scandals strange and quaint,
To furnish matter for their moral gilding;
And that their books have but one style in common—
My lady's prattle, alter'd through her woman.

XX.

But this can't well be true, just now; for writers
Are grown of the beau monde a part potential:
I've seen them balance even the scale with fighters,
Especially when young, for that 's essential.
Why do their sketches fall them as inditers
Of what they deem themselves most consequential,
The real portrait of the highest tribe?
'T is that, in fact, there 's little to describe.

XXI.

"Haud ignara loquor:" these are Nugas, "*quarum
Pars parva fui*," but still art and part.
Now I could much more easily sketch a harem,
A battle, wreck, or history of the heart,
Than these things; and besides, I wish to spare
'em,
For reasons which I choose to keep apart.
"Vaibo Cereis sacrum qui vulgaris!"—
Which means, that vulgar people must not share it.

XXII.

And therefore what I throw off is ideal—
Lower'd, leaven'd, like a history of freemasons;
Which bears the same relation to the real,
As Captain Parry's voyage may do to Jason's.
The grand arcanum 's not for men to see at all;
My music has some mystic diapacons;
And there is much which could not be appreciated
In any manner by the uninitiated.

XXIII.

Alas! worlds fall—and woman, since she fell'd
The world (as, since that history, less polite
Than true, hath been a creed so strictly held),
Has not yet given up the practice quite.
Poor thing of usages! coerced, compell'd,
Victim when wrong, and martyr oft when right,
Condemn'd to child-bed, as men for their sins
Have shaving too entail'd upon their chins,—

XXIV.

A daily plague, which in the aggregate
May average on the whole with parturition.
But as to women, who can penetrate
The real sufferings of their she condition?
Man's very sympathy with their estate
Has much of selfishness, and more suspicion.
Their love, their virtue, beauty, education,
But form good housekeepers, to breed a nation.

XXV.

All this were very well, and can't be better;
But even this is difficult, Heaven knows,
So many troubles from her birth beset her,
Such small distinction between friends and foes,
The gilding wears so soon from off her fetter,
That—but ask any woman if she'd choose

(Take her at thirty, that is) to have been Female or male? a schoolboy or a queen?

XXVI.

"Petticoat influence" is a great reproach,
Which even those who obey would fain be thought
To fly from, as from hungry pines a roush;
But since beneath it upon earth we are brought,
By various joltings of life's hackney coach,
I for one venerate a petticoat—
A garment of a mystical sublimity,
No matter whether russet, silk, or dimity.

XXVII.

Much I respect, and much I have adored,
In my young days, that chaste and goodly veil,
Which holds a treasure, like a miser's hoard,
And more attracts by all it doth conceal—
A golden scabbard on a Damascus sword,
A loving letter with a mystic seal,
A cure for grief—for what can ever rankle
Before a petticoat and peeping ankle?

XXVIII.

And when upon a silent, sullen day,
With a sirocco, for example, blowing,
When even the sea looks dim with all its spray,
And sulkily the river's ripple 's flowing,
And the sky shows that very ancient gray,
The sober, sad antithesis to glowing,—
'Tis pleasant, if then anything is pleasant,
To catch a glimpse even of a pretty peasant.

XXIX.

We left our heroes and our heroines
In that fair clime which don't depend on climate,
Quite independent of the Zodiac's signs,
Though certainly more difficult to rhyme at.
Because the sun, and stars, and aught that shines,
Mountains, and all we can be most sublime at,
Are there oft dull and dreary as a dun—
Whether a sky's or tradesman's is all one.

XXX.

An indoor life is less poetical;
And out-of-door hath showers, and mists, and sleet.

With which I could not brew a pastoral.
But be it as it may, a bard must meet
All difficulties, whether great or small,
To spoil his undertaking, or complete,
And work away like spirit upon matter,
Embarrass'd somewhat both with fire and water.

XXXI.

Juan—in this respect, at least, like saints—
Was all things unto people of all sorts,
And lived contentedly, without complaints,
In camps, in ships, in cottages, or courts—
Born with that happy soul which seldom faints,
And mingling modestly in toils or sports.
He likewise could be most things to all women,
Without the coxcombry of certain she men.

XXXII.

A fox-hunt to a foreigner is strange;
'Tis also subject to the double danger
Of tumbling first, and having in exchange
Some pleasant jesting at the awkward stranger:

* Craving.—"To crane" is, or was, an expression used to denote a gentleman's stretching out his neck over a hedge, "to look before he leaped;"—a pause in his "vaulting ambition," which in the field doth occasion some delay and exasperation in those who may be immediately behind the equestrian skeptic. "Sir, if you don't choose to take the

But Juan had been early taught to range
The wilds, as doth an Arab turn'd avenger,
So that his horse, or charger, hunter, hack,
Knew that he had a rider on his back.

XXXIII.

And now in this new field, with some applause,
He clear'd hedge, ditch, and double post and rail,
And never craned,* and made but few "foras pas,"
And only fretted when the scent 'gan fail.
He broke, 'tis true, some statutes of the laws
Of hunting—for the sagest youth is frail,
Rode o'er the bounds, it may be, now and then,
And once o'er several country gentlemen.

XXXIV.

But on the whole, to general admiration
He acquitted both himself and horse: the squire
Marvel'd at merit of another nation:
The boon cried "Dang it! who'd have thought it?"—Siree,
The Nestors of the sporting generation,
Swore praises, and recall'd their former fires;
The huntaman's self relented to a grin,
And rated him almost a whippet-in.

XXXV.

Such were his trophies—not of spear and shield,
But leaps, and bursts, and sometimes fores
brushes;
Yet I must own,—although in this I yield
To patriot sympathy a Briton's blushes,—
He thought at heart like courtly Chesterfield,
Who, after a long chase o'er hills, dales, bushes,
And what not, though he rode beyond all price,
Ask'd next day, "if men ever hunted twice?"†

XXXVI.

He also had a quality uncommon
To early risers after a long chase,
Who wake in winter ere the cock can summon December's drowsy day to his dull race,—
A quality agreeable to woman,
When her soft, liquid words run on apace,
Who likes a listener, whether saint or sinner,—
He did not fall asleep just after dinner;

XXXVII.

But, light and airy, stood on the alert,
And shone in the best part of dialogue,
By humoring always what they might assert,
And listening to the topics most in vogue,
Now grave, now gay, but never dull or pert;
And smiling but in secret—cunning rogue!—
He ne'er presumed to make an error clearer;—
In short, there never was a better hearer.

XXXVIII.

And then he danced;—all foreigners excel
The serious Angles in the eloquence
Of pantomime;—he danced, I say, right well,
With emphaas, and also with good sense—
A thing in footing indispensable;
He danced without theatrical pretences,
Not like a ballet-master in the van
Of his drill'd nymphs, but like a gentleman.

XXXIX.

Chaste were his steps, each kept within due bound,
And elegance was sprinkled o'er his figure:

leap, let me!"—was a phrase which generally sent the spectator on again; and to good purpose: for though "the horse and rider" might fall, they made a gap through which, and over him and his steed, the field might follow.

† See his Letters to his Son.

Like swift Camilla, he scarce skimmi'd the ground,
And rather held in than put forth his vigor;
And then he had an ear for music's sound,
Which might defy a crotchet critic's rigor.
Such classic pas-sans flaws—set off our hero,
He glanced like a personified Bolero;*

XLI.

Or like a sying Hour before Aurora,
In Guido's famous fresco,† which alone
Is worth a tour to Rome, although no more a Remnant were there of the old world's sole throne.
The "tout ensemble" of his movements were a
Grace of the soft ideal, seldom shown,
And ne'er to be described; for to the dolor
Of bards and prosers, words are void of color.

XLII.

No marvel then he was a favorite;
A full-grown Cupid, very much admired;
A little spoilt, but by no means so quite;
At least he kept his vanity retired.
Such was his tact, he could alike delight
The chaste, and those who are not so much inspired.

The Duchess of Fitz-Fulke, who loved "tracasserie,"
Began to treat him with some small "agacerie."

XLIII.

She was a fine and somewhat full-blown blonde,
Desirable, distinguish'd, celebrated
For several winters in the grand, grand monde.
I'd rather not say what might be related
Of her exploits, for this were ticklish ground;
Besides there might be falsehood in what's stated:
Her late performance had been a dead set
At Lord Augustus Fitz-Plantagenet.

XLIII.

This noble personage began to look
A little black upon this new flirtation;
But such small licenses must lovers brook,
Mere freedoms of the female corporation.
Woe to the man who ventures a rebuke!
'Twill but precipitate a situation
Extremely disagreeable, but common
To calculators when they count on woman.

XLIV.

The circle smiled, then whisper'd, and then sneer'd;
The misses bridled, and the matrons frown'd;
Some hoped things might not turn out as they feared;
Some would not deem such women could be found;
Some ne'er believed one half of what they heard;
Some look'd perplex'd, and others look'd pro-
found;
And several pitied with sincere regret
Poor Lord Augustus Fitz-Plantagenet.

XLV.

But what is odd, none ever named the duke,
Who, one might think, was something in the affair;
True, he was absent, and, 't was rumor'd, took
But small concern about the when, or where,
Or what his consort did: if he could brook
Her gayeties, none had a right to stare:

There was that best of unions, past all doubt,
Which never meets, and therefore can't fall out.

XLVI.

But, oh! that I should ever pen so sad a line!
Fired with an abstract love of virtue, she,
My Dian of the Ephesians, Lady Adeline,
Began to think the duchess' conduct free;
Regretting much that she had chosen so bad a line,
And waxing chillier in her courtesy,
Look'd grave and pale to see her friend's fragility,
For which most friends reserve their sensibility.

XLVII.

There's nought in this bad world like sympathy:
'Tis so becoming to the soul and face,
Sets to soft music the harmonious sigh,
And robes sweet friendship in a Brussels lace.
Without a friend, what were humanity,
To hunt our errors up with a good grace?
Consoling us with—"Would you had thought twice!
Ah! if you had but follow'd my advice!"

XLVIII.

Oh, Job! you had two friends: one's quite enough,
Especially when we are ill at ease;
They are but bad pilots when the weather's rough,
Doctors less famous for their cures than fees.
Let no man grumble when his friends fall off,
As they will do like leaves at the first breeze:
When your affairs come round, one way or t' other,
Go to the coffee-house, and take another.‡

XLIX.

But this is not my marin: had it been,
Some heartaches had been spared me: yet I care
not—
I would not be a tortoise in his screen
Of stubborn shell, which waves and weather wear not.
'Tis better on the whole to have felt and seen
That which humanity may bear, or bear not:
'Twill teach discernment to the sensitive,
And not to pour their ocean in a sieve.

L.

Of all the horrid, hideous notes of woe,
Sadder than owl-songs or the midnight blast,
Is that portentous phrase, "I told you so,"
Utter'd by friends, those prophets of the past,
Who, 'stead of saying what you now should do,
Own they foresaw that you would fall at last,
And solace your slight lapse 'gainst "bonos mores,"
With a long memorandum of old stories.

LI.

The Lady Adeline's serene severity
Was not confined to feeling for her friend.
Whose fame she rather doubted with posterity,
Unless her habits should begin to mend:
But Juan also shared in her austerity,
But mix'd with pity, pure as e'er was penn'd:
His inexperience moved her gentle ruth,
And (as her junior by six weeks) his youth.

LII.

These forty days' advantage of her years—
And here were those which can face calculation,

* A Spanish dance noted for its liveliness.

† Guido's most celebrated work, in the palace of Rome, is his fresco of the Aurora, in the Palazzo Napolitano."— BRYAN.

‡ In Swift's or Horace Walpole's letters I think it is mentioned that somebody, regretting the loss of a friend, was answered by an universal Pythias: "When I lose one, I go to the Saint James's Coffee-house, and take another." I recollect having heard an anecdote of the same kind.—Sir W.

D. was a great gamester. Coming in one day to the club of which he was a member, he was observed to look melancholy.
"What is the matter, Sir William?" cried Hare, of facetious memory. "Ah!" replied Sir W. "I have just lost poor Lady D."—"Lost! What st! Quines or Hazard!" was the consolatory rejoinder of the querist.

Boldly referring to the list of peers
And noble births, nor dread the enumeration—
Gave her a right to have maternal fears
For a young gentleman's fit education,
Though she was far from that leap-year, whose leap,
In female dates, strikes Time all of a heap.

LIII.

This may be fix'd at somewhere before thirty—
Say seven-and-twenty; for I never knew
The strictest in chronology and virtue
Advance beyond, while they could pass for new.
Oh, Time! why dost not pause? Thy scythe, so dirty
With rust, should surely cease to hack and hew.
Reset it; shave more smoothly, also slower,
If but to keep thy credit as a mower.

LIV.

But Adeline was far from that ripe age,
Whose ripeness is but bitter at the best:
'T was rather her experience made her sage,
For she had seen the world and stood its test,
As I have said in—I forget what page:
My Muse despises reference, as you have guess'd
By this time;—but strike six from seven-and-twenty,
And you will find her sum of years in plenty.

LV.

At sixteen she came out; presented, vaunted,
She put all coronets into commotion:
At seventeen, too, the world was still enchanted
With the new Venus of their brilliant ocean:
At eighteen, though below her feet still panted
A hecatomb of suitors with devotion,
She had consented to create again
That Adam, call'd "The happiest of men."

LVI.

Since then she had sparkled through three glowing winters,
Admired, adored; but also so correct,
That she had puzzled all the acutest hinters,
Without the apparel of being circumspect:
They could not even glean the slightest splinters
From off the marble, which had no defect.
She had also snatch'd a moment since her marriage
To bear a son and heir—and one miscarriage.

LVII.

Fondly the wheeling fire-dies flew around her,
Those little glitterers of the London night:
But none of these possess'd a sting to wound her—
She was a pitch beyond a coxcomb's flight.
Perhaps she wish'd an aspirant profounder;
But whate'er she wish'd, she acted right;
And whether coldness, pride, or virtue, dignify
A woman, so she's good, what does it signify?

LVIII.

I hate a motive, like a lingering bottle
Which with the landlord makes too long a stand,
Leaving all-claretless the unmoisten'd throttle,
Especially with politics on hand;
I hate it, as I hate a drove of cattle,
Who whirl the dust as simooms whirl the sand;
I hate it, as I hate an argument,
A laureate's ode, or servile peer's "content."

LIX.

'T is sad to hack into the roots of things,
They are so much intertwined with the earth;

So that the branch a goodly verdure flings,
I reckon not if an acorn gave it birth.
To trace all actions to their secret springs
Would make indeed some melancholy mirth;
But this is not at present my concern,
And I refer you to wise Ozenstern.*

LX.

With the kind view of saving an éclat,
Both to the duchess and diplomatist,
The Lady Adeline, as soon 's she saw
That Juan was unlikely to resist—
(For foreigners don't know that a faux pas
In England ranks quite on a different list
From those of other lands unblest with juries, Whose verdict for such sin a certain cure is;—)

LXI.

The Lady Adeline resolved to take Such measures as she thought might best impede
The further progress of this sad mistake.
She thought with some simplicity indeed;
But innocence is bold even at the stake,
And simple in the world, and doth not need
Nor use those palisades by dames erected,
Whose virtue lies in never being detected.

LXII.

It was not that she fear'd the very worst:
His Grace was an enduring, married man,
And was not likely all at once to burst
Into a scene, and swell the clients' clan
Of Doctors' Commons; but she dreaded first
The magic of her Grace's talisman,
And next a quarrel (as he seem'd to fret)
With Lord Augustus Fitz-Plantagenet.

LXIII.

Her Grace, too, pass'd for being an intrigante,
And somewhat méchante in her amorous sphere;
One of those pretty, precious plagues, which haunt
A lover with caprices soft and dear,
That like to make a quarrel, when they can't Find one, each day of the delightful year:
Bewitching, torturing, as they freeze or glow,
And—what is worst of all—won't let you go:

LXIV.

The sort of thing to turn a young man's head,
Or make a Werter of him in the end.
No wonder then a prurient soul should read
This sort of chaste Madison for a friend;
It were much better to be wed or dead,
Than wear a heart a woman loves to rend.
'T is best to pause, and think, ere you rush on,
If that a "bonne fortune" be really "bonne."

LXV.

And first, in the overflowing of her heart,
Which really knew or thought it knew no guile,
She call'd her husband now and then apart,
And bade him counsel Juan. With a smile
Lord Henry heard her plans of artless art
To wean Don Juan from the siren's wile;
And answer'd, like a statesman or a prophet,
In such guise that she could make nothing of it.

LXVI.

Firstly, he said, "he never interfered
In anybody's business but the king's:"

* The famous Chancellor Ozenstern said to his son, on the latter expressing his surprise upon the great effects arising from petty causes in the presumed mystery of politics: "You see by this, my son, with how little wisdom the kingdoms of the world are governed."—(The true story is: young Ozenstern, on being told he was to proceed on some diplomatic mission, expressed his doubts of his own fitness for such an office. The old chancellor, laughing, answered,—"Nemo, ni falli, quantalū scientiā gubernator mundus.")

Next, that "he never judged from what appear'd,
Without strong reason, of those sort of things:"
Thirdly, that "Juan had more brain than beard,
And was not to be held in leading strings;"
And fourthly, what need hardly be said twice,
"That good but rarely came from good advice."

LXXVII.

And, therefore, doubtless to approve the truth
Of the last axiom, he advised his spouse
To leave the parties to themselves, forsooth—
At least as far as bienséance allows.
That time would temper Juan's faults of youth;
That young men rarely made monastic vows;
That opposition only more attachée—
But here a messenger brought in despatches:

LXXVIII.

And being of the council call'd "the Privy,"
Lord Henry walk'd into his cabinet,
To furnish matter for some future Livy
To tell how he reduced the nation's debt;
And if their full contents I do not give ye,
It is because I do not know them yet;
But I shall add them in a brief appendix,
To come between mine epic and its index.

LXXIX.

But ere he went, he added a slight hint,
Another gentle commonplace or two,
Such as are coin'd in conversation's mint,
And pass, for want of better, though not new:
Then broke his packet, to see what was in't,
And having casually glanced it through,
Retired: and, as he went out, calmly kiss'd her,
Less like a young wife than an aged sister.

LXXX.

He was a cold, good, honorable man,
Proud of his birth, and proud of everything;
A goodly spirit for a state divan,
A figure fit to walk before a king;
Tall, stately, form'd to lead the courtly van
On birthdays, glorious with a star and string;
The very model of a chamberlain—
And such I mean to make him when I reign.

LXXXI.

But there was something wanting on the whole—
I don't know what, and therefore cannot tell—
Which pretty women—the sweet souls!—call soul.
Certain it was not body; he was well
Proportion'd, as a poplar or a pole,
A handsome man, that human miracle;
And in each circumstance of love or war
Had still preserved his perpendicular.

LXXXII.

Still there was something wanting, as I've said—
That undefinable "Je ne sais quoi,"
Which, for what I know, may of yore have led
To Homer's Iliad, since it drew to Troy
The Greek Eve, Helen, from the Spartan's bed:
Though on the whole, no doubt, the Dardan boy
Was much inferior to King Menelaüs:—
But thus it is some women will betray us.

LXXXIII.

There is an awkward thing which much perplexes,
Unless like wise Thesias we had proved
By turns the difference of the several sexes:
Neither can show quite how they would be loved.
The sensual for a short time but connects us—
The sentimental boasts to be unmov'd;

But both together form a kind of centaurs,
Upon whose back 't is better not to venture.

LXXXIV.

A something all-sufficient for the heart
Is that for which the sex are always seeking:
But how to fill up that same vacant part?
There lies the rub—and this they are but weak in.
Frail mariners afloat without a chart,
They run before the wind through high seas
breaking;
And when they have made the shore through every shock,
'T is odd, or odds, it may turn out a rock.

LXXXV.

There is a flower call'd "Love in Idleness,"
For which see Shakspeare's ever blooming garden:—
I will not make his great description less,
And beg his British godship's humble pardon,
If, in my extremity of rhyme's distress,
I touch a single leaf where he is warden:—
But though the flower is different, with the French
Or Swiss Rousseau, cry "Voilà la Perennée!"^{*}

LXXXVI.

Eureka! I have found it! What I mean
To say is, not that love is idleness,
But that in love such idleness has been
An accessory, as I have cause to guess.
Hard labor's an indifferent go-between;
Your men of business are not apt to express
Much passion, since the merchant-ship, the Argo,
Convey'd Medea as her supercargo.

LXXXVII.

"Beatus ille proci!" from "negotii,"[†]
Saith Horace; the great little poet's wrong;
His other maxim, "Nascitur à sociis,"
Is much more to the purposes of his song;
Though even that were sometimes too ferocious,
Unless good company be kept too long;
But, in his teeth, whate'er their state or station,
Thrice happy they who have an occupation!

LXXXVIII.

Adam exchanged his paradise for ploughing,
Eve made up millinery with fig leaves—
The earliest knowledge from the tree so knowing,
As far as I know, that the church receives:
And since that time it need not cost much showing,
That many of the ills o'er which man grieves,
And still more woman, spring from not employing
Some hours to make the remnant worth enjoying.

LXXXIX.

And hence high life is oft a dreary void,
A rack of pleasures, where we must invent
A something wherewithal to be annoy'd.
Bards may sing what they please about Contents;
Contented, when translated, means but cloy'd;
And hence arise the woes of sentiment,
Blue devils, and blue-stockings, and romances
Reduced to practice, and perform'd like dances.

LXXX.

I do declare, upon an affidavit,
Romances I ne'er read like those I have seen;
Nor, if unto the world I ever gave it,
Would some believe that such a tale had been:
But such intent I never had, nor have it;
Some truths are better kept behind a screen,
Especially when they would look like lies;
I therefore deal in generalities.

* See "La Nouvelle Héloïse."

† Hor. Epod. od. li.

LXXXI.

"An oyster may be cross'd in love,"—and why?
Because he mopeth idly in his shell,
And heaves a lonely subterraqueous sigh;
Much as a monk may do within his cell:
And d'ropes of monks, their plety
With aloth hath found it difficult to dwell;
Those vegetables of the Catholic creed
Are apt exceedingly to run to seed.

LXXXII.

Oh, Wilberforce! thou man of black renown,
Whose merit none enough can sing or say,
Thou hast struck one immense Colossus down,
Thou moral Washington of Africa!
But there's another little thing, I own,
Which you should perpetrate some summer's day,
And set the other half of earth to rights;
You have freed the blacks—now pray shut up the whites.

LXXXIII.

Shut up the bald-coot[†] bully Alexander!
Ship off the Holy Throe to Senegal;
Teach them that "sauce for goose is sauce for gander."
And ask them how they like to be in thrall?
Shut up each high heroic salamander,
Who eats fire gratis (since the pay's but small);
Shut up—no, not the King, but the Pavillon;[‡]
Or else 't will cost us all another million.

LXXXIV.

Shut up the world at large, let Bedlam out;
And you will be perhaps surprised to find
All things pursue exactly the same route,
As now with those of soi-disant sound mind.
This I could prove beyond a single doubt,
Were there a jot of sense among mankind;
But till that point d'appui is found, alas!
Like Archimedes, I leave earth as 't was.

LXXXV.

Our gentle Adeline had one defect—
Her heart was vacant, though a splendid man-
sion;
Her conduct had been perfectly correct,
As she had seen nought claiming its expansion.
A wavering spirit may be easier wreck'd,
Because 't is frailer, doubtless, than a stanch
one;
But when the latter works its own undoing,
Its inner crash is like an earthquake's ruin.

LXXXVI.

She loved her lord, or thought so; but that love
Cost her an effort, which is a sad toil,
The stone of Sisypus, if once we move
Our feelings 'gainst the nature of the soil.
She had nothing to complain of, or reprove,
No bickerings, no connubial turmoil:
Their union was a model to behold,
Serene and noble—conjugal, but cold.

LXXXVII.

There was no great disparity of years,
Though much in temper; but they never clash'd:
They moved like stars united in their spheres,
Or like the Rhone by Leman's waters wash'd,
Where mingled and yet separate appears
The river from the lake, all bluely dash'd
Through the serene and placid glassy deep,
Which fain would lull its river-child to sleep.‡

LXXXVIII.

Now when she once had ta'en an interest
In anything, however she might flatter
Herself that her intentions were the best,
Intense intentions are a dangerous matter:
Impressions were much stronger than she guess'd,
And gather'd as they run like growing water
Upon her mind; the more so, as her breast
Was not at first too readily impress'd.

LXXXIX.

But when it was, she had that lurking demon
Of double nature, and thus doubly named—
Firmness yclept in heroes, kings, and seamen,
That is, when they succeed; but greatly blamed
As obstinacy, both in men and women,
Whene'er their triumph pales, or star is tamed:—
And 't will perplex the casuist in morality
To fix the due bounds of this dangerous quality.

XC.

Had Buonaparte won at Waterloo,
It had been firmness; now 't is pertinacity:
Must the event decide between the two?
I leave it to your people of sagacity
To draw the line between the false and true,
If such can e'er be drawn by man's capacity:
My business is with Lady Adeline,
Who in her way too was a heroine.

XCI.

She knew not her own heart; then how should I?
I think not she was then in love with Juan:
If so, she would have had the strength to fly
The wild sensation, unto her a new one:
She merely felt a common sympathy
(I will not say it was a false or true one)
In him, because she thought he was in danger,—
Her husband's friend, her own, young, and a stranger.

XCII.

She was, or thought she was, his friend—and this Without the force of friendship, or romance
Of platonism, which leads so oft amiss
Ladies who have studied friendship but in France,
Or Germany, where people purly kiss.
To thus much Adeline would not advance;
But of such friendship as man's may to man be
She was as capable as woman can be.

XCIII.

No doubt the secret influence of the sex
Will there, as also in the ties of blood,
An innocent predominance annex,
And tune the concord to a finer mood.
If free from passion, which all friendship checks,
And your true feelings fully understood,
No friend like to a woman earth discovers,
So that you have not been nor will be lovers.

XCIV.

Love bears within its breast the very germ
Of change; and how should this be otherwise?
That violent things more quickly find a term
Is shown through nature's whole analogies:
And how should the most fierce of all be firm?
Would you have endless lightning in the skies?
Methinks Love's very title says enough:
How should "the tender passion" e'er be tough?

XCV.

Alas! by all experience, seldom yet
(I merely quote what I have heard from many)

* See Sheridan's "Critic."

† The bald-coot is a small bird of prey in marshes. The emperor Alexander was baldish.

‡ The king's palace at Brighton.

§ See ante, p. 28.

! "These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die."—Romeo and Juliet.

Had lovers not some reason to regret
The passion which made Solomon a zany;
I've also seen some wives (not to forget
The marriage state, the best or worst of any)
Who were the very paragons of wives,
Yet made the misery of at least two lives.

XCVI.

I've also seen some female friends ('t is odd,
But true—as, if expedient, I could prove)
That faithful were through thick and thin, abroad,
At home, far more than ever yet was Love—
Who did not quit me when Oppression trod
Upon me; whom no scandal could remove;
Who fought, and fight, in absence, too, my battles,
Despite the snake Society's loud rattles.

XCVII.

Whether Don Juan and chaste Adeline
Grew friends in this or any other sense,
Will be discuss'd hereafter, I opine:
At present I am glad of a pretence
To leave them hovering, as the effect is fine,
And keeps the atrocious reader in suspense:
The surest way for ladies and for books
To bait their tender or their tenter hooks.

XCVIII.

Whether they rode, or walk'd, or studied Spanish,
To read Don Quixote in the original,
A pleasure before which all others vanish;
Whether their talk was of the kind call'd
"small,"

Or serious, are the topics I must banish
To the next canto; where perhaps I shall Say something to the purpose, and display
Considerable talent in my way.

XCIX.

Above all, I beg all men to forbear
Anticipating aught about the matter:
They'll only make mistakes about the fair,
And Juan too, especially the latter.
And I shall take a much more serious air
Than I have yet done, in this epic satire.
It is not clear that Adeline and Juan
Will fall; but if they do, 't will be their ruin.

C.

But great things spring from little:—Would you think,

That in our youth, as dangerous a passion
As e'er brought man and woman to the brink
Of ruin, rose from such a slight occasion,
As few would ever dream could form the link
Of such a sentimental situation?
You'll never guess, I'll bet you millions, milliards—
It all sprang from a harmless game at billiards.

CI.

'T is strange,—but true; for truth is always strange;
Stranger than fiction: if it could be told,
How much would novels gain by the exchange!
How differently the world would men behold!
How oft would vice and virtue places change!
The new world would be nothing to the old,
If some Columbus of the moral seas
Would show mankind their souls' antipodes.

CII.

What "antres vast and deserts idle" * then
Would be discover'd in the human soul!
What icebergs in the hearts of mighty men,
With self-love in the centre as their pole!

What Anthropophagi are nine or ten
Of those who hold the kingdoms in control!
Were things but only call'd by their right name,
Cæsar himself would be ashamed of fame.

CANTO THE FIFTEENTH.†

I.

AN!—What should follow ails from my reflection;
Whatever follows ne'ertheless may be
As à propos of hope or retrospection,
As though the lurking thought had follow'd free.
All present life is but an interjection,
An "Oh!" or "Ah!" of joy or misery,
Or a "Ha! ha!" or "Bah!"—a yawn, or "Pooh!"
Of which perhaps the latter is most true.

II.

But, more or less, the whole's a synopsé
Or a singultus—emblems of emotion,
The grand antithesis to great ennui,
Wherewith we break our bubbles on the ocean,
That watery outline of eternity,
Or miniature at least, as is my notion,
Which ministers unto the soul's delight,
In seeing matters which are out of sight.

III.

But all are better than the sigh suppress,
Corroding in the cavern of the heart,
Making the countenance a mask of rest,
And turning human nature to an art.
Few men dare show their thoughts of worst or best;

Disimulation always sets apart
A corner for herself; and therefore fiction
Is that which passes with least contradiction.

IV.

Ah! who can tell? Or rather, who can not
Remember, without telling, passion's errors?
The drainer of oblivion, even the sot,
Hath got blue devils for his morning mirrors:
What though on Lethe's stream he seem to float,
He cannot sink his terrors or his terrors;
The ruby glass that shakes within his hand
Leaves a sad sediment of Time's worst sand.

V.

And as for love—oh, love!—We will proceed.
The Lady Adeline Amundeville,
A pretty name as one would wish to read,
Must perch harmonious on my tuneful quill.
There's music in the sighing of a reed;
There's music in the gushing of a rill;
There's music in all things, if men had ears:
Their earth is but an echo of the spheres.

VI.

The Lady Adeline, right honorable,
And honor'd, ran a risk of growing less so;
For few of the soft sex are very stable
In their resolves—alas! that I should say so;
They differ as wine differs from its label,
When once decanted;—I presume to guess so,
But will not swear: yet both upon occasion,
Till old, may undergo adulteration.

* Othello, act I., sc. iii.

† Cantos xv. and xvi. were published in London, March, 1836.

VII.

But Adeline was of the purest vintage,
The unmingled essence of the grape; and yet
Bright as a new Napoleon from its mintage,
Or glorious as a diamond richly set;
A page where Time should hesitate to print age,
And for which Nature might forego her debt—
Sole creditor whose process doth involve in 't
The luck of finding everybody solvent.

VIII.

Oh, Death! thou dunnest of all duns! thou daily
Knockest at doors, at first with modest tap,
Like a meek tradesman when, approaching palely,
Some splendid debtor he would take by sap;
But oft denied, as patience 'gins to fail, he Advances with exasperated rap,
And (if let in) insists, in terms unhandsome,
On ready money, or "a draft on Ransom."

IX.

What'er thou takest, spare awhile poor Beauty!
She is so rare, and thou hast so much prey.
What though she now and then may slip from duty,
The more 's the reason why you ought to stay;
Gautt Gourmand! with whole nations for your booty,

You should be civil in a modest way:
Suppress, then, some slight feminine diseases,
And take as many heroes as Heaven please.

X.

Fair Adeline, the more ingenuous
Where she was interested (as was said),
Because she was not apt, like some of us,
To like too readily, or too high bred
To show it—(points we need not now discuss)—
Would give up artlessly both heart and head
Unto such feelings as seem'd innocent,
For objects worthy of the sentiment.

XI.

Some parts of Juan's history, which Rumor,
That live gazette, had scatter'd to disfigure,
She had heard; but women hear with more good humor

Such aberrations than we men of rigor:
Besides, his conduct, since in England, grew more
Strict, and his mind assumed a manlier vigor;
Because he had, like Alcibiades,
The art of living in all climes with ease.†

XII.

His manner was perhaps the more seductive,
Because he ne'er seem'd anxious to seduce;
Nothing affected, studied, or constructive
Of coxcombry or conquest: no abuse
Of his attractive man'd the fair perspective,
To indicate a Cupidon broke loose,
And seem to say "Resist us if you can"—
Which makes a dandy while it spoils a man.

XIII.

They are wrong—that's not the way to set about it;
As, if they told the truth, could well be shown.
But, right or wrong, Don Juan was without it;
In fact, his manner was his own alone:
Sincere he was—at least you could not doubt it,
In listening merely to his voice's tone.

* Ransom, Kinnaird & Co. were Lord Byron's bankers.

† See Mitford's Greece, vol. iii.

‡ Raphael's masterpiece is called the Transfiguration.

§ As it is necessary in these times to avoid ambiguity, I say that I mean, by "Diviner still," CHANCE. If ever God was man—or man God—he was both. I never arraigned his creed.

The devil hath not in all his quiver's choice
An arrow for the heart like a sweet voice.

XIV.

By nature soft, his whole address held off
Suspicion: though not timid, his regard
Was such as rather seem'd to keep aloof,
To shield himself than put you on your guard:
Perhaps 't was hardly quite assured enough,
But modesty 's at times its own reward,
Like virtue; and the absence of pretension
Will go much further than there's need to mention.

XV.

Serene, accomplish'd, cheerful but not loud;
Insinuating without insinuation;
Observant of the follies of the crowd,
Yet ne'er betraying this in conversation;
Proud with the proud, yet courteously proud,
So as to make them feel he knew his station
And theirs:—without a struggle for priority,
He neither brook'd nor claim'd superiority—

XVI.

That is, with men: with women he was what They pleased to make or take him for; and their Imagination 's quite enough for that:
So that the outline 's tolerably fair;
They fill the canvas up—and "verbum sat."
If once their fancies be brought to bear
Upon an object, whether sad or playful,
They can transfigure brighter than a Raphael.‡

XVII.

Adeline, no deep judge of character,
Was apt to add a coloring from her own:
'T is thus the good will amiably err,
And eke the wise, as has been often shown.
Experience is the chief philosopher,
But saddest when his science is well known:
And persecuted ages teach the schools
Their folly in forgetting there are fools.

XVIII.

Was it not so, great Locke? and greater Bacon?
Great Socrates? And thou, Diviner still,§ Whose lot it is by man to be mistaken,
And thy pure creed made sanction of all ill?
Redeeming worlds to be by bigots shaken,
How was thy toil rewarded? We might fill
Volumes with similar sad illustrations,
But leave them to the conscience of the nations.

XIX.

I perch upon an humbler promontory,
Amidst life's infinite variety:
With no great care for what is nicknamed glory,
But speculating as I cast mine eye
On what may suit or may not suit my story,
And never straining hard to versify,
I rattle on exactly as I'd talk
With anybody in a ride or walk.

XX.

I don't know that there may be much ability
Shown in this sort of desultory rhyme;
But there 's a conversational facility,
Which may round off an hour upon a time.

but the use—or abuse—made of it. Mr. Canning once quoted Christianity to sanction negro slavery, and Mr. Webster had little to say in reply. And was Christ crucified that black men might be scourged? If so, he had better have been a Mulatto, to give both colors an equal chance of freedom, or at least salvation.

Of this I'm sure at least, there's no servility
In mine irregularity of chime,
Which rings what's uppermost of new or hoary,
Just as I feel the "Improvvisatore."

XXI.

"Omnia vult belle Matho dicere—dic aliquando Et bene, dic neutrum, dic aliquando male."
The first is rather more than mortal can do;
The second may be sadly done or gayly;
The third is still more difficult to stand to;
The fourth we hear, and see, and say too, daily;
The whole together is what I could wish
To serve in this conundrum of a dish.

XXII.

A modest hope—but modesty's my forte,
And pride my feeble:—let us ramble on.
I meant to make this poem very short,
But now I can't tell where it may not run.
No doubt, if I had wish'd to pay my court
To critics, or to hail the setting sun
Of tyranny of all kinds, my concision
Were more;—but I was born for opposition.

XXIII.

But then 't is mostly on the weaker side;
So that I verily believe if they
Who now are basking in their full-blown pride
Were shaken down, and "dogs had had their day,"
Though at the first I might perchance deride
Their tumble, I should turn the other way,
And wax an ultra-royalist in loyalty,
Because I hate even democratic royalty.

XXIV.

I think I should have made a decent spouse,
If I had never proved the soft condition;
I think I should have made monastic vows,
But for my own peculiar superstition:
'Gainst rhyme I never should have knock'd my
brows,
Nor broken my own head, nor that of Priscian,
Nor worn the motley mantle of a poet,
If some one had not told me to forego it.†

XXV.

But "inanes aller"—knights and dames I sing,
Such as the times may furnish. 'T is a slight
Which seems at first to need no lofty wing,
Plumed by Longinus or the Stagyrte:
The difficulty lies in coloring
(Keeping the due proportions still in sight)
With nature manners which are artificial,
And rendering general that which is especial.

XXVI.

The difference is, that in the days of old Men made the manners; manners now make
men—
Pin'd like a flock, and fleeced too in their fold,
At least nine, and a ninth beside of ten.
Now this at all events must render cold
Your writers, who must either draw again
Days better drawn before, or else assume
The present, with their commonplace costume.

* "The cat will mew, and dog will have his day."—HOMER.

† The reader has already seen in what style the Edinburgh Reviewers dealt with Lord Byron's early performance (see Appendix, No. 4, page 484)—the effect which that criticism produced on him at the time.

‡ "Three small vessels were apparently all that Columbus

XXVII.

We'll do our best to make the best on 't:—March!
March, my Muse! If you cannot fly, yet flutter;
And when you may not be sublime, be arch,
Or starch, as are the edicts statesmen utter.
We surely may find something worth research:
Columbus found a new world in a cutter,
Or brigantine, or pink, of no great tonnage,
While yet America was in her non-age.‡

XXVIII.

When Adeline, in all her growing sense
Of Juan's merits and his situation,
Felt on the whole an interest intense,—
Partly perhaps because a fresh sensation,
Or that he had an air of innocence,
Which is for innocence a sad temptation,—
As women hate half measures, on the whole,
She 'gan to ponder how to save his soul.

XXIX.

She had a good opinion of advice,
Like all who give and eke receive it gratis,
For which small thanks are still the market price,
Even where the article at highest rate is:
She thought upon the subject twice or thrice,
And morally decided, the best state is
For morals, marriage; and this question carried,
She seriously advised him to get married.

XXX.

Juan replied, with all becoming deference,
He had a predilection for that tie:
But that, at present, with immediate reference
To his own circumstances, there might lie
Some difficulties, as in his own preference,
Or that of her to whom he might apply:
That still he'd wed with such or such a lady,
If that they were not married all already.

XXXI.

Next to the making matches for herself,
And daughters, brothers, sisters, kith or kin,
Arranging them like books on the same shelf,
There's nothing women love to dabble in
More (like a stockholder in growing pelf)
Than match-making in general: 't is no sin
Certes, but a preventative, and therefore
That is, no doubt, the only reason wherefore.

XXXII.

But never yet (except of course a miss
Unwed, or mistress never to be wed,
Or wed already, who object to this)
Was there chaste dame who had not in her head
Some drama of the marriage unities,
Observed as strictly both at board and bed,
As those of Aristotle, though sometimes
They turn out melodramas or pantomimes.

XXXIII.

They generally have some only son,
Some heir to a large property, some friend
Of an old family, some gay Sir John,
Or grave Lord George, with whom perhaps might end had required. Two of them were light barques, called caravels, not superior to river and coasting craft of more modern days. That such long and perilous expeditions into unknown seas should be undertaken in vessels without decks, and that they should live through the violent tempests by which they were frequently assailed, remain among the singular circumstances of those daring voyages."—WASHINGTON IRVING.

A line, and leave posterity undone,
Unless a marriage was applied to mend
The prospect and their morals: and besides,
They have at hand a blooming glut of brides.

XXXIV.

From these they will be careful to select,
For this an heiress, and for that a beauty;
For one a scourgistress who hath no defect,
For t' other one who promises much duty;
For this a lady no one can reject,
Whose sole accomplishments were quite a booty;
A second for her excellent connections;
A third, because there can be no objections.

XXXV.

When Rapp the Harmonist embargo'd marriage*
In his harmonious settlement—(which flourishes
Strangely enough as yet without miscarriage,
Because it breeds no more mouths than it nourishes,
Without those sad expenses which disparage
What Nature naturally most encourages)—
Why call'd he "Harmony" a state sans wedlock?
Now here I've got the preacher at a dead lock.

XXXVI.

Because he either meant to smelt at harmony
Or marriage, by divorcing them thus oddly.
But whether reverend Rapp learn'd this in Germany
Or no, 't is said his sect is rich and godly,
Pious and pure, beyond what I can term any
Of ours, although they propagate more broadly.
My objection 's to his title, not his ritual,
Although I wonder how it grew habitual.

XXXVII.

But Rapp is the reverse of zealous matrons,
Who favor, malgré Malthus, generation—
Professors of that genial art, and patrons
Of all the modest part of propagation;
Which after all at such a desperate rate runs,
That half its produce tends to emigration,
That sad result of passions and potatoes—
Two weeds which pose our economic Catos.

XXXVIII.

Had Adeline read Malthus? I can't tell;
I wish she had: his book 's the eleventh commandment,
Which says, "Thou shalt not marry," unless well;
This he (as far as I can understand) meant.
'T is not my purpose on his views to dwell,
Nor canvass what "so eminent a hand" meant;†
But certain it conducts to lives ascetic,
Or turning marriage into arithmetic.

XXXIX.

But Adeline, who probably presumed
That Juan had enough of maintenance,
Or separate maintenance, in case 't was doom'd—
As on the whole it is an even chance
That bridegrooms, after they are fairly groom'd,
May retrograde a little in the dance
Of marriage—(which might form a painter's fame,
Like Holbein's "Dance of Death"‡—but 't is the same);—

* This extraordinary and flourishing German colony in America does not entirely exclude matrimony, as the "Shakers" do; but lays such restrictions upon it as prevents more than a certain quantum of births within a certain number of years; which births (as Mr. Hulme observed) generally arrive "in a little flock like those of a farmer's lambs, all within the same month perhaps." These Harmonists (so called from the name of their settlement) are represented as a remarkably flourishing, pious, and quiet people. See the various recent writers on America. Also for late and interesting statistics

XL.

But Adeline determined Juan's wedding
In her own mind, and that 's enough for women;
But then, with whom? There was the sage Miss
Reading,
Miss Raw, Miss Flaw, Miss Showman, and Miss
Knowman,
And the two fair co-heiresses Giltbedding.
She deem'd his merits something more than common:
All these were unobjectionable matches,
And might go on, if well wound up, like watches.

XLI.

There was Miss Millpond, smooth as summer's sea,
That usual paragon, an only daughter,
Who seem'd the cream of equanimity,
'Till skimm'd—and then there was some milk and water,
With a slight shade of blue too, it might be,
Beneath the surface; but what did it matter?
Love 's riotous, but marriage should have quiet,
And being consumptive, live on a milk diet.

XLII.

And then there was the Miss Audacia Shoestring,
A dashing demotelle of good estate,
Whose heart was fix'd upon a star or blue string;
But whether English dukes grew rare of late,
Or that she had not harp'd upon the true string,
By which such sirens can attract our great,
She took up with some foreign younger brother,
A Russ or Turk—the one 's as good as t' other.

XLIII.

And then there was—but why should I go on,
Unless the ladies should go off?—there was Indeed a certain fair and fairy one,
Of the best class, and better than her class,—
Aurora Baby, † a young star who shone
O'er life, too sweet an image for such glass,
A lovely being, scarcely form'd or moulded,
A rose with all its sweetest leaves yet folded;

XLIV.

Rich, noble, but an orphan: left an only
Child to the care of guardians good and kind;
But still her aspect had an air so lonely!
Blood is not water; and where shall we find
Feelings of youth like those which overthrow life
By death, when we are left, alas! behind,
To feel, in friendless palaces, a home
Is wanting, and our best ties in the tomb?

XLV.

Early in years, and yet more infantine
In figure, she had something of sublime
In eyes which sadly shone, as seraphs' shine.
All youth—but with an aspect beyond time;
Radiant and grave—as pitying man's decline;
Mournful—but mournful of another's crime,
She look'd as if she sat by Eden's door,
And grieved for those who could return no more.

XLVI.

She was a Catholic, too, sincere, austere,
As far as her own gentle heart allow'd, of the American Shakers at this date (1833, see Appleton's Zett's, and Johnson's Encyclopædia, and the Encyclopædia Britannica.

† Jacob Toulson, according to Mr. Pope, was accustomed to call his writers "able pens," "persons of honor," and especially "eminent hands." Vide Correspondence, etc., etc.

‡ See Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature.

§ Aurora Baby is a description of Miss Milbanks as she appeared to Byron.

And deem'd that fallen worship far more dear
Perhaps because 't was fallen: her sires were proud

Of deeds and days when they had fill'd the ear
Of nations, and had never bent or bow'd
To novel power; and as she was the last,
She held their old faith and old feelings fast.

XLVII.

She gazed upon a world she scarcely knew,
As seeking not to know it; silent, lone,
As grows a flower, thus quietly she grew,
And kept her heart serene within its zone.
There was awe in the homage which she drew;
Her spirit seem'd as seated on a throne
Apart from the surrounding world, and strong
In its own strength—most strange in one so young!

XLVIII.

Now it so happen'd, in the catalogue
Of Adeline, Aurora was omitted.
Although her birth and wealth had given her vogue,
Beyond the charmers we have already cited;
Her beauty also seem'd to form no clog
Against her being mention'd as well-fitted,
By many virtues, to be worth the trouble
Of single gentlemen who would be double.

XLIX.

And this omission, like that of the bust
Of Brutus at the pageant of Tiberius,
Made Juan wonder, as no doubt he must.
This he express'd half smiling and half serious;
When Adeline replied with some disgust,
And with an air, to say the least, imperious,
She marvel'd "what he saw in such a baby
As that prim, silent, cold Aurora Baby?"

L.

Juan rejoind'd—"She was a Catholic,
And therefore fittest, as of his persuasion;
Since he was sure his mother would fall sick,
And the Pope thunder excommunication,
If—" But here Adeline, who seem'd to pique
Herself extremely on the inoculation
Of others with her own opinions, stated—
As usual—the same reason which she late did.

LI.

And wherefore not? A reasonable reason,
If good, is none the worse for repetition;
If bad, the best way 's certainly to tease on,
And amplify: you lose much by concision,
Whereas insisting in or out of season
Convinces all men, even a politician;
Or—what is just the same—it wearies out.
So the end 's gain'd, what signifies the route?

LII.

Why Adeline had this slight prejudice—
For prejudice it was—against a creature
As pure as sanctity itself from vice,
With all the added charm of form and feature,
For me appears a question far too nice,
Since Adeline was liberal by nature;
But nature 's nature, and has more caprices
Than I have time, or will, to take to pieces.

LIII.

Perhaps she did not like the quiet way
With which Aurora on those baubles look'd,
Which charm most people in their earlier day;
For there are few things by mankind less brook'd,
And womankind too, if we so may say,
Than finding thus their genius stand rebuked,
Like "Antony's by Cæsar," by the few
Who look upon them as they ought to do.

LIV.

It was not envy—Adeline had none;
Her place was far beyond it, and her mind.
It was not scorn—which could not light on one
Whose greatest fault was leaving few to find.
It was not jealousy, I think: but abun-
Following the "ignee fatui" of mankind.
It was not—but 't is easier far, alas!
To say what it was not than what it was.

LV.

Little Aurora deem'd she was the theme
Of such discussion. She was there a guest;
A beauteous ripple of the brilliant stream
Of rank and youth, though purer than the rest,
Which flow'd on for a moment in the beam
Time sheds a moment o'er each sparkling crest.
Had she known this, she would have calmly smiled—
She had so much, or little, of the child.

LVI.

The dashing and proud air of Adeline
Imposed not upon her: she saw her blaze
Much as she would have seen a glow-worm shine,
Then turn'd unto the stars for loftier rays.
Juan was something she could not divine,
Being no sibyl in the new world's ways;
Yet she was nothing dazzled by the meteor,
Because she did not pin her faith on feature.

LVII.

His fame too,—for he had that kind of fame
Which sometimes plays the duncie with woman-
kind,
A heterogeneous mass of glorious blame,
Half virtues and whole vices being combined;
Faults which attract because they are not tame;
Follies trick'd out so brightly that they blind:—
These seals upon her wax made no impression,
Such was her coldness or her self-possession.

LVIII.

Juan knew nought of such a character—
High, yet resembling not his lost Haldée;
Yet each was radiant in her proper sphere:
The island girl, bred up by the lone sea,
More warm, as lovely, and not less sincere,
Was Nature's all: Aurora could not be,
Nor would be thus:—the difference in them
Was such as lies between a flower and gem.

LIX.

Having wound up with this sublime comparison,
Methinks we may proceed upon our narrative,
And, as my friend Scott says, "I sound my warri-
son!"
Scott, the superlative of my comparative—
Scott, who can paint your Christian knight or Sara-
sen,
Sert, lord, man, with such skill as none would share it, if
There had not been one Shakespeare and Voltaire,
Of one or both of whom he seems the heir.

LX.

I say, in my slight way I may proceed
To play upon the surface of humanity.
I write the world, nor care if the world read,
At least for this I cannot spare its vanity.
My Muse hath bred, and still perhaps may breed
More foes by this same scroll: when I began it,
Thought that it might turn out so—now I know it,
But still I am, or was, a pretty poet.

LXI.

The conference or congress (for it ended
As congresses of late do) of the Lady

Adeline and Don Juan rather blended
Some acids with the sweets—for she was heady;
But, ere the matter could be marr'd or mended,
The silvery bell rang, not for "dinner ready,"
But for that hour, call'd half-hour, given to dress,
Though ladies' robes seem scant enough for less.

LXII.

Great things were now to be achieved at table,
With massy plate for armor, knives and forks
For weapons; but what Muse since Homer's able (His feasts are not the worst part of his works)
To draw up in array a single day-bill
Of modera dinners? where more mystery lurks,
In soups or sauces, or a sole ragout.
Than witches, b—ches, or physicians, brew.

LXIII.

There was a goodly "soupe à la bonne femme," Though God knows whence it came from; there was, too,
A turbot for relief of those who cram,
Believed with "dindon à la Parigaux."
There also was—the sinner that I am!
How shall I get this gourmand stanza through?—
"Soupe à la Beauveau," whose relief was dory,
Relieved itself by pork, for greater glory.

LXIV.

But I must crowd all into one grand mess
Or mass; for should I stretch into detail,
My Muse would run much more into excess,
Than when some squeamish people deem her frail;
But though a "bonne vivante," I must confess
Her stomach 's not her peccant part; this tale
However doth require some slight refection,
Just to relieve her spirits from dejection.

LXV.

Fowls "à la Condé," slices eke of salmon,
With "sauces Gênévoises," and haunch of veni-
son;
Wines too, which might again have slain young Ammon—
A man like whom I hope we sha'n't see many
soon;
They also set a glazed Westphalian ham on,
Whereon Apicius would bestow his benison;
And then there was champagne with foaming whirls.

As white as Cleopatra's melted pearls.

LXVI.

Then there was God knows what "à l'Allemande,"
"à l'Espagnole," "timballe," and "salpicon"—
With things I can't withstand or understand,
Though swallow'd with much zest upon the whole;
And "entremets" to piddle with at hand,
Gently to lull down the subsiding soul;
While great Lucullus' Rome triumphal muffles—(There's fame)—young partridge filets, deck'd with truffles.*

LXVII.

What are the filets on the victor's brow
To these? They are rags or dust. Where is the awh
Which nodded to the nation's spoils below?
Where the triumphal chariots' haughty march?
Gone to where victories must like dinners go.
Further I shall not follow the research:

But oh! ye modern heroes with your cartridges,
When will your names lend lustre 'en to partridges?

LXVIII.

Those truffles too are no bad accessories,
Follow'd by "petits puits d'amour"—a dish
Of which perhaps the cookery rather varies,
So every one may dress it to his wish,
According to the best of dictionaries,
Which encyclopedize both flesh and fish;
But even sans "confitures," it no less true is,
There's pretty picking in those "petits puits."[†]

LXIX.

The mind is lost in mighty contemplation
Of intellect expanded on two courses;
And indigestion's grand multiplication
Requires arithmetic beyond my forces.
Who would suppose, from Adam's simple ration,
That cookery could have call'd forth such resources,
As form a science and a nomenclature
From out the commonest demands of nature?

LXX.

The glasses jingled, and the palates tingled;
The diners of celebrity dined well;
The ladies with more moderation mingled
In the feast, pecking less than I can tell;
Also the younger men too: for a springald
Can't, like ripe age, in gormandise excel,
But thinks less of good eating than the whisper
(When seated next him) of some pretty lipser.

LXXI.

Alas! I must leave undescribed the glibber,
The saum, the consommé, the purée,
All which I use to make my rhymes run glibber
Than could roast beef in our rough John Bull way:
I must not introduce even a spare rib here,
"Bubble and squeak" would spoil my liquid lay,
But I have dined, and must forego, alas!
The chaste description even of a "bécasse;"

LXXII.

And fruits, and ice, and all that art refines
From nature for the service of the goit—
Taste or the gout,—pronounce it as inclines
Your stomach! Ere you dine, the French will do;
But after, there are sometimes certain signs
Which prove plain English truer of the two.
Hast ever had the gout? I have not had it—
But I may have, and you too, reader, dread it.

LXXIII.

The simple olives, best allies of wine,
Must I pass over in my bill of fare?
I must, although a favorite "plat" of mine
In Spain, and Lucca, Athens, everywhere:
On them and bread 't was oft my luck to dine,
The grass my table-cloth, in open air,
On Sunium or Hymettus, like Diogenes,
Of whom half my philosophy the progeny is.‡

LXXIV.

Amidst this tumult of fish, flesh, and fowl,
And vegetables, all in masquerade,
The guests were placed according to their roll,
But various as the various meats display'd:

* A dish "à la Lucullus." This hero, who conquered the East, has left his more extended celebrity to the transplantation of cherries (which he first brought into Europe), and the nomenclature of some very good dishes;—and I am not sure that (barring indigestion) he has not done more service to mankind by his cookery than by his conquests. A cherry tree may weigh against a bloody laurel; besides, he has contrived to earn celebrity from both.

† "Petits puits d'amour garnis des confitures,"—a classical and well-known dish for part of the flank of a second course.

‡ "To-day in a palace, to-morrow in a cow-house—this day with the peash, the next with a shepherd."—B. Letters, III.

Don Juan sat next an "à l'Espagnole"—

No damsel, but a dish, as hath been said;
But so far like a lady, that 't was dress'd
Superbly, and contain'd a world of zest.

LXXV.

By some odd chance too, he was placed between

Aurora and the Lady Adeline—

A situation difficult, I ween,

For man therein, with eyes and heart, to dine.

Also the conference which we have seen

Was not such as to encourage him to shine,

For Adeline, addressing a few words to him,

With two transcendent eyes seem'd to look through him.

LXXVI.

I sometimes almost think that eyes have ears:

This much is sure, that, out of earshot, things

Are somehow echo'd to the pretty dears.

Of which I can't tell whence their knowledge

springs.

Like that same mystic music of the spheres,

Which no one hears, so loudly though it rings,

'T is wonderful how oft the sex have heard

Long dialogues—which pass'd without a word!

LXXVII.

Aurora sat with that indifference

Which piques a preux chevalier—as it ought:

Of all offences that's the worst offence,

Which seems to hint you are not worth a

thought.

Now Juan, though no coxcomb in pretence,

Was not exactly pleased to be so caught;

Like a good ship entangled among ice,

And after so much excellent advice.

LXXVIII.

To his gay nothings, nothing was replied,

Or something which was nothing, as urbanity

Required. Aurora scarcely look'd aside,

Nor even smiled enough for any vanity.

The devil was in the girl! Could it be pride?

Or modesty, or absence, or inanity?

Heaven knows! But Adeline's malicious eyes

Sparkled with her successful prophecies,

LXXIX.

And look'd as much as if to say, "I said it;"

A kind of triumph I'll not recommend,

Because it sometimes, as I have seen or read it,

Both in the case of lover and of friend,

Will pique a gentleman, for his own credit,

To bring what was a jest to a serious end:

For all men prophesy what is or was,

And hate those who won't let them come to pass.

LXXX.

Juan was drawn thus into some attentions,

Slight but select, and just enough to express,

To females of perspicuous comprehensions,

That he would rather make them more than less.

Aurora at the last (so history mentions,

Though probably much less a fact than guess)

So far relax'd her thoughts from their sweet prison,

As once or twice to smile, if not to listen.

LXXXI.

From answering she began to question: this

With her was rare; and Adeline, who as yet

Thought her predictions went not much amiss,

Began to dread she'd thaw to a coquette—

So very difficult, they say, it is

To keep extremes from meeting, when once set

In motion: but she here too much refin'd—

Aurora's spirit was not of that kind.

LXXXII.

But Juan had a sort of winning way,

A proud humility, if such there be,

Which show'd such deference to what females say,

As if each charming word were a decree.

His tact, too, temper'd him from grave to gay,

And taught him when to be reserved or free:

He had the art of drawing people out,

Without their seeing what he was about.

LXXXIII.

Aurora, who in her indifference

Confounded him in common with the crowd

Of flatterers, though she deem'd he had more sense

Than whispering foplings, or than wittlings loud—

Commenced (from such slight things will great commence)

To feel that flattery which attracts the proud

Rather by deference than compliment,

And wins even by a delicate descent.

LXXXIV.

And then he had good looks;—that point was carried

Nem. con. amongst the women, which I grieve

To say leads off to crim. con. with the married—

A case which to the juries we may leave,

Since with digressions we too long have tarried.

Now though we know of old that looks deceive,

And always have done, somehow these good looks

Make more impression than the best of books.

LXXXV.

Aurora, who look'd more on books than faces,

Was very young, although so very sage,

Admiring more Minerva than the Graces,

Especially upon a printed page.

But Virtue's self, with all her tightest laces,

Has not the natural stays of strict old age;

And Socrates, that model of all duty,

Ow'd to a pendent, though discreet, for beauty.

LXXXVI.

And girls of sixteen are thus far Socratic,

But innocently so, as Socrates;

And really, if the sage sublime and Attic

At seventy years had fantasies like these,

Which Plato in his dialogues dramatic

Has shown, I know not why they should displease

In virgins—always in a modest way,

Observe; for that with me's a "sine qua."

LXXXVII.

Also observe, that, like the great Lord Coke

(See Littleton), whene'er I have express'd

Opinions two, which at first sight may look

Twin opposites, the second is the best.

Perhaps I have a third too, in a nook,

Or none at all—which seems a sorry jest:

But if a writer should be quite consistent,

How could he possibly show things existent?

LXXXVIII.

If people contradict themselves, can I

Help contradicting them, and everybody,

Even my veracious self?—But that's a lie:

I never did so, never will—how should I?

He who doubts all things nothing can deny:

Truth's fountains may be clear—her streams are muddy,

And cut through such canals of contradiction,

That she must often navigate o'er fiction.

LXXXIX.

Apologue, fable, poetry, and parable,

Are false, but may be render'd also true,

* Subauditur "now;" omitted for the sake of euphony.

By those who sow them in a land that's arable.

'T is wonderful what fable will not do!

'T is said it makes reality more bearable:

But what's reality? Who has its clue?

Philosophy? No; she too much rejects.

Religion? Yes; but which of all her sects?

XC.

Some millions must be wrong, that's pretty clear;

Perhaps it may turn out that all were right.

God help us! Since we have need on our career

To keep our holy beacons always bright,

'T is time that some new prophet should appear,

Or old indulge man with a second sight.

Opinions wear out in some thousand years,
Without a small refreshment from the spheres.

XCI.

But here again, why will I thus entangle

Myself with metaphysics? None can hate

So much as I do any kind of wrangle;

And yet, such is my folly, or my fate,

I always knock my head against some angle

About the present, past, or future state:

Yet I wish well to Trojan and to Tyrian,

For I was bred a moderate Presbyterian.

XCII.

But though I am a temperate theologian,

And also meek as a metaphysician,

Impartial between Tyrian and Trojan

As Eldon* on a lunatic commission,—

In politics my duty is to show John

Bull something of the lower world's condition.

It makes my blood boil like the springs of Hecla,†

To see men let these scoundrel sovereigns break law.

XCIII.

But politics, and policy, and piety,

Are topics which I sometimes introduce,

Not only for the sake of their variety,

But as subservient to a moral use;

Because my business is to dress society,

And stuff with sage that very verdant goose.

And now, that we may furnish with some matter all

Tastes, we are going to try the supernatural.

XCIV.

And now I will give up all argument;

And positively henceforth no temptation

Shall "fool me to the top up of my bent;"‡—

Yes, I'll begin a thorough reformation.

Indeed, I never knew what people meant

By deeming that my Muse's conversation

Was dangerous;—I think she is as harmless

As some who labor more and yet may charm less.

XCV.

Grim reader! did you ever see a ghost?

No; but you have heard—I understand—be dumb!

And don't regret the time you may have lost,

For you have got that pleasure still to come:

And do not think I mean to sneer at most

Of these things, or by ridicule benumb

That source of the sublime and the mysterious:—

For certain reasons my belief is serious.

XCVI.

Serious? You laugh;—you may: that will I not;

My smiles shall be sincere or not at all.

I say I do believe a haunted spot

Exists—and where? That shall I not recall,

Because I'd rather it should be forgot,

"Shadows the soul of Richard" may appal.

In short, upon that subject I've some qualms very

Like those of the philosopher of Malmsbury.

XCVII.

The night—(I sing by night—sometimes an owl,

And now and then a nightingale)—is dim,

And the loud shriek of sage Minerva's fowl

Rattles around me her discordant hymn:

Old portraits from old walls upon me scowl—

I wish to heaven they would not look so grim:

The dying embers dwindle in the grate—

I think too that I have sat up too late:

XCVIII.

And therefore, though 't is by no means my way

To rhyme at noon—when I have other things

To think of, if I ever think—I say

I feel some chilly midnight shudderings,

And prudently postpone, until mid-day,

Treating a topic which, alas! but brings

Shadows;—but you must be in my condition,

Before you learn to call this superstition.

XCIX.

Between two worlds life hovers like a star,

'Twixt night and morn, upon the horizon's verge

How little do we know that which we are!

How less what we may be! The eternal surge

Of time and tide rolls on and bears afar

Our bubbles; as the old burst, new emerge,

Leah'd from the foam of ages; while the graves

Of empires heave but like some passing waves.

CANTO THE SIXTEENTH.

I.

THE antique Persians taught three useful things,

To draw the bow, to ride, and speak the truth;‡

This was the mode of Cyrus, best of kings—

A mode adopted since by modern youth.

Bows have they, generally with two strings;

Horses they ride without remorse or ruth;

At speaking truth perhaps they are less clever,

But draw the long bow better now than ever.

II.

The cause of this effect, or this defect,—

"For this effect defective comes by cause,"‡—

Is what I have not leisure to inspect;

But this I must say in my own applause,

Of all the Muses that I recollect,

Whate'er may be her follies or her flaws

In some things, mine's beyond all contradiction

The most sincere that ever dealt in fiction.

III.

And as she treats all things, and ne'er retreats

From anything, this epic will contain

A wilderness of the most rare conceits,

Which you might elsewhere hope to find in vain.

'T is true there be some bitters with the sweets,

Yet mix'd so slightly, that you can't complain,

But wonder they so few are, since my tale is

"De rebus cunctis et quibuscumq; aliis."

* John Scott, Earl of Eldon, Chancellor of England (with the interruption of fourteen months) from 1801 to 1806.

† Hecla, the famous hot spring in Iceland.

‡ Hamlet, act III., sc. ii.

§ Xenophon, Cyrop.

¶ Hamlet, act II., sc. ii.

IV.

But of all truths which she has told, the most
True is that which she is about to tell.
I said it was a story of a ghost—
What then? I only know it so befell.
Have you explored the limits of the coast,
Where all the dwellers of the earth must dwell?
'T is time to strike such puny doubters dumb as
The skeptics who would not believe Columbus.

V.

Some people would impose now with authority,
Turpin's or Monmouth Geoffry's Chronicle;
Men whose historical superiority
Is always greatest at a miracle.
But Saint Augustine has the great priority,
Who bids all men believe the impossible,
Because 't is so. Who nibble, scribble, quibble, he Quiets at once with "quæ impossible."

VI.

And therefore, mortals, cavil not at all;
Believe:—if 't is improbable, you must,
And if it is impossible, you shall:
'T is always best to take things upon trust.
I do not speak profanely, to recall
Those holier mysteries which the wise and just Receive as gospel, and which grow more rooted,
As all truths must, the more they are disputed:

VII.

I merely mean to say what Johnson said,
That in the course of some six thousand years,
All nations have believed that from the dead
A visitant at intervals appears:
And what is strangest upon this strange head,
Is, that whatever bar the reason rears
'Gainst such belief, there's something stronger
still
In its behalf, let those deny who will.

VIII.

The dinner and the soirée too were done,
The supper too discuss'd, the dames admired,
The banqueters had dropp'd off one by one—
The song was silent, and the dance expired:
The last thin petticoats were vanish'd, gone
Like fleecy clouds into the sky retired,
And nothing brighter gleam'd through the saloon
Than dying tapers—and the peeping moon.

IX.

The evaporation of a joyous day
Is like the last glass of champagne, without
The foam which made its virgin bumper gay;
Or like a system coupled with a doubt;
Or like a soda bottle when its spray
Has sparkled and let half its spirit out;
Or like a billow left by storms behind,
Without the animation of the wind;

X.

Or like an oplate, which brings troubled rest,
Or none; or like—like nothing that I know
Except itself;—such is the human breast;
A thing, of which similitudes can show
No real likeness,—like the old Tyrian vest
Dyed purple, none at present can tell how,
If from a shell-fish or from cochineal.*
So perish every tyrant's robe piecemeal!

XI.

But next to dressing for a rout or ball,
Undressing is a woe: our robe de chambre

May sit like that of Nessus, and recall Thoughts quite as yellow, but less clear than amber.

Titus exclaim'd, "I've lost a day!" Of all
The nights and days most people can remember
(I have had of both, some not to be disdain'd),
I wish they'd state how many they have gain'd.

XII.

And Juan, on retiring for the night,
Felt restless, and perplex'd, and compromised:
He thought Aurora Baby's eyes more bright
Than Adeline (such is advice) advised;
If he had known exactly his own plight,
He probably would have philosophized:
A great resource to all, and ne'er denied
Till wanted; therefore Juan only sigh'd.

XIII.

He sigh'd;—the next resource is the full moon,
Where all sights are deposited; and now
It happen'd luckily, the chaste orb shone
As clear as such a climate will allow;
And Juan's mind was in the proper tone
To hail her with the apostrophe—"Oh, thou!"
Of amatory egotism the Tuism,
Which further to explain would be a truism.

XIV.

But lover, poet, or astronomer,
Shepherd, or swain, whoever may behold,
Feel some abstraction when they gaze on her;
Great thoughts we catch from *her*on (besides a cold
Sometimes, unless my feelings rather err);
Deep secrets to her rolling light are told;
The ocean's tides and mortals' brains she sways,
And also hearts, if there be truth in lays.

XV.

Juan felt somewhat pensive, and disposed
For contemplation rather than his pillow:
The Gothic chamber, where he was enclosed,
Let in the rippling sound of the lake's billow,
With all the mystery by midnight caused:
Below his window waved (of course) a willow;
And he stood gazing out on the cascade
That flash'd and after darken'd in the shade.

XVI.

Upon his table or his toilet,—which
Of these is not exactly ascertain'd—
(I state this, for I am cautious to a pitch
Of nicety, where a fact is to be gain'd),
A lamp burn'd high, while he leant from a niche,
Where many a Gothic ornament remain'd,
In chisell'd stone and painted glass, and all
That time has left our fathers of their hall.

XVII.

Then, as the night was clear though cold, he threw
His chamber door wide open—and went forth
Into a gallery, of a sombre hue,
Long, furnish'd with old pictures of great worth,
Of knights and dames heroic and chaste too,
As doubtless should be people of high birth.
But by dim lights the portraits of the dead
Have something ghastly, desolate, and dread.

XVIII.

The forms of the grim knight and pictured saint
Look living in the moon; and as you turn
Backward and forward to the echoes faint
Of your own footsteps—voices from the urn

* The composition of the old Tyrian purple, whether from a shell-fish, or from cochineal, or from kermes, is still an article of dispute; and even its color—some say purple, others scarlet: I say nothing.

Appear to wake, and shadows wild and quaint
 Start from the frames which fence their aspects stern,
 As if to ask how you can dare to keep
 A vigil there, where all but death should sleep.

XIX.

And the pale smile of beauties in the grave,
 The charms of other days, in starlight gleams,
 Glimmer on high; their buried locks still wave
 Along the canvas; their eyes glance like dreams
 On ours, or spars within some dusky cave.
 But death is imaged in their shadowy beams.
 A picture is the past; even ere its frame
 Be gilt, who sate hath ceased to be the same.

XX.

As Juan mused on mutability,
 Or on his mistress—terms synonymous—
 No sound except the echo of his sigh
 Or step ran sadly through that antique house;
 When suddenly he heard, or thought so, nigh,
 A supernatural agent—or a mouse,
 Whose little nibbling rustle will embarrass
 Most people as it plays along the arras.

XXI.

It was no mouse, but lo! a monk, array'd
 In cowl and beads, and dusky garb, appear'd,
 Now in the moonlight, and now lapsed in shade,
 With steps that trod as heavy, yet unheard;
 His garments only a slight murmur made;
 He moved as shadowy as the sisters weird,
 But slowly: and as he passed Juan by,
 Glanced, without pausing, on him a bright eye.

XXII.

Juan was petrified; he had heard a hint
 Of such a spirit in these halls of old,
 But thought, like most men, there was nothing in't
 Beyond the rumor which such spots unfold,
 Coin'd from surviving superstition's mint.
 Which passes ghosts in currency like gold,
 But rarely seen, like gold compared with paper.
 And did he see this? or was it a vapor?

XXIII.

Once, twice, thrice pass'd, repass'd—the thing of air,
 Or earth beneath, or heaven, or t' other place;
 And Juan gazed upon it with a stare,
 Yet could not speak or move; but, on its base
 As stands a statue, stood: he felt his hair
 Twine like a knot of snakes around his face;
 He tax'd his tongue for words, which were not granted,
 To ask the reverend person what he wanted.

XXIV.

The third time, after a still longer pause.
 The shadow pass'd away—but where? the hall
 Was long, and thus far there was no great cause
 To think his vanishing unnatural:
 Doors there were many, through which, by the laws

Of physics, bodies whether short or tall
 Might come or go; but Juan could not state
 Through which the spectre seem'd to evaporate.

XXV.

He stood—how long he knew not, but it seem'd
 An age—expectant, powerless, with his eyes
 Strain'd on the spot where first the figure gleam'd;
 Then by degrees recall'd his energies,
 And would have pass'd the whole off as a dream,
 But could not wake; he was, he did surmise,
 Waking already, and return'd at length
 Back to his chamber, shorn of half his strength.

XXVI.

All there was as he left it: still his taper
 Burnt, and not blue, as modest tapers use,
 Receiving sprites with sympathetic vapor;
 He rubb'd his eyes, and they did not refuse
 Their office: he took up an old newspaper;
 The paper was right easy to peruse;
 He read an article the king attacking,
 And a long eulogy of "patent blacking."

XXVII.

This savor'd of this world; but his hand shook:
 He shut his door, and after having read
 A paragraph, I think about Horne Tooke,
 Undrest, and rather slowly went to bed.
 There, couch'd all snugly on his pillow's nook,
 With what he had seen his fantasy he fed;
 And though it was no oplate, slumber crept
 Upon him by degrees, and so he slept.

XXVIII.

He woke betimes; and, as may be supposed,
 Ponder'd upon his visitant or vision,
 And whether it ought not to be disclosed,
 At risk of being quiz'd for superstition;
 The more he thought, the more his mind was pos'd:
 In the mean time, his valet, whose precision
 Was great, because his master brook'd no loss,
 Knock'd to inform him it was time to dress.

XXIX.

He dress'd; and like young people he was wont
 To take some trouble with his toilet, but
 This morning rather spent less time upon't;
 Aside his very mirror soon was put;
 His curls fell negligently o'er his front,
 His clothes were not cur'd to their usual cut,
 His very neckcloth's Gordian knot was tied
 Almost an hair's breadth too much on one side.

XXX.

And when he walk'd down into the saloon,
 He sate him pensive o'er a dish of tea,
 Which he perhaps had not discover'd soon,
 Had it not happen'd scalding hot to be,
 Which made him have recourse unto his spoon,
 So much distract he was, that all could see
 That something was the matter—Adeline
 The first—but what she could not well divine.

XXXI.

She look'd, and saw him pale, and turn'd as pale Herself; then hastily look'd down, and mutter'd
 Something, but what's not stated in my tale.
 Lord Henry said, his muffin was ill butter'd;
 The Duchess of Fitz-Fulke play'd with her veil,
 And look'd at Juan hard, but nothing utter'd.
 Aurora Baby with her large dark eyes
 Survey'd him with a kind of calm surprise.

XXXII.

But seeing him all cold and silent still,
 And everybody wondering more or less,
 Fair Adeline inquired, "If he were ill?"
 He started, and said, "Yes—no—rather—yes."
 The family physician had great skill,
 And being present, now began to express
 His readiness to feel his pulse and tell
 The cause, but Juan said, "He was quite well."

XXXIII.

"Quite well; yes,—no."—These answers were mysterious,
 And yet his looks appear'd to sanction both,
 However they might savor of delirious;
 Something like illness of a sudden growth

Weigh'd on his spirit, though by no means serious:
But for the rest, as he himself seem'd loth
To state the case, it might be ta'en for granted
It was not the physician that he wanted.

XXXIV.

Lord Henry, who had now discuss'd his chocolate,
Also the muffin whereof he complain'd,
Said, Juan had not got his usual look elate,
At which he marvel'd, since it had not rain'd;
Then ask'd her Grace what news were of the duke of late?

Her Grace replied, His Grace was rather pain'd
With some slight, light, hereditary twinges
Of gout, which rusts aristocratic hinges.

XXXV.

Then Henry turn'd to Juan, and address'd
A few words of condolence on his state:
"You look," quoth he, "as if you had had your rest

Broke in upon by the Black Friar of late."
"What Friar?" said Juan; and he did his best
To put the question with an air sedate,
Or careless; but the effort was not valid
To hinder him from growing still more pallid.

XXXVI.

"Oh! have you never heard of the Black Friar?"
The spirit of these walls?"—"In truth not I."
"Why Fame—but Fame you know's sometimes a liar—

Tells an odd story, of which by and by:
Whether with time the spectre has grown shyer,
Or that our sires had a more gifted eye
For such sights, though the tale is half believed,
The Friar of late has not been oft perceived.

XXXVII.

"The last time was———" "I pray," said Adeline—
(Who watch'd the changes of Don Juan's brow,
And from its context thought she could divine
Connections stronger than he chose to avow
With this same legend)—"if you but design
To jest, you'll choose some other theme just now,
Because the present tale has oft been told,
And is not much improved by growing old."

XXXVIII.

"Jest!" quoth Milor; "why, Adeline, you know
That we ourselves—'t was in the honeymoon—
Saw———" "Well, no matter, 't was so long ago;
But, come, I'll set your story to a tune."
Graceful as Dian when she draws her bow,
She seized her harp, whose strings were kindled
soon
As touch'd, and plaintively began to play
The air of "T was a Friar of Orders Gray."

XXXIX.

"But add the words," cried Henry, "which you
meant;
For Adeline is half a poetess."
Turning round to the rest, he smiling said.
Of course the others could not but express
In courtesy their wish to see display'd
By one three talents, for there were no less—
The voice, the words, the harper's skill, at once,
Could hardly be united by a dunce.

XL.

After some fascinating hesitation,—
The charming of these charmers, who seem bound,

I can't tell why, to this dissimulation,—
Fair Adeline, with eyes fix'd on the ground
At first, then kindling into animation,
Added her sweet voice to the lyric sound,
And sang with much simplicity,—a merit
Not the less precious, that we seldom hear it.

1.

Beware! beware! of the Black Friar,
Who sitteth by Norman stone,
For he mutters his prayer in the midnight air,
And his mass of the days that are gone.
When the Lord of the Hill, Amundeville,
Made Norman Church his prey,
And expell'd the friars, one friar still
Would not be driven away.

2.

Though he came in his might, with King Henry's
right,
To turn church lands to lay,
With sword in hand, and torch to light
Their walls, if they said nay:
A monk remain'd, unchased, unchain'd,
And he did not seem form'd of clay,
For he's seen in the porch, and he's seen in the church,
Though he is not seen by day.

3.

And whether for good, or whether for ill,
It is not mine to say;
But still with the house of Amundeville
He abideth night and day.
By the marriage-bed of their lords, 't is said,
He sits on the bridal eve;
And 't is held as faith, to their bed of death
He comes—but not to grieve.

4.

When an heir is born, he's heard to mourn,
And when aught is to befall
That ancient line, in the pale moonshine
He walks from hall to hall.
His form you may trace, but not his face,
'T is shadow'd by his cowl;
But his eyes may be seen from the folds between,
And they seem of a parted soul.

5.

But beware! beware! of the Black Friar,
He still retains his sway,
For he is yet the church's heir,
Whoever may be the lay.
Amundeville is lord by day,
But the monk is lord by night;
Nor wine nor wassail could raise a wassail
To question that friar's right.

6.

Say nought to him as he walks the hall,
And he'll say nought to you;
He sweeps along in his dusky pall,
As o'er the grass the dew.
Then gramercy! for the Black Friar;
Heaven sain him! fair or foul,
And whate'er may be his prayer,
Let ours be for his soul.

XLI.

The lady's voice ceased, and the thrilling wires
Died from the touch that kindled them to sound;
And the pause follow'd, which when song expires
Pervades a moment those who listen round;

* During a visit to Newstead, in 1814, Lord Byron actually fancied he saw the ghost of the Black Friar, which was supposed to have haunted the abbey from the time of the dissolution of the monasteries."—MOORE.

And then of course the circle much admires,
Nor less applauds, as in politeness bound,
The tones, the feeling, and the execution,
To the performer's didactic confusion.

XLII.

Fair Adeline, though in a careless way,
As if she rated such accomplishment
As the mere pastime of an idle day,
Pursued an instant for her own content,
Would now and then as 't were without display,
Yet with display in fact, at times relent
To such performances with haughty smile,
To show she could, if it were worth her while.

XLIII.

Now this (but we will whisper it aside)
Was—pardon the pedantic illustration—
Trampling on Plato's pride with greater pride,
As did the Cynic on some like occasion;
Deeming the sage would be much mortified,
Or thrown into a philosophic passion,
For a spilt carpet—but the "Attic Bee"
Was much consoled by his own repartee.*

XLIV.

Thus Adeline would throw into the shade
(By doing easily, whene'er she chose,
What dilettanti do with vast parade)
Their sort of half profession; for it grows
To something like this when too oft display'd;
And that it is so, everybody knows,
Who have heard Miss That or This, or Lady
T'other,
Show off—to please their company or mother.

XLV.

Oh, the long evenings of duets and trios!
The admirations and the speculations;
The "Mamma Mia's!" and the "Amor Mio's!"
The "Tanti palpiti's" on such occasions:
The "Lasciami's," and quavering "Addio's!"
Amongst our own most musical of nations;
With "Tu mi chamas's" from Portingale,
To soothe our ears, lest Italy should fail.†

XLVI.

In Babylon's bravuras—as the home
Heart-ballads of Green Erin or Gray Highlands,
That bring Lochaber back to eyes that roam
O'er far Atlantic continents or islands,
The calentures of music which o'ercome
All mountaineers with dreams that they are high lands,
No more to be beheld but in such visions—
Was Adeline well versed, as compositions.

XLVII.

She also had a twilight tinge of "Blue."
Could write rhymes, and compose more than she wrote,
Made epigrams occasionally too
Upon her friends, as everybody ought.

* I think that it was a carpet on which Diogenes trod, with—
"Thus I trample on the pride of Plato!"—"With greater pride," as the other replied. But as carpets are meant to be trodden upon, my memory probably misgives me, and it might be a robe, or tapestry, or a table-cloth, or some other expensive and unmythical piece of furniture.

† I remember that the maypoles of a provincial town, somewhat surfeited with a similar display from foreign parts, did rather indecorously break through the applause of an intelligent audience—intelligent, I mean, as to music—for the words, besides being in recondite language (it was some years before the peace, ere all the world had travelled, and while I was a collegian), were sorely disguised by the per-

But still from that sublimer azure hue,
So much the present dye, she was remote;
Was weak enough to deem Pope a great poet,
And what was worse, was not ashamed to show it.

XLVIII.

Aurora—since we are touching upon taste,
Which nowadays is the thermometer
By whose degrees all characters are class'd—
Was more Shaksperian, if I do not err.
The worlds below this world's perplexing waste
Had more of her existence, for in her
There was a depth of feeling to embrace
Thoughts, boundless, deep, but silent too as Spain.

XLIX.

Not so her gracious, graceful, graceless Grace,
The full-grown Hebe of Fitz-Fulke, whose mind,
If she had any, was upon her face,
And that was of a fascinating kind.
A little turn for mischief you might trace
Also thereon,—but that's not much; we find
Few females without some such gentle leaven,
For fear we should suppose us quite in heaven.

L.

I have not heard she was at all poetic,
Though once she was seen reading the "Bath Guide,"
And "Hayley's Triumphs," which she deem'd pathetic,
Because she said her Ard Temper had been tried
So much, the bard had really been prophetic
Of what she had gone through with—since a bride.

But of all verse, what most ensured her praise
Were sonnets to herself, or "bouts rimés."‡

LI.

'T were difficult to say what was the object
Of Adeline, in bringing this same lay
To bear on what appear'd to her the subject
Of Juan's nervous feelings on that day.
Perhaps she merely had the simple project
To laugh him out of his supposed dismay;
Perhaps she might wish to confirm him in it,
Though why I cannot say—at least this minute.

LII.

But so far the immediate effect
Was to restore him to his self-propriety,
A thing quite necessary to the elect,
Who wish to take the tone of their society:
In which you cannot be too circumspect,
Whether the mode be peraffage or piety,
But wear the newest mantle of hypocrisy,
On pain of much displeasing the gynoeracy.§

LIII.

And therefore Juan now began to rally
His spirits, and without more explanation
To jest upon such themes in many a rally.
Her Grace, too, also seized the same occasion.

formers:—this maypoles, I say, broke out with, "Bot your Italians! for my part, I loves a simple ballad!" Bostons will go a good way to bring most people to the same opinion some day. Who would imagine that he was to be the successor of Mozart? However, I state this with diffidence, as a liege and loyal admirer of Italian music in general, and of much of Rossini's; but we may say, as the connoisseur did of painting in "The Vicar of Wakefield," that "the picture would be better painted if the painter had taken more pains."

‡ "The last words or rhymes of a number of verses given to a poet to be filled up."—TODD.

§ "Petitcoat government—female power."—JEDS.

With various similar remarks to tally,
But wish'd for a still more detail'd narration
Of this same mystic friar's curious doings,
About the present family's deaths and wooings.

LIV.

Of these few could say more than has been said;
They pass'd as such things do, for superstition
With some, while others, who had more in dread
The theme, half credited the strange tradition;
And much was talk'd on all sides on that head:
But Juan, when cross-question'd on the vision,
Which some supposed (though he had not avow'd
it)
Had stirr'd him, answer'd in a way to cloud it.

LV.

And then, the mid-day having worn to one,
The company prepared to separate;
Some to their several pastimes, or to none,
Some wondering 't was so early, some so late.
There was a goodly match too, to be run
Between some greyhounds on my lord's estate
And a young race-horse of old pedigree,
Match'd for the spring, whom several went to see.

LVI.

There was a picture-dealer who had brought
A special Titian, warrant'd original,
So precious that it was not to be bought,
Though princes the possessor were besteging all.
The king himself had cheapen'd it, but thought
The civil list he deigns to accept (obliging all
His subjects by his gracious acceptance)
Too scanty, in these times of low taxation.

LVII.

But as Lord Henry was a connoisseur,—
The friend of artists, if not arts,—the owner,
With motives the most classical and pure,
So that he would have been the very donor,
Rather than seller, had his wants been fewer,
So much he deem'd his patronage an honor,
Had brought the capo d'opera,* not for sale,
But for his judgment—never known to fail.

LVIII.

There was a modern Goth, I mean a Gothic
Bricklayer of Babel, call'd an architect,
Brought to survey these gray walls, which though so thick,
Might have from time acquired some slight defect;
Who, after rummaging the Abbey through thick
And thin, produced a plan whereby to erect
New buildings of correctest conformation,
And throw down old, which he call'd restoration.

LIX.

The cost would be a trifle—an "old song,"
Set to some thousands ('t is the usual burden
Of that same tune, when people hum it long)—
The price would specially repay its worth in
An edifice no less sublime than strong,
By which Lord Henry's good taste would go forth in
Its glory, through all ages shining sunny,
For Gothic daring shown in English money.†

LX.

There were two lawyers busy on a mortgage
Lord Henry wish'd to raise for a new purchase;
Also a lawsuit upon tenures burgrave,
And one on tithes, which sure are Discord's torches,
Kindling Religion till she throws down her gage,
"Untying" squires "to fight against the churches;"‡
There was a prize ox, a prize pig, and ploughman,
For Henry was a sort of Sabine showman.

LXI.

There were two poachers caught in a steel trap,
Ready for jail, their place of convalescence;
There was a country girl in a close cap
And scarlet cloak (I hate the sight to see, since—
Since—since—in youth, I had the sad mishap—
But luckily I have paid few parish fees since):
That scarlet cloak, alas! unclosed with rigor,
Presents the problem of a double figure.

LXII.

A reel within a bottle is a mystery,
One can't tell how it e'er got in or out;
Therefore the present piece of natural history
I leave to those who are fond of solving doubt;
And merely state, though not for the consistory,
Lord Henry was a justice, and that Scout
The constable, beneath a warrant's banner,
Had bagg'd this poacher upon Nature's manor.

LXIII.

Now justices of peace must judge all pieces
Of mischief of all kinds, and keep the game
And morals of the country from caprices
Of those who have not a license for the same;
And of all things, excepting tithes and leases,
Perhaps these are most difficult to tame:
Preserving partridges and pretty wenches
Are puzzles to the most precaution benches.

LXIV.

The present culprit was extremely pale,
Pale as if painted so; her cheek being red
By nature, as in higher dames less hale
'T is white, at least when they just rise from bed.
Perhaps she was ashamed of seeming frail,
Poor soul! for she was country born and bred,
And knew no better in her immorality
Than to wax white—for blushes are for quality.

LXV.

Her black, bright, downcast, yet espiègle eye,
Had gather'd a large tear into its corner,
Which the poor thing at times essay'd to dry,
For she was not a sentimental mourner
Parading all her sensibility,
Nor insolent enough to scorn the scorner,
But stood in trembling, patient tribulation,
To be call'd up for her examination.

LXVI.

Of course these groups were scatter'd here and
there,
Not nigh the gay saloon of ladies gent.
The lawyers in the study; and in air
The prize pig, ploughman, poachers; the men sent he will be preferable to Imbeciles. There is a glorious field for him, if he know how to cultivate it.—[Napoleon, Duke of Reichstadt, died at Vienna in 1809—to the disappointment of many prophets.]

§ "I conjure you, by that which you profess
(Howe'er you come to know it), answer me:
Though ye untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches."—Macbeth.

* Capo d'opera—chef-d'œuvre—masterpiece.

† "Assu Romano, ere Veneto" is the inscription (and wall inscribed in this instance) on the sea walls between the Adriatic and Venice. The walls were a republican work of the Venetians; the inscription, I believe, Imperial; and inscribed by Napoleon the First. It is time to continue to him that title—there will be a second by and by, "Spes altera mundi," &c. as he; let him not defeat it like his father. But in any case,

From town, viz., architect and dealer, were Both busy (as a general in his tent
Writing despatches) in their several stations,
Exulting in their brilliant lucubrations.

LXVII.

But this poor girl was left in the great hall,
While Scout, the parish guardian of the trail,
Discuss'd (he hated beer yeapt the "small")
A mighty mug of moral double ale.
She waited until Justice could recall
Its kind attentions to their proper pale,
To name a thing in nomenclature rather Perplexing for most virgins—a child's father.

LXVIII.

You see here was enough of occupation
For the Lord Henry, link'd with dogs and horses,
There was much bustle too, and preparation
Below stairs on the score of second courses;
Because, as suits their rank and situation,
Those who in counties have great land resources
Have "public days," when all men may carouse,
Though not exactly what's call'd "open house."

LXIX.

But once a week or fortnight, uninvited
(Thus we translate a general invitation)
All country gentlemen, equir'd or knighted,
May drop in without cards, and take their station
At the full board, and sit alike delighted
With fashionable wines and conversation;
And, as the isthmus of the grand connection,
Talk o'er themselves the past and next election.

LXX.

Lord Henry was a great electioneerer,
Burrowing for boroughs like a rat or rabbit.
But county contests cost him rather dearer,
Because the neighboring Scotch Earl of Giftgabbit
Had English influence, in the self-same sphere here;
His son, the Honorable Dick Dicedrabbitt,
Was member for the "other interest" (meaning
The same self-interest, with a different leaning).

LXXI.

Courteous and cautious therefore in his county,
He was all things to all men, and dispensed
To some civility, to others bounty,
And promises to all—which last commenced
To gather to a somewhat large amount, he
Not calculating how much they condensed;
But what with keeping some, and breaking others,
His word had the same value as another's.

LXXII.

A friend to freedom and freeholders—yet
No less a friend to government—he held,
That he exactly the just medium hit
Twixt place and patriotism—albeit compell'd,
Such was his sovereign's pleasure (though unfit,
He added modestly, when rebels rail'd),
To hold some sinecures he wish'd abolish'd,
But that with them all law would be demolish'd.

LXXIII.

He was "free to confess"—(whence comes this phrase?)
Is't English? No—it is only parliamentary)
That innovation's spirit nowadays
Had made more progress than for the last century.
He would not tread a factious path to praise,
Though for the public weal disposed to venture high:
As for his place, he could but say this of it,
That the fatigue was greater than the profit.

LXXIV.

Heaven, and his friends, knew that a private life
Had ever been his sole and whole ambition;
But could he quit his king in times of strife,
Which threaten'd the whole country with pertition?
When demagogues would with a butcher's knife Cut through and through (oh, damnable in-sion!)
The Gordian or the Geordi-an knot, whose strap
Have tied together commons, lords, and kings.

LXXV.

Sooner "come place into the civil list
And champion him to the utmost"—he would keep it,
Till duly disappointed or dismiss'd:
Profit he cared not for, let others reap it;
But should the day come when place ceased to exist,
The country would have far more cause to weep
it:
For how could it go on? Explain you can!
He gloried in the name of Englishman.

LXXVI.

He was as independent—ay, much more—
Than those who were not paid for independence.
As common soldiers, or a common—shore,
Have in their several arts or parts ascendant
O'er the irregulars in lust or gore,
Who do not give professional attendance.
Thus on the mob all statesmen are as eager
To prove their pride, as footmen to a beggar.

LXXVII.

All this (save the last stanza) Henry said,
And thought. I say no more—I've said too
much;
For all of us have either heard or read—
Off—or upon the hustings—some slight such Hints from the independent heart or head
Of the official candidate. I'll touch
No more on this—the dinner-bell hath rung,
And grace is said; the grace I should have sung—

LXXVIII.

But I'm too late, and therefore must make play.
'T was a great banquet, such as Albion old
Was wont to boast—as if a glutton's tray
Were something very glorious to behold.
But 't was a public feast and public day—
Quite full, right dull, guests hot, and dishes cold.
Great plenty, much formality, small cheer,
And everybody out of their own sphere.

LXXIX.

The squires familiarly formal, and
My lords and ladies proudly condescending;
The very servants puzzling how to hand
Their place—without it might be too much bending
From their high places by the sideboard's stand—
Yet, like their masters, fearful of offending.
For any deviation from the graces
Might cost both man and master too—their places.

LXXX.

There were some hunters bold, and coursers keen,
Whose hounds ne'er err'd, nor greyhounds deign'd to lurch;
Some deadly shots too, Septembrizers, seen
Earliest to rise, and last to quit the search
Of the poor partridge through his stubble screen.
There were some masey members of the church,
Takers of tithes, and makers of good matches,
And several who sung fewer psalms than catches.

LXXXI.

There were some country wags too—and, alas!
 Some exiles from the town, who had been driven
 To gaze, instead of pavement, upon grass,
 And rise at nine in lieu of long eleven.
 And lo! upon that day it came to pass,
 I sate next that o'erwhelming son of heaven,
 The very powerful parson, Peter Pith,*
 The loudest wit I e'er was deafen'd with.

LXXXII.

I knew him in his livelier London days,
 A brilliant diner out, though but a curate,
 And not a joke he cut but earn'd its praise,
 Until preferment, coming at a sure rate
 (Oh, Providence! how wondrous are thy ways!
 Who would suppose thy gifts sometimes obdurate?),
 Gave him, to lay the devil who looks o'er Lincoln,
 A fat fen vicarage, and nought to think on.

LXXXIII.

His jokes were sermons, and his sermons jokes;
 But both were thrown away amongst the fens;
 For wit hath no great friend in aguish folks.
 No longer ready ears and short-hand pens
 Imbibed the gay bon-mot, or happy hoax:
 The poor priest was reduced to common sense,
 Or to coarse efforts very loud and long.
 To hammer a hoarse laugh from the thick throng.

LXXXIV.

There is a difference, says the song, "between
 A beggar and a queen," or was (of late
 The latter worse used of the two we've seen—
 But we'll say nothing of affairs of state);
 A difference "twixt a bishop and a dean,"
 A difference between crockery ware and plate,
 As between English beef and Spartan broth—
 And yet great heroes have been bred by both.

LXXXV.

But of all nature's discrepancies, none
 Upon the whole is greater than the difference
 Beheld between the country and the town,
 Of which the latter merits every preference
 From those who have few resources of their own,
 And only think, or act, or feel, with reference
 To some small plan of interest or ambition—
 Both which are limited to no condition.

LXXXVI.

But "en avant!" The light loves languish o'er Long banquets and too many guests, although
 A slight repast makes people love much more,
 Bacchus and Ceres being, as we know,
 Even from our grammar upwards, friends of yore
 With vivifying Venus, who doth owe
 To these the invention of champagne and truffles:
 Temperance delights her, but long fasting ruffles.

LXXXVII.

Dully pass'd o'er the dinner of the day;
 And Juan took his place, he knew not where,
 Confused, in the confusion, and distrait,
 And sitting as if nail'd upon his chair:
 Though knives and forks clank'd round as in a fray,
 He seem'd unconscious of all passing there,
 Till some one, with a groan, exprest a wish (Unheeded twice) to have a fin of fish.

LXXXVIII.

On which, at the third asking of the banna,
 He started; and perceiving smiles around

Broadening to grins, he color'd more than once,
 And hastily—as nothing can confound
 A wise man more than laughter from a dunce—
 Inflicted on the dish a deadly wound,
 And with such hurry, that, ere he could curb it,
 He had paid his neighbor's prayer with half a turbot.

LXXXIX.

This was no bad mistake, as it occur'd,
 The supplicator being an amateur;
 But others, who were left with scarce a third,
 Were angry—as they well might, to be sure,
 They wonder'd how a young man so absurd
 Lord Henry at his table should endure;
 And this, and his not knowing how much oate
 Had fallen last market, cost his host three votes.

XC.

They little knew, or might have sympathized,
 That he the night before had seen a ghost,
 A prologue which but slightly harmonized
 With the substantial company engross'd
 By matter, and so much materialized,
 That one scarce knew at what to marvel most
 Of two things—how (the question rather odd is)
 Such bodies could have souls, or souls such bodies.

XCI.

But what confused him more than smile or stare,
 From all the 'squires and 'squireesses around,
 Who wonder'd at the abstraction of his air,
 Especially as he had been renown'd
 For some vivacity among the fair,
 Even in the country circle's narrow bound
 (For little things upon my lord's estate
 Were good small talk for others still less great!)

XCII.

Was, that he caught Aurora's eye on his,
 And something like a smile upon her cheek.
 Now this he really rather took amiss;
 In those who rarely smile, their smile bespeaks
 A strong external motive; and in this
 Smile of Aurora's there was nought to pique
 Or hope, or love, with any of the wiles
 Which some pretend to trace in ladies' smiles.

XCIII.

'Twas a mere quiet smile of contemplation,
 Indicative of some surprise and pity;
 And Juan grew carnation with vexation,
 Which was not very wise, and still less witty,
 Since he had gain'd at least her observation,
 A most important outwork of the city—
 As Juan should have known, had not his senses
 By last night's ghost been driven from their defences.

XCIV.

But what was bad, she did not blush in turn,
 Nor seem embarrass'd—quite the contrary;
 Her aspect was as usual, still—not stern—
 And she withdrew, but cast not down, her eye.
 Yet grew a little pale—with what? concern?
 I know not; but her color ne'er was high—Though sometimes faintly flush'd—and always clear,
 As deep seas in a sunny atmosphere.

XCV.

But Adeline was occupied by fame
 This day; and watching, witching, condescending
 To the consumers of fish, fowl, and game,
 And dignity with courtesy so blending,
 As all must blend whose part it is to aim
 (Especially as the sixth year is ending)
 At their lord's, son's, or similar connection's
 Safe conduct through the rocks of re-elections.

* Query, Sydney Smith, author of Peter Plymley's Letters?
 —Printer's Devil.

XCVI.

Though this was most expedient on the whole,
And usual—Juan, when he cast a glance
On Adeline while playing her grand rôle,
Which she went through as though it were a dance,
Betraying only now and then her soul
By a look scarce perceptibly askance
(Of weariness or scorn), began to feel
Some doubt how much of Adeline was real;

XCVII.

So well she acted all and every part
By turns—with that vivacious versatility,
Which many people take for want of heart.
They err—'t is merely what is call'd mobility.*
A thing of temperament and not of art,
Though seeming so, from its supposed facility;
And false—though true; for surely they're sincerest,
Who are strongly acted on by what is nearest.

XCVIII.

This makes your actors, artists, and romancers,
Heroes sometimes, though seldom—sages never;
But speakers, hardis, diplomatists, and dancers,
Little that's great, but much of what is clever;
Most orators, but very few financiers,
Though all Exchequer chancellors endeavor,
Of late years, to dispense with Cocker's rigors,
And grow quite figurative with their figures.

XCIX.

The poets of arithmetic are they
Who, though they prove not two and two to be Five, as they might do in a modest way,
Have plainly made it out that four are three,
Judging by what they take, and what they pay
The Sinking Fund's unfathomable sea,
That most unliquidating liquid, leaves
The debt unsunk, yet sinks all it receives.

C.

While Adeline displayed her airs and graces,
The fair Fitz-Fulke seem'd very much at ease;
Though too well bred to quiz men to their faces,
Her laughing blue eyes with a glance could seize
The ridicules of people in all places—
That honey of your fashionable bees—
And store it up for mischievous enjoyment;
And this at present was her kind employment.

CI.

However, the day closed, as days must close;
The evening also waned—and coffee came.
Each carriage was announced, and ladies rose,
And curtailing off, as courtesies country dame,
Retired: with most unfashionable bows
Their docile esquires also did the same,
Delighted with their dinner and their host,
But with the Lady Adeline the most.

CII.

Some praised her beauty: others her great grace;
The warmth of her politeness, whose sincerity
Was obvious in each feature of her face,
Whose traits were radiant with the rays of verity.
Yes: she was truly worthy her high place!
No one could envy her deserved prosperity.

* In French "mobilité." I am not sure that mobility is English; but it is expressive of a quality which rather belongs to other climates, though it is sometimes seen to a great extent in our own. It may be defined as an excessive susceptibility of immediate impressions—at the same time without losing the past: and is, though sometimes apparently useful to the possessor, a most painful and unhappy attribute.—"That Lord Byron was fully aware not only of the abundance of this quality in his own nature, but of the danger in

And then her dress—what beautiful simplicity
Draped her form with curious felicity!

CIII.

Meanwhile sweet Adeline deserved their praise,
By an impartial indemnification
For all her past exertion and soft phrases,
In a most edifying conversation,
Which turn'd upon their late guests' mien and faces,
And families, even to the last relation:
Their hideous wives, their horrid selves and dresses,
And truculent distortion of their tresses.

CIV.

True, she said little—"t was the rest that broke
Forth into universal epigram;
But then 't was to the purpose what she spoke:
Like Addison's "faint praise," so went to dama,
Her own but served to set off every joke,
As music chimes in with a melodrama,
How sweet the task to shield an absent friend!
I ask but this of mine, to—not defend.

CV.

There were but two exceptions to this keen
Skirmish of wits o'er the departed: one
Aurora, with her pure and placid mien;
And Juan, too, in general behind none
In gay remark on what he had heard or seen,
Sate silent now, his usual spirits gone:
In vain he heard the others rail or rally,
He would not join them in a single sally.

CVI.

'Tis true he saw Aurora look as though
She approved his silence; she perhaps mistook
Its motive for that charity we owe
But seldom pay the absent, nor would look
Further; it might or it might not be so.
But Juan, sitting silent in his nook,
Observing little in his reverie,
Yet saw this much, which he was glad to see.

CVII.

The ghost at least had done him this much good,
In making him as silent as a ghost,
If in the circumstances which ensued
He gain'd esteem where it was worth the most;
And certainly Aurora had renew'd
In him some feelings he had lately lost,
Or harden'd: feelings which, perhaps ideal,
Are so divine, that I must deem them real:—

CVIII.

The love of higher things and better days;
The unbounded hope, and heavenly ignorance
Of what is call'd the world, and the world's ways;
The moments when we gather from a glance
More joy than from all future pride or praise,
Which kindle manhood, but can ne'er entrance
The heart in an existence of its own,
Of which another's bottom is the zone.

CIX.

Who would not sigh at the beau idéal
That hath a memory, or that had a heart?

which it placed consistency and singleness of character, did not require this note to assure you. The consciousness, indeed, of his own natural tendency to yield thus to every chance impression, and change in his mind, but had the effect of keeping him in that general line of consistency, on certain great subjects, which he continued to preserve throughout life."—MOORE.

Alas! A star must fade like that of Dian:
Ray fades on ray, as years on years depart.
Anacreon only had the soul to tie an Unwithering myrtle round the unblunted dart
Of Eros: but though thou hast play'd us many tricks,
Still we respect thee, "Alma Venus Genetrix!"

CX.

And full of sentiments, sublime as billows
Heaving between this world and worlds beyond,
Don Juan, when the midnight hour of pillows
Arrived, retired to his; but to despond
Rather than rest. Instead of poppies, willows
Waved o'er his couch; he meditated, fond
Of those sweet bitter thoughts which banish sleep,
And make the worlding sneer, the youngling weep.

CXI.

The night was as before: he was undrest.
Saving his night-gown, which is an undress;
Completely "sans culotte," and without vest;
In short, he hardly could be clothed with less:
But apprehensive of his spectral guest,
He sat with feelings awkward to express
(By those who have not had such visitations),
Expectant of the ghost's fresh operations.

CXII.

And not in vain he listen'd;—Hush! what's that?
I see—I see—Ah, no!—'t is not—yet 't is—
Ye powers! it is the—the—the—Poooh! the cat!
The devil may take that stealthy pace of his!
So like a spiritual pit-a-pat,
Or tiptoe of an amatory Miss,
Gliding the first time to a rendezvous,
And dreading the chaste echoes of her shoe.

CXIII.

Again—what is 't? The wind? No, no,—this time
It is the sable Friar as before,
With awful footsteps regular as rhyme,
Or (as rhymes may be in these days) much more.
Again through shadows of the night sublime,
When deep sleep fell on men, and the world wore
The starry darkness round her like a girdle
Spangled with gems—the monk made his blood curdle.

CXIV.

A noise like to wet fingers drawn on glass,*
Which sets the teeth on edge; and a slight clat-
ter,
Like showers which on the midnight gusts will pass,
Sounding like very supernatural water,
Came over Juan's ear, which throbb'd, alas!
For immaterialism 's a serious matter;
So that even those whose faith is the most great
In souls immortal, shun them tête-à-tête.

CXV.

Were his eyes open?—Yes! and his mouth too.
Surprise has this effect—to make one dumb,
Yet leave the gate which eloquence slips through
As wide as if a long speech were to come.
Nigh and more nigh the awful echoes drew,
Tremendous to a mortal tympanum:
His eyes were open, and (as was before Stated) his mouth. What open'd next?—the door.

CXVI.

If open'd with a most infernal crack,
Like that of hell. "Lasciate ogni speranza

Vol ch' entrate!" The hinge seem'd to speak,
Dreadful as Dante's rhyme, or this stanza;
Or—but all words upon such themes are weak:
A single shade 's sufficient to entrance a
Hero—for what is substance to a spirit?
Or how is 't matter trembles to come near it?

CXXVII.

The door flew wide, not swiftly,—but, as fly
The sea-gulls, with a steady, sober flight—
And then swung back; nor close,—but stood awry,
Half letting in long shadows on the light,
Which still in Juan's candlesticks burn'd high,
For he had two, both tolerably bright,
And in the doorway, darkening darkness, stood
The sable Friar in his solemn hood.

CXXVIII.

Don Juan shook, as erst he had been shaken
The night before; but being sick of shaking,
He first inclined to think he had been mistaken;
And then to be ashamed of such mistaking;
His own internal ghost began to awaken
Within him, and to quell his corporal quaking—
Hinting that soul and body on the whole
Were odds against a disembodied soul.

CXXIX.

And then his dread grew wrath, and his wrath
ferce,
And he arose, advanced—the shade retreated;
But Juan, eager now the truth to pierce,
Follow'd, his veins no longer cold, but heated,
Resolved to thrust the mystery carte and tierce,
At whatsoever risk of being defeated:
The ghost stopp'd, menaced, then retired, until
He reach'd the ancient wall, then stood stone still.

CXXX.

Juan put forth one arm—Eternal powers!
It touch'd no soul, nor body, but the wall,
On which the moonbeams fell in silvery showers,
Checker'd with all the tracery of the hall;
He shudder'd, as no doubt the bravest cowers
When he can't tell what 't is that doth appall.
How odd, a single hobgoblin's nonentity
Should cause more fear than a whole host's identity!

CXXI.

But still the shade remain'd: the blue eyes glared,
And rather variably for stony death;
Yet one thing rather good the grave had spared,
The ghost had a remarkably sweet breath:
A straggling curl show'd he had been fair-hair'd;
A red lip, with two rows of pearls beneath,
Gleam'd forth, as through the casement's ivy shroud
The moon peep'd, just escaped from a gray cloud.

CXXII.

And Juan, puzzled, but still curious, thrust
His other arm forth—Wonder upon wonder!
It press'd upon a hard but glowing bust,
Which beat as if there was a warm heart under.
He found, as people on most trials must,
That he had made at first a silly blunder,
And that in his confusion he had caught
Only the wall, instead of what he sought.

CXXIII.

The ghost, if ghost it were, seem'd a sweet soul
As ever lurk'd beneath a holy hood:
A dimpled chin, a neck of ivory, stole
Forth into something much like flesh and blood;
Back fell the sable frock and dreary cowl,
And they reveal'd—alas! that e'er they should!
In full, voluptuous, but not o'ergrown bulk,
The phantom of her frolic Grace—Fitz-Fulke!

*See the account of the ghost of the uncle of Prince Charles of Saxony, raised by Schroepfer—"Karl—Karl—was wilst du mit mir?"

ATTRIBUTED POEMS.

TO JESSY.*

THERE is a mystic thread of life
So dearly wreathed with mine alone,
That destiny's relentless knife
At once must sever both or none.

THERE is a form, on which these eyes
Have often gazed with fond delight—
By day that form their joy supplies,
And dreams restore it through the night.

THERE is a voice, whose tones inspire
Such thrills of rapture through my breast—
I would not hear a seraph choir,
Unless that voice could join the rest.

THERE is a face, whose blushes tell
Affection's tale upon the cheek—
But pallid at one fond farewell,
Proclaims more love than words can speak.

THERE is a lip, which mine hath press'd,
And none had ever press'd before,
It vow'd to make me sweetly blest,
And mine—mine only press'd it more.

THERE is a bosom—all my own—
Hath pillow'd oft this aching head;
A mouth which smiles on me alone,
An eye, whose tears with mine are shed.

THERE are two hearts, whose movements thrill
In unison so closely sweet,
That, pulse to pulse responsive still,
They both must heave, or cease to beat.

THERE are two souls, whose equal flow
In gentle streams so calmly run,
That when they part—they part!—ah! no,
They cannot part—those souls are one.

LINES

FOUND IN THE TRAVELLERS' BOOK AT CHAMUNI.

How many number'd are, how few agreed,
In age, or clime, or character, or creed!
Here wandering Genius leaves a deathless name,
And Folly writes—for others do the same.
Italian treachery, and English pride,
Dutch craft, and German dulness, side by side!
The hardy Russian hails congenial snow;
The Spaniard shivers as these breezes blow.
Knew men the objects of this varied crew,
To stare how many, and to feel how few!
Here Nature's child, ecstatic from her school,
And travelling problems, that admire by rule;
The timorous poet woos his modest muse,
And thanks his stars he's safe from all reviews;
The pedant drags from out his motley store
A line some hundred hills have heard before.
Here critics too (for where 's the happy spot
So blest by nature as to have them not?)
Spit their vile slander o'er some simple phrase
Of foolish wonder or of honest praise;
Some pompous hint, some comment on mine host,
Some direful failure, or some empty boast:

Not blacker spleen could fill these furious men,
If Jeffrey's soul had perch'd on Gifford's pen.
Here envy, hatred, and the fool of fame,
Join'd in one act of wonder when they came:
Here beauty's worshipper in flesh or rock,
The incarnate fancy, or the breathing block,
Sees the white giant, in his robe of light,
Stretch his huge form to look o'er Jura's height;
And stops, while hastening to the blest remains
And calmer beauties of the classic plains.
And here, whom hope beguiling bids to seek Ease for his breast, and color for his cheek,
Still steals a moment from Ausonia's sky,
And views and wonders on his way—to die.

But he, the author of these idle lines,
What passion leads him, and what tie confines?
For him what friend is true, what mistress blooms,
What joy elates him, and what grief consumes?
Impassion'd, senseless, vigorous, or old,
What matters!—bootless were his story told.
Some praise at least one act of sense may claim,
He wrote these verses, but he hid his name.

TO LADY CAROLINE LAMB.

AND say'st thou that I have not felt,
Whilst thou wert thus estranged from me?
Nor know'st how dearly I have dwelt
On one unbroken dream of thee?
But love like ours must never be,
And I will learn to prize thee less,
As thou hast fled, so let me flee,
And change the heart thou mayst not bless.

They'll tell thee, Clara! I have seem'd,
Of late, another's charms to woo,
Nor sigh'd, nor frown'd, as if I deem'd
That thou wert banish'd from my view.
Clara! this struggle—to undo
What thou hast done too well, for me—
This mask before the babbling crew—
This treachery—was truth to thee!

I have not wept while thou wert gone,
Nor worn one look of sullen woe;
But sought, in many, all that one
(Ah! need I name her!) could bestow.
It is a duty which I owe
To thine—to thee—to man—to God,
To crush, to quench this guilty glow,
Ere yet the path of crime be trod.

But, since my breast is not so pure,
Since still the vulture tears my heart,
Let me this agony endure,
Not thee, oh! dearest as thou art!
In mercy, Clara! let us part,
And I will seek, yet know not how,
To shun, in time, the threatening dart;
Guilt must not aim at such as thou.

But thou must aid me in the task,
And nobly thus exert thy power;
Then spurn me hence—'t is all I ask—
Ere time mature a guiltier hour;
Ere wrath's impending vials shower
Remorse redoubled on my head;
Ere fire unquenchably devour
A heart whose hope has long been dead.

Deceive no more thyself and me,
Deceive not better hearts than mine;

* These stanzas are said to have been addressed by Lord Byron to Lady Byron a few months before their separation.
—P. B.

ATTRIBUTED POEMS.

Ah, shouldst thou, whither wouldst thou flee,
From woe like ours—from shame like thine!
And if there be a wrath divine,
A pang beyond this fleeting breath,
E'en now all future hope resign:
Such thoughts are guilt—such guilt is death!

THE PRINCE OF WHALES.

Io Pean! Io! sing
To the smug people's king—
Not a mightier whale than this
In the vast Atlantic is;
Not a fatter fish than he
Flounders round the Polar sea:
See his blubber—at his gills
What a world of drink he swills,
From his trunk as from a spout!
Which next moment he pours out.
Such his person: next declare,
Muse! who his companions are.
Every fish of generous kind
Scuds aside or sinks behind,
But about his person keep
All the monsters of the deep;
Mermaids, with their tales and singing,
His delighted fancy stinging;
Crooked dolphins, they surround him;
Dog-like seals, they fawn around him:
Following hard, the progress mark
Of the intolerant salt sea-shark—
For his solace and relief
Flat fish are his courtiers chief;—
Last and lowest of his train,
Ink-fish, libellers of the main,
Their black liquor shed in spite—
(Such on earth the things that write).
In his stomach, some do say
No good thing can ever stay;
Had it been the fortune of it
To have swallow'd the old prophet,
Three days there he'd not have dwell'd,
But in one have been expell'd.
Hapless mariners are they
Who, beguiled, as seamen say,
Deeming it some rock or island,
Footing sure, safe spot, and dry land,
Anchor in his scaly rind;
Soon the difference they find,
Sudden, plump, he sinks beneath them—
Does to ruthless waves bequeath them.
Name or title, what has he?
Is he regent of the sea?
From the difficulty free us,
Buffon, Banks, or sage Linnaeus!
With his wondrous attributes
Say—what appellation suits?
By his bulk and by his size,
By his oily qualities,
This, or else my eye-sight fails,
This should be the Prince of Whales.

ON THE LETTER I.

(WRITTEN IN A LADY'S SCRAP-BOOK.)

I AM not in youth, nor in manhood, nor age,
But in infancy ever am known;
I'm a stranger alike to the fool and the sage,
And though I'm distinguish'd in history's page,
I always am greatest alone.

I am not in earth, nor the sun, nor the moon;
You may search all the sky—I'm not there:
In the morning and evening—though not in the noon,
You may plainly perceive me—for, like a balloon,
I am midway suspended in air.

I am always in riches, and yet I am told
Wealth ne'er did my presence desire;
I dwell with the miser, but not with his gold,
And sometimes I stand in his chimney so cold,
Though I serve as a part of the fire.

I often am met in political life—
In my absence no kingdom can be;
And they say there can neither be friendship nor strife,
No one can live single, no one take a wife,
Without interfering with me.

My brethren are many, and of my whole race
Not one is more slender and tall;
And though not the eldest, I hold the first place,
And even in dishonor, despair, and disgrace,
I boldly appear 'mong them all.

Though disease may possess me, and sickness and
pain,
I am never in sorrow or gloom;
Though in wit and in wisdom I equally reign,
I'm the heart of all sin, and have long lived in vain,
Yet I ne'er shall be found in the tomb.

TO MY DEAR MARY ANNE.

ADIEU to sweet Mary for ever!
From her I must quickly depart:
Though the fates us from each other sever,
Still her image shall dwell in my heart.

The flame that within my breast burns
Is unlike what in lovers' hearts glows;
The love which for Mary I feel
Is far purer than Cupid bestows.

I wish not your peace to disturb,
I wish not your joys to molest;
Mistake not my passion for love,
'Tis your friendship alone I request.

Not ten thousand lovers could feel
The friendship my bosom contains;
It will ever within my heart dwell,
While the warm blood flows through my veins.

May the Ruler of Heaven look down,
And my Mary from evil defend!
May she ne'er know adversity's frown!
May her happiness ne'er have an end!

Once more, my sweet Mary, adieu!
Farewell! I with anguish repeat;
For ever I'll think upon you,
While this heart in my bosom shall beat.

STANZAS.

I HEARD thy fate without a tear,
Thy loss with scarce a sigh;
And yet thou wert surpassing dear—
Too loved of all to die.

I know not what hath sear'd mine eye:
The tears refuse to start;
But every drop its lids deny
Falls dreary on my heart.

Yes—deep and heavy, one by one,
They sink, and turn to care;
As cavern'd waters wear the stone,
Yet, dropping, harden there.

They cannot petrify more fast
Than feelings sunk remain,
Which, coldly fix'd, regard the past,
But never melt again.

APPENDIX.

NOTES TO THE POEMS.

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

NOTE 1.

See page 7. Stanzas omitted.

BATTLE OF TALAVERA.

"To feed the crows on Talavera's plain,
And fertilise the field that each pretends to gain."

We think it right to restore here a note which Lord Byron himself suppressed with reluctance, at the urgent request of a friend. It alludes, inter alia, to the then recent publication of Sir Walter Scott's "Vision of Don Roderick," of which work the profits had been handsomely given to the cause of Portuguese patriotism: "We have heard wonders of the Portuguese lately, and their gallantry. Pray Heaven it continue! yet 'would it were bed-time, Hal, and all were well!' They must fight a great many hours, by 'Shrewsbury clock,' before the number of their slain equals that of our countrymen butchered by these kind creatures, now metamorphosed into 'cascadores,' and what not. I merely state a fact, not confined to Portugal; for in Sicily and Malta we are knocked on the head at a handsome average nightly, and not a Sicilian or Maltese is ever punished! The neglect of protection is disgraceful to our government and governors; for the murders are as notorious as the moon that shines upon them, and the apathy that overlooks them. The Portuguese, it is to be hoped, are complimented with the 'Forlorn Hope,'—if the cowards are become brave like the rest of their kind, in a corner, pray let them display it. But there is a subscription for these 'Spang-holes' (they need not be ashamed of the epithet once applied to the Spartans); and all the charitable patronymies, from ostentatious A. to diffident Z. and U. A. Od. from 'An admirer of Valor,' are in requisition for the lists at Lloyd's, and the honor of British benevolence. Well! we have fought, and subscribed, and bestowed peerages, and buried the killed by our friends and foes; and, lo! all this is to be done over again! Like Lien Chi in Goldsmith's Citizen of the World, as we 'grow older, we grow never the better.' It would be pleasant to learn who will subscribe for us, in or about the year 1816, and what nation will send fifty thousand men, first to be decimated in the capital, and then decimated again (in the Irish fashion, nine out of ten) in the 'bed of honor,' which, as Sergeant Kite says, is considerably larger and more commodious than 'the bed of Ware.' Then they must have a poet to write the 'Vision of Don Feroveal,' and generously bestow the profits of the well and widely printed quarto, to rebuild the 'Buckwynd' and the 'Canoangate,' or furnish new kilts for the half-roasted Highlanders. Lord Wellington, however, has enacted marvels; and so did his Oriental brother, whom I saw chariotising over the French flag, and heard clipping in Spanish, after listening to the speech of a patriotic cobbler of Odis, on the event of his own entry into that city, and the exit of some five thousand bold Britons out of this 'best of all possible worlds.' Sorely were we puzzled how to dispose of that same victory of Talavera; and a victory it surely was somewhere, for everybody claimed it. The Spanish despatch and mob called it Cuerta's, and made no great mention of the viscount; the French called it theirs (to my great discomfiture,—for a French consul stopped my mouth in Greece with a pestilent Paris Gazette, just as I had killed Sebastiani 'in buckram,' and King Joseph 'in Kendal green'—) and we have not yet determined what to call it, or whom; for, certes, it was none of our own. Howbeit, Massena's retreat is a great comfort; and as we have not been in the habit of pursuing for some years past, no wonder we are a little awkward at first. No doubt we shall improve; or, if not, we have only to take to our old way of retrograding, and there we are at home."

NOTE 2.

See page 14. Stanzas omitted.

REMOVAL OF THE WORKS OF ART FROM ATHENS.

"But must the modern Pict's ignoble bond,
To rise what Gods, and Turk, and Time hath spared."

At this moment (January 2, 1816), besides what has been already deposited in London, an Hydriot vessel is in the Piræus to receive every portable relic. Thus, as I heard a young Greek observe, in common with many of his countrymen—for, lost as they are, they yet feel on this occasion—thus may Lord Elgin boast of having ruined Athens. An Italian painter of the first eminence, named Lusieri, is the agent of devastation; and like the Greek Anders of Verres in Sicily, who followed the same profession, he has proved the able instrument of plunder. Between this artist and the French consul Fauvel, who wishes to rescue the remains for his own government, there is now a violent dispute concerning a car employed in their conveyance, the wheel of which—I wish they were both broken upon it!—has been locked up by the consul, and Lusieri has laid his complaint before the waywode. Lord Elgin has been extremely happy in his choice of Signor Lusieri. During a residence of ten years in Athens, he never had the curiosity to proceed as far as Sunium (now Cape Colonna), till he accompanied us in our second excursion. However, his works, as far as they go, are most beautiful; but they are almost all unfinished. While he and his patrons confine themselves to tasting medals, appreciating cameos, sketching columns, and cheapening gems, their little absurdities are as harmless as insect or fox-hunting, maiden speechifying, barouche-driving, or any such pastime; but when they carry away three or four ship-loads of the most valuable and many relics that time and barbarism have left to the most injured and most celebrated of cities; when they destroy, in a vain attempt to tear down those works which have been the admiration of ages, I know no motive which can excuse, no name which can designate the perpetrators of this dastardly devastation. It was not the least of the crimes laid to the charge of Verres, that he had plundered Sicily, in the manner since imitated at Athens. The most unblushing impudence could hardly go further than to smite the name of its plunderer to the walls of the Acropolis; while the wanton and useless defacement of the whole range of the baso-reliefs, in one compartment of the temple, will never permit that name to be pronounced by an observer without execration.

On this occasion I speak impartially: I am not a collector or admirer of collections, consequently no rival; but I have some early possessions in favor of Greece, and do not think the honor of England advanced by plunder, whether of India or Attica.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

Another noble lord has done better, because he has done less; but some others, more or less noble, yet "all honorable men," have done best, because, after a deal of excavation and excavation, bribery to the waywods, mining and counselling, they have done nothing at all. We had such ink shed, and wine shed, which almost ended in bloodshed! Lord E.'s "prig"—see Jonathan Wild for the definition of "prigism"—quarrelled with another, Gropius; by name (a very good name too for his business), and muttered something about satisfaction, in a verbal answer to a note of the poor Prussian: this was stated at table to Gropius, who laughed, but could eat no dinner afterwards. The rivals were not reconciled when I left Greece. I have reason to remember their squabble, for they wanted to make me their arbitrator.

NOTE 3.

See page 16. Stanza omitted.

ALBANIA AND THE ALBANIANS.

"Land of Albania! let me bend mine eyes
On thee, thou rugged nurse of savage men!"

Albania comprises part of Macedonia, Illyria, Chacchia, and Epirus. Iskander is the Turkish word for Alexander; and the celebrated Scanderbeg (Lord Alexander) is alluded to in the third and fourth lines of the thirty-eighth stanza. I do not know whether I am correct in making Scanderbeg the countryman of Alexander, who was born at Pella in Macedonia, but Mr. Gibbon terms him so, and adds Pyrrhus to the list in speaking of his exploits.

Of Albania Gibbon remarks, that a country "within sight of Italy is less known than the interior of America." Circumstances, of little consequence to mention, led Mr. Hobhouse and myself into that country before we visited any other part of the Ottoman dominions; and with the exception of Major Leake, then officially resident at Joannina, no other Englishmen have ever advanced beyond the capital into the interior, as that gentleman very lately assured me. Ali Pacha was at that time (October, 1809) carrying on war against Ibrahim Pacha, whom he had driven to Berat, a strong fortress, which he was then besieging; on our arrival at Joannina we were invited to Tepeleni, his highness's birth-place, and favorite seat, only one day's distance from Berat; at this juncture the vizier had made it his headquarters. After some stay in the capital, we accordingly followed; but though furnished with every accommodation, and escorted by one of the vizier's secretaries, we were nine days (on account of the rains) in accomplishing a journey which, on our return, barely occupied four. On our route we passed two cities, ~~Arta~~ and Libohocbo, apparently little inferior to Yanina in size; and no peccol or pen can ever do justice to the scenery in the vicinity of Ertis and Delvinachi, the frontier village of Epirus and Albania proper.

On Albania and its inhabitants I am unwilling to dissent, because this will be done so much better by my fellow traveller, in a work which may probably precede this in publication, than I as little wish to follow as I would to anticipate him. But some few observations are necessary to the text. The Arnauts, or Albanians, struck me forcibly by their resemblance to the Highlanders of Scotland, in dress, figure, and manner of living. Their very mountains seemed Caledonian, with a kinder climate. The kilt, though white; the spars, active form; their dialect, Celtic in its sound, and their hardy habits, all carried me back to Morven. No nation are so detested and dreaded by their neighbors as the Albanians; the Greeks hardly regard them as Christians, or the Turks as Moslems; and in fact they are a mixture of both, and sometimes neither. Their habits are predatory—all are armed; and the red-shawed Arnauts, the Montenegrins, Chimarits and Gerges are treacherous; the others differ somewhat in garb, and essentially in character. As far as my own experience goes, I can speak favorably. I was attended by two, an infidel and a Mussulman, to Constantinople and every other part of Turkey which came within my observation; and more faithful in peril, or indefatigable in service, are rarely to be found. The infidel was named Basilus, the Moslem, Dervish Tahiri; the former a man of middle age, and the latter about my own. Basilus was strictly charged by Ali Pacha in person to attend us; and Dervish was one of fifty who accompanied us through the forests of Aconaria to the banks of Achelous, and onward to Messalungi in Attolia. There I took him into my own service, and never had occasion to repent it till the moment of my departure.

When, in 1810, after the departure of my friend Mr. Hobhouse for England, I was seized with a severe fever in the Morea, these men saved my life by frightening away my physicians, whose threat they threatened to out if I was not cured within a given time. To this consolatory assurance of posthumous retribution, and a resolute refusal of Dr. Bonanelli's prescriptions, I attributed my recovery. I had left my last remaining English servant at Athens; my dragoman was as ill as myself, and my poor Arnauts nursed me with an attention which would have done honor to civilisation. They had a variety of adventures; for the Moslem, Dervish, being a remarkably handsome man, was always squabbling with the husbands of Athens; inasmuch that four of the principal Turks paid me a visit of remonstrance at the convent, on the subject of his having taken a woman from the bath—whom he had lawfully bought, however—a thing quite contrary to etiquette. Basilus also was extremely gallant amongst his own persuasion, and had the greatest veneration for the church, mixed with the highest contempt of churches, whom he cuffed upon occasion in a most brotherly manner. Yet he never passed a church without crossing himself; and I remember the risk he ran in entering Saint Sophia, in Stambul, because it had once been a place of his worship. On remonstrating with him on his inconsistent proceedings, he invariably answered, "Our church is holy, our priests are thieves;" and then he crossed himself as usual, and boxed the ears of the first "papas" who refused to assist in any required operation, as was always found to be necessary where a priest had any influence with the cognate bashi of his village. Indeed, a more abandoned race of miscreants cannot exist than the lower orders of the Greek clergy.

When preparations were made for my return, my Albanians were summoned to receive their pay. Basilus took his with an awkward show of regret at my intended departure, and marched away to his quarters with his bag of piastres. I sent for Dervish, but for some time he was not to be found; at last he entered, just as Signor Logotheti, father to the elegant Anglo-consul of Athens, and some other of my Greek acquaintances, paid me a visit. Dervish took the money, but on a sudden dashed it to the ground; and clasping his hands, which he raised to his forehead, rushed out of the room weeping bitterly. From that moment to the hour of my embarkation, he continued his lamentations, and all our efforts to console him only produced this answer, "M' adieu," "He leaves me." Signor Logotheti, who never wept before for anything less than the loss of a para (about the fourth of a farthing), melted; the padre of the convent, my attendants, my visitors—and I verily believe that even Sterne's "foolish fat scullion" would have left his "fish-kettle" to sympathise with the unaffected and unexpected sorrow of this barbarian.

For my own part, when I remembered that, a short time before my departure from England, a noble and most intimate associate had excused himself from taking leave of me because he had to attend a relation "to a milliner's," I felt no less surprised than humiliated by the present occurrence and the past recollection. That Dervish would leave me with some regret was to be expected; when master and man have been scrambling over the mountains of a dozen provinces together, they are unwilling to separate; but his present feelings, contrasted with his native ferocity, improved

1 This Sr. Gropius was employed by a noble lord for the sole purpose of sketching, in which he excels; but I am sorry to say, that he has, through the abused sanction of that most respectable name, been trundling at humble distance in the steps of Sr. Lasieri—a chapel of his trophies was destined, and I believe confiscated, at Constantinople in 1816. I am most happy to be now enabled to state, that "this was not in his bond" that he was employed solely as a painter, and that his noble patron disavows all connection with him, except as an artist. If the error in the first and second edition of this paper has given the noble lord a moment's pain, I am very sorry for it; Sr. Gropius has assumed for years the name of his agent; and though I cannot much condemn myself for sharing in the mistake of so many, I am happy in being one of the first to be undeceived. Indeed, I have as much pleasure in contradicting this as I felt regret in stating it.—Note in third edition.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

my opinion of the human heart. I believe this almost feudal fidelity is frequent amongst them. One day, on our journey over Parnassus, an Englishman in my service gave him a push in some dispute about the baggage, which he unluckily mistook for a blow; he spoke not, but sat down, leaning his head upon his hands. Possessing the consequences, we endeavored to explain away the affront, which produced the following answer:—"I have been a robber; I am a soldier; no captain ever struck me; you are my master, I have eaten your bread, but by that bread! (an usual oath) had it been otherwise, I would have stabbed the dog your servant, and gone to the mountains." So the affair ended, but from that day forward he never thoroughly forgave the thoughtless fellow who insulted him. Dervish excelled in the dance of his country, conjectured to be a remnant of the ancient Pyrrhic: be that as it may, it is manly, and requires wonderful agility. It is very distinct from the stupid Romalia, the dull round-about of the Greeks, of which our Athenian party had so many specimens.

The Albanians in general (I do not mean the cultivators of the earth in the provinces, who have also that appellation, but the mountaineers) have a fine cast of countenance; and the most beautiful women I ever beheld, in stature and in features, we saw leading the road broken down by the torrents between Delvinachi and Libohado. Their manner of walking is truly theatrical; but this strut is probably the effect of the capote, or cloak, depending from one shoulder. Their long hair reminds you of the Spartans, and their courage in desultory warfare is unquestionable. Though they have some cavalry amongst the Gerges, I never saw a good Arnaout horseman; my own preferred the English saddle, which, however, they could never keep. But on foot they are not to be subdued by fatigue.

NOTE 4.

See page 19. Stanzas inserted.

SPECIMENS OF THE ALBANIAN OR ARNAOUT DIALECT OF THE ILLYRIC.

"While thus to concert they they lay half song, half serious'd."

As a specimen of the Albanian or Arnaout dialect of the Illyric, I here insert two of their most popular choral songs, which are generally chanted in dancing by men or women indiscriminately. The first words are merely a kind of chorus without meaning, like some in our own and all other languages.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. Bo, Bo, Bo, Bo, Bo, Bo,
Naciara, popuso. | 1. Lo, Lo, I come, I come; be more silent. |
| 2. Mankirre na cive
Ha pen derini ti hin. | 2. I come, I run; open the door that I may enter. |
| 3. Ha po uderi secretini
Ti vin ti mar secretini. | 3. Open the door by halves, that I may take my turban. |
| 4. Caliriote me surme
Ha he po pee dua tive. | 4. Caliriote! with the dark eyes, open the gate that I may enter. |
| 5. Buu, Bo, Bo, Bo, Bo,
Gi qem spirita cimiru. | 5. Lo, Lo, I hear thee, my soul. |
| 6. Caliriote vu le funde
Ede vete tunde tunde. | 6. An Arnaout girl, in costly garb, walks with graceful
pride. |
| 7. Caliriote me surme
Ti mi put e pol mi le. | 7. Caliriote! maid of the dark eyes, give me a kiss. |
| 8. Se ti puta did mora
Bi mi ri mi veti udo gja. | 8. If I have kissed thee, what hast thou gained? My soul is consumed with fire. |
| 9. Va le ni li obe cadale
Celo mora, more celo. | 9. Dance lightly, more gently, and gently still. |
| 10. Piu bari ti tirete
Piu buron cai pra seti. | 10. Make not so much dust to destroy your embroidered
trim. |

The last stanza would puzzle a commentator: the men have certainly buskins of the most beautiful texture, but the ladies (to whom the above is supposed to be addressed) have nothing under their little yellow boots and slippers but a well-turned and sometimes very white ankle. The Arnaout girls are much handsomer than the Greeks, and their dress is far more picturesque. They preserve their shape much longer also, from being always in the open air. It is to be observed, that the Arnaout is not a written language; the words of this song, therefore, as well as the one which follows, are spelt according to their pronunciation. They are copied by one who speaks and understands the dialect perfectly, and who is a native of Athens.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. Ndri seide thide dervasse
Vetimi upri vi tota. | 1. I am wounded by thy love, and have loved best to sorrow myself. |
| 2. Ah valiseo mi privi lotte
Mi mi rini mi le vome. | 2. Thou hast consumed me!
Ah, maid! thou hast struck me to the heart. |
| 3. Uti tana, raba ston
Mitti ove taleti dua. | 3. I have said I wish no dowry, but thine eyes and eye-
lashes. |
| 4. Roba stinori sedua
Qu mi dini veti dua. | 4. The scoured dowry I want not, but thee only. |
| 5. Qermi mi dua civiled
Roba ti stinori diti emi. | 5. Give me thy charms, and let the portion feed the demon. |
| 6. Utera pisa valiseo me
simi rini ti hepti
Eti mi hire a piate ai gni desdori tistati. | 6. I have loved thee, maid, with a sincere soul, but thou hast left me like a withered tree. |
| 7. Udi vera adoriali udiri clove cidi mora
Udorini talti bolina u
elo calmori mora. | 7. If I have placed my hand on thy bosom, what have I gained! my hand is withdrawn, but retains the
name. |

I believe the two last stanzas, as they are in a different measure, ought to belong to another ballad. An idea something similar to the thought in the last lines was expressed by Socrates, whose arm having come in contact with one of his "disciples," Critobulus or Ctesibulus, the philosopher complained of a shooting pain as far as his shoulder for some days after, and therefore very properly resolved to teach his disciples in future without touching them.

NOTE 5.

See page 19. Stanzas inserted.

TROCHES OF THE PRESENT STATE OF GREECE.

"Fate Greece! and relics of departed worth!
Immortal, though no more; though fallen, great!"

I.

Before I say anything about a city of which everybody, traveller or not, has thought it necessary to say something, I will request Miss Owenon, when she next borrows an Athenian heroine for her four volumes, to have the goodness to marry her to somebody more of a gentleman than a "Diadar Aga" (who by the by is not an Aga, the most impolite of petty officers, the greatest patron of larceny Athens ever saw (except Lord E.), and the unworthy occupant of the Acropolis, on a handsome annual stipend of one hundred and fifty piastres (eight pounds sterling), out of which he has only to pay his garrison, the most ill-regulated corps in the ill-regulated Ottoman Empire. I speak it tenderly, seeing I was once the cause of the husband of a "Ida of Athens" nearly suffering the bastinado; and because the said "Diadar" is a turbulent husband, and beats his wife; so that I exhort and beseech Miss Owenon to sue for a separate maintenance in behalf of "Ida." Having premised thus much, on a matter of such import to the readers of romance, I may now leave Ida, and mention her birthplace.

Setting aside the magic of the name, and all those associations which it would be pedantic and superfluous to recapitulate, the very situation of Athens would render it the favorite of all who have eyes for art or nature. The climate, to me at least, appeared a perpetual spring; during eight months I never passed a day without being as many hours on horseback; rain is extremely rare, more never lies in the plains, and a cloudy day is an agreeable rarity. In Spain, Portugal, and every part of the East which I visited, except Ionia and Attica, I perceived no such superiority of climate to our own; and at Constantinople, where I passed May,

¹ The Albanians, particularly the women, are frequently termed "Caliriotes;" for what reason I inquired in vain.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

June, and part of July (1830), you might "damn the climate, and complain of spleen," five days out of seven.

The air of the Morea is heavy and unwholesome, but the moment you pass the isthmus in the direction of Megara the change is strikingly perceptible. But I fear Hesiod will still be found correct in his description of a Boeotian winter.

We found at Livadia an "esprit fort" in a Greek bishop, of all freethinkers! This worthy hypocrite rallied his own religion with great interitpidy (but not before his flock), and talked of a mass as a "cogloneria." It was impossible to think better of him for this; but, for a Boeotian, he was brist with all his absurdity. This phenomenon (with the exception indeed of Thebes, the remains of Chersones, the plain of Platae, Orobounous, Livadia, and its nominal cave of Trophonius) was the only remarkable thing we saw before we passed Mount Citheron.

The fountain of Diros turns a mill; at least my companion (who, resolving to be at once cleanly and classical, bathed in it) pronounced it to be the fountain of Diros, and anybody who thinks it worth while may contradict him. At Castri we drank of half a dozen streamlets, none not of the purest. Before we decided to our satisfaction which was the true Castalian, and even that had a villainous twang, probably from the snow, though it did not throw us into an eplo fever, like poor Dr. Chandler.

From Fort Phyle, of which large remains still exist, the plain of Athens, Pentelica, Hymettus, the Aegean, and the Acropolis, burst upon the eye at once; in my opinion, a more glorious prospect than even Cintra or Istanbul. Not the view from the Troad, with Ida, the Hellespont, and the more distant Mount Athos, can equal it, though so superior in extent.

I heard much of the beauty of Arcadia, but excepting the view from the monastery of Megaspelon (which is inferior to Zita in a command of country), and the descent from the mountains on the way from Tripolitza to Argos, Arcadia has little to recommend it beyond the name.

"Sternum, et dulces moriens reminiscitur Argos."

Virgil could have put this into the mouth of none but an Argive, and (with reverence be it spoken) it does not deserve the epithet. And if the Polyneices of Statius, "In media audit duo litora campis," did actually hear both shores in crossing the isthmus of Corinth, he had better ears than have ever been worn in such a journey alone.

"Athens," says a celebrated topographer, "is still the most polished city of Greece." Perhaps it may be of Greece, but not of the Greeks; for Joanna in Epirus is universally allowed, amongst themselves, to be superior in the wealth, refinement, learning, and dialect of its inhabitants. The Athenians are remarkable for their cunning; and the lower orders are not improperly characterized in that proverb, which classes them with "the Jews of Salonica, and the Turks of the Negropont."

Among the various foreigners resident in Athens, French, Italian, German, Russian, etc., there was never a difference of opinion in their estimate of the Greek character, though on all other topics they disputed with great acrimony.

M. Fauvel, the French consul, who has passed thirty years principally at Athens, and to whose talents as an artist and manners as a gentleman, none who have known him can refuse their testimony, has frequently declared in my hearing that the Greeks do not deserve to be emancipated; reasoning on the grounds of their "national and individual depravity!" while he forgot that such depravity is to be attributed to causes which can only be removed by the measure he reprobates.

M. Roque, a French merchant of respectability long settled in Athens, asserted with the most amusing gravity, "Sir, they are the same consuls that existed in the days of Themistocles!" an alarming remark to this "Laudator temporis acti." The ancients banished Themistocles; the moderns cheat Monsieur Roque: thus great men have ever been treated!

In short, all the Franks who are fixtures, and most of the Englishmen, Germans, Danes, etc., of passage, came over by degrees to their opinion, on much the same grounds that a Turk in England would condemn the nation by wholesale, because he was wronged by his lackey, and overcharged by his shambazman.

Certainly it was not a little staggering when the Sieurs Fauvel and Lusieri, the two greatest demagogues of the day, who divide between them the power of Pericles and the popularity of Cleon, and puzzle the poor waywode with perpetual differences, agreed in the utter condemnation, "nulla virtute redemptum," of the Greeks in general, and of the Athenians in particular.

For my own humble opinion, I am loth to hazard it, knowing as I do that there be now in MR. no less than five tours of the first magnitude and of the most threatening aspect, all in typographical array, by persons of wit and honor, and regular commonplace books; but, if I may say this without offense, it seems to me rather hard to declare so positively and pertinaciously, as almost everybody has declared, that the Greeks, because they are very bad, will never be better.

Eton and Bonaldi have led us astray by their panegyrics and projects; but, on the other hand, De Pauw and Thornton have debased the Greeks beyond their deserts.

The Greeks will never be independent; they will never be sovereigns as heretofore, and God forbid they ever should! but they may be subjects without being slaves. Our colonies are not independent, but they are free and industrious, and such may Greece be hereafter.

At present, like the Catholics of Ireland and the Jews throughout the world, and such other outgalled and heterodox people, they suffer all the moral and physical ills that can afflict humanity. Their life is a struggle against truth; they are vicious in their own defense. They are so unused to kindness, that when they occasionally meet with it they look upon it with suspicion, as a dog often bastes snout at your fingers if you attempt to caress him. "They are ungrateful, notoriously, abominably ungrateful!"—this is the general cry. Now, in the name of Nemesis! for what are they to be grateful? Where is the human being that ever conferred a benefit on Greek or Greeks? They are to be grateful to the Turks for their fetters, and to the Franks for their broken promises and lying counsels. They are to be grateful to the artist who engraves their ruins, and to the antiquary who carries them away; to the traveller whose janissary flogs them, and to the scribbler whose journal abuses them! This is the amount of their obligations to foreigners.

II.

Franciscan Convent, Athens, January 23, 1831.

Amongst the remnants of the barbarous policy of the earlier ages, are the traces of bondage which yet exist in different countries; whose inhabitants, however divided in religion and manners, almost all agree in oppression.

The English have at last compassionated their negroes, and, under a less bigoted government, may probably one day release their Catholic brethren; but the interposition of foreigners alone can emancipate the Greeks, who, otherwise, appear to have as small a chance of redemption from the Turks, as the Jews have from mankind in general.

Of the ancient Greeks we know more than enough; at least the younger men of Europe devote much of their time to the study of the Greek writers and history, which would be more usefully spent in mastering their own. Of the moderns we are perhaps more neglectful than they deserve; and while every man of any pretensions to learning is tring out his youth, and often his age, in the study of the language and of the harangues of the Athenian demagogues in favor of freedom, the real or supposed descendants of these sturdy republicans are left to the actual tyranny of their masters, although a very slight effort is required to strike off their chains.

To talk, as the Greeks themselves do, of their rising again to their pristine superiority, would be ridiculous; as the rest of the world must resume its barbarism, after reasserting the sovereignty of Greece; but there seems to be no very great obstacle, except in the apathy of the Franks, to their becoming an useful dependency, or even a free state with a proper guarantee;—under correction, however, be it spoken, for many and well-informed men doubt the practicability even of this.

The Greeks have never lost their hope, though they are now more divided in opinion on the subject of their probable deliverers. Religion recommends the Russians; but they have twice been deceived and abandoned by that power, and the dread lesson they received after the Muscovite desertion in the Morea has never been forgotten. The French they dislike; although the subjugation of the rest of Europe will, probably, be attended by the deliverance of continental Greece. The islanders look to the English for succor, as they have very lately possessed themselves of the Ionian republic, Corfu excepted. But whoever appear with arms in their hands will be welcome; and when that day arrives, Heaven have mercy on the Ottomans! they cannot expect / from the Glaucous.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

But instead of considering what they have been, and speculating on what they may be, let us look at them as they are.

And here it is impossible to reconcile the contrariety of opinions: some, particularly the merchants, deifying the Greeks in the strongest language; others, generally travellers, turning periods in their eulogy; and publishing very curious speculations grounded on their former state, which can have no more effect on their present lot, than the existence of the Incas on the future fortunes of Peru.

One very ingenious person terms them the "natural allies of Englishmen;" another, no less ingenious, will not allow them to be the allies of anybody, and denies their very descent from the ancients; a third, more ingenious than either, builds a Greek empire on a Russian foundation, and realises (on paper) all the chimeras of Catherine II. As to the question of their descent, what can it import whether the Mainotes are the lineal Laconians or not? or the present Athenians as indigenous as the bees of Hymettos, or as the grasshoppers, to which they once likened themselves? What Englishman cares if he be of a Danish, Saxon, Norman, or Trojan blood? or who, except a Welshman, is afflicted with a desire of being descended from Caractacus?

The poor Greeks do not so much abound in the good things of this world, as to render even their claims to antiquity an object of envy; it is very cruel, then, in Mr. Thornton to disturb them in the possession of all that time has left them; viz., their pedigree, of which they are the more tenacious, as it is all they can call their own. It would be worth while to publish together, and compare the works of Messrs. Thornton and De Pauw, Rott and Somdini; paradox on one side, and prejudice on the other. Mr. Thornton conceives himself to have claims to public confidence from a fourteen years' residence at Pera; perhaps he may on the subject of the Turks, but this can give him no more insight into the real state of Greece and her inhabitants, than as many years spent in Wapping into that of the Western Highlands.

The Greeks of Constantinople live in Asia; and if Mr. Thornton did not offend from the Golden Horn than his brother merchants are accustomed to do, I should place no great reliance on his information. I actually heard one of these gentlemen boast of their little general intercourse with the city, and assert of himself, with an air of triumph, that he had been but four times at Constantinople in as many years.

As to Mr. Thornton's voyages in the Black Sea with Greek vessels, they gave him the same idea of Greece as a cruise to Berwick in a Scotch smack would of Johnny Grot's house. Upon what grounds then does he arrogate the right of condemning by wholesale a body of men, of whom he can know little? It is rather a curious circumstance that Mr. Thornton, who so lavishly dispraises Pouqueville on every occasion of mentioning the Turks, has yet recourse to him as authority on the Greeks, and terms him an impartial observer. Now, Dr. Pouqueville is as little entitled to that appellation as Mr. Thornton to confer it on him.

The fact is, we are deplorably in want of information on the subject of the Greeks, and in particular their literature; nor is there any probability of our being better acquainted, till our intercourse becomes more intimate or their independence confirmed; the relations of passing travellers are as little to be depended on as the invectives of angry factious; but till something more can be attained, we must be content with the little to be acquired from similar sources.*

However defective these may be, they are preferable to the paradoxes of men who have read superficially of the ancients and seen nothing of the moderns, such as De Pauw; who, when he asserts that the British breed of horses is ruined by Newmarket, and that the Spartans were cowards in the field, betrays an equal knowledge of English horses and Spartan men. His "philosophical observations" have a much better claim to the title of "poetical." It could not be expected that he who so liberally condemns some of the most celebrated institutions of the ancient, should have mercy on the modern Greeks; and it fortunately happens, that the absurdity of his hypothesis on their forefathers refutes his sentences on themselves.

Let us trust, then, that, in spite of the prophecies of De Pauw, and the doubts of Mr. Thornton, there is a reasonable hope of the redemption of a race of men, who, whatever may be the errors of their religion and policy, have been amply punished by three centuries and a half of captivity.

III.

Athens, Prædication Commem. March 17, 1811.

"I must have some talk with this learned Theban."

Some time after my return from Constantinople to this city I received the thirty-first number of the Edinburgh Review as a great favor, and certainly at this distance an acceptable one, from the captain of an English frigate off Salamis. In that number, art. 3, containing the review of a French translation of Strabo, there are introduced some remarks on the modern Greeks and their literature, with a short account of Coray, a co-translator in the French version. On those remarks I mean to ground a few observations; and the spot where I now write will, I hope, be sufficient excuse for introducing them in a work in some degree connected with the subject. Coray, the most celebrated of living Greeks, at least among the Franks, was born at Solo in the Revier Smyrna is stated, I have reason to think, incorrectly, and besides the translation of Beza and other works mentioned by the Reviewer, has published a lexicon in Roman and French, if I may trust the assurance of some Danish travellers lately arrived from Paris; but the latest we have seen here in French and Greek is that of Gregory Zollikou.† Coray has recently been involved in an unpleasant controversy with M. Gail's Parisian commentator and editor of some translations from the Greek poets, in consequence of the institute having awarded him the prize for his version of Hippocrates' "Dei iudicio," etc., on the disagreement, and consequently displeasure, of the said Gail. To his exertions, literary and patriotic, great praise is undoubtedly due; but a part of that praise ought not to be withheld from the two brothers Zollikou (merchants settled in Leghorn), who sent him to Paris, and maintained him, for the express purpose of elucidating the ancient, and adding to the modern, researches of his countrymen. Coray, however, is not considered by his countrymen equal to some who lived in the two last centuries; more particularly Dorotheos of Mytilene, whose Hellenic writings are so much esteemed by the Greeks, that Meletius terms him "Merd ou Gourevlato eis Evropora Epistola." (P. 234 Ecclæsiastical History, vol. iv.)

Panagiotis Kodrakis, the translator of Fontceilla, and Karamanous, who translated Ocellus Lucanus on the Universe into French, Christodoulos, and more particularly Fakidis, whom I have conversed with in Joannina, are also in high repute among their literati. The last mentioned has published in Roman and Latin a work on "True Happiness."

* A word, on passing, with Mr. Thornton and Dr. Pouqueville, who have been guilty between them of sadly clipping the sultan's Turkish. Dr. Pouqueville tells a long story of a Moslem who swallowed corrosive sublimate in such quantities that he acquired the name of "Suleyman Yeyen," i. e., quoth the doctor, "Suleyman, the eater of corrosive sublimate." "Aha," thinks Mr. Thornton (angry with the doctor for the fifteenth time), "have I caught you?" Then, in a note twice that of the doctor's anecdote, he questions the doctor's propensity in the Turkish tongue, and his veracity in his own. "For," observes Mr. Thornton (after inflicting on the tough particles of a Turkish verb), "it means nothing more than Suleyman the eater," and quite omits the supplementary "sublimatus." Now both are right, and both are wrong. If Mr. Thornton, when he next resides "fourteen years in the factory," will consult his Turkish dictionary, or ask any of his Stamboulie acquaintances, he will discover that "Suleyman's yeyen," put together discreetly, means like "Devil-eater of sublimate," without any "Suleyman" in the case; "Suleyma" signifying "corrosive sublimate," and not being a proper name on this occasion, although it be an orthodox name enough with the addition of a. After Mr. Thornton's frequent hints of profound Orientalism, he might have found this out before he sang such peans over Dr. Pouqueville.

After this I think "Travellers wrong Factors" shall be our motto, though the above Mr. Thornton has condemned "hoc genus omne" for mistake and misrepresentation. "No factor ultra credamus." "No merchant beyond his baies."—N. B. For the benefit of Mr. Thornton: "Sutor" is not a proper name.

† I have in my possession an excellent lexicon "ψηφισμα," which I received in exchange from R. G.—Req. for a small you; my antiquarian friends have never forgotten it, nor forgive me.

‡ In Gail's pamphlet against Coray, he talks of "throwing the insolent Hellenist out of the window." On this a French critic exclaims, "Ah, my God! throw an Hellenist out of the window! what sacrilege!" It certainly would be a serious business for those authors who dwell in the stiles; but I have quoted the passage merely to prove the similarity of style among the controversialists of all polished countries: London or Edinburgh could hardly parallel this Parisian exhibition.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

dedicated to Catherine II. But Polyzois, who is stated by the Reviewer to be the only modern except Cory who has distinguished himself by a knowledge of Hellenic, if he be the Polyzois lampantistiotis of Yanina, who has published a number of editions in Romsa, was neither more nor less than a itinerant vender of books; with the contents of which he had no concern beyond his name on the title-page, placed there to secure his property in the publication; and he was, moreover, a man utterly destitute of scholastic acquirements. As the name, however, is not uncommon, some other Polyzois may have edited the Epistles of Aristocrotus.

It is to be regretted that the system of continental blockade has closed the few channels through which the Greeks received their publications, particularly Venice and Trieste. Even the common grammars for children are become too dear for the lower orders. Amongst their original works the Geography of Meletius, Archbishop of Athens, and a multitude of theological quartos and poetical pamphlets, are to be met with; their grammars and lexicons of two, three, and four languages are numerous and excellent. Their poetry is in rhyme. The most singular piece I have lately seen is a satire in a dialogue between a Russian, English, and French traveller, and the waywode of Wallachia (or blackboy, as they term him), an archbishop, a merchant, and cogia bashi (or primat), in succession; to all of whom under the Turks the writer attributes their present degeneracy. Their songs are sometimes pretty and pathetic, but their tunes generally unpleasant to the ear of a Frank; the best is the famous "Aere eadei rse," "Ead-eer," by the unfortunate Riga. But from a catalogue of more than sixty authors, now before me, only fifteen can be found who have touched on any theme except theology.

I am intrusted with a commission by a Greek of Athens named Marmarotouri to make arrangements, if possible, for printing in London a translation of Barthelemi's Anacharsis in Romsa, as he has no other opportunity, unless he despatches the MS. to Vienna by the Black Sea and Danube.

The Reviewer mentions a school established at Hecatonest, and suppressed at the instigation of Sebastiani; he means Chionides, or, in Turkish, Halvali; a town on the continent, where that institution for a hundred students and three professors still exists. It is true that this establishment was disturbed by the Porte, under the ridiculous pretext that the Greeks were constructing a fortress instead of a college; but on investigation, and the payment of some purses to the Divan, it has been permitted to continue. The principal professor, named Yemalmin (i. e. Benjamin), is stated to be a man of talent, but a freethinker. He was born in Lesbos, studied in Italy, and is master of Hellenic, Latin, and some Frank languages; besides a smattering of the sciences.

Though it is not my intention to enter further on the topic than may allude to the article in question, I cannot but observe that the Reviewer's lamentation over the fall of the Greeks appears singular, when he closes it with these words: "The change is to be attributed to their misfortune rather than to any physical degradation." It may be true that the Greeks are not physically degenerated, and that Constantinople contained on the day when it changed masters as many men of six feet and upwards as in the hour of prosperity; but ancient history and modern politics instruct us that something more than physical perfection is necessary to preserve a state in vigor and independence; and the Greeks, in particular, are a melancholy example of the near connection between moral degradation and national decay.

The Reviewer mentions a plan "ex bello" by Potemkin for the purification of the Romsa; and I have endeavored in vain to procure any tidings or traces of its existence. There was an Academy in St. Petersburg for the Greeks; but it was suppressed by Paul, and has not been revived by his successor.

There is a slip of the pen, and it can only be a slip of the pen, in p. 48, No. 31, of the Edinburgh Review, where these words occur: "We are told that when the capital of the East yielded to Soliman."—It may be presumed that the last word will, in a future edition, be altered to Mahomet II.* The "ladies of Constantinople," it seems, at that period spoke a dialect "which would not have disgraced the lips of an Athenian." I do not know how that might be, but am sorry to say the ladies in general, and the Athenians in particular, are much altered; being far from choice either in their dialect or expressions, as the whole Attic race are barbarous to a proverb:—

"O Agria, agria yvra, Ti yvraspote typhos rupa."

In Gibbon, vol. x., p. 361, is the following sentence: "The vulgar dialect of the city was gross and barbarous, though the compositions of the church and palace sometimes affected to copy the purity of the Attic models." Whatever may be asserted on the subject, it is difficult to conceive that the "ladies of Constantinople," in the reign of the last Caesar, spoke a purer dialect than Anna Comnena wrote three centuries before; and those royal pages are not esteemed the best models of composition, although the princess παρρησια ΑΕΤΙΒΟΙ Αρρησιγγορα. In the Faal, and in Yanina, the best Greek is spoken; in the latter there is a flourishing school under the direction of Palalas.

There is now in Athens a pupil of Palalas's, who is making a tour of observation through Greece; he is intelligent, and better educated than a fellow-commoner of most colleges. I mention this as a proof that the spirit of inquiry is not dormant among the Greeks.

The Reviewer mentions Mr. Wright, the author of the beautiful poem "Howe Ionian," as qualified to give details of these nominal Romans and degenerate Greeks, and also of their language; but Mr. Wright, though a good poet and an able man, has made a mistake where he states the Albanian dialect of the Romsa to approximate nearest to the Hellenic; for the Albanians speak a Romsa as notoriously corrupt as the Scotch of Aberdeenshire, or the Italian of Naples. Yanina (where, next to the Faal, the Greek is purest), although the capital of Ali Pasha's dominions, is not in Albania, but Epirus; and beyond Delvinachi in Albania proper up to Argiro Castro and Tapselen (beyond which I did not advance) they speak worse Greek than even the Athenians. I was attended for a year and a half by two of these singular mountaineers, whose mother tongue is Illyric, and I never heard them or their countrymen (whom I have seen, not only at home, but to the amount of twenty thousand in the army of Vely Pasha) praised for their Greek, but often laughed at for their provincial barbarisms.

I have in my possession about twenty-five letters, amongst which some from the Bey of Corinth, written to me by Notaras, the cogia bashi, and others by the dragoman of the Calmucam of the Morea (which last governs in Vely Pasha's absence), are said to be favorable specimens of their epistolary style. I also received some at Constantinople from private persons, written in a most hyperbolical style, but in the true antique character.

The Reviewer proceeds, after some remarks on the tongue in its past and present state, to a paradox (page 86) on the great mischief the knowledge of his own language has done to Cory, who, it seems, is less likely to understand the ancient Greek because he is perfect master of the modern! This observation follows a paragraph recommending, in explicit terms, the study of the Romsa, as "a powerful auxiliary," not only to the traveller and foreign merchant, but also to the classical scholar; in short, to everybody except the only person who can be thoroughly acquainted with its uses; and by a parity of reasoning, our old language is conjectured to be probably more attainable by "foreigners" than by ourselves! Now, I am inclined to think that a Dutch Tyro on our tongue (albeit himself of saxon blood) would be easily perplexed with "Sir Christum," or any other given "Auchinleck MS." with or without a grammar or glossary; and to most apprehensions it seems evident that none but a native can acquire a competent, far less complete, knowledge of our

* In a former number of the Edinburgh Review, 1808, it is observed: "Lord Byron passed some of his early years in Scotland, where he might have learned that πρῶτος does not mean a beginner, any more than ἀρχαῖος means a beginner. Query.—Was it in Scotland that the young gentlemen of the Edinburgh Review learned that Soliman means Mahomet II. any more than ἁγιότης means holiness?—but leave it to them."

"Cautius inque vicinis probemus errata metitis."

The mistake seemed so completely a lapse of the pen (from the great similarity of the two words, and the total absence of error from the former pages of the literary Ιουλιανός) that I should have passed it over as in the text, had I not perceived in the Edinburgh Review much needless exultation on all such detections, particularly a recent one, where words and syllables are subjects of disquisition and transposition; and the above-mentioned parallel passage in my own case irresistibly propelled me to hint how much easier it is to be critical than correct. The gentlemen, having enjoyed many a triumph on such victories, will hardly begrudge me a slight caution for the present.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

obsolete idiom. We may give the critic credit for his ingenuity, but no more believe him than we do Smollett's Lismahago, who maintains that the purest English is spoken in Edinburgh. That Corry may err is very possible; but if he does, the fault is in the man rather than in his mother tongue, which is as it ought to be, of the greatest aid to the native student.—Here the Reviewer proceeds to business on Strabo's translators, and here I close my remarks.

Sir W. Drummond, Mr. Hamilton, Lord Aberdeen, Dr. Clarke, Captain Leake, Mr. Gell, Mr. Walpole, and many others now in England, have all the requisites to furnish details of this fallen people. The few observations I have offered, I should have left where I made them, had not the article in question, and above all the spot where I read it, induced me to advert to those pages, which the advantage of my present situation enabled me to clear, or at least to make the attempt.

I have endeavored to waive the personal feelings which rise in despite of me, in touching upon any part of the Edinburgh Review; not from a wish to conciliate the favor of its writers, or to cancel the remembrance of a syllable I have formerly published, but simply from a sense of the impropriety of mixing up private resentments with a disquisition of the present kind, and more particularly at this distance of time and place.

NOTE 6.

See page 18. Services limited.

OF THE PRESENT STATE OF TURKEY AND THE TURKS.

The difficulties of travelling in Turkey have been much exaggerated; or rather have considerably diminished, of late years. The Mussulmans have been beaten into a kind of sullen civility, very comfortable to voyagers.

It is hazardous to say much on the subject of Turks or Turkey; since it is possible to live amongst them twenty years without acquiring information, at least from themselves. As far as my own slight experience carried me, I have no complaint to make; but am indebted for many civilities (I might almost say for friendship, and much hospitality, to Ali Pacha, his son Veli Pacha of the Morea, and several others of high rank in the provinces. Suleyman Aga, late governor of Athens, and now of Thebes, was a bon vivant, and as social a being as ever sat cross-legged at a tray or a table. During the carnival, when our English party were masquerading, both himself and his successor were more happy to "receive masks" than any dowager in Grosvenor Square.

On one occasion of his supping at the convent, his friend and visitor, the Cadé of Thebes, was carried from table perfectly qualified for any club in Christendom; while the worthy waywode himself triumphed in his fall.

In all money transactions with the Moslems, I ever found the strictest honor, the highest disinterestedness. In transacting business with them, there are none of those dirty piousness, under the name of interest, difference of exchange, commission, &c., &c., uniformly found in applying to a Greek consul to cash bills, even on the first houses in Persia.

With regard to presents, an established custom in the East, you will rarely find yourself a loser; as one worth acceptance is generally returned by another of similar value—a horse, or a shawl.

In the capital and at court the citizens and courtiers are formed in the same school with those of Christianity; and there does not exist a more honorable, friendly, and high-spirited character than the true Turkish provincial aga, or Moslem country gentleman. It is not meant here to designate the governors of towns, but those agas who, by a kind of feudal tenure, possess lands and houses, of more or less extent, in Greece and Asia Minor.

The lower orders are in as tolerable discipline as the rabble in countries with greater pretensions to civilization. A Moslem, in walking the streets of our country towns, would be more incommoded in England than a Frank in a similar situation in Turkey. Segmentals are the best travelling dress.

The best accounts of the religion and different sects of Islamism may be found in D'Osson's French; of their manners, &c., perhaps in Thornton's English. The Ottomans, with all their defects, are not a people to be despised. Equal, at least, to the Spaniards, they are superior to the Portuguese. If it be difficult to pronounce what they are, we are at least say what they are not: they are not treacherous, they are not cowardly, they do not burn heretics, they are not assassins, nor has an enemy advanced to their capital. They are faithful to their Sultan till he becomes unfit to govern, and devout to their God without an inquisition. Were they driven from Saint Sophia to-morrow, and the French or Russians enthroned in their stead, it would become a question whether Europe would gain by the exchange. England would certainly be the loser.

With regard to that ignorance of which they are so generally and sometimes justly accused, it may be doubted, always excepting France and England, in what useful points of knowledge they are excelled by other nations. Is it in the common arts of life? In their manufactures? Is a Turkish sabre inferior to a Toledo? or is a Turk worse clothed or lodged, or fed and taught, than a Spaniard? Are their poems worse educated than a grandee? or an offendi than a knight of Saint Jago? I think not.

I remember Mahmoud, the sultan of Ali Pacha, making whether my fellow-traveller and myself were in the upper or lower House of Parliament. Now, this question from a boy of ten years old proved that his education had not been neglected. It may be doubted if an English boy at that age knows the difference of the divan from a college of divvins; but I am very sure a Spaniard does not. How little Mahmoud, surrounded, as he had been, entirely by his Turkish tutors, had learned that there was such a thing as a Parliament, it were useless to conjecture, unless we suppose that his instructors did not confine his studies to the Koran.

In all the mosques there are schools established, which are very regularly attended; and the poor are taught without the church of Turkey being put into peril. I believe the system is not yet printed (though there is such a thing as a Turkish press, and books printed on the late military institution of the Miam Gedid); nor have I heard whether the Mufti and the Molins have subscribed, or the Calimacem and the Tefterdar take the alarm, for fear the ingenious youth of the turban should be taught not to "pray to God their way." The Greeks also—a kind of Eastern Irish papists—have a college of their own at Maynooth,—no, at Halvili; where the heterodox receive much the same kind of countenance from the Ottomans as the Catholic college from the English legislature. Who shall then affirm that the Turks are ignorant bigots, when they thus evince the exact proportion of Christian charity which is tolerated in the most preposterous and orthodox of all possible kingdoms? But though they allow all this, they will not suffer the Greeks to participate in their privileges; no, let them fight their battles, and pay their harsh (taxes), be drubbed in this world, and damned in the next. And shall we then conspire our Irish Helots? Mahomet forbid! We should then be bad Mussulmans, and worse Christians: at present we unite the best of both—jealous faith and something not much inferior to Turkish toleration.

NOTE 7.

See page 30. Stanzas ext.

"Not vainly did the early Persian sage
His altar the high places and the peak
Of earth-erasing mountains," &c.

It is to be recollected, that the most beautiful and impressive doctrines of the divine Founder of Christianity were delivered, not in the Temple, but on the Mount. To waive the question of devotion, and turn to human eloquence,—the most effectual and splendid specimens were not pronounced within walls. Demosthenes addressed the public and popular assemblies. Cicero spoke in the forum. That this added to their effect on the mind of both orator and hearer, may be conceived from the difference between what we read of the emotions then and there produced, and those we ourselves experience in the personal in the cloister. It is one thing to read the Iliad at Sigüenza and on the tumuli, or by the springs with Mount Ida above, and the plain and rivers and Archipelago around you; and another to trim your taper over it in a snug library—this I know. Were the early and rapid progress of what is called Methodism to be attributed to any cause beyond the enthusiasm excited by its vehement faith and doctrines (the doctrine of error of which I presume neither to canvass nor to question), I should venture to ascribe it to the practice of preaching in the fields, and the unstudied and extemporaneous effusions of its teachers.—The Mussulmans, whose erroneous devotion (at least in the lower orders) is most sincere, and therefore impressive, are accustomed to repeat their prescribed orisons and prayers, wherever they may be, at the stated hours—of course, frequently in the open air, kneeling upon a light mat (which they carry for the purpose of a bed or cushion as required); the ceremony lasts some minutes, during which they are totally absorbed, and only living in their supplication; nothing can disturb them. On me the simple and entire sincerity of these men, and the spirit which appeared to be within and upon them, made a far greater impression than any general rite which was ever performed in places of worship, of which I have seen those of almost every persuasion under the sun; including most of our own sectaries, and the Greek, the Catholic, the Armenian, the Lutheran, the Jewish, and the Mahometans. Many of the negroes, of whom there are numbers in the Turkish empire, are idolaters, and have free exercise of their belief and its rites: some of these I had a distant view of at Patras; and, from what I could make out of them, they appeared to be of a truly Pagan description, and not very agreeable to a spectator.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

NOTE 8.

See page 31. Stanza 6.

"Clarens! by heavenly feet thy pathos are trod,—
Dying Love's, who here ascends a throne
To which the steps are mountains; where the god
Is a pervading life and light," &c.

Rousseau's Héloïse, Lettre II, part 4, note. "Ces montagnes sont si hautes qu'un demi-heure après le soleil couche, leurs sommets sont éclairés de ses rayons; dont le rouge forme sur ces cimes blanches une belle couleur de rose, qu'on aperçoit de fort loin."—This applies more particularly to the heights over Mellierie.—"J'allai à Vevray loger à la Clef, et pendant deux jours que j'y restai sans voir personne, je pris pour cette ville un amour qui m'a suivi dans tous mes voyages, et qui m'y a fait établir enfin les bords de mon roman. Je dirais volontiers à ceux qui ont du goût et qui sont sensibles: Allez à Vevray—visitez le pays, examinez les sites, promenez-vous sur le lac, et dites à la Nature n'a pas fait ce beau pays pour une Julie, pour une Claire, et pour un St. Preux; mais ne les y cherchez pas."—Les Confessions, livre IV., p. 336. Lyon, ed. 1796.—In July, 1816, I made a voyage round the Lake of Geneva; and, as far as my own observations have led me in a not uninterested nor inattentive survey of all the scenes most celebrated by Rousseau in his "Héloïse," I can safely say, that in this there is no exaggeration. It would be difficult to see Clarens (with the scenes around it, Vevray, Chillon, Boveret, Saint Gingolph, Mellierie, Brian, and the entrenches of the Rhone) without being forcibly struck with its peculiar adaptation to the persons and events with which it has been peopled. But this is not all: the feeling with which all around Clarens, and the opposite rocks of Mellierie, is invested, is of a still higher and more comprehensive order than the mere sympathy with individual passion: it is a sense of the existence of love in its most extended and sublime capacity, and of our own participation of its good and of its glory: it is the great principle of the universe, which is there more condensed, but not less manifested; and of which, though knowing ourselves a part, we lose our individuality, and mingle in the beauty of the whole.—If Rousseau had never written, nor lived, the same associations would not less have belonged to such scenes. He has added to the interest of his works by their adoption; he has shown his sense of their beauty by the selection; but they have done that for him which no human being could do for them.—I had the fortune (good or evil as it might be) to sail from Mellierie (where we landed for some time) to Saint Gingolph during a lake storm, which added to the magnificence of all around, although occasionally accompanied by danger to the boat, which was small and overloaded. It was over this very part of the lake that Rousseau has driven the boat of St. Preux and Madame Wolmar to Mellierie for shelter during a tempest. On gaining the shore at Saint Gingolph, I found that the wind had been sufficiently strong to blow down some fine old chestnut trees on the lower part of the mountains. On the opposite height of Clarens is a château. The hills are covered with vineyards, and interspersed with some small but beautiful woods; one of these was named the "Boisquet de Julie;" and it is remarkable that, though long ago cut down by the brutal selfishness of the monks of Saint Bernard (to whom the land appertained, that the ground might be enclosed into a vineyard for the miserable drones of an execrable superstition, the inhabitants of Clarens still point out the spot where its trees stood, calling it by the name which consecrated and survived them. Rousseau has not been particularly fortunate in the preservation of the "local habitations" he has given to "airy nothings." The prior of Great Saint Bernard has cut down some of his woods for the sake of a few oaks of wine, and Buonaparte has levelled part of the rocks of Mellierie in improving the road to the Simplon. The road is an excellent one; but I cannot quite agree with the remark which I heard made, that "La route vaut mieux que les souvenirs."

NOTE 9.

See page 34. Stanza 4.

STATE DUNGEONS OF VENICE.

"I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs;
A palace and a prison on each hand."

The communication between the ducal palaces and the prisons of Venice is by a gloomy bridge, or covered gallery, high above the water, and divided by a stone wall into a passage and a cell. The state dungeons, called posti, or walls, were sunk in the thick walls of the palace; and the prisoner when taken out to die was conducted across the gallery to the other side, and being then led back into the other compartment, or cell, upon the bridge, was there strangled. The low portal through which the criminal was taken into this cell is now walled up; but the passage is still open, and is still known by the name of the Bridge of Sighs. The posti are under the flooring of the chamber at the foot of the bridge. They were formerly twelve; but on the first arrival of the French, the Venetians hastily blocked or broke up the deeper of these dungeons. You may still, however, descend by a trap-door, and crawl down through holes, half choked by rubbish, to the depth of two stories below the first range. If you are in want of consolation for the extinction of patrician power, perhaps you may find it there; scarcely a ray of light glimmers into the narrow gallery which leads to the cells, and the places of confinement themselves are totally dark. A small hole in the wall admitted the damp air of the passage, and served for the introduction of the prisoner's food. A wooden pallet, raised a foot from the ground, was the only furniture. The conductors tell you that a light was not allowed. The cells are about five paces in length, two and a half in width, and seven feet in height. They are directly beneath one another, and respiration is somewhat difficult in the lower holes. Only one prisoner was found when the republicans descended into these hideous recesses, and he is said to have been confined sixteen years. But the inmates of the dungeons beneath had left traces of their repentance, or of their despair, which are still visible, and may, perhaps, owe something to recent ingenuity. Some of the detained appeared to have offended against, and others to have belonged to, the sacred body, not only from their signatures, but from the churches and beiries which they have scratched upon the walls. The reader may not object to see a specimen of the records prompted by so terrific a solitude. As nearly as they could be copied by more than one pencil, these of them are as follows:—

1. NON TI FIDAR AL LUNGO PENSA E TACI
SE FUGIR VUOI DE SPIONI INSIDIE E LACCI
IL PERTINTE PERTINTE NELLA GIOVA
MA SEN DI VALOR TUO LA VERA PROVA
1807. ADI R. GENARO. FUI RE-
TENTO P' LA BESTEMIA P' AVER DATO
DA MANGAR A UN MONFO
IACONO. CRIST. SCRIBER.
2. UN PARLAR POCHO DE
NEGARE PROPTO ET
UN PENSAR AL FINE PUO DARE LA VITA
A NOI ALTRI MEMORIE
MIL
EGO IOHN BAPTISTA AD
NOELBIAM CORTELLARIUS
3. DE CHI MI FIDO GUARDAMI DIO
DE CHI NON MI FIDO MI GUARDARO IO
A TA M A TA
V. L A S . C . E . R .

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

The copyist has followed, not corrected, the solecisms; some of which are, however, not quite so decided, since the letters were evidently scratched in the dark. It only need be observed, that beatensis and meagler may be read in the first inscription, which was probably written by a prisoner confined for some act of impiety committed at a funeral; that Cortellarius is the name of a pariah on terra firma, near the sea; and that the last initials evidently are put for Viva in armis (Chorus Ecclesiæ Venetæ).

NOTE 10.

See page 34. Stanza 44.

SONG OF THE GONDOLIER.

"In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more."

The well-known song of the gondoliers, of alternate stanzas from Tasso's Jerusalem, has died with the independence of Venice. Editions of the poem, with the original in one column, and the Venetian variations on the other, as sung by the boatmen, were once common, and are still to be found. The following extract will serve to show the difference between the Tuscan epic and the "Canta alla Barcarola."

ORIGINAL.

Canto l' arme pietose, e l' esultanza
Che l' gran Sepolcro liberò di Cristo.
Molto agli opor del senno, e con la mano
Molto soffrì nel glorioso acquisto;
E in van l' Inferno a lui s' oppose, e in vano
S' armò d' Asia, e di Libia il popol misto,
Che il Ciel gli diè favore, e sotto i Santi
Segni ridasse i suoi compagni erranti.

VENETIAN.

L' arme pietose de cantar gio vogli,
E de Gedeò la immortal vettura
Che al diu l' ha libera co stranza, e dogli
Del nostro buon Gert la Sepoltura
De mezzo mondo unita, e de quel Bogia
Mister Fusto non l' ha be mai paura:
Dio l' ha agiutà, e i compagni sparganai
Tutti l' gh' i ha messi insieme i di del Dai.

Some of the elder gondoliers will, however, take up and continue a stanza of their own familiar kind.

On the 7th of last January, the author of Childe Harold, and another Englishman, the writer of this notice, rowed to the Lido with two singers, one of whom was a carpenter, and the other a gondolier. The former placed himself at the prow, the latter at the stern of the boat. A little after leaving the quay of the Piazzetta, they began to sing, and continued their exercise until we arrived at the island. They gave us, amongst other essays, the death of Clorinda, and the palace of Armida; and did not sing the Venetian, but the Tuscan verses. The carpenter, however, who was the cleaver of the two, and was frequently obliged to prompt his companion, told us that he could translate the original. He added, that he could sing almost three hundred stanzas, but had not spirits (morbo) was the word he used) to learn any more, or to sing what he already knew: a man must have idle time on his hands to acquire, or to repeat, and, said the poor fellow, "look at my clothes and at me: I am starving." This speech was more affecting than his performance, which habit alone can make attractive. The recitative was shrill, screaming, and monotonous; and the gondolier behind assisted his voice by holding his hand to one side of his mouth. The carpenter used a quiet action, which he evidently endeavored to restrain; but was too much interested in his subject altogether to repress. From these men we learnt that singing is not confined to the gondoliers, and that, although the chant is seldom, if ever, voluntary, there are still several amongst the lower classes who are acquainted with a few stanzas.

It does not appear that it is usual for the performers to row and sing at the same time. Although the verses of the Jerusalem are no longer casually heard, there is yet much music upon the Venetian canals; and upon holidays, those strangers who are not near and informed enough to distinguish the words, may fancy that many of the gondoliers recited with the strains of Tasso. The writer has some remarks which appeared in the "Curiosities of Literature" must excuse his being twice quoted; for, with the exception of some phrases a little too ambitious and extravagant, he has furnished a very exact, as well as agreeable, description.

"In Venice the gondoliers know by heart long passages from Ariosto and Tasso, and often chant them with a peculiar melody. But this talent seems at present on the decline:—at least, after taking some pains, I could find no more than two persons who delivered to me in this way a passage from Tasso. I must add, that the late Mr. Berry once chanted to me a passage in Tasso in the manner, as he assured me, of the gondoliers."

"There are always two concerned, who alternately sing the strophes. We know the melody eventually by Evangelina, in whose songs it is printed; it has properly no melodious movement, and is a sort of medium between the canto fermo and the canto figurato; it approaches to the former by recitativo declamation, and to the latter by passage and course, by which one syllable is detained and embellished."

"I entered a gondola by moonlight: one singer placed himself forwards and the other aft, and thus proceeded to Saint George. One began the song: when he had ended his strophe, the other took up the lay, and so continued the song alternately. Throughout the whole of it, the same notes invariably returned; but, according to the subject-matter of the strophe, they laid a greater or a smaller stress, sometimes on one, and sometimes on another note, and indeed changed the enunciation of the whole strophe as the object of the poem altered."

"On the whole, however, the sounds were hoarse and screaming; they seemed, in the manner of all rude uncivilized men, to make the excellency of their singing in the force of their voice: one seemed desirous of conquering the other by the strength of his lungs; and so far from receiving delight from this contest (shut up as I was in the box of the gondola), I found myself in a very unpleasant situation."

"My companion, to whom I communicated this circumstance, being very desirous to keep up the credit of his countrymen, assured me that this singing was very delightful when heard at a distance. Accordingly we got out upon the shore, leaving one of the singers in the gondola, while the other went to the distance of some hundred paces. They now began to sing against one another, and I kept walking up and down between them both, so as always to leave him who was to begin his part. I frequently stood still and hearkened to the one and to the other."

"Here the scene was properly introduced. The strong declamatory, and, as it were, shrieking sound, met the ear from far, and called forth the attention; the quickly succeeding transitions, which necessarily required to be sung in a lower tone, seemed like plaintive strains succeeding the vociferations of emotion or of pain. The other, who listened attentively, immediately began where the former left off, answering him in milder or more vehement notes, according as the purport of the strophe required. The sleep; the canals, the lofty buildings, the splendor of the moon, the deep shadows of the few gondolas that moved like spirits hither and thither, increased the striking peculiarity of the scene; and amidst all these circumstances, it was easy to confess the character of this wonderful harmony."

"It suits perfectly well with an idle solitary martinet, lying at length in his vessel at rest on one of these canals, waiting for his company, or for a rare, the tiresomeness of which situation is somewhat alleviated by the songs and poetical stories he has in memory. He often raises his voice as loud as he can, which extends itself to a vast distance over the tranquil mirror; and as all is still around, he is, as it were, in a solitude in the midst of a large and populous town. Here is no rattling of carriages, no noise of foot passengers; a silent gondola glides now and then by him, of which the splashing of the oars are scarcely to be heard."

"At a distance he hears another, perhaps utterly unknown to him. Melody and verse immediately attach the two strangers; he becomes the responsive echo to the former, and answers himself to be heard as he had heard the other. By a tacit convention they alternate verse for verse; though the song should last the whole night through, they entertain themselves without fatigue; and the hearers, who are passing between the two, take part in the amusement."

"This vocal performance sounds best at a great distance, and is then inexpressibly charming, as it only fulfills its design in the sentiment of remoteness. It is plaintive, but not dismal in its sound, and at times it is scarcely possible to refrain from tears. My companion, who otherwise was not a very delicately organized person, said quite unexpectedly—"

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

* Un singolare come quel canto interiore, e molto più quando lo cantano meglio.

"I was told that the women of Lido, the long row of islands that divides the Adriatic from the Lagoona, particularly the women of the extreme districts of Malamocco and Palestrina, sing in like manner the works of Tasso to these and similar tunes.

"They have the custom, when their husbands are fishing out at sea, to sit along the shore in the evenings, and vociferate these songs, and continue to do so with great violence, till each of them can distinguish the responses of her own husband at a distance."

The love of music and of poetry distinguishes all classes of Venetians, even amongst the tuneful sons of Italy. The city itself can occasionally furnish respectable audiences for two and even three quadrilles at a time; and there are few events in private life that do not call forth a printed and circulated sonnet. Does a physician or a lawyer take his degree, or a clergyman preach his maiden sermon, has a surgeon performed an operation, would a harlequin announce his departure or his benefit, are you to be congratulated on a marriage, or a birth, or a lawsuit, the Muses are invoked to furnish the same number of syllables, and the individual triumphs blaze abroad in virgin white or parti-colored placards on half the corners of the capital. The last courtesy of a favorite "prima donna" brings down a shower of these poetical tributes from those upper regions, from which, in our theatre, nothing but cupids and snow-storms are accustomed to descend. There is a poetry in the very life of a Venetian, which, in its common course, is varied with those surprises and changes so recommendable in fiction, but so different from the sober monotony of northern existence; amusements are raised into duties, duties are softened into amusements, and every object being considered as equally making a part of the business of life, is announced and performed with the same earnest indifference and gay assiduity. The Venetian gazette constantly closes its columns with the following triple advertisement:—

Charade.

Exposition of the most Holy Sacrament in the church of —.

Theatre.

Saint Moses, opera.

Saint Benedict, a comedy of characters.

Saint Luke, repose.

When it is recollected what the Catholics believe their consecrated wafer to be, we may perhaps think it worthy of a more respectable niche than between poetry and the play-house.

NOTE 11.

See page 35. Stanza 24.

THE LION AND HORSES OF SAINT MARK'S.

"Saint Mark yet sees his Lion where he stood Beside."

The Lion has lost nothing by his journey to the Invalides but the gospel which supported the paw; that is now on a level with the other foot. The horses also are returned to the ill-chosen spot whence they set out, and are, as before, half hidden under the porch window of Saint Mark's church. Their history, after a desperate struggle, has been satisfactorily explored. The denials and doubts of Erizo and Zanetti, and lastly of the count Leopold Cioognara, would have given them a Roman extraction, and a pedigree not more ancient than the reign of Nero. But M. de Schlegel stepped in to teach the Venetians the value of their own treasures, and a Greek vindicated, at last and for ever, the pretension of his countrymen to this noble production. M. Mustoxidi has not been left without a reply; but, as yet, he has received no answer. It should seem that the horses are irrevocably Chian, and were transferred to Constantinople by Theodosius. Lapidary writing is a favorite play of the Italians, and has conferred reputation on more than one of their literary characters. One of the best specimens of Rodoni's typography is a respectable volume of inscriptions, all written by his friend Paolucci. Several were prepared for the recovered horses. It is to be hoped the best was not selected, when the following words were ranged in gold letters above the cathedral porch:—

QUATTOR EQUORUM SIGNA A VENETIS REYANTO
CAPTA AD TEMP D MAR A E S MOCV POSTA QUA
HOSTILE CUPIDITAS A MDCCIII AMBULERAT FRANO I
IMP PACIS ORB DATE TROPHEUM A MDCCXVI VICTOR REDUXIT.

Nothing shall be said of the Latin; but it may be permitted to observe, that the injustice of the Venetians in transporting the horses from Constantinople was at least equal to that of the French in carrying them to Paris, and that it would have been more prudent to have avoided all allusions to either robbery. An apostolic prince should, perhaps, have objected to affixing over the principal entrance of a metropolitan church an inscription having a reference to any other triumphs than those of religion. Nothing less than the pacification of the world can excuse such a solecism.

NOTE 12.

See page 35. Stanza 24.

SURRENDER OF BARBAROSSA TO PAPA ALEXANDER III.

"The Swabian sued, and now the Austrian reigns—
An Emperor tramples where an Emperor knelt."

After many vain efforts on the part of the Italians entirely to throw off the yoke of Frederic Barbarossa, and as fruitless attempts of the emperor to make himself absolute master throughout the whole of his Cisalpine dominions, the bloody struggles of four-and-twenty years were happily brought to a close in the city of Venice. The articles of a treaty had been previously agreed upon between Pope Alexander III. and Barbarossa; and the former, having received a safe-conduct, had already arrived at Venice from Ferrara, in company with the ambassadors of the king of Sicily and the consuls of the Lombard league. There still remained, however, many points to adjust, and for several days the peace was believed to be impracticable. At this juncture it was suddenly reported that the emperor had arrived at Chioggia, a town fifteen miles from the capital. The Venetians rose tumultuously, and insisted upon immediately conducting him to the city. The Lombards took the alarm, and departed towards Treviso. The pope himself was apprehensive of some disaster if Frederic should suddenly advance upon him, but was reassured by the prudence and address of Sebastian Ziani, the doge. Several embassies passed between Chioggia and the capital, until, at last, the emperor, relaxing somewhat of his pretensions, "laid aside his lionine ferocity, and put on the mildness of the lamb."

On Saturday the 29d of July, in the year 1177, six Venetian galleys transferred Frederic, in great pomp, from Chioggia to the island of Lido, a mile from Venice. Early the next morning the pope, accompanied by the Sicilian ambassadors and by the envoys of Lombardy, whom he had recalled from the main land, together with a great concourse of people, repaired from the patriarchal palace to Saint Mark's church, and solemnly absolved the emperor and his partisans from the excommunication pronounced against him. The chancellor of the empire, on the part of his master, repoussed the anti-popes and their schismatic adherents. Immediately the doge, with a great suite both of the clergy and the laity, got on board the galley, and waiting on Frederic, rowed him in mighty state from the Lido to the capital. The emperor descended from the galley at the quay of the Piazzetta. The doge, the patriarch, his bishops and clergy, and the people of Venice with their crosses and their standards, marched in solemn procession before him to the church of Saint Mark. Alexander was seated before the vestibule of the basilica, attended by his bishops and cardinals, by the patriarch of Aquileja, by the archbishops and bishops of Lombardy, all

* The writer meant Lido, which is not a long row of islands, but a long island; near the shore.

† Charities of Literature, vol. II., p. 128, edit. 1807; and Appendix xix. to Black's Life of Tasso.

‡ Sui quattro cavalli della Basilica di S. Marco in Venezia. Lettera di Andrea Mustoxidi Corvetusa. Padova, 1818.

§ "Quibus auditis, Imperator, operante eo, qui corda principum sicut vult et quando vult humiliter inclinat, leonina feritate deposita, ovium mansuetudinem induit."—Bonauddi Sacerdotis Chronicon, apud Script. Ber. Ital. tom. vii. p. 229.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

of them in state, and clothed in their church robes. Frederic approached—"moved by the Holy Spirit, venerating the Almighty in the person of Alexander, laying aside his imperial dignity, and throwing off his mantle, he prostrated himself at full length at the feet of the pope. Alexander, with tears in his eyes, raised him benignantly from the ground, kissed him; and immediately the German of the train sang, with a loud voice, 'We praise thee, O Lord.' The emperor then, taking the pope by the right hand, led him to the church, and having received his benediction, returned to the ducal palace." The ceremony of humiliation was repeated the next day. The pope himself, at the request of Frederic, said mass at Saint Mark's. The emperor again laid aside his imperial mantle, and, taking a wand in his hand, officiated as server, driving the laity from the choir, and preceding the pontiff to the altar. Alexander, after reciting the gospel, preached to the people. The emperor put himself close to the pulpit in the attitude of listening; and the pontiff, touched by this mark of his attention (for he knew that Frederic did not understand a word he said), commanded the patriarch of Aquileia to translate the Latin discourse into the German tongue. The creed was then chanted. Frederic made his oblation, kissed the pope's feet, and, man being over, led him by the hand to his white horse. He held the stirrup, and would have led the horse's rein to the water-side, had not the pope accepted of the inclination for the performance, and affectionately dismissed him with his benediction. Such is the substance of the account left by the archbishop of Salerno, who was present at the ceremony, and whose story is confirmed by every subsequent narration. It would be not worth so minute a record, were it not the triumph of liberty as well as of superstition. This states of Lombardy owed to it the confirmation of their privileges; and Alexander had reason to thank the Almighty, who had enabled an infirm, unwarmed old man to subdue a terrible and potent sovereign.†

NOTE 18.

See page 85. Stanzas 444.

HENRY DANDOLFO.

"Oh for one hour of blind old Dandolo!
Th' octoparian chief, Byzantium's conquering foe."

The reader will recollect the exclamation of the Highlander, Oh for one hour of Dundee! Henry Dandolo when elected doge, in 1195, was eighty-five years of age. When he commanded the Venetians at the taking of Constantinople he was consequently ninety-seven years old. At this age he annexed the fourth and a half of the whole empire of Romanas; for so the Roman empire was then called, to the title and to the territories of the Venetian doge. The three-eighths of this empire were preserved in the diplomas until the dukedom of Giovanni Dolfin, who made use of the above designation in the year 1379.

Dandolo led the attack on Constantinople in person: two ships, the Parades and the Pilgrim, were tied together, and a drawbridge or ladder let down from their higher yards to the walls. The doge was one of the first to rush into the city. Then was completed, said the Venetians, the prophecy of the Erythrean sibyl:—"A gathering together of the powerful shall be made amidst the waves of the Adriatic, under a blind leader; they shall beset the goat—they shall profane Byzantium—they shall beset her buildings—her spoils shall be dispersed; a new goat shall bleat until they have measured out and run over fifty-four feet, nine inches, and a half."‡ Dandolo died on the 1st day of June, 1208, having reigned thirteen years, six months, and five days, and was buried in the church of Saint Sophia, at Constantinople. Strangely enough it must sound, that the name of the rebel apothecary who received the doge's sword, and annihilated the ancient government, in 1796-7, was Dandolo.

† Ber. Ital. tom. vii. p. 301.

‡ See the above-cited Remark of Salerno. In a second sermon which Alexander preached, on the 1st day of August, before the emperor, he compared Frederic to the prodigal son, and himself to the forgiving father.

§ Mr. Gibbon has omitted the important and, and has written Roman instead of Romanas. Decline and Fall, chap. lxi., note 8. But the title acquired by Dandolo runs thus in the Chronicle of his namesake, the doge Andrew Dandolo:—"Ducali titolo addit, 'Quantis parit et dimittit totius imperii Romanas.'"—And. Dand.

NOTE 14.

See page 85. Stanzas 444.

THE WAR OF CHILDM.

"But is not Doria's menace come to pass?
Are they not bridled?"

AFTER the loss of the battle of Pola, and the taking of Chioggia on the 16th of August, 1379, by the united armament of the Genoese and Francesco da Carrara, Signor of Padua, the Venetians were reduced to the utmost despair. An embassy was sent to the conquerors with a blank sheet of paper, praying them to prescribe what terms they pleased, and leave to Venice only her independence. The Prince of Padua was inclined to listen to these proposals; but the Genoese, who, after the victory at Pola, had shouted, "To Venice, to Venice, and long live Saint George!" determined to annihilate their rival; and Peter Doria, their commander-in-chief, returned this answer to the suppliants:—"On God's faith, gentleman of Venice, ye shall have no peace from the Signor of Padua, nor from our commune of Genoa, until we have first put a rein upon those unbridled horses of yours, that are upon the porch of your evangelist Saint Mark. When we have bridled them, we shall keep you quiet. And this is the pleasure of us and of our commune. As for these my brothers of Genoa, that you have brought with you to give up to us, I will not have them; take them back; for, in a few days hence, I shall come and let them out of prison myself, both these and all the others." In fact, the Genoese did advance as far as Malamocco, within five miles of the capital; but their own danger and the pride of their enemies gave courage to the Venetians, who made prodigious efforts, and many individual sacrifices, all of them carefully recorded by their historians. Vettor Pisani was put at the head of thirty-four galleys. The Genoese broke up from Malamocco, and retired to Chioggia in October; but they again threatened Venice, which was reduced to extremities. At this time, the 1st of January, 1380, arrived Carlo Zeno, who had been cruising on the Genoese coast with fourteen galleys. The Venetians were now strong enough to besiege the Genoese. Doria was killed on the 23d of January, by a stone bullet 135 pounds weight, discharged from a bombard called the Trevizan. Chioggia was then closely invested: 2000 auxiliaries, amongst whom were some English condottieri, commanded by one Captain Cocchi, joined the Venetians. The Genoese, in their turn, prayed for conditions, but none were granted, until, at last, they surrendered at discretion; and on the 24th of June, 1380, the doge Contarini made his triumphal entry into Chioggia. Four thousand prisoners, nineteen galleys, many smaller vessels and barks, with all the ammunition and arms, and outfit of the expedition, fell into the hands of the conquerors, who had it not been for the inexorable answer of Doria, would have gladly reduced their dominion to the city of Venice. An account of these transactions is found in a work called the War of Chioggia, written by Daniel Chinasso, who was in Venice at the time.

NOTE 15.

See page 85. Stanzas 444.

VENICE UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF AUSTRIA.

"Thin streets, and foreign aspects, such as meet Too oft remind her who and what she holds."

The population of Venice at the end of the seventeenth century amounted to nearly two hundred thousand souls. At the last census, taken two years ago, it was no more than about one hundred and three thousand; and it diminishes daily. The commerce and the official employments, which were to be the unexhausted source of Venetian grandeur, Chronicon, cap. lxi. par. xxxvii. ser. Ber. Ital. tom. xli. p. 302. And the Romanis is observed in the subsequent acts of the doges; indeed, the continental possessions of the Greek empire in Europe were then generally known by the name of Romanas, and that appellation is still seen in the maps of Turkey, as applied to Trebizond.

§ See the continuation of Dandolo's Chronicle, ibid., p. 428. Mr. Gibbon appears not to include Delfino, following Sanuto, who says, "Il qual titolo si usò fin al doge Giovanni Delfino." See Vite de' Dogi di Venezia, ser. Ber. Ital. tom. xlii. 308, 341.

|| Chronicon, ser. Ber. Ital. par. xxxiv.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

have both expired. Most of the patrician mansions are deserted, and would gradually disappear had not the government, alarmed by the demolition of seventy-two during the last two years, expressly forbidden this and resource of poverty. Many remnants of the Venetian nobility are now scattered and confounded with the wealthier Jews upon the banks of the Brenta, whose Palladian palaces have sunk, or are sinking, in the general decay. Of the "gentiluomo Veneto," the name is still known, and that is all. He is but the shadow of his former self, but he is polite and kind. It surely may be pardoned to him if he is querulous. Whatever may have been the vices of the republic, and although the natural term of its existence may be thought by foreigners to have arrived in the due course of mortality, only one sentiment can be expected from the Venetians themselves. At no time were the subjects of the republic so unanimous in their resolution to rally round the standard of Saint Mark, as when it was for the last time unfurled, and the cowardice and the treachery of the few patriots who recommended the fatal neutrality were confined to the persons of the traitors themselves. The present race cannot be thought to regret the loss of their aristocratic forms, and too despotic government; they think only on their vanished independence. They pine away at the remembrance, and on this subject suspend for a moment their gay good humor. Venice may be said, in the words of the scripture, "to die daily;" and so general and so apparent is the decline, as to become painful to a stranger, not reconciled to the sight of a whole nation expiring as it were before his eyes. So artificial a creation, having lost that principle which called it into life and supported its existence, must fall to pieces at once, and sink more rapidly than it rose. The abhorrence of slavery which drove the Venetians to the sea has, since their disaster, forced them to the land, where they may be at least overlooked amongst the crowd of dependents, and not present the humiliating spectacle of a whole nation loaded with recent chains. Their liveliness, their affability, and that happy indifference which constitution alone can give (for philosophy aspires to it in vain), have not sunk under circumstances; but many peculiarities of costume and manner have by degrees been lost, and the nobles, with a pride common to all Italians who have been masters, have not been persuaded to parade their insignificance. That splendor which was a proof and a portion of their power, they would not degrade into the trappings of their subjection. They retired from the space which they had occupied in the eyes of their fellow-citizens; their continuance in which would have been a symptom of acquiescence, and an insult to those who suffered by the common misfortune. Those who remained in the degraded capital might be said rather to haunt the scenes of their departed power, than to live in them. The reflection, "who and what anathema," will hardly bear a comment from one who is, nationally, the friend and the ally of the conqueror. It may, however, be allowed to say thus much, that to those who wish to recover their independence, any masters must be an object of detestation; and it may be safely foretold that this unprofitable aversion will not have been corrected before Venice shall have sunk into the slime of her choked canals.

NOTE 16.

See page 86. Sonnet anon.

LAURA.

"Watering the tree which bears his lady's name
With his melodious tears, he gave himself to fame."

Thanks to the critical acumen of a Scotchman, we now

* See An Historical and Critical Essay on the Life and Character of Petrarch; and a Dissertation on an Historical Hypothesis of the abbe de Bède.

† Life of Beattie, by Sir W. Forbes, vol. II, p. 166.

‡ Mr. Gibbon called his Memoirs "a labor of love" (see Decline and Fall, chap. Ixx., note 1), and followed him with confidence and delight. The compiler of a very voluminous work must take much criticism upon trust. Mr. Gibbon has done so, though not so readily as some other writers.

§ The sonnet had before awakened the suspicions of Mr. Horace Walpole. See his letter to Warton in 1762.

|| "Par ce petit mariage, cette alternative de faveurs et de rigueurs bien ménagée, une femme tendre et sage amuse, pendant vingt et un ans, le plus grand poète de son siècle, sans faire la moindre brèche à son bonheur." Mém. pour la Vie de Pétrarque, Frédéric sans François.

¶ In a dialogue with Saint Augustine, Petrarch has described Laura know as little of Laura as ever.* The discoveries of the abbé de Bède, his triumphs, his misers, can no longer instruct or amuse. We must not, however, think that these memoirs are as much a romance as Belissarius or the Innocent, although we are told so by Dr. Beattie, a great name, but a little authority.† His "labor" has not been in vain, notwithstanding his "love" has, like most of other passions, made him ridiculous.‡ The hypothesis which overpowered the struggling Italians, and carried along less interested critics in its current, is run out. We have another proof that we can be never sure that the paradox, the most singular, and therefore having the most agreeable and authentic air, will not give place to the re-established ancient prejudice.

It seems, then, first, that Laura was born, lived, died, and was buried, not in Avignon, but in the country. The foundations of the Sorbonne, the thicket of Cabrières, may resume their pretensions, and the exploded de la Bède again be heard with complacency. The hypothesis of the abbé had no stronger props than the parchment sonnet and medal found on the skeleton of the wife of Hugo de Bède, and the manuscript note to the Virgil of Petrarch, now in the Ambrosian library. If these proofs were both incontestable, the poetry was written, the medal composed, cast, and deposited within the space of twelve hours; and these deliberate duties were performed round the carcass of one who died of the plague, and was hurried to the grave on the day of her death. These documents, therefore, are too decisive: they prove not the fact, but the forgery. Either the sonnet or the Virgilian note must be a falsification. The abbé cites both as incontestably true; the consequent deduction is inevitable—they are both evidently false.

Secondly, Laura was never married, and was a haughty virgin rather than that tender and prudent wife who honored Avignon by making that town the theatre of an honest French passion, and played off for one-and-twenty years her little machinery of alternate favors and refusals upon the first poet of the age. It was, indeed, rather too unfair that a female should be made responsible for eleven children upon the faith of a misinterpreted abbreviation, and the decision of a librarian.¶ It is, however, satisfactory to think that the love of Petrarch was not Platonic. The happiness which he prayed to possess but once and for a moment was surely not of the mind, and something so very real as a marriage project, with one who has been idly called a shadowy nymph, may be, perhaps, detected in at least six places of his own sonnets. The love of Petrarch was neither Platonic nor poetical; and if in one passage of his works he calls it "amore vementissimo ma unico ed onesto," he confesses, in a letter to a friend, that it was guilty and perverse, that it absorbed him quite, and mastered his heart.

In this case, however, he was perhaps alarmed for the culpability of his wishes; for the abbé de Bède himself, who certainly would not have been scrupulously delicate if he could have proved his descent from Petrarch as well as Laura, is forced into a stout defence of his virtuous grandmother. As far as relates to the poet, we have no security for the innocence, except perhaps in the constancy of his pursuit. He assures us in his epistle to posterity, that, when arrived at his fortieth year, he not only had in horror, but had lost all recollection and image of any "irregularity." But the birth of his natural daughter cannot be assigned earlier than his thirty-ninth year; and either the memory or the morality of the poet must have failed him, when he forgot or was guilty of this slip.† The weakest argument for the purity of this love has been drawn from the permanence of its effects, which survived the object of his passion. The reflection of M. de la Bède, that virtue alone is capable of making impressions which death cannot efface, is one of those which as having a body exhausted with repeated pothos. The old editors read and printed perurbationibus; but M. Capperonier, librarian to the French king in 1762, who saw the MS. in the Paris library, made an attention that "on lit et qu'on doit lire, partibus exhaustis." De Bède joined the names of Mamma Boodot and Bejot with M. Capperonier, and, in the whole discussion on this point, showed himself a downright literary rogue. See Ridiculous, etc., p. 267. Thomas Aquinas is called in to settle whether Petrarch's mistress was a clandestine maid or a confirmed wife.

§ "Pignation, quanto lodar ti del
Dall' imagine tua, se mille volte
N' avessi quel ch' i sei una vorrai."

¶ Sonetto 61, quando giunse a Simon Fido conosci. La Rime, etc., par. I, pag. 159. coll. 1778.

†† "A questa confessione così sincera diede forse occasione una nuova caduta ch' ei fece." Tiraboschi, Storia, etc., v. 402.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

collected even by the Italians; but the celebrated Ugo Foscolo meditates to supply this defect, and it is not to be regretted that this national work has been reserved for one so devoted to his country and the cause of truth.

NOTE 27.

See page 38. Stanzas left.

TOMB OF THE SCIPIOS.

"*L'Os Scipio, buried by the upbraiding shore:
Thy factions, in their scores than civil war,
Proscribed,*" etc.

The elder Scipio Africanus had a tomb if he was not buried at Liternum, whither he had retired to voluntary banishment. This tomb was near the sea-shore, and the story of an inscription upon it, Ingrata Patria, having given a name to a modern town, is, if not true, an agreeable fiction. If he was not buried, he certainly lived there.*

In così angusta e solitaria villa
Era 'l grand' uomo che d' Africa s' appella
Perché prima col ferro al vivo aprilla.

Ingratitude is generally supposed the vice peculiar to republics; and it seems to be forgotten that for one instance of popular inconstancy, we have a hundred examples of the fall of courtly favorites. Besides, a people have often repented—a monarch seldom or never. Leaving apart many familiar proofs of this fact, a short story may show the difference between even an aristocracy and the multitude.

Vettor Pisani, having been defeated in 1384, at Portolongo, and many years afterwards in the more decisive action of Pola, by the Genoese, was recalled by the Venetian government, and thrown into chains. The Avvogadori proposed to behead him, but the supreme tribunal was content with the sentence of imprisonment. Whilst Pisani was suffering this unmerited disgrace, Ghison, in the vicinity of the capital, was, by the assistance of the Signor of Padua, delivered into the hands of Pietro Doria. At the intelligence of that disaster, the great bell of Saint Mark's tower tolled to arms, and the people and the soldiery of the galleys were summoned to the repulse of the approaching enemy; but they protested they would not move a step, unless Pisani were liberated and placed at their head. The great council was instantly assembled; the prisoner was called before them, and the doge, Andrea Contarini, informed him of the demands of the people, and the necessities of the state, whose only hope of safety was reposed in his efforts, and who implored him to forget the indignities he had endured in her service. "I have submitted," replied the magnanimous republican, "I have submitted to your deliberations without complaint; I have supported patiently the pains of imprisonment, for they were inflicted at your command; this is no time to inquire whether I deserved them—the good of the republic may have seemed to require it, and that which the republic resolves is always resolved wisely. Behold me ready to lay down my life for the preservation of my country." Pisani was appointed generalissimo, and by his exertions, in conjunction with those of Carlo Zeno, the Venetians soon recovered the ascendancy over their maritime rivals.

The Italian communities were no less unjust to their citizens than the Greek republics. Liberty, both with the one and the other, seems to have been a national, not an individual object; and, notwithstanding the boasted equality before the laws, which an ancient Greek writer considered the great distinctive mark between his countrymen and the barbarians, the mutual rights of fellow-citizens seem never to have been the principal scope of the old democracies. The world may have not yet seen an essay by the author of the Italian Republics, in which the distinction between the liberty of former states, and the significance attached to that word by the happier constitution of England, is ingeniously developed. The Italians, however, when they had ceased to be free, still looked back with a sigh upon those times of turbulence, when every citizen might rise to a share of sovereign power, and have never been taught fully to appreciate the repose of a monarchy. Sperone Speroni, when Francis Marie II., Duke of Rovere, proposed the question, "which was preferable, the republic or the principality—the perfect and not durable, or the less perfect and not so liable to change," replied, "that our happiness is to be measured by its quality, not by its duration; and that he preferred to live for one day like a man, than for a hundred years like a brute, a stock, or a stone." This was thought, and called, a magnificent answer, down to the last days of Italian servitude.

NOTE 28.

See page 38. Stanzas left.

PETRARCH'S CROWN.

"—and the crown
Which Petrarch's laureate brow supremely wore,
Upon a far and foreign soil had grown."

The Florentines did not take the opportunity of Petrarch's short visit to their city in 1360 to revoke the decree which confiscated the property of his father, who had been banished shortly after the exile of Dante. His crown did not dangle them; but when in the next year they were in want of his assistance in the formation of their university, they repented of their injustice, and Boccaccio was sent to Padua to entreat the laureate to conclude his wanderings in the bosom of his native country, where he might finish his immortal Africa, and enjoy, with his recovered possessions, the esteem of all classes of his fellow-citizens. They gave him the option of the book and the sentence he might condescend to expound; they called him the glory of his country, who was dear, and who would be dearer to them; and they added, that if there was any thing unpleasing in their letter, he ought to return amongst them, were it only to correct their style.† Petrarch seemed at first to listen to the Batinny and to the entreaties of his friend, but he did not return to Florence, and preferred a pilgrimage to the tomb of Laura and the shades of Virgil.

NOTE 29.

See page 38. Stanzas left.

BoccACCIO.

"Boccaccio to his parent earth bequeath'd
His dust."

Boccaccio was buried in the church of Saint Michael and Saint James, at Certaldo, a small town in the Valdelsa, which was by some supposed the place of his birth. There he passed the latter part of his life in a course of laborious study, which shortened his existence; and there might his ashes have been secure, if not of honor, at least of repose. But the "hymn bigots" of Certaldo tore up the tombstone of Boccaccio, and ejected it from the holy precincts of Saint Michael and Saint James. The occasion, and, it may be hoped, the excuse, for this ejectment was the making of a new floor for the church; but the fact is, that the tombstone was taken up and thrown aside at the bottom of the building. Ignorance may share the sin with bigotry. It would be painful to relate such an exception to the devotion of the Italians for their great names, could it not be accompanied by a trait more honorably conformable to the general character of the nation. The principal person of the district, the last branch of the house of Medici, afforded that protection to the memory of the insulted dead which his best ancestors had dispensed upon all contemporary merit. The marchioness Lenioni rescued the tombstone of Boccaccio from the neglect in which it had some time lain, and found for it as

* Vitam Literam equi sine desiderio arde. See T. Liv. Hist. lib. xxviii. Livy reports that some said he was buried at Liternum, others at Roma. Ibid., cap. lv.

† Trionfo della Costit. lib. i.

See Note 14, page 614.

† The Greeks boasted that he was leopard. See the last chapter of the first book of Dioynius of Halicarnassus.

† "E intorno alle magnifiche risposte." etc. Sereni, Vita del Tasso, lib. iii., pag. 149, tom. II., edit. 3, Bergamo.

† "Accogliamli innoce, se al bacio ancor l'assortiti, a compir l'immortal tua Africa. . . Se ti avrassi d'innocente nel nostro stile con che ti dispiaccia, ciò debb' essere un altro noivè ad emulati; daddio della tua patria." Storia della Lett. Ital., tom. v., par. I., lib. I., pag. 76.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

honorable elevation in her own mansion. She has done more: the house in which the poet lived has been as little respected as his tomb, and is falling to ruin over the head of one indifferent to the name of its former tenant. It consists of two or three little chambers, and a low tower, on which Cosmo II. affixed an inscription. This house she has taken measures to purchase, and proposes to devote to it that care and consideration which are attached to the cradle and to the roof of galus.

This is not the place to undertake the defence of Boccaccio; but the man who exhausted his little patrimony in the acquirement of learning; who was amongst the first, if not the first, to allure the sciences and the poetry of Greece to the bosom of Italy; who not only invented a new style, but founded, or certainly fixed, a new language; who, besides the esteem of every polite court of Europe, was thought worthy of employment by the predominant republic of his own country, and, what is more, of the friendship of Petrarch; who lived the life of a philosopher and a freeman, and who died in the pursuit of knowledge,—such a man might have found more consideration than he has met with from the prices of Certaldo, and from a late English traveller, who strikes off his portrait as an odious, contemptible, licentious writer, whose impure remains should be suffered to rot without a record.* That English traveller, unfortunately for those who have to deplore the loss of a very amiable person, is beyond all criticism; but the mortality which did not protect Boccaccio from Mr. Eustace, must not defend Mr. Eustace from the impartial judgment of his successors. Death may canonize his virtues, not his errors; and it may be modestly pronounced that he transgressed, not only as an author, but as a man, when he evoked the shade of Boccaccio in company with that of Aretino, amidst the sepulchres of Santa Croce, merely to diame it with indignity. As far as respects

"Il flagello de Principi, Il divin Pietro Aretino."

it is of little import what posture is passed upon a coxcomb who owes his present existence to the above burlesque character given to him by the poet, whose amber has preserved many other grubs and worms; but to classify Boccaccio with such a person, and to communicate his very ashes, must of itself make us doubt of the qualification of the classical tourist for writing upon Italian, or, indeed, upon any other literature; for ignorance on one point may incapacitate an author merely for that particular topic, but subjection to a professional prejudice must render him an unsafe director on all occasions. Any perversion and injustice may be made what is vulgarly called "a case of conscience," and this poor excuse is all that can be offered for the priest of Certaldo, or the author of the Classical Tour. It would have answered the purpose to confine the censure to the novels of Boccaccio; and gratitude to that source which supplied the muse of Dryden with her last and most harmonious numbers might, perhaps, have restricted that censure to the objectionable qualities of the hundred tales. At any rate, the remembrance of Boccaccio might have arrested his exhumation, and it should have been recollected and told, that in his old age he wrote a letter entreating his friend to discourage the reading of the Decamerone, for the sake of modesty, and for the sake of the author, who would not have an apologist always at hand to state in his excuse that he wrote it when young, and at the command of his superiors.† It is neither the looseness of the writer, nor the evil propensities of the reader, which have given to the Decamerone alone, of all the works of Boccaccio, a perpetual popularity. The establishment of a new and delightful dialect conferred an immortality on the works in which it was first fixed. The sonnets of Petrarch were, for the same reasons, fated to survive his self-admired Africa, the "favorite of kings." The invariable traits of nature and feeling with which the novels, as well as the verses, abound, have doubtless been the chief source of the foreign celebrity of both authors; but Boccaccio, as a man, is no more to be estimated by that work, than Petrarch is to be regarded in no other light than as the lover of Laura. Even, however, had the father of the Tuscan prose been known only as the author of the Decamerone, a considerate writer would have been cautious to pronounce a sentence irreconcilable with the unerring voice of many ages and nations. An irrevocable value has never been stamped upon any work solely recommended by impurity.

The true source of the outcry against Boccaccio, which began at a very early period, was the choice of his scandalous personages in the cloisters as well as the courts; but the priores only laughed at the gallant adventures so unjustly charged upon Queen Theolinda, whilst the priesthood cried shame upon the debauches drawn from the convent and the hermitage; and most probably for the opposite reason, namely, that the picture was faithful to the life. Two of the novels are allowed to be facts usefully turned into tales to deride the cononization of rogues and laymen. See Clapellotto and Marcellinus are cited with applause even by the decent Muratori.‡ The great Arraud, as he is quoted in Bayle, states, that a new edition of the novels was proposed, of which the expurgation consisted in omitting the words "monk" and "nun," and tacking the immoralities to other names. The literary history of Italy particularizes no such edition; but it was not long before the whole of Europe had but one opinion of the Decamerone; and the abolition of the author seems to have been a point settled at least a hundred years ago: "On se ferait affliger si l'on prétendait condamner Boccaccio de morale par les honnêtes hommes, puis qu'il a fait le Decamerone." So said one of the best men, and perhaps the best critic, that ever lived—the very martyr to impartiality.§ But as this information, that in the beginning of the last century one would have been hooted at for pretending that Boccaccio was not a good man, may seem to come from one of those enemies who are to be suspected, even when they make us a present of truth, a more acceptable contrast with the proscription of the body, soul, and name of Boccaccio may be found in a few words from the virtuous, the patriotic contemporary, who thought one of the tales of this impure writer worthy a Latin version from his own pen. "I have remarked elsewhere," says Petrarch, writing to Boccaccio, "that the book itself has been worried by certain dogs, but stoutly defended by your staff and voice. Nor was I astonished, for I have had proof of the vigor of your mind, and I know you have fallen on that unaccommodating incapable race of mortals, who, whatever they either like not, or know not, or cannot do, are sure to reprehend in others; and on those occasions only put on a show of learning and eloquence, but otherwise are entirely dumb."||

It is satisfactory to find that all the priesthood do not resemble those of Certaldo, and that one of them who did not possess the bones of Boccaccio would not lose the opportunity of raising a cenotaph to his memory. Brevius, canon of Padua, at the beginning of the sixteenth century, erected at Arquà, opposite to the tomb of the laureate, a tablet, in which he associated Boccaccio to the equal honors of Dante and of Petrarch.

NOTE 30.

See page 39. Stanza line.

THE MEDUL.

"What is her pyramid of precious stones?"

Our veneration for the Medici begins with Cosmo and expires with his grandson; that stream is pure only at the source; and it is in search of some memorial of the virtuous republicans of the family that we visit the church of Saint the inscription so much disputed was ever written on the tomb cannot now be decided, for all memorial of this author has disappeared from the church of Saint Luke.

† "Non enim ubique est, qui in excoationem meam consurgens dicat, juvenis scriptit, et majoris coetus Imperio." The letter was addressed to Maghiard of Cavalcanti, marshal of the kingdom of Sicily. See Tiraboschi, Storia, etc., tom. v., par. II., lib. III.

‡ Dissertazioni sopra le Antichità Italiane, Dim. lviii.

§ Recherchissement, etc., etc., p. 638, edit. Beale, 1741, in the Supplement to Bayle's Dictionary.

|| Opp. tom. I., p. 640, edit. Basil.

* Classical Tour, chap. ix., vol. II., p. 288, edit. Ed. "Of Boccaccio, the modern Petrarch, we say nothing; the abuse of genius is more odious and more contemptible than its absence; and it imports little where the impure remains of a licentious author are consigned to their kindred dust. For the same reason the traveller may pass unscathed the tomb of the malignant Aretino." This dubious phrase is hardly enough to save the tourist from the suspicion of another blunder respecting the burial-place of Aretino, whose tomb was in the church of Saint Luke at Venice, and gave rise to the famous controversy of which some notice is taken in Bayle. Were the words of Mr. Eustace would lead me to think the tomb was at Florence, or at least was to be somewhere recognized. Whether

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

Lorenzo at Florence. The tawdry, glaring, unfinished chapel in that church, designed for the mausoleum of the dukes of Tuscany, set round with crowns and coffins, gives birth to no emotions but those of contempt for the lavish vanity of a race of despots, whilst the pavement slabs, simply inscribed to the Father of his Country, reconcile us to the name of Medici.* It was very natural for Corinna† to suppose that the statue raised to the Duke of Urbino in the capella dei duchi was intended for his great namesake; but the magnificent Lorenzo is only the shaver of a coffin half hidden in a niche of the sacristy. The decay of Tuscany dates from the sovereignty of the Medici. Of the sepulchral peace which succeeded to the establishment of the reigning families in Italy, our own Sidney has given us a glowing but a faithful picture—"Notwithstanding all the seditions of Florence, and other cities of Tuscany, the horrid factions of Guelphs and Ghibellines, Neri and Bianchi, nobles and commons, they continued populous, strong, and exceeding rich; but, in the space of less than a hundred and fifty years, the peaceable reign of the Medices is thought to have destroyed nine parts in ten of the people of that province. Amongst other things, it is remarkable, that when Philip II. of Spain gave Siena to the Duke of Florence, his ambassador then at Rome sent him word that he had given away more than 80,000 subjects; and it is not believed there are now 30,000 souls inhabiting that city and territory. Pisa, Pistoia, Arezzo, Cortona, and other towns, that were then good and populous, are in the like proportion diminished, and Florence more than any. When that city had been long troubled with seditions, tumults, and wars, for the most part unprosperous, they still retained such strength, that when Charles VIII. of France, being admitted as a friend with his whole army, which soon after conquered the kingdom of Naples, thought to master them, the people, taking arms, struck such a terror into him, that he was glad to depart upon such conditions as they thought fit to impose. Machiavel reports, that in that time Florence alone, with the Val d'Arno, a small territory belonging to that city, could, in a few hours, by the sound of a bell, bring together 15,000 well-armed men; whereas now that city, with all the others in that province, are brought to such despicable weakness, emptiness, poverty, and baseness, that they can neither resist the oppressions of their own prince, nor defend him or themselves if they were assaulted by a foreign enemy. The people are dispersed or destroyed, and the best families are to seek habitations in Venice, Genoa, Rome, Naples, and Lucce. This is not the effect of war or pestilence; they enjoy a perfect peace, and suffer no other plague than the government they are under."‡ From the usurper Cosmo down to the Imbecile Gaston, we look in vain for any of those unmixt qualities which should raise a patriot to the command of his fellow-citizens. The grand duke, and particularly the third Cosmo, had operated so entire a change in the Tuscan character, that the candid Florentines, in excuse for some imperfections in the philanthropic system of Leopold, are obliged to confess that the sovereign was the only liberal man in his dominions. Yet that excellent prince himself had no other notion of a national assembly, than of a body to represent the wants and wishes, not the will, of the people.

NOTE 31.

See page 39. Stanza 16th.

BATTLE OF TERRELLANO.

"An earthquake reft's unheededly away."

"And such was their mutual animosity, so intent were they upon the battle, that the earthquake, which overthrew in great part many of the cities of Italy, which turned the course of rapid streams, poured back the sea upon the rivers, and tore down the very mountains, was not felt by one of the combatants."§ Such is the description of Livy. It may be doubted whether modern tactics would admit of such an abstraction.

* Cosmus Medicus, Decreto Publico, Pater Patrie.

† Corinna, liv. xviii., chap. iii., vol. iii., page 248.

‡ On Government, chap. ii., sect. xxv., pag. 308, edit. 1781. Sidney is, together with Locke and Hoadley, one of Mr. Hume's "despicable" writers.

§ Liv. liv., lib. xxii., cap. xii.

The site of the battle of Terresane is not to be mistaken. The traveller from the village under Cortona to Cam di Piano, the next stage on the way to Rome, has for the first two or three miles, around him, but more particularly to the right, that fat land which Hannibal had waste in order to induce the consul Flaminius to move from Arezzo. On his left, and in front of him, is a ridge of hills bending down towards the lake of Trasimene, called by Livy "montes Cortonenenses," and now named the Gualandara. These hills he approaches at Osanna, a village which the itineraries pretend to have been so desolated from the bones found there; but there have been no bones found there, and the battle was fought on the other side of the hill. From Osanna the road begins to rise a little, but does not pass into the roots of the mountains until the sixty-seventh milestone from Florence. The ascent there is not steep but perpetual, and continues for twenty minutes. The lake is soon seen below on the right, with Borghetto, a round tower, close upon the water; and the undulating hills partially covered with wood, amongst which the road winds, sink by degrees into the marshes near to this tower. Lower than the road, down to the right amidst these woody hillocks, Hannibal placed his horse in the jaws of, or rather above, the pass, which was between the lake and the present road, and most probably close to Borghetto, just under the lowest of the "tumuli."¶ On a summit to the left, above the road, is an old circular ruin, which the peasants call "the tower of Hannibal the Carthaginian." Arrived at the highest point of the road, the traveller has a partial view of the fatal plain, which opens fully upon him as he descends the Gualandara. He soon finds himself in a vale enclosed to the left, and in front, and behind him by the Gualandara hills, bending round in a segment larger than a semicircle, and running down at each end to the lake, which obliquely to the right and forms the chord of this mountain arc. The position cannot be guessed at from the plains of Cortona, nor appears to be so completely enclosed unless to one who is fairly within the hills. It then, indeed, appears "a place made as it were on purpose for a snare," locus insidie notus. "Borghetto is then found to stand in a narrow marshy pass close to the hill and to the lake, whilst there is no other outlet at the opposite turn of the mountains than through the little town of Passigrano, which is pushed into the water by the foot of a high rocky scollivity." There is a woody eminence branching down from the mountains into the upper end of the plain nearer to the side of Passigrano, and on this stands a white village called Torre. Polybius seems to allude to this eminence as the one on which Hannibal encamped, and drew out his heavy-armed Africans and Spaniards in a conspicuous position.¶ From this spot he despatched his Balcaris and light-armed troops round through the Gualandara heights to the right, so as to arrive unseen and form an ambush amongst the broken scollivities which the road now passes, and to be ready to set upon the left flank and above the enemy, whilst the horse shut up the pass behind. Flaminius came to the lake near Borghetto at sunset; and, without sending any spies before him, marched through the pass the next morning before the day had quite broken, so that he perceived nothing of the horse and light troops above and about him, and saw only the heavy-armed Carthaginians in front on the hill of Torre. The consul began to draw out his army in the fat, and in this mean time the horse in ambush occupied the pass behind him, at Borghetto. Thus the Romans were completely enclosed, having the lake on the right, the main army on the hill of Torre in front, the Gualandara hills filled with the light-armed on the left flank, and being prevented from receding by their cavalry, who, the farther they advanced, stopped up all the outlets in the rear. A fog rising from the lake now spread itself over the army of the consul, but the high land was in the sunshine, and all the different corps in ambush looked toward the hill of Torre for the order of attack. Hannibal gave the signal, and moved down from his post on the height. At the same moment all his troops on the eminences behind and in the flank of Flaminius rushed forwards as it were with one accord into the plain. The Romans, who were forming their array in the midst, suddenly heard the shouts of the enemy amongst them, on every side, and before they could fall into their ranks, or draw their swords, or see by whom ¶ Liv. liv., lib. xxii., cap. iv.

§ Ibid.

¶ Hist. lib. iii., cap. 68. The account in Polybius is not so exactly reconcilable with present appearances as that in Livy. He talks of hills to the right and left of the pass and valley; but when Flaminius entered, he had the lake at the right of both.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

they were attacked, felt at once that they were surrounded and lost.

There are two little rivulets which run from the Gualandra into the lake. The traveller crosses the first of these at about a mile after he comes into the plain, and this divides the Tuscan from the Papal territories. The second, about a quarter of a mile farther on, is called "the bloody rivulet;" and the peasants point out an open spot to the left between the "Sanguinetto" and the hills, which, they say, was the principal scene of slaughter. The other part of the plain is covered with thick-set olive-trees in corn grounds, and is nowhere quite level except near the edge of the lake. It is, indeed, most probable that the battle was fought near this end of the valley, for the six thousand Romans, who, at the beginning of the action, broke through the enemy, escaped to the summit of an eminence which must have been in this quarter, otherwise they would have had to traverse the whole plain, and to pierce through the main army of Hannibal.

The Romans fought desperately for three hours; but the leath of Flaminius was the signal for a general dispersion. The Carthaginian horse then burst in upon the fugitives, and he lake, the marsh about Borghetto, but chiefly the plain of the Sanguinetto and the passes of the Gualandra, were strewn with dead. Near some old walls on a bleak ridge to the left above the rivulet, many human bones have been repeatedly found, and this has confirmed the pretensions and the name of the "stream of blood."

Every district of Italy has its hero. In the north some saint is the usual genius of the place, and the foreign Julio Romano more than divides Mantua with her native Virgil.* To the south we hear of Roman names. Near Tarsimene tradition is still faithful to the fame of an enemy, and Hannibal the Carthaginian is the only ancient name remembered on the banks of the Fergan lake. Flaminius is unknown; but the positions on that road have been taught to show the very spot where Il Console Romano was slain. Of all who fought and fell in the battle of Tarsimene, the historian himself has, besides the generals and Maharal, preserved indeed only a single name. You overtake the Carthaginian again on the same road to Rome. The antiquary, that is, the hostler of the posthouse at Spoleto, tells you that his town repulsed the victorious enemy, and shows you the gate still called Porta di Anibal. It is hardly worth while to remark that a French travel writer, well known by the name of the President Dupuy, saw Tarsimene in the lake of Bolsena, which lay conveniently on his way from Siena to Rome.

NOTE B2.

See page 41. Stanza Immortell.

FRAMINUS OF POMPEY.

"And thou, dread statue! yet existent in
The customary form of naked majesty."

The projected division of the Spada Pompey has already been recorded by the historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Mr. Gibbon found it in the memorials of Flaminius Vaco; and it may be added to his mention of it, that Pope Julius III. gave the contending owners five hundred crowns for the statue, and presented it to Cardinal Capo di Ferro, who had prevented the judgment of Solomon from being executed upon the image. In a more divided age this statue was exposed to an actual operation; for the French who acted the Brutus of Voltaire in the Coliseum required that their Cesar should fall at the base of that Pompey which was supposed to have been sprinkled with the blood of the original dictator. The nine-foot hero was therefore removed to the arena of the amphitheatre, and, to facilitate his transport, suffered the temporary amputation of its right arm. The republican tragedians had to plead that the arm was a restoration; but their accusers do not believe that the integrity of the statue would have protected it. The love of finding every coincidence has discovered the true Cæsarian ichor in a stain near the right knee; but colder criticism has rejected not only the blood, but the portrait, and assigned the globe of power rather to the first of the emperors than to the last of the republican masters of Rome. Winkelmann† is loth to allow an heroic statue of a Roman citizen, but the Griman! Agrippa, a contemporary almost, is heroic; and naked Roman figures were only very rare, not absolutely forbidden. The face accords much better with the "hominem integrum et castum et grave,"‡ than with any of the busts of Augustus, and is too stern for him who was beautiful, says Suetonius, at all periods of his life. The pretended likeness to Alexander the Great cannot be discerned, but the traits resemble the medal of Pompey.§ The objectionable globe may not have been an ill-applied flattery to him who found Asia Minor the boundary, and left it the centre, of the Roman empire. It seems that Winkelmann has made a mistake in thinking that no proof of the identity of this statue with that which received the bloody sacrifice can be derived from the spot where it was discovered.¶ Flaminius Vaco says setto was notified, and this centina is known to have been in the Vicolo de' Leutari, near the Cancellaria; a position corresponding exactly to that of the Janus before the basilica of Pompey's theatre, to which Augustus transferred the statue after the curia was either burnt or taken down. Part of the Pompeian shade, the portico, existed in the beginning of the fifteenth century, and the atrium was still called Suavia. So says Blondus. At all events, so long as the stern majesty of the statue, and so memorable in the story, that the play of the imagination leaves no room for the exercise of the judgment, and the fiction, if a fiction it is, operates on the spectator with an effect not less powerful than truth.

NOTE B3.

See page 41. Stanza Immortell.

THE DREAD WOLF.

"And thou, the thunder-stricken nurse of Rome!"

Ancient Rome, like modern Siena, abounded most probably with images of the foster-mother of her founder; but there were two she-wolves of whom history makes particular mention. One of these, of brass in ancient work, was seen by Dionysius at the temple of Romulus, under the Palatine, and is universally believed to be that mentioned by the Latin historian, as having been made from the money collected by a fine on usurers, and as standing under the Ruminal figure.†† The other was that which Cicero‡‡ has celebrated both in prose and verse, and which the historian Dion also records as having suffered the same accident as is alluded to by the orator.§§ The question agitated by the antiquaries is, whether the wolf now in the Conservator's Palace is that of Livy and Dionysius, or that of Cicero, or whether it is neither one nor the other. The earlier writers differ as much as the moderns; Lucius Pannus|| says that it is the one alluded to by both, which is impossible, and also by Virgil, which may be. Fulvius Ursinus¶¶ calls it the wolf of Dionysius, and Marrianus talks of it as the one mentioned by Cicero. To

* About the middle of the twelfth century the coins of Mantua bore on one side the image and figure of Virgil. Zeon d'Italia, pl. xvii., l. 6. Voyage dans le Milanais, etc., par A. S. Millin, tom. ii., pag. 264. Paris, 1817.

† Storia delle Arti, etc., lib. ix., cap. i, pag. 331, 332, tom. ii.

‡ Cleor. Epist. ad Atticum, xi. 6.

§ Published by Cassius, in his Museum Romanum.

|| Storia delle Arti, etc., l. ix., c. 1.

¶ Sueton. in Vita Augusti, cap. 31, and in Vita C. J. Cesar, cap. 38. Appian says it was burnt down.

 Antiq. Rom., lib. i.

†† Liv. Hist., lib. x., cap. lxxix.

‡‡ "Tum statuas Nativæ, tum simulacra Deorum, Romulusque et Remus cum altricibus bellæ vi fulminis totis conderunt." D. Divinat., li. 30. "Tætes est ille etiam qui hæc urbem condidit Romulus, quem Isaacum in Capitolio parvum atque lactantem, uberribus lapide inhiantem fulvas mammas." In Catullus, lib. 6.

"Hic alværis erat Romani nomine altricis
Mæris, quæ parvos Mæoris semine natos
Uberibus gravidis viali rore rigebat.
Que tum cum pueris lactante fulminis totis
Conderunt, aliquæ arvis pedes vestigia liqunt."
De Consulatu, lib. ii. (lib. i., de Divinat., cap. li.)

§§ Dion. Hist., lib. xxviii., p. 87, edit. Rob. Steph., 1648.

|| Luc. Pannal de Antiq. Urb. Rom., lib. ii., cap. vii., ap. Sallustius, tom. i., p. 217. In his seventeenth chapter he repeats that the statues were there, but not that they were found there.

¶¶ Ap. Nardini, Roma Vetis, l. v., c. iv.

 Marrianus Urb. Rom. Topograph., lib. ii., cap. lx. He mentions another wolf and twins in the Valcon, lib. v., cap. xxi.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

has Ryoquius tremblingly assents.* Nardini is inclined to suppose it may be one of the many wolves preserved in ancient Rome; but of the two rather bends to the Cloacanian statue.† Montfaucon mentions it as a point without doubt. Of the latter writers the decisive Winkelmann proclaims it as having been found at the church of Saint Theodore, where, or near where, was the temple of Romulus, and consequently makes it the wolf of Dionysius. His authority Lucius Faunus, who, however, only says that it was placed, not found, at the Ficus Ruminalis, by the Comitium, by which he does not seem to allude to the church of Saint Theodore. Ryoquius was the first to make the mistake, and Winkelmann followed Ryoquius.

Flaminius Vacca tells quite a different story, and says he had heard the wolf with the twins was found near the arch of Septimius Severus. The commentator on Winkelmann is of the same opinion with that learned person, and is incensed at Nardini for not having remarked that Cicero, in speaking of the wolf struck with lightning in the Capitol, makes use of the past tense. But, with the Abate's leave, Nardini does not positively assert the statue to be that mentioned by Cicero, and, if he had, the assumption would not perhaps have been so exceedingly indiscreet. The Abate himself is obliged to own that there are marks like the scorching of lightning in the hinder legs of the present wolf; and to get rid of this adds, that the wolf seen by Dionysius might have also been struck by lightning or otherwise injured.

Let us examine the subject by a reference to the words of Cicero. The orator in two places seems to particularize the Romulus and the Remus, especially the first, which his audience remembered to have been in the Capitol, as being struck with lightning. In his verses he records that the twins and wolf both fell, and that the latter fell behind the marks of her feet. Cicero does not say that the wolf was consumed; and Dion only mentions that it fell down, without alluding, as the Abate has made him, to the force of the blow, or the firmness with which it had been fixed. The whole strength, therefore, of the Abate's argument hangs upon the past tense; which, however, may be somewhat diminished by remarking that the phrase only shows that the statue was not then standing in its former position. Winkelmann has observed that the present twins are modern; and it is equally clear that there are marks of gliding on the wolf, which might therefore be supposed to make a part of the ancient group. It is known that the sacred images of the Capitol were not destroyed when injured by time or accident, but were put into certain underground depositories, called foranea.‡ It may be thought possible that the wolf had been so deposited, and had been replaced in some conspicuous situation when the Capitol was rebuilt by Vespasian. Ryoquius, without mentioning his authority, tells that it was transferred from the Comitium to the Lateran, and thence brought to the Capitol. If it was found near the arch of Severus, it may have been one of the images which Orestes says was thrown down in the Forum by lightning when Alaric took the city. That it is of very high antiquity the workmanship is a decisive proof; and that circumstance induced Winkelmann to believe it the wolf of Dionysius. The Capitoline wolf, however, may have been of the same early date as that at the temple of Romulus. Lactantius†† asserts that in his time the Romans worshipped a wolf; and it is known that the Lupercales held out to a very late period;‡‡ after every other observance of the ancient superstition had totally expired. This may account for the preservation of the ancient image longer than the other early symbols of Paganism.

It may be permitted, however, to remark, that the wolf was a Roman symbol, but that the worship of that symbol is an inference drawn by the seal of Lactantius. The early Christian writers are not to be trusted in the charges which they make against the Pagans. Rusebius accused the Romans to their faces of worshipping Simon Magnus, and raising a statue to him in the island of the Tyber. The Romans had probably never heard of such a person before, who came, however, to play a considerable, though scandalous, part in the church history, and has left several tokens of his abrid combat with Saint Peter at Rome; notwithstanding that an inscription found in this very island of the Tyber showed the Simon Magnus of Rusebius to be a certain indigil god called Simu Magnus or Fidius.§

Even when the worship of the founder of Rome had been abandoned, it was thought expedient to humor the habits of the good matrons of the city, by sending them with their sick infants to the church of Saint Theodore, as they had before carried them to the temple of Romulus.¶ The practice is continued to this day, and the site of the above church seems to be thereby identified with that of the temple; so that if the wolf had been really found there, as Winkelmann says, there would be no doubt of the present statue being that seen by Dionysius. But Faunus, in saying that it was the Ficus Ruminalis by the Comitium, is only talking of its ancient position as recorded by Pliny; and, even if he had been remarking where it was found, would not have alluded to the church of Saint Theodore, but to a very different place, near which it was then thought the Ficus Ruminalis had been, and also the Comitium; that is, the three corners by the church of Santa Maria Liberatrice, at the corner of the Palatine looking on the Forum.

It is, in fact, a mere conjecture where the image was actually dug up; and, perhaps, on the whole, the merits of its gliding, and of the lightning, are a better argument in favor of its being the Cloacanian wolf than any that man has adduced for the contrary opinion. At any rate, it is reasonably selected in the text of the poem as one of the most interesting relics of the ancient city, and is certainly the figure, if not the very animal, to which Virgil alludes in his beautiful verses:—

"Gemino hinc ubera circum
Lupere pendentes puera, et lambere matrem
Impavidæ: illam terrore cervice rotantem
Mulcero alternæ, at corpora fingere lingua."

NOTE 34.

See page 41. Stanzas cc.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

—"For the Roman's mind
Was modified in a less terrestrial mould."

It is possible to be a very great man and to be still very inferior to Julius Cæsar, the most complete character, as Lord Bacon thought, of all antiquity. Nature seems incapable of such extraordinary combinations as composed his versatile capacity, which was the wonder even of the Romans themselves. The first general—the only triumphant politician—is wrong in saying that Lactantius mentions the wolf was in the Capitol.

‡ To A.D. 468. "Quis credere possit," says Baronius [Ann. Roman., tom. viii., p. 603 in an. 468], "vigilare adhuc Romæ ad Gelastæ tempora, que fuerat ante exordia urbis alata in Italian Lupercales!" Gelastus wrote a letter, which occupies four folio pages, to Andronichus the senator, and others, to show that the rites should be given up.

§ Eccles. Hist., lib. ii., cap. xiii., p. 46. Justin Martyr had told the story before; but Baronius himself was obliged to dissent this time. See Nardini, Roma Vet., lib. vii., cap. xii.

¶ Rome xli. Ripa, accurata e concinna Descriptione, etc., di Roma Moderna, dell' Ab. Gisolfi, Veneti, 1768.

†† Denzau, lib. xi., cap. 14, gives a medal representing an ass side the wolf in the same position as that in the Capitol; and in the reverse the wolf with the head not reverted. It is of the time of Antoninus Pius.

‡‡ Æn., viii. 681. See Dr. Middleton, in his Letter from Rome, who inclines to the Cloacanian wolf, but without examining the subject.

* Just. Ryoquius de Capit. Roman. Comm., cap. xxiv., pag. 203, edit. Lugd. Bat. 1694.

† Nardini, Roma Vet., lib. v., cap. iv.

‡ Lupa hodieque in capitolinis templi edibus, cum vestigio fulminis quo istam arcebat Cicero." Diarium Italic., tom. i., p. 174.

§ Storia delle Arti, etc., lib. iii., cap. iii., s. ii., note 10. Winkelmann has made a strange blunder in the note, by saying the Cloacanian wolf was not in the Capitol, and that Dion was wrong in saying so.

¶ Flami Vacca, Memorie, num. iii., pag. 1, ap. Montfaucon, Diar. Ital., tom. i.

‡ Luc. Faun. Memorie, num. iii., pag. 1, ap. Montfaucon, Diar. Ital., tom. i.

 See note to stanza lxxx. in "Historical Illustrations."

†† Bonum viris Lupa honoratæ est affecta divina, et ferrem, si animal ipsum fuisset, ejus figuram gerit." Lactant., de Falsa Religione, lib. i., cap. xx., pag. 101, edit. varior. 1690; that is to say, he would rather adore a wolf than a prostitute. His commentator has observed that the opinion of Lyræ concerning Laurentia being figured in this wolf was not universal. Strabo thought so. Ryoquius inferior to none in eloquence—comparable to any in the attainments of wisdom, in an age made up of the greatest commanders, statesmen, orators, and philosophers that ever appeared in the world—an author who composed a perfect specimen of military annals in his travelling carriage—at one time in a controversy with Cato, at another writing a treatise on punning, and collecting a set of good sayings—fighting and making love at the same moment, and willing to abandon both his empire and his mistress for a sight of the Fountains of the Nile. Such did Julius Cæsar appear to his contemporaries and to those of the subsequent æra who were the most inclined to deplore and execrate his fatal genius.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

But we must not be so much dazzled with his surpassing glory, or with his magnanimous, his amiable qualities, as to forget the decision of his impartial countrymen:—

HE WAS JUSTLY GLAIN.*

NOTE 35.

See page 43. Stones seen.

EGERIA.

"Egeria! sweet creation of some heart
Which found no mortal resting-place so fair
As thine ideal breast."

The respectable authority of Flamininus Vacona would incline us to believe in the claims of the Egerian grotto.† He assures us that he saw an inscription in the pavement, stating that the fountain was that of Egeria, dedicated to the nymphs. The inscription is not there at this day; but Montfaucon quotes two lines of Ovid‡ from a stone in the Villa Giustiniani, which he seems to think had been brought from the same grotto.

This grotto and valley were formerly frequented in summer, and particularly the first Sunday in May, by the modern Romans, who attached a salubrious quality to the fountain, which trickles from an orifice at the bottom of the vault, and, overflowing the little pools, creeps down the matted grass into the brook below. The brook is the Ovidian Almo, whose name and qualities are lost in the modern Acquedotto. The valley itself is called Valle di Caffarelli, from the dukes of that name who made over their fountain to the Pallavicini, with sixty rubbia of adjoining land.

There can be little doubt that this long dell is the Egerian valley of Juvenal, and the pausing place of Umbricitus, notwithstanding the generality of his commentators have supposed the descent of the satirist and his friend to have been into the Arician grove, where the nymph met Hippolytus, and where she was more peculiarly worshipped.

The step from the Porta Capena to the Alban hill, fifteen miles distant, would be too considerable, unless we were to believe in the wild conjecture of Voestius, who makes that gate travel from its present station, where he pretends it was during the reign of the kings, as far as the Arician grove, and then makes it retrace to its old site with the shrinking city.‡ The tifo, or pumice, which the poet prefers to marble, is the substance composing the bank in which the grotto is sunk.

The modern topographers! find in the grotto the statue of the nymph, and nine niches for the Muses; and a late traveller§ has discovered that the cave is restored to that simplicity which the poet regretted had been exchanged for injudicious ornament. But the headless statue is palpably rather a male than a nymph, and has none of the attributes ascribed to it at present visible. The nine Muses could hardly have stood in six niches; and Juvenal certainly does not allude to any individual cave.¶ Nothing can be collected from the satirist but that somewhere near the Porto Capena was a spot in which it was supposed Numa held nightly consultations with his nymph, and where there was a grove and a sacred fountain, and fane once consecrated to the Muses; and that from this spot there was a descent into the valley of Egeria, where were several artificial caves. It is clear that the statues of the Muses made no part of the decoration which the satirist thought misplaced in these caves; for he expressly assigns other fane (delubra) to these divinities above the valley, and moreover tells us that they had been ejected to make room for the Jews. In fact, the little temple, now called that of Bacchus, was formerly thought to belong to the Muses, and Nardini†† places them in a poplar grove, which was in his time above the valley.

It is probable, from the inscription and position, that the cave now shown may be one of the "artificial caverns," of which, indeed, there is another a little way higher up the valley, under a tuft of alder bushes; but a single grotto of Egeria is a more modern invention, grafted upon the application of the epithet Egerian to these nymphs in general, and which might send us to look for the haunts of Numa upon the banks of the Thames.

Our English Juvenal was not seduced into mistranslation by his acquaintance with Pope: he carefully preserves the correct plural—

"Thence slowly winding down the vale we view
The Egerian grot: oh, how unlike the true!"

The valley abounds with springs,‡‡ and over these springs, which the Muses might haunt from their neighboring groves, Egeria presided: hence she was said to supply them with water; and she was the nymph of the grotto through which the fountains were taught to flow.

The whole of the monuments in the vicinity of the Egerian valley have received names at will, which have been changed at will. Venuti§§ owns he can see no traces of the temples of Jove, Saturn, Iano, Venus, and Diana, which Nardini found, or hoped to find. The mutatorium of Caracalla's circus, the temple of Honor and Virtue, the temple of Bacchus, and, above all, the temple of the god Radicius, are the antiquaries' despair.

The circus of Caracalla depends on a medal of that emperor cited by Fulvius Ursinus, of which the reverse shows a circus, supposed, however, by some to represent the Circus Maximus. It gives a very good idea of that place of exercise. The soil has been but little raised, if we may judge from the small cellular structure at the end of the Spina, which was probably the chapel of the god Consus. This cell is half beneath the soil, as it must have been in the circus itself; for Dionysius¶¶ could not be persuaded to believe that this divinity was the Roman Neptune, because his altar was under ground.

NOTE 36.

See page 45. Stones carried.

THE ROMAN NEMESIS.

—"great Nemesis!
Here, where the ancient paid thee homage long."

We read in Suetonius that Augustus, from a warning received in a dream,††† counterfeited, once a year, the beggar sitting before the gate of his palace with his hand hollowed and stretched out for charity. A statue formerly in the villa Borgese, and which should be now at Paris, represents the Qui lapsi videtur eodem Egeria fonte, aut ejus vicina latuisse compariatus." Diarium Italia, p. 153.

‡ De Magnit. Vet. Rom. ap. Grav. Ant. Rom. tom. iv., p. 1207.

§ Echinaré, Descrizione di Roma e dell' Agro Romano, corretto dall' Abate Venuti, in Roma, 1750. They believe in the grotto and nymph. "Staladero di questo fonte, essendovi sculpito le acque a più di due."

¶ Classical Tour, chap. vi., p. 217, vol. ii.

¶¶ Sat. iii.

†† Lib. iii., cap. iii.

††† "Uddique e solo acque acquirunt." Nardini, lib. iii., cap. iii.

§§ Echinaré, etc. Cio. cit., pp. 257, 258.

¶¶ Antiq. Rom., lib. ii., cap. 2331.

¶¶ Sueton. in Vit. Augusti, cap. vi.

635

* Egeria est que prebet aquas dea grana Cameris
Illa Numæ conjux castissimæque.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE

emperor in that posture of supplication. The object of this self-degradation was the appeasement of Nemesis, the perpetual attendant on good fortune, of whose power the Roman conquerors were also reminded by certain symbols attached to their cars of triumph. The symbols were the whip and the crocod, which were discovered in the Nemesis of the Vatican. The attitude of beggary made the above statue pass for that of Belshazzar; and until the criticism of Winkelmann* had rectified the mistake, one fiction was called in to support another. It was the same fear of the sudden termination of prosperity that made Amasis king of Egypt warn his friend Polycrates of Samos, that the gods loved those whose lives were checkered with good and evil fortunes. Nemesis was supposed to lie in wait particularly for the prudent; that is, for those whose caution rendered them accessible only to mere accidents; and her first altar was raised on the banks of the Phrygian Ægeus by Admetus, probably the prince of that name who killed the son of Croesus by mistake. Hence the goddess was called Adrastus†.

The Roman Nemesis was esord and august: there was a temple to her in the Palatine under the name of Ekhamnesia: so great, indeed, was the propensity of the ancients to trace to the revolution of events, and to believe in the divinity of Fortune, that in the same Palatine there was a temple to the Fortune of the day.‡ This is the last superstition which retains its hold over the human heart; and, from concentrating in one object the credulity so natural to man, has always appeared strongest in those unembarrassed by other articles of belief. The antiquaries have supposed this goddess to be synonymous with Fortune and with Fate: but it was in her vindictive quality that she was worshipped under the name of Nemesis.

NOTE 37.

See page 45. Stones cut.

GLADIATORS.

—“*Ye, their sire,
Butcher'd to make a Roman holiday.*”

Gladiators were of two kinds, compelled and voluntary: and were supplied from several conditions:—from slaves sold for that purpose; from culprits; from barbarian captives either taken in war, and, after being led in triumph, set apart for the games, or those seized and condemned as rebels; also from free citizens, some fighting for hire (quadrato), others from a depraved ambition; at last even knights and senators were exhibited,—a disgrace of which the first tyrant was naturally the first inventor. In the end, dwarfs, and even women, fought; an enormity prohibited by Severus. Of these the most to be pitied undoubtedly were the barbarian captives; and to this species a Christian writer justly applies the epithet “innocent,” to distinguish them from the professional gladiators. Aurelian and Claudius supplied great numbers of these unfortunate victims: the one after his triumph, and the other on a pretext of a rebellion.¶ No war, says Lipsius, was ever so destructive to the human race as these sports. In spite of the laws of Constantine and Constantine, gladiatorial shows survived the old established religion more than seventy years; but they owed their final extinction to the courage of a Christian. In the year 404, on the kalends of January, they were exhibiting the shows in the Flavian amphitheatre before the usual immense concourse of people. Alimachus, or Telesmachus, an eastern monk, who had travelled to Rome intent on his holy purpose, rushed into the midst of the arena, and endeavored to separate the combatants. The praetor Alphyra, a person incredibly attached to these games,† gave instant orders to the gladiators to slay him; and Telesmachus gained the crown of martyrdom, and the title of saint, which surely has never either before or since been awarded for a more noble exploit. Honorius immediately abolished the shows, which were never afterwards revived. The story is told by Theodoret‡ and Cassiodorus,§ and seems worthy of credit, notwithstanding its place in the Roman martyrology.¶ Besides the torrents of blood which flowed at the funerals, in the amphitheatres, the circus, the forums, and other public places, gladiators were introduced at feasts, and tore each other to pieces amidst the supper tables, to the great delight and applause of the guests. Yet Lipsius permits himself to suppose the loss of courage, and the evident degeneracy of mankind, to be nearly connected with the abolition of these bloody spectacles.

NOTE 38.

See page 45. Stones cut.

* Here, where the Roman soldier's home or prison
Was death or life, the plangencies of a crowd.”

When one gladiator wounded another, he shouted, “he has it,” “boo habet,” or “laetor.” The wounded combatant dropped his weapon, and, advancing to the edge of the arena, supplicated the spectators. If he had fought well, the people saved him; if otherwise, or as they happened to be incited, they turned down their thumbs, and he was slain. They were occasionally so savage that they were impatient if a combat lasted longer than ordinary without wounds or death. The emperor's presence generally saved the vanquished; and it is recorded as an instance of Caracalla's ferocity, that he sent those who supplicated him for life, in a galleys, at Nicomedia, to ask the people; in other words, handed them over to be slain. A similar ceremony is observed at the Spanish bull-fights. The magistrate presides; and after the horsemen and picadores have fought the bull, the matadors step forward and bows to him for permission to kill the animal. If the bull has done his duty by killing two or three horses, or a man, which last is rare, the people interfere with shouts, the ladies wave their handkerchiefs, and the animal is saved. The wounds and death of the horses are accompanied with the loudest acclamations, and many gestures of delight, especially from the female portion of the audience, including those of the gentlest blood. Every thing depends on habit. The author of Childe Harold, the writer of this note, and one or two other Englishmen, who have certainly in other days borne the sight of a pitched battle, were, during the summer of 1826, in the governor's box at the great amphitheatre of Santa Maria, opposite to Cadix. The death of one or two horses completely satisfied their curiosity. A gentleman present, observing them shudder and look pale, noticed that unusual reception of so delightful a sport to some young ladies, who stared and smiled, and continued their applause as another horse fell bleeding to the ground. One bull killed three horses of his own horns. He was saved by acclamations, which were redoubled when it was known he belonged to a priest.

An Englishman, who can be much pleased with seeing two men beat themselves to pieces, cannot bear to look at a horse galloping round an arena with his bowels trailing on the ground, and turns from the spectacle and the spectators with horror and disgust.

* Storia delle Arti, etc., lib. xii., cap. iii., tom. ii., p. 432.

† Ditt. de Bayle, article Adrastus.

‡ Fortuna hujusmodi. Cicero mentions her, de Legib., lib. ii.

HELEN HENNESSY
REVUE FORTUNAE
FUTURAE
FUTURAE
F. C. LEBLANC
L'ART DE LA
CORD.

See Questions Romane, etc., cap. Grav. Antiq. Romane, tom. v., p. 442. See also Musard, Nouv. Thesaur. Inscr., Vol. tom. i., pp. 88, 89, where there are three Latin and one Greek inscription to Nemesis, and others to Fate.

§ Julius Caesar, who rose by the fall of the aristocracy, brought Furius Lepidus and A. Calpurnius upon the arena.

¶ Tertullian, “caris quidem et innocentes gladiatores in fadum veniunt, et voluptatis publicis hostes sunt.” Just. Lips. Saturn. Sermon, lib. ii., cap. iii.

† Vopiscus, in Vit. Aurel. and in Vit. Claud., lib. ii.

 Just. Lips., lib. i., cap. xii.

‡ Augustinus (lib. vi., confess., cap. viii.), “Alphyrum cum gladiatorum spectaculo turbatus incredibiliter abruptus,” scribit, lib. ii., cap. xii.

§ Hist. Eccl., cap. xxi., lib. v.

¶ Cassiodorus, Tripartita, l. x., c. xi., Secura, lib. ii.

|| Baronius, ad ann. et in notis ad Martyrol. Rom. i. Jan. See Marangon delle memorie sacre e profane dell' Antiquario Flavio, p. 25, edit. 1744.

NOTES TO CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE.

NOTE 30.

See page 43. Stanzas omitted.

THE ALBAN HILL.

— "and afar
The Tiber winds, and the broad ocean looms
The Latin coast," etc.

The whole declivity of the Alban hill is of unrivalled beauty, and from the convent on the highest point, which has succeeded to the temple of the Latin Jupiter, the prospect embraces all the objects alluded to in the cited stanza; the Mediterranean, the whole scene of the latter half of the Æneid, and the coast from beyond the mouth of the Tiber to the headland of Circeum and the Cape of Terracina.

The site of Cicero's villa may be supposed either at the Grotta Ferrata, or at the Tusculum of Prince Lucien Buonaparte.

The former was thought some years ago the actual site, as may be seen from Middleton's Life of Cicero. At present it has lost something of its credit, except for the Domus Achinea. Nine monks of the Greek order live there, and the adjoining villa is a cardinal's summer-house. The other villa, called Rufinella, is on the summit of the hill above Frascati, and many rich remains of Tusculum have been found there, besides seventy-two statues of different merit and preservation, and seven busts.

From the same eminence are seen the Sabine hills, encompassed in which lies the long valley of Rustica. There are several circumstances which tend to establish the identity of this valley with the "Utelia" of Horace; and it seems possible that the mosaic pavement which the peasants uncover by throwing up the earth of a vineyard may belong to his villa. Rustica is pronounced short, not according to our stress upon — "Utelia subacta." — It is more rational to think that we are wrong, than that the inhabitants of this secluded valley have changed their tone in this word. The addition of the consonant p is nothing; yet it is necessary to be aware that Rustica may be a modern name which the peasants may have caught from the antiquaries.

The villa, or the mosaic, is in a vineyard on a knoll, covered with chestnut trees. A stream runs down the valley; and although it is not true, as said in the guide books, that this stream is called Licoia, yet there is a village on a rock at the head of the valley which is so denominated, and which may have taken its name from the Digentia. Licoia contains seven hundred inhabitants. On a peak a little way beyond is Civitella, containing three hundred. On the banks of the Anio, a little before you turn up into Valle Rustica, to the left, about an hour from the villa, is a town called Viocavaro, another favorable coincidence with the Vallis of the poet. At the end of the valley, towards the Anio, there is a bare hill, crowned with a little town called Bardala. At the foot of this hill the rivulet of Licoia flows, and is almost absorbed in a wide sandy bed before it reaches the Anio. Nothing can be more fortunate for the lines of the poet, whether in a metaphorical or direct sense:—

"Ma quotiens reficit gelidus Digentia rivus, Quem Mandela bibit rugosus frigore pagus."

The stream is clear high up the valley, but before it reaches the hill of Bardala looks green and yellow, like a sulphur rivulet.

Rooca Giovane, a ruined village in the hills, half an hour's walk from the vineyard where the pavement is shown, does seem to be the site of the fane of Vesta, and an inscription found there tells that this temple of the Sabine Victory was repaired by Vespasian. With these helps and a position corresponding exactly to everything which the poet has told us of his retreat, we may feel tolerably secure of our site.

The hill which should be Lavinia is called Campanile, and by following up the rivulet to the pretended Bandusia, you come to the roots of the higher mountain Genaro. Singularly enough, the only spot of ploughed land in the whole valley is on the knoll where this Bandusia rises.

" . . . tu frigus amabile
Festis vomere turris
Frœbes, et pecori vago."

The peasants show another spring near the mosaic pavement which they call "Ordina," and which flows down the hills into a tank, or mill-dam, and thence trickles over into the Digentia.

But we must not hope

"To trace the Muses upwards to their spring."

by exploring the windings of the romantic valley in search of the Bandusian fountain. It seems strange that any one should have thought Bandusia a fountain of the Digentia.—Horace has not let drop a word of it; and this immortal spring has in fact been discovered in possession of the holders of many good things in Italy, the monks. It was attached to the church of Saint Gervase and Portale near Vennosa, where it was most likely to be found.* We shall not be so lucky as a late traveller in finding the occasional pine still pendant on the poetic villa. There is not a pine in the whole valley, but there are two cypresses, which he evidently took, or mistook, for the tree in the ode.† The truth is, that the pine is now, as it was in the days of Virgil, a garden tree, and it was not at all likely to be found in the craggy solitudes of the valley of Rustica. Horace probably had one of them in the orchard close above his farm, immediately overshadowing his villa, not on the rocky heights at some distance from his abode. The tourist may have easily supposed himself to have seen this pine figured in the above cypress; for the orange and lemon trees which throw such a bloom over his description of the royal gardens at Naples, unless they have been since displaced, were assuredly only associates and other common garden shrubs.‡

NOTE 40.

See page 49.

REMARKS CLASSICAL TOUR.

The extreme disappointment experienced by choosing the Classical Tourist as a guide in Italy must be allowed to find vent in a few observations, which, it is asserted without fear of contradiction, will be confirmed by every one who has selected the same conductor through the same country. This author is in fact one of the most inaccurate, unsatisfactory writers that have in our times attained a temporary reputation, and is very seldom to be trusted even when he speaks of objects which he must be presumed to have seen. His errors, from the simple exaggeration to the downright misstatement, are so frequent as to induce a suspicion that he had either never visited the spots described, or had trusted to the fidelity of former writers. Indeed, the Classical Tour has every characteristic of a mere compilation of former notices, strung together upon a very slender thread of personal observation, and swelled out by those decorations which are so easily supplied by a systematic adoption of all the commonplace of praise, applied to everything, and therefore signifying nothing.

The style which one person thinks cloggy and cumbersome, and unsuitable, may be the taste of others, and such may experience some salutary excitement in ploughing through the periods of the Classical Tour. It must be said, however, that polish and weight are apt to begot an expectation of value. It is amongst the pains of the damned to toil up a climax with a huge round stone.

The tourist had the choice of his words, but there was no such latitude allowed to that of his sentiments. The love of virtue and of liberty, which must have distinguished the character, certainly adorns the pages of Mr. Rustace; and the gentlemanly spirit, so recommended either in an author or his productions, is very conspicuous throughout the Classical Tour. But these generous qualities are the foliage of such a performance, and may be spread about too prominently and profusely as to embarrass those who wish to see and find the fruit at hand. The mention of the divine, and the exhortations of the moralist, may have made this work something more and better than a book of travels, but they have not made it a book of travels; and this observation applies more especially to that enticing method of instruction conveyed by the perpetual introduction of the same Gallico Rhetor to reel and bluster before the rising generation, and terrify it into decency by the display of all the excesses of the revolution. An animosity against atheists and regi-

garden, laid out in parterres, and walks shaded by rows of orange trees." Classical Tour, etc., chap. xi., vol. II., oct. 265.

* See Historical Illustrations of the Fourth Canto, p. 43.

† See Classical Tour, etc., chap. vii., p. 266, vol. II.

‡ Under our windows, and bordering on the beach, is the royal edges in general, and Frenchmen specifically, may be honorable, and may be useful as a record; but that antidiote should either be administered in any work rather than a tour, or at least should be served up apart, and not so mixed with the whole mass of information and reflection as to give a bitterness to every page; for who would choose to have the anticipations of any man, however just, for his travelling companions? A tourist, unless he aspires to the credit of prophecy, is not answerable for the changes which may take place in the country which he describes; but his reader may very fairly esteem all his political portraits and deductions as so much waste paper the moment they cease to assist, and more particularly if they obstruct, his actual survey.

NOTES TO THE CORSAIR.

Nether encomium nor accusation of any government, or governors, is meant to be here offered; but it is stated as an incontrovertible fact, that the change operated, either by the address of the late imperial system, or by the disappointment of every expectation by those who have succeeded to the Italian throne, has been so considerable, and is so apparent, as not only to put Mr. Eustace's antiquillan philippics entirely out of date, but even to throw some suspicion upon the competency and candor of the author himself. A remarkable example may be found in the instance of Bologna, over whose papal attachments, and consequent denunciation, the tourist pours forth such strains of condolence and reproof, made louder by the borrowed trumpet of Mr. Burke. Now Bologna is at this moment, and has been for some years, notorious amongst the states of Italy for its attachment to revolutionary principles, and was almost the only city which made any demonstrations in favor of the unfortunate Murat. This change may, however, have been made since Mr. Eustace visited this country; but the traveller whom he has thrilled with horror at the projected stripping of the copper from the cupola of Saint Peter's must be much relieved to find that sacrilege out of the power of the French, or any other plunderers, the cupola being covered with lead.*

If the conspiring voice of otherwise rival critics had not given considerable currency to the Classical Tour, it would have been unnecessary to warn the reader that, however it may adorn his library, it will be of little or no service to him in his carriage; and if the judgment of those critics had hitherto been suspended, no attempt would have been made to anticipate their decision. As it is, those who stand in the relation of posterity to Mr. Eustace may be permitted to appeal from contemporary praise, and are perhaps more likely to be just in proportion as the causes of love and hatred are the farther removed. This appeal had, in some measure, been made before the above remarks were written: for one of the most respectable of the Florentine publishers, who had been persuaded by the repeated inquiries of those on their journey southwards to reprint a cheap edition of the Classical Tour, was, by the concurring advice of returning travellers, induced to abandon his design, although he had already arranged his types and paper, and had struck off one or two of the first sheets.

The writer of these notes would wish to part (like Mr. Gibbon) on good terms with the pope and the cardinals, but he does not think it necessary to extend the same discreet silence to their humble partisans.

The Corsair.

NOTE 41.

See page 87. Sicuna mure.

"He left a Corsair's name to other times,
Link'd with one virtue, and a thousand crimes."

That the point of honor which is represented in one instance of Conrad's character has not been carried beyond the bounds of probability, may perhaps be in some degree confirmed by the following anecdote of a brother buccaner in the year 1814:—"Our readers have all seen the account of

* "What, then, will be the astonishment, or rather the horror, of my reader, when I inform him . . . the French committee turned its attention to Saint Peter's, and employed a company of Jews to estimate and purchase the gold, silver, and bronze that adorn the the enterprise against the pirates of Barrataria; but few, we believe, were informed of the situation, history, or nature of that establishment. For the information of such as were acquainted with it, we have procured from a friend the following interesting narrative of the main facts, of which he has personal knowledge, and which cannot fail to interest some of our readers. Barrataria is a bay, or a narrow strait of the Gulf of Mexico; it runs through a rich but very arid country, until it reaches within a mile of the Mississippi river fifteen miles below the city of New Orleans. The bay is fringed almost immeasurably in which persons can be concealed from the severest scrutiny. It communicates with three lakes which lie on the southwest side, and then, via the lake of the same name, and which lies contiguous to the sea, where there is an island formed by the two arms of the lake and the sea. The east and west points of this island were fortified, in the year 1811, by a band of pirates, under the command of one Monsieur La Fitte. A large majority of these outlaws are of that class of the population of the State of Louisiana who fled from the island of St. Domingo during the troubles there, and took refuge in the island of Cuba; and when the last war between France and Spain commenced, they were compelled to leave that island via the short notice of a few days. Without ceremony, they entered the United States, the most of them the State of Louisiana, with all the negroes they had possessed in Cuba. They were notified by the governor of that State of the clause in the constitution which forbade the importation of slaves; but, at the same time, received the assurance of the governor that he would obtain, if possible, the approbation of the federal government for their retaining this property. The island of Barrataria is situated about lat. 29 deg. 15 min. N. 88° 31; and is so remarkable for its health as for the superior scale and shell fish with which its waters abound. The chief of this horde, like Charles de Mook, had sailed with his many vicious some virtues. In the year 1815, his party had, from its turbulence and boldness, claimed the situation of the governor of Louisiana; and to break up the establishment, he thought proper to strike at the head. He therefore offered a reward of $500 for the head of Monsieur La Fitte, who was well known to the inhabitants of the city of New Orleans, from his immediate connection, and his once having been a feeding-master in that city of great reputation, which art he learnt in Buonaparte's army, where he was a captain. The reward which was offered by the governor for the head of La Fitte was answered by the offer of a reward from the latter of $10,000 for the head of the governor. The governor ordered out a company to march from the city to La Fitte's island, and to burn and destroy all the property, and to bring to the city of New Orleans all his banditti. This company, under the command of a man who had been the intimate associate of this bold captain, approached very near to the fortified island, before he saw a man, or heard a sound, until he heard a whistle, not unlike a boatwain's call. Then it was he found himself surrounded by armed men who had emerged from the secret avenues which led into Bayou. Here it was that the modern Charles de Moor developed his few noble traits; for to this man who had come to destroy his life and all that was dear to him, he not only spared his life, but offered him that which would have made the honest soldier easy for the remainder of his days; which was indignantly refused. He then, with the approbation of his captain, returned to the city. This circumstance, and some concomitant events, proved that this band of pirates was not to be taken by land. Our naval force having always been small is that quarter, exertions for the destruction of this illicit establishment could not be expected from them until augmented; for an officer of the navy, with most of the gunboats on that station, had to retreat from an overwhelming force of La Fitte's. So soon as the augmentation of the navy authorized an attack, one was made; the overthrow of this banditti has been the result; and now this almost invulnerable point and key to New Orleans is clear of an enemy. It is to be hoped the government will hold it by a strong military force."—American Newspaper.

In Noble's continuation of Granger's Biographical History there is a singular passage in his account of Archbishop Blackbourn; and as in some measure connected with the profession of the hero of the foregoing poem, I cannot resist the temptation of extracting it. "There is something mys-

inside of the edifice, as well as the copper that covers the walls and the dome on the outside." Classical Tour, chap. iv. p. 130, vol. II. The story about the Jews is positively denied at Rome.

NOTES TO LARA AND MARINO FALIERO.

erious in the history and character of Dr. Blackburne. The former is but imperfectly known; and report has even asserted he was a buccaner; and that one of his brethren in that profession having asked, on his arrival in England, what had become of his old chum, Blackburne, was answered, He was Archbishop of York. We are informed that Blackburne was installed sub-dean of Exeter in 1584, which office he resigned in 1705; but after his successor Lewis Barnett's death, in 1704, he regained it. In the following year he became dean, and in 1714, held with it the archdeaconry of Cornwall. He was consecrated bishop of Exeter, February 24, 1715; and translated to York, November 23, 1714, as a reward, according to court scandal, for uniting George I. to the Duchess of Munster. This, however, appears to have been an unfounded calumny. As archbishop he behaved with great prudence, and was equally respectable as the guardian of the revenues of the see. Rumor whispered he retained the vices of his youth, and that a passion for the fair sex formed an item in his list of his weaknesses; but so far from being convicted by seventy witnesses, he does not appear to have been directly criminated by one. In short, I look upon these aspersions as the effects of mere malice. How is it possible a successor should have been so good a scholar as Blackburne certainly was? He who had to perfect a knowledge of the classics (particularly of the Greek tragedians), as to be able to read them with the same ease as he could Shakespeare, must have taken great pains to acquire the learned languages; and have had both leisure and good masters. But he was undoubtedly educated at Christ Church College, Oxford. He was allowed to have been a pleasant man; this, however, was turned against him by its being said, "he gained more hearts than souls."

"The only voice that could soothe the passions of the savage (Alphonso III.) was that of an amiable and virtuous wife, the sole object of his love; the voice of Donna Isabella, the daughter of the Duke of Savoy, and the granddaughter of Philip II., King of Spain. Her dying words sunk deep into his memory; his fierce spirit melted into tears; and after the sad embrace, Alphonso retired into his chamber to bewail his irreparable loss, and to meditate on the vanity of human life."—Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works, vol. III, p. 512.

Lara.

NOTE 42.

See page 97. Spanish note.

*He heard a tramp—a horse and horseman broke
From out the wood—before him rose a cloak
Wrapt round some burthen at his saddle-bow."*

The event in this section was suggested by the description of the death, or rather burial, of the Duke of Gandia. The most interesting and particular account of it is given by Burchard, and is in substance as follows:—"On the eighth day of June, the Cardinal of Valencia and the Duke of Gandia, sons of the pope, supped with their mother, Vancosa, near the church of S. Pietro ad vincula; several other persons being present at the entertainment. A late hour approaching, and the cardinal having reminded his brother that it was time to return to the apostolic palace, they mounted their horses or mules, with only a few attendants, and proceeded together as far as the palace of Cardinal Ascanio Sforza, when the duke informed the cardinal that, before he returned home, he had to pay a visit of pleasure. Dismissing therefore all his attendants, excepting his staff-ero, or footman, and a person in a mask, who had paid him a visit whilst at supper, and who, during the space of a month or thereabouts, previous to this time, had relied upon him almost daily, at the apostolic palace, he took this person behind him on his mule, and proceeded to the street of the Jura, where he quitted his servant, directing him to remain there until a certain hour; when, if he did not return, he might repair to the palace. The duke then seated the person in the mask behind him, and rode, I know not whether; but in that night he was assassinated, and thrown into the river.

* Mr. Francis Cohen, now Sir Francis Palgrave, K. H., the learned author of the "Rise and Progress of the English Constitution," "History of the Anglo-Normans," etc., etc.

The servant, after having been dismissed, was also assaulted and mortally wounded; and although he was attended with great care, yet such was his situation, that he could give no intelligible account of what had befallen his master. In the morning, the duke not having returned to the palace, his servants began to be alarmed; and one of them informed the pontiff of the evening excursion of his sons, and that the duke had not yet made his appearance. This gave the pope no small anxiety; but he conjectured that the duke had been attracted by some courtesan to pass the night with her, and not choosing to quit the house in open day, had waited till the following evening to return home. When, however, the evening arrived, and he found himself disappointed in his expectations, he became deeply afflicted, and began to make inquiries from different persons, whom he ordered to attend him for that purpose. Amongst these was a man named Giorgio Behavroni, who, having discharged some timber from a bark in the river, had remained on board the vessel to watch it; and being interrogated whether he had seen any one thrown into the river on the night preceding, he replied, that he saw two men on foot, who came down the street, and looked diligently about, to observe whether any person was passing. That seeing no one, they returned, and a short time afterwards two others came, and looked around in the same manner as the former; no person still appearing, they gave a sign to their companions, when a man came, mounted on a white horse, having behind him a dead body, the head and arms of which hung on one side, and the feet on the other side of the horse; the two persons on foot supporting the body, to prevent its falling. They thus proceeded towards that part, where the filth of the city is usually discharged into the river, and turning the horse, with his tail towards the water, the two persons took the dead body by the arms and feet, and with all their strength flung it into the river. The person on horseback then asked if they had thrown it in; to which they replied Signor, si (yes, sir). He then looked towards the river, and seeing a mantle floating on the stream, he inquired what it was that appeared black, to which they answered, it was a mantle; and one of them threw stones upon it, in consequence of which it sunk. The attendants upon the pontiff then inquired from Giorgio, why he had not revealed this to the governor of the city; to which he replied, that he had seen in his time a hundred dead bodies thrown into the river at the same place, without any inquiry being made respecting them; and that he had not, therefore, considered it as a matter of any importance. The fishermen and seamen were then collected, and ordered to search the river, where, on the following evening, they found the body of the duke, with his habit entire, and thirty wounds in his purse. He was pierced with nine wounds, one of which was in his throat, the others in his head, body, and limbs. No sooner was the pontiff informed of the death of his son, and that he had been thrown, like filth, into the river, than, giving way to his grief, he shut himself up in a chamber, and wept bitterly. The Cardinal of Segovia, and other attendants of the pope, went to the door, and after many hours spent in persuasions and exhortations, prevailed upon him to admit them. From the evening of Wednesday till the following Saturday the pope took no food; nor did he sleep from Thursday morning till the same hour on the ensuing day. At length, however, giving way to the entreaties of his attendants, he began to restrain his sorrow, and to consider the injury which his own health might sustain, by the further indulgence of his grief."—Roccos's Leo the Tenth.

Marino Faliero.

NOTE 43.

See page 164.

[I am obliged for the following excellent translation of the old Chronicle to Mr. F. Cohen,* to whom the reader will find himself indebted for a version that I could not myself—though after many years' intercourse with Italian—have given by any means so purely and so faithfully.]

* In a letter to Mr. Murray, dated Ravenna, July 30, 1831, Lord Byron says:—"Enclosed is the best account of the doge Faliero, which was only sent to me, from an old MS., the other day. Get it

NOTES TO MARINO FALIERO.

STORY OF MARINO FALIERO, DOGE XLIX. MEXXIV.

On the 11th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1354, Marino Faliero was elected and chosen to be the duke of the Commonwealth of Venice. He was Count of Valdemarino, in the marches of Treviso, and a knight, and a wealthy man to boot. As soon as the election was completed, it was resolved in the Great Council, that a deputation of twelve should be despatched to Marino Faliero the duke, who was then on his way from Rome; for when he was chosen, he was ambassador at the court of the holy father, at Rome.—the holy father himself held his court at Avignon. When Messer Marino Faliero the duke was about to land in this city, on the 5th day of October, 1354, a thick haze came on, and darkened the air: and he was enforced to land on the place of Saint Mark, between the two columns, on the spot where evil-doers are put to death; and all thought that this was the worst of tokens.—Nor must I forget to write that which I have read in a chronicle. When Messer Marino Faliero was podesta and captain of Treviso, the bishop delayed coming in with the holy sacrament, on a day when a procession was to take place. Now, the said Marino Faliero was so very proud and wrathful, that he buffeted the bishop and almost struck him to the ground; and, therefore, Heaven allowed Marino Faliero to go out of his right senses, in order that he might bring himself to an evil death.

When this duke had held the dukedom during nine months and six days, he, being wicked and ambitious, sought to make himself lord of Venice, in the manner which I have read in an ancient chronicle. When the Thursday arrived upon which they were wont to hunt the bull, the bull hunt took place as usual; and, according to the usage of those times, after the bull hunt had ended, they all proceeded into the palace of the duke, and assembled together in one of his halls; and they departed themselves with the women. And until the first bell tolled they danced, and then a banquet was served up. My lord the duke paid the expenses thereof, provided he had a duchess, and after the banquet they all returned to their homes.

Now to this feast there came a certain Ser Michele Steno, a gentleman of poor estate, and very young, but crafty and daring, and who loved one of the damseles of the duchess. Ser Michele stood amongst the women upon the solajo; and he behaved indiscreetly, so that my lord the duke ordered that he should be kicked off the solajo; and the equires of the duke flung him down from the solajo accordingly. Ser Michele thought that such an affront was beyond all bearing; and when the feast was over, and all other persons had left the palace, he, continuing heated with anger, went to the hall of audience, and wrote certain unseemly words relating to the duke and the duchess upon the chair in which the duke was used to sit; for in those days the duke did not cover his chair with cloth of gold, but he sat in a chair of wood. Ser Michele wrote thereon—"Marino Falier, the husband of the fair wife; others hate her, but he keeps her." In the morning the words were seen, and the matter was considered to be very scandalous; the Senate commanded the Avogadori of the Commonwealth to proceed therein with the greatest diligence. A largess of great amount was immediately proffered by the Avogadori, in order to discover who had written these words. And as length it was known that Michele Steno had written them. It was resolved in the Council of Forty that he should be arrested; and he then confessed that in the fit of vexation and spite, occasioned by his being thrust off the solajo in the presence of his mistress, he had written the words. Therefore the Council debated thereon. And the Council took his youth into consideration, and that he was a lover; and therefore they adjudged that he should be kept in close confinement during two months, and that afterwards he should be banished from Venice and the state during one year. In consequence of this merciful sentence the duke became exceedingly wrath, it appearing to him that the Council had not acted in such a manner as was required by the respect due to his ducal dignity; and he said that they ought to have condemned Ser Michele to be hanged by the neck, or at least to be banished for life.

Now it was said that my lord duke Marino was to have his head cut off. And as it is necessary when any effect is to be brought about that the cause of such effect must happen, it therefore came to pass that on the very day after sentence had been pronounced on Ser Michele Steno, being the first day of Lent, a gentleman of the house of Barbaro, a choicest gentleman, went to the arsenal, and required certain things of the masters of the galleys. This he did in the presence of the admiral of the arsenal, and he, hearing the request, answered,—No, it cannot be done. High words arose between the gentleman and the admiral, and the gentleman struck him with his fist just above the eye; and as he happened to have a ring on his finger, the ring cut the admiral and drew blood. The admiral, all bruised and bloody, ran straight to the duke to complain, and with the intent of praying him to inflict some heavy punishment upon the gentleman of Cà Barbaro.—"What wouldst thou have me to do for thee?" answered the duke:—"think upon the shameful gift which hath been written concerning me! and think on the manner in which they have punished that ribald Michele Steno, who wrote it; and see how the Council of Forty respect our person."—"Upon this the admiral answered,—"My lord duke, if you would wish to make yourself a prince, and to cut all these cowardly gentlemen to pieces, I have the heart, if you do but help me, to make you prince of all this state; and then you may punish them all."—Hearing this, the duke said,—"Was such a matter brought about?"—and so they discoursed thereon.

The duke called for his nephew, Ser Bertuccio Faliero, who lived with him in the palace, and they counselled about this plot. And without leaving the place, they sent for Philip Calandaro, a citizen of great repute, and for Bertuccio Isello, who was exceedingly wily and cunning. These taking counsel amongst themselves, they agreed to call in some others; and so, for several nights successively, they met with the duke at home in his palace. And the following men were called in secretly, to wit:—Niccolo Fagnuolo, Giovanni da Corfu, Stefano Fagnolo, Niccolo dalle Bende, Niccolo Biondo, and Stefano Trivisano.—It was concerted that sixteen or seventeen leaders should be stationed in various parts of the city, each being at the head of forty men, armed and prepared; but the followers were not to know their destination. On the appointed day they were to make affrays amongst themselves here and there, in order that the duke might have a pretence for tolling the bells of San Marco; these bells are never rung but by the order of the duke. And at the sound of the bells, these sixteen or seventeen, with their followers, were to come to San Marco, through the streets which open upon the Piazza. And when the noble and leading citizens should come into the Piazza, to know the cause of the riot, then the conspirators were to cut them in pieces; and this work being finished, my lord Marino Faliero, the duke, was to be proclaimed the lord of Venice. Things having been thus settled, they agreed to fulfill their intent on Wednesday, the 16th day of April, in the year 1355. So covertly did they plot, that no one ever dreamt of their machinations.

But the Lord, who hath always helped this most glorious city, and who, loving its righteousness and holiness, hath never forsaken it, inspired one Beltramo Bergamasco to be the cause of bringing the plot to light, in the following manner.—This Beltramo, who belonged to Ser Niccolo Lionti of Santo Stefano, had heard a word or two of what was to take place; and so, in the before-mentioned month of April, he went to the house of the aforesaid Ser Niccolo Lionti, and told him all the particulars of the plot. Ser Niccolo, when he heard all these things, was struck dead, as it were, with affright. He heard all the particulars; and Beltramo prayed him to keep it all secret; and if he told Ser Niccolo, it was in order that Ser Niccolo might stop at home on the 16th of April, and thus save his life. Beltramo was going, but Ser Niccolo ordered his servants to lay hands upon him, and lock him up. Ser Niccolo then went to the house of Messer Giovanni Gradignio Nasoli, who afterwards became duke, and who also lived at Santo Stefano, and told him all. The matter seemed to him to be of the very greatest importance, as indeed it was; and they two went to the house of Ser Marco Cornaro, who lived at San Felice; and having spoken with him, they all three then determined to go back to the house of Ser Niccolo Lionti, to examine the said Beltramo; and having questioned him, and heard all that he had to say, they translated, and append it as a note to the next edition. You will, perhaps, be pleased to see that my conceptions of his character were correct; though I regret not having met with the extract before. You will perceive that he himself said exactly what he is made to say about the Bishop of Treviso. You will see also that he spoke little, and those only words of rage and disdain, AFTER his arrest; which is the case in the play, except when he breaks out at the close of act fifth. But his speech to the conspirators is better in the MS. than in the play. I wish I had met with it in them."

NOTES TO MARINO FALIERO.

to him in confinement. And then they all three went into the sacristy of San Salvatore, and sent their men to summon the councillors, the Avogadori, the Capit de' Dieci, and those of the Great Council.

When all were assembled, the whole story was told to them. They were struck dead, as it were, with affright. They determined to send for Beltramo. He was brought in before them. They examined him, and ascertained that the matter was true; and, although they were exceedingly troubled, yet they determined upon their measures. And they sent for the Capit de' Quaranta, the Signori di Notte, the Capit de' Bestiari, and the Cinque della Pace; and they were ordered to accompany them to their men other good men and true, who were to proceed to the houses of the ringleaders of the conspiracy, and secure them. And they secured the foreman of the arsenal, in order that the conspirators might not do mischief. Towards daylight they assembled in the palace. When they were assembled in the palace, they caused the gates of the quadrangle of the palace to be shut. And they sent to the keeper of the bell-tower, and forbade the tolling of the bells. All this was carried into effect. The before-mentioned conspirators were secured, and they were brought to the palace; and, as the Council of Ten saw that the duke was in the plot, they resolved that twenty of the leading men of the state should be associated to them, for the purpose of consultation and deliberation, but that they should not be allowed to ballot.

The councillors were the following:—Ser Giovanni Mocenigo, of the Bestiario of San Marco; Ser Almorio Veniero of Santa Marina, of the Bestiario of Castello; Ser Tomaso Fialdro, of the Bestiario of Canaregio; Ser Giovanni Sanudo, of the Bestiario of Santa Croce; Ser Pietro Trivissano, of the Bestiario of San Paolo; Ser Pantalone Barbo il Grando, of the Bestiario of Omoduro. The Avogadori of the Commonwealth were Zuffredo Morosini and Ser Orio Pasqualigo; and these did not ballot. Those of the Council of Ten were Ser Giovanni Marcello, Ser Tomaso Sanudo, and Ser Michielotto Dolino, the heads of the aforesaid Council of Ten. Ser Luca da Sere and Ser Pietro da Mosta, inquisitors of the aforesaid Council. And Ser Marco Polani, Ser Marino Veniero, Ser Lando Lombardo, and Ser Nicoletto Trivissano, of Sant' Angelo.

Late in the night, just before the dawning, they chose a junta of twenty noblemen of Venice from amongst the wisest, and the worthiest, and the oldest. They were to give counsel, but not to ballot. And they would not admit any one of the family of the duke. And the following were the members of the junta of twenty:—Ser Marco Giustiniani, procurators, Ser Andrea Erizzo, procurator, Ser Leonardo Giustiniani, procurators, Ser Andrea Contarini, Ser Simone Dandolo, Ser Niccolò Volpe, Ser Giovanni Loredano, Ser Marco Diedo, Ser Giovanni Gradengo, Ser Andrea Cornaro, cavaliers, Ser Marco Soranzo, Ser Rinaldi da Mosto, Ser Gazzo Marcello, Ser Marino Morosini, Ser Stefano Balegno, Ser Niccolò Lion, Ser Filippo Orio, Ser Marco Trivissano, Ser Jacopo Bragadino, Ser Giovanni Foscarini.

These twenty were accordingly called in to the Council of Ten; and they sent for my lord Marino Faliero the duke; and my lord Marino was then consorting in the palace with people of great estate, gentlemen, and other good men, none of whom knew yet how the fact stood.

At the same time Bertuccio Isarello, who, as one of the ringleaders, was to head the conspirators in Santa Croce, was arrested and bound, and brought before the Council. Zanolo dal Brin, Nicoletto di Ross, Nicoletto Alberto, and the guardias, were also taken, together with several women, and people of various ranks. These were examined, and the truth of the plot was ascertained. On the 18th of April judgment was given in the Council of Ten, that Filippo Calandaro and Bertuccio Isarello should be hanged upon the red pillars of the balcony of the palace, from which the duke is wont to look at the bull hunt; and they were hanged with garbs in their mouths.

The next day the following were condemned:—Niccolò Zucoletto, Nicoletto Biondo, Nicoletto Doro, Marco Gluda, Jacomello Dagolino, Nicoletto Fidele, the son of Filippo Calandaro, Marco Torello, called Isarello, Stefano Trivissano, the money changer of Santa Margherita, and Antonio dalle Bende. These were all taken at Chioma, for they were endeavoring to escape. Afterwards, by virtue of the sentence which was passed upon them in the Council of Ten, they were hanged on successive days; some singly and some in couples, upon the columns of the palace, beginning from the red columns, and so going onwards towards the canal. And other prisoners were discharged, because, although they had been involved in the conspiracy, yet they had not assisted in it; for they were given to understand by some of the heads of the plot, that they were to come armed and prepared for the service of the state, and in order to secure certain criminals; and they knew nothing else. Nicoletto Alberto, the guardias, and Bartolommeo Ciricolo and his son, and several others, who were not guilty, were discharged.

On Friday, the 18th day of April, judgment was also given in the aforesaid Council of Ten, that my lord Marino Faliero, the duke, should have his head cut off; and that the execution should be done on the landing-place of the stone staircase, where the duke takes their oath when they first enter the palace. On the following day, the 17th of April, the doors of the palace being shut, the duke had his head cut off, about the hour of noon. And the cap of estate was taken from the duke's head before he came down stairs. When the execution was over, it is said that one of the Council of Ten went to the columns of the palace over against the place of Saint Mark, and that he showed the bloody sword unto the people, crying out with a loud voice:—"The terrible doom hath fallen upon the traitor!"—and the doors were opened, and the people all rushed in, to see the corpse of the duke, who had been beheaded.

It must be known that Ser Giovanni Sanudo, the councillor, was not present when the aforesaid sentence was pronounced; because he was unwell, and remained at home. So that only fourteen balloted; that is to say, five councillors, and nine of the Council of Ten. And it was adjudged, that all the lands and chattels of the duke, as well as of the other traitors, should be forfeited to the state. And, as a grace to the duke, it was resolved in the Council of Ten that he should be allowed to dispose of two thousand ducats out of his own property. And it was resolved, that all the councillors and all the Avogadori of the Commonwealth, those of the Council of Ten, and the members of the junta, who had assisted in passing sentence on the duke and the other traitors, should have the privilege of carrying arms both by day and by night in Venice, and from Grado to Canavere. And they were also to be allowed two footmen carrying arms, the aforesaid footmen living and boarding with them in their own houses. And he who did not keep two footmen might transfer the privilege to his son or his brothers, but only to two. Permission of carrying arms was also granted to the fouraries of the chancery, that is to say, of the Supreme Court, who took the depositions; and they were, Amedeo, Nicoletto di Lorio, Stefano, and Pietro de Compostelli, the secretaries of the Signori di Notte.

After the traitors had been hanged, and the duke had had his head cut off, the state remained in great tranquillity and peace. And, as I have read in a chronicle, the corpse of the duke was removed in a barge, with eight torches, to his tomb in the church of San Giovanni a Paolo, where it was buried. The tomb is now in that aisle in the middle of the little church of Santa Maria della Pace, which was built by Bishop Gabriel of Bergamo. It is a coffin of stone, with these words inscribed thereon: "Hic jacet Dominus Marinus Faliero Dux."—And they did not paint his portrait in the hall of the Great Council; but in the place where it ought to have been, you see these words: "Hic et iuxta Marini Faliero, descripti pro criminibus."—And it is thought that his house was granted to the church of Sant' Apostolo; it was that great one near the bridge. Yet this could not be the case, or else the family bought it back from the church; for it still belongs to the family. I must not refrain from noting that some wished to write the following words in the place where his portrait ought to have been, as aforesaid:—"Marinus Faliero Dux, tenentis me capite. Ponat hic, descriptus pro criminibus."—Others, also, indited a couplet, worthy of being inscribed upon his tomb.

"Dux Venetum facit Arto, patriamque proderat tentana, Sospira, datus, census perdidit, atque cognit."

NOTE 44.

See page 154.

PETRARCH ON THE CONSPIRACY OF MARINO FALIERO.*

The Italian translation from the Latin epistles of Petrarch proves—let it, That Marino Faliero was a personal friend of

* Had a copy taken of an extract from Petrarch's Letters, with

NOTES TO THE TWO FOSCARI.

Petrarch's; "antica domestichezza," old intimacy, is the phrase of the poet. Idly, That Petrarch thought that he had more courage than conduct, "più di coraggio che di senno." Idly, That there was some jealousy on the part of Petrarch; for he says that Marino Fallerio was treating of the peace which he himself had "vainly attempted to conclude." Idly, That the honor of the dukedom was conferred upon him, which he neither sought nor expected, "che ad chiedeva né aspettava," and which had never been granted to any other in like circumstances, "ché che non si concedette a nessun altro," a proof of the high esteem in which he must have been held. Idly, That he had a reputation for wisdom, only forfeited by the last enterprise of his life, "si usurpò per tanti anni una falsa fama di sapienza"—"he had usurped for so many years a false fame of wisdom," rather a difficult task, I should think. People are generally found out before eighty years of age, at least in a republic.—From these, and the other historical notes which I have collected, it may be inferred that Marino Fallerio possessed many of the qualities, but not the success, of a hero; and that his passions were too violent. The palsy and ignorant account of Dr. Moore falls to the ground. Petrarch says, "that there had been no greater event in his time" (our times literally, "nostri tempi," in Italy). He also differs from the historians in saying that Fallerio was "on the banks of the Rhone," instead of at Rome, when elected; the other accounts say that the deputations of the Venetian senate met him at Ravenna. How this may have been, it is not for me to decide, and is of no great importance. Had the man succeeded, he would have changed the face of Venice, and perhaps of Italy. As it is, what are they both?

NOTE 43.

See page 184.

VENETIAN SOCIETY AND MANNERS.

*"Vice without splendor, sin without relief/
Even from the glow of love to smooth it o'er,
But in its stead, coarse lusts of habitude," &c.*

"To these attacks so frequently pointed by the government against the clergy,—to the continual struggles between the different constituted bodies,—to these enterprises carried on by the mass of the nobles against the depositaries of power,—to all these projects of innovation, which always ended by a stroke of state policy; we must add a cause not less fitted to spread contempt for ancient doctrines; this was the excess of corruption.

"That freedom of manners, which had been long boasted of as the principal charm of Venetian society, had degenerated into scandalous licentiousness; the tie of marriage was less sacred in that Catholic country than among those nations where the laws and religion admit of its being dissolved. Because they could not break the contract, they feigned that it had not existed; and the ground of nullity, immediately alleged by the married pair, was admitted with equal facility by priests and magistrates, alike corrupt. These divorces, veiled under another name, became so frequent, that the most important act of civil society was discovered to be amenable to a tribunal of exceptions; and to restrain the open scandal of such proceedings became the office of the police. In 1738, the Council of Ten decreed that every woman who should sue for a dissolution of her marriage should be compelled to await the decision of the judges in some convent, to be named by the court.² Soon afterwards the same Council summoned all causes of that nature before itself.³ This infringement on ecclesiastical jurisdiction having occasioned some remonstrance from Rome, the Council retained only the right of rejecting the petition of the married persons, and consented to refer such causes to the holy office as it should not previously have rejected.⁴

"There was a moment in which, doubtless, the destruction of private fortunes, the ruin of youth, the domestic discord occasioned by these abuses, determined the government to depart from its established maxims concerning the freedom of manners allowed the subject. All the courtisans were banished from Venice; but their absence was not enough to reclaim and bring back good morals to a whole people brought up in the most scandalous licentiousness. Depravity reached the very bosoms of private families, and even into the cloister; and they found themselves obliged to recall, and even to indemnify, women who sometimes gained possession of the ruin of men whose fortunes might have rendered them dangerous. Since that time licentiousness has gone on increasing; and we have seen mothers not only selling the innocence of their daughters, but selling it by a contract, authenticated by the signature of a public officer, and the performance of which was secured by the protection of the laws.

"The parlor of the courtisans of noble ladies, and the bosom of the courtisans, though the police carefully kept up a number of spies about them, were the only assemblies for society in Venice; and in these two places, so different from each other, there was equal freedom. Music, collations, gallantry, were not more forbidden in the parlors than at the casinos. There were a number of casinos for the purpose of public assemblies, where gaming was the principal pursuit of the company. It was a strange sight to see persons of either sex masked, or, grave in their magnificent robes, round a table, invoking chance, and giving way at one instant to the agonies of despair, and at the next to the illusions of hope, and that without uttering a single word.

"The rich had private casinos, but they lived segregate in them; and the wives whom they abandoned found compensation in the liberty they enjoyed. The corruption of morals had deprived them of their empire. We have just reviewed the whole history of Venice, and we have not once seen them exercise the slightest influence."—DARU: Hist. de la République de Venise, vol. v., p. 68.

The Two Foscari.

NOTE 46.

See page 176.

The best English account of the incidents on which this play is founded is given in the second volume of the Reverend Mr. Smalley's "Sketches of Venetian History," and is as follows:

"The reign of Francesco Foscari had now been prolonged to the unusual period of thirty-four years, and these years were marked by almost continual warfare; during which, however, the courage, the firmness, and the sagacity of the illustrious doge had won four rich provinces for his country, and increased her glory not less than her dominion. Ardent, enterprising, and ambitious of the glory of conquest, it was not without much opposition that Foscari had obtained the dogship; and he soon discovered that the throne which he had coveted with so great earnestness was far from being a seat of repose. Accordingly, at the peace of Ferrara, which in 1430 succeeded a calamitous war, foreseeing the approach of fresh and still greater troubles, and wearied by the factions which ascribed all disasters to the prince, he tendered his abdication to the senate, and was refused. A like offer was renewed by him when nine years' further experience of sovereignty had confirmed his former estimate of its cares; and the Council, on this second occasion, much more from adherence to existing institutions than from any attachment to the person of the doge, accompanied their negative with the exaction of an oath that he would retain his burdensome dignity for life. Too early, alas! was he to be taught that life, on such conditions, was the heaviest of curses. Three out of his four sons were already dead; to Giacompo, the survivor, he looked for the continuation of his name and the support of his declining age; and, from that youth's intermarriage with the illustrious house of Contarini, and the popular joy with which his nuptials were celebrated, the doge drew favorable auspices for future happiness. Four years, however, had scarcely elapsed from the conclusion of reference to the conspiracy of the doge Marino Fallerio, containing the poet's opinion of the matter."—Byron Diary, Feb. 11, 1831.

² Ibid.; despatch of 3d September, 1766.

³ The decrees for their recall designated them as senatori demeriti (meritorious); a fund and some houses, called Casa senatore, were assigned to them: hence the opprobrious appellation of Casa senatore.

⁴ Mayer, Description of Venice, vol. II., and M. Arochambola, Picture of Italy, vol. I., ch. 2.

² Correspondence of M. Schlicht, French chargé d'affaires; despatch of 24th August, 1788.

³ Correspondence of M. Schlicht; despatch of 21st August.

NOTES TO THE TWO FOSCARI.

sat well-omened marriage, when a series of calamities began, from which death alone was to relieve either the son or the yet more wretched father. In 1448, Giacoopo Foscari was announced to the Ten as having received presents from foreign potentates, and especially from Filippo-Marie Visconti, he offence, according to the law, was one of the most heinous which a noble could commit. Even if Giacoopo were guiltless of infringing that law, it was not easy to establish innocence before a Venetian tribunal. Under the eyes of his own father, compelled to preside at the unnatural examination, a confession was extorted from the prisoner, on the rack; and, from the lips of that father, he received the sentence which enshined him for life to Napoli di Romania. On his passage, severe illness delayed him at Trieste; and, at the especial request of the doge, a less remote district was assigned for his imprisonment: he was permitted to reside at Treviso, and his wife was allowed to participate in his exile.

"It was in the commencement of the winter of 1450, while Giacoopo Foscari rested, in comparative tranquillity, within the bounds to which he was restricted, that an assassination occurred in the streets of Venice. Hermolao Donato, a chief of the Ten, was murdered on his return from a sitting of that Council, at his own door, by unknown hands. The magnitude of the offence and the violation of the high dignity of the Ten demanded a victim; and the coadjutors of the slain magistrate caught with eager grasp at the slightest clue which suspicion could afford. A domestic in the service of Giacoopo Foscari had been seen in Venice on the evening of the murder; and on the following morning, when met in a boat off Mestre by a chief of the Ten, and asked, 'What news?' he had answered by reporting the assassination, several hours before it was generally known. It might seem that such frankness of itself disproved all participation in the crime; for the author of it was not likely thus unseasonably and prematurely to disclose his criminality. But the Ten thought differently, and notions which to others bore conviction of innocence, to them avowed strongly of guilt. The servant was arrested, examined, and barbarously tortured; not even the eightfold application of the strapado failed to elicit one syllable which might justify condemnation. That Giacoopo Foscari had experienced the severity of the Council's judgment, and that its jealous watchfulness was daily imposing some new restraint upon his father's authority, powerfully operated to convince the Ten that they must themselves return the objects of his deadly enmity. Who else, they said, could be more likely to arm the hand of an assassin against a chief of the Ten, than one whom the Ten have visited with punishment? On this unjust and unsupported surmise, the young Foscari was recalled from Treviso, placed on the rack which his servant had just vacated, tortured again in his father's presence, and not absolved even after he repeatedly persisted in denial unto the end.

"The wrongs however, which Giacoopo Foscari endured had by no means chilled the passionate love with which he continued to regard his ungrateful country. He was now excluded from all communication with his family, torn from the wife of his affections, debarred from the society of his children, hopeless of again embracing those parents who had already far outstripped the natural term of human existence; and to his imagination, for ever centring itself upon the single desire of return, life presented no other object deserving pursuit; till, for the attainment of this wish, life itself at length appeared to be scarcely more than an adequate sacrifice. Preyed upon by this fever of the heart, after six years' unavailing suit for a remission of punishment, in the summer of 1456 he addressed a letter to the Duke of Milan, imploring his good offices with the senate. That letter, purposely left open in a place obvious to the spies by whom, even in his exile, he was surrounded, and afterwards intrusted to an equally treacherous hand for delivery to Biforma, was conveyed, as the writer intended, to the Council of Ten; and the result, which equally fulfilled his expectation, was a hasty summons to Venice to answer for the heavy crime of soliciting foreign intervention with his native government.

"For a third time Francesco Foscari listened to the accusation of his son; for the first time he heard him openly avow the charge of his accusers, and calmly state that his offence, such as it was, had been committed deliberately and aforethought, with the sole object of detection, in order that he might be brought back, even as a malefactor, to Venice. This prompt and voluntary declaration, however, was not sufficient to decide the nice hesitation of his judges. Guilt, they said, might be too easily admitted as well as too pertinaciously denied; and the same process therefore by which, at other times, confession was wrested from the hardened criminal might now compel a too fickle self-accuser to retract his acknowledgment. The father again looked on while his son was raised on the accursed cord no less than thirty times, in order that, under his agony, he might be induced to utter a lying declaration of innocence. But this cruelty was exercised in vain; and, when nature gave way, the sufferer was carried to the apartments of the doge, torn, bleeding, senseless, and dislocated, but firm in his original purpose. Nor had his persecutors relaxed in theirs; they renewed his sentence of exile, and added that its first year should be passed in prison. Before he embarked, one interview was permitted with his family. The doge, as usual, perhaps unconscious of the pathos of his simplicity, has narrated, was an aged and decrepit man, who walked with the support of a crutch; and when he came into the chamber, he spoke with great firmness, so that it might seem it was not his son whom he was addressing, but it was his son—his only son. 'Go, Giacoopo,' was his reply, when prayed for the last time to solicit mercy: 'Go, Giacoopo, submit to the will of your country, and seek nothing further.' This effort of self-restraint was beyond the powers, not of the old man's enduring spirit, but of his exhausted frame, and when he retired, he swooned in the arms of his attendants. Giacoopo reached his Candian prison, and was shortly afterwards released by death.

"Francesco Foscari, far less happy in his survival, continued to live on, but it was in sorrow and feebleness, which prevented attention to the duties of his high office: he remained secluded in his chamber, never went abroad, and absented himself even from the sittings of the Council. No practical inconvenience could result from this want of activity in the chief magistrate; for the constitution sufficiently provided against any accidental suspension of his personal functions, and his place in Council, and on state occasions, was supplied by an authorised deputy. Some indulgence, moreover, might be thought due to the extreme age and domestic griefs of Foscari; since they appeared to promise that any favor which might be granted would be claimed but for a short period. But yet further trials were in store. Giacoopo Loredano, who in 1467 was appointed one of the chiefs of the Ten, belonged to a family between which and that of Foscari, an hereditary feud had long existed. His uncle Pietro, after gaining high distinction in active service, as admiral of Venice, on his return to the capital headed the political faction which opposed the warlike projects of the doge; divided applause with him by his eloquence in the councils; and so far extended his influence as frequently to obtain majorities in their divisions. In an evil moment of impatience, Foscari once publicly avowed in the senate, that so long as Pietro Loredano lived he should never feel himself really to be doge. Not long afterwards, the admiral, engaged as provviditore with one of the armies opposed to Filippo-Marie, died suddenly at a military banquet given during a short suspension of arms; and the evil-omened words of Foscari were connected with his decease. It was remarked, also, that his brother Marco Loredano, one of the Avogadori, died, in a somewhat similar manner, while engaged in instituting a legal process against a son-in-law of the doge, for peaculation upon the state. The foul rumors partially excited by these untoward coincidences, for they appear in truth to have been no more, met with little acquiescence, and were rejected or forgotten except by a sordid bosom. Giacoopo, the son of one, the nephew of the other, deceased Loredano, gave full credit to the accusation, inscribed on his father's tomb at Santa Elena that he died by poison, bound himself by a solemn vow to the most deadly and unrelenting pursuit of revenge, and fulfilled that vow to the uttermost.

"During the lifetime of Pietro Loredano, Foscari, willing to terminate the feud by a domestic alliance, had tendered the hand of his daughter to one of his rival's sons. The youth saw his proffered bride, openly expressed dislike of her person, and rejected her with marked discourtesy; so that, in the quarrel thus heightened, Foscari might now conceive himself to be the most injured party. Not much was the impression of Giacoopo Loredano's year after year he grimly awaited the season most fitted for his unbending purpose; and it arrived at length when he found himself in authority among the Ten. Relying upon the ascendancy belonging to that high station, he haughtily a proposal for the deposition of the aged doge, which was at first, however, received with coldness; for those who had twice before refused a voluntary abdication, shrink from the strange contradiction of now demanding one on compulsion. A junta was required to assist in their deliberations, and among the assessors elected by the Great Council, in complete ignorance of the purpose

NOTES TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

[illegible]

It was to the dignity alone that Pizarro was obedient; by the problem he had always been involved, and strange indeed would it have been had he now failed to execute the summary. Not even the rage of the people of Mexico were lulled by their tyrant; and whatever pity they might have felt for the deposed monarch, the conqueror and humiliated prince, all expression of it was eliminated by the decree of the Spaniard, forbidding any mention of his name, and announcing death as a penalty to disobedience. On the fifth day after Pizarro's deposition, Ponce Melipilco was executed alive. The deposed prince heard the announcement of his death with the howl of the canine, as surprised, and cried, and died, but ruptured a blood-vessel in the epipharynx, and was stoned in a few hours.

[illegible]

Another vein of goodnature, our author writes, "although saved in order to waste it. He annually, however, then devoted frequently to his family and amusements—sometimes in poetry, sometimes in nature; and, while gazing up, as I claim on the tower of mind, he turned ever to remember an old Dr. Johnson's saying, that 'a great number of men, who are great in their own way, are not less than a hundred times mistaken.' In truth, it is this consideration only that induces me to give Lord Byron's poems a place in our service, beside our duties to account him that he do Southey's shambles poetry, and turn his talents, which are considerable, and his opportunities

Which are great, we say, but have actually to measure him that the more striking of the hand syllable, even when compensated by the presence of a certain number of Spondee; although (which does not always happen) these feet should come regularly, — and have been all counted accurately upon the Sungen, — to not the whole art of poetry. We would extend time to believe that a certain portion of freedom, — and that is to be in the choice of the feet, — is to be that a verse in the present day, to be read, must contain at least one thought, either in a little degree different from the ideas of former writers, or differently expressed. We put it to his reader, whether there is any thing so deserving the name of poetry in verse like the following, written in Latin: —

— Sic enim, if a youth of stigmata could say any thing so uninteresting to his country, a youth of stigmata should publish it: —

"Shades of heroes, farewell! your descendant, departing
From the seat of his ancestors, bids you adieu!
Abroad or at home, your remembrance imparting
New courage, he'll think upon glory and you.

"Though a tear dim his eye at this sad separation,
 'T is nature, not fear, that excites his regret:
 Far distant he goes, with the same emulation;
 The fame of his fathers he ne'er can forget.

"That fame, and that memory, still will he cherish;
He vows that he ne'er will disgrace your renown;
Like you will he live, or like you will he perish;
When decay'd, may he mingle his dust with your own."

Now, we positively do assert that there is nothing better than these stanzas in the whole compass of the noble minor's volume.

Lord Byron should also have a care of attempting what the greatest poets have done before him, for comparisons (as he must have had occasion to see at his writing-master's) are odious. Gray's "Ode on Eton College" should really have kept out the ten hobbling stanzas "On a distant View of the Village and School of Harrow."

Hours of Idleness.

NOTE 47

File DC04 229.

ARTICLE FROM THE BIRMINGHAM REVIEW FOR
JANUARY, 1868.

Hours of Idleness; a Series of Poems, original and translated.
By George Gordon, Lord Byron, a Minor. 8vo, pp. 300.
Newark, 1807.

The poetry of this young lord belongs to the class which neither gods nor men are said to permit. Indeed, we do not hesitate to have seen a quantity of verse with so few deviations in either direction from that exact standard. His effusions are spread over a dead flat, and can no more get above or below the level, than if they were so much stagnant water.

NOTES TO OCCASIONAL PIECES.

"Where fancy yet joys to retruce the resemblance
Of comrades, in friendship and mischief allied,
How welcome to me your ne'er-fading remembrance,
Which rests in the bosom, though hope is denied."

In like manner the exquisite lines of Mr. Rogers, "On a Tear," might have warned the noble author of those promises, and spared us a whole dozen such stanzas as the following:—

"Mild Charity's glow, to us mortals below,
Shows the soul from barbarity clear;
Compassion will melt where this virtue is felt,
And its dew is diffused in a Tear."

"The man doom'd to sail with the blast of the gale,
Through billows Atlantic to steer,
As he bends o'er the wave which may soon be his grave,
The green sparkles bright with a Tear."

And so of instances in which former poets have failed. Thus we do not think Lord Byron was made for translating, during his sojourn, "Adrian's Address to his Soul." If our readers succeeded so indifferently in the attempt. If our readers, however, are of another opinion, they may look at it:—

"Ah! gentle, fleeting, wavering sprite,
Friend and associate of this clay,
To what unknown region borne
Wilt thou now wing thy distant flight?
No more with wretched humor gay,
But pallid, obscure, and forlorn."

However, be this as it may, we fear his translations and imitations are great favorites with Lord Byron. We have them of all kinds, from Anacreon to Ovid; and, viewing them as school exercises, they may pass. Only, why print them after they have had their day and served their turn? And why call the thing in p. 79 (see p. 237) a translation, where two words (deus huius) of the original are expanded into four lines, and the other thing in p. 81 (see ibid.), where perpetuus est spiritus is rendered by means of six hobbling verses? As to his Ovidian poetry, we are not very good judges; but, in truth, so moderately skilled in that species of composition that we should, in all probability, be criticising some bit of the genuine Macpherson (itself, were we to express our opinion of Lord Byron's rhapsodies. If, then, the following beginning of a "Song of Bards" is by his lordship, we venture to object to it, as far as we can comprehend it:—"What form rises on the roar of clouds? whose dark ghost gleams on the red stream of tempests? His voice rolls on the thunder: 'tis Oria, the brown chief of Oithona. He was," &c. After detaining this "brown chief" some time, the bard concludes by giving him their advice to "raise his fair locks;" then to "spread them on the arch of the rainbow;" and to "smile through the tears of the storm." Of this kind of thing there are no less than nine pages; and we can so far venture an opinion in their favor, that they look very like Macpherson; and we are positive that they are pretty nearly as stupid and tiresome.

It is a sort of privilege of poets to be egotists; but they should "use it as not abusing it;" and particularly one who piques himself (though indeed at the ripe age of nineteen) on being "an infant bard" ("The artist Helicon I boast is youth") should either not know, or should seem not to know, so much about his own ancestry. Besides a poem above cited, on the family seat of the Byrons, we have another of eleven pages, on the self-same subject, introduced with an apology, "he certainly had no intention of inserting it," but really "the particular request of some friends," &c., &c. It concludes with five stanzas on himself, "the last and youngest of a noble line." There is a good deal also about his maternal ancestors, in a poem on Lachin y Cair, a mountain where he spent part of his youth, and might have learnt that phiboch is not a bagpipe, any more than dust means a saddle.

* The Monthly Reviewers, in these days the next in circulation to the Edinburgh, gave a much more favorable notice of the "Hours of Idleness." "These compositions," said they, "are generally of a plaintive or an amatory cast, with an occasional mixture of satire; and they display both ease and strength—both pathos and fire. It will be expected that marks of juvenility and of haste should be discovered in these productions; and we seriously advise our young bard to fulfill with administrative perseverance the duties of revision and correction. We discern in Lord Byron a degree of mental power, and a turn of mental disposition, which render us sollicitous

As the author has dedicated so large a part of his volumes to immortalise his employments at school and college, we cannot possibly dissent it without presenting the reader with a specimen of these ingenious effusions. In an ode with a Greek motto, called Granta, we have the following magnificent stanzas:—

"There, in apartments small and damp,
The candidate for college prizes
Sits poring by the midnight lamp,
Goes late to bed, yet early rises."

"Who reads false quantities in Seale,
Or puzzles o'er the deep triangle,
Deprived of many a wholesome meal,
In barbarous Latin doom'd to wrangle!"

"Renouncing every pleasing page,
From authors of historic use,
Preferring to the letter'd sage
The square of the hypothenuse."

"Still harmless are these occupations,
That hurt none but the hapless student,
Compared with other recreations,
Which bring together the imprudent."

We are sorry to hear so bad an account of the college palinode as is contained in the following Attic stanzas:—

"Our choir would scarcely be excused,
Even as a band of raw beginners;
All mercy now must be refused
To such a set of creaking sinners."

"If David, when his toils were ended,
Had heard these blockheads sing before him,
To us his palms had ne'er descended:
In furious mood he would have tore 'em!"

But, whatever judgment may be passed on the poems of this noble minor, it seems we must take them as we find them, and be content; for they are the last we shall ever have from him. He is at best, he says, but an intruder into the groves of Parnassus; he never lived in a garret, like thorough-bred poets; and "though he once roved a careless mountaineer in the Highlands of Scotland," he has not of late enjoyed this advantage. Moreover, he expects no profit from his publication; and, whether it succeeds or not, "it is highly improbable, from his situation and pursuits hereafter," that he should again condescend to become an author. Therefore, let us take what we can get, and be thankful. What right have we poor devils to be nice? We are well off to have got so much from a man of this lord's station, who does not live in a garret, but "has the way" of Newstead Abbey. Again we may, let us be thankful; and, with honest Sancho, bid God bless the giver, nor look the gift horse in the mouth.*

Occasional Pieces.

NOTE 49.

See page 430.

REMARKS ON THE ROMANCE OF MODERN GREEK LANGUAGE.

These "Remarks" were written in the spring of 1811, while Lord Byron was residing in the Capuchin Convent at Athens.

Amongst an unenlightened people, obliged to have recourse to foreign presses even for their books of religion, it is less to that both should be well cultivated and wisely directed, in his career of life. He has received talents, and is accountable for the use of them. We trust that he will render them beneficial to man, and a source of real gratification to himself in declining age. Then may he properly exclaim with the Roman orator, "non libet deplorare vitam, quod multi, et si docti, sæpe fecerunt; neque me vitæ penites: quoniam ita vixi, ut non frustra me natum existimem." Lord Byron repaid the Edinburgh critique with a satire—and became himself a Monthly Reviewer.

NOTES TO OCCASIONAL PIECES.

be wondered at that we find so few publications on general subjects, than that we find any at all. The whole number of the Greeks, scattered up and down the Turkish empire and elsewhere, may amount, at most, to three millions; and yet, for so scanty a number, it is impossible to discover any nation with so great a proportion of books and their authors, as the Greeks of the present century. "Ay, but," say the generous advocates of oppression, who, while they assert the ignorance of the Greeks, wish to prevent them from dispelling it, "ay, but these are mostly, if not all, ecclesiastical tracts, and consequently good for nothing." Well, and pray what else can they write about? It is pleasant enough to hear a Frank, particularly an Englishman, who may abuse the government of his own country, or a Frenchman, who may abuse every government except his own, and who may range at will over every philosophical, religious, scientific, ascetical, or moral subject, sneering at the Greek legends. A Greek must not write on politics, and cannot touch on science for want of instruction: if he doubts, he is excommunicated and damned; therefore his countrymen are not poisoned with modern philosophy; and as to morals, thanks to the Turks! there are no such things. What then is left him, if he has a turn for scribbling? Religion, and holy biography; and it is natural enough that those who have so little in this life should look to the next. It is no great wonder, then, that in a catalogue now before me of fifty-five Greek writers, many of whom were lately living, not above fifteen should have touched on anything but religion. The catalogue alluded to is contained in the twenty-sixth chapter of the fourth volume of Meletius's Ecclesiastical History. From this I subjoin an extract of those who have written on general subjects.

LIST OF ROMAN AUTHORS.*

Neophytus, diakonos (the deacon) of the Morea, has published an extensive grammar, and also some political regulations, which last were left unfinished at his death.

Prokopius, of Moscopolis (a town in Epirus), has written and published a catalogue of the learned Greeks.

Seraphin, of Paros, is the author of many works in the Turkish language, but Greek character; for the Christians of Carmania, who do not speak Rumanic, but read the character.

Eustathius Psalida, of Bucharest, a physician, made the tour of England for the purpose of study (epist. psalidæ); but though his name is enumerated, it is not stated that he has written any thing.

Kallinikos Torgerasus, patriarch of Constantinople: many poems of his are extant, and also prose tracts, and a catalogue of patriarchs since the last taking of Constantinople.

Anastasiu Macedon, of Naros, member of the royal academy of Warsaw. A church biographer.

Demetrius Pamperes, a Moscopolite, has written many works, particularly "A Commentary on Hesiod's Shield of Hercules," and two hundred tales (of what is not specified), and has published his correspondence with the celebrated George of Trebizond, his contemporary.

Meletius, a celebrated geographer; and author of the book from whence these notices are taken.

Dorotheus, of Mitylene, an Aristotelian philosopher: his Hellenic works are in great repute, and he is esteemed by the moderns (I quote the words of Meletius) παρὰ τὴν Οὐανολίαν καὶ Μεσσοπολίαν ἀπὸ τῶν ἑλλήνων. I add further, on the authority of a well-informed Greek, that he was so famous amongst his countrymen that they were accustomed to say, if Thyridides and Xenophon were wanting, he was capable of repairing the loss.

Martius Count Thourbours, of Cephalonia, professor of chemistry in the academy of Padua, and member of that academy, and those of Stockholm and Upsal. He has published, at Venice, an account of some marine animal, and a treatise on the properties of iron.

Marous, brother to the former, famous in mechanics. He removed to St. Petersburg the immense rock on which the statue of Peter the Great was fixed in 1789. See the dissertation which he published in Alexandria, 1777.

George Constantine has published a four-tongued lexicon.

* It is to be observed that the names given are not in chronological order, but consist of some selected at a venture from amongst those

George Ventote, a lexicon in French, Italian, and Rumanic.

There exist several other dictionaries in Latin and Rumanic, French, etc.; besides grammars, in every modern language except English.

Amongst the living authors the following are most celebrated:—

Athanasius Paros has written a treatise on rhetoric in Hellenic.

Christodoulos, an Arcadian, has published, in Vienna, some physical treatises in Hellenic.

Panagiotis Kodriska, an Athenian, the Rumanic translator of Fontenelle's "Plurality of Worlds" (a favorite work amongst the Greeks), is stated to be a teacher of the Hellenic and Arabic languages in Paris; in both of which he is an adept.

Athanasius, the Parian, author of a treatise on rhetoric.

Vicenzo Damodoc, of Cephalonia, has written "ele tē psuchaphagē," on logic and physics.

John Kamarases, a Hymanian, has translated into French Ocellus on the Universe. He is said to be an excellent Hellenic and Latin scholar.

Gregorio Demetrios published, in Vienna, a geographical work; he has also translated several Italian authors, and printed his versions at Venice.

Of Coray and Psalida some account has been already given.

SCENE FROM "L'HAVENTIL."

TRANSLATED FROM THE ITALIAN OF GOLDONI, BY SPENCER PLANTÉ.

Platidia, from the Door of the Hotel, and the others.

Pla. Oh, God! from the window it seemed that I heard my husband's voice. If he is here, I have arrived in time to make him ashamed. [A servant enters from the shop.] Boy, tell me, pray, who are in those chambers.

Serv. Three gentlemen: one, Signor Eugenio; the other, Signor Martio, the Neapolitan; and the third, my lord, the count Flaminio d'Ardeni.

Pla. Flaminio is not amongst these, unless he has changed his name.

Leander [within drinking]. Long live the good fortune of Signor Eugenio!

[The whole company. Long live, etc.] (Literally, Nà çà, nà çà. May he live.)

Pla. Without doubt that is my husband. [To the serv.] My good man, do me the favor to accompany me above to these gentlemen: I have some business.

Serv. At your commands, [Aside]. The old office of us waiters. [He goes out of the gaming-house.]

Ridolpho [to Victoria on another part of the stage]. Courage, courage, be of good cheer, it is nothing.

Victoria. I feel as if about to die. [Leaning on him as if fainting.]

[From the windows above all within are seen rising from table in confusion: Leander starts at the sight of Platidia, and appears by his gestures to threaten her life.]

Eugenio. No, stop—

Martio. Don't attempt—

Leander. Away, fly from hence!

Pla. Help! help! [Falls down the stairs, Leander attempting to follow with his sword; Eugenio hinders him.]

[Trapolo, with a plate of meat, leaps over the balcony from the window, and runs into the coffee-house.]

[Platidia runs out of the gaming-house, and takes shelter in the hotel.]

[Leander, sword in hand, opposite Eugenio, exclaims, Give way—I will enter that hotel.]

Eugenio. No, that shall never be. You are a scoundrel to your wife, and I will defend her to the last drop of my blood.

who flourished from the taking of Constantinople to the time of Meletius.

† These names are not taken from any publication.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

Leander. I will give you cause to repent this. [Meaning with his sword.]

Esperanza. I fear you not. [He attacks Leander, and makes him give back so much, that, finding the door of the dancing-girl's house open, Leander escapes through, and so finishes.]

Don Juan.

NOTE 40.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF "MY GRANDMOTHER'S REVIEW."

MY DEAR ROBERTS.

As a believer in the church of England—to say nothing of the state—I have been an occasional reader and great admirer of, though not a subscriber to, your Review, which is rather expensive. But I do not know that any part of its contents ever gave me much surprise till the eleventh article of your twenty-seventh number made its appearance. You have there most vigorously refuted a calumnious accusation of bribery and corruption, the credence of which in the public mind might not only have damaged your reputation as a clergyman and an editor, but, what would have been still worse, have injured the circulation of your journal; which, I regret to hear, is not so extensive as the "purity" (as you well observe) "of its, etc., etc., etc." and the present taste for propriety, would induce us to expect. The charge itself is of a solemn nature, and, although in verse, is couched in terms of such circumstantial gravity, as to induce a belief little short of that generally accorded to the thirty-nine articles, to which you so frankly subscribed on taking your degree. It is a charge the most revolting to the heart of man from its frequent occurrence; to the mind of a statesman, from its occasional truth; and to the soul of an editor, from its moral impossibility. You are charged then in the last line of one octave stanza, and the whole eight lines of the next, viz., 20th and 51th of the first canto of that "pestilent poem" Don Juan, with receiving, and still more foolishly acknowledging the receipt of, certain moneys, to eulogise the unknown author, who by this account must be known to you, if to nobody else. An impeachment of this nature so seriously made, there is but one way of refuting; and it is my firm persuasion, that whether you did or did not (and I believe that you did not receive the said moneys, of which I wish he had specified the sum, you are quite right in denying all knowledge of the transaction. If charges of this nefarious description are to go forth, sanctioned by all the solemnity of circumstance, and guaranteed by the veracity of verse (as Counsellor Phillips would say, what is to become of readers hitherto implicitly confident in the not less venacious press of our critical journals? what is to become of the editors? And, if the reviews fail, what is to become of the editors? It is common cause, and you have done well to sound the alarm. I myself, in my humble sphere, will be one of your cohorts. In the words of the tragedian, Liston, "I love a row," and you seem justly determined to make

It is barely possible, certainly improbable, that the writer might have been in jest; but this only aggravates his crime. A joke, the proverb says, "breaks no bones;" but it may break a bookeller's, or it may be the cause of bones being broken. The jest is but a bad one at the best for the author, and might have been a still worse one for you, if your copious contradiction did not certify to all whom it may concern your own indignant innocence, and the immaculate purity of the British Review. I do not doubt your word, my dear Roberts; yet I cannot help wishing that, in a case of such vital importance, it had assumed the more substantial shape of an affidavit sworn before the lord mayor Aldin, who readily receives any deposition; and doubtless would have brought it in some way as evidence of the designs of the Reformers to set fire to London, at the same time that he himself meditates the same good office towards the river Thames.

I am sure, my dear Roberts, that you will take these observations of mine in good part: they are written in a spirit of friendship not less pure than your own editorial integrity. I have always admired you; and, not knowing any shape which friendship and admiration can assume more agreeable and useful than that of good advice, I shall continue my incursions, mixed with here and there a monitorial hint as to what I conceive to be the line you should pursue, in case you should ever again be assailed with bribes, or accused of taking them. By the way, you don't say much about the poem, except that it is "flagitious." This is a pity—you should have cut it up; because, to say the truth, in not doing so, you somewhat assist any notions which the malignant might entertain on the score of the anonymous association which has made you so angry.

You say so bookeller "was willing to take upon himself the publication, though most of them disgrace themselves by selling it." Now, my dear friend, though we all know that those fellows will do any thing for money, methinks the disgrace is more with the purchasers: and some such, doubtless, there are; for there can be no very extensive selling (as you will perceive by that of the British Review) without buying. You then add, "What can the critic say?" I am sure I don't know; at present he says very little, and that not much to the purpose. Then comes "for praise, as far as regards the poetry, many passages might be exhibited: for condemnation, as far as regards the morality, all." Now, my dear good Mr. Roberts, I feel for you, and for your reputation; my heart bleeds for both; and I do ask you, whether or not such language does not come positively under the description of "the puff column," for which see Sheridan's farce of "The Critic" (by the way, a little more facetious than your own farce under the same title), towards the close of scene second, act the first.

The poem is, it seems, sold as the work of Lord Byron; but you feel yourself "at liberty to suppose it not Lord B.'s composition." Why did you ever suppose that it was? I approve of your indignation—I applaud it—I feel as angry as you can; but perhaps your virtuous wrath carries you a little too far, when you say that "no misdeedman, not even that of sending into the world obscene and blasphemous poetry, the product of studious lewdness and labored impiety, appears to you in as detestable a light as the acceptance of a present by the editor of a review, as the condition of praising an author." The devil it doesn't!—Think a little. This is being critical overmuch. In point of Gentile benevolence or Christian charity, it were surely less criminal to praise for a bribe, than to abuse a fellow-creature for nothing; and as to the assertion of the comparative innocence of blasphemy and obscenity, confronted with an editor's "acceptance of a present," I shall merely observe, that as an editor you may very well, but, as a Christian divine, I would not recommend you to transcribe this sentence into a sermon.

And yet you say, "the miserable man (for miserable he is, as having a soul of which he cannot get rid)"—"But here I must pause again, and inquire what is the meaning of this parenthesis? We have heard of "little soul," or of "no soul at all," but never till now of "the misery of having a soul of which we cannot get rid;" a misery under which you are possibly no great sufferer, having got rid apparently of some of the intellectual part of your own when you penned this pretty piece of eloquence.

But to continue. You call upon Lord Byron, always supposing him not the author, to disclaim "with all gentlemanly haste," etc., etc. I am told that Lord B. is in a foreign country, some thousand miles off it may be; so that it will be difficult for him to hurry to your wishes. In the mean time, perhaps you yourself have set an example of more haste than gentility; but "the more haste the worse speed."

* Bologna, Aug. 23, 1819.—I send you a letter to Roberts, signed 'Wordley Clatterbuck,' which you may publish in what form you please, in answer to his article. I have had many proofs of men's shyness, but he beats all in shyness. Why, the wolf in sheep's clothing has tumbled into the very trap!—Lord Byron to Mr. Roberts.

† Mr. Roberts is not, as Lord Byron seems to have supposed, a clergyman, but a barrister at law. In 1792 he established a paper called "The Looker-on," which has since been admitted into the collection of British Essayists; and he is known, in his profession, for a treatise on the Law of Fraudulent Bankruptcy. In 1834 he also published the Memoirs of Hannah More.

‡ Charles Phillips, barrister, was in these days celebrated for ultra Irish eloquence. See the Edinburgh Review, No. liv.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

Let us now look at the charge itself, my dear Roberts, which appears to me to be in some degree not quite explicitly worded:

"I bribed my Grandmother's Review, the British."

I recollect bearing, soon after the publication, this subject discussed at the tea-table of Mr. Stobey the poet, who expressed himself, I remember, a good deal surprised that you had never reviewed his epic poem of "Basil," nor any of his pit tragedies; of which, in one instance, the bad taste of the pit, and, in all the rest, the barbarous repugnance of the principal actors, prevented the performance. Mrs. and the Misses S. being in a corner of the room, perusing the proof-sheets of Mr. S.'s poems in Italy, or ON Italy, as he says (I wish, by the by, Mrs. S. would make the tea a little stronger), the male part of the conversation were at liberty to make a few observations on the poem and passage in question; and there was a difference of opinion. Some thought the allusion was to the "British Critic;"* others, that by the expression, "My Grandmother's Review," it was intimated that "my grandmother" was not the reader of the review, but actually the writer; thereby insinuating, my dear Roberts, that you were an old woman! because, as people often say, "Jeffrey's Review," "Gifford's Review," in lieu of Edinburgh and Quarterly; so "my Grandmother's Review" and Roberts's might be almost synonymous. Now, whatever color this insinuation might derive from the circumstance of your wearing a gown, as well as from your time of life, your general style, and various passages of your writings,—I will take upon myself to acquit you from all suspicion of the kind, and assert, without calling Mrs. Roberts in testimony, that if ever you should be chosen pope, you will pass through all the previous ceremonies with as much credit as any pontiff since the partition of Jona. It is very unfair to judge of sex from writings, particularly from those of the British Review. We are all liable to be deceived; and it is an indisputable fact, that many of the best articles in your journal, which were attributed to a veteran female, were actually written by yourself, and yet to this day there are people who could never find out the difference. But let us return to the more immediate question.

I agree with you, that it is impossible Lord Byron should be the author, not only because, as a British peer and a British poet, it would be impracticable for him to have recourse to such factitious fiction, but for some other reasons which you have omitted to state. In the first place, his lordship has no grandmother. Now, the author—and we may believe him in this—doth expressly state that the "British" is his "Grandmother's Review;" and if, as I think I have distinctly proved, this was not a mere figurative allusion to your supposed intellectual age and sex, my dear friend, it follows, whether you be she or no, that there is such an elderly lady still extant. And I can the more readily credit this, having a sexagenary aunt of my own, who perused you constantly, till unfortunately falling asleep over the leading article of your last number, her spectacles fell off and were broken against the fender, after a faithful service of fifteen years, and she has never been able to fit her eyes since; so that I have been forced to read you aloud to her; and this is in fact the way in which I became acquainted with the subject of my present letter, and thus determined to become your public correspondent.

In the next place, Lord B.'s destiny seems in some sort like that of Hercules of old, who became the author of all unappropriated prodigies. Lord B. has been supposed the author of the "Vampire," of a "Pilgrimage to Jerusalem," "To the Dead Sea," of "Death upon the Pale Horse," of odes to "La Vallette," to "Saint Helena," to the "Land of the Gaul," and to a striking child. Now, he turned out to have written none of these things. Besides, you say, he knows in what a spirit of, etc., you criticise!—Are you sure he knows all this? that he has read you like my poor dear aunt? They tell me he is a queer sort of a man; and I would not be too sure, if I were you, either of what he has read or of what he has written. I thought his style had been the serious and terrible. As to his sending you money, this is the first time that ever I heard of his paying his reviewers in that coin; I thought it was rather in their own, to judge from some of his earlier productions. Besides, though he may not be profuse in his expenditure, I should conjecture that his reviewer's bill is not so long as his tailor's.

Shall I give you what I think a prudent opinion? I don't mean to insinuate, God forbid! but if, by any means, these should have been such a correspondence between you and the unknown author, whoever he may be, send him back his money: I dare say he will be very glad to have it again; he can't be much, considering the value of the article and the circulation of the journal; and you are too modest to rate your praise beyond its real worth.—Don't be angry,—I knew you won't,—at this apprehension of your powers of eulogy; for on the other hand, my dear friend, depend upon it your abuse is worth, not its own weight,—that's a feather,—but your weight in gold. So don't spare it: if he has bargained for that, give it handsomely, and depend upon your doing him a friendly office.

But I only speak in case of possibility; for, as I said before, I cannot believe, in the first instance, that you would receive a bribe to praise any person whatever; and still less can I believe that your praise could ever produce such an offer. You are a good creature, my dear Roberts, and a clever fellow; else I could almost suspect that you had fallen into the very trap set for you in verse by this anonymous wag, who will certainly be but too happy to see you saving him the trouble of making you ridiculous. The fact is, that the solemnity of your eleventh article does make you look a little more absurd than you ever yet looked, in all probability, and at the same time does so good; for if any body believed before in the octave stanza, they will believe still, and you will find it not less difficult to prove your negative, than the learned Partridge found it to demonstrate his not being dead, to the satisfaction of the readers of Almanack.

What the motives of this writer may have been for (as you magnificently translate his quizzing you) "stating," with the particularity which belongs to fact, the forgery of a groundless fiction" (do pray, my dear B., talk a little less "in King Canby's vein"), I cannot pretend to say; perhaps to laugh at you, but that is no reason for your basely making all the world laugh also. I approve of your being angry; I tell you I am angry too; but you should not have shown it so outrageously. Your solemn "if somebody personating the editor of the, etc., etc., has received from Lord B., or from any other person," reminds me of Charles Ince's usual exordium when people came into the tavern to hear him sing without paying their share of the reckoning—"If a man, or any man, or any other man," etc., etc.; you have both the same redundant eloquence. But why should you think any body would personate you? Nobody would dream of such a prank who ever read your compositions, and perhaps not many who have heard your conversation. But I have been inoculated with a little of your prolixity. The fact is, my dear Roberts, that somebody has tried to make a fool of you, and what he did not succeed in doing, you have done for him and for yourself.

With regard to the poem itself, or the author, whom I cannot find out (can you?), I have nothing to say; my business is with you. I am sure that you will, upon second thoughts, be really obliged to me for the intimation of this letter, however far short my expressions may have fallen of the sincere good will, admiration, and thorough esteem, with which I am ever, my dear Roberts,

Most truly yours,

WOMLEY CLIFFENDEN.

Sept. 4th, 1839.
Little Piddington.

P. S. My letter is too long to revise, and the post is going. I forget whether or not I asked you the meaning of your last words, "the forgery of a groundless fiction." Now, as all forgery is fiction, and all fiction a kind of forgery, is not this tautology? The sentences would have ended more strongly with "forgery;" only, it bath an awful Bank of England sound, and would have ended like an indolent, besides sparing you several words, and conferring some meaning upon the remainder. But this is mere verbal criticism. Good-bye—once more, yours truly, W. C.

P. S. 2d.—Is it true that the Saints make up the loss of the Review?—It is very handsome in them to be at so great an expense. Twice more, yours, W. C.

* "Whether it be the British Critic, or the British Review, against which the noble lord prefers so grave a charge, or rather so factitious an accusation, we are at a loss to determine. The latter has thought it worth its while, in a public paper, to make a serious reply. As we are not so seriously inclined, we shall leave our share of this accusation to its fate."—British Critic.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

NOTE 50.

SOME OBSERVATIONS UPON AN ARTICLE IN BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE, NO. XLII., 3d SEM., 1844.

"Why, how now, Heeere? you look angry."—Macbeth.

TO
J. DISRAELI, ESQ.

THE AMABLE AND INDUSTRIOUS AUTHOR OF
"THE CALAMITIES" AND "QUARRELS OF AUTHORS;"
THE ADDITIONAL QUARRER AND CALAMITY

Is justified by
ONE OF THE NUMBER.

RAYMOND, March 14, 1845.

"The life of a writer" has been said, by Pope, I believe, to be "a warfare upon earth." As far as my own experience has gone, I have nothing to say against the proposition; and, like the rest, having once plunged into this state of hostility, must, however reluctantly, carry it on. An article has appeared in a periodical work, entitled "Remarks on Don Juan," which has been so full of this spirit, on the part of the writer, as to require some observations on mine.

In the first place, I am not aware by what right the writer assumes this work, which is anonymous, to be my production. He will answer, that there is internal evidence; that is to say, that there are passages which appear to be written in my name, or in my manner. But might not this have been done on purpose by another? He will say, why not then deny it? To this I could answer, that of all the things attributed to me within the last five years,—Pilgrimages to Jerusalem, Deaths upon Pale Horses, Odes to the Land of the Gaul, Adieux to England, Songs to Madame La Vallette, Odes to St. Helena, Vampires, and what not,—of which, God knows, I never composed nor read a syllable beyond their titles in advertisements,—I never thought it worth while to disavow any, except one which came linked with an account of my "residence in the Isle of Mitylene," where I never resided, and appeared to be carrying the amusement of those persons, who think my name can be of any use to them, a little too far.

I should hardly, therefore, if I did not take the trouble to disavow these things published in my name, and yet not mine, go out of my way to deny an anonymous work; which might appear an act of supererogation. With regard to Don Juan, I neither deny nor admit it to be mine—everybody may form their own opinion; but, if there be any who now, or in the progress of that poem, if it is to be continued, feel, or should feel themselves so aggrieved as to require a more explicit answer, privately and personally, they shall have it.

I have never shrunk from the responsibility of what I have written, and have more than once incurred obloquy by neglecting to disavow what was attributed to my pen without foundation.

The greater part, however, of the "Remarks on Don Juan" contain but little on the work itself, which receives an extraordinary portion of praise as a composition. With the exception of some quotations, and a few incidental remarks, the rest of the article is neither more ~~less~~ than a personal attack upon the imputed author. It is not the first in the same publication for I recollect to have read, some time ago, similar remarks upon "Beppo" (said to have been written by a celebrated northern preacher); in which the conclusion drawn was, that "Childe Harold, Byron, and the count in Beppo, were one and the same person;" thereby making me turn out to be, as Mrs. Malaprop says, "Mrs. Corbush, three gentlemen at once." That article was signed "Presbyter Anglicanus;" which, I presume, being interpreted, means British Presbyterian. I must here observe,—and it is at once ludicrous and vexatious to be compelled so frequently to repeat the same thing,—that my case, as an author, is peculiarly hard, in being everlastingly taken, or mistaken, for my own protagonist. It is unjust and particular. I never heard that my friend Moore was set down for a fire-worshipper on account of his Guebre; that Scott was identified with Roderick Dhu, or with Balfour of Burley; or that, notwithstanding all the magicians in Thule, anybody has ever taken Mr. Southey for a conjurer; whereas I have had some difficulty in extricating me even from Manfred, who, as Mr. Southey aptly observes in one of his articles in the Quarterly, "met the devil on the Jungfrau, and bullied him;" and I answer Mr. Southey, who has apparently, in his poetical life, not been so successful against the great enemy, that, in this, Manfred exactly followed the sacred precept,—"Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."—I shall have more to say on the subject of this person—not the devil, but his most humble servant Mr. Southey—before I conclude; but, for the present, I must return to the article in the Edinburgh Magazine.

In the course of this article, amidst some extraordinary observations, there occur the following words:—"It appears, in short, as if this miserable man, having exhausted every species of sensual gratification,—having drained the cup of an even to its bitterest dregs, were resolved to show us that he is no longer a human being even in his frailties,—but a cool, unconcerned fiend, laughing with a detestable gleam over the whole of the better and worse elements of which human life is composed." In another place there appears, "the lurking-place of his selfish and polluted exile."—"By my troth, these be bitter words!"—With regard to the first sentence, I shall content myself with observing, that it appears to have been composed for Bardonapalus, Tiberius, the Regent Duke of Orleans, or Louis XV.; and that I have copied it with as much indifference as I would a passage from Suetonius, or from any of the private memoirs of the regency, conceiving it to be amply refuted by the terms in which it is expressed, and to be utterly inapplicable to any private individual. On the words "lurking-place," and "selfish and polluted exile," I have something more to say.—How far the capital city of a government, which survived the vicissitudes of thirteen hundred years, and might still have existed but for the treachery of Buonaparte, and the iniquity of his imitators,—a city, which was the emporium of Europe when London and Edinburgh were dens of barbarians,—may be termed a "lurking-place," I leave to those who have seen or heard of Venice to decide. How far my exile may have been "polluted," it is not for me to say, because the word is a wide one, and, with some of its branches, may chance to overshadow the actions of most men; but that it has been "selfish" I deny. If, to the extent of my means and my power, and my information of their calamities, to have assisted many miserable beings, reduced by the decay of the place of their birth, and their consequent loss of substance—if to have never rejected an application which appeared founded on truth—if to have expended in this manner sums far out of proportion to my fortune, and elsewhere, be selfish, then have I been selfish. To have done such things I do not deem much; but it is hard indeed to be compelled to recapitulate them in my own defence, by such accusations as that before me, like a panel before a jury calling testimonies to his character, or a soldier recording his services to obtain his discharge. If the person who has made the charge of "selfishness" wishes to inform himself further on the subject, he may acquire, not what he would wish to find, but what will silence and shame him, by applying to the consul-general of our nation, resident in the place, who will be in the case either to confirm or deny what I have asserted.

I neither make, nor have ever made, pretensions to sanctity of demeanor, nor regularity of conduct; but my means have been expended principally on my own gratification, neither now nor heretofore, neither in England nor out of it; and it

* In Sheridan's comedy of "The Rivals."

† See Blackwood, vol. III., p. 288. Lord B., as it appears from one of his letters, ascribed (though unjustly) this paper to the Rev. Dr. Chubb.

‡—"As the passage was curtailed in the press, I take this opportunity of restoring it. In the Quarterly Review (vol. xxi., p. 886), speaking incidentally of the Jungfrau, I said, 'It was the scene where Lord Byron's Manfred met the devil, and bullied him,—though the devil must have won his cause before any tribunal in this world, or the next, if he had not pleaded more feebly for himself than his advocate, in a cause of canonisation, ever pleaded for him.'—SOUTHEY.

§ "Lord Byron was ever ready to assist the distressed, and he was most unostentatious in his charities; for, besides considerable sums which he gave away to applicants at his own house, he contributed largely, by weekly and monthly allowances, to persons whom he had never seen, and who, as the money reached them by other hands, did not even know who was their benefactor."—HORSWAIN.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

wants but a word from me, if I thought that word decent or necessary, to call forth the most willing witnesses, and at once witnesses and proofs, in England itself, to show that there are those who have derived not the mere temporary relief of a wretched boon, but the means which led them to immediate happiness and ultimate independence, by my want of that very "selfishness," as grossly as falsely now imputed to my conduct.

Had I been a selfish man—had I been a grasping man—had I been, in the worldly sense of the word, even a prudent man,—I should not be where I now am; I should not have taken the step which was the first that led to the events which have sunk and swola a gulf between me and mine: but in this respect the truth will one day be made known: in the mean time, as Durandarte says, in the Cave of Montezino, "Patience, and shuffle the cards."

I bitterly feel the ostentation of this statement, the first of the kind I have ever made: I feel the degradation of being compelled to make it; but I also feel its truth, and I trust to feel it on my death-bed, should it be my lot to die there. I am not less sensible of the egotism of all this; but, alas! who have made me thus egotistical in my own defence, if not they, who, by perverse persistence in refusing action to truth, and trading poetry to life, and regarding characters of imagination as creatures of existence, have made me personally responsible for almost every poetical delineation which fancy, and a particular bias of thought, may have tended to produce?

The writer continues:—"Those who are acquainted, as who not? with the most incidents of the private life of Lord B.," etc. Assuredly whoever may be acquainted with these "main incidents," the writer of the "Remarks on Don Juan" is not, or he would use a very different language. That which I believe he alludes to as a "main incident," happened to be a very subordinate one, and the natural and almost inevitable consequence of events and circumstances long prior to the period at which it occurred. It is the last drop which makes the cup run over, and mine was already full.—But to return to this man's charge: he accuses Lord B. of "an elaborate satire on the character and manners of his wife." From what parts of Don Juan the writer has inferred this he himself best knows. As far as I recollect of the female characters in that production, there is but one who is depicted in ridiculous colors, or that could be interpreted as a satire upon any body. But here my poetical sins are again revisited upon me, supposing that the poem be mine. If I depict a coarsely a misanthrope, a libertine, a chief of insurgents, or an infidel, he is set down to the author; and if, in a poem by no means ascertained to be my production, there appears a disagreeable, comical, and by no means respectable female pedant, it is set down for my wife. Is there any resemblance? If there be, it is in those who make it: I can see none. In my writings I have rarely described any character under a fictitious name: those of whom I have spoken have had their own—in many cases a stronger action in itself than any which could be appended to it. But of real circumstances I have availed myself plentifully, both in the serious and the ludicrous—they are to poetry what landscapes are to the painter; but my figures are not portraits. It may even have happened, that I have seized on some events that have occurred under my own observation, or in my own family, as I would paint a view from my grounds, did it harmonize with my picture; but I never would introduce the likeness of its living members, unless their features could be made as favorable to themselves as to the effect; which, in the above instance, would be extremely difficult.

My learned brother proceeds to observe, that "it is in vain for Lord B. to attempt in any way to justify his own behavior in that affair; and now that he has so openly and audaciously invited inquiry and reproach, we do not see any good reason why he should not be plainly told so by the voices of his countrymen." How far the "openness" of an anonymous poem, and the "audacity" of an imaginary character, which the writer supposes to be meant for Lady B. may be deemed to merit this formidable denunciation from their "most sweet voices," I neither know nor care; but when he tells me that I cannot "in any way justify my own behavior in that affair," I acquiesce, because no man can "justify" himself until he knows of what he is accused; and I have never had—and, God knows, my whole desire has ever been to obtain it—any specific charge, in a tangible shape, submitted to me by the adversary, nor by others, unless the storied of public rumor and the mysterious silence of the lady's legal advisers may be deemed such. But is not the writer content with what has been already said and done?

Has not "the general voice of his countrymen" long ago pronounced upon the subject—sentence without trial, and condemnation without a charge? Have I not been exiled by ostracism, except that the shells which proscribed me were anonymous? Is the writer ignorant of the public opinion and the public conduct upon that occasion? If he is, I am not: the public will forget both, long before I shall cease to remember either.

The man who is exiled by a faction has the consolation of thinking that he is a martyr: he is upheld by hope and the dignity of his cause, real or imaginary: he who withdraws from the pressure of debt may indulge in the thought that time and prudence will retrieve his circumstances: he who is condemned by the law has a term to his banishment, or a dream of its abbreviation; or, it may be, the knowledge or the belief of some injustice of the law, or of its administration in his own particular; but he who is outlawed by general opinion, without the intervention of hostile politics, illegal judgment, or embarrassed circumstances, whether he be innocent or guilty, must undergo all the bitterness of exile, without hope, without pride, without alleviation. This case was mine. Upon what grounds the public founded their opinion, I am not aware; but it was general, and it was decisive. Of me or of mine they knew little, except that I had written what is called poetry, was a nobleman, had married, became a father, and was involved in differences with my wife and her relatives, no one knew why, because the persons complaining refused to state their grievances. The fashionable world was divided into parties, mine consisting of a very small minority: the reasonable world was naturally on the stronger side, which happened to be the lady's, as was most proper and polite. The press was active and scurrilous; and such was the rage of the day that the unfortunate publication of two copies of verses, rather complimentary than otherwise to the subjects of both, was tortured into a species of crime, or constructive petty treason. I was accused of every monstrous vice by public rumor, and private rancor: my name, which had been a knightly or a noble one since my fathers helped to conquer the kingdom for William the Norman, was tainted. I felt that, if what was whispered, and muttered, and murmured was true, I was unfit for England; if false, England was unfit for me. I withdrew: but this was not enough. In other countries, in Switzerland, in the shadow of the Alps, and by the blue depths of the lakes, I was pursued and breathed upon by the same blight. I crossed the mountains, but it was the same; so I went a little further, and settled myself by the waves of the Adriatic, like the stag at bay, who betakes him to the waters.

If I may judge by the statements of the few friends who gathered round me, the outcry of the period to which allude was beyond all precedent, all parallel, even in those cases where political motives have sharpened slander and doubled enmity. I was advised not to go to the theatre, lest I should be hissed, nor to my seat in parliament, lest I should be insulted by the way: even on the day of my departure, my most intimate friend told me afterwards, that he was under apprehensions of violence from the people who might be assembled at the door of the carriage. However, I was not deterred by these counsels from seeing Keen in his best characters, nor from voting according to my principles; and with regard to the third and last apprehensions of my friends, I could not share in them, not being made acquainted with their extent till some time after I had crossed the Channel. Even if I had been so, I am not of a nature to be much affected by men's anger, though I may feel hurt by their aversion. Against all individual outrage, I could protect or redress myself; and against that of a crowd, I should probably have been enabled to defend myself, with the assistance of others, as has been done on similar occasions.

I retired from the country, perceiving that I was the object of general obloquy; I did not indeed imagine, like Jean Jacques Rousseau, that all mankind was in a conspiracy against me, though I had perhaps as good grounds for such a chimera as ever he had; but I perceived that I had to a great extent become personally obnoxious in England, perhaps through my own fault, but the fact was indisputable: the public in general would hardly have been so much excited against a more popular character, without at least an accusation or a charge of some kind actually expressed or substantiated, for I can hardly conceive that the common and every-day occurrence of a separation between man and wife could in itself produce so great a ferment. I shall say nothing of the usual complaints of "being prejudiced," "condemned unheard," "unfairness," "partiality," and so forth, the usual charges rung by parties who have had, or are to save, a trial; but I was a little surprised to find myself condemned without being favored with the act of accusation, and to persevere in the absence of this portentous charge or charges, whatever it or they were to be, that every possible or impossible crime was rumored to supply its place, and asked for granted. This could only occur in the case of a person very much disliked; and I knew no remedy, having already used to their extent whatever little powers I might possess of pleasing in society. I had no party in fashion, though I was afterwards told that there was one—but it was not of my formation, nor did I then know of its existence—one in literature: and in politics I had voted with the Whigs, with precisely that importance which a Whig vote possesses in these Tory days, and with such personal acquaintance with the leaders in both houses as the society in which I lived sanctioned, but without claim or expectation of any thing like friendship from any one, except a few young men of my own age and standing, and a few others more advanced in life, which last it had been my fortune to serve in circumstances of difficulty. This was, in fact, to stand alone; and I recollect, some time after, when Madame de Staël said to me in Switzerland, "You should not have warred with the world—it will not do—it is too strong always for any individual: I myself once tried it in early life, but it will not do." I perfectly acquiesce in the truth of this remark; but the world had done me the honor to begin the war; and assuredly, if peace is only to be obtained by courting and paying tribute to it, I am not qualified to obtain its countenance. I thought, in the words of Campbell,

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

"Then wed thee to an exiled lot,
And if the world hath loved thee not,
Its absence may be borne."

I recollect, however, that having been much hurt by Bonelli's conduct (he, having a general retainer for me, had acted as adviser to the adversary, alleging, on being reminded of his retainer, that he had forgotten it, as his clerk had so many), I observed that some of those who were now eagerly saying the axe to my roof-tree, might see their own shaken, and feel a portion of what they had inflicted.—His fell, and crushed him.

I have heard of, and believe, that there are human beings so constituted as to be insensible to injuries; but I believe that the best mode to avoid taking vengeance is to get out of the way of temptation. I hope that I may never have the opportunity, for I am not quite sure that I could resist it, having derived from my mother something of the "perfidium ingenuum Sæctorum." I have not sought, and shall not seek it, and perhaps it may never come in my path. I do not in this allude to the party, who might be right or wrong; but to many who made her cause the pretext of their own bitterness. She, indeed, must have long avenged me in her own feelings; for whatever her reasons may have been (and she never adduced them to me at least), she probably neither contemplated nor conceived to what she became the means of conducting the father of her child, and the husband of her choice.

So much for "the general voice of his countrymen;" I will now speak of some in particular.

In the beginning of the year 1817, an article appeared in the Quarterly Review, written, I believe, by Walter Scott,* doing great honor to him, and no disgrace to me, though both poetically and personally more than sufficiently favorable to the work and the author of whom it treated. It was written at a time when a selfish man would not, and a timid one dared not, have said a word in favor of either: it was written by one to whom temporary public opinion had elevated me to the rank of a rival—a proud distinction, and unmerited; but which has not prevented me from feeling as a friend, nor him from more than corresponding to that sentiment. The article in question was written upon the third canto of Childe Harold; and after many observations, which it would as ill become me to repeat as to forget, concluded with "a hope that I might yet return to England." How this expression was received in England itself I am not acquainted, but it gave great offence at Rome to the respectable ten or twenty thousand English travellers then and there assembled. I did not visit Rome till some time after, so that I had no opportunity of knowing the fact; but I was informed, long afterwards, that the greatest indignation had been manifested in the enlightened Anglo-circles of that year, which happened to comprise within it—amidst a considerable leaven of Welsh, Scotch, and Devonshire Placod, broken loose upon their travels—several really well-born and well-bred families, who did not the less participate in the feeling of the hour. "Why should he return to England?" was the general exclamation—I answer why? It is a question I have occasionally asked myself, and I never yet could give it a satisfactory reply. I had then no thoughts of returning, and if I have any now, they are of business, and not of pleasure. Amidst the ties that have been dashed to pieces, there are links yet entire, though the chain itself be broken. There are duties, and connections, which may one day require my presence—and I am a father. I have still some friends whom I wish to meet again, and, it may be, an enemy. These things, and those minister details of business, which time accumulates during absence, in every man's affairs and property, may, and probably will, recall me to England; but I shall return with the same feelings with which I left it, in respect to itself, though altered with regard to individuals, as I have been more or less informed of their conduct since my departure: for it was only a considerable time after it that I was made acquainted with the real facts and full extent of some of their proceedings and language. My friends, like other friends, from conciliatory motives, withheld from me much that they could, and some things which they should have unfolded; however, that which is deferred is not lost—but it has been no fault of mine that it has been deferred at all.

I have alluded to what is said to have passed at Rome merely to show that the sentiment which I have described was not confined to the English in England, and as forming part of my answer to the reproach cast upon what has been called my "selfish exile," and my "voluntary exile." "Voluntary" it has been; for who would dwell among a people entertaining strong hostility against him? How far it has been "selfish" has been already explained.

I have now arrived at a passage describing me as having vented my "spleen against the lofty-minded and virtuous men," men "whose virtues few indeed can equal;" meaning, I humbly presume, the notorious triumvirate known by the name of "Lake Poets" in their aggregate capacity, and by Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge, when taken singly. I wish to say a word or two upon the virtues of one of those persons, public and private, for reasons which will soon appear.

When I left England in April, 1816, ill in mind, in body, and in circumstances, I took up my residence at Coligny, by the lake of Geneva. The sole companion of my journey was a young physician,† who had to make his way in the world, and having seen very little of it, was naturally and laudably desirous of seeing more society than suited my present habits or my past experience. I therefore presented him to those gentlemen of Geneva for whom I had letters of introduction; and having thus seen him in a situation to make his own way, retired for my own part entirely from society, with the exception of one English family, living at about a quarter of a mile's distance from Diodati, and with the further exception of some occasional intercourse with Copet at the wish of Madame de Staël. The English family to which I allude consisted of two ladies, a gentleman and his son, a boy of a year old.‡

One of "these lofty-minded and virtuous men," in the words of the Edinburgh Magazine, made, I understand, about this time, or soon after, a tour in Switzerland. On his return to England, he circulated—and, for anything I know, invented—a report, that the gentleman to whom I have alluded and myself were living in promiscuous intercourse with two sisters, "having formed a league of incest" (I quote the words as they were stated to me, and indulged myself on the natural comments upon such a conjunction, which are said to have been repeated publicly, with great complacency, by another of that poetical fraternity, of whom I shall say only, that even had the story been true, he should not have repeated it, as far as it regarded myself, except in sorrow. The tale itself requires but a word in answer—the ladies were not sisters, nor in any degree connected, except by the second marriage of their respective parents, a widower with a widow, both being the offspring of former marriages; neither of them were, in 1816, nineteen years old. "Promiscuous intercourse" could hardly have disgusted the great patron of pantisocracy (does Mr. Southey remember such a scheme?), but there was none.

How far this man, who, as author of Was Tyler, has been

* See Quarterly Review, vol. xvi., p. 172.

† Dr. Poldiotti, author of "The Vampire."

‡ Mr. and Mrs. Shelley, Miss Clermont, and Master Shelley.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

proclaimed by the lord chancellor guilty of a treasonable and blasphemous libel, and denounced in the House of Commons, by the upright and able member for Norwich, as a "rancorous renegade," be fit for sitting as a judge upon others, let others judge. He has said that for this expression "he brands William Smith on the forehead as a calumniator," and that "the mark will outlast his epithet." How long William Smith's epithet will last, and in what words it will be written, I know not, but William Smith's words form the epithet itself of Robert Southey. He has written Wat Tyler, and taken the office of poet-laureate—he has, in the Life of Henry Kirke White, denominated reviewing "the ungentle craft," and has become a reviewer—he was one of the projectors of a scheme, called "pantisocracy," for having all things, including women, in common (query, common women!), and he sets up as a moralist—he denounced the battle of Blenheim, and he praised the battle of Waterloo—he loved Mary Wollstonecraft, and he tried to blast the character of her daughter (one of the young females mentioned)—he wrote treason, and serves the king—he was the butt of the Anti-Jacobin, and he is the prop of the Quarterly Review; licking the hands that smote him, eating the bread of his enemies, and internally writhing beneath his own contempt—he would fain conceal, under anonymous bluster, and a vain endeavor to obtain the esteem of others, after having for ever lost his own, his leprous sense of his own degradation. What is there in such a man to "envy"? Who ever envied the envious? Is it his birth, his name, his fame, or his virtues, that I am to "envy"? I was born of the aristocracy, which he abhorred; and am sprung, by my mother, from the kings who preceded those whom he has hired himself to sing. It cannot, then, be his birth. As a poet, I have, for the past eight years, had nothing to apprehend from a competition; and for the future, "that life to come in every poet's creed," it is open to all. I will only remind Mr. Southey, in the words of a critic, who, if still living, would have annihilated Southey's literary existence now and hereafter, as the avowed foe of charlatans and impostors, from Macpherson downwards, that "those dreams were Bette's once and Ogilby's" and, for my own part, I assure him, that whenever he and his sect are remembered, I shall be proud to be "forgot." That he is not content with his success as a poet may fairly be believed—he has been the nine-pin of reviews; the Edinburgh knocked him down, and the Quarterly set him up; the government found him useful in the periodical line, and made a point of recommending his works to purchasers, so that he is occasionally bought (I mean his books, as well as the author), and may be found on the same shelf, if not upon the table, of most of the gentlemen employed in the different offices. With regard to his private virtues, I know nothing of his principles, I have heard enough. As far as having been, to the best of my power, benevolent to others, I do not fear the comparison; and for the errors of the passions, was Mr. Southey always so tranquil and stainless? Did he never covet his neighbor's wife? Did he never calumniate his neighbor's wife's daughter, the offspring of her he courted? So much for the apostle of pantisocracy.

Of the "lofty-minded, virtuous" Wordsworth, one anecdote will suffice to speak his sincerity. In a conversation with Mr. — upon poetry, he concluded with, "After all, I would not give five shillings for all that Southey has ever written." Perhaps this calculation might rather show his esteem for five shillings than his low estimate of Dr. Southey; but considering that when he was in his need, and Southey had a shilling, Wordsworth is said to have had generally sixpence out of it, it has an awkward sound in the way of valuation. This anecdote was told me by persons who, if quoted by name, would prove that its genuineness is as good as true. I can give my authority for this; and am ready to adduce it also for Mr. Southey's circulation of the falsehood before mentioned.

Of Coleridge, I shall say nothing—why, he may divine.*

I have said more of these people than I intended in this place, being somewhat stirred by the remarks which induced me to comment upon the topic. I see nothing in these men, as poets, or as individuals—little in their talents, and less in their characters, to prevent honest men from expressing for them considerable contempt, in prose or rhyme, as it may happen. Mr. Southey has the Quarterly for his field of rejoinder, and Mr. Wordsworth his postscripts to "Lyrical Ballads," where the two great instances of the sublime are taken from himself and Milton. "Over her own sweet voice the stock-dove broods;" that is to say, she has the pleasure of listening to herself, in common with Mr. Wordsworth upon most of his public appearances. "What divinity doth hedge" these persons, that we should respect them? Is it Apollo? Are they not of those who called Dryden's Ode "a drunken song"? who have discovered that Gray's Elegy is full of faults (see Coleridge's Life, vol. i., note, for Wordsworth's kindness in pointing this out to him), and have published what is allowed to be the very worst prose that ever was written to prove that Pope was no poet, and that William Wordsworth is?

In other points, are they respectable, or respected? Is it on the open avowal of apostasy, on the patronage of government, that their claim is founded? Who is there who esteems those parodies of their own principles? They are, in fact, well aware that the reward of their change has been any thing but honor. The times have preserved a respect for political consistency, and, even though changeable, honor the unchanged. Look at Moore: it will be long ere Southey meets with such a triumph in London as Moore met with in Dublin, even if the government subscribe for it, and set the money down to secret service. It was not less to the man than to the poet, to the tempted but unshaken patriot, to the not opulent, but incorruptible fellow-citizen, that the warm-hearted Irish paid the profusest of tributes. Mr. Southey may applaud himself to the world, but he has his own heart-level contempt; and the fury with which he foams against all who stand in the phalanx which he forsook, as, as William Smith described it, "the rancor of the renegade," the bad language of the prostitute who stands at the corner of the street, and showers her slugs upon all, except those who may have bestowed upon her her "little skillings."

Hence his quarrel with overdoing, political and literary, in what he has himself termed "the ungentle craft," and his especial wrath against Mr. Leigh Hunt, notwithstanding that Hunt has done more for Wordsworth's reputation, as a poet (such as it is), than all the Lakers could in their interchange of self-praises for the last twenty-five years. And here I wish to say a few words on the present state of English poetry. That this is the age of the decline of English poetry will be doubted by few who have calmly considered the subject. That there are men of genius among the present poets makes little against the fact, because it has been well said, that "next to him who forms the taste of his country, the greatest genius is he who corrupts it." No one has ever denied genius to Marino, who corrupted not merely the taste of Italy, but that of all Europe for nearly a century. The great cause of the present deplorable state of English poetry is to be attributed to that absurd and systematic depreciation of Pope, in which, for the last few years, there has been a kind of epidemic concurrence. Men of the most opposite opinions have united upon this topic. Warton and Churchill began it, having borrowed the hint probably from the heroes of the Dunelm, and their own internal conviction that their proper reputation can be as nothing till the most perfect and harmonious of poets—he who, having no fault, has had reason made his reproach—was reduced to what they conceived to be his level; but even they dared not degrade him below Dryden. Goldsmith, and Rogers, and Campbell, his most successful disciples; and Hayley, who, however feeble, has left one poem "that will not be willingly let die" (the Triumph of Temper, kept up the reputation of that pure and perfect style; and Crabbe, the first of living poets, has almost proved that its genuineness is as good as true, was put down by a single poem in the Anti-Jacobin; and the Cruscan, from Merry to Jerningham, who were annihilated if Nothing can be said to be annihilated by Gifford, the last of the wholesome satirists.

At the same time Mr. Southey was favoring the public with Wat Tyler and Joan of Arc, to the great glory of the Drama and Epics. I beg pardon, Wat Tyler, with Peter Bell, was still in MS.; and it was not till after Mr. Southey had received his Malmsey butt, and Mr. Wordsworth's becom-

* See Notices of Lord Byron's Life.

† "Tumult" was almost the only Italian poet of the era in which he flourished who withstood the general corruption of taste introduced by Marino and his followers, and by the 'imitated imitators' of Lope de Vega; and he opened a new path, in which a crowd of pretenders have vainly endeavored to follow him."—FORCULO.

‡ "The Loves of the Triangles," the joint production of Messrs. Canning and Frere.

§ Goldsmith has anticipated the definition of the Lake poetry, as far as such things can be defined. "Gentlemen, the present piece is not of your common epic poems, which come from the press like paper kites in summer; there are none of your Tarnases or Dicks

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

unified to gauge it, that the great revolutionary tragedy came before the public and the Court of Chancery. Wordsworth was peddling his lyrical ballads, and brooding a preface, to be succeeded in due course by a postscript; both couched in such prose as must give peculiar delight to those who have read the prefaces of Pope and Dryden; scarcely less celebrated for the beauty of their prose, than for the charms of their verse. Wordsworth is the reverse of Molière's gentleman who had been "talking prose all his life, without knowing it;" for he thinks that he has been all his life writing both prose and verse, and neither of what he conceives to be such can be properly said to be either one or the other. Mr. Coleridge, the future poet, poet and seer of the Morning Post (an honor also claimed by Mr. Fitzgerald, of the "Selected Addresses"), who ultimately prophesied the downfall of Buonaparte, to which he himself mainly contributed, by giving him the nickname of "the Corsican," was then employed in predicating the damnation of Mr. Pitt, and the isolation of England, in the two very best copies of verses he ever wrote: to wit, the inferior eulogy of "Fire, Famine, and Slaughter," and the "Ode to the Departing Year."

These three personages, Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge, had all of them a very natural antipathy to Pope; and respect them for it, as the only original feeling or principle which they have contrived to preserve. But they have been joined in it by those who have joined them in nothing else: by the Edinburgh Reviewers, by the whole heterogeneous mass of living English poets, excepting Crabbe, Rogers, Gifford, and Campbell, who, both by precept and practice, have proved their adherence; and by me, who have shamefully deviated in practice, but have ever loved and honored Pope's poetry with my whole soul, and hope to do so till my dying day. I would rather see all I have ever written lining the same trunk in which I actually read the eleventh book of a modern epic poem¹ at Malta, in 1811, if I opened it to take on a change after the prozym of a tertian, in the absence of my servant, and found it lined with the name of the maker, Ryre, Cockspur Street, and with the epic poetry alluded to, than sacrifice what I firmly believe in as the Christianity of English poetry, the poetry of Pope.

But the Edinburgh Reviewers, and the Lakers, and Hunt and his school, and every body else with their school, and even Moore without a school, and dilettant lecturers at institutions, and elderly gentlemen who translate and imitate, and young ladies who listen and repeat, baronets who draw indifferent frontispieces for bad poets, and noblemen who let them dine with them in the country, the small body of the wise and the great body of the blues, have latterly united in a deprecation, of which their fathers would have been as much ashamed as their children will be. In the mean time, what have we got instead? The Lake school, which began with an epic poem, "written in six weeks" (so Joan of Arc proclaimed herself), and terminated with a ballad composed in twenty years, as "Peter Bell's" creator takes care to inform the few who will inquire. What have we got instead? A deluge of flimsy and unintelligible romances, imitated from Scott and myself, who have both made the best of our bad materials and erroneous system. What have we got instead? Madoc, which is neither an epic nor any thing else, Thalaba, Kehama, Gebir, and such gibberish, written in all metres and in no language. Hunt, who had powers to have made "the Story of Rimini" as perfect as a fable of Dryden, has thought fit to sacrifice his genius and his taste to some unintelligible notions of Wordsworth, which I defy him to explain. Moore has—But why continue?—All, with the exception of Crabbe, Rogers, and Campbell, who may be considered as having taken their station, will, by the blessing of God, survive their own reputation, without attaining any very extraordinary period of longevity. Of course there must be a still further exception in favor of those who, having never obtained any reputation at all, unless it be among provincial literati, and their own families, have none to lose; and of Moore, who, as the Burns of Ireland, possesses a fame which cannot be lost.

The greater part of the poems mentioned, however, have been able to gather together a few followers. A paper of the Connoisseur says, that "it is observed by the French, that a cat, a priest, and an old woman, are sufficient to constitute a religious sect in England." The same number of animals, with some difference in kind, will suffice for a poetical one. If we take Sir George Beaumont instead of the priest, and Mr. Wordsworth for the old woman, we shall nearly complete the quota required; but I fear that Mr. Southey will not indifferently represent the CAT, having shown himself but too distinctly to be of a species to which that noble creature is peculiarly hostile.

Nevertheless, I will not go so far as Wordsworth in his postscript, who pretends that no great poet ever had immediate fame; which being interpreted, means that William Wordsworth is not quite so much read by his contemporaries as might be desirable. This assertion is as false as it is foolish. Homer's glory depends upon his present popularity; he recited,—and without the strongest impression of the moment, who would have gotten the Iliad by heart, and given it to tradition? Ennius, Terence, Plautus, Lucretius, Horace, Virgil, Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Sappho, Anacreon, Theocritus, all the great poets of antiquity, were the delight of their contemporaries. The very existence of a poet, previous to the invention of printing, depended upon his present popularity; and how often has it impaired his future fame? Hardly ever. History informs us that the best have come down to us. The reason is evident: the most popular found the greatest number of transcribers for their MSS.; and that the taste of their contemporaries was corrupt can hardly be avouched by the moderns, the mightiest of whom have but barely approached them. Dante, Petrarch, Ariosto, and Tasso, were all the darlings of the contemporary reader. Dante's poem was celebrated long before his death; and, not long after it, states negotiated for his ashes, and disputed for the sites of the composition of the Divina Commedia. Petrarch was crowned in the Capitol. Ariosto was permitted to pass free by the public robber who had read the Orlando Furioso. I would not recommend Mr. Wordsworth to try the same experiment with his Smugglers. Tasso, notwithstanding the criticisms of the Cruscani, would have been crowned in the Capitol but for his death.

It is easy to prove the immediate popularity of the chief poets of the only modern nation in Europe that has a poetical language, the Italian. In our own, Shakespeare, Spenser, Jonson, Waller, Dryden, Congreve, Pope, Young, Shenstone, Thomson, Johnson, Goldsmith, Gray, were all as popular in their lives as since. Gray's Elegy pleased instantly, and eternally. His Odes did not, nor yet do they, please like his Elegy. Milton's politics kept him down. But the Epigram of Dryden, and the very sale of his work, in proportion to the less reading time of its publication, prove him to have been honored by his contemporaries. I will venture to assert, that the sale of the Paradise Lost was greater in the first four years after its publication, than that of "The Excursion" in the same number, with the difference of nearly a century and a half between them of time, and of thousands in point of general readers. Notwithstanding Mr. Wordsworth's having pressed Milton into his service as one of those not presently popular, to favor his own purpose of proving that our grandchildren will read him (the said William Wordsworth), I would recommend him to begin first with our grandmothers. But he need not be alarmed; he may yet live to see all the evils pass away, as Darwin and Seward and Keble, and Hoyle, and Hoyle, have passed away; but their declension will not be his ascension; he is essentially a bad writer, and all the failures of others can never strengthen him. He may have a sect, but he will never have a public; and his "audience" will always be "few," without being "fit"—except for Bedlam.

It may be asked, why, having this opinion of the present state of poetry in England, and having had it long, as my friends and others well knew—possessing, or having possessed too, as a writer, the ear of the public for the time being—I have not adopted a different plan in my own compositions, and endeavored to correct rather than encourage the taste of the day. To this I would answer, that it is easier to perceive the wrong than to pursue the right, and that I have never

§ The well-known lines under Milton's picture.

"Three poets, in three distant ages born," &c.

§ The Rev. Richard Hale. He published in early life a verification of Flugal, and in 1799, "Arthur, a Poetical Romance." He died in 1800.

§ Charles Hoyle, of Trinity College, Cambridge, author of "Enoch," an epic in thirteen books.

¹ See ante, p. 498.

† Sir James Bland Burges's "Richard I." See ante, p. 493.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

contemplated the prospect "of filling (with Peter Bell,* see its preface) permanently a station in the literature of the country." Those who know me best know this, and that I have been considerably astonished at the temporary success of my works, having flattered no person and no party, and expressed opinions which are not those of the general reader. Could I have anticipated the degree of attention which has been accorded to me, assuredly I would have studied more to deserve it. But I have lived in far countries abroad, or in the agitating world at home, which was not favorable to study or reflection; so that almost all that I have written has been mere passion,—passion, it is true, of different kinds, but always passion; for in me (if it be not an Irishism to say so) my indifference was a kind of passion, the result of experience, and not the philosophy of nature. Writing grows a habit, like a woman's gallantry; there are women who have had no intrigues, but few who have had but one only; so there are millions of men who have never written a book, but few who have written only one. And thus, having written once, I wrote on; encouraged no doubt by the success of the moment, yet by no means anticipating its duration, and, I will venture to say, scarcely even wishing it. But then I did other things besides write, which by no means contributed either to improve my writings or my prosperity.

I have thus expressed publicly upon the poetry of the day the opinion I have long entertained and expressed of it to all who have asked it, and to some who would rather not have heard it: as I told Moore not very long ago, "we are all wrong except Rogers, Crabbe, and Campbell."† Without being old in years, I am old in days, and do not feel the adequate spirit within me to attempt a work which should show what I think right in poetry, and must content myself with having denounced what is wrong. There are, I trust, younger spirits rising up in England, who, escaping the contagion which has swept away poetry from our literature, will recall it to their country, such as it once was and may still be.

In the mean time, the best sign of amendment will be repentance, and new and frequent editions of Pope and Dryden.

There will be found as comfortable metaphysics, and ten times more poetry, in the "Essay on Man," than in the "Excursion." If you search for passion, where is it to be found stronger than in the epistle from Bliss to Abela, or in Palamon and Arctite? Do you wish for invention, imagination, sublimity, character? seek them in the Rape of the Lock, the Fables of Dryden, the Ode of Saint Cecilia's Day, and Abasdon and Achitophel; you will discover in these two poets only, all for which you must ransack innumerable metres, and God only knows how many writers of the day, without finding a tittle of the same qualities,—with the addition, too, of wit, of which the latter have none. I have not, however, forgotten Thomas Brown the Younger, nor the Fudge Family,‡ nor Whistlercraft; but that is not wit—it is humor. I will say nothing of the harmony of Pope and Dryden in comparison, for there is not a living poet (except Rogers, Gifford, Campbell, and Crabbe) who can write an heroic couplet. The fact is, that the exquisite beauty of their versification has withdrawn the public attention from their other excellences, as the vulgar eye will rest more upon the splendor of the uniform than the quality of the troops. It is this very harmony, particularly in Pope, which has raised the vulgar and atrocious cant against him:—because his versification is perfect, it is assumed that it is his only perfection: because his truths are so clear, it is assumed that he has no invention; and because he is always intelligible, it is taken for granted that he has no genius. We are mockingly said that he is the "Poet of Reason," as if this was a reason for his being no poet. Taking passage for passage, I will undertake to cite more times teeming with imagination from Pope than from any two living poets, be they who they may. To take an instance at random from a species of competition not very favorable to imagination—Satire: set down the character of Sporus, I with all the wonderful play of fancy which is scattered over it, and place by its side an equal number of verses, from any two existing poets, of the same power and the same variety,—where will you find them?

I merely mention one instance of many, in reply to the injustice done to the memory of him who harmonized our poetic language. The attorney's clerks, and other self-educated genii, found it easier to distort themselves to the new mode than to toll after the symmetry of him who had enchanted their fathers. They were besides smitten by being told that the new school was to revive the language of Queen Elizabeth, the true English; as everybody in the reign of Queen Anne wrote no better than French, by a species of literary treason.

Blank verse, which, unless in the drama, no one except Milton ever wrote who could rhyme, became the order of the day,—or else such rhyme as looked still blander than the verse without it. I am aware that Johnson has said, after some hesitation, that he could not "prevail upon himself to wish that Milton had been a rhymist." The opinions of that truly great man, whom it is also the present fashion to deny, will ever be received by me with that deference which time will restore to him from all; but with all humility, I am not persuaded that the Paradise Lost would not have been more nobly conveyed to posterity, not perhaps in heroic couplets, although even they could sustain the subject if well balanced, but in the stanza of Spenser or of Tasso, or in the terza rima of Dante, which the powers of Milton could easily have grafted on our language. The Seasons of Thomson would have been better in rhyme, although still inferior to his Cattle of Indolence; and Mr. Southey's Joan of Arc no worse, although it might have taken up six months instead of weeks in the composition. I recommend also to the lovers of lyrics the perusal of the present laureate's Odes by the side of Dryden's on Saint Cecilia, but let him be sure to read first those of Mr. Southey.

To the heaven-born genii and inspired young scribblers of the day much of this will appear paradox; it will appear so even to the higher order of our orators; but it was a truism twenty years ago, and it will be a reckoned truth in ten more. In the mean time, I will conclude with two quo-

P. Yet let me flap this bag with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and sings;
Whose bum the witty and the fair anatomy,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys;
So well-wash spaniels civilly delight
In smelling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his empurpled brow,
As shallow streams run smiling all the way.
Whether in lordly impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks;
Or at the ear of Eve, familiar tone,
Half froth, half venom, splits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or snarl, or rhyme, or blasphemies,
His wit all sees-saw, between that and this,
Now high, now low, now meekens up, now mims,
And he himself on "the antithesis"
Amphibious thing! that notes either part
The trifling head, or the corrupted heart,
Pop at the toilet, satterer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's tempter thus the Rabbinus have expressed,
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest.
Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.

PREF. to DON JUAN.

* Peter Bell first saw the light in 1796. During this long interval, pains have been taken at different times to make the production less unworthy of a favorable reception; or rather, to fit it for filling permanently a station, however humble, in the literature of my country."—WORDSWORTH, 1819.

† "I certainly ventured to differ from the judgment of my noble friend, no less in his attempt to depreciate that peculiar walk of the art in which he himself so grandly trod, than in the inconsistency of which I thought him guilty, in condemning all those who stood up for particular 'schools' of poetry, and yet, at the same time, maintaining so exclusive a theory of the art himself. How little, however, he attended to either the grounds or degrees of my dissent from him will appear by the following wholesale report of my opinion in 'Detached Thoughts'—'One of my notions different from those of my contemporaries is, that the present is not a high age of English poetry. There are more poets (not dissent) than ever there were, and proportionally less poetry. This shells I have maintained for some years, but, strange to say, it meeteth not with favor from any brethren of the shell. Even Moore shakes his head, and firmly believes that it is the grand age of British poetry.'"—MOORE.

‡ In 1813 Mr. Moore published "The Two-penny Post-bag; by Thomas Brown the Younger" and in 1815, "The Fudge Family in Paris."

§ "Let Sporus tremble.—A. What! that thing of alk, Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk?
Satire or sense, alas! I can Sporus feel?
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?"

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

tations, both intended for some of my old classical friends who have still enough of Cambridge about them to think themselves honored by having had John Dryden as a predecessor in their college, and to recollect that their earliest English poetical pleasures were drawn from the "little nightingale" of Twickenham. The first is from the notes of the poem of the "Friends."

It is only within the last twenty or thirty years that those notable discoveries in criticism have been made which have taught our recent versifiers to undervalue the allegorical, melodious, and moral poet. The consequences of this want of due esteem for a writer whom the good sense of our predecessors had raised to his proper station have been NUMEROUS AND DEGRADING ENOUGH. This is not the place to enter into the subject, even as far as it affects our poetical numbers alone, and there is matter of more importance than requires present reflection.

The second is from the volume of a young person learning to write poetry, and beginning by teaching the art. Hear him:†

"But ye were dead
To things ye knew not of—were closely wed
To musty laws lined out with wretched rule
And compass vile; so that ye taught a school
Of dots to smooth, ink, and ship, and fit,
Till, like the certain wands of Jacob's wit,
Their verses failed. Easy was the task:
A thousand handiworkmen wore the mask
Of poetry. Ill-fated, impious race,
That blaspheamed the bright lyric to his face,
And did not know it; no, they went about
Holding a poor deceitful standard out
Mark'd with most filthy mottoes, and in large
The name of one Boleyn!"

† Written by Lord Byron's early friend, the Rev. Francis Hodgson.

‡ In a manuscript note on this passage of the pamphlet, dated Nov. 13, 1821, Lord Byron says:—"Mr. Keats died at Rome about a year after this was written, of a decline produced by his having burst a blood-vessel on reading the article on his 'Endymion' in the Quarterly Review. I have read the article before and since; and although it is bitter, I do not think that a man should permit himself to be killed by it. But a young man little dreams what he must inevitably encounter in the course of a life ambitious of public notice. My indignation at Mr. Keats's depreciation of Pope has hardly permitted me to do justice to his own genius, which, malgré all the fantastic fopperies of his style, was undoubtedly of great promise. His fragment of 'Hyperion' seems actually inspired by the Titans, and is as sublime as Æschylus. He is a loss to our literature; and the more so, as he himself, before his death, is said to have been persuaded that he had not taken the right line, and was re-forming his style upon the more classical models of the ancients."

§ It was at least a premonition "school."

|| So spelt by the author.

¶ As a balance to these lines, and to the sense and sentiment of the new school, I will put down a passage or two from Pope's earliest poems, taken at random:—

"Envy her own snakes shall feel,
And Persecution mourn her broken wheel.
There Faction raves, Rebellion lifts her chain,
And gasping Furies thirst for blood in vain."

"Ah! what avails his glory varying dye,
His purple crest, and scarlet-crested eye;
The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,
His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold?"

"Round broken columns clamping ivy twined,
O'er heaps of ruin stalk'd the stately hind;
The fat obscene to gaudy tombs retired,
And savage howlings fill the secret quire."

"Hail, bards triumphant! born in happier days;
Immortal heirs of universal praise!
Whose honors with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow;
Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
And worlds applaud that must not yet be found!
Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meaneast of your sons inspire
(That on weak wings, from far purveys your flights;
Glow while he reads, but trembles as he writes),

A little before, the manner of Pope is termed

"A scam.
Nurtured by foppery and barbarism,
Made great Apollo blush for this his land."†

I thought "foppery" was a consequence of refinement! but n'importe.

The above will suffice to show the notions entertained by the new performers on the English lyre of him who made it most valuable, and the great improvements of their own "variation!"

The writer of this is a tadpole of the Lakes, a young disciple of the six or seven new schools, in which he has learnt to write such lines and such sentiments as the above. He says "easy was the task" of imitating Pope, or it may be of equalling him, I presume. I recommend him to try before he is so positive on the subject, and then compare what he will have then written and what he has now written with the humblest and earliest compositions of Pope, produced in years still more youthful than those of Mr. Keats when he invented his new "Essay on Criticism," entitled "Sleep and Poetry" (an ominous title), from whence the above canons are taken. Pope's was written at nineteen, and published at twenty-two.

Such are the triumphs of the new schools, and such their scholars. The disciples of Pope were Johnson, Goldsmith, Rogers, Campbell, Crabbe, Gifford, Matthias,† Hayley, and the author of the Paradise of Coquet;‡ to whom may be added Richards, Heber, Wrangham, Bland, Hodgson, Merivale, and others who have not had their full fame, because "the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong," and because there is a fortune in fame as in all other things. Now, of all the new schools—I say all, for, "like

To teach vain wits a science little known,
I admire superior sense, and doubt their own!"

"Amphion there the loud creating lyre
Strikes, and behold a sudden Thebes aspires;
Cithæron's echoes answer to his call,
And half the mountain rolls into a wall."

"So Zambra's rocks, the baseless work of frost,
Rise white in air, and glitter o'er the coast;
Pale seas, unfeil, at distance roll away,
And on th' impetuous loes the lightning play;
Eternal snows the growing mass supply,
Till the bright mountains prop the incumbent sky,
As Atlas fix'd, each hoary pile appears,
The gather'd winter of a thousand years."

"Thus, when we view some well-proportion'd dome,
The world's just wonder, and even thine, O Rome!
No single parts unequally surprise,
All comes united to the admiring eye:
No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appears;
The whole at once is bold and regular."

A thousand similar passages crowd upon me, all composed by Pope before his two-and-thirtieth year; and yet it is contended that he is no poet, and we are told so in such lines as I beg the reader to compare with these godly verses of the "no poet." Must we repeat the question of Johnson, "If Pope is not a poet, where is poetry to be found?" Even in descriptive poetry, the lowest department of the art, he will be found, on a fair examination, to surpass any living writer.

¶ Thomas James Matthias, Esq., the well-known author of the Pursuits of Literature, Imperial Epistle to Ellen Long, &c. In 1814, Mr. M. edited an edition of Gray's Works, which the University of Cambridge published at its own expense. Lord Byron did not admire this venerable poet the less for such criticisms as the following:—"After we have paid our primal homage to the bards of Greece and of ancient Latium, we are invited to contemplate the literary and poetical dignity of modern Italy. If the influence of their persuasion and of their example should prevail, a strong and steady light may be relumed and diffused amongst us, a light which may once again conduct the powers of our rising poets from solid whirling words, from crude, rapid, and uncorrected productions, from an overweening presumption, and from the delusive conceits of a pre-established reputation, to the labor of thought, to patient and repeated revision of what they write, to a reverence for themselves and for an enlightened public, and to the fixed subsiding principles of legitimate composition."—Preface to Gray.

‡ Dr. Thomas Brown, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, who died in 1839.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

Legion, they are many"—has there appeared a single scholar who has not made his master ashamed of him? unless it be Sotheby, who has imitated everybody, and occasionally surpassed his models. Scott found peculiar favor and imitation among the fair sex: there was Miss Holford,* and Miss Mitford,† and Miss Francis;‡ but, with the greatest respect be it spoken, none of his imitators did much honor to the original, except Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, until the appearance of "The Bridal of Triermain" and "Harold the Dauntless," which in the opinion of some equalled if not surpassed him; and lo! after three or four years they turned out to be the Master's own compositions. Have Southey, or Coleridge, or t'other fellow, made a follower of renown? Wilson never did well till he set up for himself in the "City of the Plagues." Has Moore, or any other living writer of reputation, had a tolerable imitator, or rather disciple? Now, it is remarkable, that almost all the followers of Pope, whom I have named, have produced beautiful and standard works; and it was not the number of his imitators who finally hurt his fame, but the despair of imitation, and the ease of not imitating him sufficiently. This, and the same reason which induced the Athenian burglar to vote for the banishment of Aristides, "because he was tired of always hearing him called the Just," have produced the temporary exile of Pope from the State of Literature. But the term of his ostracism will expire, and the sooner the better, not for him, but for those who banished him, and for the coming generation, who

* Will think to find their fathers were his foes."

I will not return to the writer of the article which has drawn forth these remarks, whom I honestly take to be John Wilson, a man of great powers and acquirements, well known to the public as the author of the "City of the Plagues," "Isle of Palma," and other productions. I take the liberty of naming him, by the same species of courtesy which has induced him to designate me as the author of Don Juan. Upon the score of the Lake Poets, he may perhaps recall to mind that I merely express an opinion long ago entertained and specified in a letter to Mr. James Hogg,§ which he the said James Hogg, somewhat contrary to the law of pens, showed to Mr. John Wilson, in the year 1814, as he himself informed me in his answer, telling me by way of apology that 'he'd be d—d if he could help it; and I am not conscious of anything like "envy" or "exasperation" at this moment which induces me to think better or worse of Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge as poets than I do now, although I do know one or two things more which have added to my contempt for them as individuals.

And in return for Mr. Wilson's invective, I shall content myself with asking one question: Did he never compose, recite, or sing any parody or parodies upon the Psalms (of what nature this dependent hath not), in certain jovial meetings of the youth of Edinburgh? It is not that I think any great harm if he did; because it seems to me that all depends upon the intention of such a parody. If it be meant to throw ridicule on the sacred original, it is a sin; if it be intended to burlesque the profane subject, or to inculcate a moral truth, it is none. If it were the Unbelievers' Creed, the many political parodies of various parts of the Scriptures and liturgy, particularly a celebrated one of the Lord's Prayer, and the beautiful moral parable in favor of toleration by Franklin, which has often been taken for a real extract from Genesis, would all be sins of a damning nature. But I wish to know if Mr. Wilson ever has done this, and if he has, why he should be so very angry with similar portions of Don Juan?—Did no "parody profane" appear in any of the earlier numbers of Blackwood's Magazine?

* Author of "Wallace, or the Fight of Falkirk," "Margaret of Anjou," and other poems.

† Miss Mary Russell Mitford, author of "Christina, or the Maid of the South Sea," "Wallington Hall," "Our Village," etc. etc.

‡ Miss Eliza Francis published, in 1815, "Sir William de Waverley, or the Bridal Eve."

§ "Oh! I have had the most amusing letter from Hogg, the Ettrick minstrel and shepherd. He wants me to recommend him to Murray; and, speaking of his present bookeller, whose 'bills' are never 'frid,' he adds, adieu cordis, 'God d—n him and them both.' I laughed, and so would you too, at the way in which this execration is introduced. The said Hogg is a strange being, but of great, though uncouth, powers. I think very highly of him as a poet; but he, and half of these Scotch and Lake troubadours, are spoilt by living in little circles and petty societies."—Byron Letters.

¶ "This is one of the many mistakes into which his distance from

I will now conclude this long answer to a short article, repenting of having said so much in my own defence, and a little on the 'crying, left-hand failings off and national defections' of the poetry of the present day. Having said this, I can hardly be expected to defend Don Juan, or any other "Motte" poetry, and shall not make the attempt. And although I do not think that Mr. John Wilson has in the instance treated me with candor or consideration, I trust that the tone I have used in speaking of him personally will prove that I bear him as little malice as I really believe at the bottom of his heart he bears towards me; but the duties of an editor, like those of a tax-gatherer, are paramount and peremptory. I have done.

BYRON.

NOTE 51.

See page 799."

LORD BACON'S APOPHORETISMS.

BACON'S APOPHORETISMS.

51.

Michael Angelo, the famous painter, painting in the pope's chapel the portraiture of hell and damned souls, made one of the damned souls so like a cardinal that was his enemy, as everybody at first sight knew it: whereupon the cardinal complained to Pope Clement, humbly praying it might be defaced. The pope said to him, Why, you know very well I have power to deliver a soul out of purgatory, but not out of hell.

52.

Alexander, after the battle of Granicum, had very great offers made him by Darius. Consulting with his captains concerning them, Parmenio said, Sure, I would accept of these offers, if I were as Alexander. Alexander answered, So would I, if I were as Parmenio.

53.

Antigonus, when it was told him that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that they did hide the sun, said, That falls out well, for it is hot weather, and so we shall fight in the shade.

54.

There was a philosopher that disputed with Adrian the emperor, and did it so weakly. One of his friends that stood by afterwards said unto him, Methinks you were not like yourself last day, in argument with the emperor; I could have answered better myself. Why, said the philosopher, would you have me contend with him that commands thirty legions?

OBSERVATIONS.

This was not the portrait of a cardinal, but of the pope's master of the ceremonies.

It was after the battle of Issus and during the siege of Tyro, and not immediately after the passage of the Granicus, that this is said to have occurred.

This was not said by Antigonus, but by a Spartan, previously to the battle of Thermopylae.

This happened under Augustus Cæsar, and not during the reign of Adrian.

the scene of literary operations led him. The gentleman to whom the hostile article in the Magazine is here attributed has never either then or since, written upon the subject of the noble poet's character or genius without giving vent to a feeling of admiration as enthusiastic as it is always eloquently and powerfully expressed."

—MOORE.

¶ The allusion here is to some now forgotten calumnies which had been circulated by the radical press, at a time when Mr. Wilson was a candidate for the chair of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh.

—Ordered Fletcher (at four o'clock this afternoon) to copy out seven or eight apophthegms of Bacon in which I have detected such blunders as a schoolboy might detect rather than commit. Such are the ages! What must they be, when such as I can stumble upon their mistakes or misstatements? I will go to bed, for I find that I grow cynical."—Byron Diary, Jan. 8, 1821.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

111.

There was one that found a great mass of money digging underground in his grandfather's house, and being somewhat doubtful of the case, signified it to the emperor. The emperor made a receipt thus: Use it. He writ back again, that the sum was greater than his state or condition could use. The emperor writ a new receipt thus: Adusus il.

112.

One of the seven was wont to say, that laws were like cobwebs: where the small flies were caught, and the great break through.

113.

An orator of Athens said to Demosthenes, The Athenians will kill you if they wax mad. Demosthenes replied, And they will kill you if they be in good sense.

114.

There was a philosopher about Tiberius that, looking into the nature of Calus, said of him, That he was mine mingled with blood.

115.

There was a king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner: whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church and taken his son; the king sent an embassy to him, and went withal the armor wherein the bishop was taken, and this only in writing—Vide sum hoc et cetera Shu tat? Know now whether this be thy son's coat?

116.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king.

VOLTAIRE.

Having stated that Bacon was frequently incorrect in his citations from history, I have thought it necessary, in what regards so great a name (however trifling), to support the assertion by such facts as more immediately occur to me. They are but trifles, and yet for such trifles a schoolboy would be whipped (if still in the fourth form); and Voltaire for half a dozen similar errors has been treated as a superficial writer, notwithstanding the testimony of the learned Warton:—"Voltaire, a writer of much deeper research than is imagined, and the first who has displayed the literature and customs of the dark ages with any degree of penetration and

This happened to the father of Herodes Atticus, and the answer was made by the emperor Nero, who deserved that his name should have been stated by the "greatest, wisest, meanest of mankind."

This was said by Anacharsis the Scythian, and not by a Greek.

This was not said by Demosthenes, but to Demosthenes, by Phocion.

This was not said of Calus (Calligula, I presume, is intended by Calus), but of Tiberius himself.

This reply was not made by a king of Hungary, but sent by Richard the First, Count de Lion, of England, to the pope, with the breastplate of the bishop of Beauvais.

This did not happen to Demetrius, but to Philip king of Macedon.

comprehension."* For another distinguished testimony to Voltaire's merits in literary research, see also Lord Holland's excellent Account of the Life and Writings of Lope de Vega, vol. i., p. 314, edition of 1817.

Voltaire has even been termed "a shallow fellow," by some of the same school who called Dryden's Ode "a drunken song;"—a school (as it is called, I presume, from their education being still incomplete) the whole of whose filthy trash of Epics, Brourasias, etc., etc., etc., is not worth the two words in Zaire, "Vous pleurez," or a single speech of Tancréd:—a school the apostate lives of whose renegadoes, with their tea-drinking neutrality of morals, and their convenient treachery in politics—in the record of their accumulated pretences to virtue can produce no actions (were all their good deeds drawn up in array) to equal or approach the sole defence of the family of Calus, by that great and unequalled genius—the universal Voltaire.

I have ventured to remark on these little inaccuracies of "the greatest genius that England, or perhaps any other country, ever produced," I merely to show our national injustice in condemning generally the greatest genius of France for such inadvertencies as these, of which the highest of England has been no less gullible. Query, was Bacon a greater intellect than Newton?

CAMPBELL.

Being in the humor of criticism, I shall proceed, after having ventured upon the alps of Bacon, to touch upon one or two as trifling in their edition of the British Poets, by the justly celebrated Campbell. But I do this in good will, and trust it will be so taken. If anything could add to my opinion of the talents and true feeling of that gentleman, it would be his classical, honest, and triumphant defence of Pope against the vulgar cant of the day, and its existing Great street.

The inadvertencies to which I allude are,—Firstly, in speaking of Anstey, whom he accuses of having taken "his leading characters from Smollett." Anstey's Bath Guide was published in 1788. Smollett's Humphrey Clinker (the only work of Smollett's from which Tablins, etc., etc., could have been taken) was written during Smollett's last residence at Leghorn in 1770—"argal," if there has been any borrowing, Anstey must be the creditor, and not the debtor. I refer Mr. Campbell to his own data in his lives of Smollett and Anstey.

Secondly, Mr. Campbell says in the life of Cowper (note to page 253, vol. vii.) that he knows not to whom Cowper alludes in these lines:—

"Nor he who, for the bane of thousands born, Bullt God a church, and laugh'd his word to scorn."

The Calvinist meant Voltaire, and the church of Farnsey, with its inscription "Deo erexit Voltaire."

Thirdly, in the life of Burns, Mr. Campbell quotes Shakspeare thus:—

"To gild refined gold, to paint the rose,
Or add fresh perfume to the violet."

This version by no means improves the original, which is as follows:—

"To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet," etc.—King John.

might would find it difficult to produce a critic in any modern language who, in speaking of foreign literature, is better informed or more candid than Voltaire; and they certainly never would be able to discover one who to those qualities unites so much sagacity and liveliness. His enemies would fain persuade us that such exuberance of wit implies a want of information; but they only succeed in showing that a want of wit by no means implies an exuberance of information.—Lord Holland.

Il est trop vrai que l'honneur me l'ordonne,
Que je vous adore, que je vous abandonne,
Que je renonce à vous, que vous le desirés,
Que sous mes astres loi . . . Zaire, vous pleurez?"

Zaire, acte iv., sc. II.

I Pope, in Spence's Anecdotes, p. 168; Malone's edition.

† Read Campbell's Poets. Corrected Tom's slips of the pen. A good work, though—style affected—but his defence of Pope is glorious. To be sure, it is his own cause too—but no matter, it is very good, and does him great credit.—Byron Diary, Jan. 10, 1837.

* "If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shined,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind."—Pope.

† Dissertation I.

‡ Till Voltaire appeared, there was no nation more ignorant of its neighbors' literature than the French. He first exposed, and then corrected, this neglect in his countrymen. There is no writer to whom the authors of other nations, especially of England, are so indebted for the extension of their fame in France, and, through France, in Europe. There is no critic who has employed more time, wit, ingenuity, and diligence in promoting the literary intercourse between country and country, and in celebrating in one language the triumphs of another. Yet, by a strange fatality, he is constantly represented as the enemy of all literature but his own; and Spaniards, Englishmen, and Italians vie with each other in inveighing against his occasional exaggeration of faulty passages; the authors of which, till he pointed out their beauties, were hardly known beyond the country in which their language was spoken. Those who feel such indignation at his misrepresentations and over-

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

A great poet quoting another should be correct; he should also be accurate, when he accuses a Parnassian brother of that dangerous charge "borrowing;" a poet had better borrow anything (excepting money) than the thoughts of another—they are always sure to be reclaimed; but it is very hard, having been the lender, to be denounced as the debtor, as is the case of Anstey versus Smollett.

As there is "honor amongst thieves," let there be some amongst poets, and give each his due,—none can afford to give it more than Mr. Campbell himself, who, with a high reputation for originality, and a fame which cannot be shaken, is the only poet of the times (except Rogers) who can be reproached (and to him it is indeed a reproach) with having written too Mills.

RAVENNA, Jan. 6, 1851.

NOTE 52.

CONTINUATION OF LORD BYRON'S CONVERSATIONS WITH MR. MEDWIN, ESQ., COMPLETED WITH A PORTION OF HIS LORDSHIP'S CORRESPONDENCE.

The volume of "Lord Byron's Conversations" with Mr. Medwin contains several statements relative to Mr. Murray, his lordship's publisher, against which, however exceptionable they might be, he was willing to trust his defence to the private testimony of persons acquainted with the real particulars, and to his general character, rather than resort to any kind of public appeal, to which he has ever been exceedingly averse. But friends to whose judgment Mr. Murray is bound to defer, having decided that such an appeal upon the occasion is become a positive duty on his part, he hopes that he shall not be thought too obtrusive in opposing to those personal allegations extracts from Lord Byron's own letters, with the addition of a few brief notes of necessary explanations.

CAPT. MEDWIN, p. 167.

"Murray offered me, of his own accord, one thousand pounds a canto for Don Juan, and afterwards reduced it to five hundred pounds on the plea of piracy, and complained of my dividing one canto into two, because I happened to say something at the end of the third canto of having done so."

LORD BYRON'S LETTER.

"RAVENNA, February 7, 1820.

"DEAR MURRAY:—

"I have copied and cut the third canto of Don Juan into two, because it was too long, and I tell you this beforehand, because in case of any reckoning between you and me, these two are only to go for own, as this was the original form, and in fact the two together are not longer than one of the first; so remember, that I have not made this division to double upon you, but merely to suppress some tediousness in the aspect of the thing. I should have served you a pretty trick if I had sent you, for example, cantos of fifty stanzas each."

CAPT. MEDWIN, p. 169.

"I don't wish to quarrel with Murray, but it seems inevitable. I had no reason to be pleased with him the other day. Galignani wrote to me, offering to purchase the copyright of my works, in order to obtain an exclusive privilege of printing them in France. I might have made my own terms, and put the money in my own pocket; instead of which, I enclosed Galignani's letter to Murray, in order that he might conclude the matter as he pleased. He did so, very advantageously for his own interest; but never had the complaisance, the common politeness, to thank me, or acknowledge my letter."

LORD BYRON'S LETTER.

"RAVENNA, 9th 4, 1820.

"I have received from Mr. Galignani the enclosed letters, duplicates, and receipts, which will explain themselves. As the poems are your property by purchase, right, and justice, ALL MATTERS OF PUBLICATION, etc., etc., ARE FOR YOU TO DECIDE UPON. I know not how far my compliance with Mr. G.'s request might be legal, and I doubt that it would not be honest. In case you choose to arrange with him, I enclose the permits to you, and in so doing I wash my hands of the business altogether. I sign them merely to enable you to exert the power you justly possess more properly. I will have nothing to do with it further, except in my answer to Mr. Galignani, to state that the letters, etc., etc., are sent to you, and the cause thereof. If you can check these foreign pirats, do; if not, put the permitted papers in the fire. I can have no view nor object whatever but to secure to you your property."

643

NOTE.—Mr. Murray derived no advantage from the proposed agreement, which was by no means of the importance here ascribed to it, and therefore was never attempted to be carried into effect: the documents alluded to are still in his possession.

CAPT. MEDWIN, pp. 169-171.

"Murray has long prevented the 'Quarterly' from abusing me. Some of their bullies have had their fingers itoken so be at me; but they would get the worst of it in a set-to."

"Murray and I have dissolved all connection: he had the choice of giving up me or the Navy List. There was no hesitation which way he should decide: the Admiralty carried the day. Now for the Quarterly: their batteries will be opened; but I can fire broadsides too. They have been letting off lots of squibs and crackers against me, but they only make a noise and o o o."

"Werner's was the last book Murray published for me, and three months after came out the Quarterly's article on my plays, when 'Marino Faliero' was noticed for the first time."

LORD BYRON'S LETTER.

"GENOVA, 20th 25, 1820.

"I had sent you back the Quarterly without perusal, having resolved to read no more reviews, good, bad, or indifferent; but who can control his fate? 'Galignani,' to whom my English studies are confined, has forwarded a copy of at least one-half of it in his indefatigable weekly compilation, and as, 'like honor, it came unlooked for,' I have looked through it. I must say that upon the whole—that is, the whole of the HALF which I have read (for the other half is to be the segment of Gal's next week's circular—it is certainly handsome, and anything but unkind or unfair."

NOTE.—The passage about the Admiralty is unfounded in fact, and no otherwise deserving of notice than to mark its absurdity; and with regard to the "Quarterly Review," his lordship well knew that it was established, and constantly conducted, on principles which absolutely excluded Mr. Murray from all such interference and influence as is implied in the "Conversations."

CAPT. MEDWIN, p. 168.

"Because I gave Mr. Murray one of my poems, he wanted to make me believe that I had made him a present of two others, and hinted at some lines in 'English Bards' that were certainly upon that point. But I have altered my mind considerably upon that subject; as I once hinted to him, I see no reason why a man should not profit by the sweat of his brain as well as that of his brow, etc.; besides, I was poor at that time, and have no idea of aggrandizing booksellers."

LORD BYRON'S LETTER.

"JANUARY 2, 1816.

"DEAR SIR:—

"Your offer is liberal in the extreme, and much more than the two poems can possibly be worth—but I cannot accept it, nor will not. You are most welcome to them, as additions to the collected volumes, without any demand or expectation on my part whatever.

BYRON.

"P. S.—I have enclosed your draft TORN, for fear of accidents by the way.—I wish you would not throw temptation in mine; it is not from a disdain of the universal idol—for from a present superfluity of his treasures—I can assure you, that I refuse to worship him—but what is right is right, and must not yield to circumstances.

"To J. MURRAY, Esq."

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

NOTE.—The above letter relates to a draft for one thousand guineas, offered by Mr. Murray for two poems, the Siege of Corinth and Parisina, which his lordship had previously, at a short interval, presented to Mr. Murray as donations.—Lord Byron was afterwards induced, by Mr. Murray's earnest persuasion, to accept the thousand guineas, and Mr. Murray has his lordship's assignment of the copyright of the two poems accordingly.

CAPT. MERVIL B. 100

"Murray pretends to have lost money by my writings, and pleads poverty; but if he is poor, which is somewhat problematical to me, pray who is to blame?"

"Mr. Murray is tender of my fame. How kind in him! He is afraid of my writing too fast. Why? because he has a tender regard for his own pocket, and does not like the look of any new acquaintance in the shape of a book of mine, till he has seen his old friends in a variety of new faces; in me, disposed of a vast many editions of the former works. I don't know what would become of me without Douglas Kinnaird, who has always been my best and kindest friend. It is not easy to deal with Mr. Murray."

NOTE.—In the numerous letters received by Mr. Murray yearly from Lord Byron (who, in writing them, was not accustomed to restrain the expression of his feelings), not one has any tendency towards the imputation here thrown out: the incongruity of which will be evident from the fact of Mr. Murray having paid at various times, for the copyright of his lordship's poems, sums amounting to upwards of fifteen thousand pounds. viz.

Odette Harold, I., II.	1.25
Odette Harold, III.	1.25
Odette Harold, IV.	3.50
Oleander	.85
Oleander	.85
Oleander	.85
Lara	7.00
Sheep of Corinth	.85
Portents	.85
Lament of Tasso	.85
Ministry	1.10
Deeds	1.10
Don Juan I., II.	1.25
Don Juan III., IV., V.	1.50
Dogs of Venice	1.60
Bardanzapala, Cain, and Poesari	1.50
Midnight	.85
Children	.85
Reveries	.85
Flowers of Kleran, English Birds and Scotch Re- veries, Hints from Horace, Warner, Deformed Transformed, Heaven and Earth, etc.	8.25
Life by Thomas Moore	4.50

CAPT. MERWIN B. FRO

"My differences with Murray are not over. When he purchased 'Cain,' 'The Two Foscari,' and 'Sardanapalus,' he sent me a deed, which you may remember witnessing. Well; after its return to England it was discovered that

Noz—Mr. Murray of course cannot answer the statement which he does not see; but pledges himself to disprove any accusation the suppressed passage may contain, whenever disclosed. He has written twice to Captain Medwin's publisher, desiring, as an act of justice, to have the passage printed entire in any new edition of the book, and in the mean time to be favored with a copy of it. As this has not yet been obtained, and as the context seems to imply that it would be a disadvantage to make so conspicuous an advantage of Lord Byron, he thinks he shall be forgiven for stating the following circumstances.

Mr. Murray having accidentally heard that Lord Byron was in pecuniary difficulties, immediately forwarded fifteen hundred pounds to him, with an assurance that another such sum should be at his service in a few months; and that, if such assistance should not be sufficient, Mr. Murray would be ready to sell the copyright of all his lordship's works for his use.

The following is Lord Byron's acknowledgment of this offer:

* NOVEMBER 14, 1934

"DEAR BEN:"

I return you your bills not accepted, but certainly not UNRECORDED. Your present offer is a favor which I would accept from you if I accepted such from any man. Had such been my intention, I can assure you I would have asked you fairly and as freely as you would give; and I cannot say more of my confidence or your conduct. The circumstances which have attended the business of the day, have not permitted me not IMMEDIATELY pressing I have made up my mind to do so, and there is an end. Had I been disposed to trespass on your kindness in this way, it would have been before now; but I am not sorry to have an opportunity of declining it, as it sets my opinion of you, and indeed of human nature, in a different light from that in which I have been accustomed to consider it.

"Believe me, very truly,

"Your obliged and faithful servant.

"BYRON."

"TO JOHN MURRAY, Esq."

NOTE.—That nothing had occurred to subvert these friendly sentiments will appear from the three letters subjoined, the second of them written by Lord Byron a few weeks before his death, and the last addressed by his lordship's valet to Mr. Murray as one of his deceased master's most confidential friends.

Long Brown's Letters

" MAY 2, 1812.

"I have a great respect for your good and gentlemanly qualities, and return your personal friendship towards me. You deserve and possess the esteem of those whose esteem is worth having, and of none more (however useless it may be) than

"Yours, very truly,
"RYRON."

* Manuscript received Feb. 10, 1984.

"I have heard from Mr. Douglas Kinnaird that you state a report of a satire on Mr. Gifford having arrived from Italy, said to be written by us, but that you do not believe it; I dare say you do not, nor anybody else, I should think. Whoever asserts that I am the author or abettor of anything of the kind on Gifford, lies in his throat: I always regarded him as my literary father, and myself as his prodigal son. If any such composition exists, it is none of mine. You know, as well as anybody, upon whom I have or have not written, and you also know whether they do or did not deserve the name—and as much for such matters.

"You will, perhaps, be anxious to hear some news from this part of Greece (which is most liable to invasion), but you will hear enough through public and private channels, on that head. I will, however, give you the events of a week, mingling my own private peculiar with the public, for we are here tumbled a little together at present.

On Sunday (the 11th), I had a strong and sudden convulsive attack which left me speechless, though not motionless, for some strong men could not hold me; but whether it was epilepsy, catalepsy, cachexy, apoplexy, or what other cry or cry the doctors have not decided, or whether it was spasmodic or nervous, etc.: but it was very unpleasant, and nearly carried me off, and all that. On Monday they put leeches to my temple, no difficult matter, but the blood could not be stopped till eleven at night (they had gone too near the temporal artery for my temporal safety), and neither styptic nor caustic would cauterise the orifice till after a hundred attempts.

"On Tuesday, a Turkish brig of war ran on shore. On Wednesday, great preparations being made to attack her, though prevented by a contrary wind, the Turks burned her, and retired. Patrols on Thursday, a quarrel ensued between the Sullitos and the Frank guard at the arsenal; a Swedish officer was killed, and a Sullito severely wounded, and a general fight expected, and with some difficulty prevented. On Friday, the officer buried, and Captain Parry's English artillery mutinied, under pretence that their lives were in danger, and are for quitting the country—they may. On Saturday, we had the smartest shock of an earthquake which I remember (and I have felt thirty, alright or smart, at different periods; they are common in the Mediterranean, and the whole army discharged their arms upon the same principle that savages beat drums or howl, during an eclipse of the moon: it was a rare scene altogether. If you had but seen the English Johnnies, who had never been out of a Cookney workshop before, nor will again if they can help it! And on Sunday we heard that the vizier is come down to Larissa with one hundred and odd thousand men.

NOTES TO DON JUAN.

"In coming here I had two escapes, from the Turks (one of my vessels was taken, but afterwards released), and the other from shipwreck; we drove twice on the rocks near the Scrophes (islands near the coast).

"I have obtained from the Greeks the release of eight and twenty Turkish prisoners, men, women, and children, and sent them to Patras and Prevesa at my own charges. One little girl of nine years old, who proposes remaining with me, I shall (if I live) send with her mother, probably, to Italy, or to England, and adopt her. Her name is Hato Hatagee; she is a very pretty lively child. All her brothers were killed by the Greeks, and she herself and her mother were spared by special favor, and owing to her extreme youth, she being then but five or six years old.

"My health is rather better, and I can ride about again. My office here is no secure—so many parties and difficulties of every kind; but I will do what I can. Prince Mavrocordati is an excellent person, and does all in his power; but his situation is perplexing in the extreme: still we have great hopes of the success of the contest. You will bear, however, more of public news from plenty of quarters, for I have little time to write. Believe me

"Yours, etc., etc.,
N. B.

"To John Murray, Esq."

LETTER OF LORD BYRON'S VALET.*

"MISOLOGIST, April 21, 1824.

"Sir:—

"Forgive me for this intrusion which I now am under the painful necessity of writing to you, to inform you of the melancholy news of my Lord Byron, who is no more. He departed this miserable life on the 19th of April, after an illness of only ten days. His lordship began by a nervous fever, and terminated with an inflammation on the brain, for want of being bled in time, which his lordship refused till it was too late. I have sent the Hon. Mrs. Leigh's letter inclosed in yours, which I think would be better for you to open and explain to Mrs. Leigh, for I fear the contents of the letter will be too much for her. And you will please to inform Lady Byron and the Honorable Miss Byron, whom I am wished to see when I return with my lord's effects, and his dear and noble remains: sir, you will please manage in the mildest way possible, or I am much afraid of the consequences.

* See note (†), page 4.

quences. Sir, you will please give my duty to Lady Byron: hoping she will allow me to see her, by my lord's particular wish, and Miss Byron likewise. Please to excuse all defects, for I scarcely know what I either say or do, for after twenty years' service with my lord, he was more to me than a father, and I am too much distressed to now give a correct account of every particular, which I hope to do at my arrival in England.—Sir, you will likewise have the goodness to forward the letter to the Honorable Captain George Byron, who, as the representative of the family and title, I thought it my duty to send him a line. But you, sir, will please to explain to him all particulars, as I have not time, as the express is now ready to make his voyage day and night till he arrives in London.—I must, sir, praying forgiveness, and hoping at the same time that you will so far oblige me as to execute all my wishes, which I am well convinced you will not refuse.

"I remain, sir,
"Your most obedient and very humble servant,
"W. FLETCHER,

"Valet to the late L. B. for twenty years.
"P. S.—I mention my name and capacity that you may remember and forgive this, when you remember the quantity of times I have been at your house in Albemarle street.
"To John Murray, Esq."

NOTE.—Other letters from Lord Byron, of the same tenor and force with these now produced, might have been added. But it is presumed that these are sufficient to demonstrate in the present case, what has been demonstrated in many others, that desultory, ex-parte conversations, even if accurately reported, will often convey imperfect and erroneous notions of the speaker's real sentiments. JOHN MURRAY.

ALBEMARLE STREET, EDG. WOOD, 1824.

CAPT. MEDWIN, P. 178.

"My differences with Murray are not over. When he purchased 'Cain,' 'The Two Foscari,' and 'Sardanapalus,' he sent me a deed, which you may remember witnessing. Well; after its return to England, it was discovered that it contained a clause which had been introduced without my knowledge, a clause by which I bound myself to offer Mr. Murray all my future compositions. But I shall take no notice of it."

NOTE.—The words in italics are those which were suppressed in the two first editions of Captain Medwin's book, and which Mr. Murray has received from the publisher after the foregoing statement was printed. He has only to observe upon the subject, that on referring to the deed in question, no such clause is to be found; that this instrument was signed in London by the Hon. Douglas Kinnaird, as Lord Byron's procurator, and witnessed by Richard Williams, Esq., one of the partners in Mr. Kinnaird's banking-house; and that the signature of Captain Medwin is not affixed.

J. M.

THE PANTHEON, ROME.

(From a Photograph, 1824.)

Shrine of all saints and temple of all gods.
From Jove to Jesus.—Olden Herald, Sonnet CXLVI., Page 48.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

The figures in Roman numerals refer to the Life.

- Abelard, 140.
 Absentmindedness, 416, 447.
 Aberdeen, town of, 124, 551.
 Aberdeenshire (George Hamilton Gordon), fourth earl of, 345, 352.
 Abernethy, John, surgeon, 550.
 Abruzzi, 357.
 Absalom and Achitophel, 497, 544.
 Absence, results of, 480, 491.
 Absent friend, pleasure of demanding, 600.
 Abydos, Bridge of, 61.
 Accra, 19.
 Achelous, river, 18.
 Achéron, lake, 17.
 Achernus, lake, 17.
 Achilles, his person, 245. Tomb of, 508, 509.
 Achitophel, 444.
 Achmet III., 99.
 Acroceraunian mountains, 61.
 Acropolis of Athens, 12, 556, 604.
 Actium, 14. Sea-fight of, 14, 519.
 Ada. See Byron, Augusta-Ada, xxxii, xxxvi. Portrait of, xxxiii.
 Adams, John, a carrier, who died of drunkenness, epitaph on, 423.
 Addison, his "saint praises," 400.
 Address spoken at the opening of Drury Lane Theatre, 438.
 Address intended to be recited at the Cambridge Meeting, 440.
 Adieu, the; written under the impression that the author would soon die, 420.
 Adieu, adieu! my native shore, 4.
 Adieu to sweet Mary forever, 602.
 Admiration, 489, 512.
 Adrian's Address to his Soul when dying, translation of, 508.
 Adriatic, the, 35.
 Adversity, 567, 581.
 Advice, 471, 587.
 Ægean sea, 82, 382.
 Ægina, 37, 82, 382.
 Æschylus, translation from his "Prometheus Vincens," 307.
 Æleates, tomb of, 66.
 Æolus, 416.
 Ætna, 50.
 Æthiopia, 19.
 Africa and Africana, described, 502.
 Agamemnon, 459.
 Age, 22, 173.
 Age of Bronze; or, Carmen Seculare et Annus haud Mirabilis, 413.
 Age of Gold, 623.
 Ages, changes produced by the lapse of, 480, 489.
 Agestus, 187.
 Agis, king of Sparta, 183.
 Agilulf, Duke of Turin, 517.
 Aglietti, Dr., 53.
 Agostini, Leonardo, 512.
 Agrarian law, 552.
 Ajax, 18. Sepulchre of, 508.
 Alabaster, 184.
 Alban Hill, description of the, 48, 637.
 Alaric, 14, 383.
 Albania, 16, 606.
 Albanian dialect of the Illyric, specimens of, 608.
 Albanians, their character and manners, 18, 19. Their resemblance to the Highlanders of Scotland, 606.
 Albano, 48.
 Albano, Francesco, 575.
 Albion, sensations at the first sight of her chalky belt, 554.
 Albert, Countess, 448, xl.
 Albuera, battle of, 7, 12.
 Alcibiades, beauty of his person, 534.
 General charm of his name, 243. His character, 556.
 Alexander the Great, his sarcophagus, 414. His reply to Parmenio after the battle of Issus, 544.
 Alexander, emperor of Russia, 418, 526, 584.
 Alexander III., submission of Barbarossa to, 618.
 Alfieri, Vittorio, his life quoted, 33. His tomb in the church of Santa Croce, 39. His memory dear to the Italians, 612.
 Alfonso III., 37, 383, 394.
 Algiers, 469.
 Alhamra, 444.
 Ali Pacha of Yanina, 17, 18. His assassination, 18. His murder of Giuffrè, pacha of Argyro Castro, 67. Portrait of, xxxii.
 Ali is vanity, with the Presbyter, 872.
 Alla Hail 56, 584.
 Allegro (Lord Byron's natural daughter), 553, xxxiii, xli.
 Alliance, the Holy, 418, 519.
 Alphania, river, 17.
 Alpinella, Julia, her death, 26. Her affecting epitaph, 26.
 Alps, the, 28, 40.
 Alterkirchen, 27.
 Alypius, 24.
 Amber, susceptible of a perfume, 66.
 Ambition, 25, 26, 41, 162, 244, 548, 558.
 Ambrosian Gulf, Stanzas written in passing the, 429. Reflections on the past and present state of, 16.
 Ambrosian Library at Milan, 615.
 America, 42, 386, 442, 538, 556, 587, 628.
 Amitté et l'Amour sans Allée, 333.
 Amulet, the belief in, universal in the East, 66.
 Anacreon, his "Θάλας Ἀργεῖν Ἀρπάζειν" translated, 307. His Mevevovvovvov not some translated, 307. His morals worse than those of Ovid, 462.
 Anastasius Macedon, 698.
 Anastasius, Hope's, 553.
 Ancestry, 1x, 525. See Genealogical Table.
 And may'st thou that I have not felt, 602.
 And wilt thou weep when I am low? 426.
 And thou art dead, as young and fair, 494.
 And thou wert not, 578.
 Andalusian nobleman, adventures of, 461.
 Andernach, 27.
 Andersen, Hans, xxxix.
 Andrews, Miles Peter, Esq., his prologues, 348. Some account of, 348.
 Andromache, 419.
 Anent, 559.
 Angelo, Michael, his tomb in the church of Santa Croce, 38. His Last Judgment, 594. His copy of Dante, 595. Treatment of, by Julius II., 598. Neglect of, by Leo X., 398. Anecdote of, 446.
 Angelo, Saint, Castle of, 48, 262.
 Angelina, dancer, 347.
 Anger, 79, 472.
 Angling, the cruellest and stupidest of sports, 577.
 Anne, Lines to, 421.
 Annealey, hill near, 380.
 Annuitants, alleged longevity of, 478.
 Anstey's Bath Guide, 598, 647.
 Anstey, 161.
 Anthony, Saint, his recipe for hot blood, 463.
 Anti-Agnes, 644.
 Anti-Jacobin, 404.
 Antiochena, tomb of, 545.
 Antinous, his heroic death, 12.
 Antiochus Pius, 624.
 Antony, 18. His person described, 248. The slave of love, 496, 519.
 Apelles, 598.
 Apennines, 49, 589.
 Apollon, 409.
 Apollo, 493.
 Appenaroses, the joint on which good society hinges, 576.
 Applause, popular, 495.
 Arabs, life of the, 69.
 Ararat, Mount, 185.
 Arcadia, 607.
 Archidamas, 187.
 Archimedes, 584.
 Archipelago, 29, 189.
 Ardennes, forest of, 24.
 Armino, Pietro, 621.
 Argo, 65.
 Argus, Ulysses' dog, 491.
 Argyro Castro, 67.
 Ariosto, his bust, 37, 617. His person respected by the public robber, 648.
 Aristides, 646, xxi.
 Aristippus, 498.
 Aristotle, 467, 587.
 Arithmetical, poets of, 600.
 Armageddon, Townsend's, 556.
 Arms of the Byron family, xl. For Crest, see Genealogical Table.
 Army, 534.
 Army tailor, 547.
 Armoates, or Albanese, 606. Their resemblance to the Highlanders of Scotland, 606.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Arno, river, 23, 550.
 Arque, 24, 616.
 Art of Happiness, Horace's, 572.
 A spirit pass'd before me, 574.
 As o'er the cold sepulchral stone, 628.
 Asutral, 122.
 Askalon, 100.
 Asphaltes, lake, 25.
 Assassination, 1, 18, 65, 67, 226, 508, xiv.
 Assyria, 165, 198, 575. Banners of, 226.
 Asturias, 6.
 Atalantis, 523.
 Athenasian creed, 226.
 Athenians, character of the, 608.
 Athens, apostrophe to, 12. Reflections on the past and present condition of, 12. Its situation and climate, 15, 607. On the plunder of the works of art at, 14, 522, 523, 604. Engraving of Franciscan convent at, xiv.
 Athens, Maid of, 620. Portrait of, xiv.
 Athos, Mount, 15. Project for hewing it into a statue of Alexander, 522.
 Atlas, 40.
 Attie Bee, 506.
 Atticus, 251.
 Attilla, 184. His harangue to his army previous to the battle of Chalons, 529.
 Attributed Poems, 622, 608.
 Aungury, 469.
 Augustin, Stanzas to, 576. Epistle to, 577. xi; xiii. Engraving of the tomb erected by her to Lord Byron, see last page of the Life.
 Augustin, Saint, his commissions, 622, 528.
 Augustus Cæsar, 625.
 Auld lang syne, 557.
 Aurora Borealis, 497. Don Juan a verisimile, 557.
 Ausonius, battle of, 526.
 Ausonia, 121, 625.
 Autocrat, 545.
 Autumn, an English, described, 578.
 Avarice, a good old-gentlemanly vice, 474. Panegyric on, 523.
 Ave Maria! 497.
 Avenches, 23.
 Avenionum, 23.
 Away, away, ye notes of woe, 432.
 Away, ye gay landscapes, ye gardens of Rome! 524.
 A year ago you swore, 626, 444.

Babel, tower of, 511.
 Babylon, ruins of, 511.
 Babelus, 495, 502. Temple of, 625.
 Backwoodmen, Kentuckian, 528.
 Bacon, Friar, his brazen head, 474. The discoverer of gunpowder, 525.
 Bacon, Lord, 497, 524. Essay on Empire, 517. Inaccuracies in his Apophthegms, 644. Saying of, 578.
 Baille, Joanna, 124.
 Bailie, Dr. Matthew, 556. His visit to Lord Byron, 480. Remarkable for plainness of speech, 553, xiv.
 Bailii, Mayor of Paris, 198.
 Balgonnie, brig of, 561.
 Bailie, 554.
 Bandusian Fountain, 527.
 Banks, Sir Joseph, 2.
 Barbarossa, Frederic, his submission to Pope Alexander the Third, 25, 612.
 Barings, the, 523.
 Barnave, Pierre-Joseph, 456.
 Barossa, battle of, 364.
 Barrataria, account of the buccaneer establishment at, 623.
 Barry, Lodowick, 567.
 Barrow, Dr. Isaac, his sermons, 485.
 Barrow, Sir John, Life of Peter the Great, 126. His account of the cyanometer, 508.

Barthelemi, M., 529.
 Basilide, Lord Byron's Athenian servant, 226.
 Bashfulness, 62.
 Bath Guide, Anstey's, 526, 547.
 Bathurst, Captain, 430.
 Battle, 24, 75, 103, 104, 523, 524.
 Bavid and Mervid, extinguishment of the Della Cruscan by, the, 549.
 Baxter, Richard, 267. His Shove, 557.
 Bay of Biscay, 4.
 Bayard, Chevalier, 2, 220.
 Bayes, his expedient, 554.
 Beatrice of Dante, 524, 525, 620.
 Beaumont, Sir George, 625, 642.
 Beauty, 2, 2, 53, 54, 62, 63, 625, 624, 512, 521, 570, 523.
 Beachy, Rev. John, Answer to his complaints that one of Lord Byron's descriptions was rather too warmly drawn, 525. Lines addressed to, on his advising Lord Byron to mix more with society, 522, xz.
 Becket, Thomas, 4. his tomb in Canterbury Cathedral, 555.
 Beckford, William, Esq., his residence at Chiswick described, 5. Some account of, 102.
 Bed of Wars, 522.
 Bedlam, 524, 524.
 Behmen, Jacob, his ravens, 512.
 Belshazzar, 625. "A hero, conqueror, and cuckold," 428.
 Belshazzar, vision of, 573, 625. Lines to, 441.
 Bender, obstinacy of Charles XII. at, 541.
 Bentley, Dr. Richard, 522.
 Beppo, a Venetian Story, 118.
 Berkeley, Bishop, his skepticism concerning the existence of matter, 555.
 Berlin, 415, 554.
 Bernard, Saint, monks of, 511.
 Berni, the father of the Beppo style of writing, 525.
 Bernis, Abbe de, 554.
 Bernini, Maturin's tragedy of, 102.
 Betty, William Henry West (the young Roscius), 545.
 Bignamy, 541.
 Bigotry, 5, 141.
 Bile, energetic, described, 517.
 Biscay, Bay of, 4.
 Birds, belief that the souls of the dead inhabit the forms of, 71.
 Birena, of France, 554.
 Black Friar of Newstead Abbey, 525.
 Blackbourne, Archbishop, 525.
 Blackett, Joseph, the poetical oddier, 545, 550, 451.
 Blackmore, Sir Richard, 522.
 Black Prince, The, 321, 555.
 Blackwood's Magazine, Some Observations upon its remarks on Don Juan, 629. Critical notes from, passim.
 Blair, Dr., his Sermons, 426.
 Blake, fashionable tuncer, 523.
 Blanco Mt., 23.
 Black, Rev. Robert, his Collections from the Greek Anthology, 250, 645.
 Black verse, excellence of rhyme over, in English poetry, 473, 544.
 Blasphemy and Blasphemers, 512.
 Blessington, Countess of, Impropriety on her taking a villa called "Il Paradiso," 454. Lines written at the request of, 455, xvii, li, lii.
 Bligh, Captain, his Narrative of the Mutiny of the Bounty, 120.
 Blood, "only serves to wash ambition's heels," 542.
 Bloomfield, Nathaniel, 549, 550.
 Bloomfield, Robert, 549, 550.
 Blucher, Marshal, 527.

Blow devil, 526.
 Blue, instrument for measuring the intensity of, 504.
 Blue-sneaking, 620.
 Blue-sneaking Club, origin of, 420.
 Blues, 121, 625, 550, 550.
 Blue, The; a Literary Eulogium, 620.
 Bonaldi, 425.
 Bonaparte, Lord Byron's favorite dog, 45.
 Inscription on his monument, 625.
 Bonaparte, treatment of his ashes, 25. Defence of, 620.
 Boehm, Mrs., 120.
 Boetius, 5, 527.
 Bolina, his deprecation of Tamm, 624.
 Bolina, 521.
 Bolina, Anna, her remark on the seal, 524, 52.
 Bollingbroke, Lord, hires Mallet to seduce Pope, 544.
 Bolivar, Simon, 415.
 Bona, 554.
 Bona fortuna, 522.
 Bonnard, Francois de, account of, 112, 122.
 Booby, Lady, 512.
 Boon, Daniel, the Kentuckian backwoodman, 528.
 Borne, 578.
 Born in the garret, in the kitchen bed, 575.
 Borysthenes, the, 124.
 Boscon, Almogava, 425.
 Bosporus, the, 504.
 Boswell, James, Esq., 521.
 Botany Bay, 425.
 Bounty, witnesses of, the, 122.
 Bourbons, Duke of, Constable of France, 524, 251, 523.
 Boule-rimé, 524.
 Bowers, Mr. (Byron's school-teacher), xii.
 Bowles, Rev. William Lisle, The manila prince of mournful countenance, 512. His Spirit of Discovery, 523. Lines on his edition of Pope, 544.
 Bowling, 525.
 Bowman, 525.
 Brabant, John, singer, 572.
 Brandy for heroes! 121.
 Braxidas, 12, 54.
 Brax, Corinthian, 528.
 Brave, picture of the truly, 541.
 Bread fruit, 122.
 Brennan, 525.
 Brenta, 35, 124.
 Briars, 521.
 Bride of Abydos, 61.
 Bridge of Sighe, 54, 511.
 Brig of Balgonnie, 561.
 Bright be the place of thy soul! 428.
 Brighton, pavilion at, 544.
 Bristol de Warville, 425.
 Bristol, 544.
 British Critic, 525.
 British Review, the Old Girl's Review, 421.
 Lord Byron's Letter to the Editor of, 621.
 Brocken, superstition of the, 523.
 Brown wolf of Rome, 41, 623.
 Brougham, Henry, Esq. (Lord Brougham and Vaux), 525, 545, 22.
 Brown, Dr. Thomas, his Paradise of Coquette, 645.
 Brunsell, William, 522.
 Brunet, Professor, 523.
 Brunswick, Duke of, his death at Quatre Bras, 24.
 Brunsell, 24.
 Brunsell, 24, 525.
 Bryant, Jacob, on the existence of Trug, 508.
 Brunsell, 24, 120, 122.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Bradwell, Estace, his leap into the Thames, 361.
Brill light, description of a, 18, 11, 596.
Buenaparte, Jacopo, his "Stacco di Roma," 222.
Buenaparte, Lucian, his Charlemagne, 361.
Buenaparte, Napoleon, 286, 414, 462, 545, 554. The Triptolemus of the British farmer, 414. His exclamation on the loss of his old guard, 554. His character, 35. Odds to, 555. Lines on his escape from Elba, 445.
Burgess, tures and titles, discord's torches, 597.
Burgess, Sir James Bland, his epic of Richard the First sold to line trunks, 309, 545.
Burgoyne, General, 414.
Burke, Edmund, 2, 181.
Burns, Robert, What would he have been if a patrician? 349. His youthful pranks, 495.
Bushy, Thomas, Mrs. Doot, his monologue on the opening of Drury Lane Theatre, 555. Farcey on his monologue, 495.
Bute, Lord, 415.
Butler, Dr. (head-master at Harrow), 225, 251. Lines on his being appointed head-master at Harrow, 309.
By the river of Babylon, 374.
Byron, Sir John, the Little, with the great beard, 305.
Byron, two of the family of, at the siege of Calais and battle of Orewy, 305, x.
Byron, Sir Nicholas, his character by Lord Clarendon, 305, xxxiii.
Byron, Admiral John (grandfather of the poet), his proverbial ill-luck at sea, 377, x, xi. My grand-dad's Narrative, 498.
Byron, William, fifth lord (granduncle of the poet), 327, x.
Byron, Mrs. (mother of the poet), 361, xi, xii, xiii, xiv, xviii.
Byron, Honorable Augusta (sister of the poet), See Leigh, Honorable Augusta.
Byron, Lady, 545, 578, 579, 455, 456, 545. Lines on hearing that she was ill, 375. Lines on reading in the newspapers that she had been patroness of a charity ball, 462. To Jessy, 502. Portrait of, xxxi.
Byron, Honorable Augusta Ada (daughter of the poet), 22, 32, 375. Portrait of, xxxii.
Byron, John (father of the poet), xi, xii.
Byssatium, 35.
Cabot, Sebastian, 397.
Cadia, 9, 11, 459, 474, xxxi.
Cadia, the girl of 11.
Cassius, Julia, 41, 247. His character, 385, 404. His laural wreath, 44, 347. The mirror of love, 124, 445.
Cain, a Mystery, 345, xiv.
Calais, 305.
Calderon, 459.
Calcedonian Meeting, Address intended to be recited at, 460.
Calenture, 321, 594.
Calligula, 99. His wish, 561.
Calm at Sea, 30, 457.
Calmar and Oria, Death of, 368.
Calpe, 15, 351.
Calvin, 357.
Calypso, tales of 15.
Cambridge University, 223, 232, 235, xvi, xxxi.
Cambyses, 414.
Cameron, Sir Evan, 34.
Camilia, 361.
Camoëns, 342. Stanzas to a lady, with the poems of, 305.

Campbell, Thomas, Esq., 549. His Pleasures of Hope, 369. Inadvertences in his Lives of the Poets, 547. Critical notes by, postea, xxxii.
Can Grande, 417.
Candia, 35, 451.
Cannas, battle of, 39.
Canning, Right Hon. George, his character, 415, 514.
Canova, 29. Lines on his bust of Helen, 444.
Cant, "the crying sin of the times," 519.
Cantemir, Demetrius, his History of the Ottoman Empire, 517, 521.
Canterbury Cathedral, 545.
Capital, the, 554.
Capitoline Hill, 38.
Cape d'Istria, 154.
Cape d'Istria, Count, 414.
Cape di Boia, 42.
Caracalla, 625.
Caractacus, 574.
Caravaggio, 575.
Carbenari, 417.
Care, 554.
Carlike, Richard, 514.
Carlike (Frederick Howard), fifth earl of, 343, 351. Character of his poems, 304. Dedication of Hours of Idleness to, 308, xiv, xv.
Carlike (Isabella Byron), Countess of, 305.
Carlo Dolce, 573.
Carnage, 554, 559.
Carnival, 115, 445.
Caroline, queen of, 303, 305.
Caroline, queen of England, 452, 511, 562.
Cary, Sir John, 315, 332.
Carthage, 558. Majorian's visit to, 70.
Cary, Rev. Henry Francis, his translation of Dante, 305.
Carysfort (John Joshua Proby), first earl of, his Poems and Tragedies, 351.
Cash, potency of, 543, 554.
Casimir, John, king of Poland, 128.
Castalian dew, 5, 505.
Castellan, his Histoire de la Nouvelle Russie, 518.
Castlereagh, Viscount (Robert Stewart, Marquess of Londonderry), 414, 457, 518, 547, 554. Epigrams on, 552. Epitaph on, 551.
Castri, village of, 3, 9.
Catalina, Madame, 549.
Cathay, 554.
Catherine I. of Russia, 417.
Catherine II. of Russia, 255, 547, 548, 549, 554.
Cathleen, 555.
Cato looks his wish to Harpocrates, 553.
Catullus, the scholar of Love, 485. His "Ad Luciliam" translated, 551. His "Legula, Venere, Cupidinesque," translated, 304. Imitation from, 303.
Caucasus, Mount, 362.
Cavalier servants, 115, 119, 547.
Cecilia Metella, tomb of, 42.
Cecrops, 354.
Cellini, Benvenuto, 251.
Cephissus, river of, 32, 352.
Cerva, 554.
Cervantes, 557. Character of his "Don Quixote," 570.
Cheronese, 24.
Chamouni, lines written at, 503.
Chandler, Dr., 12, 507.
Change, 561, 562, 563.
Charity Ball, Lines on reading that Lady Byron was patroness of a, 455.
Charlemagne, 419.
Charlemont, Mrs., 375.
Charles I., 374.

Charles XII. of Sweden, his obstinacy at Bender, 541.
Charlotte, Princess of Wales, Lines to, 455. Reflections on her death, 563. Stanzas on her death, 48.
Chase, the English, 575.
Chateaubriand, at Verona, 413.
Chatham, first earl of, 569.
Chaucer, 357.
Chaworth, Mary Anne (afterwards Mrs. Musters), 511. Fragment written shortly after her marriage, 311. Stanzas to, Oh! had my fate, 334. Farewell to, 438. Stanzas to, on the author's leaving England, 350, 351, 425, 457. Portrait of, xvi, xvii, xxxii.
Chaworth's, Mr., dual, x.
Cheltenham, 134.
Cheops, King, his pyramid, 474.
Childs Harold's Pilgrimage, 1, xxvii, 21.
Childish Recollections, 327.
Children, 237, 258, 458.
Chills and mink is the nightly blast, 439.
Chilton, Prisoner of, 112.
Chilton, Sonnet on, 112.
Chilwell, Castle of, 113. View of, 113.
Chimari, 40.
Chimariot Mountains, 17.
China, 554.
Chione, war of, 514.
Chivalry, 2, 456, 570.
Christ, "pure creed of, made sanction of all ill" 565.
Christabel, 375.
Christianity, 568.
Chronology of Byron's life and works, iv.
Chrysostom, Saint, 422.
Churches, 515.
Churchill's Grave, 445, xxi.
Cicliashan, 113.
Cid, 415, 416.
Cigar, 135.
Cicinnatus, 370, 418.
Citra, 4. Convention of, 5.
Citizens, 522.
Cleons at Rome, 453. Maximus, 555.
Cliffmore, Mount, 507.
Cities, overthrow of great, 552.
Civilization, 455.
Claire, mother of Allegre, xxxiii.
Clare (John Flaxhob), Earl of, Lines on, 323. Stanzas to, 334, xvi. Portrait of, xv.
Clarens, 31.
Clarke, Dr. Edward Daniel, 14.
Clarke, Hewson, 351, 352.
Classics, too early study of, 40.
Classics and Pausanias, story of, 147.
Cleopatra, 550.
Clerry, 575.
Clermont, The two, xxxiii.
Clitumna, the river, 28. Temple of, 35.
Clothes, Anacharia, 452.
Clytemnestra, 549.
Cobbett, William, epigram on his digging up Tom Paine's bones, 441.
Coblenz, 27.
Cocker, 300.
Cognac, apostrophised, 301.
Cognit, Margarita, portrait of, xi, xii.
Colson, Mr. Francis (now Sir Francis Palgrave), 523.
Colchis, 458.
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, Esq., 55, 545, 455, 475, 494, 542, xxi.
Coliseum, 44, 45, 152.
College examination, Thoughts suggested by, a, 321.
Colitis, Signora, 347.
Colman, George, Jr., 346.
Cologne, 554.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Colonna, Cape, 21, 364, 694.
 Columbia, 42.
 Columbus, 297, 587, 598.
 Combolote, or Turkish romary, 64, 58.
 Comedy, the day of, gone by, 574.
 Common Lot, answer to a beautiful poem entitled the, 331.
 Commonwealth, 54, 170, 286.
 Condorcet, Marquis de, 456.
 Congress, 574.
 Congrove rocks, 458.
 Conquest, the, a fragment, 452.
 Conscience, 54, 144, 150, 465, 470, 488.
 Constantinople, 20. Slave-market at, described, 506, xxiii.
 Conversationalists, 577.
 Conversations with Byron, 151, 256, 497.
 Cookery, science of, 560.
 Copyright, runs paid by Mr. Mayray to Lord Byron for, 341, 649, xxviii.
 Coquette, 563.
 Corinth, 37. Ancient coin of, 108.
 Corinth, Siege of, 58.
 Corinthian brass, 582.
 Cornelian, the, 522.
 Cornelian heart which was broken, Lines on, 481.
 Cornwall, Barry (Bryan Walter Procter), 551.
 Corns, bay of, 77.
 Corsair, The, a Tale, 72. Note on, 628.
 Cortège, 113, 459.
 Costie, Joseph, his "Alfred" and "Fall of Columbia," 364.
 Could I remount the river of my years, 444.
 Could love forever, 451.
 Courmouret, Ali, 59.
 Country and town, discrepancies between, 562.
 Courage, 29, 132.
 Cowper, 563.
 Coxcomb, 417, 467, 592, 595, 591.
 Coxe, Archdeacon, his "Life of Marlborough," 456.
 Crabbe, Rev. George, "though Nature's sternest painter, yet the best," 330; "the first in point of power and genius," 350; "the first of living poets," 642.
 Crenating, 555.
 Crasnow, Richard, 493.
 Crasnow, 252.
 Crest of the Byron family. See Genealogical Table.
 Cribb, Tom, pugilist, 353.
 Curran, Right Hon. John Philipot, 562, 576.
 Currie, Dr., his Life of Burns, 493.
 Curse of Minerva, 352, xxiv.
 Curtis, Sir William, 419, 566.
 Cuvier, Baron, 555, 546.
 Cyanometer described, 503.
 Cycloades, 458, 503.
 Cypress tree, 52.
 Cyprus, 184, 481.
 Cyrene, 261.
 Dallas, xxii, xxvii.
 Damocles, a character, 214.
 Damas, Count de, 559.
 Damsels, the British, 559.
 Dance of Death, Hobbin's, 568.

Dance, Pyrrhic, 491, 496.
 Dandies, 24, 504, 568.
 Dandies, dynasty of the, 130.
 Dandies, Henry, the octogenarian chief, 25, 614.
 Dante, 37, 58, 619, 642. His Beatrice, 384, 490, 619. His wife, 385, 490. Prophecy of, 385.
 Danton, 456.
 Dardanelles, 504.
 Darkness, 444.
 Dars, M., his picture of Venetian society and manners, 622.
 Darwin, Erasmus, his "pompos chime," 350. His Botanic Garden, 250. Put down by a poem in the Anti-Jacobin, 642.
 Dates, a "sort of post-house, where the Poles change horses," 496.
 David, King, 473. His harp, 579.
 Davies, Scope (college friend of Byron), xviii, xxiv, xxix.
 Davy, Sir Humphry, 493, 493.
 Dead, features of the, 61. Belief that the souls of, inhabit the forms of birds, 71.
 Dear Doctor, I have read your play, 449.
 Dear object of dashed care, 430.
 Death, 22, 30, 44, 63, 263, 264, 445, 495, 496, 503, 505, 506, 544, 550. Shuns the wretched, 472. Advantages of an early, 496, 567. The sovereign's sovereign, 522. A reformer, 562. Dullest of all, 594, 593. A gaunt gourmand, 583.
 Death and the Lady, 490.
 Death of Calmar and Oria, 352.
 Dee, the, 337.
 De Feix, Gaston, his tomb at Ravenna, 505.
 Deformed Transformed; a Drama, 261, xxi.
 Delawarr (George-John West), 5th earl, 264. Verses to, 204. Lines on, 237.
 Delawarr (Thomas West), third earl, portrait of, given to the city of Philadelphia by his descendants, 330.
 Delphic, fountain of, 2.
 Deluge, 186, 194, 194.
 Demetrius Poliorcetes described, 362.
 Demosthenes, 221, 416, 417.
 Demmas (Lord Chief Justice), his translation of the Greek song on Harmodius and Aristogiton, 22.
 De Pauw, his writings characterized, 603.
 De Quincy, Mr., his Confessions of an Opium-Eater, 493.
 Dervish Tahiri, Lord Byron's Arnaout Guide, 26, 605.
 Desaix, General, 455.
 Despair, 23, 60, 62, 473, 480, 587.
 Despatch, 514.
 Destiny, 41.
 Destruction of Sennacherib, 374.
 Devil's Drive; an unfinished Rhapsody, 499.
 Devotion, 255, 497, 521.
 Didkin, Thomas, success of his "Mother Goose," 347.
 Dinner, a man's happiness dependent on, 338.
 Dinner-bell, the tootin' of the soul, 510.
 Diocletian, view of the villa, xxvii.
 Diogenes, 560, 565.
 Dires, fountain of, 607.
 Discontents, progress of popular, 587.
 Diadar Aja, 606.
 Diernell, J. Esq., Dedication to him of Observations upon an Article in Blackwood's Magazine, 620.
 Dives, Lines to, 482.
 Dogs, 173, 184, 240.
 Dolce, Carlo, 573.
 Don, brig of, 551.

Don Juan, 455. Letter to the Editor of My Grandmother's Review, 637. Observations upon an Article in Blackwood's Magazine, 639. Dedication of "Don Juan" to Robert Southey, Esq., 654. Preface to canto vii, vii, viii, xii, xiii.
 Don Quixote, a too true tale, 573. Delight of reading in the original, 445.
 Doomsday-book, 552.
 Dorotheus of Mytilene, 638.
 Dorset (Charles Sackville), Earl of, his character, 310.
 Dorset (George-John-Fredrick), fourth duke of, 310. Lines occasioned by the death of, 442.
 Dorset (Thomas Sackville), Earl of, called the drama forth, 215.
 Dost, 543, 544.
 Dost, dear, 555.
 Drachmids, scale of, 57, 58.
 Drapery Misses, 561.
 Dravennatt, 554.
 Dream, The, 360.
 Dream, The, 364.
 Dreamers, 554.
 Drowning, 60, 70, xxvi.
 Drowsed, Sir William, 185.
 Drury, Rev. Dr. Joseph, 63. Lines on his retiring from the Society of Friends of Harrow, 303, 323, xi, xiv, xvii.
 Drury Lane Theatre, Address spoken at the opening of, 628.
 Dryden, his Ode, 643. His epigram under Milton's picture, 623. His "Palamon and Arcite," 644. His "Abraham and Achitophel," 497.
 Dubost, M., painter, his Beauty and the Beast, 555.
 Duffing, 501.
 Duff between Campbell and Bowles, 48.
 Duff, Miss Mary (afterwards Mrs. Robert Cockburn), Lord Byron's boyish attachment for, 357, xiii.
 Dumouriez, 458.
 Duppe, Richard, Esq., his Life of Michael Angelo, 383, 383.
 Dwards, 512.
 Dying Gladiator, 45.
 E—, Lines to, 204.
 Early death, 498, 569.
 Early hours, 554.
 Early rising, 484.
 Eating, 503.
 Ebla, Oriental Prince of Darkness, 66.
 Elected, 494.
 Elected Review, 354.
 Economy, 502.
 Eddies (Cambridge chorister), Lines on a cornelian given to Lord Byron by, 322.
 Edgeworth, Maria, 489.
 Edinburgh Review, 338. Its Critique on Hours of Idleness, 338. Strictures on its remarks on the literature of modern Greece, 603.
 Edward the Black Prince, his tomb, 554.
 Egeria, 42, 623. Fountain of, 43. Grotto of, 44, 625.
 Egypt (the Negropont), 64.
 Elvabridgeton, 37.
 Elmhurst, Mr., 650, 481.
 Eliza, Isle of, 415.
 Eldon, Earl of, his impartiality, 498, xxi.
 Elgin on Newstead Abbey, 553.
 Elgin, Lord, 14, 362, 362, 363, 404, xxiv.
 Elgin marbles, 362, 363.
 Eliza, Lines to, 334.
 Elizabeth, Queen, her avarice, 549.
 Elton, Lines to, limited from Catullus, 503.
 Elton, 140.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Elaine and Abelard. Pope's, 664.
Ellequence, power of, 556.
Emma, Lines to, 307.
Endowment to Dead of Separation, 444.
English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, 329, xxi.
English look, 507.
English woman, 568.
Ennui, 497. A growth of English root, 577.
Enthusiasm, a moral inebriety, 572.
Envy, 522.
Epaminondas, his disinclination, 544.
Epic poem, definition of an, 473.
Epigram on Moore's Operatic Parox, or Farical Opera, 482. From the French of Buihlers, 485, 490. On my Wedding Day, 451. On Cobbett's digging up Tom Paine's Bones, 451. The world is a bundle of hay, 451. On my Wedding, 452. On the Brander's Company having resolved to present an Address to Queen Caroline, 452. On Lord Castlereagh, 452.
Epistle, a female, described, 577.
Epistle to a friend, in answer to some Lines exhorting the author to banish care, 432.
Epistle to Augusta, 577.
Epitaph on a friend, 605. On Virgil and Tibullus, by Domitius Marus, translated, 508. On John Adams, of Southwell, a carrier, who died of drunkenness, 438. Substituted for an, 430. My own, 430. For Joseph Blackett, late poet and shoemaker, 431. For William Pitt, 431. For Lord Castlereagh, 432.
Erechtrianus, 564.
Eros and Anteros, 567.
Eros language, 567.
Erskine, Lord, 576.
Etiquette, 514, 517.
Edna, 481.
Eugene of Savoy, 507.
Euphrates (Barry Cornwall), 561.
Euripides, translation from his Medea, "Eurydice," 521.
Eustace's "Classical Tour in Italy," strictures on, 627.
Euthanasia. When Time, or soon or late, 454.
Eutropius, the eunuch, and minister of Arcadius, character of, 457.
Euxine or Black Sea, description of, 508.
Evening described, 38, 107, 497.
Evil, 293. Origin of, 293.
Evil Eye, superstition of, 56.
Exile, 22, 232, 475.
Expectation, 55, 467.
Experience, 565. The chief philosopher, 558.
Eye, 492, 591, 593, 595, 602.
Faintness, sensation of, 492. The last mortal birth of pain, 394.
Fairy, 145.
Falliero, Marino, Doge of Venice, 154.
Falliero family, 155, 623.
Falkland (Lucius Cary), Viscount, 507, 547, xxvii. Byron's generosity to family of, xxi.
Fall of Terni, 40.
Fame, 21, 28, 34, 35, 38, 51, 101, 454, 474, 505, 529, 555, 569, 545.
Family, a fine, 468.
Fancy, 458.
Fare thee well, and if for ever, 376.
Farewell to the Muse, 422.
Farewell if ever fondest prayer, 428.
Farewell to Malta, 451.
Farmers, 545.
Fashionable world, 495, 500, 579.
Fate, 35, 507, 551.

Father of Light great God of heaven, 384.
Fauvel, M., French consul at Athens, 604, 607.
Faux pas, in England, 592.
Faxioli, the Venetian, 475.
Fear, 30, 594, 603.
Features, 512.
Feelings, innate, 594.
Feltrigate, Professor, his Mnemonics, 498.
Feltonja, his "O Italia, Italia," translated, 57.
Female schlemess, 585.
Female friendship, 584.
Fessles, 527.
Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick, 438.
Ferney, 31.
Ferrara, Lord Byron's visit to, 37.
Few years have pass'd since thou and I, 434.
Fickleness of woman, 585.
Fiction less striking than truth, 585.
Fighting, 504.
Fill the goblet again, 428.
First Kiss of Love, 509.
First love, 458, 457.
Fitzgerald, Lord Edward, "Sonnet on the repeal of his forfeiture," 430.
Fitzgerald, William Thomas, postmaster, 340, 361.
Fletcher, William (Lord Byron's faithful valet), 4, 22, 423, 600.
Florence, 38, 394, 395.
Florence (Mrs. Spencer Smith), 15.
Stanzas to, 423.
Foppery, 545.
Fortitude, 25, 35, 40, 51, 584.
Fortune, 25, 41, 73, 120, 180, 508, 507, 545.
Forty-parters, never, 552.
Foscarini, the Two; an Historical Tragedy, 222.
Foscarini family, 480.
Foscote, Ugo, 383.
Fox, Right Hon. Charles James, 380. Lines on the death of, 322. Saying of, 323.
Fox hunt, an English, 560.
Fragment, 325.
Fragment, written shortly after the marriage of Miss Chaworth, 311.
France, 42, 416.
Francesca of Rimini; from the Inferno of Dante, 385.
Francis, Sir Philip, the probable author of "Junius," 411.
Franciscan convent at Athens, 556, 562.
Sketch of, xxv.
Frankfort, 385.
Franklin, Benjamin, Engraving of, 302; 411, 415, 418, 494.
Franklin, 627.
Fraser, Mrs., 428.
Frederic the Second, 141, 331, 415. His flight from Molwitz, 335.
Free to confess, the phrase, 598.
Freedom, 20, 21, 42, 51, 73, 335, 555.
Free will, 335.
From, Right Hon. John Hookham, 340.
Friends, 551, 554, 555.
Friendship, 554.
Friend, 30.
Fry, Mrs., the prisoner's friend, 555.
Fudge Family, the humor of, not wit, 544.
Gail, M., 505.
Gallio, 619. His tomb in Santa Croce, 38.
Gallio, 60.
Gamba, Count Pietro, 497.
Game of Goose, 567.
Gamblers, 579, 581.
Gaming, 563, 579.
Garriasso de la Vega, 495.
Garriock, 347, 425.

Gayton, dancer, 367.
Gaselle, the, 3, 54.
Gell, Sir William, 522.
Gemma, the wife of Dante, 385.
Genesis, 185, 186, 233, 271.
Geneva, Lake of, 38, 113, 611.
Geneva, Sonnets to, 438.
Genie, Madame de, 387.
Gentlemen farmers, 544.
George the Third, 386, 408, 414, 582.
George the Fourth, 440, 441, 458, 456, 548, 549, 553.
Georgia, 521, 522.
Georgiana, beauty of the, 321.
Gesser, his "Death of Abel," 355.
Ghibellines, 304, 305, 305.
Ghost, the Newstead, 595.
Ghosts, 523, 522, 595, 594, 608.
Giazfar, pacha of Argiro-Castro, his fate, 57.
Giant's Grave, 500.
Glaucor, The; a Fragment of a Turkish Tale, 37.
Gibbon, Edward, Esq., his character, 51, xxxii.
Gibraltar, Straits of, 15.
Gifford, William, Esq., 185, 291, 348, 351, 375, 443, xxvii. Portrait of, xvii, facing 178.
Gingough, Saint, 611.
Giorgione, 117.
Girt of Cadiz, 11.
Glaucor, 40.
Gladiator, the dying, 45, 502.
Gladiators, 535.
Glory, 13, 35, 46, 48, 52, 583, 543.
Goody, Don Manuel, 7.
Goewin, William, xxxiii.
Goethe, his tribute to the memory of Byron, 195. Dedication of "Bardanaphus" to, 195. His "Mephistophiles," 570.
Geld, 553.
Golden Fleec, 492.
Goldoni's comedies, 555.
Goldsmith, his anticipated definition of the Lake school of poetry, 622.
Gondola described, 117.
Gondoliers, songs of the Venetian, 34, 457, 612.
Good Night, the, 4. Lord Maxwell's, 1.
Goose, royal game of, 567.
Gordon, Lord George, 398.
Gordons of Gight, 525.
Goss, 15.
Gracchus, Tiberius, 568.
Grafton, Duke of, 410.
Grahame, James, his "Sabbath Walks" and "Biblical Pictures," 545.
Granby, Marquis of, 456.
Granite; a Medley, 311.
Grattan, Right Hon. Henry, 458, 518, 562.
Gray, 454, 543.
Gray, Mary, Byron's nurse, xiv.
Greatest living poets, 560.
Greece, past and present condition of, 8, 14, 20, 51, 52, 101, 558, 415, 495, 498.
Greek war song, "Ouvre saile," translation of, 430.
Greeks, some account of the literature of the modern, 608, 610.
Greenwich, the, 552.
Greville, Colonel, 547.
Grey, Charles (afterwards Earl Grey), 562.
Grief, 528.
Groptus, the Sicur, 505.
Guadalquivir, 451.
Guadalupe, 2.
Gualpha, 304, 305, 522.
Guescliff, du, constable of France, 414.
Guineoli (Terena Gamba), Countess, 129, 388, 490, 556. Dedication of the Prophecy of Dante to, 398, xxx. Portraits of, xliii facing 137.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX

- [illegible]

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

writes, 565. His book the eleventh commandment, 568.
Malvern Hills, 184.
Man, 468, 469, 497, 498, 548.
Mandeville, 362.
Manfred: a Dramatic Poem, 162, xi.
Manfred, Engraving of Castle of, 186.
Mann, the engineer, his pumps, 476.
Mansion House, the, 366.
Mantinea, 24.
Marat, 458.
Marathon, xi, 24, 28, 486. Plains of, offered to Lord Byron for sale, xi.
Marceau, General, 37, 456.
Marchetti, Count, 388.
Mardyn, Mrs. xxxv.
Maria Louisa, Empress, 388, 418.
Marianne, wife of Herod the Great, 378.
Maria Antonietta, a Relief of grief on, 118.
Mariners, his account of the Tonga Islands, 180, 189.
Marino, 564.
Marino, a corrupter of the taste of Europe, 642.
Marino Fallerio, Doge of Venice; an Historical Tragedy, 154. Story of, 681.
Marion, Lines to, 314.
Marion, at Carthage, 594, 599.
Marlow, General, 684.
Marlborough, 184. Con's Life of, 486.
Marmion, 341.
Mary, Queen of Scots, her person described, 518, 549.
Masinger, 347.
Matapan, Cape, 490.
Match-making, 567.
Matrimony, 564.
Matter, 601. Bishop Berkeley's denial of the existence of, 555.
Mathias, Thomas James Esq., his "Pursuits of Literature," 646. His edition of Gray's works, 645.
Matthews, Charles Skinner, Esq., 12, xviii, xxvi.
Maturin, Rev. Charles, 156.
Maurice, Rev. Thomas, his "Richmond Hill," 344.
Mauritania, 18.
Mascepp, 128.
Mecon, 20, 86, 88.
Media, 381.
Medici, family of the, 618. Mausoleum of the, 80, 620.
Medina, 23.
Meditation, xi.
Mediterranean, 41. A noble subject for a poem, 49.
Medwin, Captain, 646, 649, xxxiv, xlviii.
Megare, 57, 154.
Megaspelon, monastery of, 607.
Meknop, General, 569.
Mellier, 611.
Melancthon, 548.
Melbourne house, 552. Lord, xxx.
Melton Mowbray, headquarters of the English chace, 575.
Memnon, statue of, 574.
Memory, 18.
Mendell, Mount, xi.
Mendips, 379.
Mercy, Count, his epitaph, 21.
Merville, J. E., Esq., 559. His "Rondevalles," 386.

Metaphysics, 568.
Metella, Cecilia, tomb of, 61.
Methodism, cause of the progress of, 619.
Mettelnich, Prince, 418.
Midas, 418.
Middle age of man described, 568.
Milana, state of society at, 498.
Milbanke, Lady, 495.
Milbanke, Miss (afterwards Lady Byron), 443, xxxi, xxxiii.
Milbanke, Sir Ralph, 490, xxxi.
Milman, Rev. Henry Hart, his "History of the Jews," 378. His "Fall of Jerusalem," 156. Critical notes by, passim.
Milo, 380.
Miltades, 21.
Milton, T. 254, 486, 488.
Mimner, Curio of, 588, xiv.
Minotaur, fable of the, 458.
Minutemen, 564.
Misere, 457. Happy life of the, 568.
Miscellaneous, 486, 680, xii, lvi. Byron's death at, lxx.
Mitford, Mrs. 486.
Mitford, William, Esq., 184, 188. His abuse of Plutarch's Lives, 684. Great merit of his History of Greece, 666.
Mitylene, tale of, 688.
Mob, 567.
Mobility, 600. Defined, 600.
Mocha's berry, 496.
Modesty, 568.
Moliere, 570.
Morus, 581.
Moray, love of, the only pleasure that requires, 568, 569.
Moray, power of, 608. Pleasure of hearing, 568, 569.
Monk, Lewis's novel of the, 342.
Monks, 564.
Monmouth, Geoffrey of, his Chronicle, 498.
Monsoon, 588.
Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley, 588.
Montaigne, his motto, 544.
Mont Blanc, 28, 41, 168.
Montesquieu, 387.
Montgomery, James, Answer to his poem entitled "The Common Lot," 381. His "Wanderer of Switzerland," 344.
Monthly Review, its critique on "Hours of Idleness," 388.
Montmartre, 418.
Montmorency Laval, Duke de, 418.
Mont Saint Jean, 34, 600.
Moore, 14, 487, 488, 602. Of amatory egoism the Tulcan, 568.
Moonlight, 178, 467.
Moore, Dr. his account of Marino Fallerio false and flippant, 154.
Moore, Thomas, Esq., 388, 545, 496, 678, 561, 642. Lines on his last Operatic Fare, or Farical Opera, 482. Lines to, on visiting Leigh Hunt in prison, 489. Fragment of an epistle to, 441. Lines to, 467, 468. His "Fudge Family," 644. His "Two-penny Post-bag," 644. Critical notes by, passim, xi. Portrait of, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xliii, xlv, xlix, xlviii, lx. Moore's field of, 28.
More, Hannah, her "Onions in search of a Wife," 480.
More, Sir Thomas, on the sea-bird, xi.
More, 50, lv, lviii.
Moreau, General, 456.
Moreau, 8.
Morgan, Maggioro of Pulci, translation of canto the first, 588.
Morning Post, 360, 366, 456, 568, 578.
Morocco, 603.
Mosaic chronology, 355, 388.

Moscow, climate of, 588. Conflagration of, 584, 418.
Moses, 545.
Moscow, 603, 512.
Mountain, 28, 30, 31, 184.
Moscow, 584.
Moscow, 18, 54, 564.
Murat, Joachim, 438. Death of, 448. His snow-white plume, 448.
Murray, John, Mr., sums paid by him to Lord Byron for copyright, 541, 648. My dear Mr. Murray, you're in a dam's hurry, 448. Surahs, Tuscan, Lines of the times, 449. To hook the reader, you, John Murray, 448. Epistle from, to Dr. Foulds, 448. Lines to, 452. His poem on Medwin's Conversations, 648. Portrait of, xlv, xlvii, xlix.
Muscle, 25, 30, 62, 568, 588.
Muscular women, 121.
Must thou go, my glorious chief, 448.
Muskers, Mrs. Bea Chaworth.
Muskers, Mr. xvii.
Mutiny, 121, 121.
My boat is on the shore, 467.
My Grandmother's Review, the British, 478. Letter to the Editor of, 527.
My sister! my sweet sister! 527.
My soul is dark, 472.
Myrtles and Myrtles, 388.
Nadir Shah, 546.
Naldi, singer, 347.
Napoleon. See Bonaparte.
Napoleon's Parvul, 444.
Napoleon, François Charles Joseph. Duke of Richelieu, 419, 597.
Napoleon's Firm, 25, 564, 567.
Napoli di Romania, 36, 682.
National debt, 588.
Native land, emotion on leaving, 478.
Nature, 16, 24, 30, 487, 488, 518, 588, 588.
Nature, Prayer of, 584.
Nay, smile not at my million brow, 11.
Nebuchadnezzar, 511.
Negropent, 60.
Nepheris, Count, 388, 418.
Nelson, Lord, 459.
Nemesis, Roman, 45, 586.
Nemil, 48.
Nephtune, 128, 486.
Nero, 498.
Nero, consul, 128.
Nero, emperor, 488, xxxv.
Neros, robe of, 561, 568.
Newfoundland dog, inscription on the monument of a, 189, 438.
Newstead Abbey, Lines written on leaving, 308. Essay on, 384. Description of in Don Juan, 578, 574. Picture of, lx, xxi, xxxvi, lvii.
Newton, Sir Isaac, 588. Memorable sentiment of, 628.
Ney, Marshal, 544.
Nicopolis, ruins of, 16.
Night, 18, 30, 178, 472.
Nightingale, its attachment to the rose, 50, 54. Its love of solitude, 600.
Ni's admiral, happiness of the, 518, 572.
Nile, 414.
Nimrod, 198, 201, 510, 578.
Nile, 40.
Nines and Ruriana, a paraphrase from the Æneid, 512.
Noble, life of a young, described, 561.
Northwest passage, 572.
Norton, Hon. Mrs., 544.
Novels, 499.
Novelists please less than they impress, 545.
Numa Pompilius, 461.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Oak, Lines to an, at Newstead, 423, xxviii.
Oak, British, 593. Continental, 593.
Observations upon an article in Black-wood's Magazine, 593.
Obstinacy, 594.
Ocean, 49, 416.
Ocean stream, 505.
Ocellus Lucanus, 505.
O'Donnell, 454.
Odallings, 521.
Ode to Napoleon Buonaparte, 563. On Venice, 564.
Odyssey, 514.
Offspring, care of, 514.
Oh, Anne! your offences, 431.
Oh, say not, sweet Anne, 431.
Oh! banish care, 432.
Oh! had my fate been joined with thine, 553.
Oh, Lady! when I left the shore, 428.
Oh! my lonely, lonely, lonely pillow, 434.
Oh, never talk to me again, 11.
Oh! snatch'd away in beauty's bloom, 571.
Oh, talk not to me of a name great in story, 454.
Oh! weep for those, 571.
Old age, 468.
Olympus, 40.
O'Meara, Barry, 414.
Omara, 469.
On Jordan's banks, 571.
One struggle more, and I am free, 428.
O'Neill, Miss, actress, 154.
Opera, 547.
Orator, 414. Byron as an, xv.
Orpheus, 480.
Orthodoxy, 414.
Oscar of Alva; a Tale, 514.
Ossian, Macpherson's, 338.
Otho, his last moments, 154.
Otway, 547.
Ouseby, 113.
Ovid, 560, 422.
Owenara, Miss, her "Ida of Athens," 564.
See Morgan, Lady.
Oxenstierna, Chancellor, his remark to his son, 542.
Oysters, 458, 544.

Pain, 234.
Palafox, General, his heroic conduct at Saragossa, 12.
Palamos and Artica, 644.
Palatine, Mount, 560.
Paisgrave, Sir Francis, 623.
Palmerston, Viscount, 511.
Pan, 454.
Pantheon, at Rome, 54. View of, 550.
Pantescoray, 438, 622.
Paper, 495.
Paper money, 558.
Paradise Lost, 543, 544.
Parenthetical Address by Dr. Plagiar, 438.
Paris, 415.
Parlans, 107, xxvii.
Parker, Sir Peter, King's Stanzas on the death of, 442.
Parker, Margaret, Lines on her death, 504, xii.
Parks of London, 561.
Parma, 419.
Parmasus, 9, 17, 40, 556.
Parthenon, 12, 13, 562.
Parting, 475, 583.
Parting, Lines on, 431.
Passions, 453.
Passion, 18, 501, 464, 502, 644.

Pastora, 18, 501, 505, 582. Effect of violent and conflicting, 502.
Pawana Ogion, 67.
Peasblossom row, the bazaar of book-sellers, 400.
Patience, 145.
Paterfamilias, tomb of, 508.
Pausanias and Cleonice, story of, 147.
Peacock, the royal bird, whose tail's a diadem, 582.
Peel, Sir Robert, xv.
Pelagius, 4.
Pelagos, 418. Pellicer, the, 54.
Pencil-stroke (now Mount Medal), 21.
Pent, 2.
Pentecost, 544.
Persians, 592. Their doctrine of the two principles, 572.
Pernacuity, 564.
Pescara, 397.
Peter Bell, Wordsworth's, 457, 644.
Peter the Great, 417.
Peter Pindar, 412.
Petersburg, 535, 543, 547.
Petion, 458.
Petra, the laureate crown, 23, 287, 614, 630. On the conspiracy of Marino Faliero, 631. Crowned in the Capitol, 642. The Platonic pimp of all posterity, 505.
Petitcoat, garment of a mystical sublimity, 560.
Petitcoat government, 566.
Petitcoat influence, 560.
Petty, Lord Henry (afterwards Marquis of Lansdowne), 511, 522, 545.
Phidias, 563.
Philanthropy, 19.
Phillips, Ambrose, his pastorals, 557.
Phillips, Charles, Esq. barrister, 537.
Philo-pregnantness, 555.
Philosophy, 474, 498.
Phyle, Fort, 30, 363, xxvii.
Physicians, 558.
Pioboch, 516.
Picture, a, "is the past," 594.
Pictures, 567.
Pigot, Miss, Lines to, 524, xx.
Pique, Dr. Reply to some Verses of, on the cruelty of his mistress, 534, xix.
Pillars, James, 545.
Pindar, 9, 466.
Pindus, Mount, 17.
Pinnus, 57.
Piramus, 71.
Pisa, xlviii, xlix, li.
Piscis Vache, 40.
Pistol, 501, xlviii.
Pitt, Right Hon. William, his additions to our parliamentary tongue, 584. Epitaph for, 451.
Pizarro, 12, 415.
Plato, his system of love, 467. His dialogues, 561. His reply to Diogenes, 595.
Platonie love, 464, 467, 549.
Pleasure, 467, 468, 474. A stern moralist, 469.
Pleasures of Hope, 549.
Pleasures of Memory, 71, 549. Lines written on blank leaf of, 435.
Pleasure's "Lives," 585. Misford's abuse of, 564.
Plymley, Peter (Rev. Sidney Smith), his "Letters," 599.
Po, Stanzas to the, 450.
Poetry, present state of English, 642. Nothing in, so difficult as a beginning, 498. Is a passion, 505.
Poets, 595, 506. Amatory, 506. Duties of, 540. The greatest living, 583.
Poggio, his exclamation on looking down on Rome, 58.
Poland, 415, 417, 584.

Polenta, Guido da, 599.
Polenta, Francesco da, 599.
Poldori, Dr., 23, 541. Epistle from Mr Murray to, 23, 449, xxxviii.
Polytraces, 466.
Polygamy, 518, 520, 541.
Pompey, a hero, conqueror, and cuckold, 468. His statue, 41, 428.
Pope, 341. His Pastorals, 357. His "Rape of the Lock," 644. Harmony of his versification, 644. His imagination, 644. His character of Spenser, 644. List of his disciples, 645. Systematic depreciation of, 645, xxi.
Popular appliances, 495.
Popular discontent, progress of, 537.
Popularity, 599.
Porsen, Professor, 322, xxvii.
Portland (William Henry Cavendish), third duke of, 561.
Portraits of Byron; by Kay, 1706, xiv; by Saunders, 1807, xxi; by Westall, 1814, xxviii; by Harlowe, 1817, li; (bust) Thorwaldsen, 1818, xxxix. Steel-plate portrait by Phillips, 1814 (Frontispiece).
Portugal, 1, 4.
Portuguese, the, characterised, 6.
Posterity, 456, 564.
Potemkin, Prince, 539. His character, 539. His instructions to Suwarow before the siege of Ismail, 539.
Potiphar's wife, 518.
Pouqueville, M. de, 17. Character of his writings, 17.
Pratt, Samuel, 543. His "Sympathy," 543.
Prayer, Byron's view of, 254.
Prayer of Nature, 584.
Prestle, dancer, 547.
Preterition, absence of, 568.
Previas, 19.
Priam, 244.
Pride, 493, 571.
Prince Regent, A finished gentleman from top to toe, 559. Sonnet to, on the repeal of Lord Edward Fitzgerald's Forfeiture, 450. Lines to, on his standing between the coffin of Henry VIII. and Charles I., 440, ix.
Prince of Wales, Lines to, 608.
Principles, the two, 284.
Prisoner of Chillon, 113, xxxvii.
Prologue delivered previously to the performance of the Wheel of Fortune, at a private theatre, 322.
Prometheus, 444.
Prometheus of Aeschylus, 468.
Prophecy of Dante, 588. Dedication to Countess Guiccioli, 588.
Prophecy, 581.
Protestations, 408.
Pruthi, the river, 417.
Psyche, 547.
Public schools, 462, 474.
Pulci, his "Morgante Maggioro," 386. Sire of the half-curious rhyme, 496.
Pultowa, battle of, 123, 129.
Puns, 554.
Pye, Henry James, Esq., 540, 412. Tyngdalen, statue of, 522, 547.
Pyramids and Thibe, 511.
Pyrrhic dance, 481, 493.
Pyrrhic, the doubting philosopher, 545.
Pyrrhus, 419.
Pythagoras, 511.

Quaker, Lines to a beautiful, 522.
Quarrels of Authors, Diarist's, 637.
Quarterly Review, 473. Critical notes from, 505.
Queen, generally prosperous in their reigns, 552.
Quite refreshing, 540.
659

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Stanhope, Colonel (afterwards Lord Harrington), livi, lviii, lix.
 Stanhope, Lady Hester, xxxv.
 Stanhope to a lady on leaving England, 423.
 To a lady with the poems of Camoëns, 393. To Florence, 423. Composed during a thunder-storm, 423. Written on passing the Ambracian Gulf, 430. To lines, li. Tambourgi! Tambourgi! thy larum afar, 19. Away, away, ye notes of woe, 423. One struggle more, and I am free, 423. And thou art dead, etc., 424. If sometimes in the haunts of men, 423. Thou art not false, but thou art sickle, 423. On being asked what was the origin of love, 423. Remember him, etc., 423. To Augusta, 378, 377. Elegiac, 383. The death of Sir Peter Parker, 442. When a man hath no freedom, 431. To the Po, 430. Written on the road between Florence and Pisa, 434. Could love forever, 431. On completing my thirty-sixth year, 435. To a Hindoo air, 434. I heard thy hair without a tear, 433. On the letter I, 433. To my dear Mary Anne, 433. Star of the Legion of Honor, on the, 444. Steam-engines, 550.
 Stealin, 502.
 Steeplechase, 453.
 Steep (Hills of the Morning Post), 321.
 Stenham, Tuncion, Lintot of the times, 449.
 Strangford, Lord, his "Camoëns," 393. Styl, 423.
 Suleide, 513, 573.
 Sull, 16, 13, 493.
 Sulpicia, their hospitality, 13, livi, lviii.
 Sulpicia, Servius, his letter to Cleopatra on the death of his daughter, 37.
 Sun of the Euphrates, 373.
 Sunday in London, 3.
 Sunday-school, 473.
 Sunium, 493, 500, 504.
 Sunrise, 434.
 Sunset, 437, 439.
 Superstitions, 14, 37, 383.
 Suspense, 33.
 Suxiparia, 23, 33.
 Swallow, Field Marshal, 323, 333, 331, 437, 433. His polar melody on the capture of Ismail, 543. His character, 543. Brevity of his style, 543.
 Swift, Dr. Jonathan, 397, 327.
 Sweet, 432.
 Sylla, 41, 333, 333.
 Sympathy, 43, 331.
 Symplicius, 43, 331.
 Syracuse, 33. Engraving of coin of, 333.
 Tact, 471.
 Tact, Mr. xlviii.
 Tahir, Dervish, 33, 333.
 Talavera, 7.
 Talleyrand, Prince de, 413.
 Tambourgi! Tambourgi!, 19.
 Tarpolein rock, 43.
 Taseo, 37, 332, 333, 334, 313, 313, 433. Lament of, 332, xxxix.
 Taseul, 443.
 Tavel, Rev. G. F. (Lord Byron's college tutor), 353.
 Tea, prophetic powers of, 331.
 Tear, The, 323.
 Tears, 470, 502, 513, 533.
 Tempe, 17.
 Teniers, 373.
 Tepaleen, 17, 333.
 Terni, Falls of, 40.
 Thames, 9, 331, 433, 533, 533.
 The cauled gear of Drachenfels, 37.
 The chain I gave was fair to view, 433.
 The harp the monarch minstrel swept, 370.
 The Isles of Greece, the Isles of Greece, 433.

The spell is broken, the charm is flown, 433.
 The Wild Geese, 371.
 The world is a bundle of hay, 431.
 There be none of Beauty's daughters, 443.
 There is a mystic thread of life, 333.
 There was a time, I need not name, 423.
 There 's not a joy the world can give, 443.
 Thermopylae, 31, 333, 431, 433.
 Theseus, temple of, 332. Engraving of, 332. Proposal to bury Byron there, lix. They say that Hope is happiness, 447.
 This day, of all our days, 433.
 Thomson, his "Seasons" would have been better in rhyme, 344.
 Thornton, Thomas, Esq., character of his "Stats of the Ottoman Empire," 333.
 Thorwaldsen, sculptor, xxxix.
 Thou art not false, but thou art sickle, 423.
 Though the day of my destiny 's over, 377.
 Thoughts suggested by a collage examination, 331.
 Thraetame, lake of, 33, 332. Battle of, 33, 332.
 Through cloudless skies, in silvery shen, 433.
 Through life's dull road, so dim and dirty, 432.
 Through thy battlements, Newcastle, 333.
 Thunder-storm on the lake of Geneva described, 30.
 Thunder-storm near Eilat, Stanzas composed during, 423.
 Thurlow (Thomas Howell Thurlow), second lord, lines on his "Poems," 423. Verses to, 423.
 Thy days are done, 372.
 Thyrsus, Stanzas to, 423, 423, xxx.
 Tibertus, 333.
 Tibullus, his "Sulpicia ad Corinthus" translated, 333.
 Tilletson, Archbishop, 423, 327.
 Timbuctoo, women of, 333.
 Time, 3, 13, 22, 23, 44, 44, 423, 423, 423, 533, 532. Lines to, 437.
 Timeless, 34.
 Timon, 3.
 Timon, 344, 343.
 Timon, 343.
 "To do me; and shivering in the gale, 437.
 'T is time this heart should be unmoved, 435.
 Titana, 343.
 Titian, 333, 337.
 Titian, 373, 337.
 Tittle-tattle, 333.
 Titus, 423. The master of love, 423.
 Titus, on the day of the Destruction of Jerusalem by, 374.
 Tobacco, 13.
 Tomb, 333.
 Tomba, folly of erecting large ones, 313.
 Tomerit, Mount, 17.
 Tom Jones, accomplished blackguard, 373.
 Tomson, Jacob, bookseller, 333.
 Took, John Horne, 411, 334.
 Torture, 33, 313.
 Tower of Babel, 313.
 Town and country, 333.
 Town life, 331.
 Townsend, Rev. George, 333. His "Armageddon," 333.
 Trevelyan, 13, 3.
 Trajan, 43. His column, 43. Engraving of his coin, 43.
 Translation from Catullus, "ad Leliam," 333. Of the Epitaph on Virgil and Tibullus, by Domitius Marus, 333. Of Tibullus, "Sulpicia ad Corinthus," 333. From Catullus, "Lugate, Venere, Cupidineque," 333. Of Horace's "Jussum et tenacem," 333. Of Anacreon's Μουσικὸν καὶ ἀπὸ ἀπὸ, 377. Of Anacreon's Ὀδὸν Ἀργεὶς Ἀρπύης, 377. From the Prometheus Vinctus of Æschylus, 377. From the Modes of Euripides, "Ἄνευ θεῶν," 331. Of the Greek war song, Ἀντὶ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, 430. Of the Romaine song, "Μετὰ πόντον," 431. Of a Romaine love song, 437. From the Portuguese, "Tural chamas," 433. Of the "Romance muy doloroso del Sitio y Toma de Alhama," 444. From Vittorelli, "Di due vaghe donzelle," 447.

 Travels, xlii.
 Trecentist, the, 433.
 Tree of knowledge, 433.
 Tree of life, 337.
 Trevelyan, xli, xlii, lv, lvi, lix.
 Trevelyan, Henry, xi.
 Trimmer, Mrs. 433.
 Tripoli, 433.
 Triptolemus, 413.
 Troy, 313, 333, 333, 333.
 Truth stranger than fiction, 333, 331.
 Tu mi chamas, translated, 433.
 Turkey, state of manners in, 313.
 Turkey, views of, 317. Their life in the harem, 131. Byron's visit to, xlii, xxi, lvii.
 Turnpike road, 333.
 Turpin, 333.
 Twilight, 437.
 Tyranny, 33, 113, 333.
 Tyre, 33, 333.
 Tyrian purple, 333.
 Ugolino, 333, 433.
 Ulysses' dog, Argus, 433.
 Ulysses' whistle, 377.
 Uncertainty, 333.
 Unities, 133.
 Ursars, 473.
 Utrahay, 13.
 Vacancy, 34.
 Vaccination, 433.
 Valentin, Lord (afterwards Earl of Mountnorris), 333.
 Vampire; a Fragment, 33.
 Valhalla, 3, 333.
 Valentin, 37.
 Valentin, 333.
 Velina, 33.
 Venality, 333.
 Venetian dialect, 113.
 Venetian fustic, 373.
 Venetian society and manners, 134, 332.
 Venice, 34, 411. Saint Mark's, 33, 313. Carnival, 113, 133. Rialto, 117. Bridge of Signa, 34, 311. State dungeons of, 141. 611. Riddo, 133. Prophecy respecting, 134, xlv. View of, 333.
 Venice, Ode on, 313.
 Venus, 435, 502, 533.
 Venus of Medicine, 334.
 Venust, 373.
 Vernon, Admiral, 433.
 Verona, amphitheatre of, 417. Juliet's tomb at, 417. Tombs of the Scallans, 417. Congress at, 413, 333, lii.
 Versatility, 333.
 Versailles, 443.
 Vesuvius, America, 397.
 Vesuvius, 413.
 Vicar of Wakefield, 333.
 Vice, 333, 370.
 Victory, 23, 341.
 Vineyards, the best, 373.
 Vintage, 437.
 Virgil, 423, 333.
 Virgin Mary, portraits of, 434, 437.
 Viruses, the, 333.
 Vision of Behshar, "The King was on his Throne," 373.
 Vision of Judgment, 404, xlvii, xlviii.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Vittorelli, Sonetto di, 447.
 Voice, fascination of a sweet, 484.
 Voltaire, his character by Lord Byron, 81.
 By Dr. Warton, 647. And by Lord Ed-land, 647. His "Vous pleurez," 647. His defence of the Calas family, 647, XXXV.
 Walsh, Rev. Dr. R., his account of All
 Fools's commutation, 14.
 Walton, Isaac, a quaint old cruel con-comb, 577. Defence of, 577.
 Walter, The; an Apostrophic Hymn, 586,
 xxviii.
 War, 580, 584, 582, 584.
 Warton, Dr. Thomas, his character of Voltaire, 647.
 Washington, George, 42, 411, 415, 584, 584, 581.
 Wat Tyler, Southey's, 404, 642.
 Watch-dog, 587.
 Waterloo, battle of, 34, 35, 38, 415, 418, 587, 584.
 Watson, Bishop, his reply to the moderator in the schools of Cambridge, 585.
 Way, William, Esq., 547.
 Weber (German hack writer), 554.
 Weep, daughter of a royal line, 438.
 Well! thou art happy, and I feel, 438.
 Welland, Margia, 588.
 Welland, Hon. William Long Pole, 582.
 Wellington, Duke of, 4, 388, 587, 543, 544,
 582, 585, liv.
 Were my bosom as false as thou deem'st
 it to be, 573.
 Werner; or, the Inheritance; a Tragedy,
 572, xlv.
 Wesley, Rev. John, 557.
 West, Benjamin, Esq., "Europe's worst dauber," 583, xxxix, xlix.
 Westminster Abbey, 568, 574, lix.
 What matter the pangs of a husband and father, 441.

When a man hath no freedom to fight for at home, 461.
 When all around grew drear and dark, 578.
 When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
 571.
 When from the heart where sorrow sits,
 489.
 When I roved a young Highlander, 586.
 When man, expell'd from Eden's bowers,
 435.
 When some proud son of man returns to
 earth, 425.
 When Time, or soon or late, shall bring,
 434.
 When to their airy hall, 505.
 When Thurlow this damn'd nonsense
 sent, 428.
 When we two parted, 434.
 Whigs, 402.
 Whist, 403.
 Whistcraft, 585, 544, lii.
 Whitbread, Samuel, Esq., 562.
 White, Henry Kirke, 548.
 White, Lydia, 404.
 Who kill'd John Keats? 452.
 Why, how now, saucy Tom? 422.
 Wildin, 57, 507, 581.
 Wilberforce, William, 508. The Washington of Africa, 584.
 Wildman, Colonel, 422, xxxvi.
 Wilkes, John, Esq., 410.
 William the Conqueror, 548.
 Willis, Dr., 4.
 Will o' the wisp, 154.
 Wilson, Professor, 560, 568. Critical notes
 by, possim.
 Windsor Fostick, 440.
 Wine, 488, 500.
 Wingfield, Hon. John, 12, 228.
 Wisdom, 28, 523.
 Without a stone to mark the spot, 428.
 Wit me, 481.

Wolfe, General, 458.
 Wellsteraft, Mary, 648.
 Woman, 18, 484, 500, 518, 548.
 Woman's love, 472, 488, 500, 518.
 Women, their unnatural situation, 488.
 English, described, 583. Their love of match-making, 587, lx.
 Wooden spoons, 498.
 Words, 498.
 Wordsworth, William, Esq., 402, 542, 543.
 His "Excursion," 456, 486, 518. His early poems, 542. His "Lyrical Ballads," 542.
 His "Peter Bell," 497, 543, 544. His "Waggoner," 497. His description of carnage, 544, xlvii, liii.
 World, the, 120, 562, 578. Its vicissitudes, 501. Relics of a former, 548. A glorious blunder, 587. The fashionable, 561, 562,
 578. The great, described, 560, 561, 582,
 587, 578.
 Wright, Walter Rodwall, Esq., his "Horn
 Ionian," 500, 508.
 Wrinkles, 552.
 Writer, life of a, 428.
 Writing, 544. Fac-simile of, facing p. lviii.
 Xerox, 417.
 Xerox, 12, 504, 497, 608.
 Yankin, 17, 50, 518, 608.
 Yankin, 582.
 Young, Dr. R., 582.
 Youth, 173, 474, 486.
 Zango, 512.
 Zoro, 154, 156, 170.
 Zepri, 414.
 Zoloso, 2.
 Zinghis Khan, 548.
 Ziska, John, 278, 414.
 Zita, 17, 428.
 Zetimus, 14.

Grand Canal, Venice.

I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs.
 A palace and a prison on each hand.—Page 34, Stones &

THE END.

CPSIA information can be obtained at www.ICGtesting.com
Printed in the USA
LVHW032159200520
656142LV00017B/319

This work has been selected by scholars as being culturally important, and is part of the knowledge base of civilization as we know it. This work was reproduced from the original artifact, and remains as true to the original work as possible. Therefore, you will see the original copyright references, library stamps (as most of these works have been housed in our most important libraries around the world), and other notations in the work.

This work is in the public domain in the United States of America, and possibly other nations. Within the United States, you may freely copy and distribute this work, as no entity (individual or corporate) has a copyright on the body of the work.

As a reproduction of a historical artifact, this work may contain missing or blurred pages, poor pictures, errant marks, etc. Scholars believe, and we concur, that this work is important enough to be reproduced, and made generally available to the public. We appreciate your support of the preservation of the public domain in books, and thank you for being an important part of keeping this knowledge alive and relevant.

